8. Where the creditor surrenders a lien against the debtor or on his property, which the promisor acquires or is benefited by; Fell, Guar. c. 2; Brandt, Sur. & Guar. §§ 63, 64; 2 B. & Ald. 613; Mallory v. Gillett, 21 N. Y. 412; but not so where the surrender of the lien does not benefit the promisor; Nelson v. Boynton, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 396, 37 Am. Dec. 148; Mallory v. Gillett, 21 N. Y. 412.

In the five last classes, the principal debt may still subsist concurrently with the new promise, and the creditor will have a double remedy; but the fulfillment of the new promise will discharge the principal debt, because he can have but one satisfaction. The repeated dicta, that if the principal debt subsists, the promise is collateral and within the statute, are not sustainable; Cross v. Richardson, 30 Vt. 641. But the general doctrine now is that the transaction must amount to a purchase, the engagement for the debt being the consideration therefor, in whole or in part; Alger v. Scoville, 1 Gray (Mass.) 391.

Where one owes a debt to another, and promises to pay his debt to a creditor of such other party, the promise is not within the statute; Dearborn v. Parks, 5 Greenl. (Me.) 81, 17 Am. Dec. 206; 3 B. & C. 842.

Second, if the new promise is for a liability then first incurred, it is original, if exclusive credit is given to the promisor; Chambers v. Robbins, 28 Conn. 544; Browne, Stat. Fr. § 195. Whether exclusive credit is so given is a question of fact for the jury; Brooke v. Waring, 7 Gill (Md.) 7. Merely charging the debtor on a book-account is not conclusive.

Whether promises merely to indemnify come within the statute is not wholly settled; Browne, Stat. Fr. § 158; Brandt, Sur. & Guar. §§ 59, 61. In many cases they are held to be original promises, and not within the statute; Chapin v. Merrill, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 657. But few of the cases, however, have been decided solely on this ground, most of them falling within the classes of original promises before specified. On principle, such contracts seem within the statute if there is a liability on the part of any third person to the promisee. If not, these promises would be original under class seven, above. Where the indemnity is against the promisor's own default, he is already liable without his promise to indemnify; and to make the promise collateral would make the statute a covert fraud; 10 Ad. & E. 453; Alger v. Scoville, 1 Gray (Mass.) 391; Harrison v. Sawtel, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 242, 6 Am. Dec. 337; Jones v. Shorter, 1 Ga. 294, 44 Am. Dec. 649; Dunn v. West, 5 B. Monr. (Ky.) 382; Beaman's Adm'r v. Russell, 20 Vt. 205, 49 Am. Dec. 775; Holmes v. Knights, 10 N. H. 175; Stocking v. Sage, 1 Conn. 519; Linscott v. Fernald, 5 Me. 504. The weight of American authority is said to be in favor of applying the statute to cases of indemnity; Brandt, Sur. & Guar. § 59, n. When the promise to indemnify is in fact a promise to pay the debt of another it is within the statute. See Mallory v. Gillett, 21 N. Y. 412. A promise to indemnify another against loss in becoming surety on a replevin bond is within the statute; Easter v. White, 12 Ohio St. 219. So on a bond for stay of execution; Nugent v. Wolfe, 111 Pa. 471, 4 Atl. 15, 56 Am. Rep. 291. But a promise to indemnify one if he will become bail in a criminal case has been held not within the statute; 4 B. & S. 414.

A verbal promise to save certain parties harmless from all loss by promisees as sureties on account of a bond signed at promisor's request is valid; Hawes v. Murphy, 191 Mass. 469, 78 N. E. 109; and so where a mortgagee agreed verbally to indemnify a purchaser of part of the mortgaged property against judgment liens; Peterson v. Creason, 47 Or. 69, 81 Pac. 574; a verbal promise by an attorney to sureties on an appellee's bond to protect them; Esch v. White, 76 Minn. 220, 78 N. W. 1114; but an oral promise to reimburse plaintiff as surety on the bond of another for any loss resulting therefrom, was held to be within the statute; Craft v. Lott, 87 Miss. 590, 40 South. 462, 6 Ann. Cas. 670. An oral promise to indemnify another for becoming surety on the bond of a third, is not within the statute; Hartley v. Sandford, 66 N. J. L. 40, 48 Atl. 1009. A parol promise by a surety on a sheriff's bond to indemnify a co-surety against any loss, is within the statute; Wolverton v. Davis, 85 Va. 64, 6 S. E. 619, 17 Am. St. Rep. 56; but a verbal agreement by the principal that he would save harmless the sureties from liability on his bond, is valid as an original undertaking; Barth v. Graf, 101 Wis. 27, 76 N. W. 1100.

A contract of insurance is not within the statute; Mattingly v. Ins. Co., 120 Ky. 768, 83 S. W. 577.

Third, guaranties may be given for liabilities thereafter to be incurred, and will attach when the liability actually accrues. In this class the promise will be original, and not within the statute, if credit is given to the promisor exclusively; 2 Term 80. See Pomeroy v. Patterson, 40 Ill. App. 275. But where the future obligation is contingent merely, the new promise is held not within the statute, on the ground that there is no principal liability when the collateral one is incurred; Browne, Stat. Fr. § 196. But this doctrine is questionable if the agreement distinctly contemplates the contingency; Carville v. Crane, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 483, 40 Am. Dec. 364. An offer to guarantee must be accepted within a reasonable time; but no notice of acceptance is required if property has been delivered under the guaranty; Paige v. Parker, 8 Gray (Mass.) 211; Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Kercheval, 2 Mich. 511; Doud v. Bank, 54 Fed. 846, 4 C. C. A. 607; Davis v. Wells, 104 U. S. 159, 26 L. Ed. 686.

"A contract of guaranty, like every other contract, can only be made by the mutual assent of the parties. If the guaranty is signed by the guarantor, at the request of the other party, or if the latter's agreement to accept is contemporaneous with the guaranty; or if the receipt from him of a valuable consideration, however small, is acknowledged in the guaranty, the mutual assent is proved, and the delivery of the guaranty to him or for his use completes the contract. But if the guaranty is signed by the guarantor, without any previous request of the other party, and in his absence, for no consideration moving between them, except future advances to be made to the principal debtor, the guaranty is in legal effect an offer or proposal on the part of the guarantor, needing an acceptance by the other party to complete the contract;" Davis Sewing Mach.

The agreement of a del credere agent to pay for goods sold by him is not within the statute; Sherwood v. Stone, 14 N. Y. 267.

The form of the writing is not material; it may consist of one or more writings (provided they refer to each other on their face; Wiley v. Robert, 27 Mo. 388; but see Salmon Falls Mfg. Co. v. Goddard, 14 How. 446, 14 L. Ed. 493); in such case it is enough if one be signed; 11 East 142. A minute of a vote of a corporation is sufficient; Tufts v. Mining Co., 14 Allen (Mass.) 407.

There is a conflict of authority as to whether the consideration need appear in the writing. It was finally settled in England that it must; 4 B. & Ald. 595; but this is now changed by statute 19 & 20 Vict. The cases are reviewed in Brandt, Sur. & Guar. § 82. A seal imports a consideration; id. As to the signature of the party to be charged, a seal alone is generally held sufficient; Stratford, 764; so is a mark; Barnard v. Heydrick, 49 Barb. (N. Y.) 62; 2 M. & S. 286; and a signature by the initials only; 1 Den. 471; Sanborn v. Flagler, 9 Allen (Mass.) 474; and a signature on a telegram; Dunning & Smith v. Roberts, 35 Barb. (N. Y.) 463. The signature need not be at the foot of the writing; 2 M. & W. 653.

Guaranty may be made for the tort, as well as the contract of another, and then comes under the term mis carriage in the statute; 2 B. & Ald. 613; Turner v. Hubbell, 2 Day (Conn.) 457, 2 Am. Dec. 115; 1 Wils. 305; Stone v. Hooker, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 154; Avery v. Halsey, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 174.

All guaranties need a consideration to support them. A guaranty of the payment of a negotiable promissory note, written by a third person upon a note before its delivery, need express no consideration, even where the law requires the consideration of the guaranty to be expressed in writing; but the consideration which the note upon its face implies to have passed between the original parties is sufficient; Moses v. Bank, 149 U. S. 298, 13 Sup. Ct. 900, 37 L. Ed. 743. Forbearance to sue is good consideration; Browne, Stat. Fr. § 190; Sage v. Wilcox, 6 Conn. 81; 27 L. J. Exch. 120; Sanders v. Barlow, 21 Fed. 836; Wills v. Ross, 77 Ind. 1, 40 Am. Rep. 279. Where the guaranty is contemporaneous with the principal obligation, it shares the consideration of the latter; Leonard v. Vredenburg, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 29, 5 Am. Dec. 317; Rabaud v. De Wolf, 1 Paine 580, Fed. Cas. No. 11,519; Townesley v. Sumrall, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 170, 7 L. Ed. 386; Simons v. Steele, 36 N. H. 73.

A guaranty may be for a single act, or may be continuous. The cases are conflicting, as the question is purely one of the intention of the particular contract; Brandt, Sur. & Guar. 156. The tendency in this country is said to be against construing guaranties as continuing, unless the intention of the parties is so clear as not to admit of a reasonable doubt; Bayl. Sur. & Guar. 7, citing Birdsall v. Heacock, 32 Ohio St. 177, 30 Am. Rep. 572; Lent v. Paddleford, 2 Am. Lead. Cas. 141; Whitney v. Groot, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 82; Tausig v. Reid, 145 Ill. 488, 32 N. E. 918, 36 Am. St. Rep. 504. If the object be to give a standing credit to be used from time to time, either indefinitely or for a fixed period, the liability is continuing; Sherburne v. Paper Co., 40 Ill. App. 383; Conduitt v. Ryan, 3 Ind. App. 1, 29 N. E. 160; but if no time is fixed and nothing indicates the continuance of the obligation, the presumption is in favor of a limited liability as to time; Crist v. Burlingame, 62 Barb. (N. Y.) 351. A guaranty of any bills of account for goods sold another to a certain amount is a continuing guaranty; Sherburne v. Paper Co., 40 Ill. App. 383. A sealed continuing guaranty is revoked by the death of the guarantor; Slagle & Co. v. Forney's Ex'rs, 22 W. N. C. (Pa.) 457.

A continuing guaranty (so far as it is a mere offer) is revoked as to future action by the death of the guarantor; 5 Q. B. D. 42.

The authorities are not agreed as to the negotiability of a guaranty. It is held that a guaranty which is a separate and distinct instrument is not negotiable separately; Ekel v. Snevily, 3 W. & S. (Pa.) 272, 38 Am. Dec. 758; Sandford v. Norton, 14 Vt. 233; Irish v. Cutter, 31 Me. 536; Gallagher v. White, 31 Barb. (N. Y.) 92; True v. Fuller, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 140. The right of the acceptor of a bill, to the benefit of a guaranty given to him, is not transferable to a holder of the bill, unless it was given for the purpose of being exhibited to other parties; 3 Ch. App. 756. But if a guaranty is on a negotiable note, it is negotiable with the note; and if the note is to bearer, the guaranty has been held to be negotiable in itself; Ketchell v. Burns, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 456; Smith v. Dickinson, 6 Humphr. (Tenn.) 261, 44 Am. Dec. 306. But an equitable interest passes by transfer, and the assignee may sue in the name of the assignor; Reed v. Garvin, 12 S. & R. 100; Partridge v. Davis, 20 Vt. 506. It has been held that no suit can be maintained upon a guaranty except by the person with whom it was made; McDoal v. Yoemans, 8 Watts (Pa.) 361; but it has also been held that a guaranty of a note may be sued on by any person who advances money on it, but that it is not negotiable unless made upon the note the payment of which it guarantees; McLaren v. Watson's Ex'rs, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 425, 37 Am. Dec. 260.

It is held that a guaranty is not enforceable by others than those to whom it is directed; Bleeker v. Hyde, 3 McLean 279, Fed. Cas. No. 1,537; Mellen v. Whipple, 1 Gray (Mass.) 317; Blymire v. Bostle, 6 Watts (Pa.) 182, 31 Am. Dec. 458; although they advance goods thereon; Grant v. Naylor, 4 Cra. (U. S.) 224, 2 L. Ed. 603.

In one case it was held that the guarantor was not bound where the guaranty was addressed to two and acted on by one of them only; Smith v. Montgomery, 3 Tex. 190. It was held, also, that the guaranty was not enforceable by the survivor of two to whom it was addressed, for causes occurring since the decease of the other; 7 Term 254.

In the case of promissory notes, a distinction has sometimes been made between a guaranty of payment and a guaranty of collectibility; the latter requiring that the holder shall diligently prosecute the principal debtor without avail; Day v. Elmore, 4 Wis. 190; Clark v. Merriam, 25 Conn. 576; Van Derveer v. Wright, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 547; Blanchard v. Wood, 26 Me. 358; Crane v. Wheeler, 48 Minn. 207, 50 N. W. 1033.

It has in some cases been held that an indorsement in blank on a promissory note by a stranger to the note was prima facie a guaranty; Donovan v. Griswold, 37 Ill. App. 616. By Neg. Inst. Act §§ 63, 64, all such signers are liable as indorsers. A second acceptance on a bill of exchange may amount to a guaranty; 2 Camp. 447.

A corporation (unless by statutory authority) cannot guarantee a liability unless it is created in the ordinary course of its business; Ward v. Joslin, 105 Fed. 224, 44 C. C. A. 456, affirmed 186 U. S. 142, 22 Sup. Ct. 807, 46 L. Ed. 1093. Where a corporation by the unanimous consent of its stockholders guaranteed the debt of another corporation such guaranty was subject to the claims of its creditors; In re Prospect Worsted Mills, 126 Fed. 1011. A lumber corporation has no power to bind itself as a guarantor for the performance of a building contract; In re Smith Lumber Co., 132 Fed. 620; contra, Central Lumber Co. v. Kelter, 201 Ill. 503, 66 N. E. 543. A corporation may guarantee dividends on its stock; Wisconsin Lumber Co. v. Tel. Co., 127 Ia. 350, 101 N. W. 742, 69 L. R. A. 968, 109 Am. St. Rep. 387. Guarantees of payment of bonds taken by a trust company in the ordinary course of business are not ultra vires; Broadway Nat. Bank v. Baker, 176 Mass. 294, 57 N. E. 603; but it is ultra vires for a manufacturing corporation to guarantee the payment of rent although it was given to induce the lessee to become a customer; Koehler & Co. v. Reinheimer, 26 App. Div. 1, 49 N. Y. Supp. 755. In Aaronson v. Brewing Co., 26 Misc. 655, 56 N. Y. Supp. 387, it was held that a brewing company can guarantee the performance of a lease of one of its customers; to the same effect, Winterfield v. Brewing Co., 96 Wis. 239, 71 N. W. 101. A corporation, unless organized for the express purpose of becoming surety for others, has no power to do so unless the contract is to its manifest advantage; Monarch Co. v. Bank, 105 Ky. 430, 49 S. W.

317, 88 Am. St. Rep. 310. A brewing company may become liable as surety on a license bond which it executed to induce the licensee to buy liquor from it; Horst v. Lewis, 71 Neb. 365, 98 N. W. 1046, 103 N. W. 460.

A guarantor is discharged by a material alteration in the contract without his consent; Brandt, Sur. & Guar. § 378; Page v. Krekey, 137 N. Y. 307, 33 N. E. 311, 21 L. R. A. 409, 33 Am. St. Rep. 731; Manning, C. & Co. v. Alger, 85 Ia. 617, 52 N. W. 542. Modification of a contract made by the contractor and the owner will not release the guarantor, if they are such as are permitted by the terms of the contract; Miller v. Eccles, 155 Pa. 36, 25 Atl. 776. See SURETYSHIP.

The guarantor may also be discharged by the neglect of the creditor in pursuing the principal debtor. The same strictness as to demand and notice is not necessary to charge a guarantor as is required to charge an indorser; but in the case of a guaranteed note the demand on the maker must be made in a reasonable time, and if he is solvent at the time of the maturity of the note, and remains so for such reasonable time afterwards, the guarantor does not become liable for his subsequent insolvency; 2 H. Bla. 612; Talbot v. Gay, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 534. Notice of non-payment must also be given to the guarantor; Greene v. Dodge, 2 Ohio 430; but where the name of the guarantor of a promissory note does not appear on the note, such notice is not necessary unless damage is sustained thereby, and in such case the guarantor is discharged only to the extent of such damage; Reynolds v. Douglass, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 497, 9 L. Ed. 1171. One who guarantees that another will pay promptly for goods to be purchased is not liable where the purchaser becomes insolvent after the guaranty is given, and the seller gives the guarantor no notice of the purchaser's failure to pay; Tausig v. Reid, 145 Ill. 488, 32 N. E. 918, 36 Am. St. Rep. 504. A presentment for payment is not necessary in order to charge one who guarantees the due payment of a bill or note; 5 M. & G. 559. It is not necessary that an action should be brought against the principal debtor; Douglass v. Reynolds, 7 Pet. 113, 8 L. Ed. 626. See, also, Isett v. Hoge, 2 Watts (Pa.) 128; Backus v. Shipherd, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 629.

From the close connection of guaranty with suretyship, it is convenient to consider many of the principles common to both under the head of suretyship, which article see.

Where an innocent person acts upon a guaranty, the execution of which was procured by misrepresentation, the burden devolves upon the guarantor to show that he was free from negligence; the rule in such cases being the same with respect to the execution of guaranties as to that of negotiable instruments; Page v. Krekey, 63 Hun 629, 17 N. Y. Supp. 764.

Whether a guaranty is absolute or special is a question of fact; Donovan v. Griswold, 37 Ill. App. 616.

Where the guaranty of a written contract is executed on the same paper, notice of acceptance by the person for whose benefit it is made, is unnecessary; Bechtold v. Lyon, 130 Ind. 194, 29 N. E. 912. See SURETYSHIP.

It is not within the general scope of a partner's authority to give guaranties in the name of the firm; Wood's Byles, Bills 48; Osborne v. Thompson, 35 Minn. 229, 28 N. W. 260. And an officer of a company cannot bind it as surety or guarantor; Culver v. Real Estate Co., 91 Pa. 367.

See SURETYSHIP.

GUARANTY FUND. Acts subjecting banks to assessments for a depositors' guaranty fund to be applied to the payment of depositors of an insolvent bank. The Oklahoma acts provide an assessment of five per cent upon each bank's average daily deposits, to be levied by the state banking board, and applied to the payment of depositors of any failed bank if its cash is not immediately available to pay its depositors in full. If the fund be not sufficient, an additional assessment must be levied. A lien is reserved upon the assets of the failing bank to make good the sum thus taken from the fund. These acts were held valid as within the police power and as not depriving banks of their property without due process of law, or denying them the equal protection of the laws, or impairing the obligation of their charter contracts; Noble State Bank v. Haskell, 219 U. S. 104, 31 Sup. Ct. 186, 55 L. Ed. 112, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1062, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 487, affirming id., 22 Okl. 48, 97 Pac. 590; id., 219 U. S. 575, 31 Sup. Ct. 299, 55 L. Ed. 341, refusing a rehearing.

In Shallenberger v. Bank, 219 U. S. 114, 31 Sup. Ct. 189, 55 L. Ed. 117, a Nebraska act, creating a like fund and prohibiting banking except by corporations formed under the act, was held valid. A Kansas act was sustained in Assaria State Bank v. Dolley, 219 U. S. 121, 31 Sup. Ct. 189, 55 L. Ed. 123, and was held valid as against national banks in Abilene Nat. Bank v. Dolley, 228 U. S. 1, 33 Sup. Ct. 409, 57 L. Ed. 707.

GUARDAGE. The condition of one who is under a guardian. A state of wardship.

GUARDIAN AD LITEM. A guardian appointed to represent the ward in legal proceedings to which he is a party defendant.

The appointment of such is incident to the power of every court to try a case; Bullard v. Spoor, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 430; and the power is then confined to the particular case at bar; Co. Litt. 89, n. 16. His duty is to manage the interest of the infant when sued. In criminal cases no guardian is appointed: the court acts as guardian; Reeve, Dom. Rel. 318; Field, Inf. 163. A guardian ad litem cannot be appointed till the infant has been brought before the court in some of the modes prescribed by law; Hodges v. Wise, 16 Ala. 509; Shaefer v. Gates, 2 B. Mon. (Ky.) 453, 38 Am. Dec. 164. See Allsmiller v. Freutchenicht, 86 Ky. 198, 5 S. W. 746. Such guardian cannot waive service of process; Robbins v. Robbins, 2 Ind. 74; and his powers are not limited to defence, objection, and opposition merely, but he may file a cross bill to protect the infant's interest involved in the litigation, and appeal from a decree dismissing the same; Sprague v. Beamer, 45 Ill. App. 17. The writ and declaration in actions at law against infants are to be made out as in ordinary cases. In English practice where the defendant neglects to appear, or appears otherwise than by guardian, the plaintiff may apply for and obtain a summons calling on him to appear by guardian within a given time; otherwise the plaintiff may be at liberty to proceed as in other cases, having had a nominal guardian assigned to the infant; Macphers. Inf. 359. A like rule prevails in New York and other states; Van Deusen v. Brower, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 50; Clarke v. Gilmanton, 12 N. H. 515. Schoul. Dom. Rel. 596.

The omission to appoint a guardian ad litem does not render the judgment void, but only voidable; Austin v. Trustees, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 196, 41 Am. Dec. 497. See Delashmatt v. Parrent, 39 Kan. 548, 18 Pac. 712. It will be presumed, where the chancellor received the answer of a person as guardian ad litem, that he was regularly appointed, although it does not appear of record; Stevenson v. Kurtz, 98 Mich. 493, 57 N. W. 580. See Robertson v. Robertson, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 197. It is held to be error to decree the sale of a decedent's property on the petition of the representatives, without the previous appointment of a guardian ad litem for the infant heirs; Craig v. McGehee, 16 Ala. 41. Where the general guardian petitions for a sale of his ward's lands, the court must appoint a guardian ad litem; Wyatt v. Mansfield's Heirs, 18 B. Monr. (Ky.) 779; King v. Collins, 21 Ala. 363; McAllister v. Moyer, 30 Miss. 258; Sturges v. Longworth, 1 Ohio St. 544; but this is not necessary where the application is for leave to invest money of the ward in land; Callaway v. Bridges, 79 Ga. 753, 4 S. E. 687.

It seems that a guardian ad litem can elect whether to come into hotch-pot; Andrews v. Hall, 15 Ala. 85. An appearance of the minor in court is not necessary for the appointment of a guardian to manage his interest in the suit; 11 E. L. & Eq. 156. If an infant comes of age pending the suit, he can assert his rights at once for himself, and if he does not he cannot generally complain of the acts of his guardian ad litem; Mitchell v. Berry, 1 Metc. (Ky.) 602; Marshall v. Wing, 50 Me. 62.

The appointment of a guardian ad litem is valid, although the infant has not been regularly served with process, but has only accepted service thereof; Cates v. Pickett, 97 N. C. 21, 1 S. E. 763. The rule that a next friend or guardian ad litem cannot by admissions or stipulation, surrender the rights of the infant, does not prevent a guardian ad litem or prochein ami from assenting to such arrangements as will facilitate the determination of the case in which the rights of the infant are involved; Kingsbury v. Buckner, 134 U. S. 650, 10 Sup. Ct. 638, 33 L. Ed. 1047. A married woman cannot be a guardian ad litem or next friend; 34 Ch. D. 435.

GUARDIAN AND WARD. One who legally has the care and management of the person, or the estate, or both, of a child during his minority. Reeve, Dom. Rel. 311.

Guardian has been held to be synonymous with "next friend"; U. S. Mut. Acc. Ass'n v. Weller, 30 Fla. 210, 11 South. 786.

A person having the control of the property of a minor without that of his person is known in the civil law, as well as in some of the states, by the name of curator. 1 Lec. du Droit Civ. Rom. 241. The guardian of the person is called "tutor." Tiff. Pers. & Dom. Rel. 295.

Guardian by chancery. This guardianship, although unknown at the common law, is well established in practice now. It grew up in the time of William III., and had its foundation in the royal prerogative of the king as parens patriæ. 2 Fonbl. Eq. 246. This power the sovereign is presumed to have delegated to the chancellor; 10 Ves. 63; 2 P. Wms. 118; Reeve, Dom. Rel. 317. By virtue of it, the chancellor appoints a guardian where there is none, and exercises a superintending control over all guardians, however appointed, removing them for misconduct and appointing others in their stead; Co. Litt. 89; 1 P. Wms. 703; 2 Kent 227. But only, it is said, where the minor has property; Tiffany, Dom. Rel. 300; 2 Russ. 1, 20.

The English Judicature Act of 1873 assigns the wardship of infants and the care of infants' estates to the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice. Whart. Lex.

An infant with property becomes a ward of court (1) if an action is commenced in his name; (2) if an order is made on petition or summons for the appointment of a guardian; (3) if an order is made in like manner for maintenance; (4) if a fund belonging to an infant is paid into court under the acts for the relief of trustees; Brett, L. Cas. Mod. Eq. 95. See 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 462 note 8.

This power resides in courts of equity; In re Andrews, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 99; Ex parte Crumb, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 439; Board of Children's Guardians v. Shutter, 139 Ind. 268, 34 N. E. 665, 31 L. R. A. 740; but more commonly by statute in probate or surrogate courts; 2 Kent 226; Sessions v. Kell, 30 Miss. 458; Ex parte Dawson, 3 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 133.

Guardian by nature is the father, and, on his death, the mother; 2 Kent 220; Fields v. Law, 2 Root (Conn.) 320; Combs v. Jackson, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 153, 19 Am. Dec. 568; Freto v. Brown, 4 Mass. 675.

This guardianship, by the common law, extends only to the person, and the subject of it is the heir apparent, and not the other children,—not even the daughter when there are no sons; for they are but presumptive heirs only, since their right may be defeated by the birth of a son after their father's decease. But as all the children male and female equally inherit with us, this guardianship extends to all the children, as an inherent right in their parents during their minority; 2 Kent 220. In default of both parents, the natural guardian is the grandfather or grandmother, or next of kin; Lamar v. Micou, 114 U. S. 218, 5 Sup. Ct. 857, 29 L. Ed. 94; In re Benton, 92 Ia. 202, 60 N. W. 614, 54 Am. St. Rep. 546.

The mother of a bastard child is its natural guardian; Dalton v. State, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 357; Wright v. Wright, 2 Mass. 109; but not by the common law; Reeve, Dom. Rel. 314, note. The power of a natural guardian over the person of his ward is perhaps better explained by reference to the relation of parent and child. See DOMICIL. It is well settled that the court of chancery may, for just cause, interpose and control the authority and discretion of the parent in the education and care of his child; People v. Mercen, 8 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 47; 10 Ves. 52.

A guardian by nature is not entitled to the control of his ward's personal property; Alston v. Alston, 34 Ala. 15; Nelson v. Goree's Adm'r, 34 Ala. 565; 1 P. Wms. 285; Kline v. Beebe, 6 Conn. 494; Hyde v. Stone, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 354, 22 Am. Dec. 582; Miles v. Boyden, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 213; Perry v. Carmichael, 95 Ill. 519; unless by statute. See McCarty v. Rountree, 19 Mo. 345; Taylor v. Bemiss, 110 U. S. 42, 3 Sup. Ct. 441, 28 L. Ed. 64. The father must support his ward; Haring v. Coles, 2 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 349. But where his means are limited, the court will grant an allowance out of his child's estate; id., 1 Bro. C. C. 387. But the mother, if guardian, is not obliged to support her child if it has sufficient estate of its own; nor is she entitled, like the father, when guardian, to its services, unless she is compelled to maintain it. But where the mother, who is guardian of her son, engages board for him, she incurs liability personally and not as guardian; McNabb v. Clipp, 5 Ind. App. 204, 31 N. E. 858.

A father as guardian by nature has no right to the real or personal estate of his child; that right, whenever he has it, must be as a guardian in socage, or by some statutory provision; Fonda v. Van Horne, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 631, 30 Am. Dec. 77.

Guardian by nurture. This guardianship belonged to the father, then to the mother.

The subject of it extended to the younger children, not the heirs apparent. In this country it does not exist, or, rather, it is merged in the higher and more durable guardianship by nature, because all the children are heirs, and, therefore, the subject of that guardianship; 2 Kent 221; Reeve, Dom. Rel. 315; Perkins v. Dyer, 6 Ga. 401. It extended to the person only; Kline v. Beebe, 6 Conn. 494; 40 E. L. & Eq. 109; and terminated at the age of fourteen; 1 Bla. Com. 461.

Guardian in socage. This guardianship arose when socage lands descended to an infant under fourteen years of age; at which period it ceased if another guardian was appointed, otherwise it continued; Byrne v. Van Hoesen, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 66. The person entitled to it by common law was the next of kin, who could not by any possibility inherit the estate; 1 Bla. Com. 461. If the lands descended from a paternal relative, the mother or next of kin on her part was the guardian; if from a maternal relative the father, or next of kin on his part was; Combs v. Jackson, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 153, 19 Am. Dec. 568. Although recognized in New York, it was never common in the United States; Byrne v. Van Hoesen, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 66; because, by the statutes of descents generally in force in this country, those who are next of kin may eventually inherit. Wherever it has been recognized, it has been in a form differing materially from its character at common law; Fonda v. Van Horne, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 631, 30 Am. Dec. 77. Such guardian was also guardian of the person of his ward as well as his real estate; Co. Litt. 87, 89. Although it did not arise unless the infant was seized of lands held in socage, yet when it did arise it extended to hereditaments which do not lie in tenure and to the ward's personal estate. See Hargrave's note 67 to Co. Litt. This guardian could lease his ward's estate and maintain ejectment against a disseisor in his own name; 2 Bacon, Abr. 683. A guardian in socage cannot be removed from office, but the ward may supersede him at the age of fourteen, by a guardian of his own choice; Co. Litt. 89. In New York guardians in socage have neither common law nor statutory right to control the personal estate of the wards; Foley v. Ins. Co., 138 N. Y. 333, 34 N. E. 211, 20 L. R. A. 620, 34 Am. St. Rep. 456.

There was anciently a guardianship by chivalry at the common law, where lands came to an infant by descent which were holden by knight-service; Co. Litt. 88, 11, note. That tenure being abolished by statute Car. II., the guardianship has ceased to exist in England; it has never had any existence in the United States.

Guardians by statute are of two kinds: first, those appointed by deed or will; second, those appointed by court in pursuance of some statute.

Testamentary guardians are appointed by the deed or last will of the father; Huson v. Green, 88 Ga. 722, 16 S. E. 253; and they supersede the claims of all other guardians, and have control of the person and the real and personal estate of the child till he arrives at full age.

This power of appointment was given to the father by the stat. 12 Car. II. c. 24, which has been pretty extensively adopted in this country, though in some states the appointment is limited to will. Under it, the father might thus dispose of his children, born and unborn; 7 Ves. 315; but not of his grandchildren; Jackson v. Woods, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 278. Nor does it matter whether the father is a minor or not; 2 Kent 225. It continues during the minority of a male ward, both as to his estate and person, notwithstanding his marriage; Reeve, Dom. Rel. 328; 2 Kent 224; In re Whitaker, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 380. There seems to be some doubt as to whether marriage would determine it over a female ward; 2 Kent 224. It is more reasonable that it should, inasmuch as the husband acquires in law a right to the control of his wife's person. But it would seem that a person marrying a testamentary guardian is not entitled to the money of the ward; Holmes v. Field, 12 Ill. 431. In England and most of the United States a mother cannot appoint a testamentary guardian, nor can a putative father, nor a person in loco parentis; 1 Bla. Com. 462, n.; but by statute in Illinois she may make an appointment, if the father has not done so, provided she be not remarried after his death; 2 Kent 225. In New York, the consent of the mother is required to a testamentary appointment by the father; Schoul. Dom. Rel. 400. A man cannot by law appoint his son testamentary guardian for the children of the latter; Grimsley v. Grimsley, 79 Ga. 397, 5 S. E. 760.

Guardians appointed by court. The greater number of guardians among us, by far, are those appointed by court, in conformity with statutes which regulate their powers and duties. In the absence of special provisions, their rights and duties are governed by the general law on the subject of guardian and ward.

Appointment of guardians. All guardians of infants specially appointed must be appointed by the infant's parent; or by the infant himself; or by a court of competent jurisdiction.

After the age of fourteen, the ward is entitled to choose a guardian, at common law, and generally by statute; Reeve, Dom. Rel. 320; Kelly v. Smith, 15 Ala. 687; Sessions v. Kell, 30 Miss. 458; 11 Jur. 114. His choice is subject, however, to the rejection of the court for good reason, when he is entitled to choose again; Inferior Court v. Cherry, 14 Ga. 594. So guardianship by the sole appointment of the infant cannot now be said to exist. If the court appoint one before the age of choice, the infant may appear and choose one at that age, without any notice to the guardian appointed; Sessions v. Kell, 30 Miss. 458; Kelly v. Smith, 15 Ala. 687; Bryce v. Wynn, 50 Ga. 332; Appeal of Adams, 38 Conn. 304. But if none be chosen, then the old one acts. It seems that in Indiana the old one can be removed only for cause shown; in which case, of course, he is entitled to notice; Dibble v. Dibble, 8 Ind. 307. As to the method of appointment by the minor see 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 462.

A probate, surrogate, or county court has no power to appoint, unless the minor resides in the same county; Brown v. Lynch, 2 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 214; Grier v. McLendon, 7 Ga. 362; Munson v. Newson, 9 Tex. 109; Dorman v. Ogbourne, 16 Ala. 759; De Jarnett v. Harper, 45 Mo. App. 415; but where the ward is a nonresident, guardianship is frequently recognized for the collection and preservation of his estate in the jurisdiction, and in such cases, the court where the property is situated will appoint a guardian, the existence of the property determining the jurisdiction; Clarke v. Cordis, 4 Allen (Mass.) 466; 27 E. L. & Eq. 249. Persons residing out of the jurisdiction will not usually be appointed guardians; but this rule is not invariable, except by statute; Schoul. Dom. Rel. 419.

It has been a subject of doubt whether a married woman may be a guardian; while there are cases which sustain their acts while acting as guardians, clear precedents for their actual appointment are wanting. See 2 Dougl. 433. It has been held, however, that a married woman may be co-guardian with a man, though her sole appointment is improper; L. R. 1 Ch. 387. See Farrer v. Clark, 29 Miss. 195; Kettletas v. Gardner, 1 Paige (N. Y.) 488; Ex parte Maxwell, 19 Ind. 88. A single woman by her marriage loses her guardianship, it would seem; but she may be reappointed; 2 Kent 225; 2 Dougl. 433. It seems probable that recent statutes relating to the rights of married women will modify these cases. Where there is a valid guardianship unrevoked, the appointment of another is void; Thomas v. Burrus, 23 Miss. 550, 57 Am. Dec. 154.

The court has jurisdiction to interfere with and remove the guardian of a child who has no property, on proof that it is for the welfare of the child that the guardian should be removed; [1893] 1 Ch. 143.

Powers and liabilities of guardians. The relation of a guardian to his ward is that of a trustee in equity, and bailee at law; Swan v. Dent, 2 Md. Ch. 111. It is a trust which he cannot assign; 1 Pars. Contr. 116. He will not be allowed to reap any benefit from his ward's estate; 2 Com. 230; except for his legal compensation or commission; but must account for all profits, which the ward may elect to take or charge interest on the capital used by him; Kyle v. Barnett, 17 Ala. 306; he cannot purchase lands belonging to him; Hindman v. O'Connor, 54 Ark. 627, 16 S. W. 1052, 13 L. R. A. 490. He can invest the money of his ward in real estate only by order of court; Sherry v. Sansberry, 3 Ind. 320; Davis v. Harris, 13 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 9; Williams v. Morton, 38 Me. 47, 61 Am. Dec. 229; Washabaugh v. Hall, 4 S. D. 168, 56 N. W. 82; Belding v. Willard, 56 Fed. 699. And he cannot convert real estate into personality without a similar order; Field, Inf. 109; Taylor v. Galloway, 1 Ohio 232, 13 Am. Dec. 605; Jackson v. Todd, 25 N. J. L. 121; 2 Kent 230. The law does not favor the conversion of the real estate of minors; Appeal of Davis, 14 Pa. 372; but if it be clearly to the interest of a minor that his real estate be sold, the court will award an order of sale, notwithstanding that in the event of his death during minority, the proceeds would go to other parties than those to whom the land would have descended had it not been converted; Drayton's Estate, 6 Phila. (Pa.) 157. The rule is different in England; there land converted into money, or money into land, retains its character of land or money, as the case may be, during the nonage of the minor; 6 Ves. 6.

He may lease the land of his ward; Richardson v. Noyes, 2 Mass. 56, 3 Am. Dec. 24; but if the lease extends beyond the minority of the ward, the latter may avoid it on coming of age; Genet v. Tallmadge, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 561; Jones v. Ward, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 160; Snook v. Sutton, 10 N. J. L. 133. He may sell his ward's personality without order of court; Woodward v. Donally, 27 Ala. 198; Maclay v. Society, 152 U. S. 499, 14 Sup. Ct. 678, 38 L. Ed. 528; and dispose of and manage it as he pleases; Ellis v. Proprietors, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 243. He is required to put the money out at interest, or show that he was unable to do this; Davis v. Harris, 13 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 9; Fay v. Howe, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 527; Appeal of Lukens, 7 W. & S. (Pa.) 48; 13 E. L. & Eq. 140; Jacobia v. Terry, 92 Mich. 275, 52 N. W. 629; Steyer v. Morris, 39 Ill. App. 382. And in the absence of evidence to the contrary, it will be presumed that a guardian might have kept funds of his ward at interest; Steyer v. Morris, 39 Ill. App. 382. If he spends more than the net income of the estate in the maintenance and education of the ward without permission of the court, he may be held liable for the principal thus consumed; Frelick v. Turner, 26 Miss. 393; Tharington v. Tharington, 99 N. C. 118, 5 S. E. 414.

If he erects buildings on his ward's estate out of his own money, without order of court, he will not be allowed any compensation; Hassard v. Rowe, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 22; Gearhart v. Jordan, 11 Pa. 326; Austin v. Lamar, 23 Miss. 189; Gerber v. Bauerline, 17 Or. 115, 19 Pac. 849. He is not chargeable with the services of his wards if for their own benefit he requires them to work for him; Armstrong's Heirs v. Walkup, 12 Gratt.

(Va.) 608. A married woman guardian can convey the real estate of her ward without her husband joining; 2 Dougl. 433. On marriage of a female minor in Mississippi, her husband, although a minor, is entitled to receive her estate from her guardian; Wood v. Henderson, 2 How. (Miss.) 893; A guardian who deposited the moneys of his ward, as guardian, in a bank that was solvent, with his sureties, was held not liable for loss upon the failure of the bank; In re Law's Estate, 144 Pa. 499, 22 Atl. 831, 14 L. R. A. 103.

Joint guardians may sue together on account of any joint transaction founded on their relation to the ward, even after the relation ceases; Sherman v. Akins, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 283; see Blake v. Pegram, 101 Mass. 592; and where one guardian consents to his co-guardian's misapplication of funds, he is liable; Appeal of Clark, 18 Pa. 175. Guardians like other trustees—executors and administrators excepted—may portion out the management of the property to suit their respective taste and qualifications, while neither parts irrevocably with the control of the whole; and in such case each is chargeable with no more than what he received, unless unwarrantable negligence in superintending the others' acts can be shown; Appeal of Jones, 8 W. & S. (Pa.) 143, 42 Am. Dec. 282; and the discharge of one who has received no part of the estate relieves him from liability; Hocker v. Wood's Ex'r, 33 Pa. 466.

Contracts between guardian and ward immediately after the latter has attained his majority are unfavorably regarded by the courts, and will be set aside where they redound to the profit of the guardian; Bisph. Eq. 234; Say's Ex'rs v. Barnes, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 114, 8 Am. Dec. 679; McClellan v. Kennedy, 8 Md. 230; Sullivan v. Blackwell, 28 Miss. 737; Wright v. Arnold, 14 B. Monr. (Ky.) 638, 61 Am. Dec. 172; Gale v. Wells, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 84. Neither is he allowed to purchase at the sale of his ward's property; Patton v. Thompson, 55 N. C. 285; Lefevre v. Laraway, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 167; Hindman v. O'Connor, 54 Ark. 627, 16 S. W. 1052, 13 L. R. A. 490. But the better opinion is that such sale is not void, but voidable only; Wyman v. Hooper, 2 Gray (Mass.) 141; Mann v. McDonald, 10 Humphr. (Tenn.) 275. He is not allowed, without permission of court under some statute authority, to remove his ward's property out of the state; Cook v. Wimberly, 24 Ala. 486; Welch v. Baxter, 45 La. Ann. 1062, 13 South. 629. He cannot release a debt due his ward; Forbes's Heirs v. Mitchell, 1 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 441; Horne v. Horne, 11 Mo. 649; although he may submit a claim to arbitration; Goleman v. Turner, 14 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 118; Weston v. Stuart, 11 Me. 326; Bean v. Farnam, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 269; but he cannot do so when he is interested adversely to them in the subject-matter of the arbitration: Fortune v. Killebrew, 86 Tex. 172, 23 S. W. 976. He may collect or compromise and release debts due to the ward, subject to the liability to be called to account for his acts: MacLay v. Society, 152 U. S. 499, 14 Sup. Ct. 678, 38 L. Ed. 528. He cannot by his own contract bind the person or estate of his ward; Jones v. Brewer, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 314; nor avoid a beneficial contract made by his ward: Oliver v. Houdlet, 13 Mass. 237, 7 Am. Dec. 134; Co. Litt. 17 b, 89 a. He becomes liable for negligence for failure to sue on a note due his ward's estate until the parties thereto are insolvent; Coggins v. Flythe, 113 N. C. 102, 18 S. E. 96. During the existence of the relation of guardian and ward, the latter is under the subjection of the former who stands in loco parentis.

He is entitled to the care and custody of the person of his ward; Ward v. Roper, 7 Humphr. (Tenn.) 111; Ex parte Bartlett, 4 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 221; even against parents: L. R. 8 Q. B. 153; but latterly it is held that the wishes and best interests of the child will be consulted; Garner v. Gordon, 41 Ind. 92; In re Heather Children, 50 Mich. 261, 15 N. W. 487. If a female ward marry, the guardianship terminates both as to her person and property. It has been thought to continue over her property if she marries a minor. If a male ward marries, the guardianship continues as to his estate, though it has been said to be otherwise as to his person. If he marries a female minor, it is said that his guardian will also be entitled to her property; Reeve, Dom. Rel. 328; 2 Kent 226.

A guardian may change the residence of his ward from one county to another in the same state. But it seems that the new county may appoint another guardian; Ex parte Bartlett, 4 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 221. Whether he has the right to remove his ward into a foreign jurisdiction has been a disputed question; Field, Inf. 114. In England, a guardian, being a parent, can change the child's domicile; 10 Cl. & F. 42; otherwise probably if the guardian be not a parent; Tiffany, Dom. Rel. 317. A natural guardian may change the domicile of his ward; In re Benton, 92 Ia. 202, 60 N. W. 614, 54 Am. St. Rep. 546. So held of a paternal grandfather, as guardian; id. Guardians who are not natural guardians can change the municipal domicile of a ward, in the same state; Tiff. Dom. Rel. 317; but not to another state; Wilkins' Guardian, 146 Pa. 585, 23 Atl. 325; Lamar v. Micou, 112 U. S. 472, 5 Sup. Ct. 221, 28 L. Ed. 751; but see White v. Howard, 52 Barb. (N. Y.) 294; In re Adlick's Estate, 3 MacArth. (D. C.) 95. By the common law, his authority both over the person and property of his ward was strictly local; Morrell v. Dickey, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 156; Bell v. Suddeth, 2 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 532. And this is the view maintained in most of the states. See Story, Conf. Laws § 540. But see, on this question, Wood v. Wood, 5 Paige Ch. 596, 28 Am. Dec. 451; Dupree v. Perry, 18 Ala. 34; Cooke v. Beale, 33 N. C. 36; 3 Mer. 67; Holyoke v. Haskins, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 20, 16 Am. Dec. 372; DOMICIL.

The court of chancery may interfere to prevent a guardian from attempting an important change in the religious impressions of a ward if upon examination such change seems dangerous and improper; 8 D. M. & G. 760. See Brett, L. Cas. Mod. Eq. 90.

A guardian in one state cannot maintain an action in another for any claim in which his ward is interested; Cox v. Williamson, 11 Ala. 343; see Rogers v. McLean, 31 Barb. (N. Y.) 304; Grist v. Forehand, 36 Miss. 69; Potter v. Hiscox, 30 Conn. 508; Story, Conf. Laws § 499; a guardian appointed in one state has no authority in another, except by comity, but the modern tendency is to support the authority of the guardian appointed in the domicile; Hoyt v. Sprague, 103 U. S. 613, 26 L. Ed. 585; L. R. 2 Eq. 704. He cannot waive the rights of his ward,—not even by neglect or omission; 2 Vern. 368; Cartwright v. Wise, 14 Ill. 417. No guardian, except a father, is bound to maintain his ward at his own expense. But it is his duty to maintain and educate the ward, in a suitable manner from the income of the ward's estate; Preble v. Longfellow, 48 Me. 279, 77 Am. Dec. 227; Roscoe v. McDonald, 101 Mich. 313, 59 N. W. 603. It is discretionary with a court whether to allow a father anything out of his child's estate for his education and maintenance; Reeve, Dom. Rel. 324; Haase v. Roehrscheid, 6 Ind. 66. When the relation of guardian and ward ceases, the latter is entitled to have an account of the administration of his estate of the former.

Rights and liabilities of wards. A ward owes obedience to his guardian, which a court will aid the guardian in enforcing; 3 Atk. 721. While under the care of a guardian, a ward can make no contract whatever, binding upon him, except for necessities. The general rule is that the ward's contracts are voidable; Oliver v. Houdlet, 13 Mass. 237, 7 Am. Dec. 134; yet there are some contracts so clearly prejudicial that they have been held absolutely void: such as contracts of suretyship; Maples v. Wightman, 4 Conn. 376, 10 Am. Dec. 149.

A ward cannot marry without the consent of his or her guardian; Reeve, Dom. Rel. 327. And any one marrying or aiding in the marriage of a ward without such consent is guilty of contempt of court; 2 P. Wms. 562; 3 id. 116; but this whole doctrine is peculiar to the laws of England and has no application in the United States; Schoul. Dom. Rel. 517.

Infants are liable for their torts in the same manner as persons of full age; Bullock v. Babcock, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 391; Fitts v.

Hall, 9 N. H. 441. A ward is entitled to his own earnings; 1 Bouvier, Inst. 349. He attains his majority the day before the twenty-first anniversary of his birthday. See AGE. He can sue in court only by his guardian or prochein ami; 4 Bla. Com. 464. He could not bring an action at law against his guardian, but might file a bill in equity calling him to account; 3 P. Wms. 119; Miner v. Clark, 92 Tenn. 459, 22 S. W. 73. Minors who are kept occupied by their tutor, to teach them habits of industry, cannot exact compensation of him; Hollingsworth's Heirs, 45 La. Ann. 134, 12 South. 12. By the practice in chancery, he was allowed one year to examine the accounts of his guardian after coming of age; In re Van Horne, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 46. See Taylor v. Hill, 86 Wis. 99, 56 N. W. 738. The statute of limitations will not run against him during the guardianship; Alston v. Alston, 34 Ala. 15. But see LIMITATIONS.

Sale of infant's lands. It is probable that the English court of chancery did not have the inherent original power to order the sale of minors' lands; 2 Ves. 23; 1 Moll. 525. But, with the acquiescence of parliament, it claims and exercises that right for the purpose of maintaining and educating the ward. This power is not conceded as belonging to our courts of chancery in this country by virtue of their equity jurisdiction, nor to our probate courts as custodians of minors; Rogers v. Dill, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 415; 2 Kent 229 a. It must be derived from some statute authority; Woodward v. Donally, 27 Ala. 198; Field v. Schieffelin, 7 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 154, 11 Am. Dec. 441; Ellis v. Merrimack Bridge, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 243. There being no inherent authority in a guardian by virtue of his office to convey lands of his wards, a deed by him will not, in the absence of evidence of showing his authority, convey any title; House v. Brent, 69 Tex. 27, 7 S. W. 65.

It has been a much-disputed question whether an infant's lands can be sold by special act of the legislature. On the ground that the state is the supreme guardian of infants, this power of the legislature has been sustained where the object was the education and support of the infant; McComb v. Gilkey, 29 Miss. 146; Mason v. Wait, 5 Ill. 127; Cochran v. Van Surley, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 365, 32 Am. Dec. 570; Doe v. Douglass, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 10, 44 Am. Dec. 732; Rice v. Parkman, 16 Mass. 326. See Hoyt v. Sprague, 103 U. S. 613, 26 L. Ed. 585; Thomas v. Pullis, 56 Mo. 211. So it has been sustained where the sale was merely advantageous to his interest; Dorsey v. Gilbert, 11 Gill & J. (Md.) 87; Estep v. Hutchman, 14 S. & R. (Pa.) 435. There has been some opposition on the ground that it is an encroachment on the judiciary; 4 N. H. 565, 574; Jones' Heirs v. Perry, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 59, 30 Am. Dec. 430. Such sales have been sustained where the object was to liquidate the ancestor's debts; Kibby v. Chitwood's Adm'r, 4 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 95, 16 Am. Dec. 143. This has been considered questionable in the extreme; Jones' Heirs v. Perry, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 59, 30 Am. Dec. 430; contra, Davenport v. Young, 16 Ill. 548, 63 Am. Dec. 320. It has also been exercised in the case of idiots and lunatics, and sustained on the same reasons as in the case of infants; Davison v. Johannot, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 388, 41 Am. Dec. 448.

A ward's title to land passes by his guardian's deed therefor, and not by the confirmation of the sale by the court; Scarf v. Aldrich, 97 Cal. 360, 32 Pac. 324, 33 Am. St. Rep. 190.

By statute, there are also guardians for the insane and for spendthrifts; Sternbergh v. Schoolcraft, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 153; Alexander v. Alexander, 8 Ala. 796; Raymond v. Wyman, 18 Me. 385; McCrillis v. Bartlett, 8 N. H. 569; Mason v. Mason, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 506. This guardian is sometimes designated as the committee; Schoul. Dom. Rel. 389. A guardian to a lunatic cannot be appointed till after a writ de lunatico inquirendo; Es-lava v. Lepretre, 21 Ala. 504, 56 Am. Dec. 266. An order removing a guardian is equivalent to an order to pay over the money in his hands to his successor; Finney v. State, 9 Mo. 227. In some states the court is authorized to revoke for non-residence of the guardian; id. See HABITUAL DRUNKARD.

GUARDIAN OF THE SPIRITUALITIES. The person to whom the spiritual jurisdiction of any diocese is committed during the vacancy of the see.

GUARDIAN OF THE TEMPORALITIES. The person to whose custody a vacant see or abbey was committed by the crown.

GUARDIAN, or WARDEN, OF THE CINQUE PORTS. See CINQUE PORTS.

GUARDIANSHIP. The power or protective authority given by law, and imposed on an individual who is free and in the enjoyment of his rights, over one whose weakness on account of his age renders him unable to protect himself.

GUARENTIGIO. In Spanish Law. A term applicable to the contract or writing by which courts of justice are empowered to execute and carry into effect a contract in the same manner as if it were decreed by the court after the usual legal formalities. This clause, though formerly inserted in contracts of sale, etc., stipulating the payment of a sum of money, is at present usually omitted, as courts of justice ordinarily compel the parties to execute all contracts made, by authentic acts, that is, acts passed before a notary, in the presence of two witnesses.

GUARNIMENTUM. In Old European Law. A provision of necessary things. Spel. Gloss.

GUASTALD. One who had the custody of the royal mansions. (Also Gastaldus.)

GUERRA, GUERRE. War. Spel. Gloss.

GUERRILLA TROOPS (Span. guerra, war; guerrilla, a little war). Self-constituted bodies of armed men in times of war, who form no integral part of the organized army, do not stand on the regular pay-roll of the army, or are not paid at all, take up arms and lay them down at intervals, and carry on petty war, chiefly by raids, extortion, destruction, and massacre. Lieber, Guerr. Part. 18. See Halleck, Int. Law 386; Woods, Int. Law 299.

Partisan, free-corps, and guerrilla are terms resembling each other considerably in signification; and, indeed, partisan and guerrilla are frequently used in the same sense. See Halleck, Int. Law 386.

Partisan corps and free-corps both denote bodies detached from the main army; but the former term refers to the action of the troop, the latter to the composition. The partisan leader commands a corps whose object is to injure the enemy by action separate from that of his own main army; the partisan acts chiefly upon the enemy's lines of connection and communication, and outside of or beyond the lines of operation of his own army, in the rear and on the flanks of the enemy. But he is part and parcel of the army, and, as such, considered entitled to the privileges of the law of war so long as he does not transgress it. Free-corps, on the other hand, are troops not belonging to the regular army, consisting of volunteers generally raised by individuals authorized to do so by the government, used for petty war, and not incorporated with the ordre de bataille. The men composing these corps are entitled to the benefit of the laws of war, under the same limitations as the partisan corps.

Guerrilla-men, when captured in fair fight and open warfare, should be treated as the regular partisan is, until special crimes, such as murder, or the killing of prisoners, or the sacking of places, are proved against them.

In drawing up the Convention Concerning the Laws and Customs of War on Land, adopted at The Hague in 1899, much difficulty was experienced in securing an agreement upon the status to be attributed to militia and corps of volunteers. It was agreed that such guerrilla troops should come under the laws applying to the regular army, provided they be commanded by a person responsible for his subordinates, wear a distinctive emblem recognizable at a distance, carry arms openly, and conduct their operations in accordance with the laws and customs of war. Even the population of an invaded territory, which as a body takes up arms on the approach of the enemy, must be regarded as belligerents, provided they carry arms openly and observe the laws and customs of war. II Opp. 70-72.

GUESSING CONTEST. See LOTTERY.

GUEST. A traveller who stays at an inn or tavern with the consent of the keeper. Bacon, Abr. Inns, C 5; 8 Co. 32; Story, Bailm. § 477.

A traveller or transient comer who puts up at an inn for a lawful purpose to receive its customary lodging and entertainment. De Lapp v. Van Closter, 136 Mo. App. 475, 118 S. W. 120. It is not now deemed essential that a person should have come from a distance to constitute him a guest; Curtis v. Murphy, 63 Wis. 6, 22 N. W. 825, 53 Am. Rep. 242; Walling v. Potter, 35 Conn. 183.

And if, after taking lodgings at an inn, he leaves his horse there and goes elsewhere to lodge, he is still to be considered a guest; McDaniels v. Robinson, 26 Vt. 316, 62 Am. Dec. 574; but not if he merely leaves goods for keeping which the landlord receives no compensation; 1 Salk. 388; 3 Ld. Raym. 866; Cro. Jac. 188. And where one leaves his horse with an innkeeper with no intention of stopping at the inn himself, he is not a guest of the inn, and the liability of the landlord is simply that of an ordinary bailee for hire; Ingallsbee v. Wood, 33 N. Y. 577, 88 Am. Dec. 409. The length of time a man is at an inn makes no difference, whether he stays a day, a week, or a month, or longer, or only for temporary refreshments, so always that, though not strictly transiens, he retains his character as a traveller; 5 Term 273; McDonald v. Edgerton, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 560. But if a person comes upon a special contract to board at an inn, he is not, in the sense of the law, a guest, but a boarder; Bacon, Abr. Inns, C 5; Story, Bailm. § 477; Wand. Inns 64; but this is a question of fact to be determined by a jury; Magee v. Improvement Co., 98 Cal. 678, 33 Pac. 772, 35 Am. St. Rep. 199. The payment of a stipulated sum per week does not of itself change the relation of a party from that of a guest to that of a lodger; Berkshire Woollen Co. v. Proctor, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 417; Magee v. Improvement Co., 98 Cal. 678, 33 Pac. 772, 35 Am. St. Rep. 199. The relation exists where one who keeps a house for the entertainment of all who choose to visit it, extends a general invitation to the public to become guests, although the house is situated on enclosed grounds; Fay v. Improvement Co., 93 Cal. 253, 26 Pac. 1099, 28 Pac. 943, 16 L. R. A. 188, 27 Am. St. Rep. 198. See BAILEE; INNKEEPER; BOARDER.

GUEST-TAKER. See AGISTER.

GUESTLING. See BROTHERHOOD AND GUESTLING, COURT OF.

GUET. In French Law. Watch. Ord. Mar. liv. 4, tit. 6.

GUIDAGE. In English Law. A reward for safe conduct, through a strange land or unknown country. Cowell. The office of guiding of travellers through dangerous or unknown ways. 2 Inst. 526.

GUIDON DE LA MER. The name of a treatise on maritime law, written in Rouen in Normandy in 1671, as is supposed. It was received on the continent of Europe almost as equal in authority to one of the ancient codes of maritime law. The author of this work is unknown. This tract or treatise is contained in the "Collection de Lois maritimes," by J. M. Pardessus, vol. 2, p. 371 et seq.

GUILD, GILD. A brotherhood or company governed by certain rules and orders made among themselves by king's license; a corporation, especially for purposes of commerce; so called because on entering the guild the members pay an assessment or tax (gild) towards defraying its charges. T. L.; Du Cange. A guild held generally more or less property in common,—often a hall, called a guild-hall, for the purposes of the association. The name of guild was not, however confined to mercantile companies, but was applied also to religious, municipal, and other corporations. A mercantile meeting of a guild was called a guild merchant.

A fridborg (q. v.), that is, among the Saxons, mutual pledges of ten families for each other to the king. Spelman. See 3 Steph. Com. 31; Turner's Hist. Ang. Sax. v. iii. p. 98.

The earliest corporations in Scotland were not for trading but to perpetuate some public service; and they took their rise from Papal bulls, royal charters, etc., or frequently such charter was presumed; Ersk. Pr. 311. "Gilds came into unconscious existence through a process of evolution, and were then acknowledged by the law." It is incorrect to say that there could be no gild without the king's license. They were incorporated and after incorporation supervised by the mayor, bailiffs, and common council of municipalities. Eaton, Report of Amer. B. A. (1902) 340.

See Toulmin Smith, English Gilds.

GUILD HALL (Law Lat. gildhalla, variously spelled ghildhalla, guihalla, guihalla; from Sax. gild, payment, company, and halla, hall). A place in which are exposed goods for sale. Charter of Count of Flanders; Hist. Guinensi, 202, 203; Du Cange. The hall of a guild or corporation. Du Cange; Spelman: e. g., Gildhalla Teutonicorum. The chief hall of the city of London, where the mayor and commonalty hold their meetings. The hall of the merchants of the Hanseatic League in London, otherwise called the "Stil-yard." Cowell.

GUILD MERCHANT. An association of traders within a town in England, and in some cases living outside its precincts, for the better management of trade. It sometimes arbitrated upon mercantile disputes. Only its members could trade freely within the town; 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 310. See Gross, Gild Merchant; Lambert, Gild Life; English Gilds (Early English Text Society). See GILDA MERCATORIA; article in Encycl. Br. by Charles Gross.

GUILD RENTS. Rents payable to the crown by any guild, or such as formerly belonged to religious guilds, and came to the crown on the dissolution of the monasteries. Toml.

GUILDHALL SITTINGS. The sittings held in the Guildhall of the city of London for city of London cases.

GUILLOTINE. An apparatus for beheading criminals with a single blow, used in some countries, as France and Greece, for capital punishment. A form of it was in use in the middle ages, but, being improved by Dr. Guillotin at the time of the French Revolution, it received its present name. Cent. Dict.

GUILT. That which renders criminal and liable to punishment.

That disposition to violate the law, which has manifested itself by some act already done. The opposite of innocence. See Ruth. erf. Inst. b. 1, c. 18, s. 10.

In general, every one is presumed innocent until guilt has been proved; but in some cases the presumption of guilt overthrows that of innocence; as, for example, where a party destroys evidence to which the opposite party is entitled. The spoliation of papers material to show the neutral character of a vessel furnishes strong presumption against the neutrality of the ship; The Pizarro, 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 227, 4 L. Ed. 226.

GUILTY. The state or condition of a person who has committed a crime, misdemeanor, or offence.

This word implies a malicious intent, and can only be applied to something universally allowed to be a crime. Cowp. 275.

In Pleading. A plea by which a defendant who is charged with a crime, misdemeanor, or tort admits or confesses it. In criminal proceedings, when the accused is arraigned, the clerk asks him, "How say you, A. B., are you guilty or not guilty?" His answer, which is given ore tenus, is called his plea; and when he admits the charge in the indictment, he answers or pleads guilty; otherwise, not guilty. See CULPRIT; ARRAIGNMENT.

A plea of guilty in a capital case should not be received unless the court is satisfied that "it is made by a person of complete intelligence, freely and voluntarily, and with a full understanding of the nature and effect of the plea and of the facts upon which it is founded"; Green v. Com., 12 Allen (Mass.) 155; in Henning v. People, 40 Mich. 733, a judgment was affirmed when it appeared that the trial judge had had repeated interviews with the prisoner's counsel and friends and made full inquiry and considered that the plea was made with every circumstance of fairness and deliberation. The subject is regulated by statute in Michigan and in Texas. In Coleman v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 404, 33 S. W. 1083, where the record stated that the defendant had pleaded guilty after being by the court fully warned of the consequences of such plea, the appellate court held that it did not sufficiently appear that the prisoner was considered sane by the court, or that he was uninfluenced by any fear, or by any persuasion or any hope of pardon, and that these matters should have been presented to the court and the findings made a part of the record. So also where the judgment recited that the defendant "had been duly and legally warned by the court, in open court, of the legal consequences" of such plea; Sanders v. State, 18 Tex. App. 372. See 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 463. In State v. Johnson, 21 Okl. 40, 96 Pac. 26, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 463, it was held that accepting such a plea without cautioning the prisoner as to the gravity of his admission, or taking evidence as to the gravity of the crime, is not according to the forms of law.

GUINEA. A coin issued by the English mint during the time of Wm. IV. These coins were called in. The word now means only the sum of £1, 1s.

GULA-THING. A collection of Scandinavian customs in force in the southern part of Norway. The Frosta-thing was in force in the more northerly division of Dronheim. They are said to help to an understanding of the law prevailing in the northern part of England, where the Danish influence was strongest. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 23.

GULE OF AUGUST. The first of August, being the day of St. Peter ad Vincula. T. L.

GULES. The heraldic name of the color usually called "red." The word is derived from the Arabic word "gule," a rose, and was probably introduced by the Crusaders. Gules is denoted in engravings by numerous perpendicular lines. Herald's who blazoned by planets and jewels called it "Mars" and "ruby;" Wharton.

GWABR MERCHED. Maid's fee. An old English phrase signifying a customary fine payable to lords of some manors on marriage of tenant's daughter, or otherwise on her incontinence. Cowell, Marchet.

GWALSTOW. A place of execution. Cowell.

GYLTWITE, or GUILTWIT (Sax.). Compensation for fraud or trespass. Grant of King Edgar, anno 964; Cowell.

H

H. The eighth letter of the alphabet.

HABE, or HAVE (Lat.). Sometimes used in the titles of the codes of Theodosius and Justinian for Ave (hail). Calv. Lex.; Spel. Gloss.

HABEAS CORPORA JURATORUM (Lat. that you have the bodies). In English Practice. A writ issued out of the common pleas, commanding the sheriff to compel the appearance of a jury in a cause between the parties. It answered the same purpose as a distringas juratores in the king's bench. See 3 Bla. Com. 354. It is abolished by the Common-law Procedure Act.

HABEAS CORPUS (Lat. that you have the body). A writ directed to the person detaining another and commanding him to produce the body of the prisoner at a certain time and place, with the day and cause of his caption and detention, to do, submit to, and receive whatsoever the court or judge awarding the writ shall consider in that behalf.

This is the most famous writ in the law; and, having for many centuries been employed to remove illegal restraint upon personal liberty, no matter by what power imposed, it is often called the great writ of liberty. It takes its name from the characteristic words it contained when the process and records of the English courts were written in Latin:

Præcipimus tibi quod CORPUS A B in custodia vestra detentum, ut dicitur, una cum causa captionis et detentionis suæ, quocunque nomine idem A B censeatur in eadem, HABEAS coram nobis apud Westm. dc. ad subjiciendum et recipiendum ea quæ curia nostra de eo ad tunc et ibidem ordinari contigerit in hac parte, etc.

There were several other writs which contained the words habeas corpus; but they were distinguished from this and from one another by the specific terms declaring the object of the writ, which terms are still retained in the nomenclature of writs: as, habeas corpus ad respondendum, ad testificandum, ad satisfaciendum, ad prosequendum, and ad faciendum et recipiendum, ad deliberandum et recipiendum.

This writ was in like manner designated as habeas corpus ad subjiciendum et recipiendum; but, having acquired in public esteem a marked importance by reason of the nobler uses to which it has been devoted, it has so far appropriated the generic term to itself that it is now, by way of eminence, commonly called The Writ of Habeas Corpus.

The date of its origin cannot now be ascertained. Traces of its existence are found in the Year Book 48 Ed. III. 22; and it appears to have been familiar to, and well understood by, the judges in the reign of Henry VI. The ancient writ of de odio et atia and de homine replegiando furnished a remedy in particular cases. In its early history it appears to have been used as a means of relief from private restraint. The earliest precedents where it was used against the crown are in the reign of Henry VII. Afterwards the use of it became more frequent, and in the time of Charles I. it was held an admitted constitutional remedy; Hurd, Hab. Corp. 145; Church, Hab. Corp. 3. In writing of procedure in the thirteenth century the work which throws so much new light upon the early history of English law, says: "Those famous words habeas corpus are making their way into divers writs, but for any habitual use of them for the purpose of investigating the cause of imprisonment we must wait until a later time." There is also a reference to what is termed the use of habeas corpus as "at one time a part of the ordinary mesne process in a personal action," also referred to as "the Bractonian process which inserts a habeas corpus between attachment and distress," which (habeas corpus) a little later seems to disappear. No other allusion is made to the subject; 2 Poll. & Maitl. 584, 591.

W. W. Howe (Studies in the Civil Law 54) who is as earnest in tracing the fountains of English law to a Roman source, as the writers last quoted are indisposed to do so, says on the subject: "The presence in the Pandects of every important doctrine of habeas corpus is an interesting fact, and suggests that the proceeding probably came to England, as it did to Spain, from the Roman law. There is no evidence, so far as I have been able to discover, that the process was of British or Teutonic origin. It is fully described in the forty-third book of the Pandects. The first text is the line from the 'Perpetual Edicts,' ait prætor: quem liberum dolo malo retines, exhibeas.' The prætor declares: produce the freeman whom you unlawfully detain.' The writ was called the interdict or order 'de homine libero exhibendo.' After quoting this article of the Edict, the compilers of the Pandects introduced the commentary of Ulpian to the extent of perhaps two pages of a modern law book, and the leading rules which he derives from the text are law, I believe, to-day in England and America. Thus he says: 'This writ is devised for the preservation of liberty to the end that no one shall detain a free person. The word freeman includes every freeman, infant or adult, male or female, one or many, whether sui juris, or under the power of another. For we only consider this: Is the person free? He who does not know that a freeman is detained in his house is not in bad faith; but as soon as he is advised of the fact he becomes in bad faith. The prætor says exhibeas (produce, exhibit). To exhibit a person is to produce him publicly, so that he can be seen and handled. This writ may be applied for by any person; for no one is forbidden to act in favor of liberty.' And to this commentary of Ulpian the compilers also add some extracts from Venuleius, who, among other things says: 'A person ought not to be detained in bad faith for any time; and so no delay should be granted to the person who thus detains him.' In other words, a writ of habeas corpus should be returnable and heard instant. It seems certain that this writ might have been applied for in Britain during the four centuries of Roman occupation, at least when not suspended by a condition of martial law; and after the restoration of the Christian Church in the seventh century, and the occupation of judicial positions by bishops and other learned clerics, familiar with such procedure, it is not unreasonable to assume that it was revived and took its place in English law."

After the use of the writ became more common, abuses crept into the practice, which in some measure impaired the usefulness of the writ. The party imprisoning was at liberty to delay his obedience to the first writ, and might wait till a second and third were issued before he produced the party; and many other vexatious shifts were practised to detain state prisoners in custody; 3 Bla. Com. 135.

Greater promptitude in its execution was required to render the writ efficacious. The subject was accordingly brought forward in parliament in 1668, and renewed from time to time until 1679, when the celebrated Habeas Corpus Act of 31 Car. II. was passed. This act has been made the theme of the highest praise and congratulation by British authors, and is even said to have "extinguished all the resources of oppression." Hurd, Hab. Corp. 93; Church, Hab. Corp. 37.

As the act is limited to cases of commitments for "criminal or supposed criminal matters," every other species of restraint of personal liberty was left to the ordinary remedy at common law; but, doubts being entertained as to the extent of the jurisdiction.

of the judge to inquire into the truth of the return to the writ in such cases an attempt was made, in 1757, in the house of lords, to render the jurisdiction more remedial. It was opposed by Lord Mansfield as unnecessary, and failed, for the time, of success. It was subsequently renewed, however; and the act of 56 Geo. III. c. 100 supplies, in England, all the needed legislation in cases not embraced by the act of 31 Car. II.; Hurd, Hab. Corp.

The English colonists in America regarded the privilege of the writ as one of the "dearest birth-rights of Britons;" and sufficient indications exist that it was frequently resorted to. The denial of it in Massachusetts by Judge Dudley in 1689 to Rev. John Wise, imprisoned for resisting the collection of an oppressive and illegal tax, was made the subject of a civil action against the judge, and was, moreover, denounced, as one of the grievances of the people, in a pamphlet published in 1689 on the authority of "the gentlemen, merchants, and inhabitants of Boston and the county adjacent." In New York in 1707 it served to effect the release of the Presbyterian ministers Makemie and Hampton from an illegal warrant of arrest issued by the governor, Cornbury, for preaching the gospel without license. In New Jersey in 1710 the assembly denounced one of the judges for refusing the writ to Thomas Gordon, which, they said, was the "undoubted right and great privilege of the subject." In South Carolina in 1692 the assembly adopted the act of 31 Car. II. This act was extended to Virginia by Queen Anne early in her reign, while in the assembly of Maryland in 1725 the benefit of its provisions was claimed, independent of royal favor, as the "birthright of the inhabitants." The refusal of parliament in 1774 to extend the law of habeas corpus to Canada was denounced by the continental congress in September of that year as oppressive, and was subsequently recounted in the Declaration of Independence as one of the manifestations on the part of the British government of tyranny over the colonies; Hurd, Hab. Corp. 109.

It is provided in art. I. sec. 9, § 2 of the constitution of the United States that "The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, unless when, in cases of rebellion or invasion, the public safety may require it." Similar provisions are found in the constitutions of most of the states.

In 1861, Taney, C. J., decided in the United States circuit court of Maryland, that congress alone possessed the power under the constitution to suspend the writ; Ex parte Merryman, Taney 246, 9 Am. L. Reg. 524, Fed. Cas. No. 9,487; this view was also taken by other courts; In re Kemp, 16 Wis. 360; People v. Gaul, 44 Barb. (N. Y.) 98; Griffin v. Wilcox, 21 Ind. 370; contra, Ex parte Field, 5 Blatchf. 63, Fed. Cas. No. 4,761. In the beginning of the Civil War President Lincoln suspended the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus on his own authority, and without the sanction of an act of congress. He was supported in his opinion of his right to suspend by some of the legal writers of the time, notably by Horace Binney of Philadelphia, and by Reverdy Johnson of Maryland (2 Moore's Rebellion Record, Docs., p. 185). For the opinions of Senators Browning, Trumbull, Sherman, Howe and Fessenden, see Congressional Globe, pp. 188, 337, 393, 453. For the history of this controversy see 3 Political Science Quarterly 454; 5 Am. Lawyer 169; see 3 Rhodes, Hist. U. S. 438. The privilege of the writ is, however, necessarily suspended whenever martial law is declared in force; for martial law suspends all civil process. A prisoner of war, therefore, or one held by military arrest under the law martial, is not a subject for the habeas corpus writ; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 63. See MARTIAL LAW. Nor is a prisoner in the military or naval service whose offence is properly cognizable before a court martial; Johnson v. Sayre, 158 U. S. 109, 15 Sup. Ct. 773, 39 L. Ed. 914. Congress, by act of March 3, 1863, 12 Stat. L. 755, authorized the president to suspend the privilege of the writ throughout the whole or any part of the United States, whenever in his judgment the public safety might require it, during the rebellion. Under the provisions of this act, a partial suspension took place, but it was held that the suspension of the privilege of the writ does not suspend the writ itself. The writ issues as a matter of course; and on the return made to it the court decides whether the party applying is denied the right of proceeding any further with it; Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 2, 18 L. Ed. 281. Nor does the suspension of the writ legalize a wrongful arrest and imprisonment; it deprives the person thus arrested of the means of procuring his liberty, but does not exempt the person making the illegal arrest from liability for damages, nor from criminal prosecution; Griffin v. Wilcox, 21 Ind. 372; contra, McCall v. McDowell, Deady 233, Fed. Cas. No. 8,673; 1 Bishop, New Cr. L. § 64.

The power has never been exercised by the legislature of any of the states, except that of Massachusetts, which, on the occasion of "Shay's Rebellion," suspended the privilege of the writ from November, 1786, to July, 1787. And in the Confederate States, the privilege was suspended during the war; In re Cain, 60 N. C. 525; State v. Sparks, 27 Tex. 705. See note on Suspension of the Writ, 45 L. R. A. 832.

Congress has prescribed the jurisdiction of the federal courts under the writ; but, never having particularly prescribed the mode of procedure, they have substantially followed in that respect the rules of the common law.

In most of the states statutes have been passed, not only providing what courts or officers may issue the writ, but, to a considerable extent, regulating the practice under it; yet in all of them the proceeding retains its old distinctive feature and merit,—that of a summary appeal for immediate deliverance from illegal imprisonment.

There is a discretion to be exercised in issuing the writ, even when there is power, as it involves a conflict of laws which it is desirable to avoid; Ex parte Rearick, 118 Fed. 928; and no court may properly release a prisoner under conviction and sentence of another court, unless for want of jurisdiction of cause or person, or some matter rendering the proceeding void; Keizo v. Henry, 211 U. S. 146, 29 Sup. Ct. 41, 53 L. Ed. 125; but it can and should be issued and made effective when another court has acted without jurisdiction; In re Turner, 119 Fed. 231.

A proceeding in habeas corpus is a civil and not a criminal proceeding, and as final orders of the circuit or district courts in such proceedings can only be reviewed by appeal, the final order of the supreme court of the Phillippine Islands in habeas corpus is governed by the same rule and can be reviewed only by appeal and not by writ of error; Fisher v. Baker, 203 U. S. 174, 27 Sup. Ct. 135, 51 L. Ed. 142, 7 Ann. Cas. 1018; so in People v. Dewey, 23 Misc. 267, 50 N. Y. Supp. 1013, it was said to be a civil proceeding; and in State v. Huegin, 110 Wis. 189, 85 N. W. 1046, 62 L. R. A. 700, it is termed a suit in the nature of a civil action. It has, however, been said that it is, strictly speaking, neither a civil nor criminal action, but a summary remedy having for its sole object to restore liberty to one illegally held in custody; Simmons v. Coal Co., 117 Ga. 305, 43 S. E. 780, 61 L. R. A. 739. Though it is a writ of right, it does not issue as a matter of course, but only upon such allegations as, if true, would authorize the discharge of the person in custody; id. The issue of the writ may be regulated by statute, provided the constitutional right to it is not infringed; Miskimmins v. Shaver, 8 Wyo. 392, 58 Pac. 411, 49 L. R. A. 831; if there is another appropriate remedy the writ will not be issued until application has been made for the proper relief; In re Dykes, 13 Okl. 339, 74 Pac. 506.

The purpose of the writ is to determine whether the person seeking the benefit of it is illegally restrained of his liberty; In re Moyer, 35 Colo. 159, 85 Pac. 190, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 979, 117 Am. St. Rep. 189. It is a common-law and not an equitable remedy; Sumner v. Sumner, 117 Ga. 229, 43 S. E. 485. Its only office, except when used in ancillary proceedings, is to test the right to personal liberty; State v. Whitcher, 117 Wis. 668, 94 N. W. 787, 98 Am. St. Rep. 968.

It is an appropriate proceeding for determining whether one held under an extradition warrant is a fugitive from justice, and he should be discharged if he shows by competent evidence, overcoming the presumption of a properly issued warrant, that he is not a fugitive from the demanding state; Illinois v. Pease, 207 U. S. 100, 28 Sup. Ct. 58, 52 L. Ed. 121.

Jurisdiction of state courts. The states, being in all respects, except as to the powers delegated in the federal constitution, sovereign political communities, are limited, as to their judicial power, only by that instrument; and they, accordingly, at will, create, apportion, and limit the jurisdiction of their respective courts over the writ of habeas corpus, as well as other legal process, subject only to such constitutional restriction; Church, Hab. Corp. 67.

The restrictions in the federal constitution on this subject are necessarily implied from the express grants of judicial power therein to the federal courts in certain cases specified in art. iii. sec. 2, and in which the decision of the supreme court of the United States is paramount over all other courts and conclusive upon the parties.

Jurisdiction of the federal courts. This is prescribed by several acts of congress. By section 14 of the Judiciary Act of September 24, 1789, the general power to issue the writ is granted to the federal courts and also to a justice or judge, to inquire into the cause of commitment; but not where a prisoner in gaol otherwise than under authority of the United States or required to testify.

By section 7 of the Act of March 2, 1833, the jurisdiction of the justices and judges is extended to "all cases of a prisoner or prisoners in jail or confinement, where he or they shall be committed or confined on or by any authority or law for any act done or omitted to be done, in pursuance of a law of the United States, or any order, process, or decree of any judge or court thereof." The federal courts may grant the writ to inquire into the cause of restraint of any person in jail under the authority of a state in violation of the constitution or of a law or treaty of the United States, and may discharge a prisoner under indictment in a state court when he is found to be so restrained; Ex parte Glenn, 111 Fed. 257; or a prisoner held in contempt without a hearing for an offence not committed in the presence of the court; Ex parte Stricker, 109 Fed. 145; or where a sentence is imposed which neither the statute nor the verdict authorizes; In re Burns, 113 Fed. 987; but except in cases of peculiar urgency they will not discharge the prisoner in advance of a final hearing of his cause in the courts of the state, and even after such final determination in those courts will generally leave the petitioner to his remedy by writ of error from this court; Whitten v. Tomlinson, 160 U. S. 231, 16 Sup. Ct. 297, 40 L. Ed. 406. See also New York v. Eno, 155 U. S. 89, 15 Sup. Ct. 30, 39 L. Ed. 80. This decision was rendered necessary by the practice of using the writ as a means to take an appeal from state tribunals to the supreme court of the United States to delay the trial or execution of criminals; the evil of it is set forth by Seymour D. Thompson in 30 Am. L. Rev. 289, 290.

An act of August 29, 1842, extends the privilege of the writ to cases of aliens committed or confined under federal law for acts done under color of the law, authority, etc., of any foreign power.

Section 3 of an Act of July 20, 1790, provided that refractory seamen in certain cases shall not be discharged on habeas corpus or otherwise.

By an act of February 6, 1867, the defendant in actual custody under state process, whose case has been removed to the federal court, may have a writ of habeas corpus cum causa to remove him to its custody; R. S. § 642.

By act of May 3, 1885, an appeal may be taken from the judgment of the United States circuit courts in habeas corpus cases to the supreme court. Since the passage of this act it has been generally held that the supreme court will not issue the writ where it may be done as well in the proper Circuit Court, unless there are special circumstances making action by the supreme court expedient or necessary; Ex parte Mirzan, 119 U. S. 584, 7 Sup. Ct. 341, 30 L. Ed. 513; In re Huntington, 137 U. S. 63, 11 Sup. Ct. 4, 34 L. Ed. 567. The writ will not be issued when it appears by the petition that the question has already been decided against the petitioner by another judge in the same court; In re Simmons, 45 Fed. 241. In cases where the right of appeal seems inadequate by reason of its delay, the court may hold the person entitled to the writ as a means of speedy determination of the question; Ex parte Kieffer, 40 Fed. 399. In Clark v. Pennsylvania, 128 U. S. 395, 9 Sup. Ct. 113, 32 L. Ed. 487, a judge of the supreme court refused to grant the writ in chambers to the captain of a steamer committed under the laws of Pennsylvania for selling liquor on the steamer without license on the ground that the federal question if any could be raised by writ of error.

Federal courts cannot grant the writ upon a petition that the person is held under the capias of a state court issued upon a judgment that has been vacated; In re Shaner, 39 Fed. 869. A district court cannot, by issuing a writ, declare a judgment of a state criminal court a nullity where such court had full jurisdiction over the crime; Ex parte Ulrich, 43 Fed. 661. But the writ can be issued to test the question as to the arrest and imprisonment of a supposed fugitive from justice on the charge of a different offence from that for which he was extradited; In re Fitton, 45 Fed. 471. See also In re Cross, 43 Fed. 517. In general the writ may be issued by federal courts in every case where a party is restrained of his liberty without due process of law in the territorial jurisdiction of such courts; Ex parte Farley, 40 Fed. 66; In re Neagle, 135 U. S. 1, 10 Sup. Ct. 658, 34 L. Ed. 55. The granting of the writ is within the discretion of the court and will not be reversed unless an abuse thereof be shown; U. S. v. Ronan, 33 Fed. 117. But where the petitioner had been convicted on the indictment of a grand jury impanelled by a court without authority, it was held that the writ became a writ of right and the court having power to issue it could not exercise discretion against issuing it; Ex parte Farley, 40 Fed. 66. A medical director in the navy notified by the secretary of the navy that he was under arrest and should confine himself to the city of Washington is not under such restraint as to sus-tain the writ; Wales v. Whitney, 114 U. S. 564, 5 Sup. Ct. 1050, 29 L. Ed. 277.

The writ does not issue as a matter of course from the federal courts and the petition must show a prima facie right thereto; In re Haskell, 52 Fed. 795; In re King, 51 Fed. 434; In re Jordan, 49 Fed. 238. And only in rare cases will federal courts discharge prisoners held under process of state courts; In re Huse, 79 Fed. 305, 25 C. C. A. 1; In re Krug, 79 Fed. 308.

The federal court may discharge a prisoner who is held for an act made criminal by the state in violation of the rights secured by the United States constitution; In re Davenport, 102 Fed. 540; but they will not discharge a prisoner convicted in a state court except in cases of emergency, but will leave him his writ of error; In re Stone, 120 Fed. 101; and except under extraordinary circumstances, a federal court will not issue the writ for the release of a prisoner held under process issued by a state court in a civil case, on the ground that such court was without jurisdiction in the particular suit where it has jurisdiction over such suits in general; Mackenzie v. Barrett, 144 Fed. 954, 76 C. C. A. 8.

The writ will not issue unless the court under whose warrant the accused is held is without jurisdiction, and mere objections that the indictment is too vague in general and does not sufficiently inform him of the offence charged, will not be considered; In re Lewis, 114 Fed. 963.

But if a party is imprisoned by the sentence of a court, judge or magistrate, which is void for want of authority, as for being under an unconstitutional and void law; In re Cuddy, 131 U. S. 280, 9 Sup. Ct. 703, 33 L. Ed. 154; In re Ayers, 123 U. S. 443, 8 Sup. Ct. 164, 31 L. Ed. 216; In re Sawyer, 124 U. S. 200, 8 Sup. Ct. 482, 31 L. Ed. 402; or when there was no authority in the person causing the arrest to make it; Ex parte Lange, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 163, 21 L. Ed. 872; Ex parte Siebold, 100 U. S. 371, 25 L. Ed. 717; Ex parte Randolph, 2 Brock. 447, Fed. Cas. No. 11,558; In re Farez, 7 Blatchf. 345, Fed. Cas. No. 4,645; In re Tyler, 149 U. S. 164, 13 Sup. Ct. 785, 37 L. Ed. 689; In re Swan, 150 U. S. 637, 14 Sup. Ct. 225, 37 L. Ed. 1207; then there is ground for discharge under habeas corpus.

In contempt cases, habeas corpus is not issued for one adjudged in contempt, as he may have a writ of error; Perry v. Pernet, 165 Ind. 67, 74 N. E. 609, 6 Ann. Cas. 533; In re Stidger, 37 Colo. 407, 86 Pac. 219; to obtain release the judgment and the sentence must be a mere nullity; Michaelson v. Bee-mer, 72 Neb. 761, 101 N. W. 1007, 9 Ann. Cas. 1181; where there is entire want of jurisdiction to issue the process for imprisonment, habeas corpus is the proper remedy and the person need not resort to an appeal; In re Gribben, 5 Okl. 379, 47 Pac. 1074; but it cannot be used to review the proceeding in contempt, though it is proper in order to secure the discharge of one not a party and therefore not subject to the jurisdiction of the court; In re Reese, 107 Fed. 942, 47 C. C. A. 87.

The supreme court issues the writ by virtue of its appellate jurisdiction; Ex parte Bollman, 4 Cra. (U. S.) 75, 2 L. Ed. 554; Ex parte Hung Hang, 108 U. S. 552, 2 Sup. Ct. 863, 27 L. Ed. 811; and it will not grant it at the instance of the subject of a foreign government to obtain the custody of a minor child detained by a citizen of one of the states; for that would be the exercise of original jurisdiction; Ex parte Barry, 2 How. (U. S.) 65, 11 L. Ed. 181. An appeal lies to the supreme court from a final order of the supreme court of the Territory of New Mexico ordering a writ of habeas corpus to be discharged; Gonzales v. Cunningham, 164 U. S. 612, 17 Sup. Ct. 182, 41 L. Ed. 572.

It will grant it on the application of one committed for trial in the circuit court on a criminal charge; Ex parte Bollman, 4 Cra. (U. S.) 75, 2 L. Ed. 554; U. S. v. Hamilton, 3 Dall. (U. S.) 17, 1 L. Ed. 490; and where the petitioner is committed on an insufficient warrant; Ex parte Burford, 3 Cra. (U. S.) 448, 2 L. Ed. 495; and where he is detained by the marshal on a capias ad satisfaciendum after the return day of the writ; Ex parte Watkins, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 568, 8 L. Ed. 786; also for the purpose of inquiring into the cause of the restraint of the liberty of prisoners in jail under or by color of the authority of the United States, and all persons who are in custody in violation of the constitution or laws of the United States; Ex parte Terry, 128 U. S. 289, 9 Sup. Ct. 77, 33 L. Ed. 405. An alien immigrant may have a writ to test the lawfulness of his restraint from landing by a federal office; Nishimura Ekin v. U. S., 142 U. S. 651, 12 Sup. Ct. 336, 35 L. Ed. 1146.

None of the courts of the United States have authority to grant the writ for the purpose of inquiring into the cause of commitment, where the prisoner is imprisoned under process issued from the state courts, excepting where he is denied, or cannot enforce, in the judicial tribunals of the state, any right secured to him by any law providing for the equal civil rights of citizens of the United States; R. S. § 641; Texas v. Gaines, 2 Woods 342, Fed. Cas. No. 13,847. It was refused by the supreme court where the party for whose benefit the application was made had been convicted in a state court of levying war against the state; Ex parte Dorr, 3 How. (U. S.) 103, 11 L. Ed. 514. Federal courts will proceed with great caution upon applications for writ of habeas corpus in behalf of a person imprisoned under process of the state courts, and, when practicable, will investigate the questions raised before issuing the writ; In re Jordan, 49

Fed. 238. See also paper by Seymour D. Thompson on the abuse and too rigorous use of the writ of habeas corpus by the federal judges; 6 Rep. Am. Bar. Assoc. 243.

It was refused by the circuit court where the petitioner, a secretary attached to the Spanish legation, was confined under criminal process issued under the authority of the state of Pennsylvania; Ex parte Cabrera, 1 Wash. C. C. 232, Fed. Cas. No. 2,278; also where the petitioner, a British seaman, was arrested under the authority of an act of the legislature of the state of South Carolina, which was held to conflict with the constitution of the United States; Ex parte Elkison, 2 Wheel. Cr. Cas. 56, Fed. Cas. No. 4,366; and where the only question involved was the identity of a state prisoner, and no diversity of citizenship was involved; Ex parte Moebus, 148 Fed. 39; or the prisoner is regularly under indictment in the state court; Ex parte Glenn, 103 Fed. 947.

It will be granted, however, where the imprisonment, although by a state officer, is under or by color of the authority of the United States, as where the prisoner was arrested under a governor's warrant as a fugitive from justice of another state, requisition having been regularly made; Ex parte Smith, 3 McLean 121, Fed. Cas. No. 12,968; or where extradited under a treaty with a foreign country upon the charge of a certain offence for which he was afterwards tried and acquitted, and immediately thereafter he was arrested under a charge entirely separate and distinct from the former one; In re Reinitz, 39 Fed. 204, 4 L. R. A. 236. It will also be granted where United States marshals or their deputies are arrested by state authority for using force or threats in executing process of the federal courts; U. S. v. Fullhart, 47 Fed. 802; but see In re Marsh, 51 Fed. 277. Federal judges should grant writs to persons imprisoned for any act done in pursuance of a law of the United States; In re Neagle, 135 U. S. 1, 10 Sup. Ct. 658, 34 L. Ed. 55.

The power of the federal courts to issue the writ is confined to cases in which the prisoner is in custody under or by order of the authority of the United States, or is committed for trial before some court thereof, or is in custody for an act done or omitted in pursuance of a law of the United States, or of an order, process, or decree of a court or judge thereof; or is in custody in violation of the constitution, or of a law or treaty of the United States, or being a subject or citizen of a foreign state, and domiciled therein, is in custody for an act done or omitted under any alleged right, title, authority, privilege, protection, or exemption claimed under the commission, or order, or sanction of any foreign state, or under color thereof, the validity and effect whereof depend upon the law of nations; or where it is necessary to bring the prisoner into court to testify; R. S. § 753.

The circumstances under which the writ will be issued are stated and the authorities collected in Ex parte Collins, 149 Fed. 573.

Proper use of the writ. The true use of the writ is to cause a legal inquiry into the cause of imprisonment, and to procure the release of the prisoner where that is found to be illegal.

The writ cannot be made use of to perform the function of a writ of error or an appeal; In re Tyler, 149 U. S. 164, 13 Sup. Ct. 785, 37 L. Ed. 689; Felts v. Murphy, 201 U. S. 123, 26 Sup. Ct. 366, 50 L. Ed. 689; Welty v. Ward, 164 Ind. 457, 73 N. E. 889, 3 Ann. Cas. 556; Ex parte Powers, 129 Fed. 985; In re Dowd, 133 Fed. 747; Ex parte Mitchell, 104 Mo. 121, 16 S. W. 118, 24 Am. St. Rep. 324; Ex parte McMinn, 110 Fed. 954; In re Langston, 55 Neb. 310, 75 N. W. 828; In re Ammon, 132 Fed. 714; In re Wyman, 132 Fed. 708; Ex parte Collins, 149 Fed. 573; Storti v. Massachusetts, 183 U. S. 138, 22 Sup. Ct. 72, 46 L. Ed. 120; In re McKenzie, 180 U. S. 536, 21 Sup. Ct. 468, 45 L. Ed. 657; not even to test the constitutionality of the law under which the imprisonment was imposed under a mittimus issued on final judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction; People v. Jonas, 173 Ill. 316, 50 N. E. 1051; and a federal court will not interfere by issuing the writ so long as the remedy by writ of error from the supreme court to the highest state court is not exhausted; Ex parte Chadwick, 159 Fed. 576; Minnesota v. Brundage, 180 U. S. 499, 21 Sup. Ct. 455, 45 L. Ed. 639; Riggins v. U. S., 199 U. S. 547, 26 Sup. Ct. 147, 50 L. Ed. 303; but where the case is one of which the public interest demands a speedy determination and the ends of justice will be promoted thereby, the supreme court may proceed to final judgment on appeal from the order of the circuit court denying the relief; Appleyard v. Massachusetts, 203 U. S. 222, 27 Sup. Ct. 122, 51 L. Ed. 161; and while the federal court to which the application is made will usually leave the petitioner to the ordinary course of proceedings, there are exceptional cases in which the federal court or judge may sometimes interfere, such for instance as cases "involving the authority and power of the general government or the obligations of this country to or its relations with foreign nations"; Urguhart v. Brown, 205 U. S. 179, 27 Sup. Ct. 459, 51 L. Ed. 760. The writ only challenges the jurisdiction or power to commit, and may not be invoked merely to review; In re Nevitt, 117 Fed. 448, 54 C. C. A. 622. Where the state court has jurisdiction of the crime under a statute not repugnant to the Constitution or a treaty or law thereunder, habeas corpus cannot be made a means of review; Harkrader v. Wadley, 172 U. S. 148, 19 Sup. Ct. 119, 43 L. Ed. 399.

The rule that the writ cannot be used as a writ of error applies to extradition proceedings and if the committing magistrate had jurisdiction and there was competent evidence, his decision may not be reviewed; Charlton v. Kelly, 229 U. S. 447, 33 Sup. Ct. 945, 57 L. Ed. 1274.

If the imprisonment be claimed by virtue of legal process, the validity and present force of such process are the only subjects of investigation; Bennac v. People, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 31; State v. Buzine, 4 Harr. (Del.) 575.

But such process cannot, in this proceeding, be invalidated by errors which only render it irregular. The defects, to entitle the prisoner to be discharged, must be such as to render the process void; for the writ of habeas corpus is not, and cannot perform the office of, a writ of error; Walbridge v. Hall, 3 Vt. 114; Cox v. White, 2 La. 422; People v. Cavanagh, 2 Park. Cr. Cas. (N. Y.) 650; People v. Nevins, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 154; 4 C. & P. 415; Ex parte Shaw, 7 Ohio St. 81, 70 Am. Dec. 55; In re Pikulik, 81 Wis. 158, 51 N. W. 261; Ex parte Bowen, 25 Fla. 214, 6 South. 65; Davis v. Beason, 133 U. S. 333, 10 Sup. Ct. 299, 33 L. Ed. 637; In re Schneider, 118 U. S. 162, 13 Sup. Ct. 572, 37 L. Ed. 406; In re Swan, 150 U. S. 637, 14 Sup. Ct. 225, 37 L. Ed. 1207; In re King, 51 Fed. 434; In re Copenhagen, 118 Mo. 377, 24 S. W. 161, 40 Am. St. Rep. 382; but will only be issued if applied for to relieve from imprisonment under the order or sentence of some inferior federal court, when such court has acted without jurisdiction, or has exceeded its jurisdiction, and its order is for that reason void; In re Boyd, 49 Fed. 48, 1 C. C. A. 156, 4 U. S. App. 73. It may be issued when the petitioner is under arrest but at large on bail; Mackenzie v. Barrett, 141 Fed. 964, 73 C. C. A. 280, 5 Ann. Cas. 551.

Although the writ of habeas corpus does not lie for the determination of mere errors where a conviction has been had and the commitment thereunder is in due form, yet if the court had no jurisdiction of the offence charged, or if it affirmatively appears by the record that the prisoner was tried and sentenced for the commission of an act which under the law constitutes no crime, the judgment is void and the prisoner should be discharged; In re Kowalsky, 73 Cal. 120, 14 Pac. 399; Ex parte Miranda, 73 Cal. 365, 14 Pac. 888; In re Coy, 127 U. S. 731, 8 Sup. Ct. 1263, 32 L. Ed. 274; In re Nielson, 131 U. S. 176, 9 Sup. Ct. 672, 33 L. Ed. 118; Ex parte Kitchen, 19 Nev. 178, 18 Pac. 886; Daniels v. Towers, 79 Ga. 785, 7 S. E. 120.

It cannot be used to oust another competent and acting jurisdiction, or to divert or defeat the course of justice therein; Peltier v. Pennington, 14 N. J. L. 312; Ex parte Gilchrist, 4 McCord (S. C.) 233; Com. v. Lecky, 1 Watts (Pa.) 66, 26 Am. Dec. 37; In re Sims, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 285; Ex parte Bushnell, 8 Ohio St. 599; In re Duncan, 139 U. S. 449, 11 Sup. Ct. 573, 35 L. Ed. 219. It was not intended by congress that the federal courts should, by writs of habeas corpus, obstruct the ordinary administration of the criminal laws of the states through their own tribunals; In re Wood, 140 U. S. 278, 11 Sup. Ct. 738, 35 L. Ed. 505; McElvaine v. Brush, 142 U. S. 155, 12 Sup. Ct. 156, 35 L. Ed. 971.

The only ground on which a court, without some special statute authorizing it, will give relief on habeas corpus to a prisoner under conviction and sentence of another court, is the want of jurisdiction in such court over the person or the cause, or some other matter rendering its proceedings void; In re Frederick, 149 U. S. 70, 13 Sup. Ct. 793, 37 L. Ed. 653; Wight v. Nicholson, 134 U. S. 136, 10 Sup. Ct. 487, 33 L. Ed. 865; Ex parte Nielsen, 131 U. S. 176, 9 Sup. Ct. 672, 33 L. Ed. 118.

The writ is also employed to recover the custody of a person where the applicant has a legal right thereto: as, the husband for his wife, the parent for his child, the guardian for his ward, and the master for his apprentice; Green v. Campbell, 35 W. Va. 698, 14 S. E. 212, 29 Am. St. Rep. 843; Ex parte Chin King, 35 Fed. 354; [1892] App. Cas. 326. But in such cases, as the just object of the proceeding is rather to remove illegal restraint than to enforce specifically the claims of private custody, the alleged prisoner, if an adult of sound mind, is generally permitted to go at large; if an infant of sufficient age and discretion, it is usually permitted to elect in whose custody it will remain, provided that it does not elect an injurious or improper custody; and if of tender years, without such discretion, the court determines its custody according to what the true interests and welfare of the child may at the time require; Hurd, Hab. Corp. 450.

Application for the writ. This may be made by the prisoner, or by any one on his behalf, where for any reason he is unable to make it. It is usually made by petition in writing, verified by affidavit, stating that the petitioner is unlawfully detained, etc., and, where the imprisonment is under legal process, a copy thereof, if attainable, should be presented with the petition; for where the prisoner is under sentence on conviction for crime, or in execution on civil process, or committed for treason or felony plainly expressed in the warrant, he is not, in most of the states, entitled to the writ; Hurd, Hab. Corp. 209; Church, Hab. Corp. 91. The application must set forth the facts concerning the detention of the party restrained, in whose custody he is detained, and by virtue of what authority, if known; In re Cuddy, 131 U. S. 280, 9 Sup. Ct. 703, 33 L. Ed. 154. If it appears from the petition itself that the applicant for the writ is not entitled thereto, the writ need not be awarded; Ex parte Terry, 128 U. S. 289, 9 Sup. Ct. 77, 32 L. Ed. 405; In re Haskell, 52 Fed. 795.

Where, with ample opportunity to do so, an accused did not apply for the writ of habeas corpus until after the jury had been sworn and his trial begun in a state court, the federal court will not interpose at that stage of the cause; Cook v. Hart, 146 U. S. 183, 13 Sup. Ct. 40, 36 L. Ed. 934.

The writ may be issued to determine the right to the custody of an infant as between parents who are living apart; In re Barry, 42 Fed. 113. A mere stranger or volunteer, in no way entitled to the custody of or responsible for the welfare of an infant, nor invited by the infant or its parents or guardian to do so, has no right to a writ; In re Pool, 2 MacArth. (D. C.) 583, 29 Am. Rep. 628; Brown v. Robertson, 76 S. C. 151, 56 S. E. 786, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1173 and note; King's Case, 161 Mass. 46, 36 N. E. 685, collecting cases. An appeal generally lies from a judgment on the application for the writ where the custody of an infant is involved; People v. Court of Appeals, 27 Colo. 405, 61 Pac. 592, 51 L. R. A. 105; Bleakley v. Smart, 74 Kan. 476, 87 Pac. 76, 11 Ann. Cas. 125 (where mandamus was granted to compel hearing for a new trial); contra, Matthews v. Hobbs, 51 Ala. 210. It has been held that if there be no statute, a judgment in habeas corpus is neither reviewable or res judicata; Skinner v. Sedgbeer, 8 Kan. App. 624, 56 Pac. 136; contra, State v. Smith, 65 Wis. 93, 26 N. W. 258; see 20 Harv. L. Rev. 237.

The return. The person to whom the writ is directed is required to produce the body of the prisoner forthwith before the court or officer therein named, and to show the cause of the caption and detention; 5 Term 89; In re Nicholls, 5 N. J. L. 545. The return must specify the true cause of the detention; and the party imprisoned may deny any of the facts set forth in the return, or may allege other facts that may be material in the case, so that the facts may be ascertained and the matter disposed of as law and justice require; In re Cuddy, 131 U. S. 280, 9 Sup. Ct. 703, 33 L. Ed. 154. No evidence is necessary to support the return, as it imports verity until impeached; Crowley v. Christensen, 137 U. S. 86, 11 Sup. Ct. 13, 34 L. Ed. 620.

If the writ be returned without the body, the return must show that the prisoner is not in the possession, custody, or power of the party making the return, or that the prisoner cannot, without serious danger to his life, be produced; and any evasion on this point will be dealt with summarily by attachment; 5 Term 89; In re Stacy, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 328; State v. Philpot, 1 Dudl. (Ga.) 46; U. S. v. Davis, 5 Cra. C. C. 622, Fed. Cas. No. 14,926.

Where the detention is claimed under legal process, a copy of it is attached to the return. Where the detention is under a claim of private custody, all the facts relied on to justify the restraint are set forth in the return.

The hearing. The questions arising upon the return or otherwise in the proceeding, whether of fact or of law, are determined by the court or judge, and not by a jury; Hurd, Hab. Corp. 299.

The evidence on the hearing is such as is allowed in other summary proceedings in which the strictness exacted on the trial in civil actions or criminal prosecutions is somewhat relaxed, the practice sometimes permitting affidavits to be read where there has been no opportunity for cross-examination; but the introduction of such evidence rests in the sound discretion of the court; Archb. Cr. Pl. & Pr. 204; State v. Lyon, 1 N. J. L. 403; In re Heyward, 1 Sandf. (N. Y.) 701; 20 How. S. Tr. 1376; 1 Burr's Trial 97. The court is not concluded by the finding of a committing magistrate, but may go behind his order of commitment, and by certiorari look into the evidence before him; In re Martin, 5 Blatchf. 303, Fed. Cas. No. 9,151; Gosline v. Place, 32 Pa. 520; See U. S. v. Don On, 49 Fed. 569.

Pending the hearing the court may commit the prisoner for safe-keeping from day to day, until the decision of the case; In re Kaine, 14 How. (U. S.) 134, 14 L. Ed. 345; Bac. Abr. Habeas Corpus (B 13); 5 Mod. 22.

If the imprisonment be illegal, it is the duty of the court to discharge the prisoner from that imprisonment; but if the court or officer hearing the habeas corpus be invested with the powers of an examining and committing magistrate in the particular case, and the evidence taken before the court, or regularly certified to it in the habeas corpus proceeding, so far implicate the prisoner in the commission of crime as to justify his being held for trial, it is usual for the court, in default of bail, to commit him as upon an original examination; 3 East 157; Ex parte Bennett, 2 Cra. (C. C.) 612, Fed. Cas. No. 1,311. Where a prisoner is held under a valid sentence and commitment, the illegality of a second sentence will not be inquired into on habeas corpus till the term under the first sentence has expired; Ex parte Ryan, 17 Nev. 139, 28 Pac. 1040.

If the prisoner is not discharged or committed de novo, he must be remanded, or, in a proper case, let to bail; and all offences are bailable prior to the conviction of the offender, except "capital offences when the proof is evident or presumption great;" Hurd, Hab. Corp. 430.

Recommitment after discharge. The act of 31 Car. II. prohibited, under the penalty of five hundred pounds, the reimprisoning for the same offence of any person set at large on habeas corpus, except by the legal order and process of such court wherein such prisoner was bound by recognizance to appear, or other court having jurisdiction of the cause. Somewhat similar provisions are found in the statutes of many of the states. But these provisions are not held to prevent the subsequent arrest of the prisoner on other and more perfect process, although relating to the same criminal act; Ex parte Milburn, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 704, 9 L. Ed. 280; Byrd v. State, 2 Miss. 163.

See "The Story of the Habeas Corpus" by Edward Jenks in 18 L. Q. Rev. 64 (2 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 531).

HABEAS CORPUS ACTS. See HABEAS CORPUS.

HABEAS CORPUS AD DELIBERANDUM ET RECIPIENDUM (Lat.). A writ which is issued to remove, for trial, a person confined in one county to the county or place where the offence of which he is accused was committed. Bac. Abr. Habeas Corpus, A; 1 Chitty, Cr. L. 132. Thus, it has been granted to remove a person in custody for contempt to take his trial for perjury in another county; 1 Tyrwh. 185.

HABEAS CORPUS AD FACIENDUM ET RECIPIENDUM (Lat.). A writ usually issued in civil cases to remove an action from an inferior court, where the defendant is sued and imprisoned, to some superior court which has jurisdiction over the matter, in order that the cause may be determined there. This writ is commonly called habeas corpus cum causa, because it commands the judges of the inferior court to return the day and cause of the caption and detainer of the prisoner; Bac. Abr. Habeas Corpus, A; 3 Bla. Com. 130; Tidd, Pr. 296.

This writ may also be issued at the instance of the bail of the defendant, to bring him up to be surrendered in their discharge, whether he is in custody on a civil suit or on a criminal accusation; Tidd, Pr. 298; 1 Chitty, Cr. L. 132.

HABEAS CORPUS AD PROSEQUENDUM (Lat.). A writ which issues when it is necessary to remove a prisoner in order to prosecute in the proper jurisdiction wherein the fact was committed. 3 Bla. Com. 130.

HABEAS CORPUS AD RESPONDENDUM (Lat.). A writ which is usually employed in civil cases to remove a person out of the custody of one court into that of another, in order that he may be sued and answer the action in the latter. 2 Mod. 198; 3 Bla. Com. 129; Tidd, Pr. 300.

This writ lies also to bring up a person in confinement to answer a criminal charge; thus, the court issued it to the warden of the fleet, to take the body of the prisoner confined there before a magistrate to be examined respecting a charge of felony or misdemeanor; 5 B. & Ald. 730.

But it was refused to bring up the body of a prisoner under sentence for a felony, for the purpose of having him tried for a previous felony.

HABEAS CORPUS AD SATISFACIENDUM (Lat.). A writ which is issued to bring a prisoner from the prison of one court into that of another, in order to charge him in execution upon a judgment of the last court. 3 Bla. Com. 130; Tidd, Pr. 301.

HABEAS CORPUS AD SUBJICIENDUM.

See HABEAS CORPUS.

HABEAS CORPUS AD TESTIFICANDUM

(Lat.). A writ which lies to bring up a prisoner detained in any jail or prison, to give evidence before any court of competent jurisdiction. Tidd, Pr. 739; 3 Bla. Com. 130; State v. Kennedy, 20 Ia. 372; Ex parte Marmaduke, 91 Mo. 250, 4 S. W. 91, 60 Am. Rep. 250.

The allowance of this writ resting in the discretion of the court, it will be refused if the application appear to be in bad faith or a mere contrivance; 3 Burr. 1440.

It was refused to bring up a prisoner of war; 2 Dougl. 419; or a prisoner in custody for high treason; Peake, Add. Cas. 21.

It would of course be refused where it appear from the application that the prisoner was under sentence for crime which rendered him incompetent as a witness.

The application for the writ is made upon affidavit, stating the nature of the suit and the materiality of the testimony, together with the general circumstances of restraint which render the writ necessary; Cowp. 672; 2 Cow. & H. Notes to Phill. Ev. 658.

HABEAS CORPUS CUM CAUSA. See HABEAS CORPUS AD FACIENDUM ET RECIPIENDUM.

HABENDUM (Lat.). The clause usually following the granting part of the premises of a deed, which defines the extent of the ownership in the thing granted to be held and enjoyed by grantee. 3 Washb. R. P. 436.

It commences with the words "to have and to hold," habendum et tenendum. It is not an essential part of a deed, but serves to qualify, define, or control it; Co. Litt. 6 a, 299; 4 Kent 468; Sumner v. Williams, 8 Mass. 162, 174, 5 Am. Dec. 83; and may be rejected if clearly repugnant to the rest of the deed; Shepp. Touchst. 102. See 3 Washb. R. P. 436; 4 Kent 468; 4 Greenl. Cruise, Dig. 273; Elph. Deeds 217.

HABENTES HOMINES (Lat.). Rich men. Du Cange.

HABENTIA. Wealth; Riches. Mon. Ang. t. 1. 100.

HABERE (Lat.). To have. It is said to designate the right, while tenere (to hold) signifies the possession, and possidere (to possess) includes both. Calv. Lex.

HABERE FACIAS POSSESSIONEM (Lat.). A writ of execution in the action of ejectment; originally to recover possession of a chattel interest in real estate.

The sheriff is commanded by this writ that, without delay, he cause the plaintiff to have possession of the land in dispute which is therein described. A fl. fa. or ca. sa. for costs may be included in the writ. The duty of the sheriff in the execution and return of that part of the writ is the same as on a common fl. fa. or ca. sa. The sheriff is to execute this writ by delivering a full and actual possession of the premises to the plaintiff. For this purpose, he may break an outer or inner door of the house; and, should he be violently opposed, he may raise the posse comitatus; 5 Co. 91 b; 1 Leon. 145.

The name of this writ is abbreviated hab. fac. poss. See 10 Viner, Abr. 14; Tidd, Pr. 1081; 2 Arch. Pr. 58; 3 Bla. Com. 412.

HABERE FACIAS SEISINAM (Lat.).

The name of a writ of execution, used in most real actions, by which the sheriff is directed that he cause the demandant to have seisin of the lands which he has recovered. It lay to recover possession of the freehold, while to recover a chattel interest in real estate the habere facias possessionem was the appropriate writ. It was practically abolished in England by the Common Law Procedure Acts of 1852 and 1860, but is still known in some of the states in connection with the action of dower.

This writ may be taken out at any time within a year and a day after judgment. It is to be executed nearly in the same manner as the writ of habere facias possessionem, and for this purpose the officer may break open the outer door of a house to deliver seisin to the demandant; 5 Co. 91 b; Com. Dig. Execution, E. The name of this writ is abbreviated hab. fac. seis.

HABERE FACIAS VISUM (Lat.). In Practice. The name of a writ which lay when a view is to be taken of lands and tenements. Fitzh. N. B. Index, View.

HABERE LICERE. See SALE.

HABETO TIBI RES TUAS. In Civil Law. Have or take thy property to thyself. A phrase used in connection with the Roman law of divorce. Calv. Lex. Where a marriage in one of their modes, by which the wife passed in manum viri, was dissolved by divorce, the husband had to restore the dos, as in case of the wife's death, unless her misconduct was the cause; Sand. Just. 152.

HABILIS (Lat.). Fit; suitable. 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 436. Active; useful (of a servant). Du Cange. Proved; authentic (of Book of Saints). Du Cange. Fixed; stable (of authority of the king). Du Cange.

HABIT. A disposition or condition of the body or mind acquired by custom or a frequent repetition of the same act. See Sikes v. Allen, 2 Mart. N. S. (La.) 622; Ludwick v. Com., 18 Pa. 172; Com. v. Whitney, 5 Gray (Mass.) 85. The customary conduct, to pursue which one has acquired a tendency, from frequent repetition of the same acts. Knick*erbocker Life Ins. Co. v. Foley*, 105 U. S. 350, 26 L. Ed. 1055.

The habit of dealing has always an important bearing upon the construction of commercial contracts. A ratification will be inferred from the mere habit of dealing between the parties: as if a broker has been accustomed to settle losses on policies in a particular manner, without any objection being made, or with the silent approbation of his principal, and he should afterwards settle other policies in the same manner, to which no objection should be made within a reasonable time, a just presumption would arise of an implied ratification: for, if the principal did not agree to such settlement, he should have declared his dissent. See USAGE.

The habit of an animal is, in its nature, a continuous fact, to be shown by proof of successive acts of a similar kind; Kennon v. Gilmer, 131 U. S. 22, 9 Sup. Ct. 696, 33 L. Ed. 110.

HABIT AND REPUTE. Applied in Scotch law to a general understanding and belief of something's having happened: e. g. marriage may be constituted by habit and repute; Bell. Dict.

HABITABLE REPAIR. Such a state of repair that leased premises may be occupied, not only with safety, but with reasonable comfort. 2 Mood. & R. 186.

HABITANCY. See INHABITANT.

HABITANT. A resident; an inhabitant (q. v.). A native of Canada of French descent, particularly of the peasant or farming class; a tenant who kept hearth and home on the seignior.

HABITATION. In Civil Law. The right of a person to live in the house of another without prejudice to the property.

It differed from a usufruct in this, that the usufructuary might apply the house to any purpose,—as of a store or manufactory; whereas the party having the right of habitation could only use it for the residence of himself and family; 1 Bro. Civ. Law 184; Domat, l. 1, t. 11, s. 2, n. 7.

In Estate. A dwelling-house; a home stall. 2 Bla. Com. 4; 4 id. 220.

HABITUAL CRIMINALS ACT. The stat. 32 & 33 Vict. c. 99. Its object was to give the police greater control over convicted criminals at large, and to provide for the registration of criminals. Now repealed and other provisions substituted for it, by the Prevention of Crime Act, 34 & 35 Vict. c. 112. Moz. & W.

Statutes providing for increased penalties for crimes committed by habitual criminals or prior offenders are not contrary to the United States constitution prohibiting ex post facto laws; Sturtevant v. Com., 158 Mass. 598, 33 N. E. 648; State v. Dowden, 137 Ia. 573, 115 N. W. 211; State of Iowa v.

Jones, 128 Fed. 626. They do not deny equal protection of the law; People v. Coleman, 145 Cal. 609, 79 Pac. 283; nor impose cruel and unusual punishment; McDonald v. Massachusetts, 180 U. S. 311, 21 Sup. Ct. 389, 45 L. Ed. 542; nor place the accused in jeopardy a second time; Herndon v. Com., 105 Ky. 197, 48 S. W. 989, 88 Am. St. Rep. 303; State v. Le Pitre, 54 Wash. 166, 103 Pac. 27, 18 Ann. Cas. 922.

As to the effect of a pardon for the first offense, see PARDON.

HABITUAL DRUNKARD. A person given to inebriety or the excessive use of intoxicating drink, who has lost the power or the will, by frequent indulgence, to control his appetite for it. Ludwick v. Com., 18 Pa. 172; Com. v. Whitney, 5 Gray (Mass.) 85. One who has the habit of indulging in intoxicating drinks so firmly fixed that he becomes drunk whenever the temptation is presented by his being near where liquor is sold. Magahay v. Magahay, 35 Mich. 210. Within the meaning of the divorce laws, one who has a fixed habit of frequently getting drunk; Page v. Page, 43 Wash. 293, 86 Pac. 582, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 914, 117 Am. St. Rep. 1054. The custom or habit of getting drunk; the constant indulgence in such stimulants as wine, brandy, and whisky, whereby intoxication is produced; not the ordinary use, but the habitual use of them; the habit should be actual and confirmed, but need not be continuous, or even of daily occurrence; Williams v. Goss, 43 La. Ann. 868, 9 South. 750. If there is a fixed habit of drinking to excess, so as to disqualify a person from attending to his business during the principal portion of the time usually devoted to business, it is habitual intemperance; Mahone v. Mahone, 19 Cal. 626, 81 Am. Dec. 91; but see Wheeler v. Wheeler, 53 Ia. 511, 5 N. W. 689, 36 Am. Rep. 240.

Habitual drunkenness of a husband has been held not to entitle the wife to a divorce; L. R. 1 P. & M. 46; contra, 1 Bish. Mar. Div. & Sep. 1781. And in many of the states statutory provisions make such conduct ground for divorce. The fact that a man has had delirium tremens once does not prove, as a matter of law, that he is habitually intemperate, so as to contradict his representation to the contrary; Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Bank, 122 U. S. 501, 7 Sup. Ct. 1221, 30 L. Ed. 1100.

By the laws of some states, such persons are classed with idiots, lunatics, etc., in regard to the care of property; and in some, they are liable to punishment. See Wadsworth v. Sharpsteen, 8 N. Y. 388, 59 Am. Dec. 499; U. S. v. Forbes, Crabbe 558, Fed. Cas. No. 15,129; In re Guardianship of Wetmore, 6 Wash. 271, 33 Pac. 615.

While a woman is under guardianship as an habitual drunkard, she is conclusively presumed to be incapable of conducting her affairs; she cannot transact any business, make a valid deed or bond, waive the notice of protest on a bill, or waive the provisions of her husband's will and elect to take dower, or do anything which involves the exercise of judgment or discrimination; Philadelphia Trust, Safe and Deposit Ins. Co. v. Allison, 108 Me. 326, 80 Atl. 833, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 39; see Cockrill v. Cockrill, 79 Fed. 143; L'Amoureux v. Crosby, 2 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 422; Penhallow v. Kimball, 61 N. H. 596.

See Rogers, Drinks, etc.; DRUNKENNESS; DELIRIUM TREMENS; INTOXICATION.

HABITUALLY. Customarily; by frequent practice or use. It does not mean entirely or exclusively; Stanton v. French, 91 Cal. 274, 27 Pac. 657, 25 Am. St. Rep. 174.

HABLE. A seaport; a harbor; a naval station. Stat. 27 Hen. VI. c. 3.

HACIENDA. In Spanish Law. A generic term, applicable to the mass of the property belonging to a state, and the administration of the same. Also a private estate or plantation.

As a science, it is defined by Dr. Jose Canoga Argüells, in his "Diccionario de Hacienda," to be that part of civil economy which teaches how to aggrandize a nation by the useful employment of its wealth.

A royal estate. Newman & B. Dict.

HACKNEY CARRIAGES. Carriages plying for hire in the street. The driver is liable for negligently losing baggage; 2 C. 13, 877; Masterson v. Short, 33 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 481. They are usually regulated in large cities by statute or ordinance; 17 & 18 Vict. c. 86; Com. v. Matthews, 122 Mass. 60. See HIGHWAYS; RAILROADS.

HADBOTE. In English Law. A recompense or amends made for violence offered to a person in holy orders. Jacob.

HADD. A boundary or limit. A statutory punishment defined by law, and not arbitrary. In Hindu law. Moz. & W.

HADERUNGA. Respect or distinction of persons. Jacob.

HADGONEL. A tax or mulct. Jacob.

HAEC EST CONVENTIO (Lat.). This is an agreement. Words with which agreements anciently commenced. Yearb. H. 6 Edw. II. 191.

HAEC EST FINALIS CONCORDIA (L. Lat.). This is the final agreement. The words with which the foot of a fine commenced. 2 Bl. Com. 351.

HÆREDA. The name, under the Gothic constitutions, of the hundred court (q. v.). 3 Bla. Com. 35; 3 Steph. Com. 281, 282, n. (q.).

HÆREDE ABDUCTO. An ancient writ that lay for the lord, who, having by right the wardship of his tenant under age, could not obtain access to his person, by reason of the ward having been carried away by another person. Old. Nat. Brev. 93; Cowell.

HÆREDE DELIBERANDO ALTERI QUI HABET CUSTODIAM TERRÆ. An ancient writ, directed to the sheriff, requiring him to command one who had taken away an heir under age, being his ward, to deliver him to the person whose ward he was by reason of his land. Reg. Orig. 161.

HÆREDE RAPTO. An ancient writ that lay for the ravishment of the lord's ward. Reg. Orig. 163.

HÆREDES. Heirs. Plural of Hæres, which see, together with titles immediately following it.

HÆREDIPETA (Law Lat.). The next heir to lands. Du Cange. And who seeks to be made heir (qui cupit hæreditatem). Du Cange.

HÆREDITAS (Lat. from hæres). In Civil Law. "Nihil aliud est hæreditas, quam successio in universum jus quod defunctus habuit." Inheritance is nothing else than succession to every right which the deceased possessed. Dig. 50. 17; 50. 16; 5. 2; Mack. C. L. § 605; Bracton 62 b. The theory was that, though the physical person of the deceased had perished, his legal personality survived and descended unimpaired on his heirs in whom his legal identity was continued.

See HÆRES.

In Old English Law. An estate transmissible by descent; an inheritance. Marten, Anecd. Collect. t. 3, p. 269; Co. Litt. 9.

HÆREDITAS DAMNOSA. A burdensome inheritance. See DAMNOSA HÆREDITAS.

HÆREDITAS JACENS (Lat.). In Civil Law. A prostrate inheritance. The inheritance left to a voluntary heir was so called so long as he had not manifested, either expressly or by silence, his acceptance or refusal of the inheritance, which, by a fiction of law, was said to sustain the person (sustinere personam) of the deceased, and not of the heir. Mack. C. L. § 685 a. An estate with no heir or legatee to take. Code, 10. 10., 1; Howe, Stud. Civ. L. 68.

In English Law. An estate in abeyance; that is, after the ancestor's death and before assumption of the heir. Co. Litt. 342 b. An inheritance without legal owner, and therefore open to the first occupant. 2 Bla. Com. 259.

The Roman conception of the term is unknown to the common law. John C. Gray, Nature, etc., of Law 59, 298, where the subject is treated.

HÆREDITAS LUCTUOSA. The succession of parents to the estate of deceased children. 4 Kent 397. It was called a mournful inheritance because out of the ordinary and natural course of mortality. It was sometimes termed tristis successio.

HÆRES. In Roman Law. One who succeeds to the rights and occupies the place of a deceased person, being appointed by the will of the decedent. It is to be observed that the Roman hæres had not the slightest resemblance to the English heir. He corresponded in character and duties almost exactly with the executor under the English law.

The institution of the hæres was the essential characteristic of a testament: if this was not done, the instrument was called a codicillus. Mack. C. L. §§ 632, 650.

Who might not be instituted. Certain persons were not permitted to be instituted in this capacity: such as, persons not Roman citizens, slaves of such persons, persons not in being at the death of the testator, and corporations, unless especially privileged. Also, the emperor could not be made hæres with the condition that he should prosecute a suit of the testator against a subject. Nor could a second husband or wife be instituted hæres to a greater portion of the estate than was left to that child of the first marriage which received least by the will. So, a widow who married before the expiration of her year of mourning could not institute her second husband as hæres to more than a third of her estate. And a man who had legitimate children could not institute as hæres a concubine and her children to more than a twelfth of his estate, nor the mother alone to more than one-twenty-fourth; Mack. C. L. § 651.

The institution of the hæres might be absolute or conditional. But the condition, to be valid, must be suspensive (condition precedent, see CONDITION), possible, and lawful. If, however, this rule was infringed, certain conditions, as the resolutive (condition subsequent, see CONDITION), the impossible, and the immoral or indecent, were held nugatory, while others invalidated the appointment of the hæres,—as the preposterous and captatory, i. e. the appointment of a hæres on condition that the appointee should, in turn, institute the testator or some other person hæres in his testament. In regard to limitations of time, they must, to be valid, commence ex die incerto. A condition that A should become hæres after a certain day, or that he should be hæres up to a day whether certain or uncertain, was nugatory. The testator might assign his reasons for the institution of a particular hæres, but a mistake in the facts upon which those reasons were based did not, in general, affect the validity of the appointment. The institution might be accompanied with a direction that the hæres should apply the inheritance either wholly or in part to a specified purpose, which he was bound to comply with in case he accepted the inheritance, unless it was physically impossible to do so, or unless the hæres himself was the only person affected by such directions. The hæres might be instituted either simply, without any interest in the estate, or with a fixed share therein, or with regard to some particular thing; Mack. C. L. § 653. It was customary, in order to provide against a failure to accept on the part of the direct hæres, to substitute one or more hæredes to him. This substitution might be made in various forms; but the result was the same in all,—that if the first of the direct hæredes failed to accept the inheritance, whether from indisposition, permanent incapacity, or from dying before the testator, the substitute stood in his stead. There might be several degrees of substitutes, each ready to act in case of the failure of all the preceding; and the rule was substitutus substituto est substitutus instituto: which meant that on a failure of all the intermediate substitutes, the lowest in rank succeeded to the position of the instituted hæres. This was called substitutio vulgaris. There was another, the substitutio pupillaris, which was nothing more than the appointment, by the testator, of a hæres to a minor child under his authority,—which appointment was good in case the child died after the testator, and still a minor. It was, in fact, making a testament for such minor—an act which he could not perform for himself. Mack. C. L. § 663.

Persons entitled to the inheritance. Though, generally speaking, the testator might institute as hæres any person whatever not within the exceptions above mentioned, yet his relatives, within certain limits, were considered as peculiarly entitled to the office, and if he instituted any one else they could not be entirely excluded, but were admitted to a share of the inheritance, which share, called portio legitima, or pars legitima, was fixed by law. The rules in regard to the persons entitled to this share of the estate, and its amount, are very intricate, and too voluminous to be introduced here. They may be found in Mackeldey, §§ 654-657. Among those entitled to the pars legitima, the immediate ascendants and descendants of the testator were peculiarly distinguished in this, that they must be mentioned in the testament, either by being formally instituted as hæredes, or by being formally excluded, while the other relatives so entitled might receive their shares as a legacy, or in any other way, without being formally instituted. From this necessity of mentioning this class of relatives, they were called successores necessarii.

Acquisition of the inheritance. Except in the case of a slave of the testator (hæres necessarius), or a person under his authority (potestas) at his death (hæres suus et necessarius), the institution of a person as hæres did not oblige him to accept the office. A formal acceptance was requisite in the case of all other persons than the two classes just mentioned, whence such persons were called hæredes voluntarii, and in opposition to the sui hæredes, extranei hæredes. This acceptance might be express (aditio hæreditatis), or tacit, i. e. by performing some act in relation to the inheritance which admitted of no other construction than that the person named as hæres intended to accept the office. The refusal of the office, if express, was called repudiatio; if tacit, through the neglect of the hæres to make use of his rights within a suitable period, it was called omissio hæreditatis. The acceptance could not be coupled with a condition; and a refusal was final and irrevocable; Mack. C. L. §§ 681-683.

Rights and liabilities of the hæres. The fundamental idea of the office is that as regards the estate the hæres and the testator form but a single person. Hence it follows that the private estate of the hæres and the estate of the testator are united (confusio bonorum defuncti et hæredis); the hæres acquires all rights of property, and becomes liable to all demands, except those purely personal, to which the testator was entitled and subject, and is, consequently, responsible for all the debts of the deceased, even if the estate left by the latter is not sufficient to pay them. He must, moreover, recognize as binding upon him all acts of the testator relating to the estate. He is bound to obey the directions of the will, especially to perform the trusts and pay the legacies imposed upon him, yet this only so far as the residue of the estate, after liquidating the debts, enables him to do so.

These were the strict rules of the law; but two modes, the spatium deliberandi and the beneficium inventarii, were in course of time contrived for relieving the hæres from the risk of loss by an acceptance of the office.

The spatium deliberandi was a period of delay granted to the hæres, upon application to the magistrate, in order that he might investigate the condition of the estate before deciding whether to accept or reject the office. If the hæres was pressed by the other hæredes, or by the creditors of the estate, to decide whether to accept or reject the office he must decide immediately, or apply for the spatium deliberandi, which when allowed by the emperor continued for a year, and when by a judge, for nine months, from the day of its allowance. If the hæres had not decided at the expiration of this period, he was held to have accepted. If he was not pressed to a decision by the other hæredes or by the creditors, he was allowed a year from the day he was notified of the inheritance having been conferred upon him, to deliberate whether to accept or not. If, after deliberating for the allotted period, he should accept the inheritance, he became responsible for the debts of the testator, without regard to whether the estate was sufficient or not to pay them.

The beneficium inventarii was an extension to all hæredes of the privilege belonging to soldiers not to be responsible for the debts beyond the assets. This privilege to the hæres was conditional upon his commencing an inventory within thirty days and completing it within sixty from the time he became notified of his appointment. The inventory must be prepared in the presence of a notary, and must be signed by the hæres, with a declaration that it included the whole estate, etc., to which fact he might be obliged to make oath. He then became liable only to the extent of the assets. He was allowed, before paying the debts, to deduct the expenses of the funeral, of establishing the testament, and of making the inventory. He could not be forced to pay debts or legacies during the preparation of the inventory, and afterwards he paid the claimants in full in the order in which they presented themselves, and when the assets were exhausted could not be required to pay any more. His own claims against the estate might be paid first, and his debts to the estate were part of the assets. If he neglected to prepare the inventory within the legal period, he forfeited the privileges of it; which also was the case if he applied for the spatium deliberandi; so that he must choose between the two.

The creditors and legatees of the testator were allowed the beneficium separationis, by which, when the hæres was deeply in debt, and, by reason of the confusio bonorum defuncti et hæredis, they were in danger of losing their claims, they were permitted to have a separation of the assets from the private estate of the hæres. Application for this privilege must have been made within five years from the acceptance of the inheritance; but it would not be granted if the creditors of the testator had in any way recognized the hæres as their debtor. If it was granted, they were in general restricted to the assets for payment of their claims, and the private estate of the hæres was discharged. If the assets were not exhausted in satisfying the creditors and legatees of the testator, the creditors of hæres might come in upon the balance; but these latter were not entitled to the beneficium separationis.

The hæres might transmit the inheritance by will; but, in general, he could not do so till after acceptance. To this, however, there were numerous exceptions.

The remedies of the hæres are too intimately connected with the general system of Roman jurisprudence to be capable of a brief explanation. See Mack. C. L. §§ 692, 693; Dig. 5. 3; Cod. 3. 31; Gaius, iv. § 144, etc.; Maine, Anc. Law.

Cohæredes. When several hæredes have accepted a joint inheritance, each ipso jure becomes entitled to a proportional share in the assets, and liable to a proportional share of the debts, though the testator may, if he choose, direct otherwise, and they may also agree otherwise among themselves; but in both these cases the creditors are not affected, and may pursue each hæres to the extent of his legal share of liability, and no further.

One of the cohæredes has a right to compel a partition of the assets and liabilities, subject, however, to an agreement among themselves, or a direction by the testator, that the inheritance shall remain undivided for a time; Mack. C. L. §§ 694, 695.

HÆRES ASTRARIUS. In Old English Law. An heir in actual possession of the house of his ancestor. Bract. 85, 267 b.

HÆRES DE FACTO. An heir, made so by reason of the disseisin or other wrongful act of his ancestor. An heir in fact in contradistinction to an heir de jure.

HÆRES EX ASSE. In Civil Law. Sole heir. In inheritances and other money matters where a division was made, the as (a unit) with its parts, was used to designate the portions, thus: Hæres ex asse, heir to the whole; hæres ex semisse, heir to one-half; hæres ex dodrante, heir to three-fourths; and so, hæres ex besse, triente, quadrante, scxtante, etc. Calvinus, s. v. As.

HÆRES EXTRANEUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. An extraneous or foreign heir, that is one who is not a child or slave of the testator. Those only could be extraneous heirs who had a capacity of accepting the inheritance both at the time of making the will and at the death of the testator. Halifax, Anal. b. 11, c. 6, § 38.

HÆRES FACTUS (Lat.). An heir appointed by will. This expression is applicable in the Roman law and systems founded on it, but not in the English common law; Moz. & W.

HÆRES FIDEI-COMMISSARIUS (Lat.). See FIDEI COMMISSUM.

HÆRES FIDUCIARIUS (Lat.). See FIDEI COMMISSUM.

HÆRES LEGITIMUS (Lat.). A lawful heir, being a legitimate child of parents who were married.

HÆRES NATUS (Lat.). An heir who is such by birth or descent. This is the only form of heirship recognized in the English law; Wms. R. P., 6th Am. ed. 96.

HÆRES NECESSARIUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. A necessary heir, i. e. a slave instituted heir. He was so-called because whether he wished it or not, on the death of the testator he became instantly free and necessarily heir. A person suspecting that he was insolvent usually made a slave his heir so that his goods would be sold, if that were necessary, in the name of this heir and not as those of the testator. Inst. 2, 19. 1; id. 1. G. 1; Sand. Introd. § 76.

HÆRES PROXIMUS (Lat.). The child or descendant of the deceased. Dalr. Feud. 110.

HÆRES RECTUS (Lat.). In Old English Law. A right heir. Fleta, l. 6, c. 1, § 11.

HÆRES REMOTIOR (Lat.). A more remote heir. A kinsman, not a child or descendant.

HÆRES SUUS. In Civil Law. One's own heir; the natural heir of the decedent; his lineal descendants. Persons who were in the power of the testator but became sui juris at his death. Inst. 2. 13; id. 3. 1. 4. 5.

HÆRES SUUS ET NECESSARIUS. In Civil Law. An heir by relationship and necessity. The descendants of an ancestor in direct line were so-called, sui, denoting the relationship, and necessarii, the necessity of law which made them heirs without their election, and whether the ancestor died testate or intestate. Halifax, Anal. b. 11, c. 6, § 38; Mack, Civ. L. § 681; Inst. 2. 19. 2.

HÆRETARE. To give a right of inheritance or make a donation hereditary to the grantee and his heirs. Cowell.

HÆRETICO COMBURENDO. See DE HÆRETICO COMBURENDO.

HAFNE. A haven or port. Cowell.

HAFNE COURTS (hafne, Dan. a haven, or port). Haven courts; courts anciently held in certain ports in England. Spelman, Gloss.

HAG. A division of a coppice or wood on which timber was cut annually by the proprietor. Ersk. Pr. 222.

HAGA. A house in a city or borough. Jacob.

HAGIA. A hedge. Mon. Angl. tome 2, 273.

HAGNE. A little hand-gun. Stat. 33 Hen. VIII. c. 6.

HAGNEBUT. A hand-gun larger than the hagne. Stat. 2 & 3 Edw. VI. c. 14; 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 2.

HAGUE TRIBUNAL. The Court of Arbitration established by the Hague Peace Conference of 1899. The object of the establishment was to facilitate the immediate recourse to arbitration for the settlement of international differences by providing a permanent court, "accessible at all times, and acting in default of agreement to the contrary between the parties, in accordance with the rules of procedure inserted in the present convention." The court is given jurisdiction over all arbitration cases, provided the parties do not agree to institute a special tribunal. Each power signing the Convention selects four persons of known competency in questions of international law and of the highest moral reputation. These persons form the members of the court, and their names are inscribed upon a list which is notified to the contracting powers. When a case to be arbitrated arises between two of the signatory powers, the arbitrators must be chosen from the above mentioned list, each party appointing two arbitrators who together choose an umpire. An international Bureau was likewise established to serve as a registry for the court and to be the channel of communications relative to the meetings of the court. The court, although called "permanent," is really so only in the fact that there is a permanent list of members from among whom the arbitrators in a given case are selected. At the Second Hague Conference of 1907, apart from minor changes made in the court, it was provided that, of the two arbitrators appointed by each of the parties, only one should be a national of the appointing state. This was done with the object of securing a more impartial tribunal. 1 Scott, 274-318, 423-464.

HAIA. A hedge. An enclosed park. Cowell.

HAIEBOTE. A permission to take thorns, etc., to repair hedges. Blount.

HAILL. Whole. All and haill are common words in Scotch conveyances. 1 Bell, App. Cas. 499.

HAIMSUCKEN. See HAMESUCKEN.

HAIR. A capillary outgrowth from the skin. It has been held not to include the bristles of animals; Von Stade v. Arthur, 13 Blatchf. 251, Fed. Cas. No. 16,998.

HAKH. Truth; the true God; a just or legal prescriptive right or claim; a perquisite claimable under established usage by village officers. Wilson, Gloss. Ind.

HAKHDAR. The holder of a right. Moz. & W. See HAKH.

HALAKAR. The realization of the revenue. Wilson, Gloss. Ind.; Moz. & W.

HALF-BLOOD. A term denoting the degree of relationship which exists between those who have one parent only in common.

By the English common law, one related to an intestate of the half-blood only could never inherit, upon the presumption that he is not of the blood of the original purchaser; but this rule has been greatly modified by the 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 106.

In this country, the common-law principle on this subject may be considered as not ordinarily in force, though in many states some distinction is still preserved between the whole and the half-blood; 4 Kent 403, n.; Butler v. King, 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 115; Lawson v. Perdriault, 1 McCord (S. C.) 456; Danner v. Shissler, 31 Pa. 289; Dane, Abr. Index; Reeves, Descents, passim; 2 Washb. R. P. 411.

HALF-BROTHER, HALF-SISTER. Persons who have the same father, but different mothers; or the same mother, but different fathers.

HALF-CENT. A copper coin of the United States, of the value of one two-hundredth part of a dollar, or five mills, and of the weight of ninety-four grains. The first half-cent was issued in 1793, the last in 1857.

HALF-DEFENCE. See DEFENCE.

HALF-DIME. A silver coin of the United States, of the value of five cents, or the one-twentieth part of a dollar.

It weighed nineteen grains and two-tenths of a grain,—equal to four-hundredths of an ounce troy,—and was of the fineness of nine hundred thousandths; nine hundred parts being pure silver, and one hundred parts copper. The fineness of the coin was prescribed by the 8th section of the general mint law, passed Jan. 18, 1837. The weight of the coin was fixed by the 1st section of the act of Feb. 21, 1853. The second section of this last-cited act directed that silver coins issued in conformity to that act shall be a legal tender in payment of debts for all sums not exceeding five dollars. This provision applies to the half-dollar and all silver coins below that denomination. The first coinage of half-dimes was in 1793. A few half "dismes," with a likeness of Mrs. Washington, the wife of the president, upon the obverse of the coin, were issued in 1792; but they were not of the regular coinage.

By act of 9 June, 1879, silver coin of smaller denominations than one dollar shall be a legal tender in all sums not exceeding ten dollars. The coining of the half-dime was abolished by act of 12 Feb. 1873. Its place was supplied by a five-cent piece composed of three-fourths copper and one-fourth nickel, of the weight of seventy-seven and sixteen-hundredths grains troy. The "minor coins," viz., the five, three, two, and one cent pieces, are a legal tender for any amount not exceeding twenty-five cents in any one payment.

HALF-DOLLAR. A silver coin of the United States, of half the value of the dollar or unit, and containing one hundred and eighty-five grains and ten-sixteenth parts of a grain of pure, or two hundred and eight grains of standard, silver. Act of April 2, 1792. Under the provisions of this law, the fineness of the silver coins of the United States was 892.4 thousandths of pure silver.

The weight and fineness of the silver coins were somewhat changed by the act of Jan. 18, 1837; the weight of the half-dollar being by this act fixed at two hundred and six and one-quarter grains, and the fineness at nine hundred thousandths; conforming, in respect to fineness with the coinage of France and most other nations.

The weight of the half-dollar was reduced by the provisions of the act of February 21, 1853, to one hundred and ninety-two grains.

The half-dollars coined under the acts of 1792 and 1837 (as above) were a legal tender at their nominal value in payment of debts to any amount. Those coined since the act of February 21, 1853, were, under it a legal tender in payment of debts for all sums not exceeding five dollars. Sec. 2. The silver coins struck in the year 1853, under this last-cited act, may be distinguished from the others of that year by the arrow-heads on the right and left of the date of the piece. In 1854, and subsequent years, the arrow-heads are omitted.

By the act of 12 Feb. 1873, the weight of the half-dollar shall be twelve and one-half grams (192.9 grains), and by act of June 9, 1879, it is a legal tender for sums not exceeding ten dollars. The same act enables the holder of any silver coins of a smaller denomination than one dollar, to exchange them in sums of twenty dollars, or any multiple thereof, at the U. S. Treasury, for lawful money of the United States.

HALF-EAGLE. A gold coin of the United States, of the value of five dollars.

The weight of the piece is 129 grains (act June 28, 1834; Act Feb. 12, 1873) of standard fineness, namely, nine hundred thousandths of pure gold, and one hundred of alloy of silver and copper: "provided that the silver do not exceed one-half of the whole alloy." Act of Jan. 18, 1837. For the proportion of alloy in gold coins of the United States since 1853, see EAGLE.

For all sums whatever the half-eagle was a legal tender of payment of five dollars. It is now a legal tender to any amount, when not below the standard weight, and then in proportion to its actual weight. Act of February 12, 1873.

HALF ENDEAL or HALFEN DEAL. A moiety or half of a thing.

HALF-KING. In Saxon Law. Half-King. A title accorded to aldermen of all England. Crabb. Eng. L. 28; Spel. Glos.

HALF-MARK. A noble; six shillings, eight pence.

HALF-PROOF. In Civil Law. That which is insufficient as the foundation of a sentence or decree, although in itself entitled to some credit. Vicat, Probatio.

HALF-SEAL. A seal used in the English chancery for the sealing of commissions to delegates appointed upon any appeal, either in ecclesiastical or marine causes. 8 Eliz. c. 3.

HALF-TONGUE. A jury half of one tongue or nationality and half of another. Vide Jacob, Law Dict. De medietate lingue.

HALF-YEAR. In the computation of time a half year consists of one hundred and eighty-two days. Cro. Jac. 166; Co. Litt. 135 b.

HALI. A man employed in ploughing. Wilson, Gloss. Ind.; Moz. & W.

HALIMAS. In English Law. The feast of all-Saints, on November 1. One of the cross-quarters of the year was computed from Halimas to Candlemas. Whart.

HALIMOTE. A court baron (q. v.). It was sometimes used to designate a convention of citizens in their public hall and was also called folkmote and hallmote. The word halimote rather signifies the lord's court or a court baron held in a manor in which the differences between the tenants were determined. Cunn. L. Dict.; Cowell. "Furthermore," it is said, "it seems to have been a common practice for a wealthy abbey to keep a court, known as a halimote, on each of its manors, while in addition to these manorial courts it kept a central court, a libera curia for all its greater freehold tenants. And we may now and again meet with courts which are distinctly called courts of honors. The rule then was not merely this, that the lord of a manor may hold a court for the manor; but rather this, that a lord may hold a court for his tenants." 1 Poll. & Maitl. 573.

HALIWORKFOLK. Holy work folk. Persons who held lands of which the tenure was the service of defending or repairing some church or monument. Cowell.

HALL. A public building used either for the meetings of corporations, courts, or employed to some public uses: as, the city hall, the town hall. Formerly this word denoted the chief mansion or habitation.

HALL-MARK. An official stamp affixed by the goldsmiths upon articles made of gold or silver as an evidence of genuineness, and hence used to signify any mark of genuineness. "The power of free alienation is the 'hall-mark' of a fee-simple absolute." Rand. Em. Dom. § 206.

HALLAGE. A toll or license fee on goods vended in a hall. Jac. L. Dict.; 6 Co. 62.

A toll due to the lord of a market or fair, on commodities vended in the common hall. Cowell.

HALLAZCO. In Spanish Law. The finding and taking possession of something which previously had no owner, and which thus becomes the property of the first occupant. Las Partidas, 3. 5. 28, 5. 48. 49, 5. 20. 50.

HALLMOOT. See HALIMOTE.

HALLUCINATION. In Medical Jurisprudence. The perception by any of the senses of an object which has no existence. The conscious recognition of a sensation of sight, hearing, feeling, taste, or smell which is not due to any impulse received by the perceptive apparatus from without, but arises within the perceptive apparatus itself. A false perception in contradistinction to a delusion or false belief. Wood, Am. Text-Book of Med.

An error, a blunder, a mistake, a fallacy; and when used in describing the condition of a person, does not necessarily carry an imputation of insanity. Foster's Ex'rs v. Dickerson, 64 Vt. 233, 24 Atl. 253.

An instance is given of a temporary hallucination in the celebrated Ben Jonson, the poet. He told a friend of his that he had spent many a night in looking at his great toe, about which he had seen Turks and Tartars, Romans and Carthaginians, fight in his imagination. 1 Collin. Lun. 34. If, instead of being temporary, this affection of his mind had been permanent, he would doubtless have been considered insane. See, on the subject of spectral illusions, Hibber, Alderson, and Farrar's Essays; Scott on Demonology, etc.; 3 Bostock. Physiology 91, 161; 1 Esquirol, Maladies Mentales 159. See IN-SANITY.

HALYWERFOLK. Those who held by the service of guarding and repairing a church or sepulchre, and were excused from feudal services. Hist. Dunelm. apud Whar-toni Ang. Sax. pt. 1, p. 749. Especially in the county of Durham, those who held by service of defending the corpse of St. Cuthbert. Jacob, Law Dict.

HAM. A place of dwelling; a homeclose; a little narrow meadow. Blount. A house or little village. Cowell.

HAMA. A hook; an engine with which a house on fire is pulled down. Yel. 60. A piece of land.

HAMBLING, or HAMELING. Expeditation (q. v.).

HAMEL, HAMELETA, or HAMLETA. A hamlet.

HAMESUCKEN. This term was formerly used in England instead of the modern term burglary; 4 Bla. Com. 223. See HAMSOCKEN.

But in Hale's Pleas of the Crown it is said, "The common genus of offences that comes under the name of hamesucken is that which is usually called house-breaking; which sometimes comes under the common appellation of burglary, whether committed in the day or night to the intent to commit felony; so that house-breaking of this kind is of two natures." 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 547; Com. v. Hope, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 4.

HAMFARE. This word by some is said to signify the freedom of a man's house; but Cowell seems to think that it signifies the breach of peace in a house. Holthouse.

HAMLET. A small village; a part or member of a vill. It is the diminutive of ham, a village. Cowell.

HAMMA. A close joining to a house; a croft; a little meadow. Cowell.

HAMMER. Used in connection with auction sales; as to bring or come to the hammer, to sell or be sold at auction. Cent. Dict.

HAMSOEN (Saxon from ham, house, sockne, liberty, immunity). The word is variously spelled hamsoca, hamsocna, hamsucken, hamesaken. Vinogradoff (Engl. Soc. 111) gives it as hamsocn. The right of security and privacy in a man's house. Du Cange. The breach of this privilege by a forcible entry of a house is breach of the peace; Auc. Laws & Inst. of Eng. Gloss.; Du Cange; Bracton, lib. 3, tr. 2, c. 2, § 3. The right to entertain jurisdiction of the offence. Spelman; Du Cange. Immunity from punishment for such offence, id.; Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, § 18. An insult offered in one's own house (insultus factus in domo). Brompton, p. 957; Du Cange.

Among the Anglo-Saxons it was breaking into a house; perhaps the time of the day was not an element. See 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 293; 2 Poll. & Maitl. 492.

HANAPER. A hamper or basket in which were kept the writs of the court of chancery relating to the business of a subject, and their returns; 5 & 6 Vict. c. 113; 10 Ric. II. c. 1; equivalent to the Roman fiscus. According to Spelman, the fees accruing on writs, etc., were there kept; Du Cange; 3 Bla. Com. 49. The office where it was kept was called the Hanaper office. It survives in Ireland.

HAND. A measure of length, four inches long: used in ascertaining the height of horses.

In legal parlance, handwriting or written signature, as "witness my hand," etc. Salazar v. Taylor, 18 Colo. 538, 33 Pac. 369; 10 Mod. 103.

HAND-BILL. A written or printed notice displayed to inform those concerned of something to be done.

HAND-BOROW (from hand, and Saxon borow, a pledge). Nine of a decennary or friborg (q. v.) were so called, being inferior to the tenth or head borow,—a decenna or friborga being ten freemen or frankpledges, who were mutually sureties for each other to the king for any damage. Du Cange, Friborg, Head-borow.

HANDCUFFS. See FETTERS.

HAND DOWN. To announce or file an opinion in a cause. Used originally and properly of the opinions of appellate courts transmitted to the court below; but in later usage the term is employed more generally, but inaccurately, with reference to any decision by a court upon a case or point reserved for consideration.

HAND-FASTING. Betrothment.

HAND-GRITH. Peace or protection given by the king with his own hand; used in the laws of Henry I. Toulmin; Cowell; Moz. & W.; Stat. Hen. I. c. 13.

HAND-HABENDE. In Saxon Law. One having a thing in his hand; that is, a thief found having the stolen goods in his possession,—latro manifestus of the civil law. See Laws of Hen. I. c. 59; Laws of Athelstane § 6; Fleta, lib. 1, c. 38, § 1; Britton p. 72; Du Cange, Handhabenda.

Jurisdiction to try such thief. Id.

See BACK-BERENDE.

HAND MONEY. Earnest (q. v.) when it is in cash.

HANDSALE. Anciently, among all the northern nations, shaking of hands was held necessary to bind a bargain,—a custom still retained in verbal contracts: a sale thus made was called handsale, venditio per mutuum manuum complexionem. In process of time the same word was used to signify the price or earnest which was given immediately after the shaking of hands, or instead thereof. In some parts of the country it is usual to speak of hand-money as the part of the consideration paid or to be paid at the execution of a contract of sale. See 2 Bla. Com. 448; Heineccius, de Antiquo Jure Germanico, lib. 2, § 335; Toullier, liv. 3, t. 3, c. 2, n. 33; EARNEST.

HANDSEL. Earnest; handsale (q. v.).

HANDWRITING. Anything written by a person. The manner in which a person writes, including the formation of the characters, the separation of the words, and other features distinguishing the written matter, as a mechanical result, from the writing of other persons.

That branch of the law of evidence which treats of handwriting is largely concerned with the determination of the genuineness or falsity of signatures. As to what constitutes a writing, generally, see that title, and, as to writing as required by the statutes of wills, see WILL.

With respect to proof of handwriting, a signature by a person unable to write, or, as it has been held, by one who can write, may be by mark, which is proved as the handwriting would be in case of a written signature. See MARK. The law of evidence as to handwriting applies also where it is in a disguised hand; 4 Esp. 117; Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 295, 52 Am. Dec. 711; Lyon v. Lyman, 9 Conn. 55; or when a cipher is used; Com. v. Nefus, 135 Mass. 533.

One's own testimony is not the best evidence on this subject, and the writer need not be called; 2 Camp. 508; Ainsworth v. Greenlee, 8 N. C. 190; Lefferts v. State, 49 N. J. L. 26, 6 Atl. 521. See Cherritree v. Roggen, 67 Barb. (N. Y.) 124. Whether it is evidence at all is a question confused by the general disqualification of parties who were naturally in most cases those to whom the question would arise, and it has been of late assumed by many writers that since the statutes allowing parties to be witnesses they may be such, for this as well as any other purpose. See Hess v. State, 5 Ohio 5, 22 Am. Dec. 767; with note citing cases.

The handwriting of attesting witnesses to an instrument more than thirty years old need not be proved; Stark, Ev. Sharsw. ed. 521; so also of unattested documents taken from proper depositaries; 7 East 279; Goodwin v. Jack, 62 Me. 414. The extrajudicial admissions of a party as to his handwriting are evidence to prove the same, though not of a very satisfactory nature; Whart. Ev. 705.

The rule in Steph. Dig. Evid. art. 31, was adopted in Redding v. Redding's Estate, 69 Vt. 500, 38 Atl. 230, as follows: One is deemed to be acquainted with the handwriting of another person when (1) he has seen him write, though but once and then only his name; or (2) when he has received letters or other documents purporting to be written by that person in answer to letters or other documents written by the witness or under his authority and addressed to him; or (3) when he has seen letters or other documents purporting to be that person's handwriting, and has afterward personally communicated with him concerning their contents, or has acted upon them as his, he knowing thereof and acquiescing therein; or (4) when the witness has so adopted them into business transactions as to induce a reasonable presumption and belief of their genuineness; or (5) when, in the ordinary course of business, documents purporting to be written or signed by that person have been habitually submitted to the witness.

That it is enough if the witness has seen the party write only once, see Pepper v. Barnett, 22 Gratt. (Va.) 405; Rideout v. Newton, 17 N. H. 71; Com. v. Nefus, 135 Mass. 533; McNair v. Com., 26 Pa. 388; Massey v. Bank, 104 Ill. 327; Riggs v. Powell, 142 Ill. 453, 32 N. E. 482; Worth v. McConnell, 42 Mich. 473, 4 N. W. 198; 8 C. & P. 380. But it is held that "it is not enough that he (the witness) had seen the person write but once, and then under circumstances showing that the attention of the witness was not specially directed to the peculiarities of the penmanship"; U. S. v. Crow, 1 Bond 51, Fed. Cas. No. 14,895; People v. Corey, 148 N. Y. 476, 42 N. E. 1066.

Any person who has seen one write and has acquired a standard in his own mind of the general character of the writing is competent to testify as to his belief of the genuineness of a writing; Succession of Morvant, 45 La. Ann. 207, 12 South. 349. Merely seeing the party write his surname once was held insufficient to warrant testifying to the full signature; 2 Stark. 164; but seeing the surname written several times was sufficient; Mood. & M. 39. See Brachmann v. Hall, 1 Disney (Ohio) 539; Smith v. Walton, 8 Gill (Md.) 77. It is sufficient although the witness never saw the person write before the date of the paper in question; Keith v. Lothrop, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 453; or although he had not seen him write for many years before the trial; Edelen v. Gough, 8 Gill (Md.) 87 (three years); Maslin v. Thomas, 8 Gill (Md.) 18 (six years); 8 Scott 384 (ten years); 25 How. St. Tr. 71 (nineteen years); Willson v. Betts, 4 Denio (N. Y.) 201 (sixty-three years); but not that he has seen writing that is done with reference to his testifying at the trial either at or before it; Reese v. Reese, 90 Pa. 89, 35 Am. Rep. 634; Whitmore v. Corey, 16 N. J. L. 267; with this exception the circumstances under which the witness has seen the party write affect his credit, not his competency; Jones, Ev. § 559; Hammond v. Varian, 54 N. Y. 398; McNair v. Com., 26 Pa. 388; Com. v. Nefus, 135 Mass. 533. Where the witness had seen an alleged testator write twice thirty-two years before, when the witness was then ten years old, and once twenty-three years before trial, he was undoubtedly within the rule. It is not possible to fix any arbitrary limit of time within which the witness must have seen the writing done; much must always depend on his intelligence, his habit of observation of such matters, the apparent strength and confidence of his memory, etc., which must be passed upon in the first instance by the trial judge; Wilson v. Van Leer, 127 Pa. 371, 17 Atl. 1097, 14 Am. St. Rep. 854.

As to the second method it is not necessary that the witness has seen the party write, as such personal acquaintance may be acquired by having seen papers purporting to be genuine and which have been acknowledged to be such by the writer; Berg v. Peterson, 49 Minn. 420, 52 N. W. 37; Stoddard v. Hill, 38 S. C. 385, 17 S. E. 138; Williams v. Deen, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 575, 24 S. W. 536; Hammond v. Varian, 54 N. Y. 398; Cabarga v. Seeger, 17 Pa. 514; Pierce v. De Long, 45 Ill. App. 462; but this is not always sufficient; McKeone v. Barnes, 108 Mass. 344. The witness is qualified, as such, by knowledge derived from correspondence, including letters received from a person in answer to those written and addressed to him; Chaffee v. Taylor, 3 Allen (Mass.) 598; Pearson v. McDaniel, 62 Ga. 100; McKonkey v. Gaylord, 46 N. C. 94; Thomas v. State, 103 Ind. 419, 2 N. E. 808; Southern Exp. Co. v. Thornton, 41 Miss. 216; Violet v. Rose, 39 Neb. 660, 58 N. W. 216; Campbell v. Iron Co., 83 Ala. 351, 3 South. 369; Clark v. Freeman, 25 Pa. 133; Empire Mfg. Co. of Grand Rapids v. Stuart, 46 Mich. 482, 9 N. W. 527; Cunningham v. Bank, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 557; 5 A. & E. 740; but the mere receipt of letters is insufficient to prove that they were written by the person purporting to sign them; White Sewing Mach. Co. v. Gordon, 124 Ind. 495, 24 N. E. 1053, 19 Am. St. Rep. 109; there must be a ratification or recognition; Cunningham v. Bank, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 557; Nunes v. Perry, 113 Mass. 274; Guyette v. Town of Bolton, 46 Vt. 228; Putnam v. Wadley, 40 Ill. 346; Sartor v. Bolinger, 59 Tex. 411; contra, 2 C. & K. 744; 2 C. & P. 21; but such knowledge may be gained in the ordinary course of business, as by seeing documents written by the person; Cody v. Conly, 27 Gratt. (Va.) 313; Armstrong v. Fargo, 8 Hun (N. Y.) 175; Ennor v. Hodson, 28 Ill. App. 445; and only seeing letters addressed to strangers purporting to be those of the person in question; Nunes v. Perry, 113 Mass. 275; Philadelphia & W. C. R. Co. v. Hickman, 28 Pa. 318. Such knowledge may be that of a clerk who sees correspondence or documents; Rogers v. Ritter, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 317, 20 L. Ed. 417; President, etc., of Amherst Bank v. Root, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 522; 5 C. & P. 213; Reyburn v. Belotti, 10 Mo. 597; a clerk in a bank; Snell v. Bray, 56 Wis. 156, 14 N. W. 14; Johnson v. State, 35 Ala. 370; a servant who has taken his master's letters to the post; 5 A. & E. 740; or a public officer who has seen many official documents filed in his office, signed by a justice, may prove his signature; Sill v. Reese, 47 Cal. 294; President, etc., of Anherst Bank v. Root, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 522; Rogers v. Ritter, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 317, 20 L. Ed. 417. The weight of the testimony will depend on the means of knowledge; U. S. v. Gleason, 37 Fed. 331. The witness must have an opinion; Fash v. Blake, 38 Ill. 363; and may give it if the handwriting is disguised; Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 301, 51 Am. Dec. 711; Burnham v. Ayer, 36 N. H. 182; but positive knowledge or certainty is not necessary; 8 Ves. 474; Egan v. Murray, 80 Ia. 180, 45 N. W. 563; Magee v. Osborn, 32 N. Y. 669; State v. Minton, 116 Mo. 605, 22 S. W. 808; he need not swear to belief, an opinion is sufficient; Clark v. Freeman, 25 Pa. 133; Fash v. Blake, 38 Ill. 363. A witness has been permitted to testify that the signature was like the writing of the party whose signature it is alleged to be; 4 Esp. 37. An opinion of a witness cannot be based in part upon knowledge of and familiarity with the legal attainments, the style and composition of the alleged writer of the instrument in question; Throckmorton v. Holt, 180 U. S. 552, 21 Sup. Ct. 474, 45 L. Ed. 663.

The witness in such cases need not be an expert; Moons' Adm'r v. Crowder, 72 Ala. 79; Williams v. Deen, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 575, 24 S. W. 536; or familiar with the person's handwriting generally if he is so with the signature; Com. v. Williams, 105 Mass. 62; as, e. g. he may prove the signature of a firm, when unacquainted with the handwriting of any partner; where he testifies that in his opinion, the handwriting was the same as that of many notes he had presented to the firm, and which had been paid by them; Gordon v. Price, 32 N. C. 385.

A signature upon an ancient writing may be proved by a witness who has become familiar with it by the inspection of other authentic ancient documents on which the same signature appeared; McCreary v. Coggeshall, 74 S. C. 42, 53 S. E. 978, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 433, 7 Ann. Cas. 693; Sill v. Reese, 47 Cal. 294; U. S. v. Ortiz, 176 U. S. 422, 20 Sup. Ct. 466, 44 L. Ed. 529; Sweigart v. Richards, 8 Pa. 436. If a witness says that he knows a party's handwriting, he is prima facie competent to testify with respect to it and, if not cross-examined, his knowledge is taken to be admitted; Whittier v. Gould, 8 Watts (Pa.) 485; Moody v. Rowell, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 490, 28 Am. Dec. 317; Goodhue v. Bartlett, 5 McLean 186, Fed. Cas. No. 5,538; contra, Pate v. People, 3 Gilman (Ill.) 644; McCracken v. West, 17 Ohio 16; he may be cross-examined as to the extent of his knowledge; Herrick v. Swomley, 56 Md. 439; which goes to the weight of his testimony; Moons' Adm'r v. Crowder, 72 Ala. 79. But if want of knowledge appear; Guyette v. Town of Bolton, 46 Vt. 228; Arthur v. Arthur, 38 Kan. 691, 17 Pac. 187; Allen v. State, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 367; or his testimony is insufficient; Mapes v. Leal's Heirs, 27 Tex. 345; Cook v. Smith, 30 N. J. L. 387; 3 V. & B. 172; it may be rejected. But see Krise v. Neason, 66 Pa. 253. A witness may testify as to handwriting who cannot read or write himself; Foye v. Patch, 132 Mass. 105.

A witness may be asked if he would act upon the signature which he testifies to as genuine; Holmes v. Goldsmith, 147 U. S. 150, 13 Sup. Ct. 288, 37 L. Ed. 118; contra, Bank of Com. v. Mudgett, 44 N. Y. 514; his knowledge cannot be tested by irrelevant papers; Bacon v. Williams, 13 Gray (Mass.) 525; 11 A. & E. 322; Rose v. Nat. Bank, 91 Mo. 399, 3 S. W. 876, 60 Am. Rep. 258; Massey v. Bank, 104 Ill. 327; Bank of Com. v. Mudgett, 44 N. Y. 514. But see 2 M. & R. 536; Page v. Homans, 14 Me. 478; Kirksey v. Kirksey, 41 Ala. 626; 1 Whart. Ev. § 10. But he may refresh his memory by reference to papers from which his knowledge is derived; Nat. Bank of Chester County v. Armstrong, 66 Md. 113, 6 Atl. 584, 59 Am. Rep. 156; McNair v. Com., 26 Pa. 388; Redfords v. Peggy, 6 Rand. (Va.) 316.

The third method of proving handwriting is what is termed comparison. It is defined to be a mode of deducing evidence of the authenticity of a written instrument, by showing the likeness of the handwriting to that of another instrument proved to be that of the party whom it is sought to establish as the author of the instrument in question. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 578.

Another much cited definition is "when other witnesses have proved the paper to be the handwriting of a party, and then the witness on the stand is desired to take the two papers in hand, compare them, and say whether or not they are the same handwriting; the witness collects all his knowledge from comparison only; he knows nothing of himself; he has not seen the party write nor held any correspondence with him;" Com. v. Smith, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 571.

But more briefly, though with great precision, Starkie says: "By comparison is meant a comparison by the juxtaposition of two writings in order, by such comparison, to ascertain whether both were written by the same person." Stark. Ev. Metc. ed. pt. 4, 654.

Scarcely any title of the law, certainly none in the law of evidence, has given rise to more discussion in England and in this country and the "confusion, obscurity, and contradiction" which is to be observed in the cases quite justifies the criticism of Woodward, J., in Travis v. Brown, 43 Pa. 9, 82 Am. Dec. 540, that much of the difficulty of the subject has arisen from the failure of judges to observe the essential rule "that terms be first correctly defined and then always used in the defined sense." A very pregnant cause of the confusion was the failure to preserve the distinction between comparison properly defined and the use of admittedly genuine signatures merely to enable a witness to refresh the memory as to his ideal standard formed by previous knowledge of the handwriting of the person whose signature was in issue. The latter process is in no sense a proper application of the term comparison as understood in the law of evidence, though often so used by judges. It is true, as said by Patteson, J., in Doe v. Suckermore, 5 A. & E. 703 (and repeated in almost the same words by Judge Woodward in the case just cited), that all evidence of handwriting, except in the single instance where the witness saw the document written, is in its nature, comparison of hands. It is the belief which the witness entertains, upon comparing the writing in question with the exemplar in his mind derived from some previous knowledge. This language aptly expresses the idea which was in the mind of its author, but it has been quoted time and again by judges who apparently did not have clearly in mind the distinction which it was intended to emphasize and has contributed, perhaps, not a little to the continued misuse of the word comparison in this connection. Where a witness testifies from the comparison (used in what might be termed the colloquial sense referred to by Justice Patteson) of the writing in question with a mental standard derived from previous knowledge of the handwriting, he is simply stating his opinion, not in the sense of opinion evidence, but based upon his own knowledge. When a witness examines the writing in question and, placing it in juxtaposition with other writings proved to be genuine, having no previous knowledge, and testifies to his belief from the similitude, or want of it, it is properly and technically, evidence by comparison of hands. This distinction is stated in some very early cases; Peake, N. P. C. 20; 21 How. St. Tr. 810; Rex v. Tandy, cited McNally, Ev. 409. It is in this latter technical sense that the phrase comparison of hands is here used and the cases properly relating to the subject apply to the two questions: (1) whether such comparison may be made by the jury, genuine writings, otherwise irrelevant, being admitted for that purpose; (2) whether it may be made by expert witnesses and their conclusions proved for the information of the jury.

Such evidence was admissible in the Roman law; 1 Whart. Ev. § 711, citing De Prob. de Lit. Comp. L. 20, c. iv. 21; Nov. 49, cap. 2; and also under the Code Napoleon, by three sworn experts appointed by the court, or agreed upon, and the writings must be executed before a notary or admitted; Gen. Code Proc. pt. 1, l. 2, tit. 10, s. 200.

At common law the genuineness of a contested writing could not be proved by comparison, by a witness, of such writing with other writings acknowledged to be genuine; 7 C. & P. 548, 595; 5 A. & E. 703. It was otherwise in the ecclesiastical courts; id.; 1 Phil. 78. See 2 Addams 53, 79, 91; 1 id. 162, 214, 216. If, however, a paper admitted to contain the handwriting of the party is in evidence for some other purpose, the signature or paper in question may be compared with it by the jury with or without the aid of experts; Tucker v. Kellogg, 8 Utah 11, 28 Pac. 870; State v. McBride, 30 Utah 422, 85 Pac. 440, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 557, 8 Ann. Cas. 1030; Second Nat. Bank of Reading v. Wentzel, 151 Pa. 142, 24 Atl. 1087; Ratliff v. Ratliff, 131 N. C. 425, 42 S. E. 887, 63 L. R. A. 963.

Ancient writings could be proved by comparison; 14 East 327, n. a; 10 Cl. & F. 193; 2 Il. L. Cas. 534, 557. The right of the jury to make comparisons, though denied by Lord Kenyon when the jurors were illiterate; Peake, N. P. C. 20; was allowed by him when the jury were considered competent; id. 27; and it was afterwards fully established; 1 Cr. & J. 47; 4 C. & P. 267. Comparison by experts, after some fluctuation, it was settled could not be made; 5 C. & P. 196; 5 A. & E. 703.

It had required infinite discussion to settle the rule of these cases. Something called comparison was known in very early cases; 10 How. St. Tr. 312; 12 id. 183, 306; 12 Mod. 72; but at this period the terms comparison of hand and similitude of hands were used to describe every method of the proof of writing except by one who had seen the document written. It is therefore necessary that the cases should be critically reviewed with reference to the varied meaning with which these terms were employed at different periods. This work has been very well done by Professor John H. Wigmore in 30 Am. L. Rev. 481. The conclusion reached is thus stated: "(1) That the classes of witnesses who may testify to handwriting have increased in number by successive enlargements; (2) that the whole meaning of 'comparison of hands' has changed; (3) that the mere process of juxtaposition coram judicio, whether for witness or for the jury, was historically orthodox and unquestionable; and (4) that the opposite fates, at common law, of juxtaposition by experts and juxtaposition by jury—exclusion for the former but sanction (limited) for the latter—were due simply to the fact that the former had never been attempted till the 1800s and was merely prevented from coming into existence, while the latter had always existed and was thus able to survive the attempts on its life." The entire article should be referred to in any examination of this subject, as, on the whole, throwing new light upon it from a point of view not elsewhere so well treated. It may be added that the historical development of the English rule has not lost its importance by reason of its being superseded in England by statute. It is of primary importance in considering the decisions in those American jurisdictions which adhere to the old rule, and scarcely less so in properly estimating those in the jurisdictions which have abandoned it. See infra.

The question was set at rest in England by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, s. 27, authorizing comparison with a writing proved to the satisfaction of the judge to be genuine to be made by witnesses, and such writings to be submitted to the court and jury as evidence of the genuineness, or otherwise, of the writing in dispute. Under this act the jury may make comparison with papers relevant or not; 1 F. & F. 270; 2 id. 24; 4 id. 490. The court must determine the genuineness of the document offered for comparison and its decision is appealable; 30 L. T. 223.

The rule of the English courts (prior to this statute) forbidding the admission of documents irrelevant to the matter in issue for the sole purpose of comparison is known as the English rule, and is so referred to by American courts, including those which have and those which have not adopted it.

The objections to permitting comparison of the disputed paper with others conceded to be genuine but admitted for the sole purpose of comparison, which led to the adoption of the English rule, have been thus summarized: "First, that the writings offered for the purpose of comparison with the documents in question might be spurious, and consequently that, before any comparison between them and it could be instituted, a collateral issue must be tried to determine their genuineness. Nor is this all,—if it were competent to prove the genuineness of the main document by comparison with others, it must be equally so to prove that of the latter by comparison with fresh ones; and so the inquiry might go on ad infinitum, to the great distraction of the attention of the jury and delay in the administration of justice. Secondly, that the specimens might not be fairly selected. Thirdly, that the persons composing the jury might be unable to read, and consequently be unable to institute such comparison." Best, Ev. § 238.

The rule was followed, generally, by the federal courts. It was specifically adopted by the supreme court; Moore v. U. S., 91 U. S. 270, 23 L. Ed. 346; Williams v. Conger, 125 U. S. 397, 8 Sup. Ct. 933, 31 L. Ed. 778; Hickory v. U. S., 151 U. S. 303, 14 Sup. Ct. 334, 38 L. Ed. 170; Strother v. Lucas, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 763, 8 L. Ed. 573. In the circuit and district court while the rule of the supreme court was generally followed; Green v. Terwilliger, 56 Fed. 384; there is opportunity for some variation, growing out of the frequent necessity in those courts for the administration of local law. Comparison was allowed by both jury and experts in U. S. v. Chamberlain, 12 Blatchf. 390, Fed. Cas. No. 14,778; U. S. v. Molloy, 31 Fed. 19; U. S. v. Pendergast, 32 Fed. 198; contra, U. S. v. Jones, 10 Fed. 469. No comparison was permitted by experts in Murati v. Luciani, 1 Baldw. 49, Fed. Cas. No. 9,936; U. S. v. Craig, 4 Wash. C. C. 729, Fed. Cas. No. 14,883; but it was allowed by the jury with papers otherwise in evidence; Turner v. Hand, 3 Wall. Jr. 88, 115, Fed. Cas. No. 14,257; and with papers offered for comparison, merely; Smith v. Fenner, 1 Gall. 170, Fed. Cas. No. 13,046. In the fourth circuit the supreme court rule was directly followed; U. S. v. McMillan, 29 Fed. 247.

The Act of Congress of Feb. 26, 1913, provides that "where the genuineness of the handwriting of any person may be involved, any admitted or proved handwriting of such person shall be competent evidence as a basis for comparison by witnesses, or by the jury, court or officer conducting such proceeding, to prove or disprove such genuineness."

Many of the state courts have also followed the old English rule, and while permitting comparison by the jury, with papers in evidence in the case, they exclude irrelevant papers; Gibson v. Furniture Co., 96 Ala. 357, 11 South. 365; Miller v. Jones, 32 Ark. 337; Goodale v. West, 5 Cal. 340; Bevan v. Bank, 142 Ill. 302, 31 N. E. 679 (contra, Northfield Farmers' Tp. Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Sweet, 46 Ill. App. 598; see Frank v. Taubman, 31 Ill. App. 592; Rogers v. Tyley, 144 Ill. 652, 32 N. E. 393); Stitzel v. Miller, 250 Ill. 72, 95 N. E. 53, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1004, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 412 (with or without expert testimony); Wilson v. Barnard, 10 Ga. App. 98, 72 S. E. 943; Brin v. Gale (Tex.) 135 S. W. 1133; Hawkins v. Grimes, 13 B. Monr. (Ky.) 257 (see also Fee v. Taylor, 83 Ky. 259); Herrick v. Swomley, 56 Md. 439 (a genuine and disputed signature on the same page are not subject to comparison by the jury; Williams v. Drexel, 14 Md. 566); Worth v. McConnell, 42 Mich. 473, 4 N. W. 198; People v. Parker, 67 Mich. 222, 34 N. W. 720, 11 Am. St. Rep. 578 (but in a later case irrelevant papers were admitted which had been shown to the party, denying the signature in dispute, on cross-examination; the court expressly stating that the case was different; Dietz v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 69 Mich. 287, 37 N. W. 220); Davis v. Fredericks, 3 Mont. 262; Staab v. Jaramillo, 3 N. M. 33, 1 Pac. 170; Territory v. O'Hara, 1 N. D. 30, 44 N. W. 1003; Kinney v. Flynn, 2 R. I. 319; Clay v. Alderson's Adm'r, 10 W. Va. 49; Collins v. Ball, Hutchings & Co., 82 Tex. 259, 17 S. W. 614, 27 Am. St. Rep. 877; but papers otherwise in the case must be admitted or proved to be genuine; State v. Henderson, 29 W. Va. 147, 1 S. E. 225.

It is held that irrelevant papers are not admissible for comparison except when conceded by the opposite party to be genuine, or when he is estopped to deny the genuineness, or when for any reason, not collateral, issue can be raised; Cochrane v. Elevator Co., 20 N. D. 169, 127 N. W. 725.

In some if not all of the states in which the subject is now regulated by statute the prior decisions were in support of this rule; McCafferty v. Heritage, 5 Houst. (Del.) 220; First Nat. Bank of Omaha v. Llerman, 5 Neb. 247 (see Grand Island Banking Co. v. Shoemaker, 31 Neb. 124, 47 N. W. 696); Miles v. Loomis, 75 N. Y. 288, 31 Am. Rep. 470; Peck v. Callaghan, 95 N. Y. 73; Clark v. Rhodes, 2 Heisk. (Tenn.) 206; Wright v. Hesse, 3 Baxt. (Tenn.) 42 (but where no objection was interposed signatures admitted to be genuine were given to the jury for comparison; Powers v. McKenzie, 90 Tenn. 167, 16 S. W. 559); Hazleton v. Bank, 32 Wis. 34.

In some states the decisions indicate a tendency to allow comparison by the jury and experts where the genuineness is not denied or is conceded or the party is estopped to deny it. In Missouri earlier decisions excluded irrelevant papers but permitted comparison both by jury and experts with papers otherwise in the case; Dow's Ex'r v. Spenny's Ex'r, 29 Mo. 386; Springer v. Hall, 83 Mo. 693, 53 Am. Rep. 598; and later ones permitted it with other papers as to which no collateral issue could be raised, as if the genuineness was proved or the party was estopped to deny it or if they belonged to the witness who was acquainted with the handwriting in dispute; Lachance v. Loeblein, 15 Mo. App. 460; State v. Clinton, 67 Mo. 380, 29 Am. Rep. 506 (and see Rose v. Bank, 91 Mo. 399, 3 S. W. 876, 60 Am. Rep. 258); and in North Carolina comparison by the jury was not permitted even with papers in the case; Pope v. Askew, 23 N. C. 16, 35 Am. Dec. 729; Otey v. Hoyt, 48 N. C. 407; Fulier v. Fox, 101 N. C. 119, 7 S. E. 589, 9 Am. St. Rep. 27; but it has been allowed by experts with papers admitted to be genuine and otherwise in evidence; Yates v. Yates, 76 N. C. 142; and see State v. De Graff, 113 N. C. 688, 18 S. E. 507.

In Indiana the decisions are conflicting but comparisons are allowed, in most cases both by jury and experts, if the paper is genuine, otherwise by experts alone; Chance v. Road Co., 32 Ind. 472. The later cases allowed comparison by experts as well as by the jury; Swales v. Grubbs, 126 Ind. 106, 25 N. E. 877.

In many states comparison is permitted with genuine documents, without respect to relevancy; and usually when it is allowed at all it may be made by experts as well as by the jury.

There has, however, been some indisposition to permit experts to make the comparison. It has been permitted by the jury and experts; Lyon v. Lyman, 9 Conn. 55; State v. Zimmerman, 47 Kan. 242, 27 Pac. 999; Moody v. Rowell, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 490, 28 Am. Dec. 317; Morrison v. Porter, 35 Minn. 425, 29 N. W. 54, 59 Am. Rep. 331; Koons v. State, 36 Ohio St. 195; Tucker v. Kellogg, 8 Utah 11, 28 Pac. 870; in some cases it has been allowed by the jury; Page v. Homans, 14 Me. 482; Com. v. Andrews, 143 Mass. 23, 8 N. E. 643; Gifford v. Ford, 5 Vt. 532; Carter v. Jackson, 58 N. H. 156; and in others by experts; Woodman v. Dana, 52 Me. 9; Demeritt v. Randall, 116 Mass. 331; Wilson v. Beauchamp, 50 Miss. 24; State v. Hastings, 53 N. H. 452; State v. Clark, 54 N. H. 456 (after much fluctuation); Hanriot v. Sherwood, 82 Va. 1; Marshall v. Hancock, 80 Cal. 82, 22 Pac. 61; but it was not permitted with a press copy of a disputed writing, though scumble that the original might have been used; Spottiswood v. Weir, 66 Cal. 525, 6 Pac. 381. The signatures used for comparison must be genuine; Tyler v. Todd, 36 Conn. 218.

In Pennsylvania and South Carolina until the act passed in the former state, infra, the decisions were substantially in accord. When there was conflicting direct evidence, only the jury might make comparison with papers duly proved; Farmers' Bank of Lancaster v. Whitehill, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 110; Rockey's Estate, 155 Pa. 453, 26 Atl. 656; Robertson v. Millar, 1 McMull. (S. C.) 120; Richardson v. Johnson, 3 Brev. (S. C.) 51. The evidence of genuineness of a paper offered for comparison must be conclusive; Cohen v. Teller, 93 Pa. 123; and comparison could only be made by witnesses acquainted with the party's writing; Philadelphia & W. C. R. Co. v. Hickman, 28 Pa. 318. In criminal cases expert testimony is allowed; Pennsylvania act of 1860, March 31, § 55, P. L. 284.

A statute of Pennsylvania (1895, May 15, P. L. 69), codifying the law on this subject, enacts, (1) That the opinion of those acquainted with the handwriting of the supposed writer, and of experts, shall be deemed relevant; (2) That experts may compare the disputed writing with others admitted or proved to the judge's satisfaction to be genuine; (3) That experts may be required by counsel to state in full the ground of their opinions; (4) That the question shall still be one entirely for the jury; and (5) That the act shall apply to all courts and all persons having authority to receive evidence.

In several states, including some in which the courts had adhered to the English rule, the question has been settled by statute permitting the comparison of handwriting. Among the states which have legislated upon the subject are California, Delaware, Georgia, Iowa, Louisiana, Nebraska, New Jersey, New York, Tennessee, Wisconsin, and Pennsylvania as above stated. The most common form of such statutes is to authorize comparison of a disputed writing with any writing proved to the court to be genuine, to be made by a witness and to permit the submission of such writings and evidence of witnesses respecting the same, to the court and jury as evidence of the genuineness or otherwise of the writing in dispute. The tendency in the United States is in the direction of the rule established under these statutes. It is not within the present purpose to state all the decisions or to indicate the exact condition of the law in the several states.

Under a statute providing that "evidence respecting the handwriting may also be given by comparison, made by a witness skilled in such matters, or the jury, with writings admitted or treated as genuine, by the party against whom the evidence is offered" papers not otherwise competent are admissible for the purpose of enabling the jury to make a comparison; Holmes v. Goldsmith, 147 U. S. 150, 13 Sup. Ct. 288, 37 L. Ed. 118; Green v. Terwilliger, 56 Fed. 384.

Prior to the statute of 17 and 18 Vict. already cited, the English rule as to comparison was subject to certain exceptions which have been said to be as well settled as the rule itself; Bradley, J., in Moore v. U. S., 91 U. S. 270, 23 L. Ed. 346; one of these was the admission of ancient writings; see supra; the other is that if a paper admitted to be in the handwriting of the person in question is in evidence for some other purpose in the cause, the signature in question may be compared with it by the jury. This is a settled rule of the American courts, including those which adhere to the English rule against comparison as well as those which, either under statute or decision, admit it; id.; Miles v. Loomis, 75 N. Y. 288, 31 Am. Rep. 470; State v. De Graff, 113 N. C. 688, 18 S. E. 507; Swales v. Grubbs, 126 Ind. 106, 25 N. E. 877; Rogers v. Tyley, 144 Ill. 652, 32 N. E. 393; Johnston Harvester Co. v. Miller, 72 Mich. 265, 40 N. W. 429, 16 Am. St. Rep. 536; State v. Farrington, 90 Ia. 673, 57 N. W. 606; Green v. Terwilliger, 56 Fed. 384; Williams v. Conger, 125 U. S. 397, 414, 8 Sup. Ct. 933, 31 L. Ed. 778; Hickory v. U. S., 151 U. S. 303, 14 Sup. Ct. 334, 38 L. Ed. 170.

A writing specially prepared for the purpose of comparison is inadmissible on a question of genuineness; Hickory v. U. S., 151 U. S. 303, 14 Sup. Ct. 334, 38 L. Ed. 170. A party cannot himself write specimens for the instruction of witnesses; Whart. Ev. § 715; nor can he make test writings to be used for a comparison of hands; King v. Donahue, 110 Mass. 155, 14 Am. Rep. 589; Gulzoni v. Tyler, 64 Cal. 334, 30 Pac. 981; Hickory v. U. S., 151 U. S. 303, 14 Sup. Ct. 334, 38 L. Ed. 170.

In England, by statute, a person whose handwriting is in dispute, may be called upon by the judge to write in his presence, and such writing may be compared with the writing in question; Whart. Ev. § 706. See 4 F. & F. 490; Chandler v. Le Barron, 45 Me. 534, contra, Smith v. King, 62 Conn. 515, 26 Atl. 1059.

On cross-examination, other writings not in the case may be shown to the witness, and he may be asked whether they are in the handwriting of the party in question; if so declared by the witness, they may be shown not to be genuine and given to the jury for comparison; Whart. Ev. § 710; see 11 Ad. & E. 322.

Experts may be permitted to testify as to whether handwriting is natural or feigned; Burkholder's Ex'r v. Plank, 69 Pa. 225; Demeritt v. Randall, 116 Mass. 331; Jones v. Finch, 37 Miss. 461, 75 Am. Dec. 73; as to the nature of the ink used; Fulton v. Hood, 34 Pa. 365, 75 Am. Dec. 664; whether the whole of an instrument was written by the same person, at the same time, and with the same pen and ink; Fulton v. Hood, 34 Pa. 365, 75 Am. Dec. 664; President, etc., of Quinsigamond Bank v. Hobbs, 11 Gray (Mass.) 250; Mallory v. Ins. Co., 90 Mich. 112, 51 N. W. 188; whether the figures in a check have been altered; Nelson v. Johnson, 18 Ind. 329; see Hunt v. Lawless, 7 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 113; Pearson & Co. v. McDaniel, 62 Ga. 100; Williams v. State, 61 Ala. 33; State v. Miller, 47 Wis. 530, 3 N. W. 31; Tome v. R. Co., 39 Md. 36, 17 Am. Rep. 540.

An expert witness need not be a professional; Benedict v. Flanigan, 18 S. C. 506, 44 Am. Rep. 583; a merchant and dealer in commercial paper is by his vocation qualified to some extent to testify as to the genuineness of a signature to a note; Edmouston v. Henry, 45 Mo. App. 346. But the value of expert testimony as to handwriting, is to be determined by his opportunity and circumstances. If an illiterate man seldom brought by his business into familiarity with handwriting, his opinion is entitled to much less weight than if educated and accustomed to correspondence, and seeing people write; U. S. v. Gleason, 37 Fed. 331.

The jury are not bound by expert evidence further than it accords with their own opinions or than they think it is to be credited; U. S. v. Molloy, 31 Fed. 19; proof of a genuine signature to a document whose authenticity is denied casts upon the opposite party the burden of showing that the writing above the signature was forged; Sturm v. Boker, 150 U. S. 312, 14 Sup. Ct. 99, 37 L. Ed. 1093.

On a question of the genuineness of the signatures of makers of an accommodation note, testimony of an expert that the ordinary handwriting of the nominal payee, as shown in letters, was such as to convince him that the payee could not successfully imitate the handwriting of one of the witnesses as easily as that of one of the makers of the note, though possibly irrelevant, is unimportant and its admission is not ground for reversal; Holmes v. Goldsmith, 147 U. S. 150, 13 Sup. Ct. 288, 37 L. Ed. 118.

Where two signatures are exactly alike, it is evidence that one was produced from the other, or both from a third; Stitzel v. Miller, 250 Ill. 72, 95 N. E. 53, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1004, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 412.

In In re Corcoran's Will, 145 App. Div. 129, 129 N. Y. Supp. 165, it was held that expert evidence of an ordinary mark signature is inadmissible.

Forgeries of handwriting, and paper and ink to imitate various degrees of age, are so skilfully made, that examination and comparison, even by so-called experts, in the way heretofore usual in courts of justice, are often inadequate and misleading. A scientific use of the microscope, photography, and chemical agents, will generally prove a much surer means of discovering truth. See Dr. Frazer's Manual of the Study of Documents. HANGING. Death by the halter, or the suspending of a criminal, condemned to suffer death, by the neck, until life is extinct. A mode of capital punishment.

In Old English Law. Pending; as hanging the process. Co. Litt. 13a, 266a. Remaining undetermined. 1 Show. 77.

HANGED, DRAWN AND QUARTERED. A method of executing traitors in England, said to have been introduced in 1241. The traitor was carried on a sled, or hurdle to the gallows (formerly dragged there tied to the tail of a horse); hanged till half dead and then cut down; his entrails cut out and burnt; his head cut off and his body to be divided into quarters, which, with his head, were hung in some public place. In practice the executioner usually cut out the heart and held it up to view. See Andrews, Old Time Punishments. See CRIMES; CAPITAL PUNISHMENT; EXECUTION; 1 Eng. Rep. 87.

HANGING IN CHAINS. An ancient English practice of hanging a murderer, after execution, upon a gibbet, in chains, near the place where the murder was committed. Its legality was declared by acts in 1751 and 1828. Abolished in 1834.

HANGMAN. An executioner. The name usually given to a man employed by the sheriff to put a man to death, according to law, in pursuance of a judgment of a competent court and lawful warrant.

HANGWITE (from Saxon hangian, to hang, and wite, fine). A fine, in Saxon law, for illegal hanging of a thief, or for allowing him to escape. Immunity from such fine. Du Cange.

HANIG. Some customary labor to be performed. Holthouse.

HANSE. A commercial confederacy for the good ordering and protection of the commerce of its members. An imposition upon merchandise. Du Cange, Hansa. Hansa is a German term, meaning society (societas), Jacob; and Hanse is an old Gothic word, id.

HANSEATIC LEAGUE. A number of towns in Europe which joined in a league for mutual protection of commerce as early as the twelfth century.

Associated action and partial union between certain North German towns can be traced to the 13th century. In 1241 Lübeck and Hamburg agreed to safeguard the passage between the Baltic and North Sea. During the following century, the Saxon towns were joining to protect their common interests; and town confederacies both in North and South Germany became considerable. The formation was more economic than political. The expansion of trade extended from lower Rhine to Flanders and to England. In the 13th century Lübeck was the center of this movement. The merchants of Cologne at one period possessed a gild-hall in London and formed a "Hansa" with the right of admitting other German merchants.

The years 1356 to 1377 mark the zenith of the league's power. In 1380 Lübeck declared that "whatever touches one town touches all." But the facts are said hardly to have warranted the declaration, and in the next century it became less and less true. Lübeck's headship was accepted in 1418. The governing body (Hansetage) met there. The league gradually declined till, in 1669, the last general assembly was held and Lübeck, Hamburg and Bremen were left alone to preserve the name and small inheritance of the "Hansa" which, in Germany's political disunion, had upheld the honor of her commerce. Their buildings were sold—at London in 1852 and Antwerp in 1863. See Encycl. Br.

Hamburg and Bremen were incorporated into the German Zoll-Verein in 1888, and Lübeck some years previously, and are now, in substance, free cities or states constituting part of the German Empire. See Zimmern, The Hansa Towns. See CODE.

HANS GRAVE. The head officer of a company or corporation.

HANTELODE (German hant, a bond, and load, laid.). An arrest. Du Cange; Toml.; Holthouse.

HAP. To catch. Thus "hap the rent," "hap the deep-poll," were formerly used. Tech. Dict.

HAPPINESS. The "pursuit of happiness," as used in the Declaration of Independence is said to be the right to pursue any lawful business or vocation, in any manner not inconsistent with the equal rights of others, which may increase one's prosperity, or develop one's faculties, so as to give to one his highest enjoyment. Butchers' Union, S. H. & L. S. L. Co. v. Crescent City Co., 111 U. S. 757, 4 Sup. Ct. 652, 28 L. Ed. 585.

HARBINGER. An officer of the king's household. Toml.

HARBOR (Sax. here-berga, station for an army). A place where ships may ride with safety; any navigable water protected by the surrounding country; a haven. It is public property.

Harbor is to be distinguished from "port," which has a reference to the delivery of cargo. See 7 M. & G. 870; Martin v. Hilton, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 371; 2 B. & Ald. 460. Thus, we have the "said harbor, basin, and docks of the port of Hull." 2 B. & Ald. 60. But they are generally used as synonymous. Webster, Dict.

In the United States the control of harbors and regulation of dock lines and the like is exercised by the states, although under the power to regulate commerce the federal government annually expends large sums of money in the improvement of navigation in harbors and other navigable waters.

A state may enact police regulations for the conduct of shipping in any of its harbors; Vanderbilt v. Adams, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 351; Cooley, Const. Lim. 730; and congress has full power to make regulations on the same subject; Cooley v. Board of Wardens, 12 How. (U. S.) 299, 13 L. Ed. 996; Barnaby v. State, 21 Ind. 450; Pacific Mail S. S. Co. v. Joliffe, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 450, 17 L. Ed. 805; Cisco v. Roberts, 36 N. Y. 292. A statute passed for the protection of a harbor, which forbids the removal of stone, gravel, and sand from the beach, is constitutional; Com. v. Tewksbury, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 55; and the United States has the authority to make a contract for the removal of rock from a harbor; Benner v. Dredging Co., 134 N. Y. 156, 31 N. E. 328, 17 L. R. A. 220, 30 Am. St. Rep. 649.

New harbor lines may be established without further legislative authority, and such establishment is a practical discontinuance of the old lines; Farist Steel Co. v. City of Bridgeport, 60 Conn. 278, 22 Atl. 561, 13 L. R. A. 590. The state board of harbor commissioners has power to establish harbor lines in front of towns; State v. Board of Com'rs, 4 Wash. 6, 29 Pac. 938; and an act which provides for the disestablishment of such lines is contrary to the state constitution and void; Wilson v. Board of Com'rs, 13 Wash. 65, 42 Pac. 524; such an act on the part of such commissioners does not deprive a riparian owner of the right of access to his land, but merely determines the line to which he may fill without encroaching on public rights; Sherman v. Sherman, 18 R. I. 504, 30 Atl. 459. The mere establishment of general harbor lines by such commissioners is not of itself an injury or a taking of the property and cannot be enjoined; Prosser v. R. Co., 152 U. S. 59, 14 Sup. Ct. 528, 38 L. Ed. 352. The authority to make improvements in harbors implies the power to employ all necessary means thereto; Bateman v. Colgan, 111 Cal. 580, 44 Pac. 238.

In England, as well as Scotland, the right to erect and hold ports and havens is vested in the crown; though a subject may have such right by charter, grant, or prescription, but in all cases charged with the right of the public to use it. In England such grantee is bound to repair, but in Scotland only to the extent of the dues received.

The insufficiency of the common-law power led to an extended course of legislation for the control of ports and harbors, through what is known in Great Britain as the harbor authority, which is vested in commissioners or bodies corporate or otherwise. Such bodies are charged with the duty of general supervision of the construction, extension, improvement, and lighting of the harbor and collection of dues therefrom. The general consolidation act of 10 Vict. c. 271, defined these duties and powers in detail as did the general act of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 47, supplemented by various local acts.

In Torts. To receive clandestinely or without lawful authority a person for the purpose of so concealing him that another having a right to the lawful custody of such person shall be deprived of the same. Van Metre v. Mitchell, 2 Wall. Jr. 317, Fed. Cas. No. 16,865. For example, the harboring of a wife or an apprentice in order to deprive the husband or the master of them; or, in a less technical sense, it is the reception of persons improperly; Poll. Torts 275; Wood v. Gale, 10 N. H. 247, 34 Am. Dec. 150; Eells v. People, 4 Scam. (Ill.) 498.

It may be aptly used to describe the furnishing of shelter, lodging, or food clandestinely or with concealment, and under certain circumstances, may be equally applicable to those acts divested of any accompanying secrecy; U. S. v. Grant, 55 Fed. 415.

The harboring of such persons will subject the harbinger to an action for the injury; but, in order to put him completely in the wrong, a demand should be made for their restoration, for in cases where the harbinger has not committed any other wrong than merely receiving the plaintiff's wife, child, or apprentice, he may be under no obligation to return them without a demand; 1 Chit. Pr. 564; Dark v. Marsh, 4 N. C. 228; Jones v. Van Zandt, 5 How. (U. S.) 215, 227, 12 L. Ed. 122. See ENTICE.

HARD CASES. A phrase used to indicate decisions which, to meet a case of hardship to a party, are not entirely consonant with the true principle of the law. It is said of such: Hard cases make bad law. Hard cases must not make bad equity any more than bad law; Moore v. Pierson, 6 Ia. 279, 71 Am. Dec. 409.

HARD LABOR. In those states where the penitentiary system has been adopted, convicts who are to be imprisoned, as part of their punishment, are sentenced to perform hard labor. This labor is not greater than many freemen perform voluntarily, and the quantity required to be performed is not.

at all unreasonable. In the penitentiaries of Pennsylvania it consists in being employed in weaving, shoemaking, and such like employment.

Hard labor is not of itself a cruel or unusual punishment; Durham v. State, 89 Tenn. 723, 18 S. W. 74; Pervear v. Massachusetts, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 476, 18 L. Ed. 608; O'Neil v. Com., 165 Mass. 446, 43 N. E. 183. It was held unauthorized where imposed to enforce the payment of a fine; Ex parte Arras, 78 Cal. 304, 20 Pac. 683; and unconstitutional where imposed for carrying a deadly weapon; State v. Williams, 40 S. C. 373, 19 S. E. 5.

Hard labor was first introduced in English prisons in 1706. By the Prison Act of 1865, it is divided into two classes, one for males above sixteen years old the other for males below that age and females; Moz. & W.

See PUNISHMENT.

HARDSHIP. See HARD CASES.

HARIOT. The same as heriot (q. v.). Cowell; Termes de la Ley. Sometimes spelled Harriott; Wms. Seis. 203.

HARMONIZE. Though not strictly synonymous with the word "reconcile," it is not improperly used by a court in instructing the jury that it is their duty to "harmonize" conflicting evidence if possible. Holdridge v. Lee, 3 S. D. 134, 52 N. W. 265.

HARNESS. The defensive armor of a soldier or knight. All warlike instruments. Hovend. 725. In modern poetical sense a suit of armor. The term is sometimes used to denote the trappings of a war-horse.

Harness was the early name for body armor of all kinds. Modern writers have tried to discriminate between harness as the armor of the eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth centuries, and armor as confined to the plate suits of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries; but armor is the modern English word for defensive garments of all sorts, and harness in this sense, is a poetical archaism. Cent. Dict.

The tackle or furniture of a ship.

HARO, HARRON. An outcry, or hue and cry, after felons and malefactors. Cowell. The original of the clamour de haro comes from the Normans. Moz. & W.

HART. A stag or male deer of the forest five years old complete.

HARTER ACT. A name commonly applied to the act of congress of February 13, 1893. It provides (§ 1) that agreements in a bill of lading relieving the owner, etc., of a vessel sailing between the United States and foreign ports, from liability for negligence or fault in proper loading, storage, custody, care, or delivery of merchandise, are void; (§ 2) that no bill of lading shall contain any agreement whereby the obligations of the owner to exercise due diligence, properly equip, man, provision and outfit a vessel and make it seaworthy, and whereby the obligations of the master, etc., carefully to handle, store, care for and deliver the cargo, are in any way lessened, weakened or avoided; (§ 3) that if the owner shall exercise due diligence to make such vessel in all respects seaworthy and properly manned, equipped and supplied, neither the vessel nor her owners, etc., shall be liable for loss resulting from faults or errors in navigation or management, nor for losses arising from dangers of the sea, acts of God, or public enemies, or the inherent defect of the thing carried, or insufficiency of package, or seizure under legal process, or any act or omission of the shipper of the goods, or from saving or attempting to save life at sea, or deviation in rendering such service.

The act was the outgrowth of attempts made in recent years to limit as far as possible the liability of the vessel and her owners, by inserting in bills of lading stipulations against losses arising from unseaworthiness, bad stowage and negligence in navigation, and other forms of liability which have been held by the courts of England if not of this country to be valid as contracts even when they exempted the ship from the consequences of her own negligence. As decisions were made by the courts from time to time holding the vessel for non-excepted liabilities, new clauses were inserted in the bills of lading to meet these decisions until the common law responsibilities of carriers by sea had been frittered away to such an extent that several of the leading commercial associations both in this country and in England had suggested amendments to the maritime law in line with those embodied in the Harter Act; The Delaware, 161 U. S. 459, 16 Sup. Ct. 516, 40 L. Ed. 771.

Before the passage of the Harter Act, it was the settled law that in the absence of special contract there was a warranty upon the part of the ship-owner that the ship was seaworthy at the beginning of the voyage. The warranty was absolute and did not depend upon the knowledge of the owner or the diligence of his efforts to provide a seaworthy vessel; The Caledonia, 157 U. S. 124, 15 Sup. Ct. 537, 39 L. Ed. 644; The Irrawaddy, 171 U. S. 187, 18 Sup. Ct. 831, 43 L. Ed. 130; after its passage the act became the rule for cases within its terms; The Southwark, 191 U. S. 1, 24 Sup. Ct. 1, 48 L. Ed. 65. The act applies only to questions arising between the vessel and shippers of cargo on board of her, and does not apply to cases of damage to cargo on another vessel; The Delaware, 161 U. S. 459, 16 Sup. Ct. 516, 40 L. Ed. 771; The Viola, 59 Fed. 632; id., 60 Fed. 296; The Berkshire, 59 Fed. 1007. It does not apply to stowage; The Palmas, 108 Fed. 87, 47 C. C. A. 220, nor to passengers' claims for loss of baggage; The Rosedale, 88 Fed. 324; The Kensington, 88 Fed. 331; nor to claims for personal injuries; Moses v. Pack-et Co., 88 Fed. 329; but it is intended to relieve the shipowner who has done all that he can do to start off a well-fitted expedition, from liability for damages caused by faults or errors of his shipment after his ship has gone below the horizon and away from his personal observation; Bened. Adm. (4th ed.) 174. See SHIP; VESSEL.

HASP AND STAPLE. A mode of entry in Scotland by which a bailee declared a person heir on evidence brought before himself, at the same time delivering the property over to him by the hasp and staple of the door, which was the symbol of possession. Bell; Ersk. Pr. 433.

HASPA. In Old English Law. A name anciently given to the hasp of a door, which was often used in giving livery of seisin of premises which included a house. Spelman.

HASTA (Lat.). A spear which in Roman law was the sign of an auction sale. Hasta subicere, to put under the spear, like the modern phrase put under the hammer signified put up at auction. Calv. Lex.

In feudal law it was the symbol of the investiture of a fee. Lib. Feud. 2, 2.

HAT MONEY. Primage: a small duty paid to the captain and mariners of a ship.

HAÜBER. A great baron or lord. Spel. Gloss.

HAUGH, or HOUGH. Low-lying rich lands, lands which are occasionally overflowed. Encyc. Dict.

HAUL. In an indictment for larceny this word is a sufficient substitute for carry, in the statutory phrase steal, take and carry away, being in the sense used equivalent to it. Spittorff v. State, 108 Ind. 171, 8 N. E. 911.

HAUR. In the laws of William the Conqueror, hatred. Toml.

HAUSTUS (Lat. from haurire, to draw). In Civil Law. The right of drawing water, and the right of way to the place of drawing. L. 1, D. de Servit. Præd. Rustic.; Fleta, l. 4, c. 27, § 9.

HAUT CHEMIN (L. Fr.). Highway. Yearb. M. 4 Hen. VI. 4.

HAUT ESTRET (L. Fr.). High street; highway. Yearb. P. 11 Hen. VI. 2.

HAUTHONER. A man armed with a coat of mail. Jac. L. Dict.

HAVE. See HABENDUM; HABE.

HAVEN. A place calculated for the reception of ships, and so situated, in regard to the surrounding land, that the vessel may ride at anchor in it in safety. Hale, de Port. Mar. c. 2; Chitty, Com. Law 2; 15 East 304, 305. See CREEK; PORT; HARBOR; ARM OF THE SEA.

HAW. A small parcel of land so called in Kent; houses. Cowell.

HAWAII. A territory of the United States. It consists of a group of islands in the Pacific Ocean about one thousand five hundred miles from the western coast of California. A republic was proclaimed and a new constitution promulgated July 4, 1894, succeeding a provisional government formed in January, 1893. By this constitution the president of the republic was empowered to "make a treaty of political or commercial union with the United States." A treaty of annexation was concluded at Washington, June 16, 1897. Congress, by joint resolution approved July 7, 1898, accepted the cession of Hawaii and incorporated it with the Union. "An act to provide a government for the territory of Hawaii" was passed April 30, 1900, and went into effect June 14, 1900. It provided that the laws of Hawaii, not inconsistent with the constitution and laws of the United States, or the provisions of the act, should remain in force, subject to repeal or amendment.

The territory forms a part of the ninth federal circuit. It is a federal district with two district judges. The territorial courts are a supreme court with three judges, circuit courts in five judicial districts, and district courts.

As to the laws governing Hawaii, it is enough to refer to the organic act of April 30, 1900, to ascertain the body of private rights governing that territory; Kawanaunakoa v. Polyblank, 205 U. S. 354, 27 Sup. Ct. 526, 51 L. Ed. 834.

HAWBERK or HAWBERT. A shirt of mail. Moz. & W. See FIEF D'HAUBERK.

HAWKER. An itinerant or travelling trader, who carries goods about in order to sell them, and who actually sells them to purchasers, in contradistinction to a trader who has goods for sale and sells them in a fixed place of business. Superadded to this, though perhaps not essential, is generally understood one who not only carries goods for sale, but seeks for purchasers, either by outcry, which some lexicographers conceive as intimated by the derivation of the word, or by attracting notice and attention to them, as goods for sale, by an actual exhibition or exposure of them by placards or labels, or by a conventional signal, like the sound of a horn for the sale of fish; Com. v. Ober, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 495. To prevent imposition, hawkers are generally required to take out licenses, under regulations established by the local laws of the states. See City of Duluth v. Krupp, 46 Minn. 435; 49 N. W. 235; and these laws have generally been held to be constitutional; Borough of Warren v. Geer, 117 Pa. 207, 11 Atl. 415; Seymour v. State, 51 Ala. 52; City of Huntington v. Cheesbro, 57 Ind. 74; PEDDLER. One who goes about a village carrying samples and taking orders for a non-resident firm is not a hawker or peddler; Village of Cerro Gordo v. Raw- ings, 135 Ill. 36, 25 N. E. 1006. It is termed Hacking. See Grafty v. City of Rushville, 107 Ind. 505, 8 N. E. 609, 57 Am. Rep. 128.

HAYBOTE (from haye, hedge, and bote, compensation). Hedgebote: one of the estovers allowed a tenant for life or for years; namely, material to repair hedges or fences, or to make necessary farming utensils. 2 Bla. Com. 35; 1 Washb. R. P. 99.

HAYWARD (from haye, hedge, and ward, keeping). In Old English Law. An officer appointed in the lord's court to keep a common herd of cattle of a town: so called because he was to see that they did not break or injure the hedges of inclosed grounds. His duty was also to impound trespassing cattle, and to guard against pound-breaches. Kitch. 46; Cowell.

HAZAR-ZAMIN. A bail or surety for the personal attendance of another. Moz. & W.

HAZARD. An unlawful game of dice. Hazardor. One who plays at it. Jac. L. Dict.

HAZARDOUS. Risky; perilous; involving hazard or special danger. See next title.

HAZARDOUS CONTRACT. A contract in which the performance of that which is one of its objects depends on an uncertain event. La. Civ. Code, art. 1769. See MARITIME LOAN.

In a fire insurance policy, the terms "hazardous," "extra hazardous," "specially hazardous," and "not hazardous," are well understood technical terms, having distinct meanings. A policy covering only goods "hazardous" and "not hazardous" cannot be made to cover goods or merchandise "extra hazardous" or "specially hazardous;" Pindar v. Fhs. Co., 38 N. Y. 364.

On the other hand, it has been held that "hazardous" and "extra hazardous" are terms having no technical meaning, but are to be taken in their popular sense of dangerous and extra dangerous; Russell v. Ins. Co., 50 Minn. 409, 52 N. W. 906. See RISKS AND PERILS.

HE. Properly a pronoun of the masculine gender, but usually construed in statutes to include both sexes and corporations. Where in a written instrument, a person, whose name was designated by an initial is referred to as "he," it is not conclusive that such person is a man, but the contrary may be shown by parol; Berniaud v. Beecher, 71 Cal. 38, 11 Pac. 802. See HRS.

HEAD. The principal source of a stream. Webst. Dict. The head of a creek will be taken to mean the head of its longest branch, unless there be forcible evidence of common reputation to the contrary; Davis v. Bryant, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 112.

The principal person or chief of any organization, corporation, or firm.

HEAD OF A FAMILY. Householder, one who provides for a family. Bowne v. Witt, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 476. There must be the relation of father and child, or husband and wife; Bachman v. Crawford, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 216, 39 Am. Dec. 163; Sallee v. Waters, 17 Ala. 486; contra, Wade v. Jones, 20 Mo. 75, 61 Am. Dec. 584; Marsh v. Lazenby, 41 Ga. 153. Where a husband and wife reside together, he is the "head of the family"; Yarborough v. State, 86 Ga. 397, 12 S. E. 650. The father being dead, the mother is the head of the family; Burrell Tp. v. Pittsburg Guardians of Poor, 62 Pa. 475, 1 Am. Rep. 411. See Inhabitants of Dedham v. Inhabitants of Natick, 16 Mass. 135; Lathrop v. Bldg. Ass'n, 45 Ga. 483. See FAMILY; HOMESTEAD.

HEAD-LAND. In Old English Law. A narrow piece of unploughed land left at the end of a ploughed field for the turning of the plough. Called, also, butte. Kennett, Paroch. Antiq. 587; 2 Leon. 70, case 93; 1 Litt. 13.

HEAD MONEY. A name popularly applied to a tax on aliens landing in the United States under U. S. Rev. Stat. 1 Supp. 370. Such tax by a state is unconstitutional; Henderson v. New York, 92 U. S. 259, 23 L. Ed. 543; but as a federal regulation of commerce it is valid; Edye v. Robertson, 112 U. S. 580, 5 Sup. Ct. 247, 28 L. Ed. 798. The act of March 3, 1903, fixed the tax at two dollars for each immigrant. See IMMIGRATION.

HEAD-NOTE. The syllabus of a reported case.

HEAD-PENCE. An exaction of 40*d.* or more, collected by the sheriff of Northumberland from the people of that county twice in every seven years, without account to the king. Abolished by 23 Hen. VI. c. 6, in 1444. Cowell.

HEAD-SILVER. A name sometimes given to a Common Fine (q. v.). By a payment of a certain sum of money to the lord, litigants might try their suits nearer home. Blount.

HEADBOROUGH. In English Law. An officer who was formerly the chief officer in a borough, who is now subordinate to the constable. Originally the chief of the tithing, or frank pledge. St. Armand, Leg. Power of Eng. 88. See DECENNARY.

HEAFODWEARD. A service rendered by a thane or a geneath or villain, the precise nature of which is unknown. Anc. Eng. Inst.

HEALGEMOTE. Halimote (q. v.).

HEALSFANG (from Germ. hals, neck, fangen, to catch). A sort of pillory, by which the head of the culprit was caught between two boards, as feet are caught in a pair of stocks.

"The fine which every man would have to pay in commutation of this punishment, had it been in use,"—for it was very early disused, no mention of it occurring in the laws of the Saxon kings. Anc. Laws & Inst. of Eng. Gloss; Spelman, Gloss.

HEALTH. Freedom from pain or sickness; the most perfect state of animal life. It may be defined as the natural agreement and concordant disposition of the parts of the living body.

By the act of March 3, 1879, R. S. Suppl. 480, enforced by subsequent acts, a National Board of Health was established, to consist of seven members appointed by the president, and of four members detailed from the departments, whose duties shall be to obtain information upon all matters affecting the public health, to advise the heads of departments and state executives, to make necessary investigations at any places in the United States, or at foreign ports, and to make rules guarding against the introduction of contagious diseases into the country, and their spread from state to state. See Dunwoody v. U. S., 143 U. S. 578, 12 Sup. Ct. 465, 36 L. Ed. 269.

By act of May 29, 1884, the bureau of animal industry was established, having for its object the protection of cattle from contagious diseases, etc. By act of Feb. 2, 1903, the suppression of contagious diseases of cattle and other live stock was transferred from the treasury department to the department of agriculture (bureau of animal industry).

A state board of health is a tribunal constituted by law, having the authority conferred on it by law and no other authority. The legislature may provide for the punishment of acts in resistance to or in violation of the authority conferred upon such subordinate tribunal or board. When such boards duly adopt rules or by-laws by virtue of legislative authority such rules and by-laws, within the respective jurisdiction have the force and effect of a law of the legislature, and like an ordinance or by-law of a municipal corporation they may be said to be in force by the authority of the state; Blue v. Beach, 155 Ind. 121, 56 N. E. 89, 50 L. R. A. 64, 80 Am. St. Rep. 195; Com. v. Sisson, 189 Mass. 247, 75 N. E. 619, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 752, 109 Am. St. Rep. 630; Com. v. Pear, 183 Mass. 242, 66 N. E. 719, 67 L. R. A. 935; Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U. S. 11, 25 Sup. Ct. 358, 49 L. Ed. 643, 3 Ann. Cas. 765. To invest such a body with authority over public health is not an unusual nor unreasonable or arbitrary requirement; Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U. S. 11, 25 Sup. Ct. 358, 49 L. Ed. 643, 3 Ann. Cas. 765 (compulsory vaccination).

A statute prescribing punishment for violation of a regulation of a state board of health is not unconstitutional on the theory that legislative power to create crimes is thereby delegated to such board; Pierce v. Doolittle, 130 Ia. 333, 106 N. W. 751, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 143. See a note in 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 143.

County boards of health are held to be corporate bodies invested by statute with functions of a public nature to be exercised for the public benefit. They are not liable in an action for tort for damages in the performance of an official duty; Forbes v. Board of Health, 28 Fla. 26, 9 South. 862, 13 L. R. A. 549. They are not liable for mere errors of judgment; Raymond v. Fish, 51 Conn. 80, 50 Am. Rep. 3; Seavey v. Preble, 64 Me. 120; Whidden v. Cheever, 69 N. H. 142, 44 Atl. 908, 76 Am. St. Rep. 154; Campagne Francaise De Navigation v. Board of Health, 51 La. Ann. 645, 25 South. 591, 56 L. R. A. 795, 72 Am. St. Rep. 458; Rohn v. Osmun, 143 Mich. 68, 106 N. W. 697, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 635. But for the acts done in excess of their authority they can be held liable; People v. Board of Health, 140 N. Y. 1, 35 N. E. 320, 23 L. R. A. 181, 37 Am. St. Rep. 522; Lowe v. Conroy, 120 Wis. 151, 97 N. W. 942, 66 L. R. A. 907, 102 Am. St. Rep. 983, 1 Ann. Cas. 341; Pearson v. Zehr, 138 Ill. 48, 29 N. E. 854, 32 Am. St. Rep. 113; Hersey v. Chapin, 162 Mass. 176, 38 N. E. 442.

Public policy requires that health officers be undisturbed in the exercise of their powers, unless clearly transcending their authority; Hart v. Mayor, etc., 3 Paige (N. Y.) 218; 1 Dill § 369; but in so acting such officers must not interfere with the natural right of individuals; State v. Speyer, 67 Vt. 502; the people "shall be secure in their persons and homes from unreasonable searches and seizures"; Eddy v. Board of Health, 10 Phila. (Pa.) 94; Butterfoss v. State, 40 N. J. Eq. 325. See In re Smith, 146 N. Y. 68, 40 N. E. 497, 28 L. R. A. 820, 48 Am. St. Rep. 769, which case, overruling id., 84 Hun 465, 32 N. Y. Supp. 317, held that health officers may not quarantine persons refusing to be vaccinated when small-pox is imminent. A court of chancery can only interfere with the trustees of a sanitary district where such trustees have acted in violation of the law or in a fraudulent manner; Johnson v. Sanitary Dist., 58 Ill. App. 306.

Where the action of a board of health is fraudulent, clearly oppressive or grossly abusive, equity may intervene and exercise its inherent power to prevent such abuse.

An injunction was granted to restrain the board of health of San Francisco from inoculating the Chinese residents with bubonic plague serum; Wong Wai v. Williamson, 103 Fed. 1; from removing tenants and closing up houses, where it was not justified by the actual existence of a contagious disease; Eddy v. Board of Health, 10 Phila. (Pa.) 94; from using property as a hospital for the care of a person afflicted with leprosy; Baltimore City v. Improvement Co., 87 Md. 352, 39 Atl. 1087, 40 L. R. A. 494, 67 Am. St. Rep. 344; from sending to an unsanitary pest house one who suffered from a form of leprosy which is very slightly contagious, where quarantine in her own home could be made a complete protection for the public; Kirk

v. Board of Health, 83 S. C. 372, 65 S. E. 387, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1188.

It is the duty of a landowner so to keep his property that no menace to the public health shall come therefrom. A city may fill up low-lying lands and recover the cost thereof; Charleston v. Werner, 38 S. C. 488, 17 S. E. 33, 37 Am. St. Rep. 776; City of Rochester v. Simpson, 134 N. Y. 414, 31 N. E. 871; Nickerson v. Boston, 131 Mass. 306; Rowles v. Aberdeen, 58 Wash. 535, 109 Pac. 369, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 709. The health department may prohibit the owner of tenement buildings unfit for habitation and dangerous to health from renting them; Health Dept. v. Dassori, 21 App. Div. 348, 47 N. Y. Supp. 641. A statute requiring the installation of water-closets in tenement houses in place of sinks was sustained; Tenement House Dept. v. Moeschen, 179 N. Y. 325, 72 N. E. 231, 70 L. R. A. 704, 103 Am. St. Rep. 910, 1 Ann. Cas. 439, affirmed without opinion in 203 U. S. 583, 27 Sup. Ct. 781, 51 L. Ed. 328. Health authorities may order persons to abate nuisances created by filthy hog pens; Board of Health of Raritan Tp. v. Henzler (N. J.) 41 Atl. 228; and may order owners of property on streets having sewers to connect therewith; Harrington v. Board of Aldermen, 20 R. I. 233, 38 Atl. 1, 38 L. R. A. 305.

A state board of health may forbid a municipality to discharge sewage into a stream which is a source of water supply; Miles City v. State Board of Health, 39 Mont. 405, 102 Pac. 696, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 589; the city can have no prescriptive right to pollute such a stream; Platt v. Waterbury, 72 Conn. 531, 45 Atl. 154, 48 L. R. A. 691, 77 Am. St. Rep. 335; Owens v. City of Lancaster, 182 Pa. 257, 37 Atl. 858; Miles City v. Board of Health, 39 Mont. 405, 102 Pac. 696, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 589.

A city is not bound to make a chemical analysis of the water of free public wells for the purpose of ascertaining whether it is wholesome; Danaher v. City of Brooklyn, 119 N. Y. 241, 23 N. E. 745, 7 L. R. A. 592.

The regulation and maintenance of tenement lodging and boarding houses is a proper subject of legislative regulation for the benefit of the public health, but the degree of regulation permissible varies greatly according to circumstances; Bonnett v. Vallier, 136 Wis. 193, 116 N. W. 885, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 486, 128 Am. St. Rep. 1061. While health authorities have the power to abate nuisances, the owner has usually the right to do so in his own way; Eckhardt v. City of Buffalo, 19 App. Div. 1, 46 N. Y. Supp. 204, affirmed in id., 156 N. Y. 658, 50 N. E. 1116; Philadelphia v. Trust Co., 132 Pa. 224, 18 Atl. 1114; Durgin v. Minot, 203 Mass. 26, 89 N. E. 144, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 241, 133 Am. St. Rep. 276. And property not in itself a nuisance may not be destroyed unless such destruction is necessary to protect the public; Shepard v.

Offences against the provisions of the health laws are generally punished by fine and imprisonment. They are offences against public health, punishable by the common law by fine and imprisonment; such, for example, as selling unwholesome provisions. 4 Bla. Com. 162; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 822; 6 id. 133; 3 Maule & S. 10.

Mandamus will issue to compel a board of health to award compensation to one whose property it has occupied or destroyed to prevent the spread of contagious disease, when such board of health has refused so to do; Safford v. Board of Health, 110 Mich. 81, 67 N. W. 1094, 33 L. R. A. 300, 64 Am. St. Rep. 332.

Injuries to the health of particular individuals are, in general, remedied by an action on the case, or perhaps, in some instances, for breach of contract, and may be also by abatement, in some cases of nuisance. See NUISANCE; ABATEMENT; QUARANTINE; CONTAGIOUS DISEASES; VACCINATION.

As to the exercise of discretionary powers by boards of health, see LEGISLATIVE POWER; POLICE POWER; FOOD AND DRUG ACTS.

HEALTH OFFICER. The name of an officer invested with power to enforce the health laws. The powers and duties of health officers are regulated by local laws.

HEALTHY. Free from disease or bodily ailment or from a state of the system susceptible or liable to disease or bodily ailment. Bell v. Jeffreys, 35 N. C. 357.

HEARING. The trial of a chancery suit. Akerly v. Vilas, 24 Wis. 165, 1 Am. Rep. 166; Galpin v. Critchlow, 112 Mass. 339, 17 Am. Rep. 176.

The hearing in the English Chancery was conducted as follows. When the cause is called on in court, the pleadings on each side are opened in a brief manner to the court by the junior counsel for the plaintiff; after which the plaintiff's leading counsel states the plaintiff's case and the points in issue, and submits to the court his arguments upon them. Then the depositions (if any) of the plaintiff's witnesses, and such parts of the defendant's answer as support the plaintiff's case, are read by the plaintiff's counsel; after which the rest of the plaintiff's counsel address the court. Then the same course of proceedings is observed on the other side, excepting that no part of the defendant's answer can be read in his favor if it be replied to. The leading counsel for the plaintiff is then heard in reply; after which the court pronounces the decree. 14 Viner, Abr. 233; Com. Dig. Chancery, (T 1, 2, 3); Daniell, Chanc. Pract.

In Criminal Law. The examination of a prisoner charged with a crime or misdemeanor, and of the witnesses for the accused. See EXAMINATION.

HEARSAY EVIDENCE. That kind of evidence which does not derive its value solely from the credit to be given to the witness himself, but rests also, in part on the veracity and competency of some other person. 1 Phill. Ev. 185.

Hearsay evidence is incompetent to establish any specific fact, which fact is in its nature susceptible of being proved by witnesses who speak from their own knowledge; this species of testimony supposes some better which might be adduced in a particular case and its intrinsic weakness, its incompetency to satisfy the mind of the existence of the fact, and the frauds which might be practiced under its cover combine to support the rule that it is inadmissible; Hopt v. Utah, 110 U. S. 581, 4 Sup. Ct. 202, 28 L. Ed. 262; Queen v. Hepburn, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 295, 3 L. Ed. 348.

The term applies to written as well as oral matter; but the writing or words are not necessarily hearsay, because those of a person not under oath. Thus, information on which one has acted; 2 B. & Ad. 845; Coleman v. Southwick, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 45, 6 Am. Dec. 253; the conversation of a person suspected of insanity; 2 Ad. & E. 2; see Myers v. Knobe, 51 Kan. 720, 33 Pac. 602; Ellis v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 86, 24 S. W. 894; replies to inquiries; 8 Bing. 320; Phelps v. Foot, 1 Conn. 387; Johns v. S. 321, 8 Sup. Ct. 907, 31 L. Ed. 721; have been held admissible as original evidence under the circumstances, and for particular purposes. As to a person's testifying to his own age, see AGE.

As a general rule, hearsay reports of a transaction, whether oral or written, are not admissible as evidence; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 124; Gatling v. Newell, 9 Ind. 572; Ibbitson v. Brown, 5 Ia. 532; State v. Maitremme, 14 La. Ann. 830; Persons' Adm'rs v. Burdick, 6 Wis. 63; Gross v. Moore, 68 Hun 412, 22 N. Y. Supp. 1019; Brown v. Prude, 97 Ala. 639, 11 South. 838; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Parker, 55 Fed. 595, 5 C. C. A. 220; Forman v. Com., 86 Ky. 605, 6 S. W. 579. The rule applies to evidence given under oath in a cause between other litigating parties; 3 Term 77; Queen v. Hepburn, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 290, 3 L. Ed. 348.

At one time in England it was held on the authority of Luttarell v. Reynell, 1 Mod. 282, that hearsay evidence of a witness' previous declarations might be admitted to confirm his testimony by showing that he "was constant to himself"; but this theory of confirming a sworn statement by declarations not under oath was abandoned in England; Buller, J., in 3 Doug. 242; and (except in a few cases which followed the earlier English case) repudiated in the United States; Stark. Ev. Sharsw. ed. 253, n. 2; 12 Am. L. Reg. 1, where the cases are collected.

Matters relating to public interest, as, for example, a claim to a ferry or highway, may be proved by hearsay testimony; 6 M. & W. 234; 1 M. & S. 679; Noyes v. Ward, 19 Conn. 250; but the matter in controversy must be of public interest; 2 B. & Ad. 245; Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Canal Co., 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 593; the declarations must be those of persons supposed to be dead; 11 Price 162; 1 C. & K. 58; Davis v. Fuller, 12 Vt. 178, 36 Am. Dec. 334; and must have been made before controversy arose; 13 Ves. 514. See Fry v. Currie, 103 N. C. 203, 9 S. E. 393. The rule extends to deeds, leases, and other private documents; 10 B. & C. 17; maps; 2 Moore & P. 525; Noyes v. Ward, 19 Conn. 250; and verdicts; 10 Ad. & E. 151; 7 C. & P. 181. Testimony based on daily market reports from a commercial center comes from a public authentic source and is not hearsay; International & G. N. Ry. Co. v. Pasture Co., 5 Tex. Civ. App. 186.

Ancient documents purporting to be a part of the res gesta are also admissible, although the parties to the suit are not bound; 5 Price 312; Tolman v. Emerson, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 160. See 2 C. & P. 440; Jackson v. Welden, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 283; Carroll v. Norwood, 1 H. & J. (Md.) 174; Willson

v. Betts, 4 Denio (N. Y.) 201. So also declarations which form part of the res gesta, which explain and give character to what was done at the time are not liable to the objection that they are hearsay; Stark. Ev. Sharwood's ed. 53, note 1, 89, note 1, where the cases illustrating this branch of the subject are collected and classified by the American editor.

When two persons not speaking a common language voluntarily agree on a third to interpret between them, the latter is to be regarded as the agent of each to translate and communicate what he says to the other, and such communication to the interpreter is not hearsay, and the party to whom it is made may testify to it; Miller v. Lathrop, 50 Minn. 91, 52 N. W. 274; Johnson v. R. Co., 51 Ia. 25, 50 N. W. 543; the weight only of such being affected thereby and not its competency; Com. v. Vose, 157 Mass. 393, 32 N. E. 555, 17 L. R. A. 813.

Declarations, incompetent as hearsay, are not rendered admissible because they may tend to corroborate other testimony; Holt v. Johnson, 129 N. C. 138, 39 S. E. 796.

A statement by a physician to plaintiff that it would be necessary to amputate his hand was hearsay and inadmissible; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Smith, 84 S. W. 755, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 257. In an action against a railway company for wrongful death of a son, a statement made by him to his mother that he would support his parents as long as he lived was held not hearsay; Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Van Belle, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 511, 64 S. W. 397. In condemnation proceedings, evidence offered by the owner as to offers made to him to purchase the property was rightly excluded; Sharp v. U. S., 191 U. S. 341, 24 Sup. Ct. 414, 48 L. Ed. 211.

HEARTH-MONEY. A tax, granted by 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 10, abolished 1 Will. & Mary, St. 1, c. 10, of two shillings on every hearth or stove in England and Wales. Jacob, Law Dict. Commonly called chimney-money. Id.

HEARTH-SILVER. A sort of modus for tithes, viz.: a prescription for cutting down and using for fuel the tithe of wood. 2 Burn, Eccl. Law 304.

HEAT OF PASSION. This does not mean passion or anger which comes from an old grudge, or no immediate cause or provocation; but passion or anger suddenly aroused at the time by some immediate and reasonable provocation, by words or acts of one at the time. State v. Seaton, 106 Mo. 198, 17 S. W. 169.

It is not inconsistent with intelligent action, with consciousness of what one is doing and of the responsibilities therefor; Duthey v. State, 131 Wis. 178, 111 N. W. 222, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1032. One who in possession of a sound mind commits a criminal act under the impulse of passion or revenge, though it may temporarily control his will or dethrone his reason, cannot be shielded from the consequences of his act; Williams v. State, 50 Ark. 517, 9 S. W. 5; Com. v. Renzo, 216 Pa. 147, 65 Atl. 30. Such a state of mind does not constitute insanity; Sanders v. State, 94 Ind. 147. See INSANITY; MURDER; COOLING TIME.

HEBBERMAN. An unlawful fisher in the Thames below London bridge; so called because they generally fished at ebbing tide or water. 4 Hen. VII. c. 15; Jacob, Law Dict.

HEBBERTHEF. The privilege of having goods of a thief and trial of him within such a liberty. Cartular, S. Edmundi MS. 163; Cowell.

HEBBING-WEARS. A device for catching fish in ebbing water. Stat. 23 Hen. VIII. c. 5.

HEBDOMAD. A week; a space of seven days.

HEBDOMADIUS. A week's man; a canon, or prebendary in a cathedral church, who has the care of the choir and the officers belonging to it, for his own week. Cowell.

HEBOTE. The king's edict commanding his subjects into the field.

HECCAGIUM. Rent paid to the lord for liberty to use engines called hecks. Toml.

HEDA. A small haven, wharf, or landing-place.

HEDAGIUM (Sax. heda, hitha, port). A toll or custom paid at the hith or wharf, for landing goods, etc., from which an exemption was granted by the king to some particular persons and societies. Cartular. Abbatiae de Redinges; Cowell.

HEDGE-BOTE. Wood used for repairing hedges or fences. 2 Bla. Com. 35; Livingston v. Ten Broeck, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 15, 8 Am. Dec. 287; HAYBOTE.

HEDGE-PRIEST. A hedge-parson; specifically, in Ireland, formerly, a priest who has been admitted to orders directly from a hedge-school, without preparation in theological studies at a regular college. Cent. Dict.

HEDGING. A means by which collectors and exporters of grain or other products, and manufacturers, who make contracts in advance for the sale of their goods, secure themselves against the fluctuations of the market by counter contracts for the purchase or sale of an equal quantity of the product or of the material of manufacture. Board of Trade of City of Chicago v. Grain & Stock Co., 198 U. S. 236, 25 Sup. Ct. 637, 49 L. Ed. 1031.

HEGEMONY. The leadership of one among several independent confederate states.

HEGIRA. The epoch or account of time used by the Arabians and the Turks, who begin the Mohammedan era and computation from the day that Mahomet was compelled to escape from Mecca to Medina which happened on the night of Thursday, July 15th, A. D. 622, under the reign of the Emperor Heraclius. Townsend, Dict. Dates; Wilson, Gloss. The era begins July 16th. The word is sometimes spelled Hejira but the former is the ordinary usage. It is derived from hijrah, in one form or another, an oriental term denoting flight, departure.

HEIFER. A young cow which has not had a calf. A beast of this kind two years and a half old was held to be improperly described in the indictment as a cow; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 616; 1 Leach 105.

HEIR. He who is born or begotten in lawful wedlock, and upon whom the law casts the estate in lands, tenements, or hereditaments immediately upon the death of his ancestor. Thus, the word does not strictly apply to personal estate. Wms. Per. Pr.

Ordinarily used to designate those persons who answer this description at the death of the testator. In its strict and technical import applies to the person or persons appointed by law to succeed to the estate in case of intestacy. 2 Bla. Com. 201; Rawson v. Rawson, 52 Ill. 62; Kellett v. Shepard, 139 Ill. 433, 28 N. E. 751, 34 N. E. 254; Dukes v. Faulk, 37 S. C. 255, 16 S. E. 122, 34 Am. St. Rep. 745.

The term heir has a very different signification at common law from what it has in those states and countries which have adopted the civil law. In the latter, the term applies to all persons who are called to the succession, whether by the act of the party or by operation of law. The person who is created universal successor by a will is called the testamentary heir; and the next of kin by blood is, in cases of intestacy, called the heir-at-law, or heir by intestacy. The executor of the common law is in many respects not unlike the testamentary heir of the civil law. Again, the administrator in many respects corresponds with the heir by intestacy. By the common law, executors—unless expressly authorized by the will—and administrators have no right except to the personal estate of the deceased; whereas the heir by the civil law is authorized to administer both the personal and real estate. 1 Brown, Civ. Law 344. See HÆRES.

No person is heir of a living person. A person occupying a relation which may be that of heirship is, however, called heir apparent or heir presumptive; 2 Bla. Com. 208; and the word heir may be used in a contract to designate the representative of a living person; Lockwood v. Jesup, 9 Conn. 272. A monster cannot be heir; Co. Litt. 7b; nor at common law could a bastard; 2 Kent 208. See BASTARD; DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION.

In the word heirs is comprehended heirs of heirs in infinitum; Co. Litt. 7b, 9a; Wood, Inst. 69. The words "heir" and "heirs" are interchangeable, and embrace all legally entitled to partake of the inheritance; Stokes v. Van Wyck, 83 Va. 724, 3 S. E. 387.

According to many authorities, heir may be nomen collectivum, as well in a deed as in a will, and operate in both in the same manner as the word heirs; 1 Rolle, Abr. 253; Ambl. 453; Cro. Eliz. 313; 1 Burr. 38. But see 2 Prest. Est. 9, 10. In wills, in order to effectuate the intention of the testator, the word heirs is sometimes construed to mean the next of kin; 1 Jac. & W. 388; Reen v. Wagner, 51 N. J. Eq. 1, 26 Atl. 467; and statutory next of kin; 41 L. T. Rep. N. S. 209; Tyson v. Tyson, 9 N. C. 472; the word "heir" can be construed as "distributees" or "representatives"; Eby's Appeal, 84 Pa. 245; and children; Ambl. 273; Lott v. Thompson, 36 S. C. 38, 15 S. E. 278; Baxter v. Winn, 87 Ga. 239, 13 S. E. 634; Franklin v. Franklin, 91 Tenn. 119, 18 S. W. 61; Barton v. Tuttle, 62 N. H. 558; Underwood v. Robbins, 117 Ind. 308, 20 N. E. 230; it can be construed to mean "heirs of his body"; Benson v. Linthicum, 75 Md. 144, 23 Atl. 133; and grandchildren; Woodruff v. Pleasants, 81 Va. 40.

When heir is used in a policy of life insurance or a benefit certificate, or in the constitution or by-laws of a benefit society, it is usually construed to mean all persons designated as distributees under intestate statutes; Estate of Comly, 136 Pa. 153, 20 Atl. 397; Kendall v. Gleason, 152 Mass. 457, 25 N. E. 838, 9 L. R. A. 509; Tompkins v. Levy & Bro., 87 Ala. 263, 6 South. 346, 13 Am. St. Rep. 31; Lee v. Baird, 132 N. C. 755, 44 S. E. 605; Thomas v. Covert, 126 Wis. 593, 105 N. W. 922, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 904, 5 Ann. Cas. 456. The widow is usually held to be included; Thomas v. Covert, 126 Wis. 593, 105 N. W. 922, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 904, 5 Ann. Cas. 456; Knights Templars & Masonic Mut. Aid Ass'n v. Greene, 79 Fed. 461; Hanson v. Relief Ass'n, 59 Minn. 123, 60 N. W. 1091; Northwestern Masonic Aid Ass'n of Chicago v. Jones, 154 Pa. 99, 26 Atl. 253, 35 Am. St. Rep. 810; Lyons v. Yerex, 100 Mich. 214, 58 N. W. 1112, 43 Am. St. Rep. 452; Alexander v. Aid Ass'n, 126 Ill. 558, 18 N. E. 556, 2 L. R. A. 161; Mullen v. Reed, 64 Conn. 240, 29 Atl. 478, 24 L. R. A. 664, 42 Am. St. Rep. 174.

She is an heir of her deceased husband only in a special and limited sense and not in the general sense in which that term is usually understood; Reynolds v. Stockton, 140 U. S. 270, 11 Sup. Ct. 773, 35 L. Ed. 464. Her right to share in a policy payable to "legal heirs" was denied where the insured left a child; Phillips v. Carpenter, 79 Ia. 600, 44 N. W. 898; and where a statute gave her half of her husband's personal estate as statutory dower; Johnson v. Knights of Honor, 53 Ark. 255, 13 S. W. 794, 8 L. R. A. 732.

On the death of a wife during the life of her husband, where insurance was to be paid to her, her heirs and assigns, he was held one of her heirs; U. B. Mut. Aid Society v. Miller, 107 Pa. 162. A divorced wife was held not one of the heirs of a member of a beneficiary society; Schonfield v. Turner, 75 Tex. 324, 12 S. W. 626, 7 L. R. A. 189.

See EXPECTANCY; SHIPLEY'S CASE, RULE IN. In Civil Law. He who succeeds to the rights and occupies the place of a deceased person. See the following titles, and HÆRES.

HEIR APPARENT. One who has an indefeasible right to the inheritance, provided he outlive the ancestor. 2 Bla. Com. 208.

HEIR AT LAW. He who, after his ancestor dies intestate, has a right to all lands, tenements, and hereditaments which belonged to him or of which he was seised. The same as heir general.

In its general definition heir at law is not limited to children; it may be and is often used, in cases where there are no children; it includes parents, brothers, sisters, etc.; Boman v. Boman, 49 Fed. 329, 1 C. C. A. 274, 7 U. S. App. 63.

HEIRS, BENEFICIARY. In Civil Law. Those who have accepted the succession under the benefit of an inventory regularly made. La. Civ. Code, art. 879. If the heir apprehend that the succession will be burdened with debts beyond its value, he accepts with benefit of inventory, and in that case he is responsible only for the value of the succession.

HEIR, COLLATERAL. One who is not of the direct line of the deceased, but comes from a collateral line: as, a brother, sister, an uncle and aunt, a nephew, niece, or cousin, of the deceased.

HEIR, CONVENTIONAL. In Civil Law. One who takes a succession by virtue of a contract—for example, a marriage contract—which entitles the heir to the succession.

HEIR, FORCED. One who cannot be disinherited. See FORCED HEIRS.

HEIR, GENERAL. Heir at common law.

HEIR, IRREGULAR. In Louisiana. One who is neither testamentary nor legal heir, and who has been established by law to take the succession. See La. Civ. Code, art. 874. When the deceased has left neither lawful descendants, nor ascendants, nor collateral relations, the law calls to his inheritance either the surviving husband or wife, or his or her natural children, or the state; id. art. 911. This is called an irregular succession.

HEIR, LEGAL. In Civil Law. A legal heir is one who is of the same blood as the deceased and who takes the succession by force of law. This is different from a testamentary or conventional heir, who takes the succession in virtue of the disposition of man. See La. Civ. Code, art. 873, 875; Dict. de Jurisp. Héritier Légitime. There are three classes of legal heirs, to wit: the children and other lawful descendants, the fathers and mothers and other lawful ascendants, and the collateral kindred. La. Civ. Code, art. 883. See Howe, Stud. Civ. L. 229.

HEIRLOOM. Chattels which, contrary to the nature of chattels, descend to the heir along with the inheritance, and do not pass to the executor.

This word seems to be compounded of heir, and loom, that is, a frame, viz. to weave in. Some derive the word loom from the Saxon loma, or geloma, which signifies utensils or vessels generally. However, this may be, the word loom, by time, is drawn to a more general signification than it bore at the first, comprehending all implements of household, as tables, presses, cupboards, bedsteads, wainscots, and which, by the custom of some countries, having belonged to a house, are never inventoried after the decease of the owner as chattels, but accrue to the heir with the house itself. Minshew; 2 Poll. & Maitl. 361.

Charters, deeds, and other evidences of the title of the land, together with the box or chest in which they are contained, the keys of a house, and fish in a fish-pond, are heirlooms. Co. Litt. 3 a, 185 b; 7 Co. 17 b, Cro. Eliz. 372; Brooke, Abr. Charters, pl. 13; 2 Bla. Com. 427; 14 Viner, Abr. 291.

Diamonds bequeathed to one "as head of the family" and directed "to be deemed heirlooms in the family" are held in trust for the legatee and his successors; 23 W. R. 592; chattels bequeathed upon trust to permit the same to go and be enjoyed by the person possessed of the title, in the nature of heirlooms, vest absolutely in the first taker; 23 Ch. D. 158; and to the testator's nephew to go to and be held as heirlooms by him and his eldest son on his decease, is held to create an executory trust with a life interest in the first taker; L. R. 6 Eq. 540. An election, by one who takes heirlooms under a deed of trust, to take under a will did not operate as a forfeiture of the heirlooms as the interest in them was unassignable; 31 Ch. D. 466.

There appear to be no cases of strict heirlooms in this country; but see Haven v. Haven, 181 Mass. 573, 64 N. E. 410.

HEIR PRESUMPTIVE. One, who, in the present circumstances, would be entitled to the inheritance, but whose rights may be defeated by the contingency of some nearer heir being born. 2 Bla. Com. 208. In Louisiana, the presumptive heir is he who is the nearest relation of the deceased capable of inheriting. This quality is given to him before the decease of the person from whom he is to inherit, as well as after the opening of the succession, until he has accepted or renounced it; La. Civ. Code, art. 876.

HEIR, TESTAMENTARY. In Civil Law. One who is constituted heir by testament executed in the form prescribed by law. He is so called to distinguish him from the legal heirs, who are called to the succession by the law; and from conventional heirs, who are so constituted by a contract inter vivos. See HÆRES FACTUS; DEVISEE.

HEIR, UNCONDITIONAL. In Louisiana. One who inherits without any reservation, or without making an inventory, whether the acceptance be express or tacit. La. Civ. Code, art. 878.

HEIRESS. A female heir to a person having an estate of inheritance. When there are more than one, they are called co-heiresses, or co-heirs.

HEIRSHIP MOVABLES. In Scotch Law. The movables which go to the heir, and not to the executor, that the land may not go to the heir completely disquieted, such as the best of furniture, horses, cows, etc., but not fungibles. Hope, Minor Pr. 538; Erskine, Inst. 3. 8. 13-17; Bell, Dict.

HELD. Used, in reference to the decision of a court, in the same sense as decided.

HELL. The name given to a place under the exchequer chamber, where the king's debtors were confined. Rich. Dict.

HELM. A tiller; the handle or wheel of a ship; a defensive covering for the head; a helmet; thatch or straw.

HELOWE-WALL. The end-wall covering and defending the rest of the building. Paroch. Antiq. 573.

HELSING. A Saxon brass coin, of the value of an English half-penny.

HEMOLDBORH, or HELMELBORCH. A title to possession. The admission of this old Norse term into the laws of the Conqueror is difficult to be accounted for; it is not found in any Anglo-Saxon law extant. Whart.

HENCHMAN. A footman; one who holds himself at the bidding of another. It has come to mean here a political follower; used in a rather bad sense.

HENEDPENNY. A customary payment of money instead of hens at Christmas. Cowell.

HENFARE. A fine for flight on account of murder. Domesday.

HENGEN. A prison for persons condemned to hard labor. Anc. Inst. Eng.

HENGHEN (ergastulum). In Saxon Law. A prison, or house of correction. Anc. Laws & Inst. of Engl. Gloss.

HENGWYTE. In Old English Law. An acquittance from a fine for hanging a thief. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, § 817. See HANGWITE.

HEORDFESTE. The master of a family; from the Saxon hearth faest, fixed to the house or hearth. Moz. & W.

HEORDPENNY. Peter-pence. Cowell.

HEORDWERCK. In Saxon Law. The service of herdsman, done at the will of their lord.

HEPBURN ACT. The name commonly given to an act of Congress, June 29, 1906, amending §§ 1, 6, 14, 15, 16 and 20 of the Interstate Commerce Act, Feb. 4, 1887, and adding §§ 16a and 24 thereto. See INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

HEPTARCHY. The name of the kingdom or government established by the Saxons in Britain: so called because it was composed of seven kingdoms, namely, Kent, Essex, Sussex, Wessex, East Anglia, Mercia, and Northumberland.

HER. In an indictment for rape the use of this word is sufficient to show that the person alluded to is a female; Warner v. State, 54 Ark. 660, 17 S. W. 6; but it has been held that in a written instrument the use of the pronoun "his" to designate a person therein named is not conclusive that such person is a male, and parol evidence will be admitted to show that such person is a female; Berniaud v. Beecher, 71 Cal. 38, 11 Pac. 802.

HERALD (from French hérald). An officer whose business it is to register genealogies, adjust ensigns armorial, regulate funerals and coronations, and, anciently, to carry messages between princes and proclaim war and peace.

In England, there are three chief heralds, called Kings of Arms, of whom Garter is the principal, instituted by Henry V., whose office is to attend the knights of the Garter at their solemnities, and to marshal the funerals of the nobility. The next is Clarenceux, instituted by Edward IV, so called from the duke of Clarence, and whose proper office is to arrange the funerals of all the lesser nobility, knights, and squires on the south side of Trent. The third Norroy (north roy), who has the like office on the north side of Trent. There are, also, six inferior heralds, who were created to attend dukes or great lords in their military expeditions. The office, however, has grown much into disuse,—so much falsity and confusion having crept into their records that they are no longer received in evidence in any court of justice. This difficulty was attempted to be remedied by a standing order of the house of lords, which requires Garter to deliver to that house an exact pedigree of each peer and his family on the day of his first admission; 3 Bla. Com. 105; Encyc. Brit.

See HERALDS' COLLEGE.

HERALDRY. (1) The science of heralds; (2) an old and obsolete abuse of buying and selling precedence in the paper of causes for hearing. 2 North's Life of Lord-Keeper Guilford, 2d ed. 86.

HERALDS' COLLEGE. In 1483 the heralds in England were collected into a College of Arms by Richard III. The Earl Marshal of England was chief of the college, and under him were three Kings of Arms (styled Garter, Clarenceux, Norroy), six heralds at arms (styled of York, Lancaster, Chester, Windsor, Richmond, and Somerset), and four pursuivants (styled Bluemantle, Rouge Croix, Rouge Dragon, and Portcullis). This organization still continues. Encyc. Brit. Their first residence was in Pulteney's Inn and until the present site was granted by Queen Mary (1554); the house being rebuilt, as it now stands, after the Great Fire. See HERALD.

HERBAGE. In English Law. An easement which consists in the right to pasture cattle on another's ground. A right to herb-age does not include a right to cut grass, or dig potatoes, or pick apples; Simpson v. Coe, 4 N. H. 303.

HERBAGIUM ANTERIUS. The first cutting of hay or grass, as distinguished from the aftermath. Paroch. Antiq. 459.

HERBERGAGIUM. Lodgings to receive guests in the way of hospitality. Cowell.

HERBERGARE. To harbor; to entertain.

HERBERGATUS. Spent in an inn. Cowell.

HERBERY, or HERBURY. An inn. Cowell.

HERCE, or HERCIA. A harrow. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 77.

HERCIARE. To harrow. 4 Inst. 270.

HERCIATURE. In Old English Law. Harrowing; work with a harrow. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 82, § 2.

HERCISCUNDA. In Civil Law. To be divided. Familia herciscunda, an inheritance to be divided. Actio familia herciscunda, an action for dividing an inheritance. Herciscunda is more commonly used in the civil law. Dig. 10, 2; Inst. 3 28, 4.

HERD-WERCH. Customary uncertain services as herdsmen, shepherds, etc. Anno 1166. Regist. Ecclesiæ Christi Cant. MS.; Cowell.

HEREAFTER. Used as an adverb, it does not necessarily refer to unlimited time; it is not a synonym for "forever." It rather indicates the direction in time merely to which the context refers, and is limited by it. Dobbins v. Cragin, 50 N. J. Eq. 640, 23 Atl. 172.

HEREBANNUM. Calling out the army by proclamation. A fine paid by freemen for not attending the army. A tax for the support of the army. Du Cange.

HEREBOTE. The king's edict commanding his subjects into the field. Cowell.

HEREDAD. In Spanish Law. A portion of land that is cultivated. Formerly it meant a farm, haciendo de campo, real estate.

HEREDAD YACENTE (From Lat. "hereditas jacens," q. v.). In Spanish Law. An inheritance not yet entered upon or appropriated. White, New Recop. b. 2, tit. 19, c. 2, § 8.

HEREDERO. In Spanish Law. Heir; he who, by legal or testamentary disposition, succeeds to the property of a deceased person. "Hæres censeatur cum defuncto una eademque persona." Las Partidas, 7, 9. 13.

HEREDITAGIUM. In Sicilian and Neapolitan Law. That which is held by hereditary right; the same hereditamentum (hereditament) in English Law. Spel. Gloss.

HEREDITAMENTS. Things capable of being inherited, be it corporeal or incorporeal, real, personal, or mixed, and including not only lands and everything thereon, but also heir-looms, and certain furniture which, by custom, may descend to the heir together with the land. Co. Litt. 5 b; 2 Bla. Com. 17; Chal. R. P. 43; Oskaloosa Water Co. v. City of Oskaloosa, 84 Ia. 407, 51 N. W. 18, 15 L. R. A. 296. By this term such things are denoted as may be the subject-matter of inheritance, but not the inheritance itself; it cannot, therefore, by its own intrinsic force, enlarge an estate prima facie a life estate, into a fee; 2 B. & P. 251; 8 Term 503.

HEREDITARY. That which is the subject of inheritance.

HEREDITARY RIGHT TO THE CROWN. The crown of England, by the positive constitution of the kingdom, has ever been descendible, and so continues, in a course peculiar to itself, yet subject to limitation by parliament; but, notwithstanding such limitation, the crown retains its descendible quality, and becomes hereditary in the prince to whom it is limited. 1 Bla. Com. c. 3.

HEREFARE (Sax.). A going into or with an army; a going out to war (profectio militaris); an expedition. Cowell; Spel. Gloss.

HEREGEAT. A heriot (q. v.).

HEREGELD. A tribute or a tax levied for the maintenance of an army. Moz. & W.; Spel. Gloss.

HERENACH. An arch-deacon. Cowell.

HERES. See HÆRES.

HERESLITA, HERESSA, HERESSIZ. A hired soldier who departs without license. 4 Inst. 123.

HERESY. An offence which consists not in a total denial of Christianity, but of some of its essential doctrines, publicly and obstinately avowed. What in old times used to be adjudged heresy was left to the determination of the ecclesiastical judge; and the statute 2 Hen. 4, c. 15, defines heretics as teachers of erroneous opinions, contrary to the faith and blessed determinations of the holy church. Various laws have been passed before and after the reformation explaining wholly or partially what is meant by heresy. Heresy is now subject only to ecclesiastical correction, by virtue of Stat. 29 Car. 2, c. 9; 4 Bla. Com. 44; 4 Steph. Com. 203. See EXCOMMUNICATION; ECCELESIASTICAL COURTS.

Since 1577 no person could be indicted in England for heresy, but it is said to be theoretically possible that one guilty of heresy may be excommunicated and imprisoned for six months by an ecclesiastical court; 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 386. See EXCOMMUNICATION.

HERETOCH. A general, leader, or commander, also a baron of the realm. Du Fresne.

HERETOFORE. Time past in distinction from time present and time future. Andrews v. Thayer, 40 Conn. 156.

HERETUM. In Old Records. A court or yard for drawing up guards or military retinue. Cowell; Jac. L. Dict.

HERGE. In Saxon Law. Offenders who joined in a body of more than thirty-five to commit depredation.

HERIOT. In English Law. A customary tribute of goods and chattels, payable to the lord of the fee on the decease of the owner of the land. If a man fell before his lord in battle, no heriot was demanded; 1 Poll. & Maitl. 293. It was the arms of the thegn, the stock of the peasant and the return to the lord of the capital he had advanced to the tenant. 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 51. See a late case in 1 C. B. 402.

Heriot service is such as is due upon a special reservation in the grant or lease of lands, and therefore amounts to little more than a mere rent. Heriot custom arises upon no special reservation whatsoever, but depends merely upon immemorial usage and custom. See 2 Bla. Com. 97, 422; Comyns, Dig. Copyhold (K 18); Bacon, Abr.; 2 Saund.; 1 Vern. 441. It was claimed as late as [1907] 1 Ch. 366. See 23 L. Q. R. 251.

HERISCHILD. A species of English military service.

HERISCHULDÆ. A fine for disobedience to proclamation of warfare. Skene.

HERISCINDIUM. A division of household goods. Blount.

HERISLIT. Laying down of arms. Blount. Desertion from the army. Spel. Gloss.

HERISTALL. A castle; the station of an army; the place where a camp is pitched. Spel. Gloss.

HERITABLE. See INHERITANCE.

HERITABLE OBLIGATION. One whose rights and duties descend to the heir, so far as the heir accepts the succession. Howe, Stud. Civ. L. 133.

HERITABLE SECURITY. Security constituted by heritable property. Encyc. Dict.

HERITAGE. In Civil Law. Every species of immovable which can be the subject of property: such as lands, houses, orchards, woods, marshes, ponds, etc., in whatever mode they may have been acquired, either by descent or purchase. 3 Toullier 472. See Co. Litt. s. 731.

HERMANDAD (called also, Santa Hermandad). In Spanish Law. A fraternity formed among different towns and villages to prevent the commission of crimes, and to prevent the abuses and vexations to which they were subjected by men in power.

To carry into effect the object of this association, each village and town elected two alcaldes,—one by the nobility and the other by the community at large. These had under their order inferior officers, formed into companies, called cuad villeros. Their duty was to arrest delinquents and bring them before the alcaldes, when they were tried substantially in the ordinary form. This tribunal, established during the anarchy prevailing in feudal times, continued to maintain its organization in Spain for centuries; and various laws determining its jurisdiction and mode of proceeding were enacted by Ferdinand and Isabella and subsequent monarchs. Nov. Recop. tit. 35, b. 12. § 7. The abuses introduced in the exercise of the functions of the tribunals caused their abolition, and the santas hermandades of Ciudad Rodrigo, Talavera, and Toledo, the last remnants of these anomalous jurisdictions, were abolished by the law of the 7th May, 1835.

HERMAPHRODITES. Persons who have in the sexual organs the appearance of both sexes. They are adjudged to belong to that sex which prevails in them; Co., Litt. 2. 7; Domat, Lois Civ. liv. 1, t. 2, s. 1, n. 9.

The sexual characteristics in the human species are widely separated, and the two sexes are very rarely united in the same individual; there are a few cases on record, however, in which both ovaries and testicles were present. In one there were two ovaries, a rudimentary uterus, and a single testicle containing spermatozoa. Am. Text Book of Gynecology. Cases of malformation are occasionally found, in which it is very difficult to decide to which sex the person belongs. In 2 Taylor, Med.-Leg. Jurispr. 80, is a report of a case of a wife who was divorced as "being an hermaphrodite with more of the male than female development." She was ordered to put on the clothes of a man.

See 2 Med. Exam. 314; 1 Briand, Med. Leg. c. 2, art. 2, § 2, n. 2; Guy Med. Jur. 42, 47; 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 11th ed. 164 et seq.; Wharton & S. Med. Jur. § 408 et seq.

HERMENEUTICS (Greek, ἐρμηνεύω, to interpret). The art and science, or body of rules, of truthful interpretation. It has been used chiefly by theologians; but Zachariæ, in "An Essay on General Legal Hermeneutics" (Versuch einer allg. Hermeneutik des Rechts), and Dr. Lieber, in his work on Legal and Political Hermeneutics, also make use of it. See INTERPRETATION; CONSTRUCTION.

HERMER. A great lord. Jacob.

HERMOGENIAN CODE. See CODE.

HERNESIUM, or HERNASIUM. Household goods; implements of trade or husbandry; the rigging or tackle of a ship. Cowell.

HEROUDES. Heralds. Du Cange.

HERPEX. A harrow. Spel. Gloss.

HERPICATIO. In Old English Law. A day's work with a harrow. Spel. Gloss.

HERRING SILVER. A composition in money for the custom of supplying herrings for a religious house. Whart.

HERSHIP. The crime, in Scotland, of carrying off cattle by force; it is described as "the masterful driving off of cattle from a proprietor's grounds." Bell.

HERUS. A master. Servus facit ut herus det, the servant does (the work), in order that the master may give (him the wages agreed on). Herus dat ut servus faciat, the master gives (or agrees to give, the wages), in consideration of, or with a view to, the servant's doing (the work). 2 Bla. Com. 445.

HESIA. An easement. Du Cange.

HEST CORN. Corn or grain given or devoted to religious persons or purposes. Cowell; 2 Mon. Ang. 367 b.

HESTA. A capon or young cockerel.

HIDAGE. In Old English Law. A tax levied, in emergencies, on every hide of land; the exemption from such tax. Bract. lib. 2, c. 56. It was payable sometimes in money, sometimes in ships or military equipments; e. g. in the year 994, when the Danes landed in England, every three hundred hides furnished a ship to king Ethelred, and every eight hides one pack and one saddle. Jacob, Law Dict. See HIDE.

HIDALGO (spelled, also, Hijodalgo). In Spanish Law. He who, by blood and lineage, belongs to a distinguished family, or is noble by descent. Las Partidas 2. 12. 3.

HIDE (from Sax. hyden, to cover; so, Lat. tectum, from tegere). In Old English Law. Originally a building with a roof; a house; a tenement.

As much land as might be ploughed with one plough. The amount was probably determined by usage of the locality; some make it sixty, others eighty, others ninety-six, others one hundred or one hundred and twenty, acres. Co. Litt. 5; 1 Plowd. 167; Shepp. Touchst. 93; Du Cange.

A hide was anciently employed as a unit of taxation. 1 Poll. & Maitl. 347, such tax being called hidegild.

As much land as was necessary to support a hide, or mansion-house. Co. Litt. 69 a; Spelman, Gloss.; Du Cange, Hida; 1 Introd. to Domesday 145.

The unit of superficial measure, at the time of the Domesday survey, usually found in the southern counties, while carucate or ploughland prevailed in the northern counties. Although these words had various customary values in different parts of the country, there is a good deal of evidence that, at the Conquest, there was a tendency to a mean or normal value of 120 acres for hide divided into four virgates or yardlands. The carucate was normally of the same acreage as hide, but divided into eight bovates or ox-gangs, implying the land which eight oxen (caruca) could till in a year. Pollock, English Manor 144.

There is much doubt as to what it was; it may have been 30 acres or thereabouts or 120 acres or thereabouts; Maitland, Domesday and Beyond 357, where the opinion is expressed that in Anglo-Saxon times it was 120 acres.

HIDE AND GAIN. In English Law. A term anciently applied to arable land. Co. Litt. 85 b.

HIDE LANDS. Lands appertaining to a hide, or mansion. See HIDE.

HIDEL. A place of protection; a sanctuary. St. 1 Hen. VII. cc. 5, 6; Cowell.

HIDGILD, or HIDE GILD. A sum of money paid by a villein or servant to save himself from whipping. Fleta, l. 1, c. 47, § 20.

HIERARCHY. Originally, government by a body of priests. Stubbs, Const. Hist. § 376. Now, the body of officers in any church or ecclesiastical institution, considered as forming an ascending series of ranks or degrees of power and authority, with the correlative subjection, each to the one next above.

HIGH BAILIFF. An officer attached to an English county court. His duties are to attend the court when sitting; to serve summons; and to execute orders, warrants, writs, etc. Stats. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, § 33; Poll. C. C. Pr. 16. He also had similar duties under the bankruptcy jurisdiction of the county courts. Bankruptcy Rules 1870, 58.

HIGH COMMISSION COURT. See COURT OF HIGH COMMISSION.

HIGH CONSTABLE. See CONSTABLE.

HIGH COURT OF ADMIRALTY. See ADMIRALTY.

HIGH COURT OF CHANCERY. See CHANCERY.

HIGH COURT OF DELEGATES. In English Law. See COURT OF DELEGATES.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE. See COURTS OF ENGLAND; JUDICATURE ACTS.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICIARY. See COURTS OF SCOTLAND.

HIGH COURT OF PARLIAMENT. The English Parliament, as composed of the house of peers and house of commons.

The house of lords sitting in its judicial capacity. See PARLIAMENT; COURTS OF ENGLAND; HOUSE OF LORDS.

HIGH CRIMES AND MISDEMEANORS. The constitution of the United States provides that the president, vice-president, and all civil officers of the United States shall be removed from office on impeachment, for treason, bribery, and other high crimes and misdemeanors. This does not apply to senators and members of congress, but does to United States circuit and district judges; Blount's Trial 102; Peck's Trial; 10 Law Trials; Chase's Trial; 11 id. See State v. Knapp, 6 Conn. 417, 16 Am. Dec. 68. See IMPEACHMENT.

HIGH SEAS. The uninclosed waters of the ocean, and also those waters on the sea-coast which are without the boundaries of low-water mark. U. S. v. Ross, 1 Gall. 624, Fed. Cas. No. 16,196; U. S. v. Grush, 5 Mas. C. C. 290, Fed. Cas. No. 15,268; 1 Bla. Com. 110; Bened. Adm.; 2 Hagg. Adm. 398.

Enclosed water on the sea coast and without the boundaries of low water mark. U. S. v. Imp. Co., 173 Fed. 426. The terms "high sea" and "main sea" are synonymous; id.

The act of congress of April 30, 1790, s. 8, enacts that if any person shall commit upon the high seas, or in any river, haven, basin, or bay, out of the jurisdiction of any particular state, murder, etc., which if committed within the body of a county would, by the laws of the United States, be punishable with death, every such offender, being thereof convicted, shall suffer death; and the trial of crimes committed on the high seas, or in any place out of the jurisdiction of any particular state, shall be in the district where the offender is apprehended, or into which he may first be brought. See U. S. v. McGill, 4 Dall. (U. S.) 426, 1 L. Ed. 894; U. S. v. Wiltherger, 3 Wash. C. C. 515, Fed. Cas. No. 16,738; U. S. v. Smith, 1 Mas. 147, Fed. Cas. No. 16,337; U. S. v. Seagrist, 4 Blatchf. 420, Fed. Cas. No. 16,245.

It was held in Ex parte Byers, 32 Fed. 406, that the Great Lakes are not high seas, and that these words have been employed from time immemorial to designate the ocean below low-water mark, and have rarely if ever been applied to interior or land-locked waters of any kind; but the supreme court of the United States has held otherwise, saying that this term is also applicable to the open, unenclosed waters of the Great Lakes; U. S. v. Rodgers, 150 U. S. 249, 14 Sup. Ct. 109, 37 L. Ed. 1071. See FAUCES TERRE; GREAT LAKES.

HIGH TREASON. In English Law. Treason against the king, in contradistinction from petit treason, which is the treason of a servant towards his master, a wife towards her husband, a secular or religious man towards his prelate. See PETIT TREASON; TREASON.

HIGH-WATER MARK. That part of the shore of the sea to which the waves ordinarily reach when the tide is at its highest. Storer v. Freeman, 6 Mass. 435, 4 Am. Dec. 155; Com. v. Charlestown, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 180, 11 Am. Dec. 161; Arnold v. Mundy, 6 N. J. L. 1, 10 Am. Dec. 356; 1 Russ. Cr. 107; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 803.

Wherever the presence of the water is so common as to mark on the soil a character, in respect to vegetation, distinct from that of the banks; it does not include low lands which, though subject to periodical overflow, are valuable for agricultural purposes. Carpenter v. Hennepin County, 56 Minn. 513, 58 N. W. 295. See FORESHORE; SEA-SHORE; TIDE.

HIGHWAY. A passage, road, or street which every citizen (person) has a right to use. 3 Kent 432; Republica v. Arnold, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 421.

The term highway is the generic name for all kinds of public ways, whether they be carriage-ways, bridle-ways, foot-ways, bridges, turnpike roads, railroads, canals, ferries, or navigable rivers; 6 Mod. 255; Ang. Highw. c. 1; 3 Kent 432. A cul de sac may be a highway; 11 East 375, note; 18 Q. B. 870; Danforth v. Durell, 8 Allen (Mass.) 242; People v. Kingman, 24 N. Y. 559 (overruling Holdane v. Cold Spring, 23 Barb. [N. Y.] 103); Sheaff v. People, 87 Ill. 189, 29 Am. Rep. 49; Fields v. Colby, 102 Mich. 449, 60 N. W. 1048 (but against the presumption that it is such is the fact "that it leads nowhere"; [1905] 2 Ch. 188); an alley would not be; Face v. City of Ionia, 90 Mich. 104, 51 N. W. 184.

A public right of way over a highway is not an easement, for there is no dominant tenement, and the public are incapable of taking a grant from any one; Odgers, C. L. 24. A private right of way is wholly distinct from a public right of way; it can be exercised only by the occupier of the dominant tenement and his family. See EASEMENT.

Highways are created either by legislative authority or by dedication.

First, by legislative authority. In England, the laying out of highways is regulated by act of parliament; in this country, by general statutes, differing in different states. In England, the uniform practice is to provide a compensation to the owner of the land taken for highways. In the act authorizing the taking, in the United States, such a provision must be made, or the act will be void under the clause in the federal and in the several state constitutions that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation. The amount of such compensation may be determined either by a jury or by commissioners, as shall be prescribed by law; 1 Bla. Com. 139; Highw. 233; 8 Price 535; McMasters v. Com., 3 Watts (Pa.) 292; Williams v. R. Co., 16 N. Y. 97, 69 Am. Dec. 651; Ford v. R. Co., 14 Wis. 609, 80 Am. Dec. 791. In case the statute makes no provision for indemnity for land to be taken, an injunction may be obtained to prevent the taking; Beekman v. R. Co., 3 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 45, 22 Am. Dec. 679; Gardner v. Newburgh, 2 Johns. Ch. (N.

Y. 162, 7 Am. Dec. 526; Cushman v. Smith, 34 Me. 247; see Kern v. Isgrigg, 132 Ind. 4, 31 N. E. 455; or an action at law may be maintained after the damage has been committed; Crittenden v. Wilson, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 165, 15 Am. Dec. 462; Denslow v. New Haven & N. Co., 16 Conn. 98, and cases cited above. See EMINENT DOMAIN.

The owner of the land over which it passes retains the fee and all rights of property not incompatible with the public enjoyment, such as the right to the herbage, the trees and fruit growing thereon, or minerals below, and may work a mine, sink a drain or cellar, or carry water in pipes beneath it, or sell the soil if it be done without injury to the highway; 4 Viner. As to other uses of city streets and compensation to abutters for damages resulting therefrom, see EMINENT DOMAIN.

The owners on the opposite sides prima facie own respectively to the centre line of the street; Cox v. Freedley, 33 Pa. 124, 75 Am. Dec. 584; Edsall v. Howell, 86 Hun 424, 33 N. Y. Supp. 892; Hinchman v. R. Co., 17 N. J. Eq. 75, 86 Am. Dec. 252. And a grant of land "by," or "on," or "along" a highway carries, by presumption, the fee to the centre line, if the grantor own so far, though this presumption may be rebutted by words showing an intention to exclude the highway, such as, "by the side of," "by the margin of," or other equivalent expressions; Bucknam v. Bucknam, 12 Me. 463; Stiles v. Curtis, 4 Day (Conn.) 328; In re Reed, 13 N. H. 381; Parker v. Framingham, 8 Metc. (Mass.)

266; Hughes v. R. Co., 2 R. I. 508; English v. Brennan, 60 N. Y. 609; Union Burial Ground Society v. Robinson, 5 Whart. (Pa.) 18. But, while in most of the states this is the rule, there are exceptions as, in Kansas and Nebraska, where the fee of highways is vested in the county; Challiss v. R. Co., 45 Kan. 398, 25 Pac. 894; Lindsay v. Omaha, 30 Neb. 512, 46 N. W. 627, 27 Am. St. Rep. 415; and in New York City where by act of 1813 the fee is vested in the municipality in trust for the public; People v. Kerr, 27 N. Y. 188; In re Ninth Ave. & Fifteenth St., 45 N. Y. 732; Washington Cemetery v. R. Co., 68 N. Y. 593; Kane v. R. Co., 125 N. Y. 164, 26 N. E. 278, 11 L. R. A. 640; and in Illinois, in the municipality in trust for the public; Gebhardt v. Reeves, 75 Ill. 301; Board of Trustees of Illinois & Michigan Canal v. Haven, 11 Ill. 554; Indianapolis, B. & W. R. Co. v. Hartley, 67 Ill. 439, 16 Am. Rep. 624; and it is held that even where the abutting owner does not own the fee in the highway, he has special rights therein not enjoyed by the public, as those of light, air, and access; In re New York Elevated R. Co., 36 Hun (N. Y.) 427; Rigney v. City of Chicago, 102 Ill. 64; Grafton v. R. Co., 21 Fed. 309; St. Paul & P. R. Co. v. Schurmeir, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 272, 19 L. Ed. 74; City of Denver v. Eq. 120, 14 Atl. 103; Town of Rensselaer v. Leopold, 106 Ind. 29, 5 N. E. 761. Where the fee of a highway is in the adjoining owner, it reverts to him upon a discontinuance, vacation, or abandonment; Van Amringe v. Barnett, 8 Bosw. (N. Y.) 372; Ott v. Kreiter, 110 Pa. 370, 1 Atl. 724; Dunham v. Williams, 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 136; Harris v. Elliott, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 26, 9 L. Ed. 333; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Patch, 28 Kan. 470. But in Illinois it is held that such land reverts to the original owner and not to the abutter who acquires title after the establishment of the way; Gebhardt v. Reeves, 75 Ill. 301.

In England, the inhabitants of the several parishes were at common law bound to repair all highways lying within them; 5 Burr. 2700; 56 J. P. 517. The care of highways is now largely regulated by statute; see 3 Steph. Com. 83.

The liability to repair is here determined by statute, and, in most of the states, devolves upon the towns, or other local municipalities; Morey v. Newfane, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 645; Loker v. Inhabitants of Brookline, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 343; Township of Plymouth v. Graver, 125 Pa. 24, 17 Atl. 249, 11 Am. St. Rep. 867; Fowler v. Strawberry Hill, 74 Ia. 644, 38 N. W. 521. The liability being thus created, its measure is likewise to be ascertained by statute, the criterion being, generally, safety and convenience for travel, having reference to the natural characteristics of the road and the public needs; Ang. Highw. § 259; Hull v. Richmond, 2 W. & M. 337, Fed. Cas. No. 6,861; Rice v. Montpelier, 19 Vt. 470; Cogswell v. Inhabitants of Lexington, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 307; Fitz v. City of Boston, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 365; Cobb v. Standish, 14 Me. 198. For neglect to repair, the parish in England, and in this country the town or body chargeable, is indictable as for a nuisance; 2 Wms. Saund. 158, n. 4; State v. Canterbury, 28 N. H. 195; Ang. Highw. § 275; and, in many states, is made liable, by statute, to an action on the case for damages in favor of any person who may have suffered special injury by reason of such neglect; Providence v. Clapp, 17 How. (U. S.) 161, 15 L. Ed. 72; Bacon v. Boston, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 174; Erie v. Schwingle, 22 Pa. 384, 60 Am. Dec. 87; Verrill v. Minot, 31 Me. 299; Clark v. Richmond, 83 Va. 355, 5 S. E. 369, 5 Am. St. Rep. 281; Klein v. City of Dallas, 71 Tex. 280, 8 S. W. 90. But to make a county liable, the defect in the highway must have been the sole cause of the injury; Phillips v. Ritchie County, 31 W. Va. 477, 7 S. E. 427. Contributory negligence defeats recovery for injuries caused by a defective highway; Laney v. Chesterfield County, 29 S. C. 140, 7 S. E. 56; Shonhoff v. R. Co., 97 Mo. 151, 10 S. W. 618; Phillips v. Ritchie County, 31 W. Va. 477, 7 S. E. 427.

The duty of repair may, in this country, rest on an individual to the exclusion of the town; Dyert v. Schenck, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 446, 35 Am. Dec. 575; or on a corporation who, in pursuance of their charter, built a road, and levy tolls for the expense of maintaining it; Goshen & Sharon Turnpike Co. v. Sears, 7 Conn. 86.

See TURNPIKE.

One who, knowing of a defect in a street or highway, uses it, is not, as matter of law, guilty of negligence, if, in the exercise of sound judgment, it may be deemed that with ordinary care and prudence the street may be used with safety; Mosheuvee v. District of Columbia, 191 U. S. 247, 24 Sup. Ct. 57, 48 L. Ed. 170; whether due care was used is a question for the jury; Mahoney v. R. Co., 104 Mass. 73; the same rule applies as to knowledge of snow and ice; Dewire v. Bailey, 131 Mass. 169, 41 Am. Rep. 219; and as to a tenant of a building using a common stairway; Looney v. McLean, 129 Mass. 33, 37 Am. Rep. 295. In New York the same rule prevails although the burden of showing due care is on the plaintiff; Pomfrey v. Saratoga Springs, 104 N. Y. 459, 11 N. E. 43; Weston v. Troy, 139 N. Y. 281, 34 N. E. 780.

The right of the public to pass extends over the entire highway; Cro. Eliz. 446; therefore telegraph poles were held a nuisance; 3 F. & F. 73.

Any act or obstruction which incommodes or impedes the lawful use of a highway by the public, except such as arises by necessity from unloading wagons, putting up buildings, etc., is a common-law nuisance; 4 Steph. Com. 294; 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 76; People v. Cunningham, 1 Denio (N. Y.) 524, 43 Am. Dec. 709; Clark v. Fry, 8 Ohio St. 358, 72 Am. Dec. 590; Com. v. Dicken, 145 Pa. 453, 22 Atl. 1043; City & County of San Francisco v. Buckman, 111 Cal. 25, 43 Pac. 396; Williams v. Hardin, 46 Ill. App. 67. A fruit stand on a city street is an obstruction; State v. Berdett, 73 Ind. 185, 38 Am. Rep. 117. The drawing large crowds before a shop window; Com. v. Passmore, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 219; the stopping teams or vehicles for such a time or at such a place as unreasonably to interfere with public travel; 3 Campb. 226; Turner v. Holtzman, 54 Md. 148, 39 Am. Rep. 361; Branahan v. Hotel Co., 39 Ohio St. 333, 48 Am. Rep. 457; State v. Edens, 85 N. C. 522 (but a reasonable necessity will justify a temporary obstruction; Jochem v. Robinson, 72 Wis. 199, 39 N. W. 383, 1 L. R. A. 178); collecting a noisy and disorderly crowd by music or speaking; Barker v. Com., 19 Pa. 412; State v. White, 64 N. H. 48, 5 Atl. 828; conducting an execution sale on the street; Com. v. Milliman, 13 S. & R. (Pa.) 403; are nuisances and may be abated by any one whose passage is thereby obstructed; 3 Steph. Com. 5; 5 Co. 101; Inhabitants of Arundel v. McCulloch, 10 Mass. 70; Williams v. Fink, 18 Wis. 265; or the person causing or maintaining the same may be indicted; 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 76; Thomp. Highw. 305; 2 Saund. 158, note; Renwick v. Morris, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 575; Com. v. King, 13 Metc. (Mass.) 115; or may be sued for damages in an action on the case by any one specially injured thereby; Co. Litt. 56 a; Hughes v. Heiser, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 463, 2 Am. Dec. 459; Pierce v. Dart, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 609; Stetson v. Faxon, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 147, 31 Am. Dec. 123; Milarkey v. Foster, 6 Or. 378, 25 Am. Rep. 531; Clark v. Lake, 1 Scam. (Ill.) 229; Osborn v. Ferry Co., 53 Barb. (N. Y.) 629; Martin v. Bliss, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 35, 32 Am. Dec. 52; and equity will take jurisdiction of a civil action to abate and enjoin the maintenance of an obstruction to a highway which is a public nuisance; Township of Hutchinson v. Filk, 44 Minn. 536, 47 N. W. 255. At common law the public have no right to pasture cattle on the highways; 2 H. Bla. 527; Stackpole v. Healy, 16 Mass. 33, 8 Am. Dec. 121; Harrison v. Brown, 5 Wis. 27.

The legislature has power to authorize certain obstructions which would otherwise be a public nuisance, such as the laying of railroad tracks or bridging of streams or constructing sewers, etc., or laying gas and water pipes; Com. v. R. Co., 14 Gray (Mass.) 93; Milburn v. City of Cedar Rapids, 12 Ia. 246; Randle v. R. Co., 65 Mo. 325; Williams v. R. Co., 16 N. Y. 97, 69 Am. Dec. 651; *Arlmond v. Co., 57 Me. 481, 2 Am. Rep. 59; Attorney General v. Booming Co., 34 Mich. 462; People v. Ferry Co., 68 N. Y. 71. See STREETS.

It is the duty of travellers upon highways, for the purpose of avoiding collision and accident, to observe due care in accommodating themselves to each other. To observe this purpose, it is the rule in England, that, in meeting, each party shall bear or keep to the left; and in this country, to the right; 2 Steph. N. P. 984; Story, Bailm. § 599; Thomp. Highw. 384; 2 Dowl. & R. 255; Norris v. Saxton, 158 Mass. 46, 32 N. E. 954. This rule, however, may and ought to be varied, where its observance would defeat its purpose; 8 C. & P. 103; Parker v. Adams, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 415, 46 Am. Dec. 694; Beach v. Parmeter, 23 Pa. 196. The rule does not apply to equestrians and foot-passengers; Dudley v. Bolles, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 465; Washburn v. Tracy, 2 D. Chipm. (Vt.) 128, 15 Am. Dec. 661; 8 C. & P. 373, 691; Mooney v. Bookbinding Co., 2 Misc. 238, 21 N. Y. Supp. 957; but it has been held to apply to bicyclists; Com. v. Forrest, 170 Pa. 40, 32 Atl. 652, 29 L. R. A. 365. It is another rule that travellers shall drive only at a moderate rate of speed, furious driving on a thronged thoroughfare being an indictable offence at common law; Stokes v. Saltonstall, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 181, 10 L. Ed. 115; 8 C. & P. 694. In case of injury by reason of the non-observance of these rules or of other negligence, as by the use of unsuitable carriages or harness, or horses imperfectly trained, the injured party is entitled to recover his damages in an action on the case against the culpable party, unless the injury be in part attributable to his own neglect; Fales v. Dearborn, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 345; 11 East 60; O'Neil v. East Windsor, 63 Conn. 150, 27 Atl. 237; Dean v. New Milford Tp., 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 545; 5 C. & P. 379; Rathbun v. Payne, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 399. The legislature has complete power to regulate the highways in a state, and may prescribe what vehicles may be used on them with a view to the safety of the passengers over them and the preservation of the roads; State v. Yopp, 97 N. C. 477, 2 S. E. 458, 2 Am. St. Rep. 305; it may regulate the improvement for the public good of highways, whether on land or by water, subject to the right of congress to interpose when such highways are the means of interstate and foreign commerce; Huse v. Glover, 119 U. S. 543, 7 Sup. Ct. 313, 30 L. Ed. 487. See Thompson; Pope, Highw.; Elliott, Roads & Streets; Booth, Street Ry.

If a highway be impassable, from being out of repair or otherwise, the public have a right to go on the adjoining ground, even when sown with grain and enclosed with a fence; but they must do no unnecessary damage; Cro. Car. 366; Campbell v. Race, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 408, 54 Am. Dec. 128; Williams v. Safford, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 309. This right, however, is only temporary and gives the public no permanent right; State v. Northumberland, 44 N. H. 628. Where the abutting owner fenced a highway through open country, he became, in such case, liable for repairs; 1 Rolle, Abr. 390.

HIGHWAYS, ROYAL. There were four royal highways in Yorkshire, three by land and one by water, where the king claimed all forfeitures. Maitl. Domest. Book and Beyond 87.

HIGLER. In English Law. A person who carries from door to door, and sells by retail, small articles of provisions, and the like.

HIGUELA. In Spanish Law. The written acknowledgment given by each of the heirs of a deceased person, showing the effects he has received from the succession.

HIIS TESTIBUS. Words formerly used in deeds, signifying these being witnesses. They have been disused since Henry VIII. Co. Litt.; Cowell.

HILARY RULES. Common-law rules of practice drawn up by the judges of the superior courts at Westminster under an act of parliament (1834) and laid before parliament. They may be found in 11 Law Mag. & Quart. Review 263 (1834).

HILARY TERM. In English Law. A term of court, beginning on the 11th and ending on the 31st of January in each year. Superseded (1875) by Hilary Sittings, which begin January 11th and end on the Wednesday before Easter. See TERM.

HINDENI HOMINES. A society of men in the Saxon times. Toml.

HINDER AND DELAY. A phrase used to signify an act amounting to an attempt to defraud rather than a successful fraud. To put some obstacle in the path of, or interpose some time unjustifiably, before a creditor can realize what is owed out of his debtor's property. Burnham v. Brennan, 42 N. Y. Super. Ct. 63. The question of fraudulent intent is one of fact; Burr v. Clement, 9 Col. 8, 9 Pac. 633. The word "hinder" is not synonymous with "delay"; Crow v. Beardsley, 68 Mo. 435.

HINDU LAW. The system of native law prevailing among the Gentoos, and administered by the government of British India.

It is not the law of India or of any defined region. It is the law of castes, class, orders and even families which the Hindus carry about with them. 17 L. Q. R. 209.

In all the arrangements for the administration of justice in India, made by the British government and the East India Company, the principle of reserving to the native inhabitants the continuance of their own laws and usages within certain limits has been uniformly recognized. The laws of the Hindus and Mohammedans have thus been brought into notice in England, and are occasionally referred to by writers on English and American law. The native works upon these subjects are very numerous. The chief English republications of the Hindu law are, Colebrooke's Digest of Hindu Law, London 1801; Sir Wm. Jones's Institutes of Hindu Law, London, 1797. For a fuller account of the Hindu Law, and of the original Digests and Commentaries, see Morley's Law of India, London, 1858, and Macnaghten's Principles of Hindu and Mohammedan Law, London, 1860. The principal English republications of the Mohammedan Law are Hamilton's Hedaya, London, 1791; Baillie's Digest, Calcutta, 1805; Précis de Jurisprudence musulmane selon le Rite malikite, Paris, 1848; and the treatises on Succession and Inheritance translated by Sir William Jones. See, also, Norton's Cases on Hindu Law of Inheritance; Rattigan, Hindu Law. An approved outline of both systems is Macnaghten's Principles of Hindu and Mohammedan Law; also contained in the "Principles and Precedents" of the same law previously published by the same author.

See Bryce, Extension of Law in 1 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. Leg. Hist. 597; Ilbert, Government of India; Sir W. Markby (1906); Mulla, Principles of Hindu Law.

HINE, or HIND. A servant, or one of the family, but more properly a servant at husbandry; and he that oversees the rest is called the master hine. Cowell; Moz. & W.

HINE-FARE. The loss or departure of a servant from his master. Domesd.

HINEGELD. A ransom for an offence committed by a servant. Cowell.

HIPOTECA. In Spanish Law. A mortgage of real property. Johnson, Civ. Law of Spain, 156 [149]; White, New Recop. b. 2, tit. 7.

HIRE. A bailment in which compensation is to be given for the use of a thing, or for labor and services about it. 2 Kent 456; Story, Bailm. § 359. The divisions of this species of contract are denoted by Latin names.

Locatio operis faciendi is the hire of labor and work to be done or care and attention to be bestowed on the goods let by the hirer, for a compensation.

Locatio operis mercium vehendarum is the hire of the carriage of goods from one place to another, for a compensation. Jones, Bailm. 85, 86, 90, 103, 118; 2 Kent 456.

Locatio rei or locatio conductio rei is the bailment of a thing to be used by the hirer for a compensation to be paid by him.

This contract is voluntary, and founded in consent; it involves mutual and reciprocal obligations; and it is for mutual benefit. In some respects it bears a strong resemblance to the contract of sale; the principal difference between them being that in cases of sale the owner parts with the whole proprietary interest in the thing, and in cases of hire the owner parts with possession only for a temporary purpose. In a sale, the thing itself is the object of the contract; in hiring, the use of the thing is its object; Vinnius, lib. 3, tit. 25, in pr.; Pothier, Louage, nn. 2-4; Jones, Bailm. 86; Story, Bailm. § 371.

Hiring a servant for a fixed sum per week, with no fixed period of duration, may be terminated by either party at any time without notice; Warden v. Hinds, 163 Fed. 201, 90 C. C. A. 449, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 529 and note; so if the contract is for a fixed sum per year; Martin v. Ins. Co., 148 N. Y. 117, 42 N. E. 416; Weldman v. Cigar Stores Co., 223 Pa. 160, 72 Atl. 377, 132 Am. St. Rep. 727 (dictum); Edwards v. R. Co., 121 N. C. 490, 28 S. E. 137; and per month; Kosloski v. Kelly, 122 Wis. 665, 100 N. W. 1037; The Pokanoket, 156 Fed. 241, 84 C. C. A. 49. Other cases hold that the hiring, in such case, is for the full period; Douglass v. Ins. Co., 118 N. Y. 484, 23 N. E. 806, 7 L. R. A. 822; Horn v. Land Ass'n, 22 Minn. 233; Bascom v. Shillito, 37 Ohio St. 431. So much per week or per month imports a contract for a week or a month; Beach v. Mullin, 34 N. J. L. 343. Where a salary was to be paid "in equal quarterly payments," it was held to be for a year; Kirk v. Hartman, 63 Pa. 97; so where there was a weekly compensation but the employee was to have a percentage "at the end of the year"; Babcock & Wilcox Co. v. Moore, 62 Md. 161. An offer of $1,000 a year, duly accepted, imports a contract for a year; Liddell v. Chidester, 84 Ala. 508, 4 South. 426, 5 Am. St. Rep. 387; so does a contract with a solicitor for a fixed sum per annum; 4 H. L. Cas. 624. It was held in Maynard v. Corset Co., 200 Mass. 1, 85 N. E. 877, that "salary" usually imports permanence. See MASTER AND SERVANT; BAILMENT.

HIREMAN. A subject. Du Cange.

HIRST, or HURST. In Old English Law. A wood. Domesd.; Co. Litt. 4 b.

HIS. A demise by A to B for the term of "his" natural life may enure as a demise either for the life of A or that of B according to circumstances; 2 Nev. and M. 838.

In a policy of insurance the word "his" instead of "their" as descriptive of the property of the assured, does not render the policy void, if the assured has an insurable interest, although the interest may be qualified or defeasible or even an equitable interest; Strong v. Ins. Co., 10 Pick. (Mass.) 40, 20 Am. Dec. 507; Hough v. Ins. Co., 29 Conn. 10, 76 Am. Dec. 581; Aetna Fire Ins. Co. v. Tyler, 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 385, 30 Am. Dec. 90; but where the policy expressly requires that a statement be made whether the insured owns the sole interest in the premises, the use of the word "his" instead of "their" amounts to a misrepresentation, if the insured is not the sole owner; Mers v. Ins. Co., 68 Mo. 127. See REPRESENTATION.

The ninth clause of the thirty-ninth section of the bankruptcy act does not apply to an accommodation indorser of negotiable paper whose indorsement is in no way connected with the business of the indorser, as such paper is not "his" commercial paper within the meaning of said clause; In re Clemens, 2 Dill. 533, Fed. Cas. No. 2,877.

HIS EXCELLENCY. A title given by the constitution of Massachusetts to the governor of that commonwealth. Mass. Const. part 2, c. 2, s. 1, art. 1. This title is customarily given to the governors of the other states, whether or not it be the official designation in their constitutions and laws; also to ambassadors.

HIS HONOR. A title given by the constitution of Massachusetts to the lieutenant governor of that commonwealth. Mass. Const. part 2, c. 2, s. 2, art. 1. It is also customarily given to some inferior magistrates, as the mayor of a city.

HISSA. A lot or portion; a share of revenue or rent. Wilson's Gloss. Ind.

HIWISC. According to Maitland (Domesday Book 359), a household.

HLAFORDSWICE (Sax. hlaford, lord, literally bread-giver, and wice). In Old English Law. Betraying one's lord; treason. Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law 59, 301.

HLASOCNE. The benefit of the law. Du Cange; Toml.

HLOTH (Sax.). An unlawful company. Moz. and W.

HLOTHBOTE (Sax. hloth, company, and bote, compensation). In Old English Law. Fine for presence at an illegal assembly. Du Cange, Hlotbota.

HOCK-TUESDAY MONEY. A duty given to the landlord, that his tenants and bondmen might solemnize the day on which the English mastered the Danes, being the second Tuesday after Easter week. Cowell.

HODGE-PODGE ACT. A name given to a legislative act which embraces many subjects. Such acts, besides being evident proofs of the ignorance of the makers of them, or of their want of good faith, are calculated to create a confusion which is highly prejudicial to the interests of justice. Instances of this legislation are everywhere to be found. See Barrington, Stat. 449. In many states bills, except general appropriation bills, can contain but one subject, which must be expressed in the title.

HOG. This word may include a sow; Shubrick v. State, 2 S. C. 21; a pig; Lavender v. State, 60 Ala. 60; Washington v. State, 58 Ala. 355; and may refer to dead as well as a living animal; Whitson v. Culbertson, 7 Ind. 195; Hunt v. State, 55 Ala. 140; Reed v. State, 16 Fla. 564; and it is synonymous with swine; Rivers v. State, 10 Tex. App. 177.

HOGA. In Old English Law. A hill or mountain. Domesday.

HOGHENHYNE (from Sax. hogh, house, and hine, servant). Third night servant.

Among the Saxons, a stranger guest was, the first night of his stay, called uncuth, or unknown; the second, gust, guest; the third, hoghhenhyne; and the entertainer was responsible for his acts as for those of his own servant. Bract. 124 b; Du Cange, Agénine; Spelman, Gloss. Homehine.

HOGSHEAD. A liquid measure, containing half a pipe; the fourth part of a tun, or sixty-three gallons.

HOKE DAY (Heck Day). A day of feasting or mirth kept formerly in England on the second or third Tuesday after Easter; Cent. Dict.; or, as a recent writer concludes, the first Sunday after Easter; 28 L. Q. Rev. 283, where it is suggested that it was originally the great spring festival of the pre-Roman British.

HOLD. A technical word in a deed introducing with "to have" the clause which expresses the tenure by which the grantee is to have the land. The clause which commences with these words is called the tenendum. See TENENDUM; HABENDUM.

For the distinction between the power to hold and the power to purchase, see Leazure v. Hillegas, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 313; Runyan v. Coster, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 122, 10 L. Ed. 382.

To decide, to adjudge, to decree: as, the court in that case held that the husband was not liable for the contract of the wife, made without his express or implied authority.

To bind under a contract: as, the obligor is held and firmly bound.

In the constitution of the United States it is provided that no person held to service or labor in one state under the laws thereof, escaping into another, shall, in consequence of any law or regulation therein, be discharged from such service or labor, but shall be delivered up on the claim of the party to whom such service or labor may be due. Art. iv. sec. ii. § 3. The main purpose of this provision in the constitution no longer exists, through the abolition of slavery; but it includes apprentices; Boaler v. Cummines, 1 Am. L. Reg. 654, Fed. Cas. No. 1,584. See FUGITIVE SLAVE; PEONAGE.

HOLD PLEAS. To hear or try causes. 3 Bla. Com. 35, 298.

HOLDER. The holder of a bill of exchange is the person who is legally in the possession of it, either by indorsement or delivery, or both, and entitled to receive payment either from the drawee or acceptor, and is considered as an assignee. Ludlow v. Bingham, 4 Dall. (U. S.) 53, 1 L. Ed. 736. And one who indorses a promissory note for collection, as an agent, will be considered the holder for the purpose of transmitting notices; Smedes v. Bank, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 372; Bowling v. Harrison, 16 How. (U. S.) 248, 12 L. Ed. 425. No one but the holder can maintain an action on a bill of exchange; Byles, Bills 2. See BILL OF EXCHANGE.

HOLDER FOR VALUE IN DUE COURSE.

See BONA FIDE HOLDER FOR VALUE.

HOLDING COMPANY. A corporation organized to hold the stock of another or other corporations. Such companies become legally possible by virtue of the legislation, which is said to exist in nearly all the states, which authorizes a corporation to hold and own the capital stock of other corporations.

Edgar H. Farrar (Am. B. Ass'n [1911] 241) said: "The most vicious of all the provisions in the statutes above enumerated is that authorizing one corporation to own and vote stock in another. This provision is the mother of the holding company and the trust. . . . Before these statutes were passed, the courts of the country had held with great unanimity that it is against public policy for one corporation to hold and vote stock in another, and the general ground of the doctrine is that such stockholding tends to restrain trade and to foster monopoly. That this doctrine is true has been demonstrated by the fact that most of the great trusts have clothed themselves in the form of holding companies." He points out a Utah statute of 1907 under which a Utah railroad company could acquire and control the stock of all transportation companies by land, river, lake, or sea, in the United States, all terminal docks, etc., and all express companies, etc., except the stock of a competing railroad situated within the state of Utah.

It is probably more usual to find a corporation adding to its own business the control, by such stock ownership, of other corporations. The legal principles involved appear to be the same. There are instances of unincorporated associations acting as holding companies: e. g., the Mackey companies controlling cable companies; see 1 Cook, Corp. 952. In Massachusetts a practice obtains of vesting corporate stocks in a body of trustees, who hold the stock and manage the corporations for the parties in interest. See TRUST ESTATES AS BUSINESS CORPORATIONS.

When a corporation asserts that it has power to hold stock in another corporation, the burden rests on it to show whence such power is derived; Mannington v. Ry. Co., 183 Fed. 133.

In U. S. v. Knight Co., 156 U. S. 1, 15 Sup. Ct. 249, 39 L. Ed. 325, where a New Jersey corporation controlled a majority of the manufacturers of sugar in the United States, and acquired a practical monopoly of the business, it was held that the business had no direct relation to commerce between the states and that the monopoly acquired by the corporation could not be suppressed under the Sherman act.

The acquisition by a corporation of a controlling interest in the stock of corporations owning or controlling and operating all the street railway lines in parts of the city of New York, underground, elevated and surface, is an unlawful monopoly and in violation of the stock corporation act of the state; Burrows v. Interborough Metropolitan Co., 156 Fed. 389 (C. C., S. D. of N. Y.).

Where a New Jersey holding company held more than nine-tenths of the stock of the Northern Pacific R. Co. and more than three-fourths of the stock of the Great Northern R. Co., operating competing lines of railroad, and issued its shares of stock to the depositing stockholders, it was held that the constituent companies became one consolidated corporation by the name of the holding company, the principal, if not the sole, object of which was to prevent competition between the constituent companies, that this was an illegal combination to restrain interstate commerce within the Sherman act, that on a bill by the Attorney General of the United States, the holding company would be enjoined from voting such stock and from exercising any action whatever over the acts of the railroad companies, and that the railroad companies would be enjoined from paying dividends to the holding corporation on any of their stock held by it; Northern Securities Co. v. U. S., 193 U. S. 197, 24 Sup. Ct. 436, 48 L. Ed. 679. The purchase by the Union Pacific R. Co. of forty-six per cent. of the stock of the Southern Pacific R. Co., with the resulting control of the latter by the former, is in restraint of trade and will be dissolved; U. S. v. R. Co., 226 U. S. 61, 33 Sup. Ct. 53, 57 L. Ed. 124.

Where the stock of two railroad companies is held by a holding company, it may be sufficient to bring them within the interstate commerce act where the joint work performed by both of them will do so; U. S. v. Stock Yard, 226 U. S. 286, 33 Sup. Ct. 83, 57 L. Ed. 226.

A Massachusetts statute forbids railroad companies from holding, directly or indirectly, the stock of any other corporation; see Attorney General v. R. Co., 198 Mass. 413, 84 N. E. 737; while in Connecticut one railroad company may buy a majority of the stock of another and in some cases condemn the minority holdings.

Where an insurance company acquired a majority of the stock of a trust company, and the latter acquired a majority of the stock of the former, it was held illegal upon a bill by a dissenting stockholder of the insurance company; Robotham v. Ins. Co., 64 N. J. Eq. 673, 53 Atl. 842.

A New Jersey corporation, with power to do so, may buy stock in another company and guarantee and agree to pay dividends on outstanding prior stock of the latter corporation; Windmuller v. Distilling Co., 186 N. Y. 572, 79 N. E. 1119; and may legally acquire a majority of the stock of street railways in different cities in Tennessee, if it does not create an unlawful restraint of trade; Clark v. Ry. Co., 123 Tenn. 232, 130 S. W. 751.

Where one railroad holds a small minority interest in another, no more than two-thirds, it is not an unlawful combination; State v. Missouri Ry. Co., 241 Mo. 1, 144 S. W. 863; but in Central R. Co. v. Collins, 40 Ga. 582, one railroad company was enjoined from purchasing a minority interest in a competing line.

The ownership of stock in a coal producing company by a railroad company does not cause it, as the owner of such stock, to have a legal interest in the commodity manufactured by the producing company; U. S. v. Delaware & H. Co., 213 U. S. 366, 29 Sup. Ct. 527, 53 L. Ed. 836.

A corporation owning all the stock of another corporation may take the profits of the latter without a declaration of a formal dividend, if other parties are not prejudiced; Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Trust Co., 135 Ga. 472, 69 S. E. 708.

A corporation organized in Delaware by residents of Pennsylvania, to own stock of and finance Pennsylvania corporations, having the same officers and substantially the same stockholders, and which maintains its office and holds directors' meetings, etc., in Pennsylvania, was held to be doing business in Pennsylvania and bound to register there under the statute; Colonial Trust Co. v. Brick Works, 172 Fed. 310, 97 C. C. A. 144.

Shares of stock in an elevator company owned by a railroad company do not become subject to the general mortgage of the latter; Humphreys v. McKissock, 140 U. S. 304, 11 Sup. Ct. 779, 35 L. Ed. 473; but it is held that stock belonging to a railroad passes to its receiver when foreclosure of a mortgage is begun, and becomes subject thereto; Herring v. R. Co., 105 N. Y. 340, 12 N. E. 763.

The subject is fully treated in Cook, Corporations. See VOTING TRUSTS; RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

HOLDING OVER. The act of keeping possession by the tenant, without the consent of the landlord, of premises which the latter, or those under whom he claims, had leased to the former, after the term has expired.

When a proper notice has been given, this injury is remedied by ejectment, or, under local regulations, by summary proceedings. See Lesley v. Randolph, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 123; 2 Bla. Com. 150; 3 id. 210; Woodf. L. & T. 788. A tenant enters on another term by holding over, notwithstanding his inability to move on the day the term ended; Haynes v. Aldrich, 133 N. Y. 287, 31 N. E. 94, 28 Am. St. Rep. 636; Cavanaugh v. Clinch, 88 Ga. 610, 15 S. E. 673. If a lessee for years holds over, the landowner has the legal option to treat him as a trespasser or as a tenant for another year; Scott v. Beecher, 91 Mich. 590, 52 N. W. 20; Voss v. King, 38 W. Va. 607, 18 S. E. 762; Hall Steam Power Co. v. Printing Press & Mfg. Co., 8 Misc. 430, 28 N. Y. Supp. 662. And the law presumes this holding to be upon the terms of the original demise; Voss v. King, 38 W. Va. 607, 18 S. E.

762. See Haeussler v. Paper-Box Co., 49 Mo. App. 631; LANDLORD AND TENANT; FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER.

The term is also applied to the retaining possession of a public office by an incumbent, after his term has expired, which is not always unlawful, as such action is sometimes authorized by statute or common law, to prevent an interregnum.

HOLIDAY. A religious festival; a day set apart for commemorating some important event in history; a day for exemption from labor. Webster, Dict. (Webster applies holyday especially to a religious, holiday to a secular festival.) In England they are either by act of legislation, or by ancient usage, and are now regulated by the Bank Holiday Act of 1871, extended by the act 38 Vict. c. 13. Fasts and thanksgiving days are also occasionally appointed by the crown. See Wharton, Dict.; 2 Burn. Eccl. Law 308.

In the dark ages, the church repressed the blood-feuds during certain seasons. These were "holy days" (holidays) in which the avenger of blood could not challenge the accused to battle. Jenks, Hist. E. L. 157.

In the United States there are no established holidays of a religious character having a legal status without legislation, and the lack of precision in the earlier statutes on the subject has given rise to much confusion and a great variety of definition. It has been said that a legal holiday is, ex vi termini, dies non juridicus; Lampe v. Manning, 38 Wis. 673; but this case does not warrant so broad a statement; 29 Am. L. Reg. 139. One thing which seems to be absolutely settled is that a legal holiday does not have the legal relations of Sunday, which was clothed with the idea of sanctity and is in its very nature dies non juridicus. Legal holidays are, however, merely the creation of statute law, and the lack of uniformity in the statutes of the several states makes the term itself very difficult of exact definition. The various definitions of the term holiday are collected in an article on the subject in 29 Am. L. Reg. 137, the writer of which thus states the conclusion reached after a critical examination of them: "Legal holidays as distinguished from the first day of the week are those days which are set apart by statute or by executive authority for fasting and prayer, or those given over to religious observance and amusements, or for political, moral or social, duties or anniversaries, or merely for popular recreation and amusement under such penalties and prohibitions alone as are expressed in positive legislative enactments."

The earlier statutes had for their object, mainly, the regulation of commercial paper falling due on days which were by general consent observed as holidays. Under such statutes it is simply provided that such paper payable upon the day named shall be due and payable on the day before or the day after. The difference in the statute law of several states as to this point is stated infra. As in the statutes, the day is specified and they are construed with exactness, there is little in the way of decision on this subject. It has been held that usage at a bank known to the parties to a note is sufficient to make a holiday such as to change the day for demanding payment, at least so far as to authorize a tender by the endorser on the following day; President of City Bank v. Cutter, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 414. In most of the states it is the rule, and such is the general commercial usage, to allow only two days of grace where the third would fall on a holiday, and to authorize demand of payment and protest on the day next preceding it. The question when a note falling due on a legal holiday which happens to be Sunday is legally payable is to be determined as in the case of any other note falling due on Sunday. This is so by general usage without special provision by statute. In New Jersey a note falling due on the 30th of May, Decoration Day, when Sunday, cannot be presented and protested for nonpayment until the following Tuesday; Hagerty v. Engle, 43 N. J. L. 299. Where paper is drawn without grace, payment may not be demanded until the next day; Commercial Bank of Kentucky v. Varnum, 49 N. Y. 269; as in the case with respect to Sunday; Salter v. Burt, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 205, 32 Am. Dec. 530; Avery v. Stewart, 2 Conn. 69, 7 Am. Dec. 240.

The rule of commercial paper as affected by holidays has been applied for the sake of uniformity to other maturing contracts; Siegbert v. Stiles, 39 Wis. 533. In some states, as California, the Dakotas, Idaho, and Massachusetts, the statutes extend the time for the performance of all contracts, except works of charity or necessity, to the next following day; but in Kentucky it was held that there being nothing in the statute prohibiting business transactions on a holiday, the performance of a contract was required according to its terms; National Mut. Ben. Ass'n v. Miller, 85 Ky. 88, 2 S. W. 900; and this, it has been said, is the reasonable and logical view, the doctrine of the Wisconsin case being probably founded upon the confusion of holidays with Sundays; 29 Am. L. Reg. 153.

The Uniform Negotiable Instruments Act (see NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS for the states in which it is in force) provides that when the day or the last day for doing any act required or permitted to be done "falls on Sunday or on a holiday, the act may be done on the next succeeding secular or business day"; sec. 194.

Judicial proceedings are usually invalid on holidays, and in most of the state statutes such proceedings are expressly prohibited, but a mere statutory provision requiring that public offices be closed does not prevent the sitting of courts or the discharge of judicial duties by judges; People v. Kearney, 47 Hun (N. Y.) 129; which are valid unless prohibited by a statute; Russ v. Gilbert, 19 Fla. 54.

The following acts have been held valid when wholly or partially done upon a holiday; a sheriff's sale; Crabtree v. Whiteselle, 65 Tex. 111; a criminal examination on which a commitment was based; Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 175; giving a case to the jury in a trial for murder; State v. Sorenson, 32 Minn. 118, 19 N. W. 738; or trying a murder case; Pender v. State, 12 Tex. App. 496; the conclusion of such trial and the conviction of the prisoner; State v. Moore, 104 N. C. 743, 10 S. E. 183; Pfister v. State, 84 Ala. 432, 4 South. 395; entering a judgment by a justice of the peace; Bear v. Youngman, 19 Mo. App. 41; Elrod v. Lumber Co., 92 Tenn. 476, 22 S. W. 2; commencing a criminal trial; Dunlap v. State, 9 Tex. App. 179, 35 Am. Rep. 736; hearing a civil case; Houston, E. & W. T. Ry. Co. v. Harding, 63 Tex. 162; service of process; Nichols v. Kelsey, 20 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 14; People v. Board of Sup'rs, 50 Hun 105, 3 N. Y. Supp. 751; notice of days of election; Whitney v. Blackburn, 17 Or. 564, 21 Pac. 874, 11 Am. St. Rep. 857; return of process; Kinney v. Emery, 37 N. J. Eq. 339; McEvoy v. Trustees of School Dist., 38 N. J. Eq. 420, which see as to legal proceedings, and see also *Gould v. Memorial day is not dies non; Morel v. Stearns, 75 N. Y. Supp. 1082, 37 Misc. 486.

The following acts have been held invalid: the appointment of justices to hear the disclosure of an insolvent debtor; Poor v. Beatty, 78 Me. 580, 7 Atl. 541; entering judgment by default; Bierce v. Smith, 2 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 411; entering a judgment where the statute prescribed that the day should be for all purposes whatever considered as the first day of the week; Spiedel Grocery Co. v. Armstrong, 8 Ohio C. C. 489, 4 O. C. D. 498.

With respect to ministerial acts the question may arise whether attendance of the officer and the performance of the duty is required, and this is to be settled entirely by the language of the statute. With respect to the validity of such acts performed on a holiday, unless expressly made void by statute, the general rule is that an officer may act. This is held even where the statute expressly prohibits the transaction of judicial business, so an order of attachment past due is ministerial business, and may be issued where such a statute exists; Whipple v. Hill, 36 Neb. 720, 55 N. W. 227, 20 L. R. A. 313, 38 Am. St. Rep. 742. Acts which have been held ministerial are taking a judgment; In re Worthington, 7 Biss. 455, Fed. Cas. No. 18,051; the entry of a judgment on a warrant of attorney; Paine v. Fesco, 1 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 562; a sale for taxes; Hadley v. Musselman, 104 Ind. 459, 3 N. E. 122; the issuing of a summons by a justice of the peace; Smith v. Ihling, 47 Mich. 614, 11 N. W. 408; but where the statute prohibits judicial business a trial and judgment would not be valid; Lampe v. Manning, 38 Wis. 673; and it has been held that a sheriff's sale was not void because made on a holiday and, if confirmed, the title would not be endangered, but that it was not a proper day and that, upon exception, the sale would have been set aside; Rice v. Gable, 1 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 567.

For loading or unloading ships in maritime commerce, in the absence of any statute to the contrary or established general usage, the annual fast day in Massachusetts must be considered as an ordinary working day; The Tangier, 1 Cliff, 383, Fed. Cas. No. 13,743.

In the absence of statutory requisitions it was held that a school should be allowed the legal holidays without deduction of salary to the teachers; School Dist. No. 4 v. Gage, 39 Mich. 484, 33 Am. Rep. 421.

The taking of an acknowledgment or deposition is usually held valid if performed upon a legal holiday, as being not a judicial act but private business; Rogers v. Brooks, 30 Ark. 612; Green v. Walker, 73 Wis. 548, 41 N. W. 534; Slater v. Schack, 41 Minn. 269, 43 N. W. 7. Under a statute excluding from computation of time for serving papers Sunday, a holiday, or Saturday, which is made a half-holiday, is excluded; Fries v. Coar, 19 Abb. N. C. 267.

An act making Saturday afternoon a legal half-holiday so far as regards the transaction of business in the public offices does not apply to proceedings by a municipal common council, and an ordinance passed on Saturday afternoon is valid; Mueller v. Egg Harbor City, 55 N. J. L. 245, 26 Atl. 89.

Acts designating holidays for the presentment and payment of commercial paper constitute them such for that purpose only; State v. Atkinson, 139 Ind. 426, 39 N. E. 51. Such an act does not apply to other business transactions; Nat. Mut. Benefit Ass'n v. Miller, 85 Ky. 88, 2 S. W. 900. An act providing that a holiday shall be considered the same as Sunday, and an act forbidding the holding of courts on Sunday, and one forbidding service of process on February 22d do not invalidate a sale on that day under a power in a deed of trust; Stewart v. Brown, 112 Mo. 171, 20 S. W. 451.

Under a statute providing that no court shall be open or transact any business on any legal holiday, unless it be to instruct or discharge a jury, or receive a verdict and render judgment thereon, an assignment for the benefit of creditors was not avoided by the fact that the assignee's bond was approved by a court commissioner on a legal holiday, though that be considered a judicial act; Spaulding & Bro. v. Bernhard, 76 Wis. 368, 44 N. W. 643, 7 L. R. A. 423, 20 Am. St. Rep. 75. Under a rule of reference fixing Decoration Day as the day for choosing arbitrators, the defendant could not be required to attend on a legal holiday and the proceedings were void; Doles v. Powell, 9 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 207.

HOLLAND. A constitutional monarchy. The crown is hereditary in the male line, or, failing male heirs, in the female line. The sovereign has the sole executive authority. He establishes ministerial departments under responsible ministers, and shares the legislative power with the first and second chambers of the parliament which constitute the States-General and sits at The Hague. The first chamber has fifty members, chosen by the provincial states for nine years. The members of the second chamber are chosen for four years in electoral districts, by male voters over twenty-three years of age, possessing a certain taxable qualification. The highest court of justice is the High Council at The Hague. There are five other courts of justice in five different cities; and courts in each arrondissement and cantonal judges. The constitution was formed in 1815 and revised in 1848 and 1887. Encycl. Br.

HOLOGRAFO. In Spanish Law. Olographi. A term applicable to the paper, document, disposition, and more particularly to the last will of a person, which in order to be valid must be wholly written, signed, and dated by the testator. "Holographum, apud Testum, appellatur testamentum, quod totum manu testatoris scriptum est et subsignatum."

HOLOGRAPH. What is written with one's own hand. A term which signifies that an instrument is wholly written by the party. See La. Civ. Code, art. 1581; Code Civ. 970; 5 Toullier, n. 357; 1 Stu. Low. C. 327. See WILL.

HOLY GHOST'S PENNY. See GOD'S PENNY.

HOLY ORDERS. In Ecclesiastical Law. The orders or dignities of the church. Those within holy orders are archbishops, bishops, priests, and deacons. The form of ordination in England must be according to the form in the Book of Common Prayer. Besides these orders, the church of Rome had five others, viz.: subdeacons, acolytes, exorcists, readers, and ostiaries. 2 Burn, Eccl. Law 39.

HOMAGE (anciently hominium, from homo). A mere acknowledgment of tenure made by a tenant by knight-service upon investiture, in the following form:

The tenant in fee or fee-tail that holds by homage shall kneel upon both his knees, ungirded, and the lord shall sit and hold both the hands of his tenant between his hands, and the tenant shall say, "I become your man (homo) from this day forward of life, and member, of earthly honor, and to you shall be faithful and true, and shall bear to you faith for the lands that I claim to hold of you, saving that faith that I owe to our lord the king;" and then the lord so sitting shall kiss him. The kiss is indispensable (except sometimes in the case of a woman. Du Cange). After this the oath of fealty (q. v.) is taken; but this may be taken by the steward, homage only to the lord. Termes de la Ley. This species of homage was called homagium planum or simplex, 1 Bla. Com. 367, to distinguish it from homagium ligium, or liege homage, which included fealty and the services incident. Du Cange; Spelman, Gloss.

Liege homage was that homage in which allegiance was sworn without any reservation, and was, therefore, due only to the sovereign; and, as it came in time to be exacted without any actual holding from him, it sunk into the oath of allegiance. Termes de la Ley.

The obligation of homage is mutual, binding the lord to protection of the vassal, as well as the vassal to fidelity. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 16.

See FEALTY.

HOMAGE ANCESTRAL. Homage was so called where time out of mind a man and his ancestors had held by homage; and in this case the lord who had received the homage was bound to acquit the tenant of all services to superior lords, and, if vouched, to warrant his title. If the tenant by homage ancestral aliened in fee, his alienee held by homage, but not by homage ancestral. Termes de la Ley; 2 Bla. Com. 300.

HOMAGE JURY. The jury of a lord's court, or court baron: so called because generally composed of those who owed homage to the lord, or the pares curiæ. Kitchen; 2 Bla. Com. 54, 366.

HOMAGER. One that is bound to do homage to another. Jacob, Law Dict.

HOMAGIO RESPECTUANDO. A writ to the escheator commanding him to deliver seisin of land to the heir of full age, notwithstanding his homage not done which ought to be performed before the heir had livery, except there fall out some reasonable cause to hinder him. Termes de la Ley.

HOMAGIUM LIGIUM. See HOMAGE.

HOMAGIUM PLANUM. See HOMAGE.

HOMAGIUM REDDERE. The renunciation of homage, as when a vassal made a final declaration of defying his lord, of which there was a set form and method prescribed by the feudal law. Jac. L. Dict.

HOMBRE BUENO. In Spanish Law. The ordinary judge of a district.

Arbitrators chosen by litigants to determine their differences.

Persons competent to give testimony in a cause. L. 1. t. 8, b. 2, Fuero Real.

HOME. That place or country in which one in fact resides with the intention of residence, or in which he has so resided, and with regard to which he retains either residence or the intention of residence. Dicey, Conf. L. 81.

"'Home' and 'domicil' do not correspond, yet 'home' is the fundamental idea of 'domicil.' The law takes the conception of 'home,' and moulding it by means of certain fictions and technical rules to suit its own requirements, calls it 'domicil.' Or perhaps this may be best expressed by slightly altering Westlake's statement, 'Domicil is, then, the legal conception of residence,' etc., and saying, 'Domicil is, then, the legal conception of home.' 'Domicil' expresses the legal relation existing between a person and the place where he has, in contemplation of law, his permanent home." Jac. Dom. c. 3, § 72.

A person having a dwelling-house in each of two towns of the state may have his home in one town for the purposes of taxation, although he spends the greater portion of the year in the other, and is there on the first of May; Thayer v. City of Boston, 124 Mass. 132, 26 Am. Rep. 650. In this case domicil for taxation and home are treated as synonymous. The principal place of abode of a man and his family, when it is only a temporary abode, is not his home in the sense here required; Thayer v. City of Boston, 124 Mass. 147, 26 Am. Rep. 650.

Dwelling-place, or home, means some permanent abode or residence, with intention to remain; and it is not synonymous with domicil, as used in international law, but has a more restricted meaning; Inhabitants of Jefferson v. Washington, 19 Me. 293.

They do not, necessarily, continue until another is acquired; it may be abandoned, and the individual cease to have any home; id. One who abandons his home or dwelling-house, with or without design of acquiring one elsewhere, has no home by construction, in the place abandoned; id. This case was disapproved and it was held that the town domicil, not being used in a statute (under construction) to indicate a particular status as to habitation can only be used properly as synonymous with the town residence, dwelling-place, or home; Inhabitants of Warren v. Thomaston, 43 Me. 406, 69 Am. Dec. 69.

The maxim that "a man's house is his castle" does not protect a man's house as his property or imply that, as such, he has a right to defend it by extreme means. The sense in which the house has a peculiar immunity is that it is sacred for the protection of the man's person. A trespass upon his property is not a justification for killing the trespasser. It is a man's house, barred and inclosing his person, that is his castle. The lot of ground on which it stands has no such sanctity. When a man opens his door and puts himself partly outside of it, he relinquishes the protection which, remaining within and behind closed doors, it would have afforded him. Com. v. McWilliams, 21 Pa. Dist. R. 1131.

See DOMICIL; HOMESTEAD; FAMILY.

HOME PORT. Any port within a state in which the owner of a ship resides.

The question as to what constitutes a foreign port has usually arisen respecting the claims of material-men for supplies furnished to the master, and in this respect it has been held that the home port of a vessel does not necessarily imply the limits of the state in which her owner resides; The Merino, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 401, 6 L. Ed. 118; contra, The William and Emmeline, 1 Blatchf. & H. 66, Fed. Cas. No. 17,687, where Charleston, S. C., was held a foreign port in respect to New York.

In England by the Mercantile Law Amendment Act it is provided that every port within the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Islands of Man, Guernsey, Jersey, Alderney, and Stark, and the islands adjacent to any one of them, being part of the dominions of Her Majesty, shall be deemed a home port; 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97. See BOTTOMRY; PORT.

HOMESTALL. The mansion-house.

HOMESTEAD. The home place—the place where the home is. It is the home—the house and the adjoining land—where the head of the family dwells—the home farm. Hoitt v. Webb, 36 N. H. 166.

The place of a home or house; that part of a man's landed property which is about and contiguous to his dwelling-house; the land, or town, or city lot, upon which the family residence is situated. McKenzie v. Murphy, 24 Ark. 158; McCrosky v. Walker, 55 Ark. 303, 18 S. W. 169; Linn County Bank v. Hopkins, 47 Kan. 580, 28 Pac. 606, 27 Am. St. Rep. 309.

The term necessarily includes the idea of a residence; Stanley v. Greenwood, 24 Tex. 224, 76 Am. Dec. 106. It must be the owner's place of residence—the place where he lives; Philleo v. Smalley, 23 Tex. 502.

The homestead laws of various states are constitutional or statutory provisions for the exemption of a certain amount or value of real estate occupied by a debtor as his homestead from a forced sale for the payment of his debts. In some cases restraints are placed upon the alienation by the owner of his property, and in some cases the exempt property, upon the death of the owner, descends to the widow and minor children, free from liability for his debts. They are of a comparatively recent origin; Barney v. Leeds, 51 N. H. 261; but are now said to exist in all but seven states; Thomp. Hom. & Ex. Their policy has been eulogized in many decided cases. See Cook v. McChristian, 4 Cal. 26; Charless v. Lamberson, 1 Ia. 439, 63 Am. Dec. 457; Franklin v. Coffee, 18 Tex. 415, 70 Am. Dec. 292; Thomp. Hom. & Ex. § 1.

Homestead acts have generally received a liberal construction; Campbell v. Adair, 45 Miss. 182; Mills v. Grant's Estate, 36 Vt. 271; Buxton v. Dearborn, 46 N. H. 43; contra, Fuselier v. Buckner, 28 La. Ann. 594; Olson v. Nelson, 3 Minn. 53 (Gil. 22). They cannot be considered as in derogation of the common law, inasmuch as, at common law, real estate was not liable to execution for the payment of debts; Thomp. Hom. & Ex. § 4; Lindley v. Davis, 7 Mont. 206, 14 Pac. 717; but see Ward v. Huhn, 16 Minn. 161 (Gil. 142); Beecher v. Baldy, 7 Mich. 501; Helfenstein & Gore v. Cave, 3 Ia. 287. Exemption laws giving a right to a homestead are for protection of the citizens of the state only; Prater v. Prater, 87 Tenn. 78, 9 S. W. 361, 10 Am. St. Rep. 623.

In some states there is a money limit put to the homestead; in others a limit of the quantity of land exempted. The value, under the statute, is the value at the time the homestead is designated; Iken v. Olenick, 42 Tex. 199; contra, Estate of Delaney, 37 Cal. 180. The courts cannot exempt money instead of land; Beecher v. Baldy, 7 Mich. 500; but see Estate of Delaney, 37 Cal. 180, where it was held that if the homestead exceeded the constitutional limit of value, and enough of it could not be separated and subjected to execution to reduce the value to that limit, the property would be sold and the constitutional amount set apart to the debtor. But where it can be separated, it will be, although it is within the same enclosure and used in connection with the dwelling for the use of the family; Herdman v. Cooper, 39 Ill. App. 330. In Casebolt v. Donaldson, 67 Mo. 308, it was held that the law confers a homestead right only in land and not in the proceeds of the sale of land.

therein: Avans v. Everett, 3 Lea (Tenn.) 76; Greig v. Eastin, 30 Ia. Ann. 1130; McGrath v. Sinclair, 55 Miss. 89; Watson v. McKinnon, 73 Tex. 210, 11 S. W. 197; so where land is held by the parties as partners; Commercial & Sav. Bank v. Corbett, 5 Savy. 543, Fed. Cas. No. 3,058. A learned author gives as the conclusive test of a homestead—"that the form, physical characteristics, and geography of the premises must be such as, when taken in connection with their use by the owner, and their value when the statute creates a limit as to value, will convey notice to persons of ordinary prudence who deal with him that they are his homestead." Thomp. Hom. & Ex. § 104, citing Houston & G. N. R. Co. v. Winter, 44 Tex. 597, as sustaining this doctrine.

"The courts have generally held that the mere fact that the debtor carries on his business upon his homestead premises or rents out a portion thereof, as in case of one who keeps a country tavern; Ackley v. Chamberlain, 16 Cal. 181, 76 Am. Dec. 561; or uses the lower part of his dwelling for business purposes; Orr v. Shrafft, 22 Mich. 260; or who, living in town, keeps boarders and lodgers; Goldman v. Clark, 1 Nev. 607; or one who lets rooms in his dwelling to tenants; Mercier v. Chace, 11 Allen (Mass.) 194; or who rents out part for a store and uses another part for a printing office; Kelly v. Baker, 10 Minn. 154; (Gil. 124); does not deprive it of its homestead character." Thomp. Hom. & Ex. § 120; nor does he, where he leases the greater part of his house to be used as a boarding-house, he retaining several rooms in which he and his family lived; Heathman v. Holmes, 94 Cal. 291, 29 Pac. 404. A building may not be used exclusively as a residence and yet retain the character of a homestead; Palmer v. Hawes, 80 Wis. 474, 50 N. W. 341. A store; Hubbell v. Canady, 58 Ill. 425; or mill; Greeley v. Scott, 2 Woods 657, Fed. Cas. No. 5,746 (per Bradley, J.); situated on the homestead lot; a smith-shop separated from it by a highway; West River Bank v. Gale, 42 Vt. 27; a brewery in which the debtor lives with his family; In re Tertelling, 2 Dill. 339, Fed. Cas. No. 13,842; a lawyer's office in a separate block; Pryor v. Stone, 19 Tex. 371, 70 Am. Dec. 341; and a garden adjoining the dwelling; Arendt v. Mace, 76 Cal. 315, 18 Pac. 376, 9 Am. St. Rep. 207; a business block, partly a residence; De Ford v. Painter, 3 Okl. 80, 41 Pac. 96, 30 L. R. A. 722; part store-room and part dwelling; Corey v. Schuster, 44 Neb. 269, 62 N. W. 470; have been included within the rule. A house built in the business part of the town and used principally as a store-building, though the owner sleeps in a small back room and takes his meals elsewhere, is not a homestead; Garrett v. Jones, 95 Ala. 96, 10 South. 702. And in Iowa a building occupied at once for a dwelling and for business purposes may be divided horizontally and the business part sold in execution; Rhodes v. McCormack, 4 Ia. 368, 68 Am. Dec. 663; but see, contra, Thomp. Hom. & Ex. § 134, n.; Phelps v. Rooney, 9 Wis. 70, 76 Am. Dec. 244; "and in other states a homestead cannot be reserved in tenements and separate buildings occupied by tenements, although upon the enclosure whereon is situated the debtor's dwelling;" Thomp. Hom. & Ex. § 120; Hoitt v. Webb, 36 N. H. 158; Gregg v. Bostwick, 33 Cal. 220, 91 Am. Dec. 637; Casselman v. Packard, 16 Wis. 114, 82 Am. Dec. 710. Nor can a person have two homesteads at the same time; Wheeler v. Smith, 62 Mich. 373, 28 N. W. 907; Waggle v. Worthy, 74 Cal. 266, 15 Pac. 831, 5 Am. St. Rep. 440; Archibald v. Jacobs, 69 Tex. 248, 6 S. W. 177. Where land was occupied by a tenant at the time of levy and execution, the levy is not void as on a homestead because the owner intended at some future time to occupy it as a house; Evans v. Calman, 92 Mich. 427, 52 N. W. 787, 31 Am. St. Rep. 606.

The homestead laws are not to be taken only to save a mere shelter for the debtor and his family, but to give him the full enjoyment of the entire lot of ground exempted, to be used either in the cultivation of it, or in the erection and use of buildings on it, either for his own business or for deriving income in the way of rent; Stevens v. Hollingsworth, 74 Ill. 206; and the homestead right may be conveyed separately from the fee; Lorimer v. Marshall, 44 Ill. App. 645.

There is a conflict of decision as to whether a tract of land detached from the one on which the homestead dwelling-house is built, but used by the debtor in connection with it, is exempt. The opinion supported by the weight of authority is that it is not; Thomp. Hom. & Ex. § 145; Reynolds v. Hull, 36 Ia. 394; Kresin v. Mau, 15 Minn. 116 (Gil. 87); Adams v. Jenkins, 16 Gray (Mass.) 146; Bunker v. Locke, 15 Wis. 635; Linn County Bank v. Hopkins, 47 Kan. 580, 28 Pac. 606, 27 Am. St. Rep. 309; McCrosky v. Walker, 55 Ark. 303, 18 S. W. 169; Dicus v. Hall, 83 Ala. 159, 3 South. 239; contra, Mayho v. Cotton, 69 N. C. 289; Williams v. Willis, 84 Tex. 398, 19 S. W. 683; Perkins v. Quigley, 62 Mo. 498; Acker v. Trueland, 56 Miss. 30. A homestead may be designated in an undivided interest in lands; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Kopplin, 1 Kan. App. 599, 42 Pac. 263; but not in partnership real estate; Michigan Trust Co. v. Chapin, 106 Mich. 384, 64 N. W. 334, 58 Am. St. Rep. 490; or by a cotenant in lands held in common; Rosenthal v. Bank, 110 Cal. 198, 42 Pac. 640; or by a remainderman, though after the estate vests in possession it may be held as a homestead against a judgment creditor; Stern v. Lee, 115 N. C. 426, 20 S. E. 736, 26 L. R. A. 814. It may be claimed in lands situated in different counties; Springer v. Colwell, 116 N. C. 520, 21 S. E. 301.

A homestead law, so far as it attempts to withdraw from the reach of creditors property which would have been within their reach under the laws in force at the time the debt was contracted, is unconstitutional; Gunn v. Barry, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 610, 21 L. Ed. 212; reversing 44 Ga. 353; Hannum v. McInturf, 6 Baxt. (Tenn.) 225.

Provisions exist in most of the states forbidding the alienation of the property designated as a homestead, except when the deed is joined in by the wife; Myers v. Evans, 81 Tex. 317, 16 S. W. 1060; Simpson v. Houston, 97 N. C. 344, 2 S. E. 651, 2 Am. St. Rep. 297. In others the payment of purchase money can be secured by a mortgage; so may the payment of purchase money and money borrowed for improvements on the property. Where the existence of a homestead is made to depend upon a selection by the debtor, the latter may alien the property at any time prior to such selection, by the usual formalities; People v. Plumsted, 2 Mich. 465. The purchaser in good faith of a homestead succeeds to the debtor's rights and will be protected against his creditors; Shackleford v. Todhunter, 4 Ill. App. 271. A homestead right is not forfeited by a conveyance of land with the intent to defraud creditors; Dortch v. Benton, 98 N. C. 190, 3 S. E. 638, 2 Am. St. Rep. 331; Snapp v. Snapp, 87 Ky. 554, 9 S. W. 705; Horton v. Kelly, 40 Minn. 193, 41 N. W. 1031; Wood v. Timmerman, 29 S. C. 175, 7 S. E. 74.

Homesteads may be designated by one of three ways: 1, By a public notice of record; 2, by visible occupancy and use; 3, by the actual setting apart of the homestead under the direction of a court of justice; Thomp. Hom. & Ex. § 230. Statutory provisions, if they exist, must be followed. In the absence of a statutory provision, filing a declaration of intention to designate a certain property as a homestead has no legal effect; Cook v. McChristian, 4 Cal. 23. The right to a homestead existing at the time the statute is passed is not affected by a declaration under the statute; Hebert v. Mayer, 47 La. Ann. 563, 17 South. 131.

As to construction of declarations and what is sufficient, see Dunlop v. Blacker, 93 Ga. 819, 21 S. E. 135; In re Ogburn's Estate, 105 Cal. 95, 38 Pac. 498. A declaration enures to the benefit of the wife whether she knows of it or not; Security Loan & Trust Co. v. Kauffman, 108 Cal. 214, 41 Pac. 467; and a wife may make a declaration; Mutual Benefit Bldg. Ass'n v. Tanner, 96 Ga. 338, 23 S. E. 403. As to the designation of a homestead by occupancy, "it may be laid down as the prevalent doctrine that actual residence by the head of the family prior to the contraction of the debt, etc., he occupying it as a home and with the intention of dedicating it to the uses of a residence for his family, will be sufficient to impress upon the premises so occupied the character of a homestead."

Thomp. Hom. & Ex. § 260. This designation will be sufficient to preserve the homestead character for the benefit of the widow and minor children; Johnston v. Turner, 29 Ark. 280. In order to give the character of a homestead, the purchase must always be with the intent of present, and not simply future, occupancy; Swenson v. Kiehl, 21 Kan. 533; Van Ratcliff v. Call, 72 Tex. 491, 10 S. W. 578; Bowles v. Hoard, 71 Mich. 150, 39 N. W. 24. And temporary absence of the owner will not divest him of the right to the same; Deering & Co. v. Beard, 48 Kan. 16, 28 Pac. 981; Robinson v. Swearingen, 55 Ark. 55, 17 S. W. 365. Actual occupancy is necessary; Givans v. Dewey, 47 Ia. 414; Wilson v. Swasey (Tex.) 20 S. W. 48; Tillar v. Bass, 57 Ark. 179, 21 S. W. 34; Turner v. Turner, 107 Ala. 465, 18 South. 210, 54 Am. St. Rep. 110. But one occupying a house with persons whom he is under no obligation to support, is not a householder within the homestead act; Holnback v. Wilson, 159 Ill. 148, 42 N. E. 169. When one occupies a homestead but has a fixed intention of occupying and holding other lands as such and is prevented by death, the latter will be treated as his homestead; Ross v. Porter, 72 Miss. 361, 16 South. 906.

Of the debts for which a homestead is liable, the first is taxes; Crine v. Johns, 96 Ga. 220, 22 S. E. 913. An assessment for municipal improvements is not a "tax" within the provision of a state constitution permitting a homestead to be subjected to a forced sale for taxes; Higgins v. Bordages, 88 Tex. 458, 31 S. W. 52, 803, 53 Am. St. Rep. 770, overruling Lufkin v. City of Galveston, 58 Tex. 549. This view is said to be supported by an almost unbroken line of decisions; 4 Ballard's Ann. of R. P. § 346; 3 id. § 720. A homestead may be sold on a judgment for alimony; Mahoney v. Mahoney, 59 Minn. 347, 61 N. W. 334.

Homesteads have also been held liable to an equitable lien for materials furnished for their improvement; Ross v. Perry, 105 Ala. 533, 16 South. 915; to prior liens on the land; Aldrich v. Boice, 56 Kan. 170, 42 Pac. 695; or contracts existing when the statute is enacted; Dunagan v. Webster, 93 Ga. 540, 21 S. E. 65; Dunn v. Stevens, 62 Minn. 380, 64 N. W. 924, 65 N. W. 348. When the statute makes it liable to debts existing at the time of its purchase this includes renewal of prior notes; Robinson v. Leach, 67 Vt. 128, 31 Atl. 32, 27 L. R. A. 303, 48 Am. St. Rep. 807.

When the exemption does not apply to a debt contracted for the purchase of the homestead, it has been held that the homestead cannot be sold to pay money borrowed from a third person to pay off that debt; Loftis v. Loftis, 94 Tenn. 232, 28 S. W. 1091; Eyster v. Hatheway, 50 Ill. 521, 99 Am. Dec. 537; Dreese v. Myers, 52 Kan. 126, 34 Pac. 349, 39 Am. St. Rep. 336; contra, Coleman's

Adm'r v. Parrott (Ky.) 32 S. W. 679. There is however, a conflict of authority on this point from which it is said to be impossible to extract any consistent rule. See Thomp. Hom. & Ex. §§ 338-347; Waples, Hom. & Ex. 337-346; 99 Am. Dec. 574, note.

Money due on an insurance policy upon homestead property is not subject to garnishment; Chase v. Swayne, 88 Tex. 218, 30 S. W. 1049, 53 Am. St. Rep. 742; Reynolds v. Haines, 83 Ia. 342, 49 N. W. 851, 13 L. R. A. 719, 32 Am. St. Rep. 311; Houghton v. Lee, 50 Cal. 101; Culbertson v. Cox, 29 Minn. 309, 13 N. W. 177, 43 Am. Rep. 204; Probst v. Scott, 31 Ark. 652; Bernheim v. Davitt (Ky.) 5 S. W. 193.

The increase in value of a homestead set apart to a widow and child above the limit of the statute does not constitute assets for further administration of the decedent's estate where the statute makes the homestead the absolute property of those to whom it is set apart; In re Bedford's Estate, 34 Utah 24, 95 Pac. 518, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 728, 16 Ann. Cas. 118; and this is in accordance with the weight of authority in the case of homesteads in a decedent's estate, though in the lifetime of the husband a re-valuation would seem generally to be allowed. See 44 L. R. A. 400, note, where the earlier cases are collected and 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 728, note, which contains the later ones.

The right of exemption is lost by the unequivocal abandonment of the homestead by the owner, with the intention of no longer treating it as his place of residence; Thomp. Hom. & Ex. § 263, citing Archibald v. Jacobs, 69 Tex. 248, 6 S. W. 177; Waples, Hom. & Ex. 558. A lease of land for more than a year, and a residence elsewhere, was held to forfeit the homestead; Boyle v. Shulman, 59 Ala. 566; also the owner's removal from the state; Jackson v. Du Bose, 87 Ga. 761, 13 S. E. 916; Lee v. Moseley, 101 N. C. 311, 7 S. E. 874, 2 L. R. A. 106. The building situated on the homestead loses its exemption from seizure and sale upon being segregated from the homestead property; Curtis v. Des Jardins, 55 Ark. 126, 17 S. W. 709.

To establish an abandonment there must be a removal with the intention of not returning; Corey v. Schuster, 44 Neb. 269, 62 N. W. 470; but when removal for a temporary purpose is permitted by statute, it must be for a fixed and temporary purpose or for a temporary reason; Moore v. Smead, 89 Wis. 558, 62 N. W. 426. To leave a homestead farm and move in town to become a merchant, intending to return "if he quit business," was an abandonment; Wolf v. Hawkins, 60 Ark. 262, 29 S. W. 892. See also Lehman, Durr & Co. v. Bryan, 67 Ala. 558; Smith v. Bunn, 75 Mo. 559. Leaving a tenant at will in possession is not abandonment; Derickson v. Gillespie (Ky.) 32 S. W. 1084; nor temporary absence with intention to re-occupy; Robson v. Hough, 56 Ark. 621, 20

S. W. 523; nor mere removal with or without intention of returning; Donaldson v. Lamprey, 29 Minn. 20, 11 N. W. 119; nor is storing goods in the house and sleeping in it at times, the wife being insane.

In California, to constitute abandonment of homestead requires a declaration to that effect, signed, acknowledged and recorded. Mere removal without intention of returning is held not sufficient; Tipton v. Martin, 71 Cal. 325, 12 Pac. 244; nor letting it to a tenant at will with an option to purchase at a price named, and leaving to earn a livelihood with intention to return; Boot v. Brewster, 75 Ia. 631, 36 N. W. 649, 9 Am. St. Rep. 515; nor, upon its destruction by fire, application to another for aid in rebuilding, saying that if it was refused he must abandon it, is a finding of abandonment justified; Stewart v. Rhoades, 39 Minn. 193, 39 N. W. 141. An abandonment does not relate back so as to give validity to a void prior sale of the homestead under an execution; Asher v. Sekofsky, 10 Wash. 379, 38 Pac. 1133.

It has been held that the homestead may be abandoned by a husband's conveyance and the removal to another place against the desire of the wife; Marler v. Handy, 88 Tex. 421, 31 S. W. 636; Guioed v. Guioed, 14 Cal. 507, 76 Am. Dec. 440; Thomp. Hom. & Ex. § 276; contra, Sharp v. Mortgage Co., 95 Ga. 415, 22 S. E. 633. See ABANDONMENT.

When the homestead character has once attached, it may persist for the benefit of a single individual, who is the sole surviving member of the family; Weaver v. Bank, 76 Kan. 540, 94 Pac. 273, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 110, 123 Am. St. Rep. 155; Burns v. Keas, 21 Ia. 257; Stults v. Sale, 92 Ky. 5, 17 S. W. 148, 13 L. R. A. 743, 36 Am. St. Rep. 575; Silloway v. Brown, 12 Allen (Mass.) 30; Kimbrel v. Willis, 97 Ill. 494; Stanley v. Snyder, 43 Ark. 429; Beckmann v. Meyer, 75 Mo. 333; Blum v. Gaines, 57 Tex. 119; but that it does not continue where the family has ceased to occupy the original homestead and a single individual only is in possession is held by other courts; Santa Cruz Bank v. Cooper, 56 Cal. 339; Cooper v. Cooper, 24 Ohio St. 488; Fullerton v. Sherrill, 114 Ia. 511, 87 N. W. 419; Hill v. Franklin, 54 Miss. 632. A valid decree of divorce, where there are no children, terminates the homestead rights; Brady v. Kreuger, 8 S. D. 464, 66 N. W. 1083, 59 Am. St. Rep. 771; Kern v. Field, 68 Minn. 317, 71 N. W. 393, 64 Am. St. Rep. 479; Burns v. Lewis, 86 Ga. 591, 13 S. E. 123; Arp v. Jacobs, 3 Wyo. 489, 27 Pac. 800. Where the wife secured the divorce, the custody of the children, and a lump sum as alimony, she was held to lose her homestead rights in property remaining in the possession of her husband; Barkman v. Barkman, 209 Ill. 269, 70 N. E. 652; but the husband in such a case was held not to lose his right of homestead exemption, as he was still liable for the support of his children; Biffie v. Pullam, 114 Mo. 50, 21 S. W. 450; Hall v. Fields, 81 Tex. 553, 17 S. W. 82.

A deed or mortgage of a homestead must be the joint conveyance of the husband and wife; Van Sandt v. Alvis, 109 Cal. 165, 41 Pac. 1014, 50 Am. St. Rep. 25; Seiffert & Wiese Lumber Co. v. Hartwell, 94 Ia. 576, 63 N. W. 333, 58 Am. St. Rep. 413. A mere release of dower by the wife is not sufficient; Bank of Harrison v. Gibson, 60 Ark. 269, 30 S. W. 39; nor an execution by the husband under a power of attorney from the wife; Wallace v. Ins. Co., 54 Kan. 442, 38 Pac. 489, 26 L. R. A. 806, 45 Am. St. Rep. 288. And a conveyance by the claimant to his or her wife or husband, not subscribed or acknowledged by the latter is a nullity; Anderson v. Smith, 159 Ill. 93, 42 N. E. 306. Even when the wife is insane, a conveyance by the husband is void; Thompson v. Security Co., 110 Ala. 400, 18 South. 315, 55 Am. St. Rep. 29; Alexander v. Vennum, 61 Ia. 160, 16 N. W. 80; Whitlock v. Gosson, 35 Neb. 829, 53 N. W. 980; and so also where the wife is living apart from her husband; Herron v. Knapp, Stout & Co. Company, 72 Wis. 553, 40 N. W. 149; Bradford v. Trust Co., 47 Kan. 587, 28 Pac. 702; Johnston v. Turner, 29 Ark. 280; Castlebury v. Maynard, 95 N. C. 281. See 65 Am. Dec. 481, note.

This right of exemption depends upon the construction of statutes in various states. The decisions are, therefore, far from harmonious.

Every person who is the head of a family, or is over 21 years of age and is a citizen, or has declared his intention to become such, also soldiers, seamen, and members of the marine corps, including officers, who have served in the rebellion for ninety days, and remained loyal to the government, may take up a quarter section or less of unappropriated public lands, as a homestead; U. S. R. S. § 2289 et seq.

The subject has been fully treated in Judge Thompson's work frequently cited above. See also 36 Am. Rep. 728, note; 10 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 1, 137; French v. Tumlin, 10 Am. Law Reg. (N. S.) 641, Fed. Cas. No. 5104 (by Judge Dillon). See FAMILY; EXEMPTION; MANOR; MANSION.

HOMICIDE (Lat. homo, a man, cedere, to kill). The killing any human creature. 4 Bla. Com. 177.

Excusable homicide is that which takes place under such circumstances of accident or necessity that the party cannot strictly be said to have committed the act wilfully and intentionally, and whereby he is relieved from the penalty annexed to the commission of a felonious homicide.

Felonious homicide is that committed wilfully under such circumstances as to render it punishable.

Justifiable homicide is that committed with full intent, but under such circumstances of duty as to render the act one proper to be performed.

According to Blackstone, 4 Com. 177, homicide is the killing of any human creature. This is the most extensive sense of this word, in which the intention is not considered. But in a more limited sense, it is always understood that the killing is by human agency; and Hawkins defines it to be the killing of a man by a man. 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 8, § 2. See Dalloz, Dict.; Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 303, 52 Am. Dec. 711. Homicide may perhaps be described to be the destruction of the life of one human being, either by himself or by the act, procurement, or culpable omission of another. When the death has been intentionally caused by the deceased himself, the offender is called felo de se; when it is caused by another, it is justifiable, excusable, or felonious homicide.

The distinction between justifiable and excusable homicide is that in the former the killing takes place without any manner of fault on the part of the slayer; in the latter there is some slight fault, or at any rate the absence of any duty rendering the act a proper one to be performed, although the blame is so slight as not to render the party punishable. The distinction is very frequently disregarded, and would seem to be of little practical utility; See 2 Bish. Cr. Law § 617. But between justifiable or excusable and felonious homicide the distinction, it will be evident, is of great importance. 1 East, Pl. Cr. 260, gives the following example: "If a person driving a carriage happen to kill another, if he saw or had timely notice of the mischief likely to ensue, and yet wilfully drove on, it will be murder; if he might have seen the danger, but did not look before him, it will be manslaughter; but if the accident happened in such a manner that no want of due care could be imputed to the driver, it will be accidental death and excusable homicide." See 4 Bla. Com. 176; Rosc. Cr. Ev. 580; Cl. Cr. L. 131.

There must be a person in actual existence; 6 C. & P. 349; 7 id. 814, 850; 9 id. 25; Johnson v. State (Tex.) 24 S. W. 285; but the destruction of human life at any period after birth is homicide, however near it may be to extinction from any other cause; 2 C. & K. 784; 2 Bish. Cr. Law § 632; but a child in the act of being born would not be included; 5 C. & P. 539; and the death must have occurred within a year and a day from the time the injury was received; State v. Orrell, 12 N. C. 139, 17 Am. Dec. 563; People v. Kelly, 6 Cal. 210; Edmondson v. State, 41 Tex. 496; State v. Mayfield, 66 Mo. 125; Com. v. Macloon, 101 Mass. 6, 100 Am. Dec. 89. It is not necessary that the injury inflicted was the sole cause of the death, provided it contributed mediately or immediately in a degree sufficient for the law's notice; State v. Matthews, 38 La. Ann. 795; 2 Bish. Cr. Law §§ 637, 638; State v. Smith, 10 Nev. 106. A person illegally arrested may use such force as is necessary to regain his liberty, and should there be reasonable ground to believe that the officer making the arrest intends shooting the prisoner to prevent his escape, such prisoner may shoot the officer in self-defence; Miers v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 161, 29 S. W. 1074, 53 Am. St. Rep. 705. So where one is assaulted and there is reasonable ground for him to fear loss of his life, or great bodily harm, he is not obliged to retreat nor consider whether he may so act in safety, but he is entitled to stand his ground and meet any attack made upon him with a deadly weapon, even if in so doing he cause the death of his assailant; Beard v. U. S., 158 U. S. 550, 15 Sup. Ct. 962, 39 L. Ed. 1086; Page v. State, 141 Ind. 236, 40 N. E. 745.

Where malice and intent are elements of murder in the second degree, a person is not as a matter of law guilty of that crime because he sets a spring gun from which a homicide results; State v. Marfaudille, 48 Wash. 117, 92 Pac. 939, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 346, 15 Ann. Cas. 584, where the defendant had placed the spring gun in his locked trunk, having warned the deceased of its presence there. She, having a right to enter his room, procured the key, unlocked the trunk and was killed. The owner of a shop might be justified in case of the death of a burglar for having placed a spring gun on his premises; State v. Moore, 31 Conn. 479, 83 Am. Dec. 159.

The person killed, to constitute the homicide felonious, must have been entitled to his existence. Thus, a soldier of the enemy in time of war has no right to his life, but may be killed. A criminal sentenced to be hanged has no right to his life; but no person can take it but the authorized officer, in the prescribed manner. Where a soldier, in the regular army, to prevent an escape, shot at a fleeing prisoner and killed a bystander, it was held that he acted in the supposed discharge of his duty and was not guilty of manslaughter; U. S. v. Lipsett, 156 Fed. 65.

The elements of felonious homicide under the United States laws are to be determined by the principles of common law; U. S. v. Lewis, 111 Fed. 630.

HOMMES FEODAUUX (Fr.). In Feudal Law. Feudal tenants; the same with hommes de fief (q. v.). Montesq., Esprit des Loix, liv. 28, c. 36.

HOMO (Lat.). A human being, whether male or female. Co. 2d Inst. 45.

In Feudal Law. A vassal; one who, having received a feud, is bound to do homage and military service for his land; variously called vassalus, vassus, miles, cliens, feodalis, tenens per servitium militare, sometimes baro, and most frequently leudes. Spelman, Gloss. Homo is sometimes also used for a tenant by socage, and sometimes for any dependent. A homo claimed the privilege of having his cause and person tried only in the court of his lord. Kennett, Paroch. Antiq. 152.

Homo chartularius. A slave manumitted by charter. Homo commendatus. In feudal law. One who surrendered himself into the power of another for the sake of protection or support. See COMMENDATION. Homo ecclesiasticus. A church vassal; one who was bound to serve a church, especially to do service of an agricultural character. Spel. Gloss. Homo exercitatus. A man of the army (exercitus); a soldier. Homo-feodalis. A vassal or tenant; one who held a fee (feodum), or part of a fee. Spel. Gloss. Homo fiscalis, or fiscalinus. A servant or vassal belonging to the treasury or fuscus. Homo francus. In old English law. A freeman. A Frenchman. Homo ingenuus. A free man. A free and lawful man. A yeoman. Homo liber. A freeman. Homo ligius. A liege man; a subject; a king's vassal. The vassal of a subject. Homo novus. In feudal law. A new tenant or vassal; one who was invested with a new fee. Spel. Gloss. Homo pertinens. In feudal law. A feudal bondman or vassal, one who belonged to the soil (qui glebæ adscribitur). Homo regius. A king's vassal. Homo Romanus. A Roman. An appellation given to the old inhabitants of Gaul and other Roman provinces, and retained in the law of the barbarous nations. Spel. Gloss. Homo trium litterarum. A man of three letters; that is the three letters, "f," "u," "r," composing the Latin word fur meaning "thief."

HOMOLOGACION. In Spanish Law. The tacit consent and approval, inferred by law from the omission of the parties, for the space of ten days, to complain of the sentences of arbitrators, appointment of syndics, or assignees, of insolvents, settlements of successions, etc. Also, the approval given by the judge of certain acts and agreements for the purpose of rendering them more binding and executory. Escrache.

HOMOLOGATION. In Civil Law. Approbation; confirmation by a court of justice; a judgment which orders the execution of some act: as, the approbation of an award and ordering execution on the same. Merlin, Répert.; La. Civ. Code; Dig. 4. 8; 7 Toullier, n. 224. See L. R. 3 App. Cas. 1026. To homologate is to say the like, similiter dicere. Viales' Snyder v. Gardenier, 9 Mart. O. S. (La.) 324.

A judgment homologating, as far as not opposed, the account of distribution of a syndic, is res judicata, except as to opponents, whether the account was correct or not; Searcy v. Creditors, 46 La. Ann. 376, 14 South. 910.

HOND HABEND. See HAND HABEND.

HONOR. In English Law. See HONOUR.

In Common Law. To accept a bill of exchange; to pay a bill accepted, or a promissory note, on the day it becomes due. 7 Taunt. 164.

HONORABLE. A title of distinction or respect.

In England it is given to the younger sons of earls, to the children of viscounts and barons, to persons occupying official places of trust and honor, and to the house of commons as a body, and to members of the Executive Councils in India and the colonies. In the United States it is usually given to persons who hold or have held positions of importance under the national or state government.

HONORARIUM. Something given in gratitude for services rendered.

A voluntary donation in consideration of services which admit of no compensation in money; in particular to advocates at law, deemed to practice for honor or influence and not for fees. McDonald v. Napier, 14 Ga. 89.

It is so far of the nature of a gift that it cannot be sued for; Mooney v. Lloyd, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 412; 1 Chitty, Bailm. 38; 3 Bla. Com. 28. Of this character are in England, the professional fees of barristers and of physicians. The same rule once prevailed in Pennsylvania, but was afterwards rejected; Balsbaugh v. Frazer, 19 Pa. 95; and now prevails in New Jersey; Seeley v. Crane, 15 N. J. L. 35; and to some extent in the federal courts, as applied to counsel in the special sense of the term; Weeks, Atty. 548; Law v. Ewell, 2 Cra. C. C. 144, Fed. Cas. No. 8, 127. In many states the contrary rule has been expressly laid down; Adams v. Stevens, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 452 (a full discussion by Walworth, C.); Thurston v. Percival, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 415. The payment of the fees of English solicitors, attorneys, and proctors is provided for by statute and rules of court.

HOPE. A valley. Co. Litt. 5 b.

HORA AURORÆ. The morning bell.

HORÆ JUDICIÆ (Lat.). Hours judicial, or those in which judges sit in court. In Fortesque's time, these were from 8 to 11 A. M., and the courts of law were not open in the afternoon. Co. Litt. 135 a; Co. 2d Inst. 246; Fortesque 51, p. 120, note.

HORDERA. A treasurer. Du Cange.

HORDERIUM. A hoard, treasury, or repository. Cowell.

HORN TENURE. Tenure by winding a horn on approach of an enemy, called tenure by cornage. If lands were held by this tenure of the king, it was grand serjeanty; if of a private person, knight-service. Many anciently so held their lands towards the Picts' Wall. Co. Litt. § 156; Camd. Britan. 609.

HORNBOK. A book containing the first principles of any science or branch of knowledge; a primer, so called because the material was horn.

Horn book law. The elementary or rudimentary law, colloquially so called.

HORNGELD. A forest tax paid for horned beasts, also an acquittance thereof, which was granted by the king unto such as he thought good. Cowell; Toml.

HORREUM. A place for keeping grain, a storehouse. Calvinus, Lex.; Bract. fol. 48.

HORS DE SON FEE (Fr. out of his fee). In Old English Law. A plea to an action brought by one who claimed to be lord for rent-services as issuing out of his land, by which the defendant asserted that the land in question was out of the fee of the demandant. 9 Co. 30; 2 Mod. 104.

HORS WEALH. In Old English Law. The wealth, or Briton who had the care of the king's horses.

HORS WEARD. In Old English Law. A service or corvée, consisting in watching the horses of the lord. Anc. Inst. Eng.

HORSE. Until a horse has attained the age of four years he is called a colt. 1 Russ. & R. 416. This word is sometimes used as a generic name for all animals of the horse kind; Taylor v. State, 44 Ga. 263; State v. Dunnivant, 3 Brev. (S. C.) 9, 5 Am. Dec. 530. See Yelv. 67 a; Miller v. Hahn, 84 N. C. 226. It is also used to include every description of the male, as gelding or stallion, in contradistinction to the female; Owens v. State, 38 Tex. 555. In a statute giving a remedy against railroad companies for injuries to horses and cattle, it includes mules; Toledo, Wabash & W. Ry. Co. v. Cole, 50 Ill. 184. The exemption of a horse from execution has been held to include whatever is essential to his enjoyment, as shoes and saddle; Dearborn v. Phillips, 21 Tex. 449; and it may include an ass or a jackass; Richardson v. Duncan, 2 Heisk. (Tenn.) 222; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Brubaker, 47 Ill. 463; but not a stallion not kept for farm work; Robert v. Adams, 38 Cal. 383, 99 Am. Dec. 413.

HORSE GUARDS. The name applied to the public office in Whitehall appropriated to the departments under the general-commanding-in-chief. The term is also used conventionally to signify the military authorities at the head of army affairs, in contradistinction to the civil chief, the secretary of state for war.

HORSE RACE. Any race in which any horse, mare, or gelding is run or made to run in competition with any other horse, mare, or gelding or against time, for any prize of what nature or kind soever, or for any bet or wager made or to be made in respect to any such horse, mare, or gelding or the riders thereof, and at which more than twenty persons are present. Stat. 42 & 43 Vict. c. 18, s. 1.

The first statute regarding horse-racing was passed in 1664, entitled an act against deceitful, disorderly, and excessive gaming; but this act being found insufficient to prevent the abuses at which it was directed, the statute 9 Anne, c. 14, was passed in 1710, reciting that all mortgages and instruments, where the consideration was money won by gaming or betting, or the repayment of money lent at such gaming and betting, should be void; and that the loser of ten pounds or upward on such gaming or betting might, within three months, sue and recover back treble the value of his losses; and that any person winning ten pounds or upwards might be indicted and, on conviction, forfeit five times the value so won, and if won by cheating, the winner should be deemed infamous, and suffer such corporal punishment as in cases of wilful perjury. This act, being only directed to races at which betting of ten pounds or over was indulged, increased the number at which the limit was below that amount to such an extent that it was found necessary to restrict still further the practice, and in 1740 and 1745 the acts 13 Geo. II. c. 19 and 18 Geo. II. c. 34 went into effect. The latter, as an encouragement to breeders, legalized those races at which the stakes amounted to fifty pounds, and also made a distinction between matches and races. So much of the acts 16 Car. II. c. 7 and 9 Anne, c. 11 as rendered void any note, bill or mortgage given for a gambling contract was repealed during the reign of William IV. and they were amended so as to make such instruments not void, but given for an illegal consideration; 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 41. This statute is still in force. The acts 3 & 4 Vict. c. 5 and 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109 repealed the former acts of 16 Car. II. c. 7, and all of 9 Anne, c. 14 that had not already been altered by 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 41. The act 17 & 18 Vict. c. 38 was supplementary to 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, as were also 37 Vict. c. 15 and 42 & 43 Vict. c. 18, and 55 Vict. c. 9.

Contributions or subscriptions towards any plate, prize, or sum of money to be awarded to the winner of any lawful horse race are not unlawful and do not constitute a wager; [1895] 1 Q. B. 698; but a match between two horses, for a sum of money contributed by their respective owners, although legal, is a void contract within the statute 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109; and money in the hands of a stakeholder or loser cannot be recovered by the winner in an action at law; 1 C. P. D. 573; and see 2 Ex. D. 442 (overruling 5 C. B. 831); 5 App. Cas. 342 approving 2 Ex. D. 442.

The stakeholder is bound to retain the money in his hands until it is clearly decided which party is entitled to it; 2 M. & W. 369; but he is merely a stakeholder, and has no right to the stakes until he actually receives them in his hands; 5 C. & P. 147. Where the race has not been, and cannot be, run, the position of the stakeholder is that of a debtor to each party for the amount contributed by each, and a specific demand of the stake from him is unnecessary; but where there is a possibility that the race may still be run and decided, each party must make a specific demand of his stake from the stakeholder before he can recover from him; 28 L. J. Q. B. 126. In a lawful horse race, the payment of entrance money to the stakeholder constitutes a legal contract, and such money cannot be recovered back unless there is a mutual rescission of the contract; 2 M. & W. 369. As to the recovery back of money paid to a stakeholder pending the result of an illegal contest, it may be recovered before the contest takes place, but not afterwards; 8 B. & C. 226; Deaver v. Bennett, 29 Neb. 812, 46 N. W. 161, 26 Am. St. Rep. 415; but the former case, although regarded as an authority; [1895] 1 Q. B. 698; Wise v. Rose, 110 Cal. 159, 42 Pac. 569; has been doubted; 14 M. & W. 712; and held irreconcilable with the statute; 9 Ir. C. L. R. 13. In Diggs v. Higgs, 2 Ex. D. 442, the court say "what legal right there may be to recover back money paid under such a contract, the statute leaves it untouched." In the United States it is held that the depositor may revoke the stakeholder's authority to pay over the stakes and bring an action against him for its recovery; Corson v. Neatheny, 9 Cal. 212, 11 Pac. 82; and if, after the receipt of such notice, the stakeholder pay over the money to the winner, he is liable to the depositor; Wise v. Rose, 110 Cal. 159, 42 Pac. 569.

If the owner of a horse entered for a race is aware of its disqualification he may recover his money back before the race, but not afterwards; 2 C. & P. 608.

Money expended by one part owner of a race horse for the common benefit of another owner and himself, with the understanding that the owners are to share alike in the winnings of such horse, is recoverable (from the second owner), to the amount of one-half the sum expended where the horse loses the race; 26 L. J. C. P. 181.

In this country the decisions as to whether horse racing constitutes gaming within the statutes are not uniform. It has been held, to be gaming or a gambling device; Redman v. State, 33 Ala. 428; State v. Rorie, 23 Ark. 726; Corson v. Neatheny, 9 Cal. 214, 11 Pac. 82; Cheesum v. State, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 332, 44 Am. Dec. 771; Cain v. McHarry, 2 Bush (Ky.) 263; Dyer v. Benson, 69 Ga. 609; Van Valkenburgh v. Torrey, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 252; Mosher v. Griffin, 51 Ill. 184, 99 Am. Dec. 541; Wade v. Deming, 9 Ind. 35; Grace v. McElroy, 1 Allen (Mass.) 563; People v. Weithoff, 51 Mich. 212, 16 N. W. 442, 47 Am. Rep. 557; Wilkinson v. Tousley, 16 Minn. 299 (Gil. 263), 10 Am. Rep. 139; State v. Hayden, 31 Mo. 35; Haywood v. Sheldon, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 88; State v. Catchings, 43 Tex. 654; Ellis v. Beale, 18 Me. 337, 36 Am. Dec. 726; contra, Com. v. Shelton, 8 Gratt. (Va.) 592; State v. Lemon, 46 Mo. 375.

Racing a horse on or along a public road, though no bet has been offered on the result of such race, has been held an indictable offence; State v. Fidler, 7 Humph. (Tenn.) 502; and the fact that a charter has been granted for a race-course will not authorize betting thereon; Cain v. McHarry, 2 Bush (Ky.) 263. In many of the states, however, the times at, and seasons in, which horse racing may be indulged are regulated by statutes which tax and license the racing associations. The trotting for a purse or premium contributed or subscribed by other persons is not trotting for a wager; Ballard v. Brown, 67 Vt. 586, 32 Atl. 485; People v. Fallon, 152 N. Y. 12, 46 N. E. 296, 37 L. R. A. 227, 57 Am. St. Rep. 492; Harris v. White, 81 N. Y. 532; Delier v. Agricultural Society, 57 Ia. 481, 10 N. W. 872; Misner v. Knapp, 13 Or. 135, 9 Pac. 65, 57 Am. Rep. 6; Porter v. Day, 71 Wis. 296, 37 N. W. 259; Alvord v. Smith, 63 Ind. 58; but see Dudley v. Jockey Club, 14 Misc. 58, 35 N. Y. Supp. 245; Comly v. Hillegass, 94 Pa. 132, 39 Am. Rep. 774; Bronson Agricultural & Breeders' Ass'n v. Ramsdell, 24 Mich. 441.

Pools on horse races are games within the statute against gaming; People v. Weithoff, 51 Mich. 203, 16 N. W. 442, 47 Am. Rep. 557; Swigart v. People, 154 Ill. 284, 40 N. E. 432; contra, James v. State, 63 Md. 242; and the rule applies to pools sold in one state on a race to be run in another; Williams v. State, 92 Tenn. 275, 21 S. W. 662; Lacey v. Palmer, 93 Va. 159, 24 S. E. 930, 31 L. R. A. 822, 57 Am. St. Rep. 795; but not where only the orders for bets were taken and transmitted by telegraph, as it was held that the actual betting was done out of the state; Lescallett v. Com., 89 Va. 878, 17 S. E. 546.

The general rule against betting on horse races applies to all betting wherever done; State v. Lovell, 39 N. J. L. 463; and all pooling schemes are within the statute; Com. v. Simonds, 79 Ky. 618; but in some states betting or pool-selling with reference to races run on a licensed track are excepted from the statutory prohibition; State v. Posey, 1 Humph. (Tenn.) 384; State v. Fidler, 7 Humph. (Tenn.) 501; State v. Blackburn, 2 Coldw. (Tenn.) 235; Huff v. State, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 279; but not otherwise; Williams v. State, 92 Tenn. 275, 21 S. W. 662.

The regulation of horse racing falls under the police power; the right to license may be delegated to a commission; and an act regulating it is not invalid because trotting races are excepted; State Racing Commission v. Agricultural Ass'n, 136 Ky. 173, 123 S. W. 681, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 905. This case contains much horse and horse racing history. The same act was sustained in Grainger v. Jockey Club, 148 Fed. 513, 78 C. C. A. 199, 8 Ann. Cas. 997. A delegation of the supervision of horse racing to a commission was upheld in State v. Williams, 160 Mo. 333, 60 S. W. 1077. See also Grannan v. Racing Ass'n, 153 N. Y. 449, 47 N. E. 896. An act prohibiting horse racing during the winter months or on any track more than three times a year, etc., is valid; State v. Roby, 142 Ind. 168, 41 N. E. 145, 33 L. R. A. 213, 51 Am. St. Rep. 174. An act penalizing betting by machines or other contrivances was held to include "Paris" Mutual; Com. v. Simonds, 79 Ky. 618. Book making on a horse race is a gambling device within a statute; Miller v. U. S., 6 App. D. C. 6.

One who keeps a room as a resort for persons who bet on horse races is guilty of keeping a disorderly house; Haring v. State, 53 N. J. L. 664, 23 Atl. 581; so where one maintains a partly enclosed place for the purpose of making books and selling pools; Swigart v. People, 154 Ill. 284, 40 N. E. 432.

Blackboards, sheets, manifold books, and policy slips for placing bets on horse races are gambling devices; Com. v. Adams, 160 Mass. 310, 35 N. E. 851; State v. Shaw, 39 Minn. 153, 39 N. W. 305; contra, People v. Weithoff, 93 Mich. 631, 53 N. W. 784, 32 Am. St. Rep. 532.

Although the business of pool selling is illegal, the crime of embezzlement may be committed by the agent who receives the money, in appropriating it to his own use; State v. Shadd, 80 Mo. 358.

Money lent for the purpose of betting on a gambling device cannot be recovered; Shaffner v. Pinchback, 133 Ill. 410, 24 N. E. 867, 23 Am. St. Rep. 624; nor can a note given for money lent for such a purpose; Cutler v. Welsh, 43 N. H. 497; and see Lanahan v. Pattison, 1 Flip. 410, Fed. Cas. No. 8,036. In the District of Columbia, it is held that the Statute 9 Anne, c. 14, s. 1, supra, is still in force and that all notes given for gambling contracts are void, even in the hands of a bona fide purchaser; Lulley v. Morgan, 21 D. C. 88; contra, Bozeman v. Allen, 48 Ala. 512. A check given to enter a horse for a horse race is given for an illegal purpose and there can be no recovery thereon; Comly v. Hillegass, 94 Pa. 132, 39 Am. Rep. 774. A promissory note given for an interest in a race horse is not void; Biegler v. Trust Co., 62 Ill. App. 560.

A jockey, under a contract to perform his services in "a good and workmanlike manner," need possess and exercise only a reasonable degree of skill, knowledge and ability as such; Middendorf v. Schreiber, 150 Mo. App. 530, 131 S. W. 122.

See GAMING; LOTTERY; WAGER; STAKEHOLDER; BETTING.

HORTUS (Lat.). In the Civil Law. A garden. Dig. 32, 91, 5.

HOSPITAL. An institution for the reception and care of sick, wounded, infirm, or aged persons; generally incorporated, and then of the class of corporations called "eleemosynary" or "charitable." See CHARITABLE USES.

As to the liability of a hospital in tort, see CHARITABLE CORPORATIONS. As to hospital records as evidence, see PHYSICIAN.

HOSPITALLERS. The knights of a religious order, so called because they built a hospital at Jerusalem, wherein pilgrims were received. All their lands and goods in England were given to the sovereign by 32 Hen. VIII. c. 34. Cowell.

HOSPITATOR (Lat.). A host or entertainer.

Hospitator communis. An innkeeper. 8 Co. 32.

Hospitator magnus. The marshal of a camp.

HOSPITIA. Inns. Hospitia communia, common inns. Reg. Orig. 105.

Hospitia curiæ, inns of the court. Hospitia cancellariæ, inns of chancery. Crabb, Eng. Law 428; 4 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 102.

HOSPITICIDE. One who kills his guest or host.

HOSPITIUM. An inn; a household.

HOSPODAR. A Turkish governor in Moldavia or Wallachia.

HOSTAGE. A person delivered into the possession of a public enemy in the time of war, as a security for the performance of a contract entered into between the belligerents.

Hostages were frequently given as a security for the payment of a ransom-bill; and if they died their death did not discharge the contract; 3 Burr. 1734; 1 Kent 106; Dane, Abr. Index.

HOSTELER. An innkeeper. Now applied, under the form ostler, to those who look to a guests's horses. Cowell.

HOSTELAGIUM. In English Law. A right reserved to the lords to be lodged and entertained in the houses of their tenants.

HOSTES. Enemies. Hostes humani generis, enemies of the human race; i. e. pirates.

HOSTIÆ. In Old Records. The hostbread, or consecrated wafer, in the eucharist. Cowell.

HOSTILARIA, HOSPITALARIA. A place or room in religious houses used for the reception of guests and strangers.

HOSTILE. When applied to the possession of an occupant of real estate holding adversely it is not to be construed as showing ill-will, or that he is an enemy of the person holding the legal title; but it means an occupant who holds and is in possession as owner, and therefore against all other claimants of the land. Ballard v. Hansen, 33 Neb. 861, 51 N. W. 295.

HOSTILE EMBARGO. One laid upon the vessels of an actual or prospective enemy. See EMBARGO.

HOSTILE WITNESS. A witness who manifests so much hostility or prejudice under examination in chief that the party who has called him, or his representative, is allowed to cross-examine him, i. e. to treat him as though he had been called by the opposite party. Whart. See WITNESS.

HOSTILITY. A state of open enmity; open war. Wolff, Droit de la Nat. § 1119.

Permanent hostility exists when the individual is a citizen or subject of the government at war.

Temporary hostility exists when the individual happens to be domiciliated or resident in the country of one of the belligerents; in this latter case the individual may throw off the national character he has thus acquired by residence, when he puts himself in motion, bona fide, to quit the country sine animo revertendi; 3 C. Rob. 12; The Friendship, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 14, 4 L. Ed. 322. See ENEMY; DOMICIL.

HOT WATER ORDEAL. See ORDEAL.

HOTCHPOT (spelled, also, hodgepodge, hotch-potch). The blending and mixing of property belonging to different persons in order to divide it equally. 2 Bla. Com. 190.

The bringing together all the personal estate of the deceased, with the advancements he has made to his children, in order that the same may be divided agreeably to the provisions of the statute for the distribution of intestates' estates.

By hotchpot is meant "that the estate of the ancestor is to be considered as a common fund out of which each child is to draw at the death an equal proportion. That part of the estate which has been given is to be estimated at what it is worth at the death, relation being had to its situation at the time of the gift." McCaw v. Bleevit, 2 McCord Ch. (S. C.) 90, 104. See McLure v. Steele, 14 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 105.

In bringing an advancement into hotchpot, the donee is not required to account for the profits of the thing given: for example, he is not required to bring into hotchpot the produce of negroes, nor the interest of money. The property must be accounted for at its value when given; Beckwith v. Butler, 1 Wash. (Va.) 224; Richardson v. Sinkler, 2 Des. (S. C.) 127; Hudson v. Hudson's Ex'r, 3 Rand. (Va.) 117; Williams v. Stonestreet, id. 559. See ADVANCEMENT.

HOTEL. Under the Raines law of 1896, a building was not a legal hotel unless it had six rooms furnished as bedrooms with independent access by door from the hall, exclusive of rooms occupied by the family and servants of the proprietor; In re McMonagle, 41 Misc. Rep. 407, 84 N. Y. Supp. 1068; In re Brewster, 85 App. Div. 235, 83 N. Y. Supp. 564. In 1897 this law was amended so as to require ten bedrooms; In re Clement, 117 App. Div. 5, 102 N. Y. Supp. 37. See INN-KEEPER; BOARDER; GUEST; TAVERN; INN.

HOUGH. A valley. Co. Litt. 5 b.

HOUR. The twenty-fourth part of a natural day; the space of sixty minutes of time. Co. Litt. 135.

HOURS OF SERVICE ACT. See EIGHT HOUR LAW.

HOUSAGE. A fee paid by a carrier for housing goods. Toml.

HOUSE. A place for the habitation and dwelling of man.

A collection of persons; an institution; a commercial firm; a family.

In a grant or demise of a house, the curtilage and garden will pass, even without the words "with the appurtenances" being added; Cro. Eliz. 89; 3 Leon. 214; 1 Plowd. 171; 2 Wms. Saund. 401, n. 2; Rogers v. Smith, 4 Pa. 93; Brown v. Turner, 113 Mo. 27, 20 S. W. 660. In a grant or demise of a house with the appurtenances, no more will pass although other lands have been occupied with the house; 1 P. Wms. 603; Cro.

Jac. 526; 2 Co. 32; Co. Litt. 5 d, 36 a, b; 2 Wms. Saund. 401, n. 2.

If a house, originally entire, be divided into several apartments, with an outer door to each apartment, and no communication with each other subsists, in such case the several apartments are considered as distinct houses; 6 Mod. 214; Woodf. L. & T. 178.

A church is a "house" within a statute prescribing a street line for houses; L. R. 15 Eq. 159; a smoke house is a house; Irvin v. State, 37 Tex. 412; but a theatre is not a house; 14 M. & W. 181.

As to what the term includes in cases of arson and burglary, see ARSON; BURGLARY; DWELLING-HOUSE; FLAT; APARTMENT. See also, ARREST.

HOUSE-BOTE. An allowance of necessary timber out of the landlord's woods for the repairing and support of a house or tenement. This belongs of common right to any lessee for years or for life. House-bote is said to be of two kinds, estoverium edificandi et ardendi. Co. Litt. 41 b.

HOUSE-DUTY. A tax on inhabited houses imposed by 14 and 15 Vict. c. 36, in lieu of window-duty, which was abolished.

HOUSE OF COMMONS. One of the constituent houses of the British parliament.

It is composed of the representatives elected by the people, as distinguished from the house of lords, which is composed chiefly of the nobility. It consists of six hundred and seventy members; four hundred and ninety-five from England and Wales, seventy-two from Scotland, and one hundred and three from Ireland. See PARLIAMENT; HIGH COURT OF PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF CORRECTION. A place for the imprisonment of those who have committed crimes of lesser magnitude.

HOUSE OF ILL-FAME. A house resorted to for the purpose of prostitution and lewdness. State v. Evans, 27 N. C. 603.

A disorderly house need not be a dwelling house. "However lexicographers may define the word 'house,' it is clear the legislature has used it as generic, and has applied it to nearly all kinds of buildings;" State v. Powers, 36 Conn. 77. A flat boat, floating on a river, with a cabin on it, with men and women eating, sleeping, and living on it, may be such; State v. Mullen, 35 Ia. 199; so also a tent, of which it has been said, "such structures are more apt to become disorderly nuisances than houses of brick or stone, owing to the facility with which noises made within could be heard from without;" Killman v. State, 2 Tex. App. 222, 28 Am. Rep. 432. So it has been held of one room of a steamship, though the latter is not an inn; Com. v. Bulman, 118 Mass. 456, 19 Am. Rep. 469. It may be a single room; State v. Garity, 46 N. H. 61.

Keeping a house of ill-fame is an offence at common law; Com. v. Harrington, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 26; 1 Russ. Cr. 322; 1 Bish. Cr. L. 1082. Such a house is a common nuisance; 1 Russ. Cr. 199; one who assists in establishing such is guilty of a misdemeanor; Ross v. Com., 2 B. Monr. (Ky.) 417; so of a lessor with knowledge; Com. v. Harrington, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 26. So the letting of a house to a woman of ill-fame, knowing her to be such, with the intent that it shall be used for purposes of prostitution, is an indictable offence at common law; Com. v. Moore, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 600. And it is no defence that the landlord did not know the character of the tenant; Price v. State, 96 Ala. 1, 11 South. 128. Exemplary damages may be awarded against one permitting such house to be kept upon his premises; Besso v. Southworth, 71 Tex. 765, 10 S. W. 523, 10 Am. St. Rep. 814. If a lodger lets her room for the purpose of indiscriminate prostitution, she is guilty of keeping a house of ill-fame, as much as if she were the proprietor of the whole house; 2 Raym. 1197; State v. Smith, 15 R. I. 24, 22 Atl. 1119. A married woman who lives apart from her husband may be indicted alone, and punished, for keeping a house of ill-fame; Com. v. Lewis, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 151. The house need not be kept for lucre, to constitute the offence; State v. Bailey, 21 N. H. 345; Com. v. Ashley, 2 Gray (Mass.) 357; State v. Nixon, 18 Vt. 70, 46 Am. Dec. 135; See Smith v. State, 6 Gill (Md.) 425; Abrahams v. State, 4 Ia. 541; Ross v. Com. 2 B. Monr. (Ky.) 417.

It is not necessary, in order to sustain a charge of keeping such a house, that the indecency, disorder, or misconduct should be patent from the outside; L. R. 1 C. C. R. 21; and it has been said evidence of its general reputation as a house of ill-fame is admissible; State v. Toombs, 79 Ia. 742, 45 N. W. 300; Graeter v. State, 105 Ind. 271, 4 N. E. 461; People v. Lock Wing, 61 Cal. 380; 20 Ont. 489; contra, State v. Foley, 45 N. H. 466; Com. v. Stewart, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 342; People v. Mauch, 24 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 276; U. S. v. Jourdine, 4 Cra. C. C. 338, Fed. Cas. No. 15,499; State v. Lyon, 39 Ia. 379; State v. Boardman, 64 Me. 523; but evidence of the reputation of the women frequenting the house and the character of their conversation and acts in and about it is admissible; id.; Com. v. Kimball, 7 Gray (Mass.) 328. The reputation of the house and its visitors is sufficient proof; King v. State, 17 Fla. 183; A single act of lewdness by defendant will not make it a house of prostitution; People v. Gastro, 75 Mich. 127, 42 N. W. 937; nor is it a crime to let rooms to prostitutes for quiet and decent occupation, or to permit a house to be visited by disreputable people for proper and innocent purposes; State v. Smith, 15 R. I. 24, 22 Atl. 1119. Wharton says: "It has been ruled, though on questionable authority, that the 'ill-fame,' or bad repute, may be proved"; 2 Whart. Cr. L. 10th ed. § 1452; but the doubt cast by this language on the cases referred to is not warranted by the cases, a long list of which, in addition to those above cited, may be found in a note to the section quoted. And indeed the same author in another work says: "On indictments, however, for keeping houses of ill-fame, when such is the statutory term describing the offence, the ill-fame or bad reputation of the house may be put in evidence. The bad reputation of the visitors is, in any view, competent evidence. But of a disorderly house the reputation is inadmissible, being secondary evidence of disorder, which is susceptible of immediate proof;" Whart. Cr. Ev. 9th ed. § 261. On indictment for keeping a house of ill-fame the reputation of the house as such must be proved; Cadwell v. State, 17 Conn. 467; State v. Blakesley, 38 Conn. 523; but it must be "ill-repute in the vicinity. . . . Rumors at a distance do not make up reputation"; People v. Pinkerton, 79 Mich. 110, 44 N. W. 180. But the reputation where admitted at all must be connected in time with the person who is now the proprietor; Sara v. State, 22 Tex. App. 639, 3 S. W. 339. It is not necessary to prove who frequents the house; it is enough to show that unknown persons were there behaving as charged; 1 Term 748. Contracts of lease of such a house, or to furnish goods for the purposes of the business, if made with knowledge of the use intended, are illegal and void; L. R. 1 Eq. 626. See BAWDY HOUSE; BROTHEL; DISORDERLY HOUSE.

HOUSE OF LORDS. One of the constituent houses of the English parliament. See PARLIAMENT; HIGH COURT OF PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF REFUGE. A prison for juvenile delinquents. See 55 Am. Rep. 456.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES. The name given to the more numerous branch of the federal congress, and of the legislatures of the states of the United States.

The constitution of the United States, art. I. s. 2, § 1, provides that the "house of representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several states; and the electors of each state shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the state legislature." No person can be a representative until he shall have attained the age of twenty-five and has been seven years a citizen of the United States, and unless he is at the time of his election an inhabitant of the state in which he is chosen; U. S. Const. art. I. sec. 2, § 2. A representative cannot hold any office under the United States; art. I. s. 6, § 2; nor can any religious test be required of him; art. VI. § 3; nor is any property qualification imposed upon him. Representatives are apportioned (Amend. XIV. sec. 2) among the several states according to their respective numbers, excluding Indians not taxed; with a proviso, that, if the right to vote for state or U. S. officers is denied to any male inhabitants of a state, of 21 years of age and citizens of the United States, except for participation in rebellion or other crime, the representation in such state shall be proportionately reduced. The number of representatives shall not exceed one for every thirty thousand, but each state shall have at least one representative; U. S. Const. art. I. sec. 1. A reapportionment among the states is made every tenth year. Under the act of Aug. 8, 1911, the number was increased to 435, including one representative each from Arizona and New Mexico, not at that time admitted as states. The house of representatives has the exclusive right of originating bills for raising revenues, but the senate may concur with amendments, U. S. Const. I. sec. 7; Story on Const. 571. See CONGRESS; QUORUM; SPEAKER; MAJORITY; MONEY BILLS; APPORTIONMENT.

HOUSEBREAKING. The breaking and entering the dwelling house of another by night or by day, with intent to commit some felony within the same, whether such felonious intent is executed or not. Housebreaking by night is burglary. Cl. Cr. L. 237.

This crime is of a local character, and the evidence respecting the place must correspond with the allegation in the indictment. An indictment for housebreaking must allege the ownership of the house; State v. Hupp, 31 W. Va. 355, 6 S. E. 919. See BURGLARY; BREAKING.

HOUSEHOLD. Those who dwell under the same roof and constitute a family. Webst. But it is not necessary that they should be under a roof, or that the father of the family be with it, if the mother and children keep together so as to constitute a family; Woodward v. Murray, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 402.

Belonging to the house and family; domestic. Webster, Dict.

HOUSEHOLD FURNITURE. By this expression, in wills, all personal chattels will pass that may contribute to the use or convenience of the household or the ornament of the house: as, plate, linen, china, both useful and ornamental, and pictures. 2 Wms. Exec. 1185. But goods or plate in the hands of testator in the way of his trade will not pass, nor books, nor wines; 1 Jarm. Wills 591, 596; 2 Will. Ex. 1017; Bunn v. Winthrop, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 329.

But books and wines have been held, on the other hand, to pass in a bequest, where the testator had made them part of the household furniture by his use of them; 1 Robt. 21; see 2 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 489; Gooch v. Gooch, 33 Me. 535; Appeal of Hoopes, 60 Pa. 220, 100 Am. Dec. 562; and so has plate;

29 Beav. 573; bronzes, statuary, pictures; Richardson v. Hall, 124 Mass. 228. See FIXTURES; FURNITURE.

HOUSEHOLD GOODS. In a will this expression will pass everything of a permanent nature (that is, articles of household which are not consumed in their enjoyment) that were used or purchased, or otherwise acquired by the testator, for his house, but not goods in the way of his trade. Plate will pass by this term, but not articles of consumption found in the house, as malt, hops, or victuals, nor guns and pistols, if used in hunting or sport, and not for defence of house. A clock in the house, if not fixed to it, will pass; 1 Jarm. Wills 589; 2 Will. Exec. 464. See Carnagy v. Woodcock, 2 Munf. (Va.) 234, 5 Am. Dec. 470; Gooch v. Gooch, 33 Me. 535.

HOUSEHOLD STUFF. Words sometimes used in a will. Plate will pass under the term; 2 Freem. 64; but not apparel, books, cattle, victuals, and choses in action, which do not fall within the natural meaning of the word, unless there be an intention manifest that they should pass; 15 Ves. 319. Goods, as seven hundred beds in possession of testator for purposes of trade, do not pass under the term "utensils of household stuff;" 2 P. Wms. 302. In general, "household stuff" will pass all articles which may be used for the convenience of the house; Swinb. Wills 484. See FIXTURES; HOUSEHOLD FURNITURE.

HOUSEHOLDER. Master or chief of a family; one who keeps house with his family. Webst. But a man who has absconded from the state, and left his wife and children remaining together as a family, was for their benefit held to be a householder; Woodward v. Murray, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 402; Bowne v. Witt, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 475.

A keeper of a tavern or boarding-house, or a master or mistress of a dwelling-house; Hutchinson v. Chamberlin, 11 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 248. A person having and providing for a household. The character is not lost by a temporary cessation from housekeeping; Griffin v. Sutherland, 14 Barb. (N. Y.) 456. For purposes of bail, one who rents and occupies part of a building as an office has been held a householder; Somerset & Worcester Sav. Bank v. Huyck, 33 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 323. See Aaron v. State, 37 Ala. 106; 1 Q. B. 72.

HOUSEKEEPER. One who occupies a house.

A person who, under a lease, occupies every room in the house except one, which is reserved for his landlord, who pays all the taxes, is not a housekeeper; 1 Chitty. Bail. 502. Nor is a person a housekeeper who takes a house which he afterwards underlets to another, whom the landlord refuses to accept as his tenant: in this case the undertenant paid the taxes, and let to the tenant the first floor of the house, and the rent was paid for the whole house to the tenant, who paid it to the landlord; id. note.

In order to make the party a housekeeper, he must be in actual possession of the house; 1 Chitty, Bail. 288; and must occupy a whole house. See 1 B. & C. 178; 3 Petersd. Abr. 103, note; Parmele's Case, 2 Mart. O. S. (La.) 313. See HOUSEHOLDER.

HOWE. In Old English Law. A hill. Co. Litt. 5 b.

HOY. A small vessel usually rigged as a sloop, and employed in conveying passengers and goods from place to place on the sea coast. Webster.

HOYMAN. The master or captain of a hoy. He is a common carrier. Story, Bailm. 496.

HUDE-GELD. In Old English Law. A compensation for an assault (transgressio illata) upon a trespassing servant (servus). Supposed to be a mistake or misprint in Fleta for hinegeld. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, § 20. Cowell.

Also, the price of one's skin, or the money paid by a servant to save himself from a whipping. Du Cange.

HUE AND CRY. A pursuit of one who had committed felony, by the highway.

The meaning of hue is said to be shout, from the Saxon huer; but this word also means to foot, and it may be reasonably questioned whether the term may not be up foot and cry, in other words, run and cry after the felon. We have a mention of hue and cry as early as Edward I.; and by the Statute of Winchester, 13 Edw. 1., "Immediately upon robberies and felonies committed, fresh suit shall be made from town to town, and county to county, by horsemen and footmen, to the seaside. The constable (the person being described, etc.) is to call upon the parishioners to assist him in the pursuit in his precinct; and to give notice to the next constable, who is to do the same as the first, etc. If the county will not answer the bodies of the offenders, the whole hundred shall be answerable for the robberies there committed, etc." A person engaged in the hue and cry apprehending a felon was, on the felon's conviction, entitled to forty pounds, on a certificate of the judge or justice before whom there was conviction, as well as to the felon's horse, furniture, arms, money, and other goods taken with him, subject to the rights of other persons therein; Wood, Inst. 370. See 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 100.

The person who has lost his property must raise the hue and cry. All who refused to assist were liable. When the owner found his property he could seize and claim it. The person in whose possession it was found must either give it and pay a fine or appear before the court. If the property was found by the following of the hue and cry, he could claim it at once; 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 99.

From the fourteenth to the seventeenth centuries summons and warrants took the place of hue and cry, which practically fell into disuse.

Where one ran from his place of business to join the hue and cry and shot the fugitive, his conviction was reversed; People v. Lillard, 18 Cal. App. 343, 123 Pac. 221.

HUEBRA. In Spanish Law. An acre of land, or as much as can be ploughed in a day by two oxen. 2 White, Recop. 49.

HUISSERIUM. A ship used to transport horses. Also termed "uffer." Tomlin.

HUISSIER. An usher of the court. An officer who serves process.

In France, an officer of this name performs many of the duties of an English sheriff or constable. In Canada there may be many huissiers in each county, whose acts are independent of each other, while there can be but one sheriff, who is presumed cognizant of the acts of his subordinates. The French huissier certifies his process; the Canadian merely serves what is put into his hands.

HULKA. A hulk, or small vessel. Cowell.

HULKS. A place of punishment for convicts in England, abandoned with the reform in the punishment of convicts which began in England about 1810.

HULL. In a statute requiring ships of a certain size to carry lights, etc., it includes the fore-castle deck. The Europe, 190 Fed. 475, 111 C. C. A. 307.

HULLUS. A hill. Cowell; 2 Mon. Angl. 292.

HUNDRED. In English Law. A division of a county, which some make to have originally consisted of one hundred hides of land, others of ten tithings, or one hundred free families. See Regan v. R. Co., 60 Conn. 124, 22 Atl. 503, 25 Am. St. Rep. 306.

It differed in size in different parts of England; 1 Steph. Com. 122. In many cases, when an offence is committed within a hundred, the inhabitants are liable to make good the damage if they do not produce the offender. See 12 East 244.

This system was probably introduced by Alfred (though mentioned in the Penitential of Egbert, where it seems to be the addition of a later age), being borrowed from the continent, where it was known to the Franks, under the name centena, in the sixth century. See Charlemagne Capit. l. 3, c. 10; 1 Poll. & Maitl. 543.

"The hundred, and the principle that the hundred community is a judicial body, outlived the storms of the folk-wanderings, the political creations of Clovis, the reforms of Charlemagne, the dissolution of the Frankish Empire, the dissolution of the county system." Sohm, Die Fränkische Reichs- und Gerichtsverfassung I. 541.

It had a court attached to it, called the hundred court, or hundred lagh, like a court baron, except in its larger territorial jurisdiction. It was governed by the hundredary (hundredarius); 9 Co. 25. Hundred-penny was a tax collected from the hundred by its lord or by the sheriff. Hundred-fetena signified the dwellers in the hundred; Charta Edg. Reg. Mon. Angl. to. 1, p. 16. In Delaware the subdivisions of a county are called hundreds. They correspond to towns in New England, townships in Pennsylvania, parishes in Louisiana, and the like.

HUNDRED COURT. An inferior court, long obsolete, and practically abolished by the County Courts Act of 1867, sec. 28, whose jurisdiction extended to the whole territory embraced in a hundred. They were courts not of record; the freeholders were the judges; they were held before the steward of the manor as register; and they resembled courts baron in all respects except in their territorial jurisdiction; 3 Bla. Com. 34, 35.

There is no doubt that this was the primary court. Pollock, 1 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. Leg. Hist. 91; it was the first well known judicial institution in the history of England. James C. Carter, The Law, etc. See 14 L. Q. R. 292.

HUNDRED-FECTA. The performance of suit and service at the hundred courts.

HUNDRED-FETENA. Dwellers or inhabitants of a hundred.

HUNDRED GEMOTE. An assembly among the Saxons of the freeholders of a hundred.

It met twelve times in the year, originally; though subsequently its meetings became less frequent.

It had an extensive jurisdiction, both civil and criminal, and was the predecessor of the county court and sheriff's tourn, and possessed very similar powers; Spelman, Gloss. Hundredum; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 7.

HUNDRED LAGH (Sax.). Liability to attend the hundred court. Spelman, Gloss. See Cowell; Blount.

HUNDRED-PENNY. The hundred-feh, or tax collected by the sheriff or lord of a hundred.

HUNDRED ROLLS. Rolls embodying the result of investigations made by the commissioners in 1274 as to usurpations of the royal rights. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 48.

HUNDREDARIUS, HUNDREDARY. The chief officer of a hundred. Cowell.

HUNDREDES EALDOR, or HUNDREDES MAN. The presiding officer in the hundred-court. Anc. Inst. Eng.

HUNDREDORS. The inhabitants of a hundred, who, by several statutes, are held to be liable, in the cases therein specified, to make good the loss sustained by persons within the hundred by robbery or other violence, therein also specified. The principal of these statutes are 13 Edw. I. st. 2, c. 1, s. 4; 28 Edw. III. c. 11; 27 Eliz. c. 13; 29 Car. II. c. 7; 8 Geo. II. c. 16; 22 Geo. II. c. 24.

Persons serving on juries, or fit to be empanelled thereon, dwelling within the hundred where the land in question lies. 35 Hen. VIII. c. 6. And some such were necessarily on every panel till the 4 & 5 Anne, c. 16. 4 Steph. Com. 370. One that had the jurisdiction of the hundred. The bailiff of the hundred. Jacob, L. Dict.

HUNG. Sometimes applied to a jury which fails to agree upon a verdict. Anderson, L. Dict.

HUNGER. The desire to eat. Hunger is no excuse for larceny; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 54; 4 Bla. Com. 31. As to death from hunger, see DEATH.

HUNTING. The act of pursuing and taking wild animals; the chase.

The chase gives a kind of title by occupancy by which the hunter acquires a right or property in the game which he captures. In the United States the right of hunting was formerly limited only so far as to exclude hunters from committing injuries to private property or to the public—as, by shooting on public roads—or from trespassing. But see GAME LAWS. See FERÆ NATURÆ; OCCUPANCY.

HURDLE. In English Law. A species of sledge, used to draw traitors to execution.

HURST, HYRST, HERST, or HIRST. A wood or grove of trees. Co. Litt. 4 b.

HUSBAND AND WIFE. The parties to the marriage relation.

Mutual and Marital Relations. The liabilities, rights and duties of the husband and wife, both with respect to each other, and as to third persons, necessarily depend largely upon the legal conception of the relation existing between them which at the time obtains within the jurisdiction in which they have their domicile. This conception, as will appear infra, has greatly changed in modern times. At common law, the identity of the wife was practically merged in that of the husband, while under modern statutes both the right of individual initiative and action is conferred upon married women to a very large extent. Under the Roman law the power of the husband over the wife was even more absolute than under the English common law, and the wife's identity was entirely merged in that of the husband, who could correct and chastise or sell, and even kill her, though the sale was, in fact, of her labor and not of her person; see Solm, Inst. sec. 93; Bryce, Stud. Hist. & Jur. 787; but his power in Roman law to kill the wife has been doubted; Hunter, Rom. L. 224. Notwithstanding the greater freedom given to married women under modern statutes, as above stated, the separation of the individuality of the husband and wife is rather with respect to property rights than personal relations. As to the latter, the merging of the identity of the wife in that of the husband is still recognized to a large extent. This is well illustrated by a case in which under a statute, a person losing money by gambling was permitted to sue for it, and if he failed to do so within three months "any other person" might sue for treble the amount; it was held that the identity of the loser's wife was so merged in that of the husband that she was not comprehended in the phrase "any other person"; Spiller v. Close, 110 Me. 302, 86 Atl. 173. The personal and exclusive rights of a husband with regard to his wife's person are invaded by a criminal conversation with her, and such an act, even when the wife consents, is an assault; Tinker v. Colwell, 193 U. S. 473, 24 Sup. Ct. 505, 48 L. Ed. 754. Case as well as trespass vi et armis will lie; id.

Under the common law he was bound to furnish his wife with a home; it was his right to choose and establish the domicile; Hair v. Hair, 10 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 163; and it was her duty to follow the husband to it; Boyce v. Boyce, 23 N. J. Eq. 337; Colvin v. Reed, 55 Pa. 375; Powell v. Powell, 29 Vt. 148; 4 Ves. Jr. 798; and this control by the husband of the matrimonial domicile goes to such an extent that an ante-nuptial agreement of the husband to live in a certain state is not enforceable; Isaacs v. Isaacs, 71 Neb. 537, 99 N. W. 268; and since the domicile of the husband is the matrimonial domicile, it is unaffected by a change of residence of the wife; Anderson v. Watt, 138 U. S. 694, 11 Sup. Ct. 449, 34 L. Ed. 1078; Scholes v. Iron Works Co., 44 Ia. 190; Porterfield v. Augusta, 67 Me. 556.

A wife deserted by her husband may acquire a separate domicile which, in a suit by her for alienation of affections, gives jurisdiction because of diversity of citizenship; Gordon v. Yost, 140 Fed. 79; and see 19 Harv. L. Rev. 381. See DOMICIL.

A wife is entitled to a home suitable with respect to the circumstances and condition of her husband, over which she shall be permitted to preside as mistress, and she does not forfeit her right to maintenance by refusing to live in the home with and under the control of the husband's mother; Brewer v. Brewer, 79 Neb. 726, 113 N. W. 161, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 222; or by refusing to live as a boarder in the home of his family; Edwards v. Edwards, 69 N. J. Eq. 522, 61 Atl. 531; Powell v. Powell, 29 Vt. 148; Albee v. Albee, 141 Ill. 550, 31 N. E. 153; and a similar rule was applied to permit the husband to refuse to be subjected to insults from the wife's family; Cutler v. Cutler, 2 Brewst. (Pa.) 511. In addition to furnishing a home the husband is required to supply, to and for his wife, necessities and conveniences which his fortune and his rank enable him to do, and which her situation require; 1 Hurl. & N. 641; Wagner v. Nagel, 33 Minn. 348, 23 N. W. 308; but this did not include such luxuries as, according to her fancies, she deemed necessities; Thill v. Pohlman, 76 Ia. 638, 41 N. W. 385. His obligation to support his wife is based upon the policy of the law and not on his contractual relations; 196 U. S. 68.

A wife has a right to relief against a conveyance or transfer made or contemplated by her husband in fraud of her support and maintenance which is generally recognized by the courts; Fahey v. Fahey, 43 Colo. 354, 96 Pac. 251; 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1147, and note with cases.

The husband is not liable for necessities furnished to a wife after desertion without cause; Board of Sup'rs of Monroe Co. v. Budlong, 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 493; or where the husband has abandoned her for just cause; Sawyer v. Richards, 65 N. H. 185, 23 Atl. 150; Billing v. Pilcher, 7 B. Mon. (Ky.) 458, 46 Am. Dec. 523; contra, Button v. Weaver, 87 App. Div. 224, 84 N. Y. Supp. 388; Hatch v. Leonard, 165 N. Y. 435, 59 N. E. 270; 6 Mod. 171; but see 19 Q. B. D. 379. Even where the common law disabilities of the wife, during coverture, have been removed, she cannot, either before or after divorce, maintain an action to recover damages from the husband for his failure to supply her with necessities or for any other act or failure of duty arising out of the marital relation; Decker v. Kedly, 148 Fed. 681, 79 C. C. A. 305.

He was required to fulfil toward her his marital promise of fidelity, and could, therefore, have no carnal connection with any other woman without a violation of his obligations. She is under obligation to be faithful in chastity to her marriage vow; See DIVORCE; ADULTERY; CRIM. CON.

As he was bound to govern his house properly, he was liable for its misgovernment, and he could be punished for keeping a disorderly house, even where his wife had the principal agency. See BAWDY HOUSE; DISORDERLY HOUSE; HOUSE OF ILL-FAME. He was liable for his wife's debts incurred before coverture; 1 P. Wms. 462, 469; Barnes v. Underwood, 47 N. Y. 351; Cole v. Shurtleff, 41 Vt. 311, 98 Am. Dec. 587; Platner v. Patchin, 19 Wis. 333; Howes v. Marshall, 13 Mass. 384; Bryan v. Doolittle, 38 Ga. 255; Hetrick v. Hetrick, 13 Ind. 44; Morrow v. Whitesides' Ex'r, 10 B. Mon. (Ky.) 411; Hawthorne v. Beckwith, 89 Va. 786, 17 S. E. 241; provided they were recovered from him during their joint lives; id.; and this rule applies where the husband was an infant; Roach v. Quick, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 238; Butler v. Breck, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 164, 39 Am. Dec. 768; Cole v. Seeley, 25 Vt. 220, 60 Am. Dec. 258; and, generally, for such as were contracted by her after coverture, for necessities, or by his authority, express or implied, and for her funeral expenses; 12 C. B. 344; 1 H. Bla. 90; Cunningham v. Reardon, 98 Mass. 538, 96 Am. Dec. 670; Sears v. Giddey, 41 Mich. 596, 2 N. W. 917, 32 Am. Rep. 168. See DEAD BODY; FUNERAL EXPENSES.

Rights, Duties and Liabilities of the Husband. Where a tradesman attempts to establish a joint liability against the husband and wife and fails to do so, he cannot then be permitted to charge against the husband a separate liability as contracting from his wife as agent; [1903] 1 K. B. 64, where it is clearly held that the mere fact of two persons living together as man and wife does not of itself hold out the wife to the tradesman as authorized to incur debts on the husband's behalf for ordinary household expenses; 6 App. Cas. 24; 15 C. B. (N. S.) 628. The liability of the husband for debts incurred by his wife, depends upon the law of principal and agent, and further, that the relation has been established, it seems to be necessary to determine in each case; 19 L. Q. R. 122. See an article on the "Changes in the Law of Husband and Wife in England," by Alfred Fellows, 22 L. Q. R. 64.

The husband is head of the family and as such had the right to establish himself wherever he pleased, and in this he could not be controlled by his wife; Angier v. Angier, 63 Pa. 450; Hunt v. Hunt, 29 N. J. Eq. 96; Kennedy v. Kennedy, 87 Ill. 250. Although he be a drunkard and the wife support the family, he still continues the head of it and his admission as to the adverse occupation of land concludes her right after his death; Com. v. Wood, 97 Mass. 225; Daveis v. Collins, 43 Fed. 31. As head of the family he has the general common-law right to regulate it and exercise general control over it; Lawrence v. Lawrence, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 267; Shaw v. Shaw, 17 Conn. 189; L. R. 2 P. & D. 31; he has also the right to fix the family name; Linton v. Bank, 10 Fed. 894; and to the custody and control of the children. See FATHER AND CHILD.

Though, under a modern statute, the wife may, with her husband's consent, conduct a business on her own account, she may not compete with him against his consent, if he is willing and able to support her; Root v. Root, 164 Mich. 638, 130 N. W. 194, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 837, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 740. He was entitled to all her earnings; 2 Man. & G. 172; Russell v. Brooks, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 65; McDavid v. Adams, 77 Ill. 155; Prescott v. Brown, 23 Me. 305, 39 Am. Dec. 623; Seitz v. Mitchell, 94 U. S. 580, 24 L. Ed. 179; Yopst v. Yopst, 51 Ind. 61; Turtle v. Muncy, 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 82; Armstrong v. Armstrong, 32 Miss. 279; Skillman v. Skillman, 15 N. J. Eq. 478, 82 Am. Dec. 279; Bucher v. Ream, 68 Pa. 421; Reynolds v. Robinson, 64 N. Y. 589; and formerly he might use such gentle force to restrain her of her liberty as might seem necessary; 2 Kent 181; but this is now otherwise; 1 Q. B. D. 671; although it has been held that he may restrain her from committing a crime; Richards v. Richards, 1 Grant, Cas. (Pa.) 389; or from interfering with the exercise of his parental control over his children; Gorman v. State, 42 Tex.

221. He also is said to have had the right moderately to chastise her; 1 Bla. Com. 445; State v. Rhodes, 61 N. C. 453, 98 Am. Dec. 78; but this is no longer recognized, and any chastisement inflicted on the wife renders him guilty of assault and battery; Com. v. McAfee, 108 Mass. 458, 11 Am. Rep. 383; Perry v. Perry, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 501; [1891] 1 Q. B. 671; Abbott v. Abbott, 67 Me. 304, 24 Am. Rep. 27; Poor v. Poor, 8 N. H. 307, 29 Am. Dec. 664; and excessive cruelty or frequent repetition of slight abuses is in many states a ground of divorce. See DIVORCE; CRUELTY.

He was liable for her torts; Com. v. Munsey, 112 Mass. 287; 5 Car. & P. 484; Flesh v. Lindsay, 115 Mo. 1, 21 S. W. 907, 37 Am. St. Rep. 374; Baker v. Young, 44 Ill. 42, 92 Am. Dec. 149; Fowler v. Chichester, 26 Ohio St. 9; Ball v. Bennett, 21 Ind. 427, 83 Am. Dec. 356; Hinds v. Jones, 48 Me. 348; Dailey v. Houston, 58 Mo. 361; Carleton v. Haywood, 49 N. H. 314; Jackson v. Kirby, 37 Vt. 448; Brazil v. Moran, 8 Minn. 236 (Gil. 205), 83 Am. Dec. 772; Morgan v. Kennedy, 62 Minn. 348, 64 N. W. 912, 30 L. R. A. 521, 54 Am. St. Rep. 647. But he should not be joined for trespass committed by her in the management of her separate estate; Quilty v. Battie, 135 N. Y. 201, 32 N. E. 47, 17 L. R. A. 521.

At common law a wife was liable for her torts; Hall v. White, 27 Conn. 488; but her legal incapacity made it necessary to join her husband as a defendant; 17 C. B. N. S. 744; and as a consequence his property was liable for execution, as originally was his person; 2 Rolle 53; but this liability ceased at the death of the wife because it arose solely because of her incapacity; see 21 Harv. L. Rev. 631.

Where a former act provided that, where the husband and wife were jointly sued for the tort of the wife, execution should first be levied against the wife's property, and a later statute repealed it, and provided that the wife might be sued as if she were sole, it was held that the statute abolished, by implication, the common-law liability of the husband for the torts of his wife; Schuler v. Henry, 42 Colo. 367, 94 Pac. 360, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1009.

The husband's liabilities for his wife's torts is not removed by the modern married women's acts; Kellar v. James, 63 W. Va. 139, 59 S. E. 939, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1003, and note, which concludes that the weight of authority is that the statutes do abrogate the liability, so far as concerns torts connected with the wife's separate property; Quilty v. Battie, 135 N. Y. 201, 32 N. E. 47, 17 L. R. A. 521; and the common law liability of the husband for a tort committed out of his presence is held to be repealed by implication by the married women's acts; Schuler v. Henry, 42 Colo. 367, 94 Pac. 360, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1009. The common-law liability of the husband for her wrongs still obtains in England and when he and she are sued for her libel, he cannot plead payment into court and she deny liability; [1904] 1 K. B. 292.

The husband was also liable for her crimes, if committed in his presence, except treason and murder where they were jointly liable; Davis v. State, 15 Ohio 72, 45 Am. Dec. 559; Bibb v. State, 94 Ala. 31, 10 South. 506, 33 Am. St. Rep. 88; State v. Kelly, 74 Pa. 589, 38 N. W. 503; Com. v. Dewitt, 10 Mass. 154; Mangum v. Peck, 111 N. Y. 401, 18 N. E. 617. The liability of the husband for crimes grew out of the original idea of the subjection and dependence of the wife. It was a rule of the common law that a married woman who committed a criminal offence in the presence of her husband is presumed to act under his coercion and is therefore exempt from responsibility; unless it is of a very aggravated character, she is presumed to act by his coercion, and, unless the contrary is proved, she is irresponsible. Under other circumstances she is liable, criminally, as if she were a feme sole. See COERCION; DURESS; WILL.

A husband is not entitled to alimony. The latter is based upon the common-law requirement, to which the husband was subject, of providing his wife with necessities, and there is no reciprocal obligation on her; Tootle, Hosea & Co. v. Coldwell, 30 Kan. 132, 1 Pac. 329. In some states there are statutes providing that alimony, or an allowance out of the wife's estate, in the nature of alimony, may be granted the husband. In Kansas alimony was denied the husband because no authority could be found to authorize it; Tootle, Hosea & Co. v. Coldwell, 30 Kan. 132, 1 Pac. 329; Greene v. Greene, 49 Neb. 546, 68 N. W. 947, 34 L. R. A. 110, 59 Am. St. Rep. 560. See ALIMONY; 55 Alb. L. J. 15.

THE POSITION AND RIGHTS OF THE WIFE. At Common Law. Her property rights were put by the marriage very much under the control of the husband. He could manage his own affairs in his own way, buy and sell all kinds of personal property, without her control, and he might buy any real estate he might deem proper; but, as the wife acquired a right in the latter, he could not sell it, discharged of her dower, except by her consent, expressed in the manner prescribed by the laws of the state where such lands lay. Her personal property in possession was vested in him, and he could dispose of it as if he had acquired it; this arose from the principle that they were considered one person in law; 2 Bla. Com. 433; Jaffrey v. McGough, 83 Ala. 202, 3 South. 594; and he was entitled to all her property in action, provided he reduced it to possession during her life; 2 Bla. Com. 434. If the wife died before the claims were collected, the husband received them as her administrator, in which case, after payment of her debts, the surplus belonged to him absolutely. He was also entitled to her chattels real, but these vested in him not absolutely, but sub modo: as, in the case of a lease for years, the husband was entitled to receive the rents and profits of it, and could, if he pleased, sell, surrender, or dispose of it during the coverture, and it was liable to be taken in execution for his debts; and, if he survived her, it was to all intents and purposes his own. In case his wife survived him, it was considered as if it had never been transferred from her, and it belonged to her alone. In his wife's freehold estate he had a life estate during the joint lives of himself and wife; and when he had a child by her who could inherit, he had an estate by the curtesy. See CURTESY. She was entitled, on his death, to dower in all the real estate of which he was seised at any time during coverture. See DOWER.

At common law a married woman could not bind herself by contract, express or implied, by parol or under seal, even for necessities, nor, though living apart from her husband, could she make a binding contract except for necessities or for the benefit of her separate estate; Farrand v. Beshoar, 9 Col. 291, 12 Pac. 196; and a contract made by her being invalid would be no consideration for a subsequent promise during widowhood; Condon v. Barr, 49 N. J. L. 53, 6 Atl. 614. Her husband might be bound by her acts as his agent, duly authorized; 4 Man. & G. 253; but where payment to her was pleaded, her authority must be stated; 2 id. 173. By her own act her authority could not be enlarged; Bank of America v. Banks, 101 U. S. 240, 25 L. Ed. 850; and she could not execute a conveyance, even in release of dower, otherwise than by joining with her husband in a deed to a third person; Tompkins v. Fonda, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 448. No promise of a wife could at common law be enforced against her unless she had a separate estate, and then not by a personal decree but only by treating it as an appointment out of such estate; Condon v. Barr, 49 N. J. L. 53, 6 Atl. 614; and then only for her or its benefit; Stowell & Heinz v. Grider, 48 Ark. 220, 2 S. W. 786; and no implied promise could be raised against her; Southworth v. Kimball, 58 Vt. 337, 2 Atl. 120.

In the absence of an enabling act the contracts of a married woman are cognizable only in equity, and cannot be enforced at law, except as affected by the so-called Married Women's Acts; Mueller v. Wiese, 95 Wis. 381, 70 N. W. 485. The right to contract conferred by these acts has been held to give her not a general contractual capacity, but only ability to make such contracts as have direct relation to the improvement of her separate property; Reed v. Buys, 44 Mich. 80, 6 N. W. 111; and her property must not merely be incidentally benefited, but there must be a direct relation between it and the contract; Russel v. Bank, 39 Mich. 671, 33 Am. Rep. 444. Such is the general construction of such statutes destroying the common-law rights of the husband in his wife's property; Canal Bank v. Partee, 99 U. S. 325, 25 L. Ed. 390; Huyler's Ex'rs v. Atwood, 26 N. J. Eq. 504; State v. Dredden, 1 Marvel (Del.) 522, 41 Atl. 925; that, as a general rule, her contracts are binding when necessary or convenient to the use and enjoyment of her separate estate; Todd v. Lee, 15 Wis. 365, 380.

The power of a married woman to make a valid contract, though she has no separate estate, was upheld in Harrington v. Lowe, 73 Kan. 11, 84 Pac. 570, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 547, and note, in which the cases are collected and the conclusion reached that the weight of authority is that statutes which confer the right on married women to contract with respect to their separate estates, do not confer the right to contract generally. A paper indorsed to enable her husband to raise money does not charge her property; Levi v. Earl, 30 Ohio St. 147, where there is an exhaustive examination of the subject. For extreme cases, see Deering v. Boyle, 8 Kan. 525, 12 Am. Rep. 480; Wicks v. Mitchell, 9 Kan. 80; Metropolitan Bank of St. Louis v. Taylor, 62 Mo. 338. See a full discussion of the effect of these statutes conferring contractual power upon a married woman; Stew. H. & W. §§ 369, 378 a.

Where a married woman performs her part of a contract, she may enforce performance against the other party, though she could not have been compelled to perform her part of the agreement; Sanguinett v. Webster, 127 Mo. 32, 29 S. W. 698; and if she made a contract, not enforceable against her, to purchase real estate and fail to pay for the same, it may be sold for the unpaid purchase money; Blanz v. Bain, 95 Tenn. 87, 31 S. W. 159. In some states provision is made for a conveyance of land by a married woman, abandoned by her husband, under permission of court or otherwise; and under such statute it has been held that, having conveyed without compliance with the statute, she may not rescind the deed long afterwards, on account of coverture, without returning the consideration; Gray v. Shaw, 30 S. W. 402, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 61.

The common-law disabilities of a married woman could not be avoided by any false representations with respect to her capacity, and no estoppel would be raised thereby; Keen v. Coleman, 39 Pa. 299, 80 Am. Dec. 524; Bodine v. Killeen, 53 N. Y. 96; Lowell v. Daniels, 2 Gray (Mass.) 161, 61 Am. Dec. 448; but in the management of her separate property she would be answerable for the frauds of her agent, within the scope of his agency, though she were ignorant of it; Baum v. Muller, 47 N. Y. 577. The disabilities of a married woman are her personal privilege, and must be pleaded; Hubert v.

Fera, 99 Mass. 199, 96 Am. Dec. 732. See COVERTURE. And no one but the husband can object to a suit against him by the wife, so that a judgment against a firm of which he is a member is good if he do not himself raise the defence; Freiler v. Kear, 126 Pa. 470, 17 Atl. 668, 906, 3 L. R. A. 839. Her common-law disability is not removed by the so-called married woman's acts which operate only to give her such capacity as is expressed in them; McFerran v. Kinney, 22 Mo. App. 554; Norton v. Meader, 4 Sawy. 604, Fed. Cas. No. 10,351; Canal Bank v. Partee, 99 U. S. 325, 25 L. Ed. 390; Stephenson v. Osborne, 41 Miss. 125, 90 Am. Dec. 358; Avery v. Doane, 1 Biss. 64, Fed. Cas. No. 673; and where such statutes authorize her to contract as though single, she is bound by estoppel arising from her misrepresentation or concealment; Towles v. Fisher, 77 N. C. 437; Godfrey v. Thornton, 46 Wis. 677, 1 N. W. 362; or by the acts of her husband; Hockett v. Bailey, 86 Ill. 74; Upshaw v. Gibson, 53 Miss. 344. Where such estoppel operates, it is only in respect to her personal estate; Wood v. Terry, 30 Ark. 393; but the weight of authority is against sustaining estoppel against her; 2 L. R. A. 345, n., where are collected cases of common-law disabilities of a married woman and estoppel against her. The rigor of the common-law disabilities of a married woman and the merger of her individual and property rights in her husband gave rise to certain equitable remedies against her husband, intended to secure at least a portion of her property to the use of herself and her children. As to the character and extent of these rights, see Wife's Equity, subtit. infra.

As a general rule, a contract made between parties who subsequently intermarry is, both at law and in equity, extinguished by the marriage; 1 Bla. Com. 442; but when articles are entered into or a settlement is executed whereby the wife is to have a certain provision in lieu of her fortune, the husband becomes virtually a purchaser of her fortune, and she becomes entitled to her provision, though there may be no intervention of trustees, and equity will enforce the contract; 2 Ves. Sen. 675; Husbands, on Married Women 125; MARRIAGE SETTLEMENT.

At common law a married woman was personally liable jointly with her husband for her torts unless committed under the coercion of her husband; Appeal of Franklin's Adm'r, 115 Pa. 534, 6 Atl. 70, 2 Am. St. Rep. 583; Southworth v. Kimball, 58 Vt. 337, 2 Atl. 120. The death of the wife terminated the liability of the husband, but if the husband died the wife might be sued alone; Appeal of Franklin's Adm'r, 115 Pa. 534, 6 Atl. 70, 2 Am. St. Rep. 583.

It has been remarked that "the main idea which governs the law of husband and wife is not that of a 'unity of person,' but that of the guardianship, the mund, the profitable guardianship, which the husband has over the wife and over her property;" 1 Poll. & Matl. 468. The difficulties arising from the common-law doctrine of a married woman's incapacity, and her practical non-existence as a legal person, resulted in a qualified recognition by courts of equity of the individuality and existence of a married woman as such. This, however, was only granted in cases where she had what was termed a separate estate. This gave rise to two great doctrines of the law, the separate use and restraint on anticipation.

In Equity. The latter was an invention of the court of equity and an exception to the general law of inalienability of property. It was justified as the most satisfactory method of giving property to a married woman so that it should not be practically given to her husband, to prevent which the "condition was allowed to be imposed restraining her from anticipating her income and thus fettering the free alienation of her property;" Jessel, M. R., in 11 Ch. D. 644. By the Conveyancing Act, 1881, the court was authorized, where it appeared to be for the benefit of a married woman, by judgment or order with her consent, to bind her interest in any property, notwithstanding that she was restrained from anticipation; 44 & 45 Vict. c. 41, §§ 39, 40. This was held to be not "a general power of removing the restraint upon anticipation, but only a power to make binding a particular disposition of property by a married woman if it be for her benefit;" 52 L. J. Ch. 928. See as to this doctrine, Brett, L. Cas. Mod. Eq. 104. The separate use was also originally a creation of the court of chancery, but in recent years it has been adopted in statutes with the effect of abolishing the common-law marital rights of the husband, to the same extent that they were avoided by a trust, in equity, to her sole and separate use.

The separate property of a feme covert as to which equity considers her as a feme sole, is that property alone which is settled to her sole and separate use by some will, writing, or deed of settlement with a power expressly or impliedly given her of managing it without the concurrence of her husband; Hebron v. Colchester, 5 Day (Conn.) 174. This estate may be created by any form of settlement, written or oral (as to personality), by deed or will, to her directly or in trust for her; or, it may be by antenuptial agreement (q. v.). It may be settled by the husband; Williams v. Williams, 68 Ala. 405; herself; L. R. 16 Eq. 29; or a stranger; Charles v. Coker, 2 S. C. 122, 129, 133. The one essential ingredient required for its creation is a sufficient indication of an intention to bar or exclude the marital rights; Vail v. Vail, 49 Conn. 52; Buck v. Wroten, 24 Gratt. (Va.) 250; of the husband contemplated by the settlement; 1 Beav. 1. No particular form of words is required, but any which sufficiently indicate this intention will be sufficient. For a great variety of phrases which have been judicially passed upon as sufficient or insufficient, see Stew. II. & W. § 200. Where a wife purchases land in her own name and with her own money it will be presumed to be her separate property; Webster v. Thorndyke, 11 Wash. 390, 39 Pac. 677.

To an ordinary equitable estate of a married woman the marital rights of the husband attach; Banks v. Green, 35 Ark. 84, 88; but the effort to mitigate the severity of the common-law doctrine gave rise to the equitable creations of the wife's equity (q. v.) and the equitable separate estate; 1 Bro. C. C. 16; White v. Gouldin's Ex'rs, 27 Gratt. (Va.) 491, 507; 1 L. Cas. Eq. 481; 2 Perry, Trusts, § 625.

The Wife's Equity. What is termed the wife's equity is her right, whenever the husband cannot obtain possession of her estate without the aid of a court of equity, to have settled upon her and her children out of it a suitable provision, for herself and her children; Shelf. Marr. & D. 605.

In consideration of the obligation assumed by the contract of marriage, the husband acquires an interest in the property of his wife which is enforceable at common law by an action, and therefore he may alien the property to which he is so entitled, jure mariti, or in case of bankruptcy or insolvency it would vest in his assignee, and the wife and children be left destitute, whatever her fortune might be. It was to remedy this evil that the courts of equity devised a method of making provision for the wife, known as the wife's equity. The principle upon which courts of equity act is, that he who seeks the aid of equity must do equity; and that will be withheld until an adequate settlement has been made; 1 P. Wms. 459.

Where the property is equitable and not recoverable at law, it cannot be obtained without making a settlement upon a wife and children, if one be required by her; 2 P. Wms. 639; and where, though the property be legal in its nature, it becomes from collateral circumstances the subject of a suit in equity, the wife's right to a settlement will attach; 5 My. & C. 97. See Tucker v. Andrews, 13 Me. 124; Rees v. Waters, 9 Watts (Pa.) 90; Kenny v. Udall, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 464; Helms v. Franciscus, 2 Bland, Ch. (Md.) 545, 20 Am. Dec. 402.

The wife's equity to a settlement is binding not only upon the husband, but upon his assignee, under the bankrupt or insolvent laws; 3 Ves. 607; Haviland v. Myers, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 25; Gassett v. Grout, 4 Metc. (Mass.) 486; Duvall v. Bank, 4 Gill & J. (Md.) 283, 23 Am. Dec. 558; Elliott v. Waring, 5 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 338, 17 Am. Dec. 69; Andrews v. Jones, 10 Ala. 401;

Bell v. Bell, 1 Ga. 637. And even where the husband assigned the wife's equitable right for a valuable consideration, the assignee was considered liable; 4 Ves. 19. When the property of the husband is settled upon his wife and children, the settlement will be valid against subsequent creditors if at the time of the settlement being made he was not indebted; Sexton v. Wheaton, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 229, 5 L. Ed. 603; Picquet v. Swan, 4 Mas. 443, Fed. Cas. No. 11,133; Wells v. Treadwell, 28 Miss. 717; Riley v. Riley, 25 Conn. 154; but if he was then indebted it will be void as to the creditors existing at the time of the settlement; Reade v. Livingston, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 481, 8 Am. Dec. 520; Albert v. Winn, 5 Md. 68; Kinnard v. Daniel, 13 B. Monr. (Ky.) 496; Sexton v. Wheaton, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 229, 5 L. Ed. 603; unless in cases where the husband received a fair consideration in value for the thing settled, so as to repel the presumption of fraud; 10 Ves. 139; Hale v. Plummer, 6 Ind. 121; Andrews v. Andrews, 28 Ala. 432; Bullard v. Briggs, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 533, 19 Am. Dec. 292.

The general rule is that one-half of the wife's property shall be settled upon her; 2 Atk. 423. But it is in the discretion of the court to give her an adequate settlement for herself and children; Kenny v. Udall, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 464; Ex parte Beresford, 1 Des. (S. C.) 263; Helms v. Franciscus, 2 Bland, Ch. (Md.) 546, 20 Am. Dec. 402; Bowling v. Winslow's Adm'r, 5 B. Monr. (Ky.) 31; Howard v. Napier, 3 Ga. 193; 9 S. & S. 597.

Whenever the wife insists upon her equity, the right will be extended to her children; but the right is strictly personal to the wife, and her children cannot insist upon it after her death; 1 J. & W. 472; Howard v. Mofatt, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 206; Andrews v. Jones, 10 Ala. 401.

The wife's equity will be barred by an adequate settlement having been made upon her; 2 Ves. Ch. 675; by living in adultery apart from her husband; 4 Ves. Ch. 146; but a female ward of court, married without its consent, will not be barred although she should be living in adultery; 1 Ves. & B. Ch. 302.

In Lady Ellbank v. Montolieu, 1 Wh. & Tud. L. Cas. 486, on a bill of a married woman for a distributive share as next of kin, a decree was made for a settlement on her and her children; and Lord Loughborough treated it as a case of equity to a settlement.

Her Separate Estate. In England a married woman's capacity to dispose of property of whatever kind settled to her separate use, by deed or will, is absolute, unless she be expressly restrained by the settlement; and, generally speaking, it is bound by her contracts, written or verbal; 3 Bro. C. C. 347. But it was contended by Chancellor Kent that this was not always so held, and that the English cases were too contradictory to afford a safe guide, and he held (practically the converse of the English rule) that she could exercise only such power, to be exercised in such manner as was prescribed by the instrument creating the estate; Trustees of Methodist Episcopal Church v. Jaques, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 77. But this decision was reversed; Jaques v. Trustees, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 548, 8 Am. Dec. 447, in which the English doctrine substantially was adopted.

The course of subsequent New York decisions is neither clear nor consistent, but may, probably, on the whole, be considered as following the last cited case with a qualification that the married woman is not to be charged unless her intention to charge her separate estate is sufficiently indicated in the contract or implied from some benefit to be derived by her separate estate from the consideration. See Yale v. Dederer, 18 N. Y. 265, 72 Am. Dec. 503; id., 22 N. Y. 451, 78 Am. Dec. 216; Manhattan Brass & Mfg. Co. v. Thompson, 58 N. Y. 80; Second Nat. Bank v. Miller, 63 N. Y. 639; Conlin v. Cantrell, 64 N. Y. 217; Yale v. Dederer, 68 N. Y. 329.

Most of the states adopt, in the main, the English doctrine of power to charge the separate estate, but many jurisdictions follow what is known as the American doctrine—that a married woman, as to her separate estate, is feme sole in so far as the instrument has expressly conferred on her the power to act as such, and that she is confined to the particular mode of disposition prescribed in the instrument, if any, and the estate is not liable for her contracts, bonds, and notes, unless the instrument expressly declares that it shall be charged. It was first established in South Carolina and adhered to as above stated, by Chancellor Kent. See Lancaster v. Dolan, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 231, 18 Am. Dec. 625; Walker v. Coover, 65 Pa. 430; Metcalf v. Cook, 2 R. I. 355; Litton v. Baldwin, 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 209, 47 Am. Dec. 605; Pippen v. Wesson, 74 N. C. 442; Armstrong v. Stovall, 26 Miss. 275. See Kelly, Cont. M. W. 259, n. 5, and a critical annotation by the same author; 23 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 321; Stew. H. & W. § 203.

An instrument creating such an estate is excepted from the rule which makes void clauses in restraint of alienation, provided only that the rule against perpetuities is not violated; id. § 204.

Under Statutes. Superimposed upon this complex combination of common-law disability and equitable protection for separate estate, there is now, both in England and in the United States, a mass of statute law, as to most of which a classification to be relied on is impossible. The course of legislation in the United States has been such as almost entirely to remove the common-law disabilities of a married woman, and to secure to her the management and control of her own property with power to contract concerning it, and also largely to increase both her individual rights and liabilities. It has been said that the protection and the disability of marriage have been linked together, and the wife when deprived of the one has been released from the other; Cullers v. James, 66 Tex. 494, 1 S. W. 314; but this broad statement does not seem to express the rule of construction generally adopted; see supra. The first tendency of the married woman's acts was to emancipate her property both from control and from any liability for obligations naturally springing from the marriage relation. In this country, however, there has been lately a strong current in the direction of creating and enforcing liability for such debts against both husband and wife.

In all the states and the District of Columbia the real property of a married woman remains her separate property, generally free from the control or interference of her husband or liability for his debts; and in most of the states her personal property is equally so.

As to the statutory liability of a married woman and her property for necessities and family expenses and also for her own torts, see infra. The separate property of a married woman is not liable in most states for the debts of the husband, nor bound by judgment or execution against him.

English legislation has been much more according to a definite plan, commencing with 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, which enabled a married woman deserted by or judicially separated from her husband to obtain orders of protection against his creditors. The acts of 1870, and 1874 secured to married women several specific property rights, but these acts were repealed and supplied by the act of 1882, under which a married woman could acquire and hold separate property in her own name, and sue and be sued severally, the husband, however, remaining liable for her torts. The purpose of this act was thus stated by Wills, J., to be, not destructive of the "doctrine of the common law by which there was what has been called a unity of person between husband and wife, but to confer in certain specified cases new powers upon the wife, and in others new powers upon the husband, and gives them in certain specified cases new remedies against one another." 14 Q. B. Div. 835. This act is still the married woman's property law of England. The act of 56 & 57 Vict. c. 63, provided that contracts of married women should be deemed as being entered into with respect to and binding her separate property then or thereafter acquired, being limited in its scope. The act of 7 Edw. VII, c. 18, made no general change, but authorized dispositions of trust estates by married women, as if sole, and made provision as to the settlement of married women's property.

For provisions of the English statute in detail, see an interesting comparison between English and American legislation on the subject, 22 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 761; Brett, L. Cas. Mod. Eq. 96; 1 Brett, Com. ch. 18, at the end of which may be found a list of the English statutes to that date; 7 So. L. Rev. 68; 11 Cent. L. J. 41; 27 id. 279.

While the legislation of England and the United States with respect to married women has been mainly in the direction of giving to her property interests such a legal status as had been secured to her in equity in spite of her common law footing, there has, at the same time, been secured to her in both countries, by judicial action, emancipation of the person to the extent of practically abrogating the common-law rule on that subject.

The effect of this modern legislation is to create what has been termed a statutory separate estate, which is not to be confused with the equitable separate estate; Stew. H. & W. § 217; the two may exist side by side; Musson v. Trigg, 51 Miss. 172. The word property in these acts has been held to include money; Mitchell v. Mitchell, 35 Miss. 108; choses in action ex contractu; Vreeland v. Schoonmaker, 16 N. J. Eq. 512; Williams v. Lord, 75 Va. 390; and ex delicto; Westlake v. Westlake, 34 Ohio St. 621, 32 Am. Rep. 397; Leonard v. Pope, 27 Mich. 145; Laughlin v. Eaton, 54 Me. 156; Gibson v. Gibson, 43 Wis. 23, 28 Am. Rep. 527; corporeal and incorporeal interests; Smilie v. Siler's Adm'r, 35 Ala. 88; animate and inanimate; Gans v. Williams, 62 Ala. 41 (but not mere contingent interest; L. R. 6 Eq. 210); a mining interest in a lead; Cheuvete v. Mason, 4 G. Greene (Ia.) 231. In England married woman's property does not include a general power of appointment under a deed or will of which she is donee; 17 Q. B. Div. 521. Most of the acts define the mode of acquisition of property which shall be affected by it, and such specification excludes all others; 2 Bish. M. W. § 17. The most common methods of acquisition are, purchase, gift or grant, devise, bequest, descent, distribution, exchange, increase, trade or service, contract, and tort; Stew. H. & W. §§ 223-230, where the cases, as to each, are collected.

Earnings of the wife made by her in carrying on a business, such as keeping a boarding house, and used to pay for stock in a building association, belong to her, and the stock is her separate estate; Wenger v. Wenger, 34 Pa. Co. Ct. 93.

Where a husband employs his wife and pays her wages otherwise payable to some other employé, she cannot be deprived of the money or of her property in which she has invested it; Woodruff v. Clark & Appar, 42 N. J. L. 198; Savage v. O'Neil, 44 N. Y. 298; Henderson v. Warmack, 27 Miss. 830.

A grant or devise to a married woman and her husband as tenants by entireties, is not abrogated by the married women's property acts even where they provide that she shall hold real estate as if sole; Bertles v. Nunan, 92 N. Y. 152, 44 Am. Rep. 361; Bramberry's Estate, 156 Pa. 628, 27 Atl. 405, 22 L. R. A. 594, 36 Am. St. Rep. 64; Phelps v. Simons, 159 Mass. 415, 34 N. E. 657, 38 Am. St. Rep. 430; Chambers v. Chambers, 92 Tenn. 707, 23 S. W. 67; Noblitt v. Beebe, 23 Or. 4, 35 Pac. 248; Georgia, C. & N. Ry. Co. v. Scott, 38 S. C. 34, 16 S. E. 185, 839; Appeal of Robinson, 88 Me. 17, 33 Atl. 652, 30 L. R. A. 331, 51 Am. St. Rep. 367; contra, Clark v. Clark, 56 N. H. 105; but a married woman may, under those acts, without joining her husband, sue for and recover land conveyed to her and him in fee; Bains v. Bullock, 129 Mo. 117, 31 S. W. 342; and the husband is not exclusively entitled to the use and benefit of lands held in entirety or as joint tenant with his wife; Hiles v. Fisher, 144 N. Y. 306, 39 N. E. 337, 30 L. R. A. 305, 43 Am. St. Rep. 762. In England, since the married women's property act, a conveyance to both creates the same estate as if they were not married; L. R. 39 Ch. D. 148; 1 Brett, Com. 62. In some states a conveyance to a married woman and her husband is unaffected by these statutes, either because tenancy by entireties and joint tenancy have not been adopted; Whittlesey v. Fuller, 11 Conn. 337; or not recognized by the courts; Wilson v. Fleming, 13 Ohio 68; Hoffman v. Stigers, 28 Ia. 302; or are abolished by statute; Oglesby v. Bingham, 69 Miss. 795, 13 South. 852. Where a married woman was a tenant by entirety it has been held that a divorce changed it into a tenancy in common; Enyeart v. Kepler, 118 Ind. 36, 20 N. E. 539, 10 Am. St. Rep. 94; Kirkwood v. Domnau, 80 Tex. 645, 16 S. W. 428, 26 Am. St. Rep. 770; Harrer v. Wallner, 80 Ill. 197; Hopson v. Fowlkes, 92 Tenn. 697, 23 S. W. 55, 23 L. R. A. 805, 36 Am. St. Rep. 120; Russell v. Russell, 122 Mo. 235, 26 S. W. 677, 43 Am. St. Rep. 581. See In re Bramberry's Estate, 156 Pa. 628, 27 Atl. 405, 22 L. R. A. 594, 36 Am. St. Rep. 64; Hiles v. Fisher, 144 N. Y. 306, 39 N. E. 337, 30 L. R. A. 305, 43 Am. St. Rep. 762.

In most of the states the deed of a married woman is ineffectual to pass a title, unless when her husband is a party; and generally a separate acknowledgment and private examination of the wife is required; and if signed by her alone without her husband it is absolutely void; Overseers of Poor v. Overseers of the Poor, 112 Pa. 99, 3 Atl. 862; Franklin v. Mill Co., 88 Ala. 318, 6 South. 685; and so by statute is a mortgage; Cook v. Walling, 117 Ind. 9, 19 N. E. 532, 2 L. R. A. 769, 10 Am. St. Rep. 17. The deed of a married woman without the separate examination will pass neither her interest nor that of the husband; Rust v. Goff, 94 Mo. 511, 7 S. W. 418. Where her acknowledgment is not made in compliance with the statute she is presumed to have acted under the coercion of her husband; Hepburn v. Dubois, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 345, 9 L. Ed. 1111; Rust v. Goff, 94 Mo. 511, 7 S. W. 418.

In Indiana the deed of a married woman to which her husband is not joined gives color of title; Wright v. Kleyla, 104 Ind. 223, 4 N. E. 16. If the deed of a married woman be void by reason of a defective acknowledgment, it may be ratified by her after her husband's death; Jourdan v. Jourdan, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 268, 11 Am. Dec. 724.

A deed purporting to be an absolute conveyance of lands of a married woman will not be construed as a release of dower because her husband's name appears first therein; Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Whitham, 155 Ill. 514, 40 N. E. 1014, 28 L. R. A. 612, 46 Am. St. Rep. 355. The common-law disability, with respect to conveyances of real property, still exists in so far as it has not been swept away by express legislative enactments; Dean v. Ry. Co., 119 N. Y. 540, 23 N. E. 1054. Where a married woman, at the time an infant, had executed a note and a mortgage intended to convey her separate estate, the mortgage being void, because not executed in accordance with the statutes, she was not estopped to assert the invalidity of the mortgage, by representations at the time of its execution that she was twenty-one years of age; Carolina Interstate Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Black, 119 N. C. 323, 25 S. E. 975.

Mere silence by a married woman who knows her conveyance to be void does not estop her from asserting it; Coats v. Gordon, 144 Ind. 19, 41 N. E. 1044, 42 N. E. 1025; but in that state it is held that by statute a married woman may be bound by an estoppel in pais; Le Coll v. Armstrong-Landon-Hunt Co., 140 Ind. 256, 39 N. E. 922. The wife joining her husband in conveyances of his land is not bound by his covenants in the deed and is not estopped to assert a paramount lien in favor of herself; Curry v. Mtg. Co., 107 Ala. 429, 18 South. 328, 54 Am. St. Rep. 105.

Where the husband leased his wife's lands for a year with a privilege of four years more, the receipt of a share of the farm products reserved did not estop her from asserting that the lease was void, because not assented to in writing by her; Williams v. Mershon, 57 N. J. L. 242, 30 Atl. 619.

Where a married woman is unable to convey her separate estate without a deed in which her husband is joined, she cannot make a valid deed to him of such property; Trawick v. Davis, 85 Ala. 342, 5 South. 83.

Such was the case at common law and in like manner a deed from the husband directly to the wife was a nullity; Coates v. Gerlach, 44 Pa. 43; Fletcher v. Mansur, 5 Ind. 267; and a husband and wife could not separate their interests in common property by a partition deed; Frissell v. Rozler, 19 Mo. 448. There could not be a gift of chattels inter vivos from the husband to the wife; 15 Beav. 529; but later this doctrine was modified in England and it was held that it was merely a question of evidence and that the husband might be a trustee for his wife; 34 Beav. 623; and after the wife's separate personality began to be recognized by statute, the courts held gifts to her from the husband effectual; Dean v. Ry. Co., 119 N. Y. 540, 23 N. E. 1054; Cottrell v. Spiess, 23 Mo. App. 35. In equity both deeds; Appeal of Redell, 87 Pa. 510; and gifts; Reed v. Reed, 52 N. Y. 651; 9 Ont. App. Rep. 374; Fourth Ecclesiastical Soc. in Middletown v. Mather, 15 Conn. 587; were upheld wherever the rights of creditors were not affected; see supra. As to the effect of gifts and conveyances by the husband to the wife, see Barnum v. Le Master, 110 Tenn. 638, 75 S. W. 1045, 69 L. R. A. 353, and note, where the cases are collected at large. That case held that marriage is a valuable consideration and that the conveyance of land to the wife was good.

A gift of personal property from the husband to the wife must be clearly proved, even under modern statutes, and the evidence must be clear of his intention to divest himself of all ownership and control of the property given, and the common-law rule that ornaments and wearing apparel given to the wife by the husband during coverture remained his personal property was held not to be abrogated by the married woman's act or any statute; Farrow v. Farrow, 72 N. J. Eq. 421, 65 Atl. 1009, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 389, 129 Am. St. Rep. 714, 16 Ann. Cas. 507; Tllexan v. Wilson, 43 Me. 186; but in other states the right of the wife to her paraphernalia is treated as absolute; State v. Pitts, 12 S. C. 180, 32 Am. Rep. 508; McCormick v. R. Co., 99 N. Y. 65, 1 N. E. 99, 52 Am. Rep. 6.

Gifts by a wife to a husband are to be closely scrutinized, but if fairly made and free from coercion and undue influence they ought to be sustained; Farmer's Ex'r v. Farmer, 39 N. J. Eq. 216. The evidence must be clear and unequivocal, and the intention free from doubt; Brooks v. Fowler, 82 Ga. 329, 9 S. E. 1089; Johnson v. Jouchert, 124 Ind. 105, 24 N. E. 580, 8 L. R. A. 795. A conveyance by the husband directly to the wife creates in her an equitable estate, but is inoperative to pass a legal title; and he is left a trustee for her; Snediker v. Boyleson, 83 Ala. 408, 4 South. 33; Smith v. Seiberling, 35 Fed. 677; Miller v. Miller, 17 Or. 423, 21 Pac. 938. He may settle property upon his wife if it does not impair the claims of existing creditors and is not intended as a cover for future schemes of fraud; Bean v. Patterson, 122 U. S. 496, 7 Sup. Ct. 1298, 30 L. Ed. 1126.

A voluntary gift of personal property by a husband to another, although depriving his wife of her right to a share therein, cannot be set aside as a fraud against her; Hall v. Hall, 109 Va. 117, 63 S. E. 420, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 533; Robertson v. Robertson, 147 Ala. 311, 40 South. 104, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 774, and note, 10 Ann. Cas. 1051.

Threats of prosecution and imprisonment against her husband constitute duress sufficient to make void the deed or contract of a married woman; Central Bank of Frederick v. Copeland, 18 Md. 305, 81 Am. Dec. 597; First Nat. Bank of Nevada v. Bryan, 62 Ia. 42, 17 N. W. 165; Miller v. Lumber Co., 98 Mich. 163, 57 N. W. 101, 39 Am. St. Rep. 524; City Nat. Bank of Dayton v. Kusworm, 88 Wis. 188, 59 N. W. 564, 26 L. R. A. 48, 43 Am. St. Rep. 880; 62 L. T. (N. S.) 376.

Generally it is held that a married woman cannot become a partner with her husband, even under statutes which would authorize her to enter into partnership with any one else; Fairlee v. Bloomingdale, 67 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 292; Miller v. Marx, 65 Tex. 131; Montgomery v. Sprankle, 31 Ind. 113; Payne v. Thompson, 44 Ohio St. 192, 5 N. E. 654; Board of Trade of City of Seattle v. Hayden, 4 Wash. 263, 30 Pac. 87, 32 Pac. 224, 16 L. R. A. 530, 31 Am. St. Rep. 919; contra, in re Kinhead, 3 Biss. 405, Fed. Cas. No. 7,824; Schlapback v. Long, 90 Ala. 525, 8 South. 113; Suau v. Caffé, 122 N. Y. 308, 25 N. E. 488, 9 L. R. A. 593 (see as to conflicting New York cases 16 L. R. A. 526, note); nor ordinarily with any one else; De Graum v. Jones, 23 Fla. 83, 6 South. 925; Bradstreet v. Baer, 41 Md. 19; if she have no separate estate; Dunifer v. Jecko, 87 Mo. 282. If, without capacity to become a partner, she does so, the property remains hers and the husband cannot assign it; Howard v. Stephens, 52 Miss. 239; nor can his creditors; Duress v. Horneffer, 15 Wis. 195; Danforth v. Woods, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 9. Where her partnership is a nullity the other partner may be sued alone; Carey v. Burruss, 20 W. Va. 571, 43 Am. Rep. 790. Where her husband borrows her separate property and uses it in a firm, she is the creditor of the firm; Huffman v. Copeland, 86 Ind. 224; Fox v. Johnson, 4 Del. Ch. 580; and her debt is provable in bankruptcy; Danforth v. Woods, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 9. If a married woman carries on a business under the assumed name of a partnership she may be sued in that name, and cannot plead her coverture; Le Grand v. Bank, 81 Ala. 123, 1 South. 460, 60 Am. Rep. 140; nor can her co-partners deny her capacity to sue alone for a dissolution; Bitter v. Rathman, 61 N. Y. 512. As to married women as partners, see, generally, 2 L. R. A. 343, note; 32 Cent. L. J. 128; 31 Am. St. Rep. 934, note; and as to partnerships between husband and wife, see 16 L. R. A. 526, note; 35 Cent. L. J. 328; 24 Am. L. Reg. 653.

See PARTNERSHIP.

The capacity of a married woman to become surety or guarantor will depend upon the construction of the statute, and the questions most frequently arise with respect to efforts to become surety for the husband. In some states this is expressly forbidden, and the prohibition has been held to prevent her from mortgaging her real estate to one who is surety for her husband or co-surety with him; McNeil v. Davis, 105 Ala. 657, 17 South. 101.

In others, it has been held that the power, not being expressly given, is not possessed, as it is not required for the complete enjoyment of the separate estate; Bank of Commerce, Ltd. v. Baldwin, 14 Idaho, 75, 93 Pac. 504, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 676 and not on her power to become surety for one, other than her husband.

In other states she may bind her separate estate as surety for her husband; Williamson v. Cline, 40 W. Va. 194, 20 S. E. 917; Watts v. Gantt, 42 Neb. 869, 61 N. W. 104; and where she makes a valid contract as surety she is entitled to all the rights of a surety; Filler v. Tyler, 91 Va. 458, 22 S. E. 235.

An assignment by a married woman of her separate estate to pay a note in which she has been joined with her husband for his debt has been held void; Livingston v. Shingler, 30 S. C. 159, 8 S. E. 842. Mortgages by a wife of her separate estate for the husband's benefit have been held null and void; Lippincott v. Mitchell, 94 U. S. 767, 24 L. Ed. 315; Goodjoin v. Vaughn, 32 S. C. 499, 11 S. E. 351; contra, Kaiser v. Stickney, 3 MacArthur (D. C.) 118; Brodnax v. Ins. Co., 128 U. S. 236, 9 Sup. Ct. 61, 32 L. Ed. 445; Wells v. Foster, 64 N. H. 585, 15 Atl. 216; Hagenbuch v. Phillips, 112 Pa. 284, 3 Atl. 788.

A woman cannot after discovery ratify by a new promise a debt for which she was not originally liable; Gilbert v. Brown, 123 Ky. 703, 97 S. W. 40, 29 Ky. L. Rep. 1248, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1053, and note where the cases are reviewed.

The right of the wife to sue the husband on a note executed to her by him has been upheld in Mathewson v. Mathewson, 79 Conn. 23, 63 Atl. 285, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 611, 6 Ann. Cas. 1027, and note, where the cases are collected, showing much variance in the view taken of the effect of the state statutes.

With respect to the right of the wife to sue the husband for a personal tort, the courts are not so divided, but have generally agreed that the various statutes will not give the right by implication, but that it must be expressly conferred; Strom v. Strom, 98 Minn. 427, 107 N. W. 1047, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 191, 116 Am. St. Rep. 387, and note, which reaches the conclusion from the cases as here stated.

While, at common law, a debt due by either husband or wife to the other was cancelled by marriage; Farley v. Farley, 91 Ky. 497, 16 S. W. 129; Fox v. Johnson, 4 Del. Ch. 580; under the modern statutes it is generally held that marriage does not extinguish such a debt; Flenner v. Flenner, 29 Ind. 564; Barton v. Barton, 32 Md. 214; Clark v. Clark, 49 Ill. App. 163; Power v. Lester, 23 N. Y. 527; and this was carried to the extent of permitting notes made by a man to his intended wife to be enforced against his estate; MacKeown v. Lacey, 200 Mass. 437, 86 N. E. 799, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 683, 16 Ann. Cas. 220, and note giving other cases. So a wife was allowed to prove, against her husband's estate in bankruptcy, money deposited with him; 2 Nat. B. Reg. 556; and there is an unreported decision by Judge Strong in the circuit court for the district of Delaware to the same effect.

A married woman has been held authorized to dispose of community property to supply the necessary wants of herself and children; Forbes v. Moore, 32 Tex. 195.

A personal judgment against a married woman at common law was void; Weil v. Simmons, 66 Mo. 617; Griffith v. Clarke, 18 Md. 457; White v. Mfg. Co., 29 W. Va. 385, 1 S. E. 572, 6 Am. St. Rep. 650; Green v. Page, 80 Ky. 368; if rendered by default it is in some jurisdictions held absolutely void; Shryock v. Buckman, 121 Pa. 248, 15 Atl. 480, 1 L. R. A. 533; Corrigan v. Bell, 73 Mo. 53; Parsons v. Spencer, 83 Ky. 305; Gambette v. Brock, 41 Cal. 78; Mallett v. Parham, 52 Miss. 921; in others merely voidable; 8 B. & C. 421; Mashburn v. Gouge, 61 Ga. 512; McCurdy v. Baughman, 43 Ohio St. 78, 1 N. E. 93; Wilson v. Coolidge, 42 Mich. 112, 3 N. W. 285; Burk v. Hill, 55 Ind. 419; and she is not estopped by a failure to plead coverture; Parsons v. Spencer, 83 Ky. 305. In the absence of fraud a consent decree is binding on a married woman; Winter v. Montgomery, 79 Ala. 481; Truesdail v. McCormick, 126 Mo. 39, 28 S. W. 885; and a judgment might be obtained against her for a debt contracted dum sola; Roosevelt v. Dale, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 581; Evans v. Lipscomb, 28 Ga. 71; 4 East 521; Travis v. Willis, 55 Miss. 557. Generally provision is made for such suits in the married woman's acts, and in some the husband and wife must be sued jointly, and in others, judgment may be recovered against her separately to bind her separate estate.

In some states the husband and wife are equally liable for expenses and children's education, and a married woman is liable for necessities for herself and her children; in others such a debt is enforceable against her property after execution against the husband unsatisfied, while in others a judgment for necessities against the husband may be enforced against the separate property of the wife, and in some jurisdictions for expenses incurred in the improvement of her separate property. See Stims. Am. St. L. § 6410 (c).

In many states there are statutory provisions authorizing the assumption of liability by a married woman for the family expenses; and in others, such liability has been held to arise under the statutes without her express consent; such expenses are made a charge upon the property of the husband and wife, or either of them, either jointly or severally. This is held to be a personal liability and not merely a property charge; Farrar & Wheeler v. Emery, 52 Ia. 725, 3 N. W. 50; Hayden v. Rogers, 22 Ill. App. 557; but her property may be pursued without obtaining a personal judgment against her; Frost v. Parker, 65 Ia. 180, 21 N. W. 507; and her liability is not dependent upon consent; Black v. Sippy, 15 Or. 574, 16 Pac. 418. Within these statutes family expenses include whatever is actually used in the family; Fitzgerald v. McCarty, 55 Ia. 702, 8 N. W. 646; rent of a house; Illingworth v. Burley, 33 Ill. App. 394; medical attendance; Blachley v. Laba, 63 Ia. 22, 18 N. W. 658, 50 Am. Rep. 724; whether necessary or not; Schrader v. Hoover, 80 Ia. 243, 45 N. W. 734; the servants' wages; Von Platen v. Krueger, 11 Ill. App. 627; a piano; Smedley v. Felt, 41 Ia. 588; an organ; Frost v. Parker, 65 Ia. 180, 21 N. W. 507; a cook stove and crockery; Finn v. Rose, 12 Ia. 565; the husband's clothing; Hudson v. King, 23 Ill. App. 118; jewelry purchased by the husband and presented to the wife; Marquardt v. Flaughner, 60 Ia. 148, 14 N. W. 214. The wife has been held not liable for money borrowed by the husband for household supplies; Davis v. Ritchey, 55 Ia. 719, 8 N. W. 669; a reaping machine; McCormick v. Muth, 49 Ia. 536; a breaking plough; Russell v. Long, 52 Ia. 250, 3 N. W. 75; a light farm wagon occasionally used by the family to ride to church and other places; Dunn v. Pickard, 24 Ill. App. 423; payments for the care of an insane husband; Delaware County v. McDonald, 46 Ia. 170.

Where the separate estate of the wife is made liable for necessities by statute she must be a party to the suit to enforce payment; Gabriel v. Mullen, 30 Mo. App. 464. In Alabama a constitutional provision is not violated by a statute making the separate estate of the wife liable for necessities; Bender v. Meyer & Co., 55 Ala. 576; see 2 Bish. Mar. W. § 610. In suits under such statute the existence of the separate estate must be alleged; Gabriel v. Mullen, 30 Mo. App. 464; Pippin v. Jones & Co., 52 Ala. 161. The separate estate of a married woman is liable for medical service to herself and children but not to children of her husband by a former marriage, though all live together; May v. Smith, 48 Ala. 485.

A married woman and her separate property are liable for her torts in many states, and in others, if not under her husband's coercion. When so committed they are jointly liable in some states, and in others a judgment against the husband for the wife's tort must be first enforced against her separate property. See Stims. Am. Stat. L. § 6414. See as to liability for torts, Blakeslee v. Tyler, 55 Conn. 397, 11 Atl. 855; State v. Kelly, 74 Ia. 589, 38 N. W. 503; State v. Houston, 29 S. C. 108, 6 S. E. 943; U. S. v. Terry, 42 Fed. 317; Prentiss v. Paisley, 25 Fla. 927, 7 South. 56, 7 L. R. A. 640; Mayhew v. Burns, 103 Ind. 328, 2 N. E. 793; Burt v. McBain, 29 Mich. 260; Zelliff v. Jennings, 61 Tex. 458, 471. Such is also the tendency with respect to fraud, in view of the statutes authorizing married women to transact business independently; Troxell v. Silverthorn, 45 N. J. Eq. 330, 12 Atl. 614, 19 Atl. 622. In some jurisdictions the husband must be joined in an action for the tort of the wife unless it is in relation to her separate property; Fitzgerald v. Quann, 109 N. Y. 441, 17 N. E. 354. See 7 L. R. A. 640, n.

As to a married woman's liability connected with the use of premises owned by her there is a difference of opinion. Where the husband and wife resided on the premises she could not be convicted of keeping a gambling house; Bell v. State, 92 Ga. 49, 18 S. E. 186; but under similar circumstances the husband was held liable for violation of liquor laws; Com. v. Carroll, 124 Mass. 30; Com. v. Pratt, 126 Mass. 462; and for keeping a brothel; Com. v. Wood, 97 Mass. 225. In one case the wife was held liable for injuries resulting from harboring a vicious dog belonging to her husband; Quilty v. Battie, 135 N. Y. 201, 32 N. E. 47, 17 L. R. A. 521, contra, Strouse v. Leipf, 101 Ala. 433, 14 South. 667, 23 L. R. A. 622, 46 Am. St. Rep. 122. In other cases they have been held jointly liable; Hornbein v. Blanchard, 4 Colo. App. 92, 35 Pac. 187; and it was a question for the jury of the ownership of the animal; McLaughlin v. Kemp, 152 Mass. 7, 25 N. E. 18. Where a married woman set fire to a house owned by her and let to a tenant, the husband was not liable; Lansing v. Holdridge, 58 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 449; and where the husband and wife were domiciled on premises which were the separate property of the latter, he was held not to be in control of the premises so as to be responsible for injury to a stranger resulting from carelessly leaving a pit uncovered; Rowe v. Smith, 45 N. Y. 230. The husband was also held not liable for torts committed on his wife's premises in Austin v. Cox, 118 Mass. 58, and Baumier v. Antiau, 65 Mich. 31, 31 N. W. 888.

With respect to the property and rights of the husband the relation of the wife to it appears not to be changed by the insanity of the husband; L. R. 5 Q. B. 51; she may bind the estate of the husband for necessities; 1 DeG. J. & S. 465; Pearl v. McDowell, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 658, 20 Am.

Dec. 199; but not for the payment of debts generally; Sawyer v. Cutting, 23 Vt. 486; Alexander v. Miller, Reed & Co., 16 Pa. 215; nor can she sue for a debt due to him; 7 Dowl. P. C. 22.

A married woman is frequently held to have certain rights growing out of the insanity of her husband, as, to be regarded as the head of the family and to control the domicile of the husband; Robinson v. Frost, 54 Vt. 105, 41 Am. Rep. 835; Forbes v. Moore, 32 Tex. 195; to receive income belonging to him; 2 McN. & G. 134. In such case it has also been held that the wife is entitled to act with respect to her separate property as if her husband were civilly dead; Gustin v. Carpenter, 51 Vt. 585; Andover v. Merri-mack County, 37 N. H. 437. The husband's insanity does not affect her right to bar her dower by joining in a deed with her husband which by reason of his insanity is invalid; Rannells v. Isgrigg, 99 Mo. 19, 12 S. W. 343; Brothers v. Bank, 84 Wis. 381, 54 N. W. 786, 36 Am. St. Rep. 932; Leggate v. Clark, 111 Mass. 308; but in some states, as Delaware, this contingency is provided for by statute; 14 Del. Laws, ch. 78.

The estate of a married woman is primarily liable for her funeral expenses, and where her husband pays them, he may recover them from her executor; Morrissey v. Mulhern, 168 Mass. 412, 47 N. E. 407. See FUNERAL EXPENSES.

It is a general rule which has come down from the earliest times and still prevails in almost all the states that the wife is not a competent witness against her husband in a criminal case; State v. Woodrow, 58 W. Va. 527, 52 S. E. 545, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 862, and note, 112 Am. St. Rep. 1001, 6 Ann. Cas. 180. See WITNESS.

A married woman can acquire rights of a political character: these rights stand on the general principles of the law of nations; Shanks v. Dupont, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 242, 7 L. Ed. 666. See WOMAN.

HUSBAND OF A SHIP. See SHIP'S HUSBAND.

HUSBANDMAN. See FARMER.

HUSBRECE. Housebreaking; burglary.

HUSCARLE. A menial servant. Domesd.

HUSFASTNE. He that holdeth house and land. Termes de la Ley; Cowell.

HUSGABLUM. House rent or house tax. Toml.

HUSH MONEY. A colloquial expression to designate a bribe to hinder information; pay to secure silence. See BLACKMAIL.

HUSTINGS. In English Law. The name of a court held before the lord mayor and aldermen of London: it was the principal and supreme court of that city. See Co. 2d Inst. 327; St. Armand, Hist. Essay on the Legisl. Power of England 75.

A 'house-thing' as distinct from a 'thing' or court held in a borough in the open air. Maitl. Domesd. Book and Beyond 211.

The place of meeting to choose a member of parliament.

The term is used in Canadian as well as English law. Formerly the manner of conducting an election in Canada and England for a member of the legislative body was substantially as follows. Upon warrant from the proper officer, a writ issued from the clerk of the crown in chancery, directed to the sheriff, registrar, or other returning officer of the electoral division. He thereupon issued and posted in public places a proclamation appointing a day, place, and hour for his holding an election, and also fixing a day when a poll would be opened, if one were demanded and granted. The first day was called nomination day. On this day he proceeded to the hustings, which were in the open air and accessible to all the voters, proclaimed the purpose of the election, and called upon the electors present to name the person they required to represent them. The electors then made a show of hands, which might result in an election, or a poll might be demanded by a candidate or by any elector. On such demand, a poll was opened in each township, ward, or parish of the election district, at the places prescribed by statute. Now, however, by statute 35 & 36 Vict. c. 33, the votes are given by ballot in accordance with certain fixed rules.

It is also applied to a local court in Virginia. Va. Code, 1887, § 3072; Smith v. Com., 6 Gratt. (Va.) 696.

HUTESIUM ET CLAMOR. Hue and cry (q. v.).

HYDROMETER. An instrument for measuring the density of fluids: being immersed in fluids, as in water, brine, beer, brandy, etc., it determines the proportion of their density, or their specific gravity, and thence their quality. See Act of Congr. Jan. 12, 1825, 3 Story, Laws 1976.

HYPNOTISM. Artificial catalepsy; induced somnambulism; a method of artificially inducing sleep; artificial somnambulism.

The following summary of the physical manifestations accompanying hypnotism, is given in the International Cyclopædia:

"This is a term invented by the late Mr. Braid, of Manchester, to designate certain phenomena of the nervous system which in many respects resemble those which are induced by animal magnetism, but which clearly arise from the physical and psychical condition of the patient, and not from any emanation proceeding from others. The following are the directions of Mr. Braid, for inducing the phenomena, and especially the peculiar sleep-like condition of hypnotism. Take a silver lancet-case, or other, bright object, and hold it between the fingers of the left hand, about a foot from the eyes of the person experimented on, in such a position above the forehead as to produce the greatest strain on the eyes compatible with a steady fixed stare at the object. The patient must be directed to rivet his mind on the object at which he is gazing. His pupils will first contract, but soon dilate considerably; and if they are well dilated, the first and second fingers of the operator's right hand, extended and a little separated, are carried from the object towards the eyes; the eyelids will most probably close with a vibratory motion. After 10 or 15 seconds have elapsed, it will be found that the patient retains his arms and legs in any position in which the operator places them. It will also be found that all the special senses, excepting sight, are at first extremely exalted, as also are the muscular sense, and the sensibility of heat and cold; but after a time the exaltation of function is followed by a state of depression far greater than the torpor of natural sleep. The patient is now thoroughly hypnotized. The rigidity of the muscles and the profound torpor of the nervous system may be instantly removed and an opposite condition induced by directing a current of air against the muscles which we wish to render limber, or the organ we wish to excite to action; and then by mere repose the senses will speedily regain their original condition. If a current of air directed against the face is not sufficient to arouse the patient, pressure and friction should be applied to the eyelids, and the arm or leg sharply struck with an open hand.

"From the careful analysis of a large number of experiments Mr. Braid is led to the conclusion that by a continual fixation of the mental and visual eye upon an object, with absolute repose of body and general quietude, a feeling of stupor supervenes, which renders the patient liable to be readily affected in the manner already described."

Many of the minor operations of surgery have been performed on patients in the hypnotized state without pain, and hypnotism has been successfully employed as a therapeutic agent in numerous nervous and hysterical disorders in which no organic changes in the nervous system are demonstrable. Treatment by hypnotic influence has been shown to be a very dubious procedure and one capable of eventually doing more harm than good.

A committee of the British Medical Association made a report to the annual meeting in 1892, in the course of which they say:

"Test experiments which have been carried out by members of the committee have shown that this condition is attended by mental and physical phenomena, and that these differ widely in different cases.

"Among the mental phenomena are altered consciousness, temporary limitation of the will power, increased receptivity of suggestion from without, sometimes to the extent of producing passing delusions, illusions, and hallucinations, an exalted condition of the attention and post-hypnotic suggestions.

"Among the physical phenomena are vascular changes (such as flushings of the face and altered pulse rate), deepening of the respirations, increased frequency of deglutition, slight muscular tremors, inability to control suggested movements, altered muscular sense, anæsthesia, modified power of muscular contraction, catalepsy, and rigidity, often intense. It must, however, be understood that all these mental and physical phenomena are rarely present in any one case. The committee takes this opportunity of pointing out that the term hypnotism is somewhat misleading, inasmuch as sleep, as ordinarily understood, is not necessarily present.

The committee are of opinion that, as a therapeutic agent, hypnotism is frequently effective in relieving pain, procuring sleep, and alleviating many functional ailments. As to its permanent efficacy in the treatment of drunkenness, the evidence before the committee is encouraging, but not conclusive."

"Like all powerful agencies, chloroform or morphia, dynamite or strong electric currents, hypnotic suggestion can only be safely used by those who have special knowledge and experience, and, like them, is liable to abuse. There is little doubt that, if a subject is repeatedly hypnotized and made to entertain all kinds of absurd delusions and to carry out very frequently post-hypnotic suggestions, he may be liable to some ill-defined harm; also, that an unprincipled hypnotizer might secure an undue influence over a naturally weak subject.

"But there is no ground for the belief that hypnotic treatment, applied with good intentions and reasonable care and judgment, does or can produce deleterious effects, such as weakening of the will or liability to fall spontaneously into hypnosis. All physicians of large experience in hypnotic practice are in agreement in respect to this point. But some difference of opinion exists as to the possibility of deliberately inducing a subject to commit improper or criminal actions during hypnosis or by post-hypnotic suggestion. There is, however, no doubt that subjects retain even in deep hypnosis a very considerable power of resistance to any suggestion that is repugnant to their moral nature; and it has been shown that, on some cases in which a subject in hypnosis is made to perform some ostensibly criminal action, such as firing an unloaded pistol at a bystander or putting poison in a cup for him to drink, he is aware, however obscurely, of the unreal nature of the situation. Nevertheless it must be admitted that a person lacking in moral sentiments might be induced to commit actions from which in the normal state he would abstain, if only from fear of punishment; and it is probable that a skillful and evil-intentioned operator could in some cases so deceive a well-disposed subject as to lead him into wrong-doing. The proper precaution against such dangers is legislative regulation of the practice of hypnotism such as is already enforced in some countries." See also Tuckey, Hypnotism and Suggestion (1907); Bramwell, Hypnotism (1906), with bibliography; Moll, Hypnotism; Forel, Hypnotism (from the German).

Dr. Grashey, of Munich, thus defined hypnotic influence and suggestion.

"Suggestion means to suggest to somebody a certain thought, to persuade him that a certain idea transferred is his own. Suggestions play a great role in the intellectual life of men, and especially in education. Children have no independent judgment and rapidly adopt the thoughts suggested to them by their parents, teachers, and friends. But suggestive effect is due not merely to words, but also to example. A person can be suggested to go to sleep. Such a sleep, induced by suggestion, is called hypnosis, and the inducement of hypnosis is called hypnotism. The person who hypnotizes another is called a hypnotizer. Hypnosis, or sleep induced by suggestion, has the peculiarity that the subject remains in mental rapport with the hypnotizer, who can suggest or transfer thoughts to the hypnotized person, and then the latter can offer less resistance than in a wakeful state. Hypnosis has also the peculiarity that it can be produced easier and easier as the operation is repeated. . . . According to my conception the grown man can be held devoid of his free will irresponsible then only when the action is exclusively or predominantly the product of abnormal or diseased factors, abnormal or diseased illusions, abnormal or diseased feelings, disposition, and will impulses. . . . If, however, as it is generally assumed, the suggestibility increases with every new production of hypnosis, the will power, as against the will of the hypnotizer, decreases by degrees, and the interference with the freedom of the subject will increase as well as the restriction of the power of will. . . . And thus we see a hypnotizer attain finally such power over his subject that a single word, a single look, may put him to sleep. . . . Not only in regard to the time of going to sleep, of the beginning of hypnosis, is the person hypnotized dependent upon the hypnotizer, but also in regard to thoughts and feelings. A thought which is slightly opposed during the first condition of hypnosis in a less degree than in the normal condition will meet with less opposition as the hypnotizing progress is continued; sentiments and dispositions which were but slightly indicated during the first operation will grow, become stronger and more intense as the process is repeated.

"Again a hypnotizer who has gained a certain power over an individual by a repetition of hypnotic procedures can suggest successfully a thought or a sentiment which in the commencement would hardly have been received, and thus the hypnotized individual falls into a condition of subservience in ideas and sentiments at the cost of his own freedom of will;" 14 Med. Leg. J. 159-162.

The principal legal interest in the subject of hypnotism arises out of the question, whether, and if so to what extent, crime may be induced by hypnotic suggestion, or the will of the hypnotic subject sufficiently controlled to enable the hypnotizer to obtain the unconscious execution of papers such as wills or promises to pay money, without knowledge or consciousness on the part of the subject. Though the existence of this force cannot be questioned, it has been the subject of extended discussion, much of which is unprofitable and often based upon newspaper reports of legal proceedings which have proved to be entirely untrustworthy. The sensational character of much that has been written on the subject, even in influential legal journals, has tended to obscure the questions which really require consideration both by courts and by the legislature. These questions are carefully considered in an article on Hypnotism and the Law in 13 Med. Leg. J. 47, one on the same subject, 95 L. T. 500, and another on Hypnotism in the Criminal Courts, 13 Med. Leg. J. 351. The first article is based mainly on the answers received from leading scientists to four questions as follows: (1) Can crime be committed by the hypnotizer, the subject being the unconscious and innocent agent and instrument? (2) If the subject is unconscious, and even unwilling, has the hypnotizer such power and domination over the hypnotized as would control action to the extent of the commission of a crime? (3) Is it certain or possible to remove by hypnotic suggestion from the mind of the subject all memory of acts or occurrences which happen in the hypnotic state? (4) Would it be possible for a hypnotizer so to control a hypnotized subject as, for example, to make him sign (a) a will in the presence of third persons, declare it to be his will, and request them to sign their names as witnesses, without subsequent consciousness of the occurrence; (b) or a note of hand or a check?

The answers to these questions show a very decided difference of opinion among American scientific men who have given special attention to the subject, and the same difference appears to exist in a marked degree in European thought. It is impossible as yet to state any satisfactory conclusion from this diversity of opinion, and there has as yet been no recognition of the subject by the courts, notwithstanding the amount of discussion in the press,—much of it thoughtless and unprofitable,—of cases popularly, though erroneously supposed to touch the question of the procurement of crime by hypnotic suggestion. In spite of this difference, however, and leaving the questions above quoted to be answered by further investigations, so far as they may be, there is a practical question much mooted as to the necessity or propriety of any recognition of hypnotism by the law and of its legal regulation, at least to the extent of forbidding public exhibitions of it, or its use except by those skilled in the science to which it may be a legitimate adjunct; and even as to whether its use by physicians and surgeons may not be a proper subject of legal regulation. Another question raised is whether hypnotism is a justifiable inquisitorial agent. Such use of it is said to be permitted under the law of Holland; 95 L. T. 500; and it is quite possible that in countries accustomed to the inquisitorial character of investigations of crime, as in continental Europe, it may be thought proper. It may be assumed that it would be so entirely foreign to American and English ideas as to be unlikely to receive serious consideration in either country.

The consensus of medical opinion would seem to be in favor of regulation. The committee of the British Medical Association, in the report above quoted, stated that they had "satisfied themselves of the genuineness of the hypnotic state," and that dangers may arise in its use "from want of knowledge, carelessness, or intentional abuse, or from too continuous repetition of suggestions in unsuitable cases." And the conclusion was that, when used for therapeutic purposes, it should be confined to qualified medical men, and under no circumstances employed for female patients except in the presence of a relative or a person of their own sex. The report also expressed strong disapproval of public exhibitions of hypnotic phenomena, and a hope that some legal restrictions may be put upon them; 11 Med. Leg. J. 73. A report of a similar committee of the American Medico-Legal Society suggested the legal questions involved in the subject of Hypnotism and evoked a general discussion which may be found in 8 Med. Leg. J. 263, 353; 13 id. 47, 351. These references are valuable only to direct the inquirer to the variety and contrariety of opinion upon the subject. One of the best considered discussions from a legal point of view will be found in the paper on the forensic aspect of hypnotism in 3 Am. Lawy. 534, in which the writer, after carefully considering the cases with which hypnotism has been connected in the popular mind, reaches the conclusion that it has no place in the law. He contends that the person hypnotized cannot be compelled to commit an act which is repugnant and offensive to his sense of morality or, as in case of signing a will, opposed to his instinct of self-preservation, although, under its influence, he may do many things inconsistent with his reason. This writer further considers that the mind of the patient while in a hypnotic state is clear as to what he is doing and his acts are performed in pursuance merely of a desire to please the hypnotizer. The restriction of its use to physicians is disapproved on the ground that, as a class, medical practitioners are not more familiar with its use than are any other class of scientists, and it would be unsafe for the legislature to assume the existence of a monopoly of virtue among medical men.

A very decided inclination towards the views thus summarized will be found among legal minds directed to the subject, as also a very weighty, if not the preponderance of, scientific opinion. The view that the commission of crime cannot be procured by hypnotic suggestion unless in the case of a person whose moral character is such that he might do the act in a normal state, will be found well reasoned and stated in a paper on Hypnotism and Crime; 13 Med. Leg. J. 240, to which reference may be made for authorities and opinions of great value. Dr. Cocke, an investigator of recognized authority, concludes that there are few cases in which the hypnotized subject will not refuse to do a wrong act or to submit to a wrong, no matter if it be suggested; 18 Crim. L. Mag. 100.

Considering the vast amount of discussion which this subject has evoked, it is surprising to find upon how slight a basis of actual legal proceedings it rests. Cases seriously discussed are found upon examination to have no connection with the subject.

Two cases in Europe have been much commented on in connection with hypnotism. The first of these, the Bompard case, excited such wide attention that the main facts of it are generally understood and the details of it were much confused by the theatrical accessories to the trial in the French courts. The effort was made to show that a murder was the result of hypnotic suggestion, and it is believed to be the general impression of those who have examined the case that that was, to a greater or less extent, an element in the crime. The character of the trial, however, greatly lessens its value as a factor in reaching conclusions either valuable or accurate. There was also so wide a difference of opinion among the experts that it has been very truly remarked: "This trial does not, therefore, clear the air of the differences of the medico-legal inquiry, whether crime can be committed by the suggestion of the hypnotizer, of which the subject is the innocent and also unconscious actor;" id. 353. For report of the case see Annales d'Hygiène Publique et de Médecine Légale, III Serie, tome V. (Paris 1881) p. 214; Jurid. Rev. Jan. 1890; see also Int. Cyc. N. Y. 1893, p. 763. Considerable research has failed to discover any other case involving the direct question.

The Czynski case, at Munich, seems to be the only authentic one in which a conviction of hypnotism was really secured. The prisoner was charged with having had recourse to hypnotic suggestions in order to win the affections of a woman of high social position and to obtain her consent to live with him in illicit intercourse, and, subsequently, after he had subjected her to his will, to inveigle her into a false marriage performed by a friend of the prisoner who personated a priest. The accused had given public exhibitions of his hypnotic powers in Dresden and claimed to be able to treat maladies by touching with his hands the parts of the body affected while the patient was in a hypnotized state. His arrest and trial in 1894 created a profound sensation throughout Europe. He was convicted and sentenced to three years' imprisonment. For a full report of the trial, see 14 Med. Leg. J. 150.

The Kansas case of State v. Gray was reported and extensively commented upon by the newspaper press and some influential legal journals (51 Alb. L. J. 87 and 3 Am. Lawy. 3) as having turned upon the ground of hypnotic influence, but this was clearly a misrepresentation, the actual decision being that one who aids, abets, counsels, or assists in the commission of a crime is equally guilty as one who actually commits the same; 55 Kan. 135, 39 Pac. 1050. One of the journals cited supra in a subsequent issue corrected its error as to the facts of that case and published a letter from the trial judges which states that, "The question of hypnotism was never raised, never insisted upon, either in the evidence, the arguments, or the instructions," and "the only reference, either direct or remote, during the whole trial that was made to the question of hypnotism," was the remark of counsel for the defence to the jury that "we might almost say that Gray possessed a hypnotic power over McDonald." McDonald as principal and Gray as accessory, being charged with murder, upon a severance, the latter was tried first and convicted and afterwards the former was acquitted on the ground of self-defense; 3 Am. Lawy. 45; 13 Med. Leg. J. 51.

The case of Hayward, tried at Minneapolis for the murder of Katherine Ging, and afterwards hanged, and the case at Eau Claire, Wisconsin, in which a young man named Pickens was charged with hypno-tizing two young girls, have both been shown to have no connection with hypnotism; 18 Crim. L. Mag. 100. The facts of both cases may be found in 13 Med. Leg. J. 241.

In a California case of a woman on trial for murder, in whose behalf it was alleged that she was hypnotized by her husband, it was held that evidence that she was told by her husband to commit the act does not tend to show that she was hypnotized, and does not render admissible evidence of the effect of hypnotism on persons subject to its influence; People v. Worthington, 105 Cal. 166, 38 Pac. 689.

Notwithstanding the drift of opinion indicated above there are writers of authority on medico-legal subjects who think differently. In discussing the possibility of rape committed upon a person in the hypnotic state, a late work, after alluding to the lack of attention given to hypnotism in England and America, continues: "Like other theories and investigations received at first with ridicule, hypnotism has been placed on a sure scientific basis, thanks to the labor of Charcot and his successors. It has found a place in French, Austrian, and Hungarian law, and must, sooner or later, creep into the Anglo-Saxon. The great French experts in legal medicine, so far as we know, without an exception (Tardieu, Devergie, Brouardel, Vibert, Tourdes, Tourette) recognize the possibility that the will may be entirely abolished under hypnotic influence." It is further asserted that the crime mentioned is not frequent, but that it undoubtedly exists in a small number of authentic cases. See 2 Witth. & Beck. Med. Jur. 452, where these cases are narrated, and the authorities given. It will be found that they are all open to the criticism and doubt which affect the question of rape on a sleeping woman, and which are inherent in the nature of the crime. While finding no recently recorded case of the violation of a woman during hypnotic sleep, Taylor (2 Med. Leg. Jurispr. 115) is of opinion that "there can be no reasonable doubt about the possibility of such an occurrence."

HYPHOBOLUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. The bequest or legacy given by the husband to his wife, above her dowry. Tech. Dict.

HYPOTHEC. Used in Canada. See HYPOTHÈQUE.

HYPOTHECATION. A right which a creditor has over a thing belonging to another, and which consists in a power to cause it to be sold, in order to be paid his claim out of the proceeds.

There are two species of hypothecation, one called pledge, pignus, and the other properly denominated hypothecation. Pledge is that species of hypothecation which is contracted by the delivery by the debtor to the creditor of the thing hypothecated. Hypothecation, properly so called, is that which is contracted without delivery of the thing hypothecated; 2 Bell, Com. 25.

In the common law, cases of hypothecation, in the strict sense of the civil law, that is of a pledge of a chattel without possession by the pledgee, are scarcely to be found; cases of bottomry bonds and claims for seamen's wages against ships are the nearest approach to it; but these are liens and privileges, rather than hypothecations; Story, Bailm. § 288. It seems that chattels not in existence, though they cannot be pledged, can be hypothecated, so that the lien will attach as soon as the chattel has been produced; Macomber v. Parker, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 497.

In Scotland hypothec is the landlord's right, independently of any stipulation, over the crop and stocking of his tenant, giving the landlord a security over the crop of each year for the rent of that year; Bell.

Conventional hypothecations are those which arise by agreement of the parties. Dig. 20. 1. 5.

General hypothecations are those by which the debtor hypothecates to his creditors all his estate which he has or may have.

Legal hypothecations are those which arise without any contract therefor between the parties, expressed or implied.

Special hypothecations are hypothecations of a particular estate.

Tacit hypothecations are such as the law gives in certain cases, without the consent of the parties, to secure the creditor. They are a species of legal hypothecation.

Thus, the public treasury has a lien over the property of public debtors; Code 8. 15. 1. The landlord has a lien on the goods in the house leased, for the payment of his rent; Dig. 20. 2. 2; Code 8. 15. 7. The builder has a lien, for his bill, on the house he has built; Dig. 20. 1. The pupil has a lien on the property of the curator for the balance of his account; Dig. 46. 6. 22; Code 5. 37. 20. There is hypothecation of the goods of a testator for the security of the legacy; Code 6. 43. 1.

HYPOTHÈQUE. In French Law. Hypothecation; the right acquired by the creditor over the immovable property which has been assigned to him by his debtor as security for his debt, although he be not placed in possession of it.

It thus corresponds to the mortgage of real property in English law, and is a real charge, following the property into whosoever hands it comes. It may be légalé, as in the case of the charge which the state has over the lands of its accountants, or which a married woman has over those of her husband; judiciaire, when it is the result of a judgment of a court of justice; and conventionnelle, when it is the result of an agreement of the parties; Brown.

HYPOTHETICAL QUESTION. A question put to an expert witness containing a recital of facts assumed to have been proved or proof of which is offered in the case, and requiring the opinion of the witness thereon.

It must present fairly the state of facts which the counsel claims to have proved or which the testimony of the witnesses tends to prove; People v. Augsbury, 97 N. Y. 501; Veneman v. Jones, 118 Ind. 42, 20 N. E. 644, 10 Am. St. Rep. 100; State v. Hanley, 34 Minn. 430, 26 N. W. 397; Poole v. Dean, 152 Mass. 589, 26 N. E. 406; Hathaway's Adm'r v. Ins. Co., 48 Vt. 335; Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Jordan, 87 Ga. 69, 13 S. E. 202; In re Will of Norman, 72 Ia. 84, 33 N. W. 374; Woolner v. Spalding, 65 Miss. 204, 3 South. 583; Baker v. State, 30 Fla. 41, 11 South. 492; State v. Anderson, 10 Or. 448; McFall v. Smith, 32 Ill. App. 463; Tingley v. Cowgill, 48 Mo. 291; Kerr v. Lunsford, 31 W. Va. 659, 8 S. E. 493, 2 L. R. A. 668; Baltimore & L. T. Co. v. Cassell, 66 Md. 419, 7 Atl. 805, 59 Am. Rep. 175; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Compton, 75 Tex. 667, 13 S. W. 667; Prentiss v. Bates, 88 Mich. 567, 50 N. W. 637; Quinn v. Higgins, 63 Wis. 664, 24 N. W. 482, 53 Am. Rep. 305; People v. Goldenison, 76 Cal. 328, 19 Pac. 161; and such state of facts must be relevant to the issue; Fairchild v. Bascomb, 35 Vt. 398; Williams v. Brown, 28 Ohio St. 547; Barber's Appeal, 63 Conn. 393, 27 Atl. 973, 22 L. R. A. 90; North American Acc. Ass'n v. Woodson, 64 Fed. 689, 12 C. C. A. 392. The question must contain all the facts proved when it was put; Baer v. Koch, 2 Misc. 335, 21 N. Y. Supp. 974; Mannmerberg v. R. Co., 62 Mo. App. 563; and the witness will not be allowed to answer a question which excludes from his consideration testimony which is essential to the formation of an intelligent opinion concerning the matter; Vosburg v. Putney, 80 Wis. 523, 50 N. W. 403, 14 L. R. A. 226, 27 Am. St. Rep. 47; but the authorities as to this point are conflicting, as it has been held that a question should not be rejected because it does not include all the facts in the case; Davidson v. State, 135 Ind. 254, 34 N. E. 972; Appeal of Barber, 63 Conn. 393, 27 Atl. 973, 22 L. R. A. 90; unless it thereby fails to present the case fairly; Appeal of Barber, 63 Conn. 393, 27 Atl. 973, 22 L. R. A. 90.

Where there is any evidence, a hypothetical question can be based upon it regardless of the preponderance of evidence on the fact; Catlin v. Ins. Co., 83 Ill. App. 40; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Wallace, 202 Ill. 129, 66 N. E. 1096; and the question may be asked where the hypothesis is based on facts supported by evidence though it does not include all the facts in evidence; Allison v. Parkinson, 108 Ia. 154, 78 N. W. 845; Cole v. Coal Co., 159 N. Y. 59, 53 N. E. 670; Swensen v. Bender, 114 Fed. 1, 51 C. C. A. 627; People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 179, 48 Pac. 75; it need not embrace all the evidence but may be based on any facts within the range of the evidence; People v. Hill, 116 Cal. 562, 48 Pac. 711; or on an assumption of facts which the testimony tends to prove; Medill v. Snyder, 61 Kan. 15, 58 Pac. 962, 78 Am. St. Rep. 307.

A question put to an expert witness calling for his opinion may refer him to the testimony in the case if he has heard it, instead of stating the facts which the answer tends to prove, but in such a case the witness must assume the testimony to be true; Jones v. Ry. Co., 43 Minn. 279, 45 N. W. 444; Frankfort v. Ry. Co., 12 Misc. 13, 33 N. Y. Supp. 36; and it has been held that he may not base his opinion on the testimony but must confine himself to the hypothetical statement; Link v. Sheldon, 136 N. Y. 1, 32 N. E. 696. The witness may not assume for himself from the testimony the facts on which he bases his opinion without informing the jury what he supposes the facts to be; Connelly v. Ry. Co., 60 Hun 495, 15 N. Y. Supp. 176; he may, include as a basis of his opinion, facts known to be true as well as those stated in the question; Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Thompson, 75 Tex. 501, 12 S. W. 742; Tebo v. City of Augusta, 90 Wis. 405, 63 N. W. 1045.

The truth of the facts assumed by the question is, in doubtful cases, a question for the jury, and if they find that the assumed facts are not proved, they should disregard the opinions based on such hypothetical questions, and the court will so instruct them; People v. Foley, 64 Mich. 148, 31 N. W. 94; Turnbull v. Richardson, 69 Mich. 400, 37 N. W. 499; but the court is not required to submit the matter to the jury unless there is some substantial evidence tending to establish the hypothesis; Nave v. Tucker, 70 Ind. 15. If there is no testimony in the case tending to prove the facts assumed in the question, it is improper; the facts must be proved or proof of them must be offered; Turnbull v. Richardson, 69 Mich. 400, 37 N. W. 499; Hovey v. Chase, 52 Me. 304, 83 Am. Dec. 514; Muldowney v. R. Co., 39 Ia. 615; Reber v. Herring, 115 Pa. 599, 8 Atl. 830; Williams v. Brown, 28 Ohio St. 547; Quinn v. Higgins, 63 Wis. 664, 24 N. W. 482, 53 Am. Rep. 305; Woolner v. Spalding, 65 Miss. 204, 3 South. 583; Haish v. Payson, 107 Ill. 365.

The length of the question is to be regulated, largely, by the discretion of the trial judge; Forsyth v. Doolittle, 120 U. S. 73, 7 Sup. Ct. 408, 30 L. Ed. 586; it has been held an error to permit it to be so long and complicated as to confuse the witness or baffle his memory; People v. Brown, 53 Mich. 531, 19 N. W. 172; Haish v. Payson, 107 Ill. 365; but to obviate this difficulty the court may require the question to be reduced to writing; Jones v. Portland, 88 Mich. 598, 50 N. W. 731, 16 L. R. A. 437. If unfair and misleading, hypothetical cases assumed in framing questions are to be considered in determining whether or not a fair trial has been had; McFall v. Smith, 32 Ill. App. 463; but it cannot be expected that the interrogatory will include the proofs or theory of the adversary, since this would require a party to assume the truth of that which he generally denies; Goodwin v. State, 96 Ind. 550. Hypothetical questions cannot be asked of an ordinary observer; State v. Klinger, 46 Mo. 224; Russell v. State, 53 Miss. 367; Appeal of Dunham, 27 Conn. 192. And, as to this, a professional man, in a matter of which he has not made special study is doubtless regarded as an ordinary observer.

HYSTEROTOMY. The cæsarian operation.

HYTHE. A port, wharf, or small haven used for the purpose of embarking or landing merchandise. Blount.

I

I. O. U. A memorandum of debt in use among merchants and others. It is not a promissory note, as it contains no direct promise to pay; 4 C. & P. 324; 1 Mann. & G. 46; but if words are superadded to the acknowledgment from which an intention to accompany it with an engagement to pay may be gathered, it will be construed as a promissory note; 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. 33; if it contains an agreement that it is to be paid on a given day it is a promissory note; Byles, Bills 19. It is evidence of an account stated but not of money lent; 16 M. & W. 449. A due bill has been held to be a promissory note; Finney v. Shirley, 7 Mo. 42; McGowen v. West, 7 Mo. 569, 38 Am. Dec. 468; Harrow v. Dugan, 6 Dana (Ky.) 341. A due bill to bearer without specifying the date of payment is a promissory note payable immediately; Sackett v. Spencer, 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 180. An I. O. U. not addressed to any one will be evidence for the plaintiff if produced by him; 16 M. & W. 449; 1 M. & G. 46. It is evidence of an account stated with the addressee; L. R. 1 C. P. 297; or, if not addressed, then to the person producing it; 10 L. J. Q. B. 43. It imports a promise to pay; Buck v. Hurst, L. R. 1 C. P. 297.

IBIDEM (Lat.). The same. The same book or place. The same subject.

ICE. Ice formed in a stream not navigable is part of the realty, and belongs to the owner of the bed of the stream, who has a right to prevent its removal; State v. Pottmeyer, 33 Ind. 402, 5 Am. Rep. 224; Mill River Woolen Mfg. Co. v. Smith, 34 Conn. 462; Allen v. Weber, 80 Wis. 531, 50 N. W. 514, 14 L. R. A. 361, 27 Am. St. Rep. 51; Washington Ice Co. v. Shortall, 101 Ill. 46, 40 Am. Rep. 196; but see, contra, Higgins v. Kusterer, 41 Mich. 318, 2 N. W. 13, 32 Am. Rep. 160, where it is said that the ephemeral character of ice renders it incapable of any permanent or beneficial use as part of the soil, and therefore a sale of ice already formed, as a distinct commodity, should be held a sale of personalty whether in the water or out of the water. See, also, 32 Am. Rep. 160, note; 32 Am. L. Reg. 166. Riparian owners on navigable streams have no title to the ice which forms on such streams, as an incident to their ownership of the bank; Marsh v. McNider, 88 Ia. 390, 55 N. W. 469, 20 L. R. A. 333, 45 Am. St. Rep. 240; and if a statute gives them title to the ice opposite their property, and prescribes a remedy for invasion of their rights therein, that remedy is exclusive; Briggs v. Ice Co., 11 Misc. 197, 32 N. Y. Supp. 95. The right of taking ice either for use or sale from a pond which is a public water, is a public right which may be exercised by any citizen who can obtain access to the pond without trespassing on the lands of other persons, or unreasonably interfering with their rights; Inhabitants of West Roxbury v. Stoddard, 7 Allen (Mass.) 158; Hittinger v. Eames, 121 Mass. 539; Wood v. Fowler, 26 Kan. 682, 40 Am. Rep. 330.

This right is personal; to take a large amount for commercial purposes is an unreasonable exercise of it; Sanborn v. Ice Co., 82 Minn. 43, 84 N. W. 641, 51 L. R. A. 829, 83 Am. St. Rep. 401.

A landowner cannot cut ice for sale from a pond situated on his land, where its removal works an actual injury to one having a pondage right therein; Howe v. Andrews, 62 Conn. 398, 26 Atl. 394; but the owner of land abutting on a millpond may take ice from the pond if it does not interfere with the use of the mill; Eidemiller Ice Co. v. Guthrie, 42 Neb. 238, 60 N. W. 717, 28 L. R. A. 581. Ice in an ice-house is a subject of larceny, but before being gathered it is not, being part of the pond or river; Ward v. People, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 395; Ward v. People, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 144. See Bish. N. Cr. L. § 765, n. 2.

The legislature may forbid the taking of ice from a stream the title to which is in the public in favor of a public use for skating, etc.; Board of Park Com'rs of Des Moines v. Ice Co., 130 Ia. 603, 105 N. W. 203, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1103, 8 Ann. Cas. 28.

ICENI. The ancient name for the people of Suffolk, Norfolk, Cambridgeshire, Huntingdonshire. Cowell.

ICONA. A figure or representation of a thing. Du Cange.

ICTUS. In Old English Law. A stroke or blow from a club or stone; a bruise, contusion, or swelling produced by such blow, as distinguished from "plaga" (a wound). Fleta, lib. 1, c. 41, 3.

ICTUS ORBIS (Lat.). In Medical Jurisprudence. A main, a bruise, or swelling; any hurt without cutting the skin.

When the skin is cut, the injury is called a wound. Bracton, lib. 2, tr. 2, c. 5 and 24.

Ictus is often used by medical authors in the sense of percussus. It is applied to the pulsation of the arteries, to any external lesion of the body produced by violence; also, to the wound inflicted by a scorpion or venomous reptile. Orbis is used in the sense of circle, circuit, rotundity. It is applied, also, to the eyeballs: oculi dicuntur orbes. Castelli, Lex. Med.

ID EST (Lat.). That is. Commonly abbreviated i. e.

IDAHO. One of the states of the United States.

It was a part of the Louisiana purchase but was included in the portion affected by the joint occupation of the United States and Great Britain under the treaty of 1818 which was terminated in 1846. It was a part of the Oregon territory organized under act of August 14, 1848, and afterwards of the territory of Washington organized under act of March 2, 1853; it was organized as a separate territory under its present name by act of March 3, 1863. It then included Montana and part of Wyoming, which were afterward separately organized, and the present boundaries of Idaho were settled by act of July 25, 1868, setting apart Wyoming as a territory. Under a constitution adopted August 6, and ratified November 2, 1889, it was admitted as a state July 3, 1890; U. S. Rev. Stat. 1. Supp. 754. In 1911, amendments provided for the initiative, referendum and recall.

IDEM (Lat.). The same. According to Lord Coke, "idem" has two significations, idem syllabis seu verbis (the same in syllables or words), and idem re et sensu (the same in substance and in sense). 10 Coke 124 a.

IDEM PER IDEM. The same for the same. An illustration of a kind that really adds no additional element to the consideration of the question.

IDEM SONANS (Lat.). Having the same sound.

In indictments and pleadings, when a name which it is material to state is wrongly spelled, yet if it be idem sonans with that proved, it is sufficient. The following have been held to be idem sonans, Segrave for Seagrave; 2 Stra. 889; Whyneard for Winyard; Russ. & R. 412; Benedetto for Beneditto; 2 Taunt. 401; Keen for Keene; Thach. Cr. The rule seems to be that if names may be sounded alike without doing violence to the power of letters found in the various orthography, the variance is immaterial; Wilks v. State, 27 Tex. App. 381, 11 S. W. 415; 1 Whart. Cr. L. 309; 1 Bish. Cr. Proc. § 688. Whether or not the names are idem sonantia was held a question for the jury, where the name was laid Darius C (pronounced in Dorset dialect D'rius) and it was in fact Trius; 2 Den. Cr. Cas. 231; 3 Russ. Cr. Sharsw. ed. 317. See Kirk v. Suttle, 6 Ala. 679; Com. v. Brigham, 147 Mass. 414, 18 N. E. 167.

In the following cases the variances there mentioned were declared to be fatal: McCarn for McCann; Russ. & R. 351; Shakspeare for Shakepear; 10 East 83; Calver for Calvert and Day for Dax; 2 Cr. & M. 189; Moores for Mohr; State v. Mohr, 55 Mo. App. 325; Mulette for Merlette; Merlette v. State, 100 Ala. 42, 14 South. 562; Siemson for Simonson; Simonson v. Dolan, 114 Mo. 176, 21 S. W. 510; Bart for Bartholomew; Curtis v. Marrs, 29 Ill. 508; Comyns for Cummins; Cruikshank v. Comyns, 24 Ill. 602; Grautis for Gerardus; Mann v. Carley, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 148; Henry for Harry; Garrison v. People, 21 Ill. 535; Jeffery for Jeffries; Marshall v. Jeffries, 1 Hempst. 299, Fed. Cas. No. 9,128a.

The same principle applies to words as well as names, and a verdict is not vitiated by misspelling if the words are idem sonans, as mrder for murder, turn for term, too for two; but a verdict for damages was void when given for impunitive damages, or when a burglar was found guilty of bergellery, or where the defendant was found guity instead of guilty, there being no such words as the last three in English: Shaw v. State, 2 Tex. App. 487; Haney v. State, 2 Tex. App. 504; Keeller v. State, 4 Tex. App. 527; Dillon v. Rogers, 36 Tex. 152.

See, generally, 3 Chitty, Pr. 231, 232; 6 M. & S. 45; Tibbets v. Kiah, 2 N. H. 557; Com. v. Gillespie, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 479, 10 Am. Dec. 475; Petrie v. Woodworth, 3 Cal. (N. Y.) 219; Gordon v. Holiday, 1 Wash. C. C. 285, Fed. Cas. No. 5,610; Mann v. Carley, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 148; 3 Stark. Ev. § 1678; Gonzalia v. Bartelsman, 143 Ill. 634, 32 N. E. 532; 24 Alb. L. J. 444; 27 Am. St. Rep. 785, note; 13 L. R. A. 541, note; Harris, Identification, Ch. III.

IDENTIFICATION. "Evidence of personal identity which is inconsistent with other evidence in the case" should be considered "with scrupulous care and caution;" Tisdale v. Ins. Co., Fed. Cas. No. 14,059. Where the witness has seen the person but once, and that several years before, his uncorroborated testimony would be insufficient; Reid v. Reid, 17 N. J. Eq. 101; and the identification of an adult person whom the witness had not seen since the former was a child would be entitled to but little weight; In re Jew Wong Loy, 91 Fed. 240.

Identification might be satisfactory, though the witness should not be able to describe the person's features; De Witt v. Barley, 13 Barb. (N. Y.) 550; it would be strengthened if the witness could select the person's photograph from a number; Com. v. Connors, 156 Pa. 147, 27 Atl. 366. A witness may identify a person by his voice; Com. v. Hayes, 138 Mass. 185; Pilcher v. U. S., 113 Fed. 248, 51 C. C. A. 205. If the speaker were unseen and the acquaintance slight, the evidence would be weak; Ramsay v. Ryerson, 40 Fed. 739. The voice may have been heard on the telephone; Lord Electric Co. v. Morrill, 178 Mass. 304, 59 N. E. 807; such evidence was received where the witness did not know the person till afterwards; People v. Strollo, 191 N. Y. 42, 33 N. E. 573. In the Tichborne Case, Cockburn, C. J., charged that the identification of an adult son by a parent who had not seen him since childhood was much less satisfactory than that of persons who had brought him up. In Lee Sing Far v. U. S., 94 Fed. 834, 35 C. C. A. 327, it was held to be improbable, though not impossible, that a Chinese could identify his daughter of fifteen years of age whom he had not seen since she was two or three years old. See Moore, Facts, 1365.

As to the effect of variation in names with respect to records as notice, see Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Hesser, 77 Ia. 381, 42 N. W. 325, 4 L. R. A. 122, 14 Am. St. Rep. 297; Johnson v. Hess, 126 Ind. 298, 25 N. E. 445, 9 L. R. A. 471; Crouse v. Murphy, 140 Pa. 335, 21 Atl. 358, 12 L. R. A. 58, 23 Am. St. Rep. 232. And as to names in a record index, see 14 L. R. A. 393, note.

As to the identification of criminals, see ANTHROPOMETRY.

IDENTITATE NOMINIS (Lat.). In English Law. The name of a writ which lay for a person taken upon a capias or exigent, and committed to prison, for another man of the same name: this writ directs the sheriff to inquire whether he be the person against whom the action was brought, and if not, then to discharge him; Fitzh. N. B. 267. In practice, a party in this condition would be relieved by habeas corpus.

IDENTITY. Sameness. Identity of persons is a phrase applied especially to those cases in which the issue before the jury is, whether a man be the same person with one previously convicted or attained. 4 Bla. Com. 396; 4 Steph. Com. 468.

In cases of larceny the question of the identity of property is for the jury and a verdict will be set aside where the court said in the charge that one of the stolen "bills was positively identified;" Hill v. State, 17 Wis. 675, 86 Am. Dec. 736.

The question of identity of a prisoner as well as of property may arise. In a case of larceny of a hog the question of identity both of prisoner and hog was submitted to the jury; Kelly v. State, 1 Tex. App. 628; and evidence of a confession given by a fellow-prisoner of the accused (who had conversed with him through soil pipes in the gaol) that he recognized him by his voice was allowed to go to the jury on the question of identity; Brown v. Com., 76 Pa. 319.

Generally a witness may be permitted to identify an accused solely from having heard his voice; Com. v. Kelly, 186 Mass. 403, 71 N. E. 807; Deal v. State, 140 Ind. 354, 39 N. E. 930; State v. Herbert, 63 Kan. 516, 66 Pac. 235; Mack v. State, 54 Fla. 55, 44 South. 706, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 373, 14 Ann. Cas. 78.

As to the modes of identifying different kinds of personal property, see Harris, Identification, Ch. XIII. And as to the different kinds of evidence resorted to for proving the identity of a prisoner, see id. Ch. IV.

As to the identity between an alien immigrant and the accused, descriptive matter in the report of the captain of the ship to the immigration officers, corresponding closely with other evidence relating to him, was allowed to go to the jury; McInerney v. U. S., 143 Fed. 729, 74 C. C. A. 655.

In cases of larceny, trover, and replevin, the things in question must be identified; 4 Bla. Com. 396. So, too, the identity of articles taken or injured must be proved in all indictments where taking property is the gist of the offence, and in actions of tort for damage to specific property. See State v. Vines, 34 La. Ann. 1082. Many other cases occur in which identity must be proved in regard either to persons or things. One case in which such questions arise under chattel mortgages, in which this identification need be such only as would enable identification by a third person aided by inquiry, and not such as would enable a stranger to select it; Jones, Chat. Mortg. § 54; Smith v. McLean, 24 Ia. 323; Tindall v. Wasson, 74 Ind. 495; Connally v. Spragins, 66 Ala. 258; Lawrence v. Evarts, 7 Ohio St. 194; Goulding v. Swett, 13 Gray (Mass.) 517. The question is sometimes one of great practical difficulty, as in case of the death of strangers, reappearance after a long absence, and the like. See Ryan, Med. Jur. 301; 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 509; 6 C. & P. 677; Clark v. Pearson, 53 Ga. 496; 1 Hagg. Cons. 180; Shelf. Marr. & D. 226; Best, Pres. App. Case 4; Clark v. Robinson, 88 Ill. 498; Wills, Circ. Ev. 143; 4 Bla. Com. 396; 4 Steph. Com. 468; Harris, Identif.

Identity of the name of a grantor or grantee is prima facie evidence of identity of the person; Rupert v. Penner, 35 Neb. 587, 53 N. W. 598, 17 L. R. A. 824; and a conveyance by a grantee of the same name as the holder of the title is presumably sufficient; Gilman v. Sheets, 78 Ia. 499, 43 N. W. 299; even where the names are not identical in spelling, as Savery and Savory; Smith v. Gillum, 80 Tex. 120, 15 S. W. 794; Fink v. Ry. Co., 8 N. Y. Supp. 327. See IDEM SONANS. These cases apply a general principle, that a presumption of identity of persons arises from identity of name, and the former is recognized as prima facie evidence of the latter in a great variety of cases; Stebbins v. Duncan, 108 U. S. 47, 2 Sup. Ct. 313, 27 L. Ed. 641; Long v. McDow, 87 Mo. 197; State v. McGuire, id. 642; 4 Q. B. 626; Hatcher v. Rocheleau, 18 N. Y. 86; Ward v. Dougherty, 75 Cal. 240, 17 Pac. 193, 7 Am. St. Rep. 151; Campbell v. Wallace, 46 Mich. 320, 9 N. W. 432; Grindle v. Stone, 78 Me. 176, 3 Atl. 183; Bogue v. Bigelow, 29 Vt. 179; Wilson v. Holt, 83 Ala. 528, 3 South. 321, 3 Am. St. Rep. 768; Robertson v. Du Bose, 76 Tex. 1, 13 S. W. 300; contra, 9 M. & W. 75; Robards v. Wolfe, 1 Dana (Ky.) 155; Kinney v. Flynn, 2 R. I. 319; Ellsworth v. Moore, 5 Ia. 486; Mooers v. Bunker, 29 N. H. 420. But it has been held that it is a question for the jury to determine the identity of a grantor with the former grantee; Carleton v. Townsend, 28 Cal. 221; or whether a person pleading former conviction is the same party; State v. Robinson, 39 Me. 154; or a person bearing the name of a deceased is one of his heirs; Freeman v. Loftis, 51 N. C. 528. The identity of a family name and initials raises no presumption of identity; Bennett v. Libhart, 27 Mich. 489. As between father and son of the same name it is presumed that the former is intended if there is no distinguishing mark; Padgett v. Lawrence, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 170, 40 Am. Dec. 232; Graves v. Colwell, 90 Ill. 612; 1 Stark. 106; State v. Vittum, 9 N. H. 519.

IDEO (Lat.). Therefore. Calv. Lex.

IDEO CONSIDERATUM EST. Therefore it is considered. See CONSIDERATUM EST PER CURIAM.

IDEOT. An old form for idiot (q. v.).

IDES (Lat.). In Civil Law. A day in the month from which the computation of days was made.

The divisions of months adopted among the Romans were as follows: The calends occurred on the first day of every month, and were distinguished by adding the name of the month: as, calendæ Januarii, the first of January. The nonæ occurred on the fifth of each month, with the exception of March, July, October, and May, in which months they occurred on the seventh. The ides occurred always on the ninth day after the nonæ, thus dividing the month equally. In fact the ides would seem to have been the primal division, occurring in the middle of the month, nearly. Other days than the three designated were indicated by the number of days which would elapse before the next succeeding point of division. Thus, the second of April is the quarto nonas Aprilis; the second of March, the sexto nonas Martii; the eighth of March, octavus idus Martii; the eighth of April, sextus idus Aprilis; the sixteenth of March, decimus septimus calendæ Aprilis.

This system is still used in some chanceries in Europe; and we therefore give the following Table of the Calends, Nones, and Ides.

|    | Jan., Aug.Dec.,31 days. | March, May,July, Oct.,31 days. | April, June,Sept. Nov.,30 days. | Feb. 28,bissextile,29 days. |

IDIOCHIRA (from Gr. idios, private, and cheir, hand). In Civil Law. An instrument privately executed, as distinguished from one publicly executed. Vicat, Voc. Jur.

IDIOCY. In Medical Jurisprudence. Mental deficiency of varying grades down to extreme stupidity resulting from imperfect development or disease of the nervous centers either prenatal or occurring before the evolution of the mental faculties in childhood. Brush in Cyclopædia of Diseases of Children. A condition of defective brain-development. See 3 Witth. & Beck. Med. Jur. 364 et seq.; 2 Ham. Leg. Med. 80 et seq.

It always implies some defect or disease of the brain, which is generally smaller than the standard size and irregular in its shape and proportions. Hydrocephalus is an occasional cause of idiocy. The senses are very imperfect at best, and one or more are often entirely wanting. None can articulate more than a few words; while many utter only cries or muttered sounds. Some make known their wants by signs or sounds which are intelligible to those who have charge of them. The head, the features, the expression, the movements,—all convey the idea of extreme mental deficiency. The reflective faculties are entirely wanting, whereby they are utterly incapable of any effort of reasoning. The perceptive faculties exist in a very limited degree, and hence they are rendered capable of being improved somewhat by education, and redeemed, in some measure, from their brutish condition. They have been led into habits of propriety and decency, have been taught some of the elements of learning, and have learned some of the coarser industrial occupations. The moral sentiments, such as self-esteem, love of approbation, veneration, benevolence, are not unfrequently manifested; while some propensities, such as cunning, destructiveness, sexual impulse, are particularly active.

In some parts of Europe a form of idiocy prevails endemically, called cretinism. It is associated with disease or defective development of other organs besides the head. Cretins are short in stature, their limbs are attenuated, the belly tumid, and the neck thick. The muscular system is feeble, and their voluntary movements restrained and undecided. The power of language is very imperfect, if not entirely wanting. In the least degraded forms of this disease the perceptive powers may be somewhat developed, and the individual may evince some talent at music or construction. In Switzerland they make parts of watches. Cretinism like idiocy is frequently congenital, and its causation is very obscure.

Absence of the internal secretion of the thyroid gland is a common cause of the so-called sporadic cretinism which exists the world over.

Both idiocy and cretinism exhibit various degrees of mental deficiency, but they never approximate to any description of men supposed to be rational, nor can any amount of education efface the chasm which separates them from their better-endowed fellow-men. The older law-writers, whose observation of mental manifestations was not very profound, thought it necessary to have some test of idiocy; and accordingly, Fitzherbert says, if he have sufficient understanding to know and understand his letters, and to read by teaching or information, he is not an idiot. Natura Brevium 583. Again, he says, a man is not an idiot if he hath any glimmering of reason, so that he can tell his parents, his age, or the like common matters. The inference was, no doubt, that such a man is responsible for his criminal acts. At the present day, such an idea would not be entertained for a moment, nor are we aware of any case on record of an idiot suffering capital punishment. See INSANITY; DEMENTIA; IMBECILITY.

IDIOT. A person who has been without understanding from his nativity, and whom the law, therefore, presumes never likely to attain any. Shelf. Lun. 2; 3 Witth. & Beck. Med. Jur. 371.

It is an imbecility or sterility of mind, and not a perversion of the understanding; Chitty, Med. Jur. 327, 345; 1 Rus. Cr. 6; Bacon, Abr. Idiot (A); Brooke, Abr.; Co. Litt. 246, 247; 4 Co. 126; 1 Bla. Com. 302; Tayl. Med. Jur. 688. When a man cannot count or number twenty, nor tell his father's or mother's name, nor how old he is, having been frequently told of it, it is a fair presumption that he is devoid of understanding; Fitzh. N. B. 233. See 1 Dow, P. Cas. N. S. 392; 3 Bligh. N. S. 1. Persons born deaf, dumb, and blind were presumed to be idiots; for, the senses being the only inlets of knowledge, and these, the most important of them, being closed, all ideas and associations belonging to them are totally excluded from their minds; Co. Litt. 42; Shelf. Lun. 3. See State v. Howard, 118 Mo. 127, 24 S. W. 41. But this is a mere presumption, which, like most others, may be rebutted; and doubtless a person born deaf, dumb, and blind, who could be taught to read and write, would not be considered an idiot. Remarkable instances of such are found in the persons of Laura Bridgman and Helen Keller who have been taught how to converse, and even to write. See Locke, Hum. Und. b. 2, c. 11, §§ 12, 13; Ayliffe, Pand. 234; 4 Comyns, Dig. 610; 8 id. 644. See DEAF AND DUMB; DEAF, DUMB AND BLIND; IDIOCY.

Idiots are incapable of committing crimes, or entering into contracts. They cannot, of course, make a will; but they may acquire property by descent.

IDIOTA. In the Civil Law. An unlearned, illiterate, or simple person. Calv. Lex. A private man; one not in office.

In Common Law. An idiot or fool.

IDIOTA INQUIRENDO WRIT DE. This is the name of an old writ which directs the sheriff to enquire whether a man be an idiot or not. The inquisition is to be made by a jury of twelve men. Fitzh. N. B. 232.

IDONEUM SE FACERE. IDONEARE SE. To purge one's self by oath of a crime of which one is accused.

IDONEUS (Lat.). Sufficient; fit; adequate. He is said to be idoneus homo who hath these three things, honesty, knowledge, and civility; and if an officer, etc., be not idoneus, he may be discharged; 8 Co. 41. If a clerk presented to a living is not persona idonea, which includes ability in learning, honesty of conversation, etc., the bishop may refuse him. And to a quare impedit brought thereon, "in literatura minus sufficiens is a good plea, without setting forth the particular kind of learning;" 5 Co. 58; 6 id. 49 b; Co. 2d Inst. 631; Wood. Inst. 32.

So of things; idonea quantitas; Calvinus, Lex.; idonea paries, a wall sufficient or able to bear the weight.

In Civil Law. Rich; solvent; e. g. idoneus tutor, idoneus debitor. Calvinus, Lex.

IGLISE (L. Fr.). A church. Kelham. Another form of "église."

IGNIS JUDICIUM (Lat.). In Old English Law. The judicial trial by fire.

IGNITEGIUM. The curfew (q. v.). Cowell.

IGNOMINY. Public disgrace; infamy; reproach; dishonor. Ignominy is the opposite of esteem. Wolff § 145. See Brown v. Kingsley, 38 Ia. 220.

IGNORAMUS (Lat. we are ignorant or uninformed). The word which is written on a bill by a grand jury when they find that there is not sufficient evidence to authorize their finding it a true bill. They are said to ignore the bill, which is also said to be thrown out. The proceedings being now in English, the grand jury indorse on the bill, Not found, No bill, or, No true bill. 4 Bla. Com. 305.

IGNORANCE. The lack of knowledge.

Ignorance is distinguishable from error. Ignorance is want of knowledge; error is the nonconformity or opposition of ideas to the truth. Considered as a motive of actions, ignorance differs but little from error. They are generally found together, and what is said of one is said of both.

Essential ignorance is ignorance in relation to some essential circumstance so intimately connected with the matter in question, and which so influences the parties that it induces them to act in the business; Pothier, Vente, nn. 3, 4; 2 Kent 367.

Non-essential or accidental ignorance is that which has not of itself any necessary connection with the business in question, and which is not the true consideration for entering into the contract.

Ignorance of fact is the want of knowledge as to the fact in question; as if a man marry a married woman, supposing her unmarried; Com. v. Thompson, 11 Allen (Mass.) 23, 87 Am. Dec. 685.

It is not yet fully settled, at least in this country, whether a person who does a criminal act, supposing it to be lawful through ignorance of fact, can properly be convicted; 12 Am. L. Rev. 469. Such a conviction was held proper; Com. v. Thompson, 11 Allen (Mass.) 23, 87 Am. Dec. 685 (where a man was convicted of adultery, in innocently marrying a woman whose husband was living); Thompson v. Thompson, 114 Mass. 566; State v. Hartfiel, 24 Wis. 60; Beckham v. Nacke, 56 Mo. 546; contra, Stern v. State, 53 Ga. 229, 21 Am. Rep. 266; Brown v. State, 24 Ind. 113; Crabtree v. State, 30 Ohio St. 382. The doctrine was adhered to in a later Massachusetts case, where a belief that the husband was dead was held no defence in a prosecution for bigamy; Com. v. Hayden, 163 Mass. 453, 40 N. E. 846, 28 L. R. A. 318, 47 Am. St. Rep. 468. The opposite conclusion was reached in England by nine out of fourteen judges: 23 Q. B. D. 168; so in Foord (So. Afr.) 190.

The Massachusetts court took issue directly with the English case. Mr. Bishop severely criticises the Massachusetts doctrine and, reviewing the authorities, strongly approved the English rule; 1 Bish. N. Cr. L. § 303 a, note. Nevertheless, it is generally well established that ignorance of facts is a defence, where a knowledge of certain facts is essential to an offence, but no defence where a statute makes an act indictable, irrespective of guilty knowledge. Thus there can be no conviction of murder, larceny, or burglary, without proof of the intention, mens rea, to commit these crimes; but where selling liquor to minors is by statute indictable, the mistaken belief that the vendee is of full age, is no defence; Com. v. Gould, 158 Mass. 499, 33 N. E. 656; see 1 Whar. Cr. L. § 88; 2 id. § 1704; State v. Meyer (Tex.) 23 S. W. 427; State v. Baer, 37 W. Va. 1, 16 S. E. 368; In re Carlson's License, 127 Pa. 330, 18 Atl. 8; but see Ross v. State, 116 Ind. 495, 19 N. E. 451; People v. Welch, 71 Mich. 548, 39 N. W. 747, 1 L. R. A. 385. Nor is it any defence that the party selling intoxicating liquor did not know that it was intoxicating; State v. Moulton, 52 Kan. 69, 34 Pac. 412; King v. State, 66 Miss. 502, 6 South. 188; Haynes v. State, 118 Tenn. 709, 105 S. W. 251, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 559, 121 Am. St. Rep. 1055, 12 Ann. Cas. 470; Cox v. Thompson, 96 Tex. 468, 73 S. W. 950.

Ignorance of a fact extrinsic and not essential to a contract, but which, if known, might have influenced the actions of a party to the contract, is not such a mistake as will authorize equitable relief; Cleaveland v. Richardson, 132 U. S. 318, 10 Sup. Ct. 100, 33 L. Ed. 384. Nor is ignorance of facts a sufficient ground for equitable relief, if it appear that the requisite knowledge might have been obtained by reasonable diligence; U. S. v. Ames, 99 U. S. 35, 47, 25 L. Ed. 295.

See Brett, L. Cas. Mod. Eq. 84; MISTAKE.

Ignorance of the laws of a foreign government, or of another state, is ignorance of fact; Haven v. Foster, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 112, 19 Am. Dec. 353, where there will be found a discussion of the difference between ignorance of law and ignorance of fact. See also Clef des Lois Rom. Fait.

Ignorance of law consists of the want of knowledge of those laws which it is our duty to understand, and which every man is presumed to know.

The principle that ignorance of the law is no defence (ignorantia legis neminem excusat) is generally recognized. It was a maxim of the Roman law, in which this case was put, to illustrate the distinction between ignorance of law and fact:—If the heir is ignorant of the death of his ancestor, he is ignorant of a fact; but if, being aware of his death, and of his own relationship, he is, nevertheless, ignorant that certain rights have thereby become vested in himself, he is ignorant of the law; D. 22, 6. 1. See 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 632. The English rule is that every man is presumed to know the law, subject to certain qualifications with respect to questions of doubtful construction, practice, and the like; Broom, Leg. Max. 8th Am. ed. 234; 6 Cl. & Fin. 911; 11 Exch. 840. The court will only relieve against a payment of money under mistake of law, if there be some equitable ground which renders it inequitable that the party who received the money should retain it; 3 Ch. D. 351. This case is said to "contain probably the best statement . . . of the principles upon which the courts proceed in relieving or declining to relieve on the ground of mistake of law;" Brett, L. Cas. Mod. Eq. 80. The case itself proceeded upon the ground that an erroneous construction of an instrument was a mistake of law, and it was so held in several cases; L. R. 14 Eq. 85; 6 H. L. Cas. 798, 811; but for a dictum, contra, see L. R. 6 H. L. 223, 234; and see also 42 Ch. D. 98; [1893] 1 Ch. 101, 111. The same general rule is recognized by American courts. Tiglaio v. Insular Government, 215 U. S. 410, 30 Sup. Ct. 129, 54 L. Ed. 257; though earlier cases indicate hesitation on the part of the courts before it was definitely settled. It was said in an early case that whether money paid through ignorance of the law can be recovered back, is a question much vexed and involved in no inconsiderable perplexity; Haven v. Foster, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 112, 19 Am. Dec. 353; and that when one makes a promise as an "expression of an opinion of what he should be obliged to allow, rather than of what he was willing to allow, and being under a mistake of his right, he is not bound by it;" Levy v. Bank, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 27, 37. But it may be considered as well established that money paid with full knowledge of all the facts and circumstances cannot be recovered back upon the ground that the party supposed he was bound in law to pay it, when in truth he was not; Real Estate Saving Institution v. Linder, 74 Pa. 371; Hollingsworth v. Stone, 90 Ind. 244; Arnold v. Banking Co., 50 Ga. 304 (practically overruling Collier v. Perkerson, 31 Ga. 117; Eaton v. Eaton, 35 N. J. L. 290; Mutual Savings Institution v. Enslin, 46 Mo. 200; Gross v. Parrott, 16 Cal. 143; Johnson v. McGinness, 1 Or. 292; contra, City of Covington v. Powell, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 226; and a person cannot be permitted to disavow or avoid the operation of an agreement entered into with a full knowledge of the facts, on the ground of ignorance of the legal consequences which flow from those facts; Shotwell v. Murray, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 512, 516. See 1 V. & B. 23, 30; Osburn v. Throckmorton, 90 Va. 311, 18 S. E. 285; Gefken v. Graef, 77 Ga. 340. Ignorance of one's legal right does not take a case out of the rule of equitable estoppel where one encourages a purchaser to take land from one having a color of title when otherwise he would be entitled to interpose an equitable bar to the latter's legal title; Butts v. Cuthbertson, 6 Ga. 166.

It has been said that whatever rule may prevail elsewhere, in the equity courts of the U. S., there is no relief from a mistake of law alone; Allen v. Galloway, 30 Fed. 466; Upton v. Tribilcock, 91 U. S. 50, 51, 23 L. Ed. 203; Lamborn v. Dickinson County, 97 U. S. 185, 24 L. Ed. 926; U. S. v. Ames, 99 U. S. 46, 25 L. Ed. 295; Utermehle v. Norment, 197 U. S. 40, 25 Sup. Ct. 291, 49 L. Ed. 655, 3 Ann. Cas. 520. But there is to be found by careful reading of the Federal cases the same disposition apparent in English cases, to avoid the establishment of an inflexible rule which shall preclude relief if there be any other circumstances or any feature of the case itself to warrant it. In Hunt v. Ennis, 2 Mas. 244, Fed. Cas. No. 6,889, Hunt v. Rousmanier's Adm'rs, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 174, 5 L. Ed. 589, and Hunt v. Rhodes, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 1, 7 L. Ed. 27, the United States supreme court said, where an instrument is executed by the parties, which contains a mistake of the draughtsman either of fact or law it may be reformed, but not when it was executed in the form agreed upon under a misapprehension of the law as to its nature or effect; that a mistake of law is not a ground for reforming a deed and the exceptions are both few and peculiar, but it was not the intention to lay down a rule that there might not be relief against a plain mistake arising from ignorance of law; and in a later case the court quoted this expression with approval and also the declaration from 1 Sto. Eq. Jur. Redf. ed. § 138 c, that established misapprehension of the law does afford a basis for relief resting on discretion and to be exercised only in flagrant and unquestionable cases; Snell v. Ins. Co., 98 U. S. 85, 91, 25 L. Ed. 52.

In some cases the laches of the other party affects the liability of one who promises under a mistake of law, as, when one, through a mistake of the law, as an endorser of a bill of exchange, acknowledges himself under an obligation which the law will not impose on him, as payment after failure of the holder to give seasonable notice of protest for non-acceptance, he shall not be bound thereby; Warder v. Tucker, 7 Mass. 452, 5 Am. Dec. 62. See also 2 J. & W. 263; 3 B. & C. 280; the operation of the rule is adjusted to the equitable conditions existing as between the parties. "If a man has actually paid what the law would not have compelled him to pay, but what in equity and conscience he ought, he cannot recover it back; Mowatt v. Wright, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 355, 19 Am. Dec. 508; Brumagim v. Tillinghast, 18 Cal. 265, 79 Am. Dec. 176; Evans v. Gale, 17 N. H. 573, 43 Am. Dec. 614; Stewart v. Croshy, 50 Me. 130; but where money is paid under a mistake, which there was no ground to claim in conscience, the party may recover it back;" 1 Term 285; 15 Am. Rep. 171, 184, note.

"The maxim ignorantia legis neminem excusat is not universally applicable, but only when damages have been inflicted or crimes committed. It is true that the law will not permit the excuse of ignorance of the law to be pleaded for the purpose of exempting persons from damages for breach of contract, or from punishment for crimes committed by them, but on other occasions and for other purposes, it is evident that the fact that such ignorance existed will sometimes be recognized so as to affect a judicial decision;" Brock v. Weiss, 44 N. J. L. 244; "there is no maxim which says that for all intents and purposes a person must be taken to know the legal consequences of his acts;" L. R. 3 Q. B. 639; "it would be too much to impute knowledge of this rule of equity" (the doctrine of election); Westbury, Ld. Ch., in Spread v. Morgan, 11 H. L. Cas. 602.

According to Lord Westbury in Cooper v. Phipps, L. R. 2 H. L. 170, the word jus in the maxim ignorantia juris haud excusat is used in the sense of "general law, the law of the country," not in the sense of "a private right." The true meaning of that maxim is that parties cannot excuse themselves from liability from all civil or criminal consequences of their acts by alleging ignorance of the law, but there is no presumption that parties must be taken to know all the legal consequences of their acts, and especially where difficult questions of law, or of the practice of the court are involved; Lord Fitzgerald, Seaton v. Seaton, in L. R. 13 Ap. Cas. 78.

"There is no presumption in this country that every person knows the law; it would be contrary to common sense and reason if it were so." 2 C. B. 719, per Maule, J. The maxim is said to be "a slovenly way of stating the truth that ignorance of the law is not in general an excuse." Pollock, First Book of Jurispr. 160.

Ignorance was held no defence in the case of a woman convicted of illegal voting, who set up a defence that she believed she had a legal right to vote; U. S. v. Anthony, 11 Blatch. 200, Fed. Cas. No. 14,459; Hamilton v. People, 57 Barb. (N. Y.) 625; so in an indictment for adultery, where defendant erroneously believed she had been legally divorced; State v. Goodenow, 65 Me. 30; so in the conviction of a man for polygamy, who, knowing that his wife was living, married again in Utah, and set up the Mormon doctrine as a defence; Reynolds v. U. S., 98 U. S. 145, 25 L. Ed. 244. It was held not a defence that the defendant believed that, by reason of the absence of the first wife, the marriage was void and that he was released from it, as that was a mistake of law; Medrano v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. Rep. 214, 22 S. W. 684, 40 Am. St. Rep. 775.

If a man marries a woman he believes to be single, it is not adultery if she has a husband living; State v. Audette, 81 Vt. 400, 70 Atl. 833, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 527, 130 Am. St. Rep. 1061.

Belief that a minor was an adult is no defense; Cox v. Thompson, 96 Tex. 408, 73 S. W. 950; but it was held to be a defense in the case of a minor playing billiards; Stern v. State, 53 Ga. 229, 21 Am. Rep. 266.

A Jew may be indicted under a state law, for working on Sunday; Com. v. Has, 122 Mass. 40; so where one shoots another through criminal negligence, his ignorance of the law can form no basis for acquittal; People v. Kilvington, 4 Cal. Unrep. Cas. 512, 36 Pac. 13.

An elector's ignorance of a law disqualifying a candidate at an election does not make his vote a nullity; he must have knowledge both of the law and the fact which constitutes the disqualification; People v. Clute, 50 N. Y. 463, 10 Am. Rep. 508; L. R. 3 Q. B. 629.

A statute takes effect even in localities so remote as to render any knowledge of its existence impossible; Rhodes v. Sargent, 17 Cal. App. 58, 118 Pac. 727, citing Matthews v. Zane, 7 Wheat. (U. S.) 179, 5 L. Ed. 425.

Involuntary ignorance is that which does not proceed from choice, and which cannot be overcome by the use of any means of knowledge known to a person and within his power: as, the ignorance of a law which has not yet been promulgated.

Voluntary ignorance exists when a party might, by taking reasonable pains, have acquired the necessary knowledge. For example, every man might acquire a knowledge of the laws which have been promulgated; Doctor & Stud. 1, 46; Plowd. 343.

Eq. 187; Merlin, Répert.; Savigny, Droit Rom. App. VIII. 387; Storrs v. Barker, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 166, 12 Am. L. Rev. 471; 4 So. L. J. N. S. 153; 10 Am. Dec. 323; MISTAKE.

IGNORANTIO ELENCHI. An overlooking of the adversary's counter position in an argument.

IGNORE. To be ignorant of. Webster, Dict. To pass over as if not in existence. A grand jury is said to ignore a bill when they do not find the evidence such as to induce them to make a presentment. Brande.

IKBAL. Acceptance (of a bond, etc.). Wilson's Gloss. Ind.

IKBAL DAWA. Confession of judgment. Wilson's Gloss. Ind.

IKRAH. Compulsion; especially constraint exercised by one person over another.

er to do an illegal act, or to act contrary to his inclination. Wilson's Gloss. Ind.

IKRAR. Agreement, assent, or ratification. Wilson's Gloss. Ind.

IKRAR NAMA. A deed of assent and acknowledgment. Wilson's Gloss. Ind.

ILL. In Old Pleading. Bad; defective in law; null; naught; the opposite of good or valid.

ILL-FAME. A technical expression, which not only means bad character as generally understood, but applies to every person, whatever may be his conduct and character in life, who visits bawdy-houses, gaming-houses, and other places which are of ill-fame. Brockway v. People, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 558; Jennings v. Com., 17 Pick. (Mass.) 80; 1 Hagg. Eccl. 720, 767; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 44.

The common interpretation of the term "house of ill-fame" is as a mere synonym for "bawdy-house," having no reference to the fame of the place. See DISORDERLY HOUSE; HOUSE OF ILL-FAME.

ILLATA ET INVECTA. Things brought into the house for use by the tenants were so called, and were liable to the jus hypothecæ of Roman law, just as they are to the landlord's right of distress at common law.

ILLEGAL. Contrary to law; unlawful.

ILLEGAL CONDITIONS. All conditions that are impossible, or contrary to law, immoral, or repugnant to the nature of the transaction. See CONDITION.

ILLEGAL CONSIDERATION. See CONSIDERATION.

ILLEGAL CONTRACT. See CONSIDERATION; CONTRACT; UNLAWFUL AGREEMENT; VOID; VOIDABLE.

ILLEGAL TRADE. That which is carried on in violation of law, municipal or international. See ILICIT.

ILLEGALITY. That which is contrary to the principles of law, as contradistinguished from mere rules of procedure. It denotes a complete defect in the proceedings. Ex parte Schwartz, 2 Tex. App. 74; State v. Conover, 7 N. J. L. 203.

ILLEGITIMACY. The status of a child born of parents not legally married at the time of birth. In certain states and countries, a subsequent marriage of the parents legitimizes their children born before marriage. See LEGITIMIZATION.

ILLEGITIMATE. That which is contrary to law; it is usually applied to children born out of lawful wedlock. 25 Alb. L. J. 131. He may be made legitimate by parliament for all purposes; 4 Inst. 36. Under the English Workmen's Compensation Act he may be a dependent of his parent and vice versa. See BASTARD; LEGITIMACY.

ILLEVIABLE. A debt or duty that cannot or ought not to be levied. Nihil set upon a debt is a mark for illeviable.

ILLICENCIATUS. In Old English Law. Without license. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 5. 12.

ILICIT. What is unlawful; what is forbidden by the law.

This word is frequently used in policies of insurance, where the assured warrants against illicit trade. By illicit trade is understood that "which is made unlawful by the laws of the country to which the object is bound." It is distinguished from "contraband trade," though sometimes used interchangeably with it. 1 Pars. Mar. Ins. 614. The assured, having entered into this warranty, is required to do no act which will expose the vessel to be legally condemned; Dismukes v. Musgrove, 2 La. 337, 338. See INSURANCE; WARRANTY.

ILICITE. Unlawfully.

This word has a technical meaning, and is requisite in an indictment where the act charged is unlawful: as, in the case of a riot; 2 Hawk. Pl. Cr. 25, § 96.

ILICITUM COLLEGIUM. An unlawful corporation.

ILLINOIS. One of the states of the United States, being the twenty-eighth admitted to the Union.

Civil government was organized under the jurisdiction of the United States, by the ordinance of the Continental Congress, in 1787, the present state being then a part of the northwestern territory. In 1800 that territory was divided, and a territorial government was created in the Indiana territory, including this present state. In 1809 the territory of Illinois was created, and continued under the same ordinance and the laws of the Indiana territory. For a fuller statement of the territorial history, see OHIO.

In 1818 Illinois formed a constitution and was admitted into the Union. A second constitution went into operation April 1, 1848; and a third August 8, 1870. In 1913, an amendment provided for woman suffrage.

ILLITERATE. Unacquainted with letters.

When an ignorant man, unable to read, signs a deed or agreement, or makes his mark instead of a signature, and he alleges and can prove that it was falsely read to him, he is not bound by it, in consequence of the fraud. And the same effect would result if the deed or agreement were falsely read to a blind man who could have read it before he lost his sight, or to a foreigner who did not understand the language. For a plea of "laymen and unlettered," see Bauer v. Roth, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 85, 94, 95.

To induce an illiterate man, by false representations and false reading, to sign a note for a greater amount than that agreed on, is indictable as a cheat; Hill v. State, 1 Yerg. (Tenn.) 76, 24 Am. Dec. 441. See, generally, 2 Nel. Abr. 946; 2 Co. 3; 11 id. 28; F. Moore 148; 2 Bish. Cr. L. § 156.

ILLNESS. Pregnancy may create an illness within the meaning of 11 & 12 Vict. c.

42, § 17, so as to give the presiding judge discretionary power to admit in evidence upon a criminal trial the deposition of a witness, duly taken, who, owing to pregnancy is proved to be unable to travel; 3 Q. B. D. 426.

ILLOCABLE. Not capable of being let out or hired.

ILLUD (Lat.). That.

ILLUSION. A term loosely applied to both delusions and hallucinations, but more frequently to the latter (q. v.). By some it is restricted to the perception of objects in characters which they do not possess.

The patient is deceived by the false appearance of things, and his reason is not sufficiently active and powerful to correct the error; and this last particular is what distinguishes the sane from the insane. Illusions are not unfrequent in a state of health, but reason corrects the errors and dissipates them. A square tower seen from a distance may appear round, but on approaching it the error is corrected. A distant mountain may be taken for a cloud, but as we approach we discover the truth. To a person in the cabin of a vessel under sail, the shore appears to move; but reflection and a closer examination soon destroy this illusion. An insane individual is mistaken in the qualities, connections, and causes of the impressions he actually receives, and he forms wrong judgments as to his internal and external sensations; and his reason does not correct the error; 1 Beck. Med. Jur. 538; Tayl. Med. Jur. 683; Esquirol, Maladies Mentales, prem. partie, iii, tome 1, p. 202; Dict. des Sciences Médicales, Hallucination, tome 20, p. 64. See HALLUCINATION; INSANITY.

ILLUSORY APPOINTMENT. Such an appointment or disposition of property under a power as is merely nominal and not substantial.

Illusory appointments are void in equity; Sugd. Pow. 489; 1 Vern. 67; 1 Term 438, note; 4 Ves. 785. The rule at common law was, to require some allotment, however small, to each person, where the power was given to appoint to and among several persons; but the rule in equity requires a real substantial portion to each, a mere nominal allotment being deemed fraudulent and illusory; 4 Kent 342; Lines v. Darden, 5 Fla. 52; Lippincott v. Ridgway, 10 N. J. Eq. 164; Thrasher v. Ballard, 35 W. Va. 524, 14 S. E. 232; Degman v. Degman, 98 Ky. 717, 34 S. W. 523. The doctrine was repudiated in Cowles v. Brown, 4 Call (Va.) 477; Graeff v. De Turk, 44 Pa. 527.

In England equity jurisdiction on this point was ended by the statute 1 Wm. IV. c. 46, which declares that no appointment shall be impeached in equity, on the ground that it was unsubstantial, illusory, or nominal; but the entire exclusion of any object of a power not in terms exclusive was illegal, notwithstanding that act, until 1874, when a statute was passed, providing that, under a power to appoint among certain persons, appointments may be made excluding one or more objects of the power; Moz. & W. Dict.

IMAGINE. In English Law. In cases of treason the law makes it a crime to imagine the death of the king. In order to complete the offence, there must, however, be an overt act,—the terms compassing and imagining being synonymous. It has been justly remarked that the words to compass and imagine are too vague for a statute whose penalty affects the life of a subject. Barrington, Stat. 243. See FICTION.

IMBARGO. Obsolete for embargo (q. v.).

IMBASING OF MONEY. Mixing the species with an alloy below the standard of sterling, which the king by his prerogative may do. Toml.

IMBECILITY. In Medical Jurisprudence. A form of mental disease consisting in mental deficiency, either congenital or resulting from an obstacle to the development of the faculties supervening in infancy. Idiocy.

Generally, it is manifested both in the intellectual and moral faculties; but occasionally it is limited to the latter, the former being but little, if at all, below the ordinary standard. Hence it is distinguished into intellectual and moral. In the former there are seldom any of the repulsive features of idiocy, the head, face, limbs, and movements, being scarcely distinguishable, at first sight, from those of the race at large. The senses are not manifestly deficient nor the power of articulation; though the use of language may be very limited. The perceptive faculties exhibit some activity; and thus the more obvious qualities of things are observed and remembered. Simple industrial operations are well performed, and, generally, whatever requires but little intelligence is readily accomplished. For any process of reasoning, or any general observation or abstract ideas, imbeciles are totally incompetent. Of law, justice, morality, property, they have but a very imperfect notion. Some of the affective faculties are usually active, particularly those which lead to evil habits, thieving, incendiarism, drunkenness, homicide, assaults on women.

The kind of mental defect here mentioned is universal in imbecility, but it exists in different degrees in different individuals, some being hardly distinguishable, at first sight, from ordinary men of feeble endowments, while others encroach upon the ill-defined line which separates them from idiocy; Tayl. Jur. 689.

The various grades of imbecility, however interesting in a philosophical point of view, are not very closely considered by courts. They are governed in criminal cases solely by their tests of responsibility, and in civil cases by the amount of capacity in connection with the act in question, or the abstract question of soundness or unsoundness.

Touching the question of responsibility, the law makes no distinction between imbecility and insanity. See 1 C. & K. 129.

In civil cases, the effect of imbecility is differently estimated. In cases involving the validity of the contracts of imbecile persons, courts have declined to gauge the measure of their intellects, the only question with them being one of soundness or unsoundness, and "no distinction being made between important and common affairs, large or small property;" 4 Dane, Abr. 561. See Jackson v. King, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 207, 15 Am. Dec. 354. Courts of equity, also, have declined to invalidate the contracts of imbeciles, except on the ground of fraud; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 238. Of late years, however, courts have been governed by other considerations. If the contract were for necessities, or showed no mark of fraud or unfair advantage, or if the other party, acting in good faith and ignorant of the other's mental infirmity, cannot be put in statu quo, the contract has been held to be valid; Chitty, Contr. 112; Story, Contr. § 27; Poll. Contr. 88; 4 Exch. 17.

The same principles have governed the courts in cases involving the validity of the marriage contract. If suitable to the condition and circumstances of the party, and manifestly tending to his benefit, it has been confirmed, notwithstanding a considerable degree of incompetency. If, on the other hand, it has been procured by improper influences, manifestly for the advantage of the other party, it has been invalidated; 1 Hagg. 355; Ray, Med. Jur. 100. The law has always shown more favor to the wills of imbeciles than to their contracts. "If a man be of a mean understanding, neither of the wise sort nor of the foolish, but indifferent, as it were, betwixt a wise man and a fool,—yea, though he rather inclined to the foolish sort, so that for his dull capacity he might worthily be called grossum caput, a dull pate, or a dunce,—such a one is not prohibited to make a testament;" Swinb. Wills, part 2, s. 4. Whether the testament be established or not, depends upon the circumstances of the case; and the English ecclesiastical courts have always assumed a great deal of liberty in their construction of these circumstances. The general principle is that if the will exhibits a wise and prudent disposition of property, and is unquestionably the will of the testator, and not another's, it should be established, in the face of no inconsiderable deficiency; 1 Hagg. 384. Very different views prevailed in a celebrated case in New York, Stewart's Ex'r v. Lispenard, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 256. The mental capacity must be equal to the act; and if that fact be established, and no unfair advantage have been taken of the mental deficiency, the will, the marriage, the contract, or whatever it may be, is held to be valid.

The term moral imbecility is applied to a class of persons who, without any considerable, or even appreciable, deficiency of intellect, seem to have never been endowed with the higher moral sentiments. They are unable to appreciate fully the distinctions of right and wrong, and, according to their several opportunities and tastes, they indulge in mischief as if by an instinct of their nature. To vice and crime they have an irresistible proclivity, though able to discourse on the beauties of virtue and the claims of moral obligation. While young, many of them manifest a cruel and quarrelsome disposition, which leads them to torture brutes and bully their companions. They set all law and admonition at defiance, and become a pest and a terror to the neighborhood. It is worthy of notice, because the fact throws much light on the nature of this condition, that a very large proportion of this class of persons labor under some organic defect. They are scrofulous, rickety, or epileptic, or, if not obviously suffering from such diseases themselves, they are born of parents who did. Their progenitors may have been insane, or eccentric, or highly nervous, and this morbid peculiarity has become, unquestionably, by hereditary transmission, the efficient cause of the moral defect under consideration. Thus lamentably constituted, wanting in one of the essential elements of moral responsibility, they are certainly not fit objects of punishment; for though they may recognize the distinctions of right and wrong in the abstract, yet they have been denied by nature those faculties which prompt men more happily endowed to pursue the one and avoid the other. In practice, however, they have been regarded with no favor by the courts; Ray, Med. Jur. 112. See INSANITY; DEMENTIA.

IMBLADARE. To plant or sow grain. Bract. fol. 176 b.

IMBRACERY. See EMBRACERY.

IMBROCUS. A gutter; a brook; a water passage. Cowell.

IMMATERIAL. Unnecessary or non-essential; impertinent (q. v.); indecisive.

IMMATERIAL AVERMENT. A statement of unnecessary particulars in connection with, and as descriptive of, what is material. Gould, Pl. c. 3, § 186. Such averments must, however, be proved as laid, it is said; Dougl. 665; though not if they may be struck out without striking out at the same time the cause of action, and when there is no variance; Gould, Pl. c. 3, § 188. See 1 Chitty, Pl. 282.

IMMATERIAL ISSUE. An issue taken upon some collateral matter, the decision of which will not settle the question in dispute between the parties in action. For example, if, in an action of debt on bond, conditioned for the payment of ten dollars and fifty cents at a certain day, the defendant pleads the payment of ten dollars according to the form of the condition, and the plaintiff, instead of demurring, tenders issue upon the payment, it is manifest that, whether this issue be found for the plaintiff or the defendant, it will remain equally uncertain whether the plaintiff is entitled to maintain his action, or not; for, in an action for the penalty of a bond, conditioned to pay a certain sum, the only material question is whether the exact sum were paid or not, and the question of payment of a part is a question quite beside the legal merits; Hob. 113; 5 Taunt. 386; Cro. Jac. 585; 2 Wms. Saund. 319 b. A repleader will be ordered when an immaterial issue is reached, either before or after verdict; 2 Wms. Saund. 319 b, note;

1 Rolle, Abr. 86; Cro. Jac. 585. See REPLEADER.

IMMEDIATE. As to time. Present; without delay or postponement. Strictly it implies not deferred by any lapse of time, but as usually employed, it is rather within reasonable time having due regard to the nature and circumstances of the case. This word and immediately (q. v.) are of no very definite signification and are much dependent on the context. In legal proceedings they do not impart the exclusion of any interval of time; Howell v. Gaddis, 31 N. J. L. 313. As to immediate delivery, see Neldon v. Smith, 36 N. J. L. 148. "Immediate" notice may be construed as meaning "reasonable notice;" McFarland v. Acc. Ass'n, 124 Mo. 204, 27 S. W. 436.

As to place, etc. Not separated by any intervening space, cause, right, object, or relation. See 7 Mann. & G. 493; Trask v. Ins. Co., 29 Pa. 198, 72 Am. Dec. 622; Richardson v. End, 43 Wis. 316; Hepler v. State, id. 479; IMMEDIATELY; FORTHWITH.

As to descent. Judge Story says it may be mediate or immediate with respect to the estate or right, or with respect to the pedigree or degrees of consanguinity; Levy v. McCartee, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 112, 8 L. Ed. 334.

IMMEDIATELY. The words "forthwith" and "immediately" have the same meaning. They are stronger than the expression "within a reasonable time," and imply prompt, vigorous action, without any delay, and whether there has been such action is a question of fact, having regard to the circumstances of the particular case; 4 Q. B. Div. 471.

IMMEMORIAL POSSESSION. In Louisiana. Possession of which no man living has seen the beginning, and the existence of which he has learned from his elders. Orleans Nav. Co. v. Mayor, 2 Mart. (O. S. La.) 214, 3 Toullier p. 410; Poth. Contr. de Société, n. 244.

IMMEMORIAL USAGE. Prescription; custom which has existed so long that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary. See PRESCRIPTION.

IMMEUBLES. In French Law. Immovables. They derive their character as such (1) from their own nature as lands, etc.; (2) from their destination, as animals or implements furnished to a tenant by his landlord; and (3) by the object to which they are annexed.

IMMIGRATION LAWS. The act of March 3, 1903, was comprehensive and superseded almost entirely the previous legislation, and that act was in turn superseded by the act of February 20, 1907. It provided for a tax of four dollars for every alien entering the United States, which is to go into an "Immigrant Fund" to defray the expense of regulating immigration, etc. This tax is a lien upon the vessel or other means of carriage. It is not levied upon aliens who shall enter after an uninterrupted residence of at least one year immediately preceding such entering in Canada, Cuba, Newfoundland or Mexico, nor upon otherwise admissible residents of any United States possession, nor aliens in transit, nor aliens passing from one part of the United States to another through foreign contiguous territory.

Among the classes excluded are idiots, imbeciles, epileptics, feeble minded, and insane persons who have been insane within five years previous or who have had two or more attacks of insanity at any time previously, paupers and those likely to become a public charge, professional beggars, those afflicted with tuberculosis or with a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease, mentally or physically defective persons, such defect being of a nature which may affect their ability to earn a living, those convicted of a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude or admitting that they had committed the same, persons admitting their belief in polygamy, anarchists, prostitutes or women or girls coming here for the purpose of prostitution or any other immoral purpose, those supported in whole or in part by the proceeds of prostitution, those who procure or attempt to bring in prostitutes or women for such purposes, contract laborers, persons who within a year have been deported as having been induced to migrate as above, those whose ticket or passage is paid for by money of another or who are assisted to come here, children under sixteen unaccompanied by one or both parents, at the discretion of the Secretary, but not persons convicted of an offense purely political, not involving moral turpitude, nor aliens passing through the country to foreign contiguous territory, nor skilled labor if such kind unemployed cannot be found in this country. Contract labor does not include professional actors, artists, lecturers, singers, ministers, professors and those belonging to any recognized learned profession, or personal or domestic servants. Section 3 applies to the importation of aliens for prostitution, etc. Section 4 provides that no corporation, etc., shall prepay the transportation or in any other way assist in the importation of contract laborers unless belonging to the above excepted classes. By section 6, encouraging immigration by advertising abroad with promise of employment is forbidden. Masters of vessels bringing in aliens are required to furnish to the immigration officer full lists of alien passengers. Amended March 26, 1910.

See ALIEN; CHINESE; DEPORTATION.

But where a Chinese person claimed citizenship and had been arbitrarily denied such a hearing as the exclusion acts demand, it was held that a writ of habeas corpus should be granted by the federal courts; Chin Yow

v. U. S., 208 U. S. 8, 28 Sup. Ct. 201, 52 L. Ed. 369. See LEGISLATIVE POWER.

IMMISCERE (Lat.). In Civil Law. To put or let into, as a beam into a wall. Calv. Lex.

In Old English Law. To turn cattle out on a common. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 20, § 7.

IMMOBILIS (Lat.). Immovable. Immobilia, or res immobiles, immovables (q. v.).

IMMORAL CONSIDERATION. One contrary to good morals, and therefore invalid. Contracts based upon an immoral consideration are generally void; Poll. Con. 286. An agreement in consideration of future illicit cohabitation between the parties; 3 Burr. 1568; 1 B. & P. 340; an agreement for the value of libelous and immoral pictures; 4 Esp. 97; or for printing a libel; 2 Stark. 107; or for an immoral wager; Chitty, Contr. 156; cannot, therefore, be enforced. For whatever arises from an immoral or illegal consideration is void; quid turpi ex causa promissum est non valet; Inst. 3. 20. 24.

It is a general rule that whenever an agreement appears to be illegal, immoral, or against public policy, a court of justice leaves the parties where it finds them; when the agreement has been executed, the court will not rescind it; when executory, the court will not help the execution; Roll v. Raguet, 4 Ohio 419, 22 Am. Dec. 759; Jackson v. Babcock, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 419. See CONSIDERATION.

IMMORALITY. That which is contra bonos mores.

In England, it is not punishable, in some cases, at the common law, on account of the ecclesiastical jurisdictions: e. g. adultery. But except in cases belonging to the ecclesiastical courts, the court of king's bench is the custos morum, and may punish delicta contra bonos mores; 3 Burr. 1438; 1 W. Blackst. 94.

IMMOVABLES. In Civil Law. Property which, from its nature, destination, or the object to which it is applied, cannot move itself or be removed. Pothier, des Choses, § 1; Clef des Lois Rom. Immeubles.

IMMUNITY. An exemption from serving in an office, or performing duties which the law generally requires other citizens to perform. See Dig. lib. 50. t. 6; 1 Chitty, Cr. Law 821; Ward v. Morris, 4 H. & M'H. (Md.) 341. See INCRIMINATION.

IMPAIRING THE OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS. By article First, Section 10, Clause 1, of the Constitution of the United States "No state shall pass . . . any bill of attainder, ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts."

There has been much discussion as to the reasons which led the Convention of 1787 to insert this clause in the constitution. They seem to have intended that it should prevent the states from passing stay laws and bankrupt laws (Bradley, J., Union Pac. R. Co. v. U. S., 99 U. S. 745, 25 L. Ed. 496), and other acts which would interfere with private contracts or engagements previously formed. Stay laws to prevent the collection of debts had been passed in many of the states, especially in the South. In the Dartmouth College Case, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 518, 4 L. Ed. 629, Chief Justice Marshall said that he thought it more than possible that the convention had not intended by the clause to preserve the integrity of the charters of corporations. But in Pennsylvania the legislature had revoked the charter of the College of Philadelphia and virtually confiscated its property by taking it away from its trustees and giving it to another set of trustees who were of the political party which controlled the legislature. The same legislature had annulled the charter of the Bank of North America to which it was hostile, and would have succeeded in wrecking it, if the bank had not had another charter from congress, and soon after obtained one from the state of Delaware. These acts of spoliation alarmed all men of property, and James Wilson, a Pennsylvania member of the convention, who had been interested in both the bank and the college, was most active in procuring the adoption of the clause. Fisher's "Pennsylvania: Colony and Commonwealth" 375, 383; Fisher's "Evolution of the Constitution" 262; Shirley's "Dartmouth College Case" 213, 220; Alfred Russell's Address before Grafton and Coos Bar Association of New Hampshire, 1895 (reprinted Am. Law Rev. vol. 30, p. 321).

This article of the constitution forbids only the states to pass laws impairing the obligation of contracts, and there is no express provision prohibiting congress from passing such laws. It would seem, moreover, as some have argued, that there is an implied power in congress to pass such laws, for we find in the constitution a number of general prohibitions in which both congress and the states are prohibited from passing bills of attainder and ex post facto laws. The omission of the prohibition in one case and the expression of it in the other might seem to imply that the power to pass laws impairing the obligation of contracts remained in congress; and congress is expressly given power to pass bankrupt laws which impair the obligation of contracts between debtors and creditors; Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 122, 4 L. Ed. 529; and with respect to this provision the argument expressio unius est exclusio alterius may also be invoked as against a similar limitation of the power of congress. So under the decisions of the supreme court, congress may issue notes as legal tender in satisfaction of antecedently contracted debts. But the general exercise of such a power by congress has been said to be contrary to the first principles of the social compact and to every principle of sound legislation; Federalist No. 44. Bradley, J., in a dissenting opinion in the Sinking-Fund Cases (Union Pac. R. Co. v. U. S.) 99 U. S. 746, 25 L. Ed. 496, took the same view of the origin of this provision, and said further that it fully explained the fact that no such inhibition was laid upon the national legislature, and he was further of opinion that the absence of such inhibition furnished no ground of argument in favor of the proposition that congress can pass arbitrary and despotic laws with regard to contracts any more than with regard to any other subject-matter of legislation.

As to the power of congress to impair the obligation of a contract, see Hepburn v. Griswold, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 603, 622, 19 L. Ed. 513; Knox v. Lee, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 457, 20 L. Ed. 287 (and specially Clarkson N. Potter, arguendo at p. 501, and Strong, J., at p. 547); Juilliard v. Greenman, 110 U. S. 421, 4 Sup. Ct. 122, 28 L. Ed. 204.

The provision of the constitution is, however, not applicable to laws enacted by the states before the first Wednesday in March, 1789; Owings v. Speed, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 420, 5 L. Ed. 124.

Contracts are made subject to the exercise of the rightful authority of the government and no obligation of a contract can defeat lawful government authority; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mottley, 219 U. S. 467, 31 Sup. Ct. 265, 55 L. Ed. 297, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 671, where a contract to issue passes to a person for life could not be enforced after the passage of an act of congress forbidding the issue of passes by any common carrier engaged in interstate commerce. An act of congress rendering contracts in regard to interstate commerce invalid does not infringe the constitutional liberty of the citizen to make contracts; and an act otherwise constitutional is not unconstitutional under the Vth Amendment, as taking private property without compensation because it invalidates contracts between individuals which conflict with the public policy declared in the act; id.

In the application of this constitutional prohibition there is an exception to the general rule that the United States supreme court will accept the construction placed by a state court upon its own constitution, when the question of contract or no contract is presented in the construction of a state statute; in such case there is imposed upon the United States supreme court the duty of exercising an independent judgment upon the question whether there is a contract, though it will lean towards the interpretation of the state court; Stearns v. Minnesota, 179 U. S. 223, 232, 21 Sup. Ct. 73, 45 L. Ed. 162; Great Southern Fire Proof Hotel Co. v. Jones, 193 U. S. 532, 24 Sup. Ct. 576, 48 L. Ed. 778.

Where there is no contract protected by the impairment clause, whether a statutory exemption has been repealed by a subsequent statute is a question of state law in which the decisions of the highest court of the state are binding; and it is only where an irrepealable contract exists that it is the duty of the federal court to decide for itself whether a subsequent act impairs the obligation of such contract; Wicomico County v. Bancroft, 203 U. S. 112, 27 Sup. Ct. 21, 51 L. Ed. 112, where it was held that a proviso in a state statute, taxing all property of railroads, that no irrepealable contract of exemption shall be affected, must be construed as expressing the legislative intent to repeal all exemptions not protected by binding contracts beyond legislative control.

Where the highest court of a state decided that bonds were invalid and the decision is in conformity with prior decisions, the bonds are not protected, having been illegally issued; Zane v. Hamilton County, 189 U. S. 370, 23 Sup. Ct. 538, 47 L. Ed. 858.

Contracts made after a law is passed are made subject to it; Abilene Nat. Bank v. Dolley, 228 U. S. 1, 33 Sup. Ct. 409, 57 L. Ed. 707; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Cram, 228 U. S. 70, 33 Sup. Ct. 437, 57 L. Ed. 734.

All contracts, whether executed or executory, express or implied, are within the prohibition; New Jersey v. Wilson, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 164, 3 L. Ed. 303; Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 1, 5 L. Ed. 547; Louisiana v. New Orleans, 109 U. S. 285, 3 Sup. Ct. 211, 27 L. Ed. 936; State Tax on Foreign-Held Bonds, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 300, 21 L. Ed. 179; and also judgments founded upon contracts; Wolff v. New Orleans, 103 U. S. 358, 26 L. Ed. 395; Warren v. Stoddart, 105 U. S. 228, 26 L. Ed. 1117; Ralls County v. U. S., 105 U. S. 733, 26 L. Ed. 957.

A violation of the prohibition may be by city ordinance; Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. City of Memphis, 198 Fed. 956, citing New Orleans Waterworks Co. v. Refining Co., 125 U. S. 18, 31, 8 Sup. Ct. 711, 31 L. Ed. 607; St. Paul Gaslight Co. v. St. Paul, 181 U. S. 142, 21 Sup. Ct. 575, 45 L. Ed. 788; or any action of a municipality exercising delegated legislative power; Grand Trunk W. R. Co. v. City of South Bend, 227 U. S. 544, 33 Sup. Ct. 303, 57 L. Ed. 633; or to the action of any state instrumentality exercising such delegated authority as a railroad commission; Grand Trunk Western R. Co. v. R. R. Commission, 221 U. S. 400, 31 Sup. Ct. 537, 55 L. Ed. 786; Prentiss v. Atlantic Coast Line Co., 211 U. S. 210, 29 Sup. Ct. 67, 53 L. Ed. 150; to land grants of a state; McGehee v. Mathis, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 143, 18 L. Ed. 314; or by state legislature; Terret v. Taylor, 9 Cra. (U. S.) 43, 3 L. Ed. 650; Pawlet v. Clark, 9 Cra. (U. S.) 292, 3 L. Ed. 735; Franklin County Grammar School v. Bailey, 62 Vt. 467, 20 Atl. 820, 10 L. R. A. 405; to a law which is in its nature a contract under which absolute rights have vested; Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cra. (U. S.) 87, 3 L. Ed. 162.

A state law annulling private conveyances is also within the prohibition, as are laws repealing grants and corporate franchises; Bailey v. Mayor, etc., of City of New York, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 531, 38 Am. Dec. 669; Lowry v. Francis, 2 Verg. (Tenn.) 534; Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 656, 4 L. Ed. 629.

A state constitution is not a contract, the obligation of which the state is prohibited by the federal constitution from impairing; Church v. Kelsey, 121 U. S. 282, 7 Sup. Ct. 897, 30 L. Ed. 960; nor is a judgment for a tort; Louisiana v. New Orleans, 109 U. S. 285, 3 Sup. Ct. 211, 27 L. Ed. 936; Freeland v. Williams, 131 U. S. 405, 9 Sup. Ct. 763, 33 L. Ed. 193. But the prohibition applies to state constitutions as well as to the laws of a state; Mississippi & M. R. Co. v. McClure, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 511, 19 L. Ed. 997; New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. Light & Heat Co., 115 U. S. 650, 6 Sup. Ct. 252, 29 L. Ed. 516; Boyd v. U. S., 116 U. S. 631, 6 Sup. Ct. 524, 29 L. Ed. 746; Davis v. Gray, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 203, 21 L. Ed. 447; Fisk v. Jefferson, 116 U. S. 131, 6 Sup. Ct. 329, 29 L. Ed. 587.

Contracts to which a state is a party are within the protection of this constitutional prohibition; Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cra. (U. S.) 87, 3 L. Ed. 162; and a provision in a charter of a toll bridge company that it shall not be lawful for any person to erect another bridge within a specified distance of the bridge authorized by said charter constitutes a contract which binds the state not to authorize the construction of such other bridge; The Binghamton Bridge, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 51, 18 L. Ed. 137. A contract between a state and a party, whereby he is to perform certain duties for a specified period for a stipulated compensation, is within the protection of the constitution; Hall v. Wisconsin, 103 U. S. 5, 26 L. Ed. 302. It being held that where a state descends from the plane of its sovereignty, it is regarded, pro hac vice, as a private person itself and is bound accordingly.

A state is bound by its grants of franchises and exclusive privileges, such as the privilege of supplying a municipality with water; New Orleans Water Works Co. v. Rivers, 115 U. S. 674, 6 Sup. Ct. 273, 29 L. Ed. 525; or gas; New Orleans Gas Co. v. Light Co., 115 U. S. 650, 6 Sup. Ct. 252, 29 L. Ed. 516; Louisville Gas Co. v. Gas Co., 115 U. S. 683, 6 Sup. Ct. 265, 29 L. Ed. 510. A state is bound by the issue of bonds and coupons under the terms of an act which provided that such coupons should be receivable for taxes, etc., and a subsequent act which forbids the receipt of these coupons for taxes is a violation of the contract and void as against coupon-holders; Polindexter v. Greenhow, 114 U. S. 270, 5 Sup. Ct. 903, 962, 29 L. Ed. 185; Royall v. Virginia, 116 U. S. 572, 6 Sup. Ct. 510, 29 L. Ed. 735.

A state, when it borrows money and promises to pay it with interest, cannot, by its own ordinance, relieve itself from performing to the letter all that it has expressly promised to its creditors; Murray v. Charleston, 96 U. S. 433, 24 L. Ed. 760. But with regard to grants, this clause of the constitution was not intended to control the exercise of the ordinary functions of government. It was not intended to apply to public property, to the discharge of public duties, to the exercise or possession of public rights, or to any changes or qualifications in these which the legislature of a state may at any time deem expedient; Knoup v. Bank, 1 Ohio St. 603, 609; Bank of Toledo v. Bond, id. 657; President, etc., of Michigan State Bank v. Hastings, 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 225, 41 Am. Dec. 549; Town of East Hartford v. Bridge Co., 17 Conn. 79.

The prohibition does not apply to judicial decisions or the acts of state tribunals or officers under statutes in force at the time of making the contract; Hanford v. Davies, 163 U. S. 273, 16 Sup. Ct. 1051, 41 L. Ed. 157, citing Wood v. Brady, 150 U. S. 18, 14 Sup. Ct. 6, 37 L. Ed. 981; Central Land Co. v. Laidley, 159 U. S. 103, 16 Sup. Ct. 80, 40 L. Ed. 91.

The constitutional guaranty applies only to legislation subsequent to the contract and not to a state law in force at its inception; Denny v. Bennett, 128 U. S. 489, 9 Sup. Ct. 134, 32 L. Ed. 491; Powell v. City of Madison, 107 Ind. 106, 8 N. E. 31; if valid when made, under the constitution and laws of the state, as then declared by its highest court, it cannot subsequently be impaired by any legislative or judicial action. The supreme court has jurisdiction only when the legislation was subsequent and effect has been given to it by the judgment sought to be reviewed; Louisiana v. New Orleans, 215 U. S. 170, 30 Sup. Ct. 40, 54 L. Ed. 144. This was the principle settled by the much discussed case of Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 175, 17 L. Ed. 520, affirmed and enforced in Havemeyer v. Iowa County, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 294, 18 L. Ed. 38, where it was said that "the rule was established upon the most careful consideration."

What has come to be known as the doctrine of that case was first declared by Taney, C. J., in Ohio Life Ins. & Trust Co. v. Debolt, 16 How. (U. S.) 416, 14 L. Ed. 997: "The sound and the true rule is that, if the contract, when made, was valid by the laws of the state, as then expounded by all the departments of its government and administered in its courts of justice its validity and obligation cannot be impaired by any subsequent act of the legislature of the state, or decision of its courts, altering the construction of the law."

That case was decided in 1853. In 1864, the case of Gelpcke v. Dubuque, which presented the precise situation described by Taney, C. J., was decided. Municipal bonds had been issued in aid of railroads under acts which had been declared constitutional in seven decisions of the state supreme court, on the faith of which the bonds were purchased; a later decision of the same court overruled the previous ones and declared the act unconstitutional, and, upon a case originating in a federal court, the supreme court declined to follow the Iowa decision and the bonds were held valid, upon the ground that a contrary decision would impair the obligation of the contract; Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 175, 17 L. Ed. 520.

This decision, the subject of much discussion both in the courts and by legal writers, has not been construed to have the effect of treating a judicial decision in the state court as "law" within the constitutional inhibition. The doctrine of the case applies only where the state decision, which is considered as impairing the obligation of the contract, is based on the construction of a statute or a determination as to its constitutionality; Ray v. Gas Co., 138 Pa. 591, 20 Atl. 1065, 12 L. R. A. 290, 21 Am. St. Rep. 922; Boyd v. Alabama, 94 U. S. 645, 24 L. Ed. 302; Ralls County v. Douglass, 105 U. S. 728, 26 L. Ed. 957; Hill v. Hite, 85 Fed. 268, 29 C. C. A. 549, and note. The distinction is thus stated: "After a statute has been settled by judicial construction, the construction becomes, so far as contract rights acquired under it are concerned, as much a part of the statute as the text itself, and a change of decisions is, to all intents and purposes, the same in its effect on contracts as an amendment of the law by means of a legislative enactment;" Douglass v. County of Pike, 101 U. S. 677, 25 L. Ed. 968.

Again in Central Land Co. v. Laidley, 159 U. S. 103, 16 Sup. Ct. 80, 40 L. Ed. 91, it was said: "In order to come within the provision of the constitution . . . not only must the obligation of a contract have been impaired, but it must have been impaired by some act of the legislative power of the state, and not by a decision of its judicial department only." This case decided that the supreme court would not review on writ of error the decision of a state court on the form of acknowledgment of a married woman's deed of real estate under the code of that state, which was a re-enactment of the Virginia code. The case clearly expounds what had become well-settled principles, which have been frequently repeated, and it was restated in National Mutual Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Brahan, 193 U. S. 635, 24 Sup. Ct. 532, 48 L. Ed. 823.

The judgment of a state court declaring a contract invalid does not impair the obligation of the contract, unless such judgment gives effect to some provision of the state constitution, or some act which is claimed by the unsuccessful party to impair the obligation of the contract in question; Lehigh

Water Co. v. Easton, 121 U. S. 388, 7 Sup. Ct. 916, 30 L. Ed. 1059. In such cases, the supreme court of the United States does not accept as conclusive the judgment of the state court as to the non-impairment of the contract; Wright v. Nagle, 101 U. S. 791, 25 L. Ed. 921; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Palmes, 109 U. S. 244, 3 Sup. Ct. 193, 27 L. Ed. 922.

Where the supreme court of the state had affirmed the constitutional validity of a legislative act to authorize contracts for services to the public, and a contract had been entered into and services performed, the contractor was entitled to receive his compensation notwithstanding a subsequent decision that the act was unconstitutional; Thomas v. State, 76 Ohio St. 341, 81 N. E. 437, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1112, 118 Am. St. Rep. 884. The decision is based largely on Douglas v. Pike County, 101 U. S. 677, 25 L. Ed. 968; which in Central Land Co. v. Laidley, 159 U. S. 103, 16 Sup. Ct. 80, 40 L. Ed. 91, is said to have been based upon the doctrine that in actions originating in the federal courts the United States supreme court will, or at least, may adhere to the earlier decisions of the state court and refuse to adopt later ones when contracts have been entered into before the change and relying upon the former.

It is sometimes said that the doctrine thus apparently settled was departed from in what were known as the Elevated Railway Cases of New York, which came before the supreme court in Muhlker v. R. Co., 197 U. S. 544, 25 Sup. Ct. 522, 49 L. Ed. 872; and a subsequent case in which the Muhlker Case seemed to be modified, Sauer v. New York, 206 U. S. 536, 27 Sup. Ct. 686, 51 L. Ed. 1176.

A careful examination of these cases, however, seems to lead to the conclusion that the court has not intended to alter or seriously modify the effect of the Laidley Case, but that where the court apparently treated the decision of the state court as impairing the obligation of the contract, it did, in fact, treat the last decision of the court of last resort as a construction of the statute, which made that, and not the decision itself, an impairment of the contract. This view is confirmed by the language of McKenna, J., who delivered the opinion of the court in the Muhlker Case, where in his preliminary statement, he says, "the case is therefore presented to us as to the effect of the deed . . . as constituting a contract, and the effect of the act of 1892 as an impairment of that contract." In the Sauer Case, Moody, J., who delivered the opinion of the court, said that "when the court of appeals has once interpreted the contract existing between the land-owner and the city, that interpretation becomes a part of the contract upon which one acquiring land may rely; and that any subsequent change of it to his injury impairs the obligation of the contract." Presumably, as the question before the court was whether the statute had impaired the obligation of the contract, he must be understood as meaning any subsequent change by statute as interpreted by the court. But it is not left to inference what was actually meant by the court, since Justice Moody expressly states the question as a complaint, "that the law which authorized the construction of the viaduct, as interpreted by the court of appeals of New York impaired the obligation of the contract." This view of the effect of the Muhlker and Sauer Cases, as not to be considered as in any way conflicting with the Laidley Case, is also the conclusion reached in an instructive note on the subject in 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 500.

The supreme court has quite uniformly in other cases, as in the Laidley Case, refused to allow a writ of error to the state court, to reverse its decision, as impairing the obligation of a contract, on the general ground that the decision was not the "law" of the state, within the constitutional prohibition; Mississippi & M. R. Co. v. Rock, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 177, 18 L. Ed. 381; Lehigh Water Co. v. Easton, 121 U. S. 388, 7 Sup. Ct. 916, 30 L. Ed. 1059; New Orleans Waterworks Co. v. Refining Co., 125 U. S. 18, 8 Sup. Ct. 741, 31 L. Ed. 607; Central Land Co. v. Laidley, 159 U. S. 103, 16 Sup. Ct. 80, 40 L. Ed. 91; Bacon v. Texas, 163 U. S. 207, 16 Sup. Ct. 1023, 41 L. Ed. 132; Weber v. Rogan, 188 U. S. 10, 23 Sup. Ct. 263, 47 L. Ed. 363. In most if not all of the cases cited, the ground of dismissing the writ of error was that the decision did not of itself give jurisdiction, but only its construction of a state statute, as was also the case in Consumers' Co. v. Hatch, 224 U. S. 148, 32 Sup. Ct. 465, 56 L. Ed. 703. This construction of the term "laws" agrees with that of Story, J., in Swift v. Tyson, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 1, 10 L. Ed. 865, where he was considering the meaning of the term in section 34 of the Judiciary Act. In a dissenting opinion in Kuhn v. Coal Co., 215 U. S. 349, 371, 30 Sup. Ct. 140, 54 L. Ed. 228, Holmes, J., says: "Whether Swift v. Tyson can be reconciled with Gelpcke v. Dubuque, I do not care to inquire. I assume both cases to represent settled doctrines, whether reconciled or not."

Numerous decisions confirm the view above expressed as to the precise effect of the rule of Gelpcke v. Dubuque, as understood by the supreme court, but only a few can be here referred to. It was said that the impairment clause cannot be invoked against what is merely a change of decision in the state court, but only by reason of a statute enacted subsequently to the alleged contract which has been upheld or effect given to it by the state court; National Mut. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Brahan, 193 U. S. 635, 24 Sup. Ct. 532, 48 L. Ed. 823. It is "definitely settled that the contract can only be impaired . . . by some subsequent statute of the state which has been upheld or effect given it by the state court." McCullough v. Virginia, 172 U. S. 102, 116, 19 Sup. Ct. 134, 43 L. Ed. 382, citing the prior cases. "If the judgment of the state court gives no effect to the subsequent law of the state, and the state court decides the case upon grounds independent of that law," there is no federal case of impairment of contract; id.

"In order to come within the provision of the constitution of the United States, which declares that no state shall pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts, not only must the obligation of a contract have been impaired, but it must have been impaired by a law of the state. The prohibition is aimed at the legislative power of the state, and not at the decisions of its courts, or the acts of administrative, or executive boards or officers, or the doings of corporations or individuals;" New Orleans Water Works Co. v. Refining Co., 125 U. S. 18, 8 Sup. Ct. 741, 31 L. Ed. 607, per Gray, J., quoted with approval in Gulf & S. I. R. Co. v. Hewes, 183 U. S. 66, 22 Sup. Ct. 26, 46 L. Ed. 86.

The law, as declared by a decision of the supreme court, when not a construction of a statute, does not enter into contracts made thereafter, and the subsequent reversal of the decision does not, therefore, impair the obligation of contracts; Lehigh Water Co. v. Easton, 121 U. S. 388, 7 Sup. Ct. 916, 30 L. Ed. 1059; Central Land Co. v. Laidley, 159 U. S. 103, 16 Sup. Ct. 80, 40 L. Ed. 91. See 2 Hare, Am. Const. L. 726.

"The constitutional inhibition applies only to the legislative enactments of the state and not to judicial decisions or the acts of state tribunals, or officers under statutes in force at the time of the making of the contract, the obligation of which is alleged to have been impaired." Hanford v. Davies, 163 U. S. 273, 16 Sup. Ct. 1051, 41 L. Ed. 157; nor is there federal jurisdiction on this ground when the validity of the statute, under which the contract was made, is admitted and the only question is as to its construction by the state court; Central Land Co. v. Laidley, 159 U. S. 103, 16 Sup. Ct. 80, 40 L. Ed. 91, both of which cases are approved in Weber v. Rogan, 188 U. S. 10, 23 Sup. Ct. 263, 47 L. Ed. 363.

There has been much discussion of the doctrine of Gelpcke v. Dubuque, of which a considerable part has been based upon an assumed inconsistency in the decisions of the United States supreme court in its treatment of the decisions of the state courts. This has led to difference of opinion as to the principle upon which the case was based. It is believed, however, that most, if not all, of this supposed inconsistency disappears under careful analysis of the decisions of the supreme court here cited. For general discussions of the subject, see White, "Gelpcke v.

Dubuque"; J. B. Thayer in 4 Harv. L. Rev. 311, and in 2 Cas. Cons. L. 1547; 14 Am. L. Rev. 211; 23 id. 190; 9 id. 381; 8 Harv. L. Rev. 328; Wambaugh, Study of Cases 78, 315; W. F. Dodd in 4 Ill. L. Rev. 155, 327; 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 860; 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1081.

One of the first applications of the doctrine of the impairment of contracts was to the charter of a corporation in the Dartmouth College Case; 4 Wheat. 518, 4 L. Ed. 629; which held that the charter was a contract the obligation of which could not afterwards be impaired by the legislature without the corporation's consent. Since then charters of incorporation which are granted for the private benefit or purposes of the corporation have always been held to be contracts between the legislature and the corporation, having for their consideration or liability the duties which the corporation assumes by accepting them; Cooley, Const. Lim. 279; Moraw. Priv. Corp. 1044; Hare, Am. Const. L. 421, 527; Hamilton Gas Light & Coke Co. v. Hamilton, 146 U. S. 258, 13 Sup. Ct. 90, 36 L. Ed. 963; and the doctrine is settled that charters of private corporations were within the constitutional guaranty; The Binghamton Bridge, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 51, 18 L. Ed. 137; Providence Bank v. Billings, 4 Pet. (U. S.) 514, 7 L. Ed. 939; Piqua Branch of State Bank v. Knoop, 16 How. (U. S.) 369, 14 L. Ed. 977.

To guard against the danger which the growth of great corporations, under the protection of this principle, has developed, the new constitutions of many of the states forbid the granting of corporate powers except subject to amendment and repeal. Provisions of this sort have become so general that the effect of the doctrine that a state cannot pass an act impairing the obligation of a contract has been largely modified. The decisions of the supreme court of the United States have also worked further modifications. The first was in the famous Charles River Bridge Case in 1837, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 420, 9 L. Ed. 773; where the court held that when the legislature had chartered a bridge company with the right to take tolls there was no implied contract that they would not charter another company to build a bridge alongside of the first which would in effect destroy the profits of the first by competition. The next modification was in the Granger Cases in 1876; 94 U. S. 113 to 187, 24 L. Ed. 77 to 97; which held that the regulation by the legislature of the rates to be charged by railroads and elevators was not an impairment of the obligation of a contract. See also Chicago & G. T. R. Co. v. Wellman, 143 U. S. 339, 12 Sup. Ct. 400, 36 L. Ed. 176. This doctrine having been carried to great lengths in allowing the legislature to regulate the rates to be charged, the supreme court has now modified the doctrine by declaring that the power to regulate is not a power to destroy, and that a legislature, under the pretence of regulating fares and freights, cannot require a railroad to carry persons and property without profit; Covington & L. Turnpike Road Co. v. Sandford, 164 U. S. 578, 593, 17 Sup. Ct. 198, 41 L. Ed. 560.

In most if not all of the states there is, when a charter of incorporation is granted, a reserved power, either in the constitution or charter, to revoke, alter or repeal, and there has been much controversy and contrariety of decision as to how far this saves a legislative amendment from conflict with the impairment clause as applied to corporations under the Dartmouth College Case and those following it. While the reserved power to amend charters is subject to reasonable limitation, it includes any amendment which does not defeat or substantially impair the object of the grant or vested rights; Berea College v. Kentucky, 211 U. S. 45, 29 Sup. Ct. 33, 53 L. Ed. 81; Polk v. Life Ass'n, 207 U. S. 310, 28 Sup. Ct. 65, 52 L. Ed. 222; Wright v. Ins. Co., 193 U. S. 657, 24 Sup. Ct. 549, 48 L. Ed. 832. Provisions of a general law of a state for the creation of a new corporation on the reorganization of a railroad by a purchaser at a foreclosure sale, do not constitute a contract within the impairment clause; Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Osborn, 193 U. S. 17, 24 Sup. Ct. 310, 48 L. Ed. 598, where it was said that the question was concluded by People v. Cook, 148 U. S. 397, 13 Sup. Ct. 645, 37 L. Ed. 498.

On the general subject of the power of the legislature under its right reserved to alter, amend, and repeal, see Worcester v. R. Co., 109 Mass. 103; Prentiss v. County Com'rs, 63 Me. 569; Rodemacher v. R. Co., 41 Ia. 297, 20 Am. Rep. 592; Gardner v. Ins. Co., 9 R. I. 194, 11 Am. Rep. 238; Cooley, Const. Lim. 279, note; Moraw. Priv. Corp. 1093; Hamilton Gas Light & Coke Co. v. Hamilton, 146 U. S. 258, 13 Sup. Ct. 90, 36 L. Ed. 963; Wheeling & B. Bridge Co. v. Bridge Co., 138 U. S. 287, 11 Sup. Ct. 301, 34 L. Ed. 967.

In general, only contracts are embraced in this provision which respect property or some object of value and confer rights which can be asserted in a court of justice. Debts are not property. A non-resident creditor of a state cannot be said to be, by virtue of a debt which it owes him, a holder of property within its limits; Murray v. Charleston, 96 U. S. 432, 24 L. Ed. 760.

The following acts have been held void as impairing the obligation of a contract: The insolvent act of 1812 of Pennsylvania, so far as it attempted to discharge the contract; Farmers' & M. Bank v. Smith, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 131, 5 L. Ed. 224; the insolvent law of Indiana affecting debts to citizens of other states; Cook v. Moffat, 5 How. (U. S.) 295, 12 L. Ed. 159; the act of Maryland of 1841 taxing stockholders in banks impaired the obligation in the act of 1821 organizing banks; Gordon v. Tax Court, 3 How. (U. S.) 133, 11 L. Ed. 529; the act of Ohio of 1851, taxing the state bank; Piqua Branch of State Bank v. Knoop, 16 How. (U. S.) 369, 14 L. Ed. 977; general tax law of North Carolina as applied to a railroad whose charter exempted it from taxation; Wilmington & W. R. v. Reid, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 264, 20 L. Ed. 568; the same in South Carolina; Humphrey v. Pegues, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 244, 21 L. Ed. 326; the same in New Jersey; New Jersey v. Yard, 95 U. S. 104, 24 L. Ed. 352; the same in Illinois as applied to the charter of a university; Northwestern University v. Illinois, 99 U. S. 309, 25 L. Ed. 387; the same in Louisiana applied to the charter of an asylum; St. Anna's Asylum v. New Orleans, 105 U. S. 362, 26 L. Ed. 1128; the act of Illinois of 1841 restricting mortgage sales impaired the obligation of a mortgage contract; Brouson v. Kinzie, 1 How. (U. S.) 311, 11 L. Ed. 143; the acts of Arkansas withholding assets of state banks from creditors impaired contracts with creditors; Curran v. Arkansas, 15 How. (U. S.) 304, 14 L. Ed. 705; the act of New York of 1855 authorizing a bridge to be built impaired the obligation in a charter to another company; The Binghamton Bridge, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 51, 18 L. Ed. 137; the act of Georgia of 1868 exempting property from execution impaired the obligation of a prior judgment; White v. Hart, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 646, 20 L. Ed. 685; the same in Georgia; Gunn v. Barry, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 610, 21 L. Ed. 212; the same in North Carolina; Edwards v. Kearzey, 96 U. S. 595, 24 L. Ed. 793; the act of Virginia of 1876 as to the deduction of taxes from coupons on state bonds impaired the obligation to the state bondholders under the funding act of 1871; Hartman v. Greenhow, 102 U. S. 672, 26 L. Ed. 271; the ordinance of New Orleans of 1881 authorizing a light company to furnish New Orleans with gas impaired the obligation to another company under another act; Thompson v. Allen County, 115 U. S. 550, 6 Sup. Ct. 140, 29 L. Ed. 472; so in Kentucky; Louisville Gas Co. v. Gas Co., 115 U. S. 683, 6 Sup. Ct. 265, 29 L. Ed. 510; the action of a city council, under statutory authority given to it to contract with street railway companies as to the use of streets and the length of time which the franchise was to continue; Cleveland Electric Ry. Co. v. Cleveland, 204 U. S. 116, 27 Sup. Ct. 202, 51 L. Ed. 399; an act providing that no execution sale shall be made unless the property brings two-thirds of its valuation according to the opinion of three householders; McCracken v. Hayward, 2 How. (U. S.) 608, 11 L. Ed. 397; the increase of assessment in a fraternal benefit association contrary to the condition of the application; Wright v. Knights of Maccabees, 196 N. Y. 391, 89 N.

E. 1078, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 423, 134 Am. St. Rep. 838; or to a provision of the constitution of the association; Dowdall v. Mut. Ben. Ass'n, 196 N. Y. 405, 89 N. E. 1075, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 417; a legislative act which postpones an existing valid mortgage lien and makes a subsequently created lien superior to it; National Bank of Commerce v. Jones, 18 Okl. 555, 91 Pac. 191, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 310 and note, 11 Ann. Cas. 1041, where the cases on this point are collected. The new lien created was one in favor of a livery stable keeper upon animals in his charge. In the note, which collects many authorities, the conclusion is reached that upon the weight of authority the lien for feeding and caring for domestic animals is not superior to a lien created by a valid prior recorded mortgage, though the mortgagee may be estopped by consent to the proceedings by which the other lien is obtained. A few cases are cited in the note which hold the agister's lien superior; and for specific cases on the subject which are very numerous the note cited may be referred to.

The adjudication of a federal court establishing a contract exempting from taxation, although based upon the judgment of a state court, is equally effectual as res judicata between the parties as though the federal court had reached its conclusion as upon an original question; and where the state law, under which taxes were levied, has been declared in a federal court to be unconstitutional, because impairing a contract which exempted from all taxation, the question is res judicata, as to the right to levy the tax under such law in any other year, although it may have been established by the highest court of that state that an adjudication concerning taxes for one year cannot be pleaded as an estoppel in a suit involving taxes in other years; Deposit Bank v. Frankfort, 191 U. S. 499, 24 Sup. Ct. 154, 48 L. Ed. 276.

A dedication of land as a common for the use and benefit of a town forever as shown on a plan and the acceptance thereof, and the sale of lots under the plan constitutes a contract, the obligation of which is protected by the contract laws of the federal constitution; City of Cincinnati v. R. Co., 223 U. S. 390, 32 Sup. Ct. 267, 56 L. Ed. 481.

Although a state law may impose different liabilities on foreign corporations and domestic ones, a statute providing that foreign corporations pay a fee based on their capital stock for the privilege of entering the state, constitutes a contract, and a subsequent statute imposing higher annual license fees on foreign corporations than on domestic corporations is void; nor can it be justified under the power to alter, amend and repeal; American Smelting & Refining Co. v. Colorado, 204 U. S. 103, 27 Sup. Ct. 198, 51 L. Ed. 393, 9 Ann. Cas. 978. A Canadian statute (as to life insurance) impairing the obligation of a contract will not be enforced in this country under comity; Simmelink v. Independent Order of Foresters, 71 Misc. 535, 130 N. Y. Supp. 803.

Acts held not to impair the obligation of a contract are a state law authorizing prohibition of sale of liquor on Sunday which did not violate the contract of the license to sell during the year; State v. Bott, 31 La. Ann. 663, 33 Am. Rep. 224; a state statute establishing method of fixing water rates did not impair the contract of a water company with municipality under a previous ordinance fixing different rates; Murray v. City of Pocatello, 226 U. S. 318, 33 Sup. Ct. 107, 57 L. Ed. 239 (but a state statute changing the mode of fixing the charges of a water company where the contract provided a mode of changing the charges from time to time impairs the obligation of contract; City of Pocatello v. Murray, 173 Fed. 382); a state statute requiring transfers of corporation stock to be registered in the office of the secretary of state (and it is valid as against purchasers of stock prior to the act); Henley v. Myers, 215 U. S. 373, 30 Sup. Ct. 148, 54 L. Ed. 240.

The Oklahoma bank guaranty act does not impair the obligation of a contract; Noble State Bank v. Haskell, 22 Okl. 48, 97 Pac. 590, affirmed in 219 U. S. 575, 31 Sup. Ct. 299, 55 L. Ed. 341 (see GUARANTY FUND); nor does an act forbidding extensions of life insurance business; Boswell v. Ins. Co., 193 N. Y. 465; nor one authorizing a change of the plan of business from the assessment plan to the legal reserve, flat insurance plan of old line insurance; Wright v. Ins. Co., 193 U. S. 657, 24 Sup. Ct. 549, 48 L. Ed. 832; nor acts requiring railroads to fence their tracks; People v. R. Co., 235 Ill. 374, 85 N. E. 606, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 915.

Where a railroad has a contract with a city, exempting it from municipal taxation, and a new state constitution is adopted, providing for the taxation of all corporate franchises, such railroad by consolidation with another road is brought within the new constitution and cannot claim the exemption; Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. City of Vicksburg, 209 U. S. 358, 28 Sup. Ct. 510, 52 L. Ed. 833. The erection of a viaduct upon a street was held to be a legitimate street improvement equivalent to a change of grade, and the owner of land abutting on the street was not entitled to damages for the impairment of access to his land and the lessening of the circulation of light and air over it; Sauer v. City of New York, 206 U. S. 536, 27 Sup. Ct. 686, 51 L. Ed. 1176 (see discussion of this case supra).

The contract exemption from taxation granted to the University of the South by its charter to continue so long as the land so exempted belongs to that institution is not impaired by taxing by legislative enactment the interests of the lessees of such land; Jetton v. University, 208 U. S. 489, 28 Sup. Ct. 375, 52 L. Ed. 584. The admission of an attorney is not a contract and an act prohibiting practice without taking the test oath is not invalid as impairing the obligation of a contract, though it was held ex post facto and void; In re Baxter, Fed. Cas. No. 1118.

Grants of exclusive privileges by state governments are subject to the exercise of the right of eminent domain by the state. The legislature has full authority to exercise an unlimited power as to the management, employment, and use of the eminent domain of the state, and to make all provisions necessary to the exercise of this right or power, but no authority whatever to give it away or take it out of the people directly or indirectly; Enfield Toll Bridge Co. v. R. Co., 17 Conn. 61, 42 Am. Dec. 716; Boston Water Power Co. v. R. R. Corp., 23 Pick. (Mass.) 360; Armington v. Town of Barnet, 15 Vt. 745, 40 Am. Dec. 705; Barber v. Andover, 8 N. H. 398; Tait's Ex'r v. Central Lunatic Asylum, 84 Va. 271. See EMINENT DOMAIN; FRANCHISES.

The power of one legislature to exempt altogether from taxation certain lands or property, and in this way to bind subsequent legislatures and take from the people one of their sovereign rights, may, where a consideration has been given, be considered now as distinctly settled by the supreme court of the United States, though not without remonstrance on the part of state courts; and the abandonment of this taxing power is not to be presumed where the deliberate purpose of the state does not appear; Capen v. Glover, 4 Mass. 305; Brewster v. Hough, 10 N. H. 138; Gordon v. Baltimore, 5 Gill (Md.) 231; Herrick v. Randolph, 13 Vt. 525; Deholt v. Ins. Co., 1 Ohio St. 563; New Jersey v. Wilson, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 164, 3 L. Ed. 303; Parker v. Redfield, 10 Conn. 495; Home of the Friendless v. Rouse, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 430, 19 L. Ed. 495; Pacific R. Co. v. Maguire, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 36, 22 L. Ed. 282. See New Orleans City & Lake R. Co. v. New Orleans, 143 U. S. 192, 12 Sup. Ct. 406, 36 L. Ed. 121; Louisville Water Co. v. Clark, 143 U. S. 1, 12 Sup. Ct. 346, 36 L. Ed. 55; Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Board of Levee Com'rs, 37 Fed. 24; State v. Butler, 86 Tenn. 614, 8 S. W. 586. The grant of the power of taxation by the legislature to a municipal corporation is not a contract, but is subject to revocation, modification, and control by the legislature; Williamson v. New Jersey, 130 U. S. 189, 9 Sup. Ct. 453, 32 L. Ed. 915.

In relation to marriage and divorce, it is now settled that this clause does not operate. The obligation of the marriage contract is created by the public law, subject to the public will, and to that of the parties; Maguire v. Maguire, 7 Dana (Ky.) 181; Maynard v. Hill, 125 U. S. 190, 8 Sup. Ct. 723, 31

L. Ed. 654; 1 Bish. Mar. & D. § 9. The prevailing doctrine seems to be that the legislature has complete control of the subject of granting divorces, unless restrained by the constitution of the state; but in a majority of the states the constitutions contain this prohibition; Cooley, Const. Lim. 133; and there the jurisdiction in matter of divorce is confined exclusively to the judicial tribunals, under the limitations prescribed by law; 2 Kent 106. But where the legislature has power to act, its reasons cannot be inquired into; marriage is not a contract but a status; the parties cannot have vested rights of property in a domestic relation; therefore the legislative act does not come under condemnation as depriving parties of rights contrary to the law of the land; Starr v. Pease, 8 Conn. 541; Cooley, Const. Lim. 112.

In relation to bankruptcy and insolvency, the constitution, art. 1, § 8, cl. 4, gives to congress the power of making a bankrupt law. But it seems to be settled that this power is not exclusive; because the several states may also make distinct bankrupt laws, —though they have generally been called insolvency laws,—which will only be superseded when congress chooses to exercise its power by passing a bankruptcy law; Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 122, 4 L. Ed. 529; Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 213, 6 L. Ed. 606; Blanchard v. Russell, 13 Mass. 1, 7 Am. Dec. 106. See supra.

A law does not impair the obligation of a contract if neither party is relieved thereby from performing anything which he obligated himself to do, otherwise the obligation is impaired whether the absolution of the party from performance is affected directly and expressly or indirectly; State v. Krahmer, 105 Minn. 422, 117 N. W. 780, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 157, where a statute was held valid providing that a lien upon land by the holder of a tax certificate should ripen into a fee simple title upon the expiration of the time for redemption without notice of the expiration of the time of redemption to be given which had been required within a specified time under a prior statute.

There is a broad distinction taken as to the obligation of a contract and the remedy upon it. The abolition of all remedies by a law operating in presenti is, of course, an impairing of the obligation of the contract. But it is admitted that the legislature may vary the nature and extent of remedies, as well as the times and modes in which these remedies may be pursued, and bar suits not brought within such times as may be prescribed. A reasonable time within which rights are to be enforced must be given by laws which bar certain suits; Call v. Hagger, 8 Mass. 430; Blackford v. Peltier, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 36; Beal v. Nason, 14 Me. 344; Griffin v. McKenzie, 7 Ga. 163, 50 Am.

Dec. 389; West Feliciana R. Co. v. Stockett, 13 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 395; Pearce's Heirs v. Patton, 7 B. Monr. (Ky.) 162, 45 Am. Dec. 61; Duvoll v. Wilson, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 489.

The meaning of obligation is important with regard to the distinction taken between the laws existing at the time the contract is entered into and those which are enacted afterwards. The former are said to have been in contemplation of the parties, and so far entered into their contract. The latter are said to impair, provided they affect the contract at all. See cases infra.

The term "obligation of the contract" includes the means which are legally afforded for its enforcement; Louisiana v. St. Martin's Parish, 111 U. S. 716, 4 Sup. Ct. 648, 28 L. Ed. 574; both the remedy and the validity of the contract are within the constitutional guaranty; Walker v. Whitehead, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 314, 21 L. Ed. 357; Seaine v. Inhabitants of Belleville, 39 N. J. L. 526; Davis v. Rupe, 114 Ind. 588, 17 N. E. 163; Smith v. Morse, 2 Cal. 524; Walker v. Whitehead, 43 Ga. 538. The remedies are essential parts of the contract and such as exist at the time the debt is incurred must be preserved in substance; Rees v. City of Watertown, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 107, 22 L. Ed. 72; and a repeal or change of remedies which does this is valid; Harrison v. Paper Co., 140 Fed. 385, 72 C. C. A. 405, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 954, 5 Ann. Cas. 314, where the cases are collected; but any subsequent law which so affects the remedy as substantially to impair and lessen the value of the contract is void; Edwards v. Kearzey, 96 U. S. 595, 607, 24 L. Ed. 793, quoted in Seibert v. Lewis, 122 U. S. 284, 7 Sup. Ct. 1190, 30 L. Ed. 1161. This includes all cases where the substitution of a different remedy is of one in substance more difficult, more burdensome, or uncertain than that which is repealed; one which appreciably lessens the value of the contract; City of Cleveland v. U. S., 166 Fed. 677, 93 C. C. A. 274. See an extended note on the remedy as part of the obligation of the contract, 1 L. R. A. 356.

The remedy may be altered or modified, or a new remedy provided, though possibly less convenient or speedy, and the remedy may be changed from equity to law; Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 122, 4 L. Ed. 529; Cairo & F. R. Co. v. Hecht, 95 U. S. 168, 24 L. Ed. 423; Tennessee v. Sneed, 96 U. S. 69, 24 L. Ed. 610; Penrose v. Canal Co., 56 Pa. 46, 93 Am. Dec. 778; and if the modification or substitute leaves a sufficient remedy, or otherwise provides a sufficient one it will be valid; Memphis v. U. S., 97 U. S. 293, 24 L. Ed. 920; Savings Inst. v. Makin, 23 Me. 360; In re Trustees of New York Protestant Episcopal Public School, 31 N. Y. 574. A reasonable change in the mode of enforcement is not a violation of the obligation of the contract; Mason v. Haile, 12

Wheat. (U. S.) 370, 6 L. Ed. 660; Richardson v. Akin, 87 Ill. 141; Morse v. Gould, 11 N. Y. 281, 62 Am. Dec. 103. A statute may change the remedy if it enlarges it; Waggoner v. Flack, 188 U. S. 595, 23 Sup. Ct. 345, 47 L. Ed. 609; and one providing for the condemnation of minority shares of stock in corporations where the majority of shares are held by another railroad corporation, if public interest demands, impairs neither the contract rights of one corporation under a lease to the other, or those of the stockholders; Offield v. R. Co., 203 U. S. 372, 27 Sup. Ct. 72, 51 L. Ed. 231.

Methods of procedure in actions on contract, that do not affect substantially rights of the parties, are within the control of the state, and the obligation of a stockholder's contract is not impaired within the meaning of the constitution by substituting, for individual actions for statutory liability, a suit in equity by the receiver of the insolvent corporation; Henley v. Myers, 215 U. S. 373, 30 Sup. Ct. 148, 54 L. Ed. 240, affirming 76 Kan. 736, 93 Pac. 168, 173, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 779; Miners' & Merchants' Bank v. Snyder, 100 Md. 57, 59 Atl. 707, 68 L. R. A. 312, 108 Am. St. Rep. 390.

In becoming a stockholder of a corporation one does not acquire as against the state any vested right in a particular mode of procedure for the enforcement of liability, but it is assumed that parties make their contracts with reference to the existence of the power in the state to regulate such procedure; Henley v. Myers, 215 U. S. 373, 30 Sup. Ct. 148, 54 L. Ed. 240.

There is a broad distinction between laws impairing the obligation of contracts and those giving a more efficient remedy, as where, in lieu of a right of creditors to enforce a liability against individual stockholders, it was provided that it should be enforced by a receiver in the interest of all creditors; Bernheimer v. Converse, 206 U. S. 516, 27 Sup. Ct. 755, 51 L. Ed. 1163, where it was said that a state statute changing the remedy does not impair the contract if it gives a more efficacious one; or does not impair it so materially as to affect the creditor's rights, citing Pittsburg Steel Co. v. Equitable Society, 226 U. S. 455, 33 Sup. Ct. 167, 57 L. Ed. 297; McGahey v. Virginia, 135 U. S. 662, 10 Sup. Ct. 972, 34 L. Ed. 304.

Prior to these decisions, acts making such changes in the remedy had, in several cases, been held unconstitutional, as to creditors whose rights accrued prior to the change of remedy; Evans v. Nellis, 101 Fed. 920; Webster v. Bowers, 104 Fed. 627; Harrison v. Paper Co., 140 Fed. 385, 72 C. C. A. 405, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 954, 5 Ann. Cas. 314; Pusey & Jones Co. v. Love, 6 Pennewill (Del.) 80, 66 Atl. 1013, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 953, 130 Am. St. Rep. 144; Woodworth v. Bowles, 61 Kan. 569, 60 Pac. 331; Converse v. Bank, 79 Conn.

If there are two remedies, a change in one does not affect the contract; Watts v. Everett, 47 Ia. 269; Heyward v. Judd, 4 Minn. 483 (Gil. 375); and while the statute may change the remedies before judgment, it may not alter those after judgment, if the change materially affects rights under the contract; Read v. Bank, 23 Me. 318; Oliver v. McClure, 28 Ark. 555; Lockett v. Usry, 28 Ga. 345. So the statute may prescribe a remedy, if there is none, or provide a new one as good as that taken away; Longfellow v. Patrick, 25 Me. 18; Bronson v. Kinzie, 1 How. (U. S.) 311, 11 L. Ed. 143; In re Trustees of New York Protestant Episcopal Public School, 31 N. Y. 574. The test is whether the change diminishes or destroys the remedy by postponing the enforcement of the contract or lessening the efficiency of the remedy; Louisiana v. New Orleans, 102 U. S. 203, 26 L. Ed. 132; or by burdening the proceedings with new and unreasonable restrictions or conditions, or by anything that amounts to a deprivation of the remedy; The Binghamton Bridge, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 51, 18 L. Ed. 137; Western Sav. Fund Soc. of Philadelphia v. City of Philadelphia, 31 Pa. 175, 72 Am. Dec. 730; but if the ordinary and regular course of justice continues to operate upon the contract with the preservation of existing remedies, in substance, the obligation is not impaired; Holmes v. Lansing, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 73.

The statute giving the remedy may be repealed, if passed subsequent to the contract; Young v. Territory, 1 Or. 213; or laws may be passed providing for more efficient enforcement of the contract; Bryson v. McCreary, 102 Ind. 1, 1 N. E. 55; Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Hill, 86 Mo. 466. Any state statute which impairs the obligation of the contract will be treated by the courts which enforce it as null and void, and the remedies will be applied without respect to it; Louisiana v. Pilsbury, 105 U. S. 278, 26 L. Ed. 1090; any impairment is fatal and the degree is immaterial; Walker v. Whitehead, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 314, 21 L. Ed. 357. See extended notes on the effect of legislation as to the remedy in 1 L. R. A. 356 and 4 L. R. A. 348.

Changes which have been held not to impair the contract are, in the remedy on a judgment; Livingston v. Moore, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 469, 8 L. Ed. 751; Grosvenor v. Chesley, 48 Me. 369; the enforcement of forfeiture of a charter; Danley v. Bank, 15 Ark. 16; Klaus v. City of Green Bay, 34 Wis. 628; Van Rensselaer v. Snyder, 13 N. Y. 299; lessening the period of publication of notice in foreclosure proceedings; Webb v. Moore, 25 Ind. 4; extending time for advertisement of mortgage sales; Starkweather v. Hawes, 10 Wis. 126; lessening the force of a penalty in a bond; Wood v. Kennedy, 19 Ind. 68; Potter v. Sturdivant, 4 Greenl. (Me.) 154; repealing usury laws, taking away that defense under existing contracts; Ewell v. Dagg, 108 U. S. 143, 2 Sup. Ct. 408, 27 L. Ed. 682; providing that service of process may be made on any officer or agent of a corporation; Cairo & F. R. Co. v. Hecht, 95 U. S. 168, 24 L. Ed. 423; abolishing imprisonment for debt as a remedy for breach of contract; Penniman's Case, 103 U. S. 714, 26 L. Ed. 602; invalidating technically defective mortgages; Gross v. Mortgage Co., 108 U. S. 477, 2 Sup. Ct. 940, 27 L. Ed. 795; or conveyances by femes covert; Randall v. Krieger, 23 Wall. (U. S.) 137, 23 L. Ed. 124; granting new trials; League v. De Young, 11 How. (U. S.) 202, 13 L. Ed. 657; reducing the period of limitation for bringing suits, if it leaves a reasonable period for suits for breaches of existing contracts; St. Louis v. Knapp, S. & Co., 104 U. S. 660, 26 L. Ed. 883; requiring the recording of existing mortgages, if it allow a reasonable time before the act takes effect; Vance v. Vance, 108 U. S. 514, 2 Sup. Ct. 854, 27 L. Ed. 808; providing for the re-organization of an insolvent corporation and binding creditors with notice who do not dissent; Gilfillan v. Canal Co., 109 U. S. 401, 3 Sup. Ct. 304, 27 L. Ed. 977.

An act is invalid which, after a contract is made, changes the measure of damages to be recovered for a breach; Effinger v. Kenney, 115 U. S. 566, 6 Sup. Ct. 179, 29 L. Ed. 495; also, which imposes as a condition precedent to enforcing a right that the plaintiff shall prove that he never aided the rebellion against the United States; Pierce v. Carskadon, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 234, 21 L. Ed. 276. So is an act which, after a judgment has been enrolled, materially increases the debtor's exemption; Gunn v. Barry, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 610, 21 L. Ed. 212; and an act which, after the execution of a mortgage, increases the period of redemption after foreclosure; Howard v. Bugbee, 24 How. (U. S.) 461, 16 L. Ed. 753; and an act which forbids a sale on the foreclosure of a mortgage at which less than two-thirds of the appraised value of the mortgage premises is realized; Bronson v. Kinzie, 1 How. (U. S.) 311, 11 L. Ed. 143.

Stay laws which abridge the remedy are not valid as against existing contracts, but those which affect the remedy and not the right are valid; Aycock v. Martin, 37 Ga. 124, 92 Am. Dec. 56; Coffman v. Bank, 40 Miss. 29, 90 Am. Dec. 311; Jacobs v. Smallwood, 63 N. C. 112, Fed. Cas. No. 7,163; Breitenbach v. Bush, 44 Pa. 313, 84 Am. Dec. 442. So also statutes of limitation, if not retroactive, do not impair the obligation, and an act may be passed reducing the time, if a reasonable time continues; Terry v. Anderson, 95 U. S. 628, 24 L. Ed. 365; Wheeler v.

Jackson, 137 U. S. 245, 11 Sup. Ct. 76, 34 L. Ed. 659; MacFarland v. Jackson, 137 U. S. 258, note, 11 Sup. Ct. 79, 34 L. Ed. 664; McGahay v. Virginia, 135 U. S. 662, 10 Sup. Ct. 972, 34 L. Ed. 304; but if the change is unreasonable it will not be valid; Pereles v. Watertown, 6 Biss. 79, Fed. Cas. No. 10,980; Robinson v. Magee, 9 Cal. 81, 70 Am. Dec. 638; Osborn v. Jaines, 17 Wis. 574; unless the remedy remains substantially; Von Baumbach v. Bade, 9 Wis. 560, 76 Am. Dec. 283; so exemption laws, if reasonable and not materially affecting the remedy, are valid; but otherwise they impair the obligation of prior contracts; Von Hoffman v. Quincy, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 535, 18 L. Ed. 403; Edwards v. Kearzey, 96 U. S. 595, 24 L. Ed. 793; Morse v. Goold, 11 N. Y. 281, 62 Am. Dec. 103; Hardeman v. Downer, 39 Ga. 425; Hawthorne v. Calef, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 23, 17 L. Ed. 776; contra, Rockwell v. Hubbell's Adm'rs, 2 Doug. (Mich.) 197, 45 Am. Dec. 246, 5 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 82.

An insolvent law is valid as to discharges from future debt when both debtor and creditor reside in the same state, but not if the creditor is a citizen of a different state, or if the law releases the debtor from prior debts; Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 213, 6 L. Ed. 606; Baldwin v. Hale, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 223, 17 L. Ed. 531; Betts v. Bagley, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 572; Boardman v. De Forest, 5 Conn. 1; Post v. Riley, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 54; Donnelly v. Corbett, 7 N. Y. 500. Those are said to be valid which are in the nature of a cessio bonorum, leaving the debt still existing, or which provide for the discharge of the debt, but refer only to subsequent contracts, or which merely modify or affect the remedy, as by exempting the person from arrest, but still leave means of enforcing. But a law exempting the person from arrest and the goods from attachment on mesne process or execution would be void, as against the constitution of the United States; Planters' Bank v. Sharp, 6 How. (U. S.) 328, 12 L. Ed. 447; Kimberly v. Ely, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 440; Norton v. Cook, 9 Conn. 314, 23 Am. Dec. 342; Smith v. Parsons, 1 Ohio, 236, 13 Am. Dec. 608; the rights of antecedent creditors are protected by the constitution; Shreveport v. Cole, 129 U. S. 36, 9 Sup. Ct. 210, 32 L. Ed. 589. The state insolvent laws in practice operate in favor of the citizens of the particular state only, as to other citizens of the same state, and not against citizens of other states, unless they have assented to the relief or discharge of the debtor expressly, or by some equivalent act, as by becoming a party to the process against him under the law, taking a dividend, and the like; Van Reimsdyk v. Kane, 1 Gall. 371, Fed. Cas. No. 16,871; Hinkley v. Marean, 3 Mas. 88, Fed. Cas. No. 6,523; Baker v. Wheaton, 5 Mass. 509, 4 Am. Dec. 71; Pugh v. Bussel, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 366; but the mere circumstance that the contract is made payable in the state where the insolvent law exists will not render such contract subject to be discharged under the law; Baldwin v. Hale, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 223, 17 L. Ed. 531; Baldwin v. Bank, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 234, 17 L. Ed. 534; Gilman v. Lockwood, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 409, 18 L. Ed. 432.

Some states refuse to aid a citizen of another state in enforcing a debt against a citizen of their own state, when the debt was discharged by their insolvent law. In such cases the creditor must resort to the court of the United States within the state; Babcock v. Weston, 1 Gall. 168, Fed. Cas. No. 703; Braynard v. Marshall, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 194; Pugh v. Bussell, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 394; Woodhull v. Wagner, Baldw. 296, Fed. Cas. No. 17,975; Browne v. Stackpole, 9 N. H. 478. See INSOLVENT LAWS.

Exemption from arrest affects only the remedy, while exemption from attachment of the property, or a subjection of it to a stay law or appraisal law, impairs the obligation of the contract. Such a statute can only be enforced as to contracts made subsequently to the law; Bronson v. Kinzie, 1 How. (U. S.) 311, 11 L. Ed. 143; Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 1, 75, 5 L. Ed. 547; Beers v. Haughton, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 359, 9 L. Ed. 145; U. S. v. Quincy, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 535, 18 L. Ed. 403; Tennessee v. Sneed, 96 U. S. 69, 24 L. Ed. 610; but a law abolishing distress for rent has been held to be applicable to cases in force at its passage; Conkey v. Hart, 14 N. Y. 22. With regard to exemption from arrest the supreme court holds that in modes of proceeding and forms to enforce the contract the legislature has the control, and may enlarge, limit, or alter them, provided it does not deny a remedy, or so embarrass it with conditions or restrictions as seriously to impair the value of the right; Penniman's Case, 103 U. S. 720, 26 L. Ed. 602. See McGahey v. Virginia, 135 U. S. 662, 10 Sup. Ct. 972, 34 L. Ed. 304. Whatever belongs, merely, to the remedy may be altered according to the will of the state, provided the alteration does not impair the obligation of a contract; Hill v. Ins. Co., 134 U. S. 515, 10 Sup. Ct. 589, 33 L. Ed. 994.

It is admitted that a state may make partial exemptions of property, as of furniture, food, apparel, or even a homestead; Quackenbush v. Danks, 1 Denio (N. Y.) 128; Danks v. Quackenbush, 1 N. Y. 129; Bronson v. Newberry, 2 Dough. (Mich.) 38; Evans v. Montgomery, 4 W. & S. (Pa.) 218; Tarpley v. Hamer, 9 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 310. A homestead exemption may be made applicable to previously existing contracts; Ladd v. Adams, 66 N. C. 164; contra, Homestead Cases, 22 Gratt. (Va.) 266, 12 Am. Rep. 507; Hannum v. McInturf, 6 Baxt. (Tenn.) 225. But a law preventing all legal remedy upon a contract would be void; State v. Bank, 1 S.

C. 63; Gunn v. Barry, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 610, 21 L. Ed. 212. An act providing that dower or right of dower shall not be subject to seizure or execution for the husband's debts during his lifetime, cannot affect the rights of creditors whose claims arose before the passage of the act; Patton v. Asheville, 109 N. C. 685, 14 S. E. 92. See Gilmore v. Bright, 101 N. C. 382, 7 S. E. 751.

Nothing in the constitution prevents a state from passing a valid statute, to divest rights which have been vested by law in an individual, provided it does not impair the obligation of a contract; Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall. (U. S.) 386, 1 L. Ed. 648; Watson v. Mercer, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 89, 8 L. Ed. 876; Grinder v. Nelson, 9 Gill (Md.) 299, 52 Am. Dec. 694; Wilson v. Hardesty, 1 Md. Ch. Dec. 66. See In re Copenhaver, 54 Fed. 660; Shreveport v. Cole, 129 U. S. 36, 9 Sup. Ct. 210, 32 L. Ed. 589. This inhibition in the constitution is wholly prospective, and the states may legislate as to contracts thereafter made as they see fit; Edwards v. Kearzey, 96 U. S. 603, 24 L. Ed. 793; Denny v. Bennett, 128 U. S. 489, 9 Sup. Ct. 134, 32 L. Ed. 491; Lehigh Water Co. v. Borough of Easton, 121 U. S. 388, 7 Sup. Ct. 916, 30 L. Ed. 1059; Brown v. Smart, 145 U. S. 454, 12 Sup. Ct. 958, 36 L. Ed. 773.

The law of place acts upon a contract, and governs its construction, validity, and obligation, but constitutes no part of it. The law explains the stipulations of parties, but never supersedes or varies them.

This is very different from supposing that every law is applicable to the subject-matter, as statutes of limitation and insolvency, or enters into and becomes a part of the contract. This can neither be drawn from the terms of the contract, nor presumed to be contemplated by the parties.

The weight of authority is that this clause of the constitution, like that which relates to the regulation of commerce by congress, does not limit the power of a state to enact general police regulations for the preservation of public health and morals; Phalen v. Virginia, 8 How. (U. S.) 163, 12 L. Ed. 1030; Hirn v. State, 1 Ohio St. 15; Baker v. Boston, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 194, 22 Am. Dec. 421; Vanderbilt v. Adams, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 349; Coates v. New York, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 585; Thorpe v. R. Co., 27 Vt. 149, 62 Am. Dec. 625; Platte & D. C. & M. Co. v. Dowell, 17 Colo. 376, 30 Pac. 68. See Freleigh v. State, 8 Mo. 607; State v. Sterling, id. 697; State v. Phalen, 3 Harr. (Del.) 442; New York v. Miln, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 102, 9 L. Ed. 648. See, generally, Hare, Am. Const. L. 768; Rawle, Const.; Dane, Abr. IMPALARE. To impound. Du Cange.

IMPANEL. To write the names of jurors on a panel (q. v.), which is a schedule or list, in England, of parchment: this is done by the sheriff, or other officer lawfully authorized.

In American practice, the word is used of a jury drawn for trial of a particular cause by the clerk, as well as of the general list of jurors returned by the sheriff. Grah. Pr. 275. See 1 Archb. Pr. 365; 3 Bla. Com. 354; Porter v. People, 7 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 441. Strictly speaking and at common law, juries are impanelled when the jurymen are selected and ready to be sworn; Clough v. U. S., 55 Fed. 928.

IMPARCATUS. Imprisoned. Spell. Gloss.

IMPARLANCE (from Fr. parler, to speak). Time given by the court to either party to answer the pleading of his opponent: as, either to plead, reply, rejoin, etc.

It is said to be nothing else but the continuance of the cause till a further day; Bacon, Abr. Pleas (C). In this sense imparlances are no longer allowed in English practice; Andr. Steph. Pl. 162.

Time to plead. This is the common signification of the word; 2 Wms. Saund. 1, n. 2; 2 Show. 310; Barnes 346. In this sense imparlances are not recognized in American law, the common practice being for the defendant to enter an appearance, when the cause stands continued, until a fixed time has elapsed within which he may file his plea. In the act of congress of May 19, 1828, § 2, the word imparlance was originally used for "stay of execution," but the latter phrase has been substituted for it; Rev. Stat. § 988. See CONTINUANCE.

A general imparlance is the entry of a general prayer and allowance of time to plead till the next term, without reserving to the defendant the benefit of any exception; so that after such an imparlance the defendant cannot object to the jurisdiction of the court, or plead any matter in abatement. This kind of imparlance is always from one term to another.

A general special imparlance contains a saving of all exceptions whatsoever, so that the defendant after this may plead not only in abatement, but he may also plead a plea which affects the jurisdiction of the court, as privilege. He cannot, however, plead a tender, and that he was always ready to pay, because by craving time he admits that he is not ready, and so falsifies his plea; Tidd, Pr. 418.

A special imparlance reserves to the defendant all exception to the writ, bill, or count; and therefore after it the defendant may plead in abatement, though not to the jurisdiction of the court.

See Comyns, Dig. Abatement (I) 19, 20, 21, Pleader (D); 1 Chitty, Pl. 420; 1 Sell. Pr. 265; Bacon, Abr. Pleas (C).

IMPARSONEE. A clergyman who by induction (q. v.) is in possession of a benefice. He is then termed persona impersonata—a parson imparsonnee. 1 Bla. Com. 391; Co. Litt. 300.

IMPARTIALLY. See FAITHFULLY.

IMPEACHMENT. A written accusation usually by the house of representatives of a state or of the United States to the senate of the state or of the United States against an officer.

The United States constitution declares that the house of representatives shall have the sole power of impeachment; art. 1, s. 2, cl. 5; and that the senate shall have the sole power to try all impeachments; art. 1, s. 3, cl. 6.

The persons liable to impeachment are the president, vice-president, and all civil officers of the United States; art. 2, s. 4. A question arose upon an impeachment before the senate, in 1799, whether a senator was a civil officer of the United States within the purview of this section of the constitution; and it was decided by the senate, by a vote of fourteen against eleven, that he was not; Senate Jour. Jan. 10, 1799; Story, Const. § 791; Rawle, Const. 213; Von Holst Const. Hist. 160. See UNITED STATES COURTS.

The offences for which a guilty officer may be impeached are treason, bribery, and other high crimes and misdemeanors; art. 2, s. 4. The constitution defines the crime of treason; art. 3, s. 3. Recourse must be had to the common law for a definition of bribery. Not having particularly mentioned what is to be understood by "other high crimes and misdemeanors," resort, it is presumed, must be had to parliamentary practice and the common law in order to ascertain what they are; Story, Const. § 795. It is said that impeachment may be brought to bear on any offense against the constitution or the laws which is deserving of punishment in this manner or is of such a character as to render the officer unfit to hold his office. It is primarily directed against official misconduct, and is not restricted to political crimes alone. The decision rests really with the senate; Black, Const. L. 121. The guilt of the accused must be established beyond a reasonable doubt; State v. Hastings, 37 Neb. 96, 55 N. W. 774.

The mode of proceeding in the institution and trial of impeachments is as follows: When a person who may be legally impeached has been guilty, or is supposed to have been guilty, of some malversation in office, a resolution is generally brought forward by a member of the house of representatives, either to accuse the party, or for a committee of inquiry. If the committee report adversely to the party accused, they give a statement of the charges and recommend that he be impeached. When the resolution is adopted by the house, a committee is appointed to impeach the party at the bar of the senate, and to state that the articles of impeachment against him will be exhibited in due time and made good before the senate, and to demand that the senate take order for the appearance of the party to answer to the impeachment. The house then agree upon the articles of impeachment, and they are presented to the senate by a committee appointed by the house to prosecute the impeachment. The senate then issues process, summoning the party to appear at a given day before them, to answer to the articles. The process is served by the sergeant-at-arms of the senate, and a return is made of it to the senate under oath. On the return-day of the process, the senate resolves itself into a court of impeachment, and the senators are sworn to do justice according to the constitution and laws. The person impeached is called to answer, and either appears or does not appear. If he does not appear, his default is recorded, and the senate may proceed ex parte. If he does appear, either by himself or attorney, the parties are required to form an issue, and a time is then assigned for the trial. The final decision is given by yeas and nays; but no person can be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the members present; Const. art. 1, s. 2, cl. 6. See "Chase's Trial," and "Trial of Judge Peck;" also proceedings against Judge Humphreys, June 26, 1862, Congress. Globe, pt. 4, 3d sess., 32d Congress, pp. 2942-2953; and Trial of President Johnson, March 5, 1868, Congress. Globe, pt. 5, supplement, 40th Congress, 2d sess.; Lecture by Prof. Theo. W. Dwight, before Columbia Coll. Law School, 6 Am. Law Reg. 257; Article by Judge Lawrence, of Ohio, same volume, p. 641.

When the president is tried, the chief justice presides. The judgment, in cases of impeachment, does not extend further than to removal from office and disqualification to hold and enjoy any office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States. Disqualification, as a punishment, is discretionary with the senate; Black, Const. L. 122. The party impeached remains liable to trial and punishment according to law. See UNITED STATES COURTS.

Proceedings on impeachments under the state constitutions are somewhat similar.

As to the impeachment of a judge, see JUDGE.

In England, the articles of impeachment are a kind of indictment found by the house of commons, and tried by the house of lords. It has always been settled that a peer could be impeached for any crime. There has been none since (1806) 29 St. Tr. 549. It was formerly believed that a commoner could only be impeached for high misdemeanors, not for capital offences; 4 Bla. Com. 260; but it seems now settled they may be impeached for high treason; May's Parl. Prac. Ch. 23. Impeachments have been very rare in England in modern times.

In Evidence. An allegation, supported by proof, that a witness who has been examined is unworthy of credit.

Every witness is liable to be impeached as to his reputation for truth and veracity; and, if his general character is good, he is presumed at all times to be ready to support it; Baker v. Robinson, 49 Ill. 299. See McDaniel v. State, 97 Ala. 14, 12 South. 241.

Negative evidence is admissible to establish a good reputation; People v. Van Gaasbeck, 189 N. Y. 408, 82 N. E. 718, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 650, 12 Ann. Cas. 745; Day v. Ross, 154 Mass. 13, 27 N. E. 676. See CHARACTER; REPUTATION.

It is not admissible to impeach a defendant's testimony by showing that at a former trial for a like offence, he raised a similar issue and was contradicted; Com. v. Lannan, 155 Mass. 168, 29 N. E. 467. An accused person who testifies in his own behalf, is subject to impeachment, as other witnesses, by evidence of previous contradictory statements; Com. v. Racco, 225 Pa. 113, 73 Atl. 1067, 133 Am. St. Rep. 872; Peck v. State, 86 Tenn. 259, 6 S. W. 389. A witness cannot be impeached by the contradiction of immaterial statements; Jones v. Lumber Co., 58 Ark. 125, 23 S. W. 679; nor can he be as to collateral and irrelevant matter on which he was cross-examined; Garman v. State, 66 Miss. 196, 5 South. 385; People v. Dye, 75 Cal. 108, 16 Pac. 537; Kuhns v. Ry. Co., 76 Ia. 67, 40 N. W. 92; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Townsend, 39 Kan. 115, 17 Pac. 804; Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Coon, 69 Tex. 730, 7 S. W. 492; Alger v. Castle, 61 Vt. 53, 17 Atl. 727; State v. Goodwin, 32 W. Va. 177, 9 S. E. 85.

On cross examination an accused person may be questioned as to other offenses in order to impeach his credibility; State v. Manuel (La.) 63 South. 174. Statements out of court inconsistent with those made by a witness in court are admissible to impeach him, where the proper foundation has been laid; Leahey v. Ry. Co., 97 Mo. 165, 10 S. W. 58, 10 Am. St. Rep. 300; Milligan & Co. v. Butcher, 23 Neb. 683, 37 N. W. 596; State v. Barrett, 40 Minn. 65, 77, 41 N. W. 459, 463; State v. Porter, 74 Ia. 623, 38 N. W. 514; Howard v. State, 25 Tex.

App. 686, 8 S. W. 929. See CROSS-EXAMINATION.

See ARTICLES OF IMPEACHMENT.

One who has called a witness and is surprised by his adverse testimony may, in the discretion of the trial court, be allowed to cross-examine him and show that he had previously made statements contrary to his testimony; Lindquist v. Dickson, 98 Minn. 369, 107 N. W. 958, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 727, 8 Ann. Cas. 1024. See DISCREDIT; EVIDENCE; WITNESS.

IMPEACHMENT OF WASTE. A restraint from committing waste upon lands or tenements; or, a demand of compensation for waste done by a tenant who has but a particular estate in the land granted, and, therefore, no right to commit waste.

All tenants for life or any less estate are liable to be impeached for waste, unless they hold without impeachment of waste; in the latter case they may commit waste without being questioned, or any demand for compensation for the waste done; 11 Co. 82. See WASTE.

Wanton acts of waste will be restrained; 2 Vern. 738; or will be the ground of recovery of damages in England under the Judicature Acts. These are usually called equitable waste.

IMPECHIARE. To impeach, accuse, or prosecute for felony or treason. Cowell.

IMPEDIATUS. Disabled from mischief by expeditation (q. v.). Cowell.

IMPEDIENS. One who hinders; the defendant or deforciant in a fine. Cowell.

IMPEDIMENTO. In Spanish Law. A prohibition to contract marriage, established by law between certain persons.

The disabilities arising from this clause are twofold, viz.:—

Impedimento Dirimente. Such disabilities as render the marriage null, although contracted with the usual legal solemnities. The disabilities arising from this source are enumerated in the following Latin verses (Esriche, Dict. 833):

"Error, conditio, votum, cognatio, crimen,
Cultus disparitas, vis, ordo, ligamen, honestas,
Si sis affinis, si forte colore nequibis,
Si parochi et duplicis desit presentia testis,
Raptave sit mulier, nec parti reddita tutæ,
Hæc facienda vetant connubia, facta retractant."

Among these impediments, some are absolute, other relative. The former cannot be cured, and render the marriage radically null; others may be removed by previous dispensation.

In Spain, marriage is regarded in the twofold aspect of a civil and a religious contract. Hence the disabilities are of two kinds, viz.: those created by the local law and those imposed by the church.

In the earlier ages of the church, the emperors prohibited certain marriages: thus, Theodosius the Great forbade marriages between cousins-german; Justinian, between spiritual relations; Valentinian, Valens, Theodosius, and Arcadius, between persons of different religions.

The Catholic church adopted and extended the disabilities thus created, and by the third canon at the twenty-fourth session of the Council of Trent, the church reserved to itself the power of dispensation. As the Council of Trent did not determine, being divided, who had the power of granting dispensation, it is accorded in Italy to the pope, and in France and Spain, with few exceptions, to the bishops. The dispositions of the Council of Trent being in force in Spain (see Schmidt, Civ. Law of Spain, p. 6, note a), the ecclesiastical authority is alone invested with this power in Spain.

For the cases in which it may be granted, see Schmidt, Civ. Law c. 2, s. 14.

Impedimento, Impediente, or Prohibitivo.—Such disabilities as impede the contracting of a marriage, but do not annul it when contracted.

IMPEDIMENTS. Legal hindrances to making contracts. Some of these impediments are minority, want of reason, coverture, and the like. See CONTRACT; INCAPACITY.

In Civil Law. Bars to marriage.

Absolute impediments are those which prevent the person subject to them from marrying at all, without either the nullity of marriage or its being punishable.

Dirimant impediments are those which render a marriage void; as, where one of the contracting parties is already married to another person.

Prohibitive impediments are those which do not render the marriage null, but subject the parties to a punishment.

Relative impediments are those which regard only certain persons with regard to each other: as, the marriage of a brother to a sister.

See IMPEDIMENTO.

IMPENSÆ (Lat.). In Civil Law. Expense; outlay. Divided into necessariæ, for necessity, utiles, for use, and voluptuariæ, for luxury; Dig. 79. 6. 14; Voc. Jur.

IMPERATIVE. Mandatory as opposed to directory, as used of a statute (q. v.).

IMPERATOR. Emperor. The title of the Emperor in Rome and used also for the Kings of England in charters before the conquest. 1 Bla. Com. 242.

IMPERFECT OBLIGATIONS. Those which are not, in view of the law, of binding force.

IMPERFECT RIGHTS. See RIGHTS.

IMPERFECT TRUST. An executory trust (q. v.).

IMPERIUM. The right to command, which includes the right to employ the force of the state to enforce the laws: this is one of the principal attributes of the power of the executive. 1 Toullier, n. 58.

IMPERSONALITAS. Impersonality. An expression used where no particular person is referred to, as where the words ut dicitur are used. Co. Litt. 352b.

IMPERTINENT (Lat. in, not, pertinens, pertaining or relating to).

In Pleading. IN EQUITY. A term applied to matters introduced into a bill, answer, or other proceeding in a suit which are not properly before the court for decision at that particular stage of the suit. Spencer v. Van Duzen, 1 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 555; Barbee v. Inman, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 439; Wells v. Ry. Co., 15 Fed. 561. Impertinent matter is not necessarily scandalous; but all scandalous matter is impertinent.

The rule against admitting impertinent matter is designed to prevent oppression, not to become oppressive; 1 T. & R. 489; 6 Beav. 444; Tucker v. R. Co., 21 N. H. 38. No matter is to be deemed impertinent which is material in establishing the rights of the parties or ascertaining the relief to be granted; Mechanics' Bank v. Levy, 3 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 606; 12 Beav. 44; 10 Sim. 345.

A pleading may be referred to a master to have impertinent matter expunged at the cost of the offending party; Story, Eq. Pl. § 266; Langdon v. Pickering, 19 Me. 214; Mason v. Mason, 4 Hen. & M. (Va.) 414; Camden & A. R. Co. v. Stewart, 19 N. J. Eq. 343; but a bill may not be after the defendant has answered; Coop. Eq. Pl. 19. In England, the practice of excepting to bills, answers, and other proceedings for impertinence has been abolished.

The new United States Supreme Court equity rule 21 (33 Sup. Ct. xxiv) forbids exceptions for scandal or impertinence, but the court may, upon motion or its own initiative, strike out such.

Such matter is not put in issue by general plea, need not be proven at the trial, and cannot be proven against defendant's objection. The court has power to strike out impertinent matter, but this power is sparingly exercised and should not be encouraged. There is no reported case in Pennsylvania in which matter was stricken out of a declaration on the mere ground of impertinency; Astrich v. Ins. Co., 13 Pa. Dist. R. 350. See SCANDALOUS MATTER.

AT LAW. A term applied to matter not necessary to constitute the cause of action or ground of defence. Tucker v. Randall, 2 Mass. 283.

It constitutes surplusage, which see.

IN PRACTICE. A term applied to evidence of facts which do not belong to the matter in question. That which is immaterial is, in general, impertinent, and that which is material is not, in general, impertinent. 1 McC. & Y. 337. Impertinent matter in the interrogatories to witnesses or their answers, in equity, will be expunged after reference to a master at the cost of the offending party; 2 Y. & C. 445.

IMPESCARE. To impeach or accuse. Impescatus, impeached. Jac.; Blount.

IMPETITIO VASTI. Impeachment of waste, which title see.

IMPETRATION. The obtaining any thing by prayer or petition. In the ancient English statutes it signifies a pre-obtaining of church benefices in England from the church of Rome which belonged to the gift of the king or other lay patrons.

IMPIER. Umpire (q. v.).

IMPIERMENT. Impairing or prejudicing. Jac. L. Dict.

IMPIGNORATA. Pledged; given in pledge (pignori data); mortgaged. A term applied in Bracton to land. Fol. 20.

IMPIGNORATION. The act of pawning or pledging.

IMPLACITARE (Lat.). To implead; to sue.

IMPLEAD. To sue or prosecute by due course of law. Bell v. Bell, 9 Watts (Pa.) 47.

IMPLEMENTS (Lat. impleo, to fill). Such things as are used or employed for a trade, or furniture of a house. Coolidge v. Choate, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 82.

Whatever may supply wants: particularly applied to tools, utensils, vessels, instruments of labor: as, the implements of trade or of husbandry. Webster, Dict.; Meyer v. Meyer, 23 Ia. 359, 92 Am. Dec. 432; Smith v. Gibbs, 6 Gray (Mass.) 298; or a music teacher's piano; Amend v. Murphy, 69 Ill. 338. The word does not include horses or other animals; Coolidge v. Choate, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 79; Wallace v. Collins, 5 Ark. 41, 39 Am. Dec. 359; Enscoe v. Dunn, 44 Conn. 93, 26 Am. Rep. 430.

IMPLICATA (Lat.). Small adventures for which the freight contracted for is to be received although the cargo may be lost. Targa, c. 34; Emerigon, Mar. Loans § 5.

IMPLICATION. An inference of something not directly declared, but arising from what is admitted or expressed.

It may be founded upon either of two grounds: It may arise from an elliptical form of expression which involves and implies something else as contemplated by the person using the expression; or upon the form of the gift, or upon a direction to do something which cannot be carried into effect without of necessity involving something else . . . which is a consequence necessarily resulting from that direction; Lord Westbury, in 11 H. L. Cas. 143. In order to prevent a will from failing of effect altogether, a gift will be implied if there be anything to designate the person to take; Thomas v. Thomas, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 112. It is but another term for meaning and intention apparent in the writing on judicial inspection; Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 657, 9 L. Ed. 1233, cited in Lake Michigan Car Ferry Transp. Co. v. Crosby, 107 Fed. 724; North Point Consol. Irr. Co. v. Canal Co., 14 Utah 164, 46 Pac. 824.

See CONTRACT; DEED; EASEMENT; INTERPRETATION; WAX; WILL.

IMPLIED. This word is used in law as contrasted with "express;" i. e., where the intention in regard to the subject-matter is not manifested by explicit and direct words, but is gathered by implication or necessary deduction from the circumstances, the general language, or the conduct of the parties. See IMPLICATION.

IMPLIED ABROGATION. See ABROGATION.

IMPLIED ASSUMPSIT. See ASSUMPSIT.

IMPLIED COLOR. See COLOR.

IMPLIED CONSENT. See CONSENT.

IMPLIED CONSIDERATION. One that is implied by law, or presumed to exist, in contradistinction to an expressed consideration. See CONSIDERATION.

IMPLIED CONTRACT. See CONTRACT.

IMPLIED COVENANT. See COVENANT.

IMPLIED MALICE. See MALICE.

IMPLIED TRUST. See TRUST.

IMPLIED USES. See RESULTING USE; USE.

IMPLIED WARRANTY. The use of this term was condemned by Lord Abinger in Chanter v. Hopkins, 4 M. & W. 404, and it has been omitted from the English Bill of Sales Act.

See CAVEAT EMPTOR; SALE; WARRANTY.

IMPORTATION. The act of bringing goods and merchandise into the United States from a foreign country. U. S. v. Vowell, 5 Cra. (U. S.) 368, 3 L. Ed. 128; Arnold v. U. S., 9 Cra. (U. S.) 104, 3 L. Ed. 671; 2 M. & G. 155. See IMPORTS.

IMPORTED. This word, in general, has the same meaning in the tariff laws that its etymology shows, in porto, to carry in. To "import" is to bear or carry into. An "imported" article is one brought or carried into a country from abroad. The Conqueror, 49 Fed. 99. See IMPORTS.

IMPORTS. Goods or other property imported or brought into the country from foreign territory. Story, Const. § 949. See U. S. Const. art. 1, § 8; 1, § 10; Smith v. Turner, 7 How. (U. S.) 477, 12 L. Ed. 703; Mariott v. Brune, 9 How. (U. S.) 619, 13 L. Ed. 282; American Steel & Wire Co. v. Speed, 192 U. S. 500, 24 Sup. Ct. 365, 48 L. Ed. 538.

In a constitutional sense they embrace only goods brought from a foreign country and do not include merchandise shipped from one state to another; American Exp. Co. v. Iowa, 196 U. S. 146, 25 Sup. Ct. 182, 49 L. Ed. 417.

It may be noted that although the word "Imports" as used in the federal constitution applies only to goods brought into the United States from a foreign country, and not to such as are transported from one state to another; Woodruff v. Parham, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 123, 19 L. Ed. 382 (where Miller, J., discusses the subject at large, and the same distinction is emphatically asserted by White, J., in American Steel & Wire Co. v. Speed, 192 U. S. 500, 24 Sup. Ct. 365, 48 L. Ed. 538, and was recognized by Day, J., in New York v. Wells, 208 U. S. 14, 28 Sup. Ct. 193, 52 L. Ed. 370); yet in many cases the term has been incidentally used by that court with reference to goods transported into one state from another; see Thurlow v. Massachusetts, 5 How. (U. S.) 504, 12 L. Ed. 256; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 8 Sup. Ct. 273, 31 L. Ed. 205; Bowman v. R. Co., 125 U. S. 465, 8 Sup. Ct. 689, 1062, 31 L. Ed. 700; Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 10 Sup. Ct. 681, 34 L. Ed. 128; Schollenberger v. Pennsylvania, 171 U. S. 1, 18 Sup. Ct. 757, 43 L. Ed. 49; Austin v. Tennessee, 179 U. S. 343, 21 Sup. Ct. 132, 45 L. Ed. 224; Williams v. Walsh, 222 U. S. 415, 32 Sup. Ct. 137, 56 L. Ed. 253.

To prevent the mischievous interference of the several states with the national commerce, the constitution of the United States, art. 1, § 10, provides as follows: "No state shall, without the consent of congress, lay any imposts or duties on imports or exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws; and the net produce of all duties and imposts laid by any state on imports or exports shall be for the use of the treasury of the United States; and all such laws shall be subject to the revision and control of congress;" Story, Const. § 1616. Under this section it has been held that a state law imposing a license tax on importers of foreign liquors was unconstitutional; the importer by the payment of the duty purchases the right to dispose of his merchandise as well as to bring it into the country; Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 419, 6 L. Ed. 678; but the provision against taxing imports by the states does not extend to articles brought from another state, but only to articles imported from foreign countries; Woodruff v. Parham, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 123, 19 L. Ed. 382; Brown v. Houston, 114 U. S. 622, 5 Sup. Ct. 1091, 29 L. Ed. 257; American Steel & Wire Co. v. Speed, 192 U. S. 500, 24 Sup. Ct. 365, 48 L. Ed. 538. Imports from foreign countries are not subject to state taxation while remaining in the original cases in the hands of the importer, unbroken and unsold; Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 419, 6 L. Ed. 678; People v. Barker, 155 N. Y. 330, 49 N. E. 940; Gerdan v. Davis, 67 N. J. L. 88, 50 Atl. 586; State v. Board of Assessors, 46 La. Ann. 145, 15 South. 10, 49 Am. St. Rep. 318; In re Doane, 197 Ill. 376, 64 N. E. 377; and while they are in that condition the state cannot impose any tax upon them, as the right to sell without restriction is a necessary incident of the right to import without restriction; Low v. Austin, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 29, 20 L. Ed. 517; Oberteuffer v. Robertson, 116 U. S. 517, 6 Sup. Ct. 462, 29 L. Ed. 706. See Thurlow v. Massachusetts, 5 How. (U. S.) 504,

After the cases, boxes or bales in which the goods are shipped are opened and the separate packages contained therein offered for sale, they cease to be "imported articles"; Wynne v. Wright, 18 N. C. 19; and become subject to local taxation; May v. New Orleans, 178 U. S. 496, 20 Sup. Ct. 976, 44 L. Ed. 1165; after the sale by the importer they lose their distinctive character as imports and are taxable in the hands of the buyer; Pervear v. Massachusetts, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 479, 18 L. Ed. 608; Waring v. Mobile, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 110, 19 L. Ed. 342.

The original packages of imported goods which cannot be so taxed are the boxes, cases or bales in which the goods are shipped, and not the smaller packages therein contained, although the latter are the packages in which the goods were put up by the manufacturer; May v. New Orleans, 178 U. S. 496, 20 Sup. Ct. 976, 44 L. Ed. 1165. A tax on auction sales of imported goods in the original packages is invalid; Cook v. Pennsylvania, 97 U. S. 566, 24 L. Ed. 1015. So a tax on the uncollected price of imported goods was invalid; Gelpi v. Schenck, 48 La. Ann. 1535, 21 South. 115; as is a state law imposing a tax on the tonnage of vessels entering her ports; Inman S. S. Co. v. Tinker, 94 U. S. 238, 24 L. Ed. 118. But a state tax on the gross receipts of a railroad company, where freights are received partly from another state, is not a tax on imports; Woodruff v. Parham, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 123, 19 L. Ed. 382; State Tax on Railway Gross Receipts, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 284, 21 L. Ed. 164.

An importation is not complete, within the revenue laws, until a voluntary arrival within some port of entry; Arnold v. U. S., 9 Cra. (U. S.) 104, 3 L. Ed. 671; Meredith v. U. S., 13 Pet. (U. S.) 486, 10 L. Ed. 258; The Mary, 1 Gall. 206, Fed. Cas. No. 9,183; but see Perots v. U. S., 1 Pet. C. C. 256, Fed. Cas. No. 10,993; and the duties accrue at the time of such arrival; U. S. v. Dodge, 1 Deady 124, Fed. Cas. No. 14,973; but the importation, as between the importer and the government, is not complete as long as the goods remain in the custody of the officers of the customs, and until delivered to the importer, they are subject to any duties on imports which congress may see fit to impose; U. S. v. Benzon, 2 Cliff. 512, Fed. Cas. No. 14,577.

See ORIGINAL PACKAGE.

Free human beings are not imports or exports within the meaning of the United States constitution. The words refer only to property. Persons are not the subject of commerce and do not fall within the reasoning founded upon the construction of the power given to Congress to regulate commerce, and of the prohibition on the states against imposing a duty on imported goods; New York v. Compagnie Générale Transatlantique, 107 U. S. 59, 2 Sup. Ct. 87, 27 L. Ed. 383; but in the Passenger Cases, 7 How. (U. S.) 283, 412, 12 L. Ed. 702, it was held "that the commerce of the United States includes an intercourse of persons, as well as the importation of merchandise"; and the "head tax" statutes of New York and Massachusetts were held unconstitutional (so far as appears from the opinions there being no "opinion of the court") as repugnant both to the commerce clause and that prohibiting the laying of import duties by the states. It is the settled construction of the commerce clause that interstate commerce includes the "movement of persons as well as of property"; Hoke v. U. S., 227 U. S. 308, 33 Sup. Ct. 281, 57 L. Ed. 523, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 906; and the reasoning by which that conclusion is supported would seem to apply equally well to the constitutional safeguards of foreign commerce. Yachts are not imports. See TONNAGE.

IMPORTUNITY. Urgent solicitation, with troublesome frequency and pertinacity.

Wills and devises are sometimes set aside in consequence of the importunity of those who have procured them. Whenever the importunity is such as to deprive the testator of the freedom of his will, the will becomes fraudulent and void; Dane, Abr. c. 127, a. 14, s. 5, 6, 7; 2 Phill. Eccl. 551.

IMPOSITIONS. Imposts, taxes, or contributions. See Harvard College v. City of Boston, 104 Mass. 470.

IMPOSSIBILITY. A thing which under the law or according to the due course of nature cannot be done or performed.

Impossibility of performance is an important head of the law of contract, and the questions arising as to its effect may be affected by the classification to which the impossibility is assigned, the time at which it arises, and whether it affects the promise or the consideration for it.

There may be an impossibility of fact, existing in the nature of things, or arising out of the circumstances of the case or a legal impossibility created by law.

Of the first kind there may be a contradiction in the contract resulting from promises inconsistent with each other when made. There may also be a physical impossibility as when the thing contracted for is against the course of nature. Of the latter class examples are suggested of an agreement "to make two spheres of the same substance, but one twice the size of the other of which the greater should fall twice as fast as the smaller when they were both dropped from a height; or to construct a perpetual motion;" the former having been considered an elementary fact before Galileo's experiment and the latter being still attempted. Wald, Poll. Contr. 350.

A physical impossibility may be either absolute, which means impossible in any case, as if one should contract to reach the moon; or relative, as to make a payment to one who is dead. Of this kind is what is termed practical impossibility, as when a ship is so injured that it cannot be repaired except at an excessive or unreasonable cost; in this case it is treated as a total loss, being physically but not practically possible to repair. Certain accidents occurring from death, tempests, and the like are characterized by the phrase "impossibility arising by the act of God" (q. v.).

A contract or condition, the performance of which is made impossible by a rule of law, is termed a legal impossibility; as if one should give a bond to secure a simple contract with a collateral agreement that there should be no merger of the contract debt. A logical impossibility exists when the agreement is inconsistent with the nature of the transaction, as where a gift is made to one expressly for his own benefit with a condition that he immediately transfer it to a third person.

The impossibility may exist at the time of making the agreement, in which case it is said to be original; or it may be caused by matter arising ex post facto, as where the party to be benefited dies after the contract to be executed though before the performance. Such subsequent impossibility may be caused by the act of the party making the promise or the party to be benefited, or of a stranger, as a public enemy (q. v.), or by the act of God (q. v.).

An agreement to perform an impossibility whether in law or in fact is void; Wald, Poll. Contr. 352; Leake, Contr. 358; Harr. Contr. 34, 174. See L. R. 5 C. P. 577; Board of Com'rs of Mahoning County v. Young, 59 Fed. 96, 8 C. C. A. 27. There may, however, be the liability in damages for the breach of an unqualified undertaking to perform an impossibility; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Hoyt, 149 U. S. 1, 13 Sup. Ct. 779, 37 L. Ed. 625; the real question in such a case is the existence of the liability; 2 Q. B. 680; it is a question of construction, whether the language of the contract is to be treated as not applying to a situation which renders its literal performance impossible; Harri-man, Contr. 176. A contract to perform a notorious impossibility known to the parties to be such at the time of making the contract is void; 15 M. & W. 253; L. R. 6 Q. B. 124; L. R. 5 C. P. 577; if the impossibility has arisen after the making of the contract, although without any fault of the covenantor, he is not discharged from liability under it; Jacksonville, M., P. Ry. & Nav. Co. v. Hooper, 160 U. S. 514, 16 Sup. Ct. 379, 40 L. Ed. 515; an impossibility is no defence if occasioned by the act of a stranger; 2 Ld. Raym. 1164; 2 El. & Bl. 688; or of alien enemies; Aleyn 26.

It is held to be an excuse when caused by the non-continuance either of the subject-matter of the contract or of the conditions essential to its performance; Stewart v. Stone, 127 N. Y. 500, 28 N. E. 595, 14 L. R. A. 215; Buffalo & L. Land Co. v. Improvement Co., 165 N. Y. 247, 59 N. E. 5, 51 L. R. A. 951.

Certain contracts are construed as containing an implied exception of impossible events, and even general words in the contract will not be held to apply to the possibility of the particular contingency which afterwards happened; Leake, Contr. 702; L. R. 4 Q. B. 185; Walker v. Tucker, 70 Ill. 527; Dexter v. Norton, 47 N. Y. 62, 7 Am. Rep. 415.

Where, in an action of breach of promise of marriage, a plea that consummation had become impossible by reason of bodily disease endangering the life of the defendant, was held by four judges to three in the exchequer chamber to be no defence, the court of the queen's bench having been equally divided; El. Bl. & El. 748, 29 L. J. Q. B. 45; but of this case it is said that "it is so much against the tendency of the latter cases that it is of little or no authority beyond the point actually decided;" Wald, Poll. Contr. 378; and in an American case upon analogous facts the court approved the criticism upon the English case and refused to follow it.

Where the contract is for personal services, there is an implied condition that the parties should be alive to perform them; Blakely v. Sousa, 197 Pa. 305, 47 Atl. 286, 80 Am. St. Rep. 821. Likewise where a party becomes, without his own fault, incapable of fulfilling the contract in his lifetime; Dickey v. Linscott, 20 Me. 453, 37 Am. Dec. 66; Spalding v. Rosa, 71 N. Y. 40, 27 Am. Rep. 7; Green v. Gilbert, 21 Wis. 395. Impossibility may arise by the default of either party. Default of promisor is breach of the contract; default of promisee discharges promisor and may be treated as breach; U. S. v. Peck, 102 U. S. 64, 26 L. Ed. 46. Where the existence of a contract is made to depend on a future contingent event assigned by the will of the parties, then the subsequent impossibility of the same discharges the contract. Unexpected difficulty or inconvenience short of impossibility is no excuse; U. S. v. Gleason, 175 U. S. 588, 20 Sup. Ct. 228, 44 L. Ed. 284; Harlow v. Borough of Homestead, 194 Pa. 57, 45 Atl. 87; Butterfield v. Byron, 153 Mass. 517, 27 N. E. 667, 12 L. R. A. 571, 25 Am. St. Rep. 654.

The cases upon this subject are necessarily of infinite variety, as is natural where the question is so largely one of construction. To examine them in detail would be impossible within the scope of this title, but they will be found collected and classified in the various works on contracts.

See CONTRACT; UNLAWFUL AGREEMENT; CONDITION; PERFORMANCE; ACT OF GOD.

IMPOSSIBLE CONTRACT. One which the law will not hold binding upon the parties because of the natural or legal impossibility of the performance by one party of that which is the consideration for the promise of the other. 7 Wait, Act. & D. 124. See IMPOSSIBILITY.

IMPOSTS. Taxes, duties, or impositions. A duty on imported goods or merchandise. Federalist, no. 30; Elliott, Deb. 289; Story, Const. § 949; Cooley, Tax. 3.

The Constitution of the United States gives congress power "to lay and collect taxes, duties, excises, and imposts," and prohibits the states from laying "any imposts or duties on exports or imports" without the consent of congress; U. S. Const. art. 1, § 8, n. 1; art. 1, § 10, n. 2. The words "duties, excises, and imposts" are used comprehensively to cover customs and excise duties imposed on importation, consumption, manufacture and sale of certain commodities, privileges, business transactions, vocations, occupations, and the like; Thomas v. U. S., 192 U. S. 363, 24 Sup. Ct. 305, 48 L. Ed. 481.

IMPOTENCE. In Medical Jurisprudence. Inability on the part of the male organ of copulation to perform its proper function. Impotence applies only to disorders affecting the function of the organ of copulation, while sterility applies only to lack of fertility in the reproductive elements of either sex. Dennis, System of Surgery.

Impotence may be considered as incurable, curable, accidental, or temporary. Absolute or incurable impotence is that for which there is no known relief, principally originating in some malformation or defect of the genital organs. Its existence or non-existence is not to be determined by mere anatomical appearances, and the mere fact of age alone is never sufficient to imply absence of the procreative power; 2 Witth. & Beck. 396. It may also be the result of infirmity rather than of age or deformity, as the effect of vicious habits; id. 398. As a general rule, diseases which do not affect the brain or spinal cord, and which are not attended with great debility, do not on the part of the male prevent intercourse. In acute febrile diseases temporary impotence is, beyond question, the rule; but the power is rapidly regained, on convalescence. Mumps is occasionally followed by impotence. Habits of drunkenness and the abuse of drugs may act in a similar manner. Emotion is an exceedingly common cause of temporary impotence. Deformity or defects of development in the organs, as well as disease of such organs, are likewise cause of impotence. 2 Taylor, Med. Leg. Jurispr. 1.

Ability to procreate is not the test; it is enough if the parties are able to have sexual intercourse; Powell v. Powell, 18 Kan. 371, 26 Am. Rep. 774; Devanbagh v. Devanbagh, 5 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 554, 28 Am. Dec. 443; 3 Phill. Ecc. 325; and impotency arising after the marriage does not avoid it; 30 L. J. Prob. Mat. & Adm. 73. Unless otherwise by statute, impotence renders a marriage voidable, not void; L. R. 1 Ex. 246; Anonymous, 24 N. J. Eq. 19.

It has been held that, in a divorce case, an examination may be ordered of a defendant alleged to be impotent; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Thul, 29 Kan. 466, 474, 44 Am. Rep. 659. See also 19 Cent. L. J. 144, and 2 Bish. M. & D. § 590.

Impotence is a statutory ground of divorce in most states, and in some courts it is held that jurisdiction of suits for nullity, is impliedly conferred with jurisdiction in divorce; Tiffany, Pers. & Dom. Rel. 39. See Le Barron v. Le Barron, 35 Vt. 365; J. G. v. H. G., 33 Md. 401, 3 Am. Rep. 183. Where this defect existed at the time of the marriage and was incurable, by the ecclesiastical law and the law of several of the American states, the marriage may be declared void ab initio; Com. Dig. Baron and Femme (C 3); Bacon, Abr. Marriage, etc. (E 3); 1 Bla. Com. 440; 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 67; Code, § 17. 10; Devanbagh v. Devanbagh, 5 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 554, 28 Am. Dec. 443; Bascomb v. Bascomb, 25 N. H. 267; but see Burtis v. Burtis, Hopk. Ch. (N. Y.) 557, 14 Am. Dec. 563. Impotency arising from idiocy intervening after the marriage is no ground for divorce in Vermont; Norton v. Norton, 2 Aik. 188. See Merlin, Rep. impuissance. But it seems the party naturally impotent cannot allege that fact for the purpose of obtaining a divorce; 3 Phill. Eccl. 147. See 2 Phill. Eccl. 10; 3 id. 325; 1 Chitty, Med. Jur. 377; Bish. Marr. & D.; 1 Bla. Com. 440; 1 Hagg. 725. See, as to the signs of impotence, 1 Briand, Méd. Eccl. 523; Foderé, Méd. Lég. § 237.

See STERILITY.

IMPOTENTIAM, PROPERTY PROPTER.

A qualified property, which may subsist in animals feræ naturæ, on account of their inability, as where hawks, herons, or other birds build in a person's trees, or coney, etc., make their nests or burrows in a person's land, and have young there, such person has a qualified property in them till they can tly or run away, and then such property expires. 2 Steph. Com. 7th ed. 8.

IMPOUND. To place in a pound goods or cattle distrained or astray. 3 Bla. Com. 12; Newhouse v. Hatch, 126 Mass. 364. See ANIMAL.

Also, to retain in the custody of the law. A suspicious instrument produced at a trial is said to be impounded, when it is ordered by the court to be retained, in case criminal proceedings should be taken.

IMPREScriptIBILITY. The state of being incapable of prescription.

A property which is held in trust is imprescriptible; that is, the trustee cannot acquire a title to it by prescription; nor can the borrower of a thing get a right to it by any lapse of time, unless he claims an adverse right to it during the time required by law.

IMPREScriptIBLE RIGHTS. Such as a person may use or not, at pleasure, since they cannot be lost to him by the claims of another founded on prescription.

IMPRESSION. A case involving a new state of facts or a question yet undetermined and therefore without precedent is usually termed a "case of first impression."

IMPRESSMENT. The arresting and retaining mariners for the king's service. 1 Bla. Com. 420; 3 Steph. Com. 594.

It was "the mode formerly resorted to of manning the British navy. The practice had not only the sanction of custom, but the force of law, for many acts of parliament, from the reign of Philip and Mary to that of George III., had been passed to regulate the system of impressment. Impressment consisted in seizing by force, for service in the royal navy, seamen, river-watermen, and at times landsmen, when state emergencies rendered them necessary. An armed party of reliable men, commanded by officers, usually proceeded to such houses in the seaport towns as were supposed to be the resort of the seafaring population, laid violent hands on all eligible men and conveyed them forcibly to the ships of war in the harbor. As it was not in the nature of sailors to yield without a struggle, many terrible fights took place between the press-gangs and their intended victims—combats in which lives were often lost. In point of justice there is little, if anything, to be said for impressment, which had not even the merit of an impartial selection from the whole available population;" Int. Cyc.

IMPREST MONEY. Money paid on enlisting or impressing soldiers or sailors.

In Old English Law. Money given out for a certain purpose to be afterwards accounted for. Money advanced by the crown to be employed for its own purpose in connection with the government, as in the case of secret service money. See Man. Exch. Pr. 17; 13 Eliz. c. 4; 6 Price 424 a. See PRESS-GANG.

IMPRETIABILIS (Lat.). Beyond price; invaluable.

IMPRIMATUR (Lat.). A license or allowance to one to print.

At one time, before a book could be printed in England, it was requisite that a permission should be obtained; that permission was called an imprimatur. In some countries where the press is liable to censorship, an imprimatur is required.

IMPRIMERE. To impress or press; to imprint or print.

IMPRIMERY. In some of the ancient English statutes this word is used to signify a printing office; the art of printing; a print or impression.

IMPRIMIS (Lat.). In the first place. It is commonly used to denote the first clause in an instrument, especially in wills, item being used to denote the subsequent clauses. This is also its classical and literal meaning. Ainsworth, Dict. See Fleta, lib. 2, c. 54. Imprimitus and imprimum also occur. Du Cange; Prec. Ch. 430; Cases temp. Talb. 110; 6 Madd. 31; Magna Cart. 9 Hen. III.; 2 Anc. Laws & Inst. of Eng. The use of imprimis does not import a precedence of the bequest to which it is prefixed; Everett v. Carr, 59 Me. 325; 1 Rop. Leg. 426.

IMPRISON. To confine; to put in prison; to detain in custody.

The restraint of a person contrary to his will. Co. 2d Inst. 589; U. S. v. Benner, Baldw. 239, Fed. Cas. No. 14,568; Johnson v. Tompkins, Baldw. 600, Fed. Cas. No. 7,416.

It may be in a place made use of for purposes of imprisonment generally, or in one used only on the particular occasion, or by words and an array of force, without bolts or bars, in any locality whatever; Pike v. Hanson, 9 N. H. 491; Smith v. State, 7 Humphr. (Tenn.) 43; Webb, Poll. Torts 259; 7 Q. B. 742; but it cannot be applied to the detention of a youth in a reform school; State v. Brown, 50 Minn. 353, 52 N. W. 935, 16 L. R. A. 691, 36 Am. St. Rep. 651. A forcible detention in the street, or the touching of a person by a peace-officer by way of arrest, are also imprisonments; Bac. Abr. Trespass (D 3); Lawson v. Buzines, 3 Harr. (Del.) 416. See Smith v. State, 7 Humphr. (Tenn.) 43; Coman v. Storm, 26 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 84. It is not necessary to touch the person, but it is enough if he is within the power of the officer and submits; Mowry v. Chase, 100 Mass. 79. Forcibly taking a person in an omnibus across a city; Moore v. Thompson, 92 Mich. 498, 52 N. W. 1000; or where a person is constantly guarded by detectives so that he is at no time free to come and go as he pleases, but his movements are at all times subject to the control and direction of those who have him in charge; Fotheringham v. Express Co., 36 Fed. 252, 1 L. R. A. 474; constitute imprisonment. It has been decided that lifting up a person in his chair and carrying him out of the room in which he was sitting with others, and excluding him from the room, was not an imprisonment; 1 Chitty, Pr. 48; and the merely giving charge of a person to a peace-officer, not followed by any actual apprehension of the person, does not amount to an imprisonment, though the party, to avoid it, next day attend at a police court; 1 C. & P. 153; and if, in consequence of a message from a sheriff's officer holding a writ, the defendant execute and send him a bail bond, such submission to the process will not constitute an arrest; 6 B. & C. 528; D. & R. 233. No other warrant is necessary for the detention of a prisoner than a certified copy of the judgment against him; In re Brown, 32 Cal. 48; or of the precept on which the arrest was made; Atherton v. Gilmore, 9 N. H. 185.

Where there is a constitutional provision that there shall be no imprisonment for debt except in cases of fraud, fraud must be found by a jury and judgment entered in conformity therewith, in order to warrant such imprisonment; Ledford v. Emerson, 143 N. C. 527, 55 S. E. 969, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 362. An act authorizing imprisonment of one who obtains food and lodging without paying therefor is not an unconstitutional imprisonment for debt; In re Milecke, 52 Wash. 312, 100 Pac. 743, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 259, 132 Am. St. Rep. 968; Ex parte King, 102 Ala. 182, 15 South. 524; State v. Yardley, 95 Tenn. 546, 32 S. W. 481, 34 L. R. A. 656; nor for contempt for wilful refusal to obey an order to pay suit money and temporary alimony pending a divorce suit; Ex parte Davis, 101 Tex. 607, 111 S. W. 394, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1140; Daly v. Daly, 80 Conn. 609, 69 Atl. 1021; State v. Cook, 66 Ohio St. 566, 64 N. E. 567, 58 L. R. A. 625; Bronk v. State, 43 Fla. 461, 31 South. 248, 99 Am. St. Rep. 119. But contra of a statute providing for the imprisonment of one who after receiving advances commits a breach of contract for farm labor; Ex parte Hollman, 79 S. C. 9, 60 S. E. 19, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 242, 14 Ann. Cas. 1105. See PEONAGE.

See FALSE IMPRISONMENT; ARREST; INFAMY; FELONY; ACCUMULATIVE SENTENCES; POOR DEBTORS.

IMPRISTI. Followers; partisans; adherents; supporters. Those who take the part of or side with another in attack or defence.

IMPROPER. Not suitable; unfit; not suited to the character, time, and place. Chadbourne v. Newcastle, 48 N. H. 196.

IMPROPER FEUD. "Under the title of improper or derivative feuds were comprised all such as do not fall within the other descriptions; such, for instance, as were originally bartered and sold to the feudatory for a price; such as were held upon base or less honorable service, or upon a rent, in lieu of military services; such as were in themselves, alienable, without mutual license; and such as might descend indifferently either to males or females. But, where a difference was not expressed in the creation, such new created feuds did in all respects follow the nature of an original, genuine, and proper feud." 1 Bla. Com. 58. See FEUDUM.

IMPROPER NAVIGATION. The navigation of a ship without due care and skill. It includes anything wrongly done with a ship, or any part of it, in the course of the voyage. L. R. 6 C. P. 563.

IMPROPRIATION. The act of employing the revenues of a church living to one's own use: it is also a parsonage or ecclesiastical living in the hands of a layman, or which descends by inheritance. Techn. Dict.

The transfer to a layman of a benefice to which the cure of souls is annexed with an obligation to provide with a performance of the spiritual duties attached to the benefice is said to be nearly the same as an appropriation. Holth. Before the Reformation the terms were used without a very clear distinction, and appropriations by spiritual persons and incorporation were termed impropriation. Later the use of the latter word was restricted by Spelman and others to appropriation by laymen. Moz. & W.

The distinction is thus clearly stated: The practice of impropriation differs from the somewhat similar but more ancient usage of appropriation, inasmuch as the latter supposes the revenues of the appropriated benefice to be transferred to ecclesiastical or quasi-ecclesiastical persons or bodies, as to a certain dignitary in a convent, a college, a hospital; while impropriation applies that the temporalities of the benefice are enjoyed by a layman; the name, according to Spelman, being given in consequence of their thus being improperly applied, diverted from their legitimate use. The practice of impropriation, and still more that of appropriation, as in the case of monasteries, etc., and other religious houses, prevailed extensively in England before the Reformation; and on the suppression of the monasteries, all such rights were (by 27 Henry VIII. c. 28, and 31 Henry VIII. c. 13) vested in the crown, and were by the crown freely transferred to laymen, to whose heirs have thus descended, not only the right to the tithes, but also in many cases the entire property of rectories. The spiritual duties of such rectories are discharged by a clergyman, who is called a vicar, and who receives a certain portion of the emoluments of the living, generally consisting of a part of the glebe-land of the parsonage, together with what are called the "small tithes" of the parish. Int. Cyc.

The word impropriation is said to be derived from in proprietatem, because the living is held as a lay property. Phill. Ecc. L. 275.

An impropriate rector was the term applied to a lay rector as opposed to a spiritual rector; and tithes in the hands of a lay owner were called impropriate tithes, as those in the hands of a spiritual owner were termed appropriate tithes.

See 1 Bla. Com. 384; 2 Steph. Com. 678; Brown, Dict.; APPROPRIATION.

IMPROVE. To cultivate; to reclaim. Clark v. Phelps, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 190.

"Improved" land may mean simply land "occupied;" it is not a precise technical word; Bond v. Fay, 8 Allen (Mass.) 213; it includes ground appropriated for a railroad; Road in Lancaster City, 68 Pa. 396.

Land on which there are three dwelling-houses, besides suitable farm buildings, which has been farmed for the last twenty years, and from which, in the last eighteen years, there has been received $12,000 in rents, besides a share of the landlord in the growing crops, is not "unimproved real estate," as that phrase is used in a will; Murphy v. Taylor, 173 Pa. 320, 33 Atl. 1041; and the fact that the property was bought by the testator for the purpose of being cut into city lots, and sold as such, does not render it "unimproved" land; id.

IMPROVEMENT. An amelioration in the condition of real or personal property effected by the expenditure of labor or money for the purpose of rendering it useful for other purposes than those for which it was originally used, or more useful for the same purposes. It includes repairs or addition to buildings, and the erection of fences, barns, etc.: Appeal of Schenley, 70 Pa. 98; French v. New York, 16 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 220; Wimberly v. Mayberry, 94 Ala. 240, 10 South. 157, 14 L. R. A. 305; Fay v. Fay, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 93; Hartford & N. Y. Steamboat Co. v. City, 78 N. Y. 1; Nicoll v. Burke, id. 581; or a windmill; Phelps & Bigelow Windmill Co. v. Baker, 49 Kan. 434, 30 Pac. 472.

As between the rightful owner of lands and an occupant who in good faith has put on improvements, the land with its improvements belongs to the rightful owner of the land, without compensation for the increased value at common law; Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 1, 5 L. Ed. 547; McCoy v. Grandy, 3 Ohio St. 463; Frear v. Hardenbergh, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 272, 4 Am. Dec. 356; Albee v. May, 2 Paine 74, Fed. Cas. No. 134; Stewart v. Matheny, 66 Miss. 21, 5 South. 387, 14 Am. St. Rep. 538; Mull v. Graham, 7 Ind. App. 561, 35 N. E. 134; though the rule may be otherwise in equity; 3 Atk. 134; *Humphreys v. Ct. 374, 33 L. Ed. 740; see Case v. Kelly, 133 U. S. 21, 10 Sup. Ct. 216, 33 L. Ed. 513; and by statute in some of the states; Baggot v. Fleming, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 451; Withington v. Corey, 2 N. H. 115; Strong v. Hunt, 20 Vt. 614; Lamar v. Minter, 13 Ala. 31; Lombard v. Ruggles, 9 Greenl. (Me.) 62; Davis' Lessee v. Powell, 13 Ohio 308; *Bryant v. A life tenant is not entitled to payment for improvements made by him without the consent of the remaindermen; Appeal of Datesman, 127 Pa. 348, 17 Atl. 1086, 1100; Van Bibber v. Williamson, 37 Fed. 756; Smalley v. Isaacson, 40 Minn. 450, 42 N. W. 352. In determining the right to recover for improvements placed on land, ordinary repairs necessary for the enjoyment of the object sold cannot be classed as improvements; McKenzie v. Bacon, 41 La. Ann. 6, 5 South. 640.

As to dower in improvements, see DOWER, and as to improvement in Patent Law, see PATENT.

As to improvements of streets and assessments therefor, see ASSESSMENT.

IMPROVIDENCE. Such want of care and foresight in the management of property as would be likely to render it less valuable and impair the interests of those who may be or become entitled to it. Such is the construction of the word in a statute excluding one found incompetent by reason of improvidence, to perform the duties of an administrator; Coope v. Lowerre, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 45. See also Emerson v. Bowers, 14 N. Y. 449; Freeman v. Kellogg, 4 Redf. (N. Y.) 218.

IMPUBES (Lat.). In Civil Law. One who is more than seven years old, or out of infancy, and who has not attained the age of puberty; that is, if a boy, till he has attained his full age of fourteen years, and if a girl, her full age of twelve years. Domat, Liv. Prél. t. 2, s. 2, n. 8.

IMPUNITY. Freedom or safety from punishment. The phrase impunitive damages was said to be unintelligible; Dillon v. Rogers, 36 Tex. 153.

IMPUTATIO. In Civil Law. Legal liability.

IMPUTATION OF PAYMENT. In Civil Law. The application of a payment made by a debtor to his creditor.

The rules covering this subject are thus stated, substantially, in Howe, Studies in the Civil Law, 156:

1. The debtor may apply his payment as he pleases, with the exception that in case of a debt carrying interest it must be first applied to discharging the interest.

2. If the debtor makes no application, the creditor may apply the funds by informing the debtor at the time of payment.

3. The law imputes in the neglect of the parties to do so, and it will be made by the law in favor of the debtor. It directs that imputation which would have been best for the debtor at the time of payment. Hence it applies the funds to obligations most burdensome to the debtor: e. g. to a debt which is not disputed, rather than to one that is; to a debt that is due rather than to one that is not; to one on which the debtor may be arrested, rather than to one on which he cannot; to a debt for which the debtor has given sureties, rather than to one which he owes singly; to a debt for which the debtor is principal obligor, rather than one of which he is merely surety; to a mortgage rather than to an unsecured debt, and to a debt which would render the debtor insolvent if unpaid, rather than to any less important one.

4. Of debts of equal grade, if there be no imputation by the parties, the application will be to that of the longest standing.

5. To debts of the same date, and in other respects equal, the application will be pro rata.

6. As to debts bearing interest, the imputation is to interest before principal.

When the creditor is to pay himself out of a fund realized,—for example, from the sale of property pledged,—he should apply the money to the debt secured by the pledge, rather than to some other; to interest before principal; to the debt of the highest rank, rather than to those of lower rank; and if there are several of equal rank then pro rata.

Some of these rules have been followed in England and America, some decisions following the exact language of the Roman law. See 1 Sto. Eq. Jur. 13th ed. § 459; but see APPROPRIATION OF PAYMENTS.

In Louisiana the preceding civil law rules are in force. The statutory enactment, Civ. Code, art. 2159, is a translation of the Code Napoléon, art. 1253–1256, slightly altered. See Pothier, Obl. n. 528, by Evans, and notes. Payment is imputed first to the discharge of interest; Hynson v. Maddens, 1 Mart. N. S. (La.) 571; Estebene v. Estebene, 5 La. Ann. 738. But if the interest was not binding, being usurious, the payment must go to the principal; Hynes v. Cobb, 2 La. Ann. 363; Compton's Ex'rs v. Compton, 5 La. Ann. 616. The law applies a payment to the most burdensome debt; Hanse & Hepp v. Ins. Co., 10 La. 1, 29 Am. Dec. 456; Pargoud v. Griffings' Adm'r, 10 La. 357; Louisiana State Bank v. Barrow, 2 La. Ann. 405; McElrath v. Dupuy, 2 La. Ann. 520. A creditor's receipt is an irrevocable imputation, except in cases of surprise or fraud; Bloodworth v. Jacobs, 2 La. Ann. 24; Adams v. Bank, 3 La. Ann. 351. See APPROPRIATION OF PAYMENTS.

IMPUTED NEGLIGENCE. See NEGLIGENCE.

IN. A preposition which is used in real estate law to designate title, seisin, or possession, or when one is said to be "in by lease of his lessor." It may be as an abbreviation of invested or intitled, or of in possession.

IN ACTION. A thing is said to be in action when it is not in possession, and for its recovery, the possessor unwilling, an action is necessary. 2 Bla. Com. 396. See CHOSE IN ACTION.

IN ADVERSUM. Where a decree is obtained against one who resists, it is termed "a decree not by consent but in adversum."

Jenkins v. Eldredge, 3 Sto. C. C. 318, Fed. Cas. No. 7,267.

IN ÆQUA MANU. In equal hand. Fleta, l. 3, c. 14, § 2.

IN ÆQUALI JURE (Lat.). In equal right. See MAXIMS.

IN ÆQUALI MANU. In equal hand; held indifferently between two parties.

Where an instrument was deposited by the parties to it, in the hands of a third person, to hold it under certain conditions or stipulations it was said to be held in æquali manu. Reg. Orig. 28.

IN ALIENO SOLO. On another's land. 2 Steph. Com. 20.

IN ALIO LOCO. See CEPIT IN ALIO LOCO.

IN AMBIGUO. In doubt.

IN APERTA LUCE. In open daylight; in the day-time. 9 Co. 65 b.

IN APICIBUS JURIS. Among the subtleties or extreme doctrines of the law. 1 Kames, Eq. 190.

IN ARBITRIUM JUDICIS. At the pleasure of the judge.

IN ARCTA ET SALVA CUSTODIA. In close and safe custody. 3 Bla. Com. 415.

IN ARTICULO. In a moment; immediately. C. 1, 34, 2.

IN ARTICULO MORTIS. At the point of death.

IN AUTRE, or AUTER, DROIT (L. Fr.). In another's right. As representing another. An executor, administrator, or trustee sues in autre droit. See ESTATE PUR AUTRE VIE.

IN BANCO. In banc (q. v.).

IN BLANK. Without restriction. Applied to indorsements on promissory notes where no indorsee is named. See INDORSEMENT.

IN BONIS. Among the goods, or property; in actual possession. Inst. 4, 2, 2. In bonis defuncti, among the goods of the deceased.

IN CAMERA. A case is said to be heard in camera when the doors of the court are closed and only persons concerned in the case are admitted. This is done when the facts are such as to make a private hearing expedient, as in some divorce cases. The term belongs rather to the English practice in which the power to grant private hearings in certain cases is established, though there has been a difference of opinion as to its exact limitations. The term is not much used in the United States. See OPEN COURT.

IN CAPITA (Lat.). To or by the heads or polls. Thus, where persons succeed to estates in capita, they take each an equal share; so, where a challenge to a jury is in capita, it is to the polls, or to the jurors individually, as opposed to a challenge to the array. 3 Bla.

Com. 361. Per capita is more commonly used in the former instance.

IN CAPITE (Lat.). In chief. A tenant in capite was one who held directly of the crown, 2 Bla. Com. 60, whether by knight's service or socage. Chal. R. P. 5. But tenure in capite was of two kinds, general and special; the first from the king (caput regni), the second from a lord (caput feudi). A holding of an honor in the king's lands, but not immediately of him, was yet a holding in capite; Kitch. 127; Dy. 44; Fitzh. N. B. 5. Abolished by 12 Car. II. c. 24.

IN CASU PROVISIO. In a (or the) case provided. In tali casu editum et provisum, in such case made and provided. Touch. Pl. 164, 165.

IN CHIEF. Principal; primary; directly obtained. A term applied to the evidence obtained from a witness upon his examination in court by the party producing him, in relation to the matter in issue at the trial. The examination so conducted for this purpose.

Evidence or examination in chief is to be distinguished from evidence given on cross-examination and from evidence given upon the voir dire.

Evidence in chief should be confined to such matters as the pleadings and the opening warrant; and a departure from this rule will be sometimes highly inconvenient, if not fatal. Suppose, for example, that two assaults have been committed, one in January and the other in February, and the plaintiff prove his cause of action to have been the assault in January; he cannot abandon that, and afterwards prove another committed in February, unless the pleadings and openings extend to both; 1 Campb. 473. See, also, 6 C. & P. 73; 1 Mood. & R. 282.

This matter, however, is one of practice; and a great variety of rules exist in the different states of the United States, the leading object, however, being in all cases the same,—to prevent the plaintiff from introducing in evidence a different case from the one which he had prepared the defendant to expect from the pleadings.

IN COMMENDAM. See COMMENDAM.

IN COMMUNI. In common. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 4, § 2.

IN CONSIDERATIONE EJUS. In his sight or view. 12 Mod. 95.

IN CONSIDERATIONE INDE. In consideration thereof. 3 Salk. 64, pl. 5.

IN CONSIDERATIONE LEGIS. In consideration or contemplation of law; in abeyance. Dyer 102 b.

IN CONSIDERATIONE PRÆMISSORUM. In consideration of the premises. 1 Strange 535.

IN CONSIMILI CASU. See CONSIMILI CASU.

IN CONTINENTI. Immediately; without any interval or intermission. Dig. 44, 5, 1. Sometimes written in one word, "incontinenti."

IN CONTUMACIAM. See EXTRADITION.

IN CORPORE. In body or substance; in a material thing or object.

IN CRASTINO. On the morrow. In crastino Animarum, on the morrow of All Souls. 1 Bla. Com. 342.

IN CUJUS REI TESTIMONIUM. In testimony whereof; q. v.

IN CUSTODIA LEGIS (Lat.). In the custody of the law. In general, when things are in custodia legis, they cannot be distrained, nor otherwise interfered with by a private person, or by another officer acting under authority of a different court or jurisdiction; Hagan v. Lucas, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 400, 9 L. Ed. 470; Taylor v. Carryl, 20 How. (U. S.) 583, 15 L. Ed. 1028, and cases cited; Brady v. Johnson, 75 Md. 445, 26 Atl. 49, 20 L. R. A. 737. See CUSTODIA LEGIS.

IN DELICTO. In fault. See IN PARI DELICTO.

IN DIEM. For a day; for the space of a day. Calv. Lex.

IN DOMINICO. In demesne. In dominico suo ut de feodo, in his demesne as of fee.

IN DORSO. On the back, from which come indorse, indorsement. 2 Bla. Com. 468. In dorso recordi, on the back of the record. 5 Co. 45.

IN DUBIO. In doubt; either in a condition of uncertainty, or in a doubtful case.

IN DUPLO. In double. Damna in duplo, double damages. Fleta, 4. 10. 1.

IN EADEM CAUSA. In the same state or condition. Calv. Lex.

IN EMULATIONEM VICINI. In hatred or envy of a neighbor. Where an act is done or action brought, solely to hurt or distress another, it is said to be in emulationem vicini. 1 Kames, Eq. 56.

IN EQUITY. In a court of chancery in contra-distinction to a court of law; within the contemplation or purview of equity jurisprudence; according to the doctrine of equity.

IN ESSE (Lat.). In being. In existence. An event which may happen is in posse; when it has happened, it is in esse. The term is often used of liens or estates. A child in its mother's womb is, for some purposes, regarded as in esse; Hone v. Van Schaick, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 488.

IN EST DE JURE (Lat.). It is implied of right or by law.

IN EVIDENCE. The proofs in a cause which have been offered and admitted are said to be in evidence.

IN EXCAMBIA. In exchange. The technical and formal words in an old deed of exchange.

IN EXECUTION AND PURSUANCE OF. Words used to express the fact that the instrument is intended to carry into effect some other instrument, as in case of a deed in execution of a power. They are said to be synonymous with "to effect the object of;" U. S. v. Nunnemacher, 7 Biss. 129, Fed. Cas. No. 15,903.

IN EXITU. In issue. De materia in exitu, of the matter in issue. 12 Mod. 372.

IN EXTENSO. Fully; at length; a copy of a document made verbatim.

IN EXTREMIS (Lat.). At the very end. In the last moments; on the point of death.

IN FACIE CURIÆ. In the face of the court. Dyer 28.

IN FACIE ECCLESIAE (Lat.). In the face or presence of the church. A marriage is said to be made in facie ecclesiae when made in a consecrated church or chapel, or by a clerk in orders elsewhere; and one of these two things is necessary to a marriage in England in order to the wife's having dower, unless there be a dispensation or license; 1 Bish. Mar. Div. & Sep. 404. But see 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 85; 1 Vict. c. 22; 3 & 4 Vict. c. 72. It was anciently the practice to marry at the church door, and there make a verbal assignment of dower. These verbal assignments, to prevent fraud, were necessarily held valid only when made in facie et ad ostium ecclesiae. See 2 Bla. Com. 103; Taylor, Gloss.

IN FACIENDO (Lat.). In doing. Story, Eq. Jur. § 1308.

IN FACT. Words used in pleading to introduce an amount of fact,—as "the said plaintiff (or defendant) further in fact saith,"—indicating that what follows is a statement of acts of parties as distinguished from a legal conclusion or intendment. The latter in equity pleading, when it may frequently be proper, after a statement of the facts on which the conclusion rests, begins,—“and the defendant is advised that, etc.” When pleadings were in Latin the words in facto were used, thus in facto dicit, he, in fact, says. See 1 Salk. 22 Pl. 1.

IN FAVOREM LIBERTATIS (Lat.). In favor of liberty.

IN FAVOREM VITÆ (Lat.). In favor of life.

IN FEODO. In fee. Bract. f. 207; Fleta, l. 2, c. 64, § 15. Seisitus in feodo, seised in fee. Id. 8. 7. 1.

IN FIERI (Lat.). In process of completion. A thing is said to rest in fieri when it is not yet complete: e. g. the records of a court were anciently held to be in fieri, or incomplete, till they were recorded on parchment, but now till the giving of judgment, after which they can be amended only during the same term. 2 B. & Ad. 791; 3 Bla. Com. 407. It is also used of contracts.

IN FINE (Lat. at the end). A term used with a citation to denote that it is at the end of the section, chapter, book, law, or paragraph.

IN FORMA PAUPERIS (Lat.). In the character or form of a poor man.

When a person is so poor that he cannot bear the charges of suing at law or in equity, upon making oath that he is not worth five pounds, and bringing a certificate from a counsellor at law that he believes him to have a just cause, he is permitted to sue in forma pauperis, in the manner of a pauper; that is, he is allowed to have original writs and subpoenas gratis, and counsel assigned him without fee; 3 Bla. Com. 400. See Williams v. Wilkins, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 65; Brown v. Story, 1 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 588; Bolton v. Gardner, 3 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 273; Richardson v. Richardson, 5 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 58; 2 Moll. 475. This applies (Act of July 20, 1892) to the circuit court, but not to an appeal to the circuit court of appeals; Taylor v. Express Co., 164 Fed. 616, 90 C. C. A. 526; nor to the supreme court; Bradford v. R. Co., 195 U. S. 243, 25 Sup. Ct. 55, 49 L. Ed. 178.

See PAUPER.

IN FORO. In the forum (q. v.); before the tribunal or court.

IN FORO CONSCIENTIÆ (Lat.). Before the tribunal of conscience; conscientiously. The term is applied to moral obligations as distinct from the obligations which the law enforces. In the sale of property, for example, the concealment of facts by the vendee which may enhance the price is wrong in foro conscientiae, but there is no legal obligation on the part of the vendee to disclose them, and the contract will be good if not vitiated by fraud; Pothier, Vent. part 2, c. 2, n. 233; 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 185, note c.

IN FORO CONTENTIOSO. In the tribunal or forum of litigation.

IN FORO ECCLESIASTICO. In an ecclesiastical forum, tribunal, or court. Fleta, l. 2, c. 57, § 14. Early in the reign of Henry III., the Episcopal constitutions were published, forbidding all ecclesiastics to appear as advocates in foro sæculari, nor did they long continue to act as judges there, not caring to take the oath of office which was found necessary. 1 Bla. Com. 20.

IN FORO SÆCULARI. In a secular court. See last title; 1 Bla. Com. 20; Fleta 2. 57. 14.

IN FRAUDEM CREDITORUM (Lat.). In fraud of creditors or with an intent to defraud them. Inst. 1. 6. 3.

IN FRAUDEM LEGIS (Lat.). In fraud of the law; contrary to law. Taylor, Gloss. Using process of law for a fraudulent purpose.

If a person gets an affidavit of service of declaration in ejectment, and thereupon gets judgment and turns the tenant out, when he has no manner of title in a house, he is liable as a felon, for he used the process of law in fraudem legis; 1 Ld. Raym. 276; Sid. 254.

An act done in fraudem legis cannot give a right of action in the courts of the country whose laws are evaded; Mumford v. Hallett, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 433.

IN FULL. Complete, or without abbreviation, e. g. a copy of a paper. Of the entire amount due, as used in a receipt for money.

IN FULL LIFE. Neither physically nor civilly dead. The term life alone has also been taken in the same sense, as including natural and civil life: e. g. a lease made to a person during life is determined by a civil death, but if during natural life it would be otherwise. 2 Co. 48. It is a translation of the French phrase en plein vie. Law Fr. & L. Lat. Dict.

IN FUTURO. At a future time. The alternative expressions are in præsenti and in esse. 2 Bla. Com. 166, 175.

IN GENERALI PASSAGIO (L. Lat.). In the general passage; passagium being a journey, or, more properly, a voyage, and especially when used alone or with the adjectives magnum, generale, etc.,—the journey to Jerusalem of a crusader, especially of a king. 36 Hen. III.; 3 Prynne, Collect. 767; Du Cange.

In generali passagio was an excuse for non-appearance in a suit, which put off the hearing sine die; but in simplici peregrinatione or passagio—i. e. being absent on a private pilgrimage to the Holy Land—put off the hearing for a shorter time. Bracton 338.

IN GENERE (Lat.). In kind; of the same kind. Things which when bailed may be restored in genere, as distinguished from those which must be returned in specie, or specifically, are called fungibles. Kaufman's MacKeldey, Civ. Law § 148, note.

Heineccius, Elem. Jur. Civ. § 619, defines genus as what the philosophers call species, viz.: a kind. See Dig. 12. 1. 2. 1. See LOAN FOR CONSUMPTION.

IN GREMIO LEGIS (Lat.). In the bosom of the law. This is a figurative expression, by which is meant that the subject is under the protection of the law: as, where the title to land is in abeyance. See GREMIUM; IN NUBIBUS; ABEYANCE.

IN GROSS. At large; not appurtenant or appendant, but annexed to a man's person: e. g. common granted to a man and his heirs by deed is common in gross; or common in gross may be claimed by prescriptive right. 2 Bla. Com. 34. See EASEMENT.

IN HAC PARTE. In this behalf; on this part or side.

IN HOC. In this.

IN IISDEM TERMINIS, IN IISDEM VERBIS. In the same terms. 9 East 487.

IN INDIVIDUO. In the distinct individual, specific, or identical form. Sto. Bailm. § 97.

IN INFINITUM. Indefinitely; imports to infinity.

IN INITIALIBUS (Lat.). In Scotch Law. In the preliminaries. Before a witness is examined as to the cause in which he is to testify, he must deny bearing malice or ill-will, being instructed what to say, or having been bribed, and these matters are called initialia testimonii, and the examination on them is said to be in initialibus: it is similar to our voir dire. Bell, Dict. Initialia Testimonii; Erskine, Inst. p. 451; Halkerston, Tech. Terms.

IN INITIO. At the beginning; in the beginning, as in initio legis, at the outset of the suit. Bract. f. 400.

IN INTEGRUM (Lat.). The original condition. See RESITUTIO IN INTEGRUM. Vicat, Voc. Jur. integer.

IN INVITUM (Lat.). Unwillingly. Taylor, Gloss. Against an unwilling party (or one who has not given his consent); by operation of law. Wharton, Dict.

IN IPSIS FAUCIBUS. In the very throat. A vessel just entering a port is said to be in ipsis faucibus portæ.

IN ITINERE (Lat.). On a journey; on the way. Justices in itinere were justices in eyre, who went on circuit through the kingdom for the purpose of hearing causes. 3 Bla. Com. 351; Spelman, Gloss. In itinere is used in the law of lien, and is there equivalent to in transitu; that is, not yet delivered to vendee.

IN JUDGMENT. In a court of justice.

A case is said to be in judgment when it has proceeded so far as that the successful party is entitled to judgment.

In a judgment seat; Lord Hale was characterized "one of the greatest and best men who ever sat in judgment." 1 East 306.

IN JUDICIO (Lat.). In or by a judicial proceeding; in court. In judicio non creditur nisi juratis, in judicial proceedings no one is believed unless on oath. Cro. Car. 64. See Bracton, fol. 98 b, 106, 287 b.

IN CIVIL LAW. The proceedings before a prætor, from the bringing the action till issue joined, were said to be in jure; but after issue joined, when the cause came before the judex, the proceedings were said to be in judicio. See JUDEX.

IN JURE (Lat. in law). IN CIVIL LAW. A phrase which denotes the proceedings in a cause before the prætor, up to the time when it is laid before a judex; that is, till issue joined (litis contestatio); also, the proceedings in causes tried throughout by the prætor (cognitiones extraordinariæ). Vicat, Voc. Jur. Jus.

IN ENGLISH LAW. In law; rightfully; in right; thus, in jure, non remota causa, sed proxima, spectatur.

IN JURE ALTERIUS. In another's right. Hale, Anal. § 26.

IN JURE PROPRIO. In one's right. Hale, Anal. § 26.

IN JUS VOCARE. To call, cite, or summon to court. Inst. 4, 16, 3; Calv. Lex. In jus vocando, summoning to court. 3 Bla. Com. 279.

IN KIND. Of the same class, description, or kind of property, as a deposit, mandate, or loan which is said to be returnable in kind where the terms and character of the transaction do not require the return of the identical money, security, or thing, but only its equivalent in amount or kind. See IN GENERALE.

IN LAW. In contemplation of law; implied by law; subsisting by force of law. See IN FACT.

IN LECTO MORTALI. On a deathbed. Fleta, 5, 28, 12.

IN LIBERAM ELEMOSINAM. In free alms. Land given for a charitable motive was said to be so given. See FRANKALMOIN.

IN LIMINE (Lat.). In or at the beginning. This phrase is frequently used: as, the courts are anxious to check crimes in limine.

IN LITEM (Lat.). For a suit; to the suit. Greenl. Ev. § 348.

IN LOCO. In place; in lieu; instead; in the place or stead. Townsh. Pl. 38.

IN LOCO PARENTIS (Lat.). In the place of a parent: as, the master stands towards his apprentice in loco parentis. See APPRENTICESHIP; GUARDIAN.

IN MAJOREM CAUTELAM. For greater security. 1 Stra. 105.

IN MALAM PARTEM. In a bad sense; so as to wear an evil appearance.

IN MEDIAS RES (Lat.). In the middle of things; into the heart of the subject, without preface or introduction.

IN MEDIO. Intermediate.

IN MERCY. To be in mercy is to be at the discretion of the king, lord, or judge in punishing any offence not directly censured by the law. Thus, to be in the grievous mercy of the king is to be in hazard of a great penalty; 11 Hen. VI. c. 6. So, where the plaintiff failed in his suit, he and his pledges were in the mercy of the lord, pro falso clamore suo. This is retained nominally on the record; 3 Bla. Com. 376. So the defendant is in mercy if he fail in his defence; id. 398. See MERCY; Cunningham.

IN MISERICORDIA (Lat. in mercy). The entry on the record where a party was in mercy was, Ideo in misericordia, etc. The phrase was used because the punishment in such cases ought to be moderate. See Magna Cart. c. 14; Bracton, lib. 4, tr. 5, c. 6. Sometimes misericordia means the being quit of all amercements (q. v.).

IN MITIORI SENSU (Lat. in a milder acceptance).

A phrase denoting a rule of construction formerly adopted in slander suits, the object of which was to construe phrases, if possible, so that they would not support an action. Ingenuity was continually exercised to devise or discover a meaning which by some remote possibility the speaker might have intended; and some ludicrous examples of this ingenuity may be found. To say of a man who was making his livelihood by buying and selling merchandise, "He is a base, broken rascal; he has broken twice, and I'll make him break a third time," was gravely asserted not to be actionable,—"ne poet dar porter action, car poet estre intend de burstness de belly." Latch 114. And to call a man a thief was declared to be no slander for this reason: "perhaps the speaker might mean he had stolen a lady's heart."

The rule now is to construe words agreeably to the meaning usually attached to them. It was long, however, before this rule, rational as it is, and supported by every legal analogy, prevailed in actions for words, and before the favorite doctrine of construing words in their mildest sense, in direct opposition to the finding of the jury, was finally abandoned by the courts. "For some inscrutable reason," said Gibson, J., "the earlier English judges discouraged the action of slander by all sorts of evasions, such as the doctrine of mitiori sensu, and by requiring the slanderous charge to have been uttered with the technical precision of an indictment. But, as this discouragement of the remedy by process of law was found inversely to encourage the remedy by battery, it has been gradually falling into disrepute, inasmuch that the precedents in Croke's Reports are beginning to be considered apocryphal." Bash v. Sommer, 20 Pa. 162; Walton v. Singleton, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 451, 10 Am. Dec. 472; Wilson v. Hogg, 1 N. & McC. (S. C.) 217; Walker v. Winn, 8 Mass. 248; Hoyle v. Young, 1 Wash. (Va.) 152, 1 Am. Dec. 446; Heard, Lib. & Sl. § 162.

IN MODUM ASSISÆ. In the manner or form of an assize. Bract. fol. 183 b. In modum juratæ, in manner of a jury. Id. fol. 181 b.

IN MORA (Lat.). In delay; in default. In the civil law a borrower in mora is one who fails to return the thing borrowed at the proper time; Sto. Bailm. § 254. In Scotch law a creditor is in mora who has failed in respect to the diligence required in levying an attachment on the property of the debtor. Bell, Dict.

IN MORTUA MANU (Lat. in a dead hand). Property owned by religious societies was said to be held in mortua manu, or in mortmain, since religious men were civiliter mortui. 1 Bla. Com. 479; Taylor, Gloss.

IN NOMINE DEI, AMEN. In the name of God, Amen. A phrase, anciently used in wills and many other instruments, the translation of which is often used in wills at the present day, but chiefly by ignorant draughtsmen or testators.

IN NOTIS. In the notes.

IN NUBIBUS (Lat.). In the clouds; in abeyance; in custody of law. In nubibus, in mare, in terra vel, in custodia legis: in the air, sea, or earth, or in the custody of the law. Taylor, Gloss. In case of abeyance, the inheritance is figuratively said to rest in nubibus, or in gremio legis: e. g. in case of a grant of life estate to A, and afterwards to heirs of Richard, Richard in this case, being alive, has no heirs until his death, and, consequently, the inheritance is considered as resting in nubibus, or in the clouds, till the death of A, when the contingent remainder either vests or is lost and the inheritance goes over. See 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 107, n.; 1 Co. 137; ABEYANCE.

IN NULLIUS BONIS. Among the goods or property of no person; belonging to no person, as treasure-trove and wreck were anciently considered.

IN NULO EST ERRATUM (Lat.). A plea to errors assigned on proceedings in error, by which the defendant in error affirms there is no error in the record. As to the effect of such plea, see Whiting v. Cochran, 9 Mass. 532; 1 Burr. 410. It is a general rule that the plea in nullo est erratum confesses the fact assigned for error; Dane, Abr. Index; but not a matter assigned contrary to the record; Moody v. Vreeland, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 55; Bacon, Abr. Error (G).

IN ODIUM SPOLIATORIS (Lat.). In hatred of a despoiler. All things are presumed against a despoiler or wrongdoer: in odium spoliatoris omnia præsumuntur. See MAXIMS.

If a man wrongfully opened a bundle of papers, sealed and left in his hands, so that he may have altered them or abstracted some, all presumptions will be taken against him in settling an account depending on the papers; 1 Vern. 452; the same rule is applied if one withhold evidence bearing on the case; 18 Jur. 703; or an agreement with which he is charged; 9 Cl. & F. 775. See at large 1 Sm. L. Cas. 9th Am. ed. 638; Br. Leg. Max. 8th Am. ed. 938; SPOLIATION.

IN OMNIBUS. In all things; on all points. "A case parallel in omnibus;" 10 Mod. 104. A modern phrase to the same effect is "on all fours" (q. v.).

IN PACATO SOLO. In a country which is at peace.

IN PACE DEI ET REGIS. In the peace of God and the king. Fleta 1, c. 31, § 6. Formal words in old appeals of murder.

IN PAIS. This phrase, as applied to a legal transaction, primarily means that it has taken place without legal formalities or proceedings. Thus a widow was said to make a request in pais for her dower when she simply applied to the heir without issuing a writ; Co. Litt. 32b. So conveyances are divided into those by matter of record and those by matter in pais. In some cases, however, "matters in pais" are opposed not only to "matters of record," but also to "matters in writing," i. e. deeds, as where estoppel by deed is distinguished from estoppel by matter in pais; id. 352a; 4 Kent 260. See ESTOPPEL.

IN PAPER. In English Practice. A term used of a record until its final enrolment on the parchment record. 3 Bla. Com. 406; 10 Mod. 88; 2 Lilly, Abr. 322.

IN PARI CAUSA (Lat.). In an equal cause. It is a rule that when two persons have equal rights in relation to a particular thing, the party in possession is considered as having the better right: in pari causa possessor potior est. Dig. 50, 17, 128; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 952. See MAXIMS; PRESUMPTION.

IN PARI DELICTO (Lat.). In equal fault; equal in guilt. Neither courts of law nor of equity will interpose to grant relief to the parties, when an illegal agreement has been made and both parties stand in pari delicto. The law leaves them where it finds them, according to the maxim, in pari delicto potior est conditio defendentis (or, possidentis). Setter v. Alvey, 15 Kan. 157. See MAXIMS; DELICTUM.

IN PARI MATERIA (Lat.). Upon the same matter or subject. Statutes in pari materia are to be construed together; Union Soc. v. Bank, 7 Conn. 456.

IN PATIENDO. In suffering, permitting, or allowing.

IN PECTORE JUDICIS. In the breast of the judge. Latch 180. A term applied to a judgment.

IN PEJOREM PARTEM. In the worst part; on the worst side. Latch 159.

IN PERPETUAM REI MEMORIAM (Lat.). For the perpetual memory or remembrance of a thing. Gilbert, For. Rom. 118.

IN PERPETUUM REI TESTIMONIUM. In perpetual testimony of a matter; for the purpose of declaring and settling a thing forever. 1 Bla. Com. 86.

IN PERSON. A party, plaintiff or defendant, who sues out a writ or other process, or appears to conduct his case in court himself, instead of through a solicitor or counsel, is said to act and appear in person. Any suitor but one suing in forma pauperis may do this.

IN PERSONAM (Lat.). A remedy where the proceedings are against the person, in contradistinction to those which are against specific things, or in rem (q. v.). See EQUITY.

IN PIOS USUS. For pious uses; for religious purposes. 2 Bla. Com. 505.

IN PLENO COMITATU. In full county court. 3 Bla. Com. 36.

IN PLENO LUMINE. In public; in common knowledge; in the light of day.

IN PLENO VITA. In full life. Yearb. P. 18 Hen. VI. 2.

IN POSSE (Lat.). In possibility; not in actual existence; used in contradistinction to in esse.

IN POTESTATE PARENTIS. In the power of a parent. Inst. 1, 8, pr.; id. 1, 9; 2 Bla. Com. 498.

IN PRÆMISSORUM FIDEM. In confirmation or attestation of the premises. A notarial phrase.

IN PRÆSENTI (Lat.). At the present time: used in opposition to in futuro. A marriage contracted per verba de præsenti is good: as, I take Paul to be my husband, is a good marriage; but words de futuro would not be sufficient, unless the ceremony was followed by consummation. Succession of Prevost, 4 La. Ann. 347; Hantz v. Sealy, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 405.

IN PRENDER (L. Fr.). In taking. Such incorporeal hereditaments as a party entitled to them was to take for himself were said to be in prender. Such was a right of common. 2 Steph. Com. 15.

IN PRIMIS. In the foremost place. A term used in argument. Usually written imprimis (q. v.).

IN PRINCIPIO (Lat.). At the beginning. This is frequently used in citations: as, Bacon, Abr. Legacies, in pr.

IN PROMPTU. In readiness; at hand. Usually written impromptu.

IN PROPRIA PERSONA (Lat.). In his own person; himself: as, the defendant appeared in propria persona; the plaintiff argued the cause in propria persona. Sometimes abbreviated on the printed court lists, P. P.

IN RE (Lat.). In the matter: as, in re A B, in the matter of A B. In the headings of legal reports these words are used more especially to designate proceedings in bankruptcy or insolvency, or the winding up of estates or companies.

IN REBUS (Lat.). In things, cases, or matters.

IN REM (Lat.). A technical term used to designate proceedings or actions instituted against the thing, in contradistinction to personal actions, which are said to be in personam.

Proceedings in rem include not only those instituted to obtain decrees or judgments against property as forfeited in the admiralty or the English exchequer, or as prize, but also suits against property to enforce a lien or privilege in the admiralty courts, and suits to obtain the sentence, judgment, or decree of other courts upon the personal status or relations of the party, such as marriage, divorce, bastardy, settlement, or the like. 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 625, 541; 2 Bish. Mar. Div. & Sep. 14, 24.

Courts of admiralty enforce the performance of a contract, when its performance is secured by a maritime lien or privilege, by seizing into their custody the very subject of hypothecation. In these suits, generally, the parties are not personally bound, and the proceedings are confined to the thing in specie; Brown, Civ. & Adm. Law 98. See Bened. Ad. 270, 362; The Jerusalem, 2 Gall. 200, Fed. Cas. No. 7,293; 3 Term 269.

There are cases, however, where the remedy is either in personam or in rem. Seamen, for example, may proceed against the ship or freight for their wages, and this is the most expeditious mode; or they may proceed against the master or owners; 4 Burr. 1944; 2 Bro. Civ. & Adm. Law, 396. See, generally, 1 Phill. Ev. 254; 1 Stark. Ev. 228; Dane, Abr.; Bened. Adm. 503. No action in rem lies for damages incurred by loss of life; The Corsair, 145 U. S. 335, 12 Sup. Ct. 949, 36 L. Ed. 727. A contract for launching a vessel carried some distance up the beach by a storm, is a maritime contract, for which the vessel is liable in rem; The Ella, 48 Fed. 569. See ADMIRALTY; BOTTOMRY; LIEN.

IN RENDER. A thing in a manor is said to lie in render when it must be rendered or given by the tenant, e. g. rent; to lie in prender, when it may be taken by the lord or his officer when it chance. West, Symbol. pt. 2, Fines, § 126.

IN RERUM NATURA (Lat.). In the nature (or order) of things; in existence. Not in rerum natura is a dilatory plea, importing that the plaintiff is a fictitious person.

In Civil Law. A broader term than in rebus humanis: e. g. before quickening, an infant is in rerum natura, but not in rebus humanis; after quickening, he is in rebus humanis as well as in rerum natura. Calvinus, Lex.

IN SCRINIO JUDICIS. In the writing-case of the judge; among the judge's papers. "That is a thing that rests in scrinio judicis, and does not appear in the body of the decree." Hardr. 51.

IN SEPARALI. In several; in severalty. Flota 2, c. 54, 20.

IN SIMILI MATERIA. Dealing with the same or a kindred subject-matter.

IN SIMPLICI PEREGRINATIONE. In simple pilgrimage. Bract fol. 338. A phrase in the old law of essoins. See IN GENERALI PASSAGIO.

IN SOLIDUM, IN SOLIDO (Lat.). In Civil Law. For the whole; as a whole. An obligation or contract is said to be in solidum or in solidum when each is liable for the whole, but so that a payment by one is payment for all; i. e. it is a joint and several contract. 1 W. Bla. 388.

Possession is said to be in solidum when it is exclusive. "Duo in solidum precario habere non magis possunt quam duo in solidum vi possidere aut clam; nam neque justæ neque injustæ possessiones duæ concurrere possunt." Savigny, lib. 3, § 11. The phrase is commonly used in Louisiana.

IN SOLO. On the soil or ground. In solo alieno, on another's ground. In solo proprio, on one's ground. 2 Steph. Com. 20.

IN SPECIE (Lat.). In the same form: e. g. a ship is said to no longer exist in specie when she no longer exists as a ship, but as a mere congeries of planks. 8 B. & C. 561; Arnould, Ins. 1012. To decree a thing in specie is to decree the performance of that thing specifically.

IN STATU QUO (Lat.). In the same situation as, in the same condition as (before).

IN STIRPES. In the law of descent, according to roots or stocks; by representation as distinguished from succession per capita. More commonly written per stirpes (q. v.).

IN TANTUM. In so much; so much; so far; so greatly. Reg. Orig. 97, 106.

IN TERMINIS TERMINANTIBUS. In terms of determination; exactly in point. 11 Co. 40 b. In express or determinate terms. 1 Leon. 93.

IN TERROREM (Lat.). By way of threat, terror, or warning. For example, when a legacy is given to a person upon condition not to dispute the validity or the dispositions in wills and testaments, the conditions are not, in general, obligatory, but only in terrorem: if, therefore, there exist probabilis causa litiganda, the nonobservance of the conditions will not be a forfeiture. 1 Hill, Abr. 253; 3 P. Wms. 344; 1 Atk. 404. But when the acquiescence of the legatee appears to be a material ingredient in the gift, the bequest is only so long as the legatee shall refrain from disturbing the will; 2 P. Wms. 52; 2 Vent. 352. See DURESS.

IN TERROREM POPULI (Lat. to the terror of the people). A technical phrase necessary in indictments for riots. 4 C. & P. 373.

Lord Holt has given a distinction between those indictments in which the words in terrorum populi are essential, and those wherein they may be omitted. He says that, in indictments for that species of riots which consists in going about armed, etc., without committing any act, the words are necessary, because the offence consists in terrifying the public; but in those riots in which an unlawful act is committed, the words are useless; 11 Mod. 116; Com. v. Runnels, 10 Mass. 518, 6 Am. Dec. 148.

IN TESTIMONIUM. In witness or in evidence whereof. The first words of the attestation clause of certain legal instruments. See IN WITNESS WHEREOF.

IN TOTIDEM VERBIS (Lat.). In just so many words: as, the legislature has declared this to be a crime in totidem verbis.

IN TOTO (Lat.). In the whole; wholly; completely: as, the award is void in toto. In the whole the part is contained; in toto et pars continetur. Dig. 50. 17. 123.

IN TRAJECTU. In the passage over; on the voyage over. 3 C. Rob. Adm. 338.

IN TRANSITU (Lat.). During the transit, or removal from one place to another. See STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU.

IN UTROQUE JURE. In both laws; i. e., the civil and canon law.

IN VACUO (Lat. in what is empty). Without concomitants or coherence. Whart.

IN VADIO (Lat.). In pledge; in gage.

IN VENTRE SA MERE (L. F.). In his mother's womb. It is written indifferently, in this form, or en ventre sa mere (q. v.). See POSTHUMOUS CHILD; CURTESY; DOWER; INFANT; INJUNCTION.

IN VINCULIS. In chains; in actual custody. Gilb. For. Rom. 97.

Applied also, figuratively, to the condition of a person who is compelled to submit to terms which oppression and his necessities impose on him. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 302.

IN VIRIDI OBSERVANTIA. Present to the minds of men, and in full force and operation.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF. These words, which, when conveyancing was in the Latin language, were in cuius rei testimonium, are the initial words of the concluding clause in deeds: "In witness whereof the said parties have hereunto set their hands," etc. See IN TESTIMONIUM.

INADEQUATE PRICE. A term applied to indicate the want of a sufficient consideration for a thing sold, or such a price as, under ordinary circumstances, would be considered insufficient.

Inadequacy of price is generally connected with fraud, gross misrepresentations, or an intentional concealment of defects in the thing sold. In these cases it is clear that the vendor cannot compel the buyer to fulfil the contract; L. R. 12 Eq. 320; Willson v. Foree, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 110, 5 Am. Dec. 195; McFerran v. Taylor, 3 Cra. (U. S.) 270, 2 L. Ed. 436; Randle v. Harris, 6 Yerg. (Tenn.) 508; Sampson v. Swift, 11 Vt. 315; Hubbard v. Coolidge, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 93; Chick v. Trevett, 20 Me. 462, 37 Am. Dec. 68.

In general, however, inadequacy of price is not sufficient ground to avoid an executed contract, particularly when the property has been sold by auction; 3 Bro. C. C. 228; Lee v. Kirby, 104 Mass. 420; if there is no fraud and the parties deal at arm's length, upon their independent judgment, it will be held good; Judge v. Wilkins, 19 Ala. 765; Nash v. Lull, 102 Mass. 60, 3 Am. Rep. 435; Williams v. Jensen, 75 Mo. 681. But if an uncertain consideration, as a life annuity, be given for an estate, and the contract be executory, equity, it seems, will enter into the adequacy of the consideration; 7 Bro. P. C. 184. See Sugd. Vend. 189; 1 B. & B. 165; McCants v. Bee, 1 McCord, Ch. (S. C.) 383, 16 Am. Dec. 610; Butler v. Haskell, 4 Des. Ch. (S. C.) 651; Powers v. Mayo, 97 Mass. 180. And if the price be so grossly inadequate and given under such circumstances as to afford a necessary presumption of fraud or imposition, a court of equity will grant relief; Robinson v. Schly, 6 Ga. 515; Simonton v. Bacon, 49 Miss. 582; Waller v. Cralle, 8 B. Monr. (Ky.) 11; Stewart v. State, 2 Harr. & G. (Md.) 114; Bedel v. Loomis, 11 N. H. 9; Follett v. Rose, 3 McLean 332, Fed. Cas. No. 4,900; Hoyt v. Inst. for Savings, 110 Ill. 390; Gainer v. Russ, 20 Fla. 157; Herron v. Herron, 71 Ia. 428, 32 N. W. 407; French v. Allen, 50 Me. 438; Griffith v. Godey, 113 U. S. 89, 5 Sup. Ct. 383, 28 L. Ed. 934; Story, Eq. Jur. § 244; Leake, Contr. 1150. As to cases of sales of their interests by heirs and reversioners for inadequate price, see CATCHING BARGAIN; EXPECTANCY.

See CONSIDERATION; POST OBIT; MACEDONIAN DECREE; JUDICIAL SALE.

INADMISSIBLE. What cannot be received. Parol evidence, for example, is ordinarily inadmissible to contradict a written agreement.

INÆDIFICATIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. Building on another's land with one's own materials, or on one's own land with another's materials. L. 7, §§ 10, 18, D. de Acquis. Rer. Domin.; Heineccius, Elem. Jur. Civ. § 363. The word is especially used of a private person's building so as to encroach upon the public land. Calvinus, Lex. The right of possession of the materials yields to the right to what is on the soil. Id. See ACCRETION.

INALIENABLE. A word denoting the condition of those things the property in which cannot be lawfully transferred from one person to another. Public highways and rivers are inalienable. There are also many rights which are inalienable, as the rights of liberty or of speech.

INAUGURATION. A word applied by the Romans to the ceremony of dedicating a temple, or raising a man to the priesthood, after the augurs had been consulted.

It was afterwards applied to the installation of emperors, kings, and prelates, in imitation of the ceremonies of the Romans when they entered the temple of the augurs. It is applied in the United States to the installation of the chief magistrate of the republic, and of the governors of the several states.

INBLAURA. Profit or product of the ground. Cowell.

INBOROW. A forecourt or gate-house. A certain barony was inborow and outborow between England and Scotland. Cowell.

INCAPACITY. The want of a quality legally to do, give, transmit, or receive something.

In general, the incapacity ceases with the cause which produces it. If the idiot should obtain his senses, or the married woman's husband die, their incapacity would be at an end.

INCASTELLARE. To make a building serve the purpose of a castle. Jacob.

INCENDIARY (Lat. incendium, a kindling). One who maliciously and wilfully sets another person's building on fire; one guilty of the crime of arson. See ARSON; BURNING.

INCEPTION. The commencement; the beginning. In making a will, for example, the writing is its inception. 3 Co. 31 b; Plowd. 343.

INCERTÆ PERSONÆ. Uncertain persons, as posthumous heirs, a corporation, the poor, a juristic person, or persons who cannot be ascertained until after the execution of a will. Sohm, Inst. Rom. L. 104, 458.

INCEST. The carnal copulation of a man and a woman related to each other in any of the degrees within which marriage is prohibited by law. 1 Bish. Marr. & D. 112, 376, 442. It involves the assent of both parties; De Groat v. People, 39 Mich. 124; but it is held that it may exist as to the man although without the consent of the woman; State v. Chambers, 87 Ia. 1, 53 N. W. 1090, 43 Am. St. Rep. 349; People v. Gleason, 99 Cal. 359, 33 Pac. 1111, 37 Am. St. Rep. 56. It is punished by fine and imprisonment, under the laws of most, if not all, of the states, but seems not at common law to be an indictable offence; 4 Bla. Com. 64; State v. Keesler, 78 N. C.

469. See Simon v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 186, 20 S. W. 399, 716, 37 Am. St. Rep. 802; 18 So. Afr. 360.

Preparations for an attempted incestuous marriage have been held not indictable; People v. Murray, 14 Cal. 159. A man indicted for rape may be convicted of incest; Com. v. Goodhue, 2 Mete. (Mass.) 193; 1 Bish. Cr. Proc. § 419. See Daue, Abr. Index; State v. Roswell, 6 Conn. 446; Cook v. State, 11 Ga. 53, 56 Am. Dec. 410; People v. Harriden, 1 Park. Cr. (N. Y.) 344. See State v. Jarvis, 20 Or. 437, 26 Pac. 302, 23 Am. St. Rep. 141. And as to whether the crime is rape or incest may be left to the jury; People v. Skutt, 96 Mich. 449, 56 N. W. 11. Proof of a single commission of the offence is sufficient for conviction; Mathis v. Com. (Ky.) 13 S. W. 360.

INCESTUOSI. Those offspring incestuously begotten. Mack. Rom. L. § 143.

INCH (Lat. uncia). A measure of length, containing one-twelfth part of a foot; originally supposed equal to three grains of barley laid end to end.

INCHOATE. That which is not yet completed or finished. Contracts are considered inchoate until they are executed by all the parties. During the husband's life, a wife has an inchoate right of dower; 2 Bla. Com. 130; so with the right of an unborn child to take by descent; Marsellis v. Thalhimer, 2 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 35, 21 Am. Dec. 66; and a covenant which purports to be tripartite, and is executed by only two of the parties, is incomplete, and no one is bound by it; Emery v. Neighbour, 7 N. J. L. 142, 11 Am. Dec. 541. See LOCUS PŒNITENTÆ.

INCIDENT. This term is used both substantively and adjectively of a thing which, either usually or naturally and inseparably depends upon, appertains to, or follows another that is more worthy. For example, rent is usually incident to a reversion. 1 Hill. R. P. 243; while the right of alienation is necessarily incident to a fee-simple at common law, and cannot be separated by a grant; 1 Washb. R. P. 54. So a court baron is inseparably incident to a manor, in England; Co. Litt. 151. All nominate contracts and all estates known to common law, have certain incidents which they draw with them and which it is not necessary to reserve in words. So the costs incurred in a legal proceeding are said to be incidental thereto. See Jacob, Law Dict.

INCIPITUR (Lat. it is begun). The commencement of the entry on the roll on signing judgment, etc. The custom is no longer necessary in England, and was unknown here. But see 3 Steph. Com. 506, n.

INCLOSURE. The extinction of common rights in fields and waste lands. 1 Steph. Com. 655.

The separation and appropriation of land by means of a fence, hedge, etc., together with such fence or hedge. Taylor v. Welbey, 36 Wis. 44; Porter v. Aldrich, 39 Vt. 331; Gundy v. State, 63 Ind. 530; Pope v. Hammer, 8 Hun (N. Y.) 269; where, in a will, the executors were directed to inclose with an iron fence meeting-house grounds, school-house grounds, and burial ground, it was held that the intention was clear to inclose each of the grounds on all sides; Appeal of Hall, 112 Pa. 52, 3 Atl. 783.

A paper or letter inclosed with another in an envelope.

INCLOSURE ACTS. English statutes regulating the subject of inclosure. The most notable was that of 1801.

INCLOSURE COMMISSION ACT, 1845. The statute 8 and 9 Vict. c. 118, establishing a board of commissioners for England and Wales and empowering them, on the application of persons interested to the amount of one-third of the value of the land, and provided the consent of persons interested to the amount of two-thirds of the land and of the lord of the manor (in case the land be waste of a manor) be ultimately obtained, to inquire into the case and to report to parliament as to the expediency of making the inclosure. 1 Steph. Com. 655.

INCLUDE (Lat. in claudere to shut in, keep within). In a legacy of "one hundred dollars including money trusted" at a bank, it was held that the word "including" extended only to a gift of one hundred dollars; Brainard v. Darling, 132 Mass. 218; but in a bequest of a sum of money inclusive of a note of the legatee, it was held that the note was included in the legacy; Pepper's Estate, 154 Pa. 340, 25 Atl. 1063.

INCLUSIVE. Comprehended in computation. In computing time, as ten days from a particular time, the last day is generally to be included and the first excluded. See EXCLUSIVE; TIME; Estate of Pepper, 154 Pa. 340, 25 Atl. 1063, as to its use in a legacy.

INCOME. The gain which proceeds from property, labor, or business. It is applied particularly to individuals. The income of the state or government is usually called revenue. The word is sometimes considered synonymous with "profits," the gain as between receipts and payments; People v. Board of Supervisors, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 23; "rent, and profits," "income," and "net income" of the estate are equivalent expressions; Andrews v. Boyd, 5 Greenl. (Me.) 203; it may mean "money" or the expectation of receiving money; U. S. v. Schillinger, 14 Blatch. 71, Fed. Cas. No. 16,228; Gray v. Darlington, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 63, 21 L. Ed. 45; and a note is ground for expecting income, and in the sense of a statute taxing incomes the amount thereof is to be returned when paid; Portland Co. v. U. S., 15 Wall. (U. S.) 1, 21 L. Ed. 113. See Simpson v. Moore, 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 637. In the ordinary commercial sense "income" especially when connected with the word "rent," may mean clear or net income. "Produce" or "product" as a substituted word may relieve a will from obscurity; Appeal of Thompson, 100 Pa. 481. In a gift of the income, etc., of shares of stock, it is not synonymous with increase, and while it will include dividends from the stock, will not embrace the sum by which the stock has increased; Spooner v. Phillips, 62 Conn. 62, 24 Atl. 524, 16 L. R. A. 461. As to when dividends are to be considered as income, see 31 A. & E. Corp. Cas. 386, n.; DIVIDEND.

It has been held that a devise of the income of land is in effect the same as a devise of the land itself; Reed v. Reed, 9 Mass. 372; Monarque v. Monarque, 80 N. Y. 320; Cooper v. Pogue, 92 Pa. 254, 37 Am. Rep. 681; Sampson v. Randall, 72 Me. 109; and a gift of the income of a fund is a gift of the fund; Earl v. Grim, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 494; Huston v. Read, 32 N. J. Eq. 591; and of the income of property is a gift of the property; Bristol v. Bristol, 53 Conn. 259, 5 Atl. 687; Appeal of Sproul, 105 Pa. 441; 2 Rop. Leg. 371.

INCOME TAX. See Tax.

INCOMMUNICATION. In Spanish Law. The condition of a prisoner who is not permitted to see or to speak with any person visiting him during his confinement.

INCOMPATIBILITY. Incapability of existing or being exercised together.

Thus the relations of landlord and of tenant cannot exist in one man at the same time in reference to the same land. Two offices may be incompatible either from their nature or by statutory provisions. See U. S. Const. art. 6, § 3, n. 5, art. 1, § 6, n. 2; Com. v. Sheriff & Keeper of Jail, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 277; People v. Green, 46 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 170; State v. Buttz, 9 S. C. 179; OFFICE.

Incompatibility is ordinarily not a ground for divorce; Trowbridge v. Carlin, 12 La. Ann. 882; Pinkney v. Pinkney, 4 G. Greene (Ia.) 324; though in some states it is. See DIVORCE.

INCOMPETENCY. Lack of ability or fitness to discharge the required duty.

Judges and jurors are said to be incompetent from having an interest in the subject-matter. See JUDGE; JURY.

In Evidence. A witness may be at common law incompetent on account of a want of understanding, a defect of religious belief, a conviction of certain crimes, infamy of character, or interest; 1 Phill. Ev. 15. The last ground of incompetency is removed to a considerable degree in most states; and the second is greatly limited in modern practice. See WITNESS.

INCONCLUSIVE. Not finally decisive. Inconclusive presumptions are capable of being overcome by opposing proof.

INCONSULTO. In the Civil Law. Unadvisedly; unintentionally. Dig. 28, 4, 1.

INCONTINENCE. Impudicity; indulgence in unlawful carnal connection.

INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY. A society of attorneys and solicitors whose function it is to carry out the acts of parliament and orders of court with reference to articulated clerks; to keep an alphabetical roll of solicitors; to issue certificates to persons duly admitted and enrolled, and to exercise a general control over the conduct of solicitors in practice, and to bring cases of misconduct before the judges. 3 Steph. Com. 217. See SOLICITORS.

INCORPORATION. The act of creating a corporation; that which is incorporated. A legal or political body formed by the union of individuals under certain conditions, rules, and laws, and having certain privileges and partial or perpetual succession. See CORPORATION.

INCORPORATION BY REFERENCE. The bringing into one document in legal effect, of the contents of another by referring to the latter in such manner as to adopt it.

INCORPOREAL CHATTELS. The incorporeal rights or interests growing out of personal property, such as copyrights and patent rights, stocks and personal annuities. Boreel v. City of New York, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 552, 559; 2 Steph. Com. 9.

INCORPOREAL HEREDITAMENT. Anything, the subject of property, which is inheritable and not tangible or visible. 2 Woodd. Lect. 4. A right issuing out of a thing corporate (whether real or personal) or concerning or annexed to or exercisable within the same. 2 Bla. Com. 20; Walker v. Daly, 80 Wis. 222, 49 N. W. 812; 1 Washb. R. P. 10; Chal. R. P. 47; Wyatt v. Irrigation Co., 18 Colo. 298, 33 Pac. 144, 36 Am. St. Rep. 280.

Their existence is merely in idea and abstract contemplation, though their effects and profits may be frequently the object of the bodily senses; Co. Litt. 9 a; Pothier, Traité des Choses § 2. According to Blackstone, there are ten kinds of incorporeal hereditaments: viz. advowsons, tithes, commons, ways, offices, dignities, franchises, corodies, annuities, and rents. 2 Com. 20. In the United States there are no advowsons, tithes, dignities, nor corodies, commons are rare, offices rare or unknown, and annuities have no necessary connection with land. 3 Kent 402, 454. And there are other incorporeal hereditaments not included in this list, as remainders and reversions dependent on a particular estate of freehold, easements of light, air, etc., and equities of redemption; 1 Washb. R. P. *11.

Incorporeal hereditaments were said to be in grant; corporeal, in livery; since a simple deed or grant would pass the former, of which livery was impossible, while livery was necessary to a transfer of the latter. But this distinction is now done away with, even in England. See 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, § 2; 1 Washb. R. P. 10; Will. R. P. 279, 364, 370.

See ABANDONMENT.

INCORPOREAL PROPERTY. In Civil Law. That which consists in legal right merely. The same as choses in action at common law.

INCORRIGIBLE. Incapable of being corrected, amended, or improved.

Under the statute 17 Geo. II. c. 5, incorrigible rogues were subjected to two years' imprisonment in the house of correction, and for escaping from confinement therein were made felons and liable to transportation for seven years. A similar breach and escape by a vagabond or rogue constituted him an incorrigible rogue; 4 Bla. Com. 169.

INCORRUPTIBLE. That which cannot be affected by immoral or debasing influences, such as bribery or the hope of gain or advancement.

INCREASE. That which grows out of land or is produced by the cultivation of it. De Blane v. Lynch, 23 Tex. 27. The word is frequently used in connection with the young of domestic animals; the increase of a flock. See ACCESSION.

INCREASE, COSTS OF. See COSTS DE INCREMENTO.

INCRIMINATION. The Vth Amendment of the United States constitution provides that no person "shall be compelled in any criminal case to be witness against himself." A witness may refuse to furnish evidence which will incriminate himself; Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, 12 Sup. Ct. 195, 35 L. Ed. 1110. That the seizure or compulsory production of a man's private papers to be used in evidence against him is equivalent to compelling him to be a witness against himself was held in Boyd v. U. S., 116 U. S. 616, 6 Sup. Ct. 524, 29 L. Ed. 746; U. S. v. Wong Quong Wong, 94 Fed. 832. Schedules filed in bankruptcy proceedings are within the operation of U. S. R. S. § 860, forbidding the admission in any criminal proceeding of any pleading of a party or discovery or evidence obtained from a party by means of a judicial proceeding; Johnson v. U. S., 163 Fed. 30, 89 C. C. A. 508, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1194. Prescriptions of druggists are not within that class of private papers shielded from inspection for the purpose of obtaining evidence against the druggist;

State v. Davis, 108 Mo. 666, 18 S. W. 894, 32 Am. St. Rep. 640.

Forcibly taking shoes from an accused person for the purpose of comparison with footprints; State v. Fuller, 34 Mont. 12, 85 Pac. 369, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 762, 9 Ann. Cas. 648; seizing private papers of a defendant found in the execution of a search warrant; Adams v. New York, 192 U. S. 585, 24 Sup. Ct. 372, 48 L. Ed. 575, affirming People v. Adams, 176 N. Y. 351, 68 N. E. 636, 63 L. R. A. 406, 98 Am. St. Rep. 675; the use of an envelope containing pictures as evidence to show that the conduct of an accused in respect to such articles was incriminating; State v. Griswold, 67 Conn. 290, 34 Atl. 1046, 33 L. R. A. 227; seizing lottery tickets and lottery paraphernalia under a search warrant; Com. v. Dana, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 329; or jugs and bottles at the time of making an arrest for the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors; State v. O'Connor, 3 Kan. App. 594, 43 Pac. 859; do not violate the constitutional protection against self-incrimination. The accused may not be compelled to furnish the evidence, but, if he or his belongings are searched by another, although without authority, the evidence may be used against him; Duren v. City of Thomasville, 125 Ga. 1, 53 S. E. 814; State v. Burroughs, 72 Me. 479; Com. v. Henderson, 140 Mass. 303, 5 N. E. 832.

In extradition proceedings, the evidence of the party charged as to his identity cannot be admitted, being incriminatory; Ex parte La Mantia, 206 Fed. 330.

The Vth Amendment does not apply where the criminality is taken away, as in the anti-trust law, which secures a person from prosecution or penalty or forfeiture on account of any transaction concerning which he may testify; Hale v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 43, 66, 26 Sup. Ct. 370, 50 L. Ed. 652. A pardon takes away the privilege of refusing, though not accepted; U. S. v. Burdick, 211 Fed. 492.

Self-incrimination does not apply to a witness subpoenaed to produce corporate books; Wilson v. U. S., 221 U. S. 361, 31 Sup. Ct. 538, 55 L. Ed. 771, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 558; Dreier v. U. S., 221 U. S. 394, 31 Sup. Ct. 550, 55 L. Ed. 784. Even though he wrote or signed them; the early English cases (1 W. Bl. 37; 7 St. Tr. N. S. 979) were not followed.

The mere statement by an officer of a corporation, who has been directed to turn its books over to a receiver, that he has been indicted for an offense connected with the management of the corporation, and that the contents of the books may tend to incriminate him, is not sufficient to excuse him from obeying the order of the court; Manning v. Securities Co., 242 Ill. 584, 90 N. E. 238, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 725; Tolleson v. Greene, 83 Ga. 499, 10 S. E. 120.

Where the corporate misconduct involves also the claimant's misconduct (as well as that of the corporation), or where the document is in reality the personal act of the claimant, though nominally that of the corporation, its disclosures are virtually his own and to that extent his privilege protects him from producing them; Wigmore, Ev. § 2259; Ex parte Chapman, 153 Fed. 371; and see Blum v. State, 94 Md. 375, 51 Atl. 26, 56 L. R. A. 322; In re Kanter, 117 Fed. 356; but where the president of a banking corporation was indicted for receiving a deposit with knowledge that he and the corporation were insolvent, and with intent to embezzle, the district attorney and another were permitted to examine the books of the corporation then in the hands of a receiver to secure evidence for the prosecution of the president for embezzlement; McElree v. Darlington, 187 Pa. 593, 41 Atl. 456, 67 Am. St. Rep. 592. To the same effect State v. Strait, 94 Minn. 384, 102 N. W. 913.

The purpose of the act of February 25, 1903, granting to witnesses in investigations of violations of the Sherman act immunity against prosecution for matters testified to, was to obtain evidence that otherwise could not be obtained; the act was not intended as a gratuity to crime and is to be construed, as far as possible, as coterminous with the privilege of the person concerned; Virtue v. Mfg. Co., 227 U. S. 13, 33 Sup. Ct. 202, 57 L. Ed. 393.

There is a clear distinction between an amnesty under the statute and the constitutional protection (Vth Amendment) of a party from being compelled in a criminal case to be a witness against himself; Heike v. U. S., 227 U. S. 142, 33 Sup. Ct. 226, 57 L. Ed. 450.

See CRIMINATE; PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS.

Exemption from compulsory self-incrimination did not form part of the law of the land prior to the separation of the colonies from the mother country, nor is it one of the fundamental rights, immunities and privileges of citizens of the United States or an element of due process of law within the meaning of the constitution or the XIVth Amendment; Twining v. New Jersey, 211 U. S. 78, 29 Sup. Ct. 14, 53 L. Ed. 97, affirming State v. Twining, 73 N. J. L. 683, 67 Atl. 1073, 1135.

See CONSTITUTION.

INCUPLICATE. To accuse of crime; to impute guilt to; to bring or expose to blame; to censure. Webster.

INCUMBENT. In Ecclesiastical Law. A clerk resident on his benefice with cure. In common parlance, it signifies one who is in possession of an office: as, the present incumbent of an office, until legally authorized to discharge its duties, by receiving his commission and taking the official oath; State v. McCollister, 11 Ohio 46.

INCUMBRANCE. Any right to, or interest in, land which may subsist in third persons, to the diminution of the value of the estate of the tenant, but consistently with the passing of the fee. 2 Greenl. Ev. § 242; Prescott v. Trueman, 4 Mass. 629, 3 Am. Dec. 246; Huyck v. Andrews, 113 N. Y. 81, 20 N. E. 581, 3 L. R. A. 789, 10 Am. St. Rep. 432.

"Every right to or interest in the land which may subsist in third persons to the diminution of the land, but consistent with the passing of the fee by the conveyance." Rawle, Cov. for Title, § 25, approved in Batley v. Foerderer, 162 Pa. 466, 29 Atl. 868.

Incumbrance, when used in reference to real estate, includes every right to or interest in the land granted, to the diminution of the value of the land, but consistent with the passing of the fee by the owner thereof; Westerlund v. Mining Co., 203 Fed. 599, 121 C. C. A. 627, citing this work. The following are incumbrances: An ordinary lease; Clark v. Fisher, 54 Kan. 403, 38 Pac. 493; an attachment; Thatcher v. Valentine, 22 Colo. 201, 43 Pac. 1031; the lien of a judgment; Willsie v. Ranch Co., 7 S. D. 114, 63 N. W. 546; taxes and municipal claims; In re Gerry, 112 Fed. 958; an execution sale subject to redemption; Post v. Campau, 42 Mich. 94, 3 N. W. 272; a restriction on the use of land for a brewery or blacksmith shop; Batley v. Foerderer, 162 Pa. 460, 29 Atl. 868; an easement for a party wall; Westerlund v. Min. Co., 203 Fed. 606, 121 C. C. A. 627; Mackey v. Harmon, 34 Minn. 168, 24 N. W. 702; an inchoate right of dower; Bigelow v. Hubbard, 97 Mass. 195; a private right of way, Harlow v. Thomas, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 66; a railroad right of way; Barlow v. McKinley, 24 Ia. 69; an attachment; Batley v. Foerderer, 162 Pa. 466, 29 Atl. 870; a right of removal of timber from land; Cathcart v. Bowman, 5 Pa. 317; a reservation of minerals; Adams v. Henderson, 168 U. S. 573, 18 Sup. Ct. 179, 42 L. Ed. 584; Adams v. Reed, 11 Utah 480, 40 Pac. 720.

A public highway; Kellogg v. Ingersoll, 2 Mass. 97; Prichard v. Atkinson, 3 N. H. 335; Hubbard v. Norton, 10 Conn. 431; Butler v. Gale, 27 Vt. 739; Copeland v. McAdory, 100 Ala. 553, 13 South. 545; Schmisseur v. Penn, 47 Ill. App. 278 (but see Scribner v. Holmes, 16 Ind. 142; Kutz v. McCune, 22 Wis. 623, 99 Am. Dec. 85; Moore v. Johnston, 87 Ala. 220, 6 South. 50; Harrison v. R. Co., 91 Ia. 114, 58 N. W. 1081; even though it has been practically abandoned by the public years before; Howell v. Northampton R. Co., 211 Pa. 284, 60 Atl. 793; a private right of way; Harlow v. Thomas, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 68; Mitchell v. Warner, 5 Conn. 497; an easement which is open, visible, and well known; Huyck v. Andrews, 113 N. Y. 81, 20 N. E. 581, 3 L. R. A. 789, 10 Am. St. Rep. 432; a claim of dower; Prescott v. Trueman, 4 Mass. 630, 3 Am. Dec. 246; Thrasher v.

Pinckard's Heirs, 23 Ala. 616; though inchoate only; Porter v. Noyes, 2 Greenl. (Me.) 22, 11 Am. Dec. 30; Shearer v. Ranger, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 447; an outstanding mortgage; Bean v. Mayo, 5 Greenl. (Me.) 94; Keller v. Ashford, 133 U. S. 610, 10 Sup. Ct. 494, 33 L. Ed. 667 (other than one which the covenantee is bound to pay; Watts v. Welman, 2 N. H. 458; Wyman v. Ballard, 12 Mass. 304; Funk v. Veneida, 11 S. & R. [Pa.] 109, 14 Am. Dec. 617; Stewart v. Drake, 9 N. J. L. 139; see Olney v. Ins. Co., 88 Mich. 94, 50 N. W. 100, 13 L. R. A. 684, 26 Am. St. Rep. 281); a liability under the tax laws; Hutchins v. Moody, 30 Vt. 655; Long v. Moler, 5 Ohio St. 271; Mitchell v. Pillsbury, 5 Wis. 407; see Tibbetts v. Leeson, 148 Mass. 102, 18 N. E. 679 (but no tax or assessment can exist so as to be an incumbrance, until the amount is ascertained or determined; Harper v. Dowdney, 113 N. Y. 644, 21 N. E. 63); an attachment resting upon land; Kelsey v. Remer, 43 Conn. 129, 21 Am. Rep. 638; Johnson v. Collins, 116 Mass. 392; a condition, the non-performance of which by the grantee may work a forfeiture of the estate; Jenks v. Ward, 4 Metc. (Mass.) 412; restriction as to the kind of building which may be erected on land; Doctor v. Darling, 68 Hun 70, 22 N. Y. Supp. 594; a mechanic's lien; Redmon v. Ins. Co., 51 Wis. 293, 8 N. W. 226, 37 Am. Rep. 830; have been held incumbrances within the meaning of the covenant against incumbrances, contained in conveyances. The term does not include a condition on which an estate is held; Estabrook v. Smith, 6 Gray (Mass.) 572, 66 Am. Dec. 443.

A restriction against wooden structures, but which were prohibited by law, is not an incumbrance; Batley v. Foerderer, 162 Pa. 460, 29 Atl. 868.

The vendor of real estate is bound in England to disclose incumbrances, and to deliver to the purchaser the instruments by which they were created, or on which the defects arise; and the neglect of this is to be considered fraud; Sudg. Vend. 6; 1 Ves. Sen. 96. See Kauffelt v. Bower, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 73, 10 Am. Dec. 428.

The interest on incumbrances is to be kept down by the tenant for life; 1 Washb. R. P. 95, 257, 573; Swaine v. Perine, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 482, 9 Am. Dec. 318; Lessee of McMillan v. Robbins, 5 Ohio 28; to the extent of rents accruing; 31 E. L. & Eq. 345; Tudor, Lead. Cas. 60; and for any sum paid beyond that he becomes a creditor of the estate; Warley v. Warley, Bail. Eq. (S. C.) 397.

When the whole incumbrance is removed by a single payment, the share of the tenant for life is the present worth of an annuity for the life of the tenant equal to the annual amount of the interest which he would be obliged to pay; 1 Washb. R. P. 96, 573. The rule applies to estates held in dower;

Estabrook v. Hapgood, 10 Mass. 315; Bell v. New York, 10 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 71; House v. House, 10 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 158; Abercrombie v. Riddle, 3 Md. Ch. Dec. 321; in curtesy; 1 Washb. R. P. 142; in tail only in special cases; 1 Washb. R. P. 80; Tudor, Lead. Cas. 613; 3 P. Wms. 229. See COVENANT AGAINST INCUMBRANCES.

INCUR. To have liabilities cast upon one by act or operation of law, as distinguished from contract, where the party acts affirmatively. Craudall v. Bryan, 15 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 50.

INDEBITATUS ASSUMPSIT (Lat.). That species of the action of assumpsit in which the plaintiff alleges, in his declaration, first a debt, and then a promise in consideration of the debt to pay the amount to the plaintiff.

It is so called from the words in which the promise is laid in the Latin form, translated in the modern form, being indebted he promised. The promise so laid is generally an implied one only. See Steph. Pl. 318; 4 Co. 92 b. This form of action is brought to recover in damages the amount of the debt or demand; upon the trial the jury will, according to evidence, give verdict for whole or part of that sum; 3 Bla. Com. 155; Selw. N. P. 68.

Indebitatus assumpsit is in this distinguished from debt and covenant, which proceed directly for the debt, damages being given only for the detention of the debt. Debt lies on contracts by specialty as well as by parol, while indebitatus assumpsit lies only on parol contracts, whether express or implied; Bro. Act. at Law 317.

For the history of this form of action, see 3 Reeve, Hist. Com. Law; 2 Com. Contr. 549; 3 Bla. Com. 154; J. B. Ames, 2 Harv. L. Rev. 1, 53, 377. See ASSUMPSIT.

INDEBITI SOLUTIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. The payment to one of what is not due to him. If the payment was made by mistake, the civilians recovered it back by an action called condictio indebiti; with us, such money may be recovered by an action of assumpsit.

INDEBTEDNESS. The state of being in debt, without regard to the ability or inability of the party to pay the same. See 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 343; 2 Hill, Abr. 421.

But in order to create an indebtedness there must be an actual liability at the time, either to pay then or at a future time. If, for example, a person were to enter and become surety for another, who enters into a rule of reference, he does not thereby become a debtor to the opposite party until the rendition of the judgment on the award; Fales v. Thompson, 1 Mass. 134. As to indebtedness of a municipality, see MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

INDECENCY. An act against good behavior and a just delicacy. Com. v. Sharpless, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 91, 7 Am. Dec. 632.

The law, in general, will repress indecency as being contrary to good morals; but, when the public good requires it, the mere indecency of disclosures does not suffice to exclude them from being given in evidence; Tayl. Ev. 816.

The following are examples of indecency: the exposure by a man of his naked person on a balcony, to public view, or bathing in public; 2 Campb. 89; Knowles v. State, 3 Day (Conn.) 103; State v. Roper, 18 N. C. 208; State v. Millard, 18 Vt. 574, 46 Am. Dec. 170; Van Houten v. State, 46 N. J. L. 16, 50 Am. Rep. 397; or in the house of another in the presence of a young girl; Com. v. Wardell, 128 Mass. 52, 35 Am. Rep. 357; or the exhibition of bawdy pictures; 2 Chitty, Cr. Law 42; Com. v. Sharpless, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 91, 7 Am. Dec. 632. This indecency is punishable by indictment. See Brooks v. State, 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 482; Grisham v. State, id. 589; Com. v. Catlin, 1 Mass. 8; 1 Russ. Cr. 302; 4 Bla. Com. 65, n.; Burn, Just. Lowdness. And an ordinance making such exposure an offence without reference to the intent which accompanies the act, is a valid exercise of police power; City of Grand Rapids v. Bateman, 93 Mich. 135, 53 N. W. 6.

INDECENT ASSAULT. See ASSAULT.

INDECENT EXHIBITION. Any exhibition contra bonos mores, as the taking a dead body for the purpose of dissection or public exhibition. 2 T. R. 734.

INDECENT EXPOSURE. It must be in a public place; Com. v. Hardin, 2 Ky. L. R. 59; if accidental, it is not an offence; City of Grand Rapids v. Bateman, 93 Mich. 135, 53 N. W. 6; nor is exposure to one woman in a field near a highway; Morris v. State, 109 Ga. 351, 34 S. E. 577. See EXPOSURE OF PERSON; INDECENCY.

INDECENT LIBERTIES. See ASSAULT.

INDECENT PUBLICATIONS. Statutes forbidding the keeping, exhibiting, or sale of indecent books or pictures, and providing for their destruction, if seized, are within the police power of a state, and are constitutional. Cooley, Const. Lim. 748. See OBSCENITY; MAIL.

INDECIMABLE. Not tithable.

INDEFEASIBLE. That which cannot be defeated or undone. This epithet is usually applied to an estate or right which cannot be defeated. "A perfect title." Douglass v. Lewis, 131 U. S. 75, 9 Sup. Ct. 634, 33 L. Ed. 53.

INDEFENSUS (Lat.). One sued or impleaded who refuses or has nothing to answer.

INDEFINITE FAILURE OF ISSUE. See FAILURE OF ISSUE.

INDEFINITE NUMBER. A number which may be increased or diminished at pleasure.

When a corporation is composed of an indefinite number of persons, any number of them consisting of a majority of those present may do any act, unless it be otherwise regulated by the charter or by-laws.

INDEFINITE PAYMENT. That which a debtor who owes several debts to a creditor makes without making an appropriation: in that case the creditor has a right to make such appropriation.

INDEMNIFY. To secure or save harmless against loss or damage, of a specified character, which may happen in the future.

To compensate or reimburse one for a loss previously incurred; L. R. 14 Eq. 479. See Weller v. Eames, 15 Minn. 467 (Gil. 376), 2 Am. Rep. 150.

To indemnify is said to be synonymous with "to save harmless." Brentnall v. Holmes, 1 Root (Conn.) 292, 1 Am. Dec. 44.

Indemnification is the act of indemnifying or making good a loss. Indemnificatus, indemnified. Indemnitas (formerly indempnis), without damage; harmless. Indemnitor, one who enters into a contract of indemnity for the benefit of another; indemnitee, one who is to be benefited by such a contract.

INDEMNITY. That which is given to a person to prevent his suffering damage. Peck v. Wakely, 2 McCord (S. C.) 279.

It is a rule established in all just governments that when private property is required for public use, indemnity shall be given by the public to the owner. See EMINENT DOMAIN.

Contracts made for the purpose of indemnifying a person for doing an act for which he could be indicted, or to compensate a public officer for doing an act which is forbidden by law, or for omitting to do one which the law commands, are absolutely void. But when the agreement with an officer was not to induce him to neglect his duty, but to test a legal right, as to indemnify him for not executing a writ of execution, it was held to be good; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 780.

In general, a mere promise of indemnity to a third person is not within the statute of frauds; [1894] 2 Q. B. 885, 19 L. R. Eq. 198; George v. Hoskins (Ky.) 30 S. W. 406; Boyer v. Soules, 105 Mich. 31, 62 N. W. 1000; and this rule applies to a promise to indemnify the surety on a liquor-dealer's bond; Smith v. Delaney, 64 Conn. 264, 29 Atl. 496, 42 Am. St. Rep. 181; to a contract of agency, by which the agent agrees to be responsible for the non-payment of debts which may thereafter become due by others; 69 L. T. N. S. 354; to a promise to indemnify one if he will indorse K's notes, so that K. can have them discounted; Jones v. Bacon, 145 N. Y. 446, 40 N. E. 216; and to a verbal promise of A to B to indemnify him if he will become surety for C for a debt of the latter to D; Minick v. Huff, 41 Neb. 516, 59 N. W. 795. But it is held in Illinois, that a guarantee of indemnity to a surety is within the statute; Waterman v. Pesseter, 45 Ill. App. 155. See GUARANTY; SURETYSHIP; INSURANCE.

INDEMNITY LANDS. Those lands which are, by the grant in aid of a railroad, allowed to be selected in lieu of parcels lost by previous disposition or reservation for other purposes, and the title to which accrues only from the time of their selection. Barney v. R. Co., 117 U. S. 232, 6 Sup. Ct. 654, 29 L. Ed. 858; Wisconsin C. R. Co. v. Price County, 133 U. S. 513, 10 Sup. Ct. 341, 33 L. Ed. 687.

Title to indemnity lands does not vest in a railroad company until they are actually selected and the selection approved by the secretary of the interior; U. S. v. R. Co., 141 U. S. 358, 12 Sup. Ct. 13, 35 L. Ed. 766.

INDENT. To cut in the shape of teeth.

Deeds of indenture were anciently written on the same parchment or paper as many times as there were parties to the instrument, the word chirographum being written between, and then the several copies cut apart in a zigzag or notched line (whence the name), part of the word chirographum (q. v.) being on either side of it; and each party kept a copy. The later practice was to cut the top or side of the deed in a waving or notched line; 2 Bla. Com. 295.

To bind by indentures; to apprentice: as, to indent a young man to a shoemaker. Webster, Dict.

In American Law. An indented certificate issued by the government of the United States at the close of the revolution for the principal or interest of the public debt. Ramsay, Hamilton, Webster; Eliot, Funding System 35; U. S. v. Irwin, 5 McLean 178, Fed. Cas. No. 15,445; Acts of April 30, 1790, sess. 2, c. 9, § 14, and of March 3, 1825, sess. 2, c. 65, § 17. The word is no longer in use in this sense.

INDENTURE. A formal written instrument made between two or more persons in different interests, as opposed to a deed poll, which is one made by a single person, or by several having similar interests.

Its name comes from a practice of indenting or scalloping such an instrument on the top or side in a waving line. This is not necessary in England at the present day, by stat. 8 & 9 Vic. c. 106, § 5, but was in Lord Coke's time, when no words of indenture would supply its place; 5 Co. 20. In this country it is a mere formal act, not necessary to the deed's being an indenture. See Bac. Abr. Leases, etc. (E 2); Com. Dig. Fail (C, and note d); Littleton, § 370; Co. Litt.

143 b, 229 a; Cruise, Dig. t. 32, c. 1, s. 24; 2 Bla. Com. 294; 1 Steph. Com. 447.

For the method used, see INDENT; DEED POLL.

The form now in use, "this indenture, made between A. and B.," was used as early as Edward III. 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 193.

INDENTURE OF A FINE. Indentures made and engrossed at the chirographer's office and delivered to the cognizor and the cognizee, usually beginning with the words: "Hæc est finalis concordia." And then reciting the whole proceedings at length. 2 Bla. Com. 351.

INDEPENDENCE. A state of perfect irresponsibility to any superior. The United States are free and independent of all earthly power.

Independence may be divided into political and natural independence. By the former is to be understood that we have contracted no ties except those which flow from the three great natural rights of safety, liberty, and property. The latter consists in the power of being able to enjoy a permanent well-being, whatever may be the disposition of those from whom we call ourselves independent. In that sense a nation may be independent with regard to most people, but not independent of the whole world. See DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE.

Questions as to the power of municipalities to appropriate money for the celebration of the anniversary of the Declaration of Independence have arisen. It has been held that no such power exists; Hodges v. City of Buffalo, 2 Denio (N. Y.) 110; Hood v. Lynn, 1 Allen (Mass.) 103.

INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR. One who, exercising an independent employment, contracts to do a piece of work according to his own methods, and without being subject to the control of his employer, except as to the result of his work. Powell v. Construction Co., 88 Tenn. 692, 13 S. W. 691, 17 Am. St. Rep. 925.

The term is also defined to denote one who has the right to select, employ, and control the action of the workmen; Bennett v. Truebody, 66 Cal. 509, 6 Pac. 329, 56 Am. Rep. 117; Gay v. Kohlsaat, 80 Ill. App. 185; one who is subject to his employer as to the results of his work only; Knoxville Iron Co. v. Dobson, 7 Lea (Tenn.) 367.

A still broader definition has been given as follows: "Where a person is employed to perform a certain kind of work, in the nature of repairs or improvements to a building, by the owner thereof, which requires the exercise of skill and judgment as a mechanic, the execution of which is left entirely to his discretion, without any restriction as to its exercise, and no limitation as to the authority conferred in respect to the same, and no provision is especially made as to the time in which the work is to be done, or as to the payment for the services rendered, and the compensation is dependent upon the value thereof, such person does not occupy the relation of servant under the control of the master, but is an independent contractor." Hexamer v. Webb, 101 N. Y. 377, 4 N. E. 755, 54 Am. Rep. 703.

Any one who follows a recognized independent calling has been held to be an independent contractor; as a slater; McCarthy v. Second Parish in Town of Portland, 71 Me. 318, 36 Am. Rep. 320; an architect; De Ford v. State, 30 Md. 179; a horse trainer; Arasmith v. Temple, 11 Ill. App. 39; a manufacturer of shingles; Whitney v. Clifford, 46 Wis. 138, 49 N. W. 835, 32 Am. Rep. 703; a builder; Robinson v. Webb, 11 Bush (Ky.) 464; a licensed public carman; McMullen v. Hoyt, 2 Daly (N. Y.) 271; a drayman; De Forrest v. Wright, 2 Mich. 368; a drover; 12 Ad. & El. 737; a plumber; Meany v. Abbott, 6 Phila. (Pa.) 256; and a stevedore; The Rheola, 19 Fed. 926; Hass v. S. S. Co., 88 Pa. 269, 32 Am. Rep. 462; 6 L. R. C. P. 24; Burke v. De Castro, 11 Hun (N. Y.) 354; Riley v. S. S. Co., 29 La. Ann. 791, 29 Am. Rep. 249; and the mode of payment and the fact that materials are furnished by the employer have been held to have but little weight in determining whether the employé is an independent contractor or not; Fuller v. Bank, 15 Fed. 875; New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. v. Reese, 61 Miss. 581. The rule is that where a person is under the entire direction and control of another he is to be considered his servant, no matter who pays him; 5 B. & C. 560. The test to determine whether one who renders service to another does so as a contractor or not is to ascertain whether he renders the service in the course of an independent occupation representing the will of his employer only as to the result of his work and not as to the means by which it was accomplished; Hexamer v. Webb, 101 N. Y. 385, 4 N. E. 755, 54 Am. Rep. 703.

In cases of an independent contract, the employer is not responsible; Kimball v. Cushman, 103 Mass. 194, 4 Am. Rep. 528; Young v. R. Co., 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 229; Blake v. Ferris, 5 N. Y. 48, 55 Am. Dec. 304; Smith v. Simmons, 103 Pa. 32, 49 Am. Rep. 113; Kepperly v. Ramsden, 83 Ill. 354; Rome & D. R. Co. v. Chasteen, 88 Ala. 591, 7 South. 94; Bennett v. Truebody, 66 Cal. 509, 6 Pac. 329, 56 Am. Rep. 117; Gallagher v. Exposition Ass'n, 28 La. Ann. 943; 7 H. & N. 826; 2 C. P. Div. 369; Bailey v. R. Co., 57 Vt. 252, 52 Am. Rep. 129; Hitte v. R. Co., 19 Neb. 620, 28 N. W. 284; New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. v. Reese, 61 Miss. 581; Pierce v. O'Keefe, 11 Wis. 180. In 1 Bos. & P. 404, the rule was laid down that not only was the employer liable for the negligence of a contractor, but for that of a servant of a sub-contractor.

This decision was followed in some of the earlier English and American cases, but the weight of authority in both countries has overruled it, the question of its authority having been decisively settled in each country, in what have become leading cases; 4 Exch. 244; Hilliard v. Richardson, 3 Gray (Mass.) 349, 63 Am. Dec. 743. But see 6 H. & N. 488, and Chicago v. Robbins, 2 Black (U. S.) 418, 17 L. Ed. 298, with the criticism of these cases in Bibb's Adm'r v. R. Co., 87 Va. 711, 14 S. E. 163.

A like rule governs the question of the liability of the employer and the contractor for the negligence and torts of the sub-contractor or his servants; 7 H. & N. 826; 11 C. B. 867; 2 C. P. Div. 369; Wray v. Evans, 80 Pa. 102; Slater v. Mersereau, 64 N. Y. 138.

If he undertakes to provide the material, he is liable for an injury caused by his failure to provide it; Gilbert v. Beach, 5 Bosw. (N. Y.) 447; and generally, he is liable if the contract reserves to him such a power of supervision or control of the work as will destroy the free agency of the contractor, whether the supervision be exercised by himself or by persons designated by him; Vogel v. City of New York, 92 N. Y. 10, 44 Am. Rep. 349; Hughes v. Ry. Co., 39 Ohio St. 466; Edmundson v. R. Co., 111 Pa. 316, 2 Atl. 404; Harper v. City of Milwaukee, 30 Wis. 365; City of Chicago v. Dermody, 61 Ill. 431; Camp v. Church Wardens of Church of St. Louis, 7 La. Ann. 321; City of Denver v. Rhodes, 9 Colo. 554, 13 Pac. 729; but not if the power of supervision reserved is not such as to interfere with the discretion of the contractor in the manner of executing the work, but is confined to seeing that the intended result is produced; Nevins v. City of Peoria, 41 Ill. 502, 89 Am. Dec. 392; Vincennes Water Supply Co. v. White, 124 Ind. 376, 24 N. E. 747. The exact rule as to supervision is said to be that the employer, through its chief engineer, may reserve the right to criticise the work but not to control it; Bibb's Adm'r v. R. Co., 87 Va. 711, 14 S. E. 163.

The employer will be held liable if the injurious act complained of was contemplated by the contract; Whitney v. Clifford, 46 Wis. 138, 49 N. W. 835, 32 Am. Rep. 703; St. Louis & C. Ry. Co. v. Drennan, 26 Ill. App. 263; or if the contract work is necessarily dangerous or harmful; Mayor, etc., of Birmingham v. McCary, 84 Ala. 469, 4 South. 630; Circleville v. Neuding, 41 Ohio St. 465; Wilson v. City of Wheeling, 19 W. Va. 323, 42 Am. Rep. 780; Haniford v. Kansas City, 103 Mo. 172, 15 S. W. 753; 3 L. R. H. L. 330. Where a man orders work to be done, upon which injurious consequences must be expected to arise, he is bound to see to the doing of that which is necessary to prevent the mischief and cannot relieve himself by employing some one else; 1 Q. B. Div. 321.

Where the employe of an independent contractor was, under contract of a tenant, cleaning the windows of a building flush on the street, and having no safety appliances, though the work was inherently dangerous, and he fell to the street and injured a passer-by, it was held that he must be regarded as the servant of the tenant and that the tenant was liable, regardless of the employment by an independent contractor; Doll & Sons v. Ribetti, 203 Fed. 503, 121 C. C. A. 621, following 1 Q. B. D. 321, supra. In such case the occupier of the building cannot discharge himself by employing an independent contractor; Poll. Torts 477. When a person is engaged in work, in the ordinary doing of which a nuisance occurs, he is liable for any injury to third persons for negligence, though the work may be done by a contractor; Water Co. v. Ware, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 566, 21 L. Ed. 485.

A general contractor, having control for the purpose of erecting buildings for the owner of a property, cannot relieve himself from liability for a dangerous situation, though created by the independent contractor; Wilson v. Hibbert, 194 Fed. 838, 114 C. C. A. 542.

The independent contractor rule was applied in Deyo v. R. Co., 94 App. Div. 578, 88 N. Y. Supp. 487, where defendant owning a park engaged a company to exhibit fireworks. Defendant was held not liable to a spectator who was injured by a rocket negligently discharged by a workman under control of the contractor company. One who invites others to come upon his premises must use due care to render them safe, and cannot avoid this duty under cover of an independent contractor; Curtis v. Kiley, 153 Mass. 123, 26 N. E. 421. Where the work is of a dangerous nature, one is bound not only to due care in selecting a contractor, but also to see that due precautions are taken. The liability of the owner is based upon failure to keep his premises reasonably safe, and not to the negligence of the contractor; Thompson v. R. Co., 170 Mass. 577, 49 N. E. 913, 40 L. R. A. 345, 64 Am. St. Rep. 323. Compare Sebeck v. Plattdeutsche Volkfest Verein, 64 N. J. L. 624, 46 Atl. 631, 50 L. R. A. 199, 81 Am. St. Rep. 512.

When work is per se dangerous and the employer does not stipulate that the contractor shall use proper precautions to avoid injury to others, the employer is liable; Matheny v. Wolffs, 2 Duv. (Ky.) 137; Sulzbacher v. Dickie, 6 Daly (N. Y.) 469; or when the work contracted for becomes on occasions a public nuisance, unless it be due solely to the negligence of the contractor; Wood v. School Dist., 44 Ia. 27; Wabash, St. L. & P. Ry. Co. v. Farver, 111 Ind. 195, 12 N. E. 290, 60 Am. Rep. 696; Kepperly v. Ramsden, 83 Ill. 354; Edmundson v. R. Co., 111 Pa. 316, 2 Atl. 404; Connors v. Hennessey, 112 Mass. 96; or when the contractor is incompetent; Cuff v. R. Co., 35 N. J. L. 17, 10 Am. Rep. 205; and that the employer was ignorant of such incompetency will not excuse him; id.; but see Brannock v. Elmore, 114 Mo. 55, 21 S. W. 451. But it was held that when the defendants employed a carpenter and bridge builder of experience to build a bridge, it was not enough for the plaintiff to show that the work was unskillfully done; it must appear that the defendants were guilty of negligence in selecting him; that they either knew, or with proper diligence ought to have known, his incompetency; Mansfield Coal & Coke Co. v. McEnery, 91 Pa. 185, 191, 36 Am. Rep. 662.

The general rule is that the employer is only liable in three cases: 1. Where the act of the contractor is one which if done by the employer would be done at his peril. 2. Where the contractor is employed to execute certain work which the employer is under a statutory duty to perform. 3. Where the work which the contractor is employed to do is unlawful or a public nuisance; Engel v. Eureka Club, 137 N. Y. 100, 32 N. E. 1052, 33 Am. St. Rep. 692. For a general rule of non-liability for acts of independent contractor, see King v. R. Co., 66 N. Y. 181, 23 Am. Rep. 37. In other cases the employer is not liable; Connors v. Hennessey, 112 Mass. 96.

In Covington & C. Bridge Co. v. Steinbrock, 61 Ohio St. 215, 55 N. E. 618, 76 Am. St. Rep. 375, through negligence of an independent contractor employed to tear down a building partly destroyed by fire, the wall fell, damaging plaintiff's building, and the defendant was held liable though he used due care in selecting his contractor. He was held negligent on the broad principle that one cannot escape liability for an injury that might have been anticipated as a probable consequence if reasonable care were omitted. This case is criticised in 14 H. L. R. 62, as partially abrogating the independent contractor rule in Ohio. Some cases establish a rule holding the employer in a contract for labor on a highway as an insurer, owing a duty to the public; Hill v. Tottenham, 106 L. T. R. 127; Penny v. Wimbledon Council [1899] 2 Q. B. 72; Halliday v. Telephone Co. [1899] 2 Q. B. 392; The Snark [1899] P. D. 74. This line of cases is approved by 14 Harv. L. R. 63, as an exception to the general rule, but the writer thinks that the weight of authority in this country is in favor of the independent contractor rule and against the Ohio case.

After acceptance of the contract work, the employer will be liable for an injury caused by a defect in it; Gorham v. Gross, 125 Mass. 232, 28 Am. Rep. 224; Bast v. Leonard, 15 Minn. 304 (Gil. 235); Chartiers Val. Gas Co. v. Lynch, 118 Pa. 362, 12 Atl. 435; Vogel v. New York, 92 N. Y. 10, 44 Am.

Rep. 349; Fanjoy v. Seales, 29 Cal. 243; Cunningham v. R. Co., 51 Tex. 503, 32 Am. Rep. 632; Kansas Cent. Ry. Co. v. Fitzsimmons, 18 Kan. 34; and, if ratified by him, for the tortious acts of the contractor; Coomes v. Houghton, 102 Mass. 211; Parker v. R. Co., 81 Ga. 387, 8 S. E. 871.

As to the liability of a municipal corporation, it has been held that such a corporation cannot rid itself of responsibility for the acts of an independent contractor; King v. R. Co., 66 N. Y. 181, 23 Am. Rep. 37; as he is acting under the authority of the district or city council, and without such authority, he would be a trespasser on the streets; 74 L. T. Rep. 69; and notwithstanding the nature of the work to be performed, it is the duty of the municipality to see that the streets are in a safe condition for travel; Kemper v. City of Louisville, 14 Bush (Ky.) 87; Mayor, etc., of City of Savannah v. Waldner, 49 Ga. 316; Mayor, etc., of Baltimore v. O'Donnell, 53 Md. 110, 36 Am. Rep. 395; Grant v. City of Brooklyn, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 381; Schweickhardt v. City of St. Louis, 2 Mo. App. 571; Mayor, etc., of Memphis v. Lasser, 9 Humph. (Tenn.) 760; contra, Painter v. Mayor, etc., 46 Pa. 213; or, as it is held in England, so to construct its sewers as not to injure the gas mains or other underground conveniences, and the municipality was held liable even when there was an independent contractor for the injury caused by an explosion in a private house because of an escape of gas from a main broken by the negligence of the contractor; [1896] 1 Q. B. 335.

And this rule is to be applied even though the contractor has stipulated that he will be responsible for all damages that may be caused in the execution of the work; Inhabitants of Veazie v. R. Co., 49 Me. 119; Smith v. City of St. Joseph, 42 Mo. App. 392; Pettengill v. City of Yonkers, 116 N. Y. 558, 22 N. E. 1095, 15 Am. St. Rep. 442; McAllister v. City of Albany, 18 Or. 426, 23 Pac. 845; contra, Osborn v. Ferry Co., 53 Barb. (N. Y.) 629. It has been held that where there is a statutory requirement that the contract be given to the lowest bidder, the municipality was not liable; James v. City of San Francisco, 6 Cal. 528, 65 Am. Dec. 526.

INDEPENDENT PROMISES. Those made in a contract upon which one party has a right of action against the other for any injury sustained by him by reason of a breach of the covenants or promises in his favor, and where an allegation of non-performance of his covenant by the plaintiff is no defence to such action.

When the performance of one depends or is conditional on the prior performance of the other, the agreements or covenants are said to be dependent. McCrelish v.

Churchman, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 26; Tompkins v. Elliot, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 496. Where performance of each is dependent or conditional upon performance of the other, they are mutually dependent.

Where there are promises on both sides in an agreement,—executory considerations,—it always becomes a question whether one party is bound to perform his before the opposite party shall be required to perform those on his side. When the agreements are dependent, neither party is bound actually to perform his part of the agreement to entitle him to an action for a breach by the other; it is enough that he was able to perform his part and offered to do so; Hammond v. Gilmore's Adm'r, 14 Conn. 479; Moore v. Hopkins, 15 La. Ann. 675.

Where the consideration is executory, technically speaking, the promise and not the performance is the consideration, and hence the obligation of one may be independent of the performance of the other. Upon examination and proper construction of mutual promises, it may appear "that the obligation of the one promise is made expressly or impliedly conditional upon the due performance of the other; and then the performance of the promise, constituting the executory consideration, is a condition precedent to the liability to perform the other promise; in the latter case the mutual promises are called dependent, and in the former they are called independent." Leake, Cont. 344.

In Jones v. Barkley, 2 Dougl. 684, Lord Mansfield thus classified mutual promises: "There are three kinds of covenants. 1. Such as are called mutual and independent, where either party may recover damages from the other for the injury he may have received by a breach of the covenants in his favor, and where it is no excuse for the defendant to allege a breach of the covenants on the part of the plaintiff. 2. There are covenants which are conditions and dependent, in which the performance of one depends on the prior performance of another, and, therefore, till this prior condition is performed, the other party is not liable to an action on his covenants. 3. There is also a third sort of covenants, which are mutual conditions to be performed at the same time; and, in these, if one party was ready, and offered, to perform his part, and the other neglected, or refused, to perform his, he who was ready and offered has fulfilled his engagement, and may maintain an action for the default of the other; though it is not certain that either is obliged to do the first act." In this case, it was clearly laid down that the criterion by which it is determined whether promises are dependent or not, is the intention of the parties, and this is to be determined from the whole contract; id.; Adams v. Williams, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 227; Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Howard, 13

How. (U. S.) 307, 14 L. Ed. 157; 29 L. J. C. P. 253; or as Lord Kenyon aptly says, "It must depend on the good sense of the case;" 6 Term 570. The rule is stated in Loud v. Water Co., 153 U. S. 564, 576, 14 Sup. Ct. 928, 38 L. Ed. 822. "The question whether covenants are dependent or independent must be determined in each case upon the proper construction to be placed on the language employed by the parties to express their agreement. If the language is clear and unambiguous it must be taken according to its plain meaning as expressive of the intention of the parties, and, under settled principles of judicial decision, should not be controlled by the supposed inconvenience or hardship that may follow such construction. If the parties think proper, they may agree that the right of one to maintain an action against another shall be conditional or dependent upon the plaintiff's performance of covenants entered into on his part. On the other hand, they may agree that the performance by one shall be a condition precedent to the performance by the other. The question in each case is, which intent is disclosed by the language employed in the contract." The intention is to be discovered from the order of time in which the acts are to be done, rather than from the construction of the agreement or the arrangement of the words; Goodwin v. Lynn, 4 Wash. C. C. 714, Fed. Cas. No. 5,553; Speake v. Sheppard, 6 Harr. & J. (Md.) 85. See also Howland v. Leach, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 151; Knight v. Worsted Co., 2 Cush. (Mass.) 287; Leonard v. Dyer, 26 Conn. 176, 68 Am. Dec. 382; Cadwell v. Blake, 6 Gray (Mass.) 407.

It is said that the dependency may be expressed or implied, as the condition is expressed or implied, and that the doctrine of implied dependency was introduced by Lord Mansfield, in Kingston v. Preston, cited in 2 Dougl. 684, before which, if there was no expressed dependency, a breach by one party was no defence to an action by the other and only gave him a cross-action; Harr. Cont. 153.

What is meant by implied dependency may be stated: From the definition of dependency it is clear that the term is used to describe certain conditions which necessarily belong only to bilateral contracts. As these conditions must originate in the intention of contracting parties, if expressed in the contract, they are governed by the law of conditions generally. In the absence of precise expression, the law imputes an intention, which creates an implied condition. The principles which regulate these conditions constitute the law of implied dependency and they are peculiar to the subject; Langd. Sum. Cont. 134.

The question of dependency is so much a matter of intention that there is much truth in the remark "that arbitrary rules are useless"; Harr. Cont. 153. Nevertheless certain rules of construction have been generally agreed upon and applied in the interpretation of contracts, with respect to this subject.

A note to Pordage v. Cole, 1 Wms. Saund. 319, termed by Pollock (Contracts 386) "the classic on the subject," gives the five rules of Mr. Serjeant Williams which are most referred to (Langd. Sel. Cas. Cont. 641, n. 5). These rules are adopted, in a different order, in Leake, Cont. 345, and substantially the same general principles have been grouped in four rules; 1 Bouv. Inst. 701; Platt, Cov. 80. These classifications are extremely interesting as affording a good illustration of what is practically an early codification of the principles governing an important branch of the law of contract, and, while the first is accessible, their repetition here is proper, as they must necessarily be referred to in connection with the brief statement which present limitations permit, of the rules of construction generally accepted.

The rules of Mr. Serjeant Williams are: 1. If a day be appointed for payment of money or part of it, or for doing any other act, and the day is to happen, or may happen, before the thing which is the consideration of the money or other act is to be performed, an action may be brought for the money, or for not doing such other act before performance; for it appears that the party relied upon his remedy, and did not intend to make the performance a condition precedent; and so it is where no time is fixed for performance of that which is the consideration or the money or other act. 2. But when a day is appointed for the payment of money, etc., and the day is to happen after the thing which is the consideration of the money, etc., is to be performed, no action can be maintained for the money, etc., before performance. 3. Where a covenant goes only to part of the consideration on both sides, and a breach of such covenant may be paid for in damages, it is an independent covenant, and an action may be maintained for a breach of the covenant on the part of the defendant without averring performance in the declaration. 4. But where the mutual covenants go to the whole consideration on both sides, they are mutual conditions, and performance must be averred. 5. Where two acts are to be done at the same time, as, where A covenants to convey an estate to B on such a day, and, in consideration thereof B covenants to A a sum of money on the same day, neither can maintain an action without showing performance of, or an offer to perform, his part, though it is not certain which of them is obliged to do the first act; and this particularly applies to all classes of sale. 1 Wms. Saund. 320 b.

The rules referred to as given by Bouvier (Inst. 701) are: When the mutual covenants go to the whole of the consideration on both sides, they are mutual conditions, the one precedent to the other.

Where the act of one party must necessarily precede any act of the other, as where one agrees to manufacture an article from materials to be furnished by the other, or to pay for goods on delivery, or to pay money on demand, the covenants are independent, and one act is a condition precedent to the other.

When mutual covenants go only to a part of the consideration on both sides, and when a breach may be paid for in damages, the defendant has a remedy on his covenant, and is not allowed to plead it as a condition precedent.

When a day is appointed for the payment of money, and the day comes before the thing for which the money is to be paid can be done, then, though the agreement is to pay the money before the doing of the thing, yet an action may be brought for the money before the performance; because the agreement is positive that the money shall be paid on that day, and the presumption is that the party intended to rely on his remedy and not on a previous performance.

Benjamin also lays down five rules based on those of Williams, but not following them in detail. The first combines rules 1 and 2; the second, third, and fourth are rules 3, 4, and 5 respectively; and the fifth is a brief statement, substantially, of the rule of intention of Lord Mansfield in Jones v. Barkley, which it is said "remains unchanged"; Benj. Sales § 561. For these rules of Benjamin see id. § 562.

Dependent promises can only exist as part of the same contract, but more than one contract may be included in one instrument; Harr. Contr. 159; Langd. Sum. Contr. § 115. So, on the other hand, each of two mutual promises may be contained in a separate instrument, each complete in itself and neither making any reference to the other. In such case, it has been said, there is no doubt that each forms a separate unilateral contract; id. § 117.

To be dependent, a simultaneous performance must have been intended; 8 Term 366; Sheeren v. Moses, 84 Ill. 448; Kane v. Hood, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 281; it is not sufficient that the performance of each promise was intended to be within the same period; 11 H. L. Cas. 337. They must be capable of performance at the same time and place, and involve an exchange of rights; Langd. Sum. Contr. § 133; but if a time is fixed for the performance of one, and not the other, they are dependent; id.; 4 H. & N. 500.

All the stipulations of a contract should be considered in determining the question of dependency, which may be general,—as to the whole consideration on each side,—or, it may exist only as to two distinct promises. Thus a contract may be partly bilateral and partly unilateral and as to the former part, the promises may be dependent.

A unilateral contract, from its nature, can contain only independent promises.

The conditions which must exist to render implied dependency possible are thus enumerated: "1st. The subject of implied dependency must be a covenant or a promise, as distinguished from a debt. 2dly. The subject of dependency and the thing upon which it depends must be of the same nature, i. e. they must both be covenants or both be promises. 3dly. The covenants or the promises must be mutual. 4thly. They must each be a part of the same contract; and it does not follow that they are so because they are made at the same time, or are contained in the same instrument. 5thly. If in writing, they must each be contained in the same instrument, or in different instruments which refer to each other. 6thly. The contract which contains the covenants or the promises must be wholly bilateral, or else it must clearly appear that the covenants or promises in question were given and received in payment for each other. 7thly. The performance of each of the covenants or promises must, it seems, be equally certain in legal contemplation;" Langd. Sum. Contr. § 120.

When the mutual contracts go to the whole of the consideration on both sides, they are mutual conditions, the one precedent to the other, but where a covenant goes only to a part of the consideration, it is not a condition precedent, but an action lies for the breach of it; Howland v. Leach, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 151; 1 Wms. Saund. 320 e, rules 3 & 4; 29 L. J. Ex. 73. Professor Langdell goes further and insists that two promises are not mutually dependent unless the performance of one is full payment for the performance of the other; Sum. Contr. §§ 133, 136; but Professor Harriman considers this "theory of equivalency," though "most ingeniously developed," as not "based on satisfactory authority"; Contr. 158. This difference of opinion between these able writers on the subject is itself sufficient to show that the point is not definitely settled. Possibly the lack of precise authority upon this single point of a subject, of which the substantial principles have been settled for more than a century, might be considered as fairly indicating that it is more interesting than material,—rather theoretical than practical. See [1894] App. Cas. 266. It should, perhaps, rather be said that differences of opinion (of which another on a very practical point is noted infra) between these two writers who have, more than any others, philosophically examined the subject, indicate that the generalizations of Mr. Serjeant Saunders, while containing the essential principles, are to be applied only with some modification to modern conditions. It is therefore essential that the student or practitioner in dealing with particular cases should include in his researches both the ancient learning and the modern investigations which have illuminated the topic. To these it is hoped that this title may furnish a reference,—it is manifestly possible to do little more, in the way of critical examination and comparison of cases.

Where a day is appointed for payment of money or doing any act, and such day must or may happen before the thing which is the consideration of the payment or performance of the other act, is to be made or done, the promises are independent; 1 Wms. Saund. 320 b, rule 1; Betts v. Perine, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 219; Seers v. Fowler, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 272; Couch v. Ingersoll, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 300; a distinction has been drawn, however, as to whether the time of the latter payment or performance is fixed entirely by reference to the former, and when it is so, the first is a condition precedent; Northrup v. Northrup, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 296; otherwise, if it is to be determined without reference to the other; 10 A. & E. 50.

It is the second of Serjeant Williams' rules, and the view is supported by Leake (Cont. 346), that if the day appointed is to happen after the act or payment, the promises are dependent: the cases cited being 18 C. B. 673 and 25 L. J. C. P. 254. The view that the last promise to be performed is dependent,—the other not,—is supported by Langdell (Sum. of Contr. § 122), on the authority of Grant v. Johnson, 5 N. Y. 247, which is put directly upon that rule. But Harriman (Contr. 154) dissents from this view and considers the authority relied upon by Langdell as "unsound in its reasoning," and he subjects it to severe criticism, as the result of what he terms the "peculiar and erroneous doctrine" of the New York courts. In this connection it is to be observed also that the rule thus questioned is not included in the fundamental rules of construction set forth in Bouvier's Institutes.

If two acts are to be done at the same time the promises are mutually dependent; 1 Wms. Saund. 320 e, rule 5; 9 Q. B. 164; but each must be capable of performance concurrently, i. e. in a moment of time; the object of both must be an exchange of property or right; and it must be between the immediate parties to the contract and capable of being performed at the same place; Langd. Sum. Cont. § 69; Northrup v. Northrup, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 296.

In case of contracts for payment of purchase money of land by instalments it is said that the promises to pay those instalments which become due before the date set for the delivery of the deed are absolute and independent, and in no way affected by a failure to deliver the deed at the time specified. But where the deed is to be delivered simultaneously with the payment of the last instalment, then on payment of the previous instalments the tender of the deed and the tender of the last instalment become mutual concurrent conditions; Kane v. Hood, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 281; Sheeren v. Moses, 84 Ill. 448.

Where a contract is made for the sale of goods to be delivered in instalments each to be paid for on delivery, it was held that the promises were dependent, and the failure to deliver one instalment as stipulated released the other party from the obligation to accept future deliveries; Norrington v. Wright, 115 U. S. 188, 6 Sup. Ct. 12, 29 L. Ed. 366. In this case the supreme court reviewed the English cases and considered the doctrine of Hoare v. Rennie, 5 H. & N. 19, as better supported by English authority than Simpson v. Crippin, L. R. 8 Q. B. 14, and Brandt v. Lawrence, 1 Q. B. Div. 344; the case relied upon to establish this view was Bowes v. Shand, 2 App. Cas. 455, and it was considered as not contravened by Mersey Co. v. Naylor, 9 App. Cas. 434, which was followed in the House of Lords in [1909] A. C. 118, as was also Freeth v. Burr, L. R. 5 C. P. 213, both said to be on broader lines than Porridge v. Cole, 1 Wms. Saund. 319. See, also, Hill v. Blake, 97 N. Y. 216; King Philip Mills v. Slater, 12 R. I. 82, 34 Am. Rep. 603; Shinn v. Bodine, 60 Pa. 182, 100 Am. Dec. 560; contra, Winchester v. Newton, 2 Allen (Mass.) 492; 25 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 59; 21 id. 398, n.

INDETERMINATE. That which is uncertain, or not particularly designated; as, if I sell you one hundred bushels of wheat, without stating what wheat. See CONTRACT.

INDETERMINATE SENTENCES. See SENTENCE.

INDIAN. The name of the aboriginal inhabitants of America.

In general, Indians had no political rights in the United States; they could not vote at the general elections for officers, nor hold office. In New York they were considered as citizens, and not as aliens, owing allegiance to the government and entitled to its protection; Jackson v. Goodell, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 188. The Cherokee nation in Georgia was a distinct community; Worcester v. Georgia, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 515, 8 L. Ed. 483. See Lee v. Glover, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 189; Danforth v. Wear, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 673, 6 L. Ed. 188; Dana v. Dana, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 181; Jackson v. King, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 506. The title of the Indians to land was that of occupation merely, but could be divested only by purchase or conquest; Gillespie v. Cunningham, 2 Humph. (Tenn.) 19; Stockton v. Williams, 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 546; Godfrey v. Beardsley, 2 McClean 412, Fed. Cas. No. 5,497; Johnson v. McIntosh, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 571, 5 L. Ed. 681; 2 Washb. R. P. 521; 3 Kent 378.

By act of March 3, 1871, no Indian nation or tribe within the United States shall be recognized as an independent nation with whom it may contract by treaty, but prior treaties are not to be thereby impaired.

By act of March 3, 1885, any Indian committing certain crimes within any territory, and within or without an Indian reservation, is subject to the laws of the territory, and shall be tried in the same manner and be subject to the same penalties as other persons charged with the same crimes; and if such offence be committed within a reservation in a state, he shall be subject to the same laws, etc., as if it were committed within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States. This act was held constitutional in U. S. v. Kagama, 118 U. S. 375, 6 Sup. Ct. 1109, 30 L. Ed. 228. See U. S. v. Thomas, 151 U. S. 577, 14 Sup. Ct. 426, 38 L. Ed. 276; U. S. v. King, 81 Fed. 625. The United States courts have jurisdiction of crimes committed by Indians within a reservation; U. S. v. Celestine, 215 U. S. 278, 30 Sup. Ct. 93, 54 L. Ed. 195.

The crime of murder committed by one

Cherokee Indian upon the person of another within the jurisdiction of the Cherokee nation is not an offence against the United States; Talton v. Mayes, 163 U. S. 376, 16 Sup. Ct. 986, 41 L. Ed. 196.

The indictment, the venue of the trial, and the jury on the prosecution of an Indian for murder committed in a territory are to be according to the territorial laws; In re Gon-shay-ee, 130 U. S. 343, 9 Sup. Ct. 542, 32 L. Ed. 973.

The act of February 8, 1887, provides for the allotment of lands to Indians in severalty. By it Indians receiving allotments thereby have the benefit of, and are subject to, the laws both civil and criminal of the state or territory in which they reside; In re Heff, 197 U. S. 488, 25 Sup. Ct. 506, 49 L. Ed. 848. Every Indian born in the United States to whom an allotment shall have been made by this act, or under any law or treaty, and any Indian born within the United States who has voluntarily taken up his residence therein apart from any Indian tribe and adopted the habits of civilized life, is made a citizen of the United States, without impairing his right to tribal property.

Under the act of April 26, 1906, Indians are not permitted to alienate or encumber allotted lands within twenty-five years. The leasing of their lands, other than homesteads for more than one year, may be made under rules prescribed by the secretary of the interior; in case of the inability of a full-blood Indian owning a homestead to work or farm the same, the secretary may authorize the leasing of it; Tiger v. Investment Co., 221 U. S. 286, 31 Sup. Ct. 578, 55 L. Ed. 738. Authority is given to all persons of lawful age and sound mind to dispose of their property by will, but they may not disinherit parent, spouse or children of full-blood Indian unless with the approval of a judge of a United States court in the territory or by the United States commissioner; id.; though such heirs have been admitted to full citizenship; id.; Cherokee Nation v. Hitchcock, 187 U. S. 294, 23 Sup. Ct. 115, 47 L. Ed. 183; U. S. v. Rickert, 188 U. S. 432, 23 Sup. Ct. 478, 47 L. Ed. 532.

The United States has supervision over the right of full-blood Indians to dispose of their lands by will and to require their conveyances of inherited lands to be approved by a court; Tiger v. Investment Co., 221 U. S. 286, 31 Sup. Ct. 578, 55 L. Ed. 738. Controversies over allotments while the same are held in trust by the United States are not primarily cognizable in any court; McKay v. Kalyton, 204 U. S. 458, 27 Sup. Ct. 346, 51 L. Ed. 566.

Prior to the act of August 15, 1894, the authority to determine the rights of claimants to allotments was vested in the secretary of the interior; Hy-Yu-Tse-Mil-Kin v. Smith, 194 U. S. 408, 24 Sup. Ct. 676, 48 L.

Ed. 1039. That act provided that all Indians entitled to allotments may prosecute or defend any action in relation thereto in the circuit court of the United States. The judgment in favor of any claimant to an allotment has the same effect, when properly certified to the secretary of the interior, as if such allotment had been allowed and approved by him; McKay v. Kalyton, 204 U. S. 458, 27 Sup. Ct. 346, 51 L. Ed. 566. This act was amended February 6, 1901, the amendment expressly requiring that in such proceedings the United States should be defendant; McKay v. Kalyton, 204 U. S. 458, 27 Sup. Ct. 346, 51 L. Ed. 566.

An Indian woman who marries a citizen of the United States, voluntarily resides apart from her tribe, and adopts the habits of civilized life, becomes a citizen of the United States and of the state in which she resides; Hatch v. Ferguson, 57 Fed. 959; in a few states, marriages between white persons and Indians are forbidden by statute; Tiff. Pers. & Dom. Rel. 26. See CITIZENS; INDIAN TRIBE.

INDIAN DEPREDACTIONS ACTS. As early as May 19, 1796, an act was passed by congress, providing an eventual indemnification to citizens of the United States for depredations committed by Indians in taking or destroying their property; 1 St. L. 472. Other acts of a similar character were passed from time to time. By the act of March 3, 1891, congress conferred on the court of claims jurisdiction of claims for property taken and destroyed by Indians.

INDIAN TERRITORY. Formerly one of the territories of the United States. It was bounded on the north by the state of Kansas, on the east by the states of Arkansas and Missouri, on the south by the state of Texas, and on the west and north by the territory of Oklahoma. It comprised the Indian reservations of the Quapaw Agency and of the Cherokees, Choctaws, Chickasaws, Creeks, and Seminoles, the five civilized tribes. See OKLAHOMA.

INDIAN TRIBE. A separate and distinct community or body of the aboriginal Indian race of men found in the United States.

Such a tribe, situated within the boundaries of a state, and exercising the powers of government and sovereignty, under the national government, is deemed politically a state,—that is, a distinct political society, capable of self-government; but it is not deemed a foreign state in the sense of the constitution. It is rather a domestic dependent nation. Such a tribe may properly be deemed in a state of pupillage; and its relation to the United States resembles that of a ward to a guardian; Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 1, 8 L. Ed. 25; Jackson v. Goodell, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 193; 3 Kent 308; Story, Const. § 1096; U. S. v. Kagama, 118 U. S. 384, 6 Sup. Ct. 1109, 30 L. Ed. 228; Wall v. Williamson, 8 Ala. 48.

The obligation of the United States to protect Indians' use of land is of honor, not of law; they are wards and congress can make any change in the disposition of their lands which it deems best; Conley v. Ballinger, 216 U. S. 84, 30 Sup. Ct. 224, 54 L. Ed. 393.

"They were and always have been regarded as having a semi-independent position when they preserved their tribal relations; not as states, not as nations, not as possessed of the full attributes of sovereignty, but as a separate people with the power of regulating their internal and social relations, and thus far not brought under the laws of the Union or of the state within whose limits they resided;" U. S. v. Kagama, 118 U. S. 375, 6 Sup. Ct. 1109, 30 L. Ed. 228. See Lowe v. Kansas, 163 U. S. 84, 16 Sup. Ct. 1031, 41 L. Ed. 78. Their local self-government is subject to the supreme legislative authority of the United States; Cherokee Nation v. R. Co., 135 U. S. 641, 10 Sup. Ct. 965, 34 L. Ed. 295.

The United States has power to pass such laws as may be necessary to their full protection and to punish all offences committed against them or by them within their reservation; U. S. v. Thomas, 151 U. S. 577, 14 Sup. Ct. 426, 38 L. Ed. 276. No state can, either by its constitution or other legislation, withdraw the Indians within its limits from the operation of the laws of congress regulating trade with them; notwithstanding any rights it may confer on them as electors or citizens; U. S. v. Holliday, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 407, 18 L. Ed. 182; The Kansas Indians, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 737, 18 L. Ed. 667; The New York Indians, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 761, 18 L. Ed. 708. See State v. Campbell, 53 Minn. 354, 55 N. W. 553, 21 L. R. A. 169; nor can it authorize leases of Indian lands; Buffalo, R. & P. Ry. Co. v. Lavery, 75 Hun 396, 27 N. Y. Supp. 443.

The Pueblo Indians of New Mexico are not an Indian tribe within the meaning of the acts of congress; U. S. v. Joseph, 94 U. S. 614, 24 L. Ed. 295. The Indians residing in Maine, whose tribal organizations have ceased to exist, are not "Indian tribes," within the treaty-making power of the federal government; State v. Newell, 84 Me. 465, 24 Atl. 943. The policy of congress is to vest in the courts of the Cherokee nation jurisdiction of all controversies between Indians, or in which a member of the nation is the only party; In re Mayfield, 141 U. S. 107, 11 Sup. Ct. 939, 35 L. Ed. 635. See INDIAN.

By act of March 3, 1893, congress inaugurated the policy of terminating the tribal existence and government of the Indians and allotting their lands in severalty. Agreements were negotiated by the Dawes commission with each of the tribes designed to carry out the objects indicated. The agreement with the Seminoles was made in 1897, with the Creeks in 1901 and 1902, with the Choctaws and Chickasaws in 1898 and in 1902, and with the Cherokees in the latter year; Ex parte Webb, 225 U. S. 663, 32 Sup. Ct. 769, 56 L. Ed. 1248.

When Oklahoma was admitted into the Union, Nov. 16, 1907, the then existing tribal governments of the Five Civilized Tribes were continued in full force.

See Tiger v. Investment Co., 221 U. S. 286, 31 Sup. Ct. 578, 55 L. Ed. 738.

Congress may prohibit the introduction of liquor in to the Indian country; U. S. v. Sutton, 215 U. S. 291, 30 Sup. Ct. 116, 54 L. Ed. 200.

Treaties or agreements of the United States with Indian tribes are to be construed in the sense in which they would naturally be understood by the Indians; Jones v. Meehan, 175 U. S. 1, 20 Sup. Ct. 1, 44 L. Ed. 49.

INDIANA. The name of one of the states of the United States.

This state was admitted into the Union by virtue of a resolution of congress, approved December 11, 1816.

The boundaries of the state are defined, and the state has concurrent jurisdiction with the state of Kentucky on the Ohio river, and with the state of Illinois on the Wabash. As to the soil, the southern boundary of Indiana is low-water mark on the Ohio river.

The first constitution of the state was adopted in the year 1816, and has since been superseded by the present constitution, which was adopted in the year 1851. Amendments were adopted in 1881. In 1907, an amendment gave the general assembly power to prescribe qualifications for admission to practice law.

INDICARE. In the Civil Law. To show or discover. To fix or tell the price of a thing. Calv. Lex.

INDICATIF. An abolished writ by which a prosecution was in some cases removed from a court-christian to the Queen's Bench. Encyc. Lon.

INDICATION. In the Law of Evidence. A sign or token; a fact pointing to some inference or conclusion. Bur. Circ. Ev. 251, 263.

INDICATIVE EVIDENCE. This is not evidence so called, but the mere suggestion of evidence proper, which may possibly be secured if the suggestion is followed up. Brown.

INDICAVIT. A writ or prohibition that lay for a patron of a church where the clergyman presented by him to a benefice is made defendant in an action of tithes commenced in the ecclesiastical court of another clergyman, where the tithes in question extended to the fourth part of the benefice; for in this case the suit belonged to the king's court (i. e. the common law court) by the Stat. Westm. 2, c. 5. Cowell. The person sued might also avail himself of this writ. Toml.

INDICIA (Lat.). Signs; marks. Conjectures which result from circumstances not absolutely certain and necessary, but merely probable, and which may turn out not to be true, though they have the appearance of truth.

The term is much used in the civil law in a sense nearly or entirely synonymous with circumstantial evidence. It denotes facts which give rise to inferences, rather than the inferences themselves. However numerous indicia may be, they only show that a thing may be, not that it has been. An indictum can have effect only when a connection is essentially necessary with the principal. Effects are known by their causes, but only when the effects can arise only from the causes to which they are attributed. When several causes may have produced one and the same effect, it is, therefore, unreasonable to attribute it to any particular one of such causes.

The term is much used in common law of signs or marks of identity: for example, in replevin it is said that property must have indicia, or ear-marks, by which to distinguish it from other property of the same kind. So it is much used in the phrase "indicia of crime," in a sense similar to that of the civil law.

INDICTABLE. Capable of being indicted; liable to be indicted; as, an indictable offender.

That forms a subject or ground of indictment; as, an indictable offence. Encyc. Dict.

INDICTED. Having had an indictment found against him.

INDICTEE. One who is indicted. See INDITEE.

INDICTION. The space of fifteen years. It was used in dating at Rome and in England. The institution of indiction dates from the time of Constantine I., Sept. 1, or, according to some authorities, Sept. 15, 312; but the first instance of the use is mentioned in the Theodosian Code, under the reign of Constantius II. The papal court adopted computation by indictions about 800, the commencement of the first indiction being referred to Jan. 1, 313. The first year was reckoned the first of the first indiction, and so on till the fifteen years afterwards. The sixteenth year was the first year of the second indiction; the thirty-first year was the first year of the third indiction, etc.

INDICTMENT. A written accusation against one or more persons of a crime or misdemeanor, presented to, and preferred upon oath or affirmation by, a grand jury legally convoked. 4 Bla. Com. 299; Co. Litt. 126; 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 152.

An accusation at the suit of the crown, found to be true by the oaths of a grand jury (q. v.).

A written accusation of a crime presented upon oath by a grand jury.

The word is said to be derived from the old French word inditer, which signifies to indicate, to show, or point out. Its object is to indicate the offence charged against the accused. Rey, des Inst. l'Angl. tome 2, p. 347.

A presentment and indictment differ; 2 Inst. 739. A presentment is properly that which the grand jurors find and present to the court from their own knowledge or observation. Every indictment which is found by the grand jurors is presented by them to the court; and therefore every indictment is a presentment, but not every presentment is an indictment; Com. v. Keefe, 9 Gray (Mass.) 291; Story, Const. § 1784. An indictment is required under United States laws for capital or otherwise infamous crimes, but an information is authorized in many states; Beavers v. Henkel, 194 U. S. 73, 24 Sup. Ct. 605, 48 L. Ed. 882, where it is said that an indictment is prima facie evidence of probable cause. See the requirements of an indictment in Pettibone v. U. S., 148 U. S. 204, 13 Sup. Ct. 542, 37 L. Ed. 419.

The essential requisites of a valid indictment are,—first, that the indictment be presented to some court having jurisdiction of the offence stated therein; and the indictment must allege specifically that the crime was committed within its jurisdiction; McCoy v. State, 22 Neb. 418, 35 N. W. 202; Orr v. State, 25 Tex. App. 453, 8 S. W. 644; Smith v. State, 25 Tex. App. 454, 8 S. W. 645; State v. Hobbs, 37 W. Va. 812, 17 S. E. 380; second, that it appear to have been found by the grand jury of the proper county or district; third, that the indictment be found a true bill, and signed by the foreman of the grand jury; fourth, that it be framed with sufficient certainty; for this purpose the charge must contain a certain description of the crime or misdemeanor of which the defendant is accused, and a statement of the facts by which it is constituted, so as to identify the accusation; 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 167; Stewart v. Com., 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 194; 4 Bla. Com. 301; Brown v. State, 26 Tex. App. 540, 10 S. W. 112; it should set out the material facts charged against the accused; State v. O'Flaherty, 7 Nev. 153; Pettibone v. U. S., 148 U. S. 197, 13 Sup. Ct. 542, 37 L. Ed. 419; the ultimate facts and not the evidence; Brown v. U. S., 143 Fed. 60, 74 C. C. A. 214; but need not specify the statute on which founded; Crabb v. State, 88 Ga. 584, 15 S. E. 455. An indictment may charge a statutory offence in the language of the statute without greater particularity when, by that means, all that is essential to constitute the offence is stated fully and directly, without uncertainty or ambiguity; State v. Light, 17 Or. 358, 21 Pac. 132; State v. Howe, 100 N. C. 449, 5 S. E. 671; State v. Holmes, 40 La.

Ann. 170, 3 South. 564; Fifth, the indictment must be in the English language. But if any document in a foreign language, as a libel, be necessarily introduced, it should be set out in the original tongue, and then translated, showing its application; 6 Term 162.

Each count is, as it were, a separate indictment; Selvester v. U. S., 170 U. S. 262, 18 Sup. Ct. 580, 42 L. Ed. 1029. Intent must be averred if a part of the offence; U. S. v. Clark, 125 Fed. 92.

The formal requisites are:

First, the venue, which at common law should always be laid in the county where the offence has been committed, although the charge be in its nature transitory, as a battery; Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 2, c. 25, s. 35. See People v. Scott, 74 Cal. 94, 15 Pac. 384. The venue is stated in the margin thus: "City and county of —, to wit."

Second, the presentment, which must be in the present tense, and is usually expressed by the following formula: "The grand inquest of the commonwealth of —, inquiring for the city and county aforesaid, upon their oaths and affirmations present." See, as to the venue, Graham v. State, 1 Ark. 171; Hite v. State, 9 Yerg. (Tenn.) 357; Turns v. Com., 6 Metc. (Mass.) 225; People v. Wong Wang, 92 Cal. 277, 28 Pac. 270.

Third, the name and addition of the defendant; but in case an error has been made in this respect, it is cured by the plea of the defendant; Bac. Abr. Misnomer (B), Indictment (G 2); 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 175; 1 Chitty, Pr. 202; Russ. & R. 489. Where the defendant's name is stated differently in different parts of the indictment, it is fatally defective; Kinney v. State, 21 Tex. App. 348, 17 S. W. 423; or where it fails to state his given name, or aver that it is not known, a plea of misnomer in abatement should be sustained; Turner v. People, 40 Ill. App. 17; Pancho v. State, 25 Tex. App. 402, 8 S. W. 476; or where it gives a wrong name; Lewis v. State, 90 Ga. 95, 15 S. E. 697. See IDEM SONANS.

Fourth, the names of third persons, when they must be necessarily mentioned in the indictment, should be stated with certainty to a common intent, so as sufficiently to inform the defendant who are his accusers. When, however, the names of third persons cannot be ascertained, it is sufficient, in some cases, to state "a certain person or persons to the jurors aforesaid unknown." 2 East, Pl. Cr. 651, 781; 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 181; 8 C. & P. 773.

Fifth, the time when the offence was committed should, in general, be stated to be on a specific year and day. In some offences, as in perjury, the day must be precisely stated; U. S. v. Bowman, 2 Wash. C. C. 328, Fed. Cas. No. 14,631; but although it is necessary that a day certain should be laid in the indictment, yet, in general, the prosecutor may give evidence of an offence committed on any other day previous to the finding of the indictment; Jacobs v. Com., 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 316. See 1 Chitty, Cr. Law 217, 224; Com. v. Alfred, 4 Dana (Ky.) 496; Vowells v. Com., 84 Ky. 52; Com. v. Le Clair, 147 Mass. 539, 18 N. E. 428; Crass v. State, 30 Tex. App. 480, 17 S. W. 1096; People v. Formosa, 131 N. Y. 478, 30 N. E. 492, 27 Am. St. Rep. 612; Ball v. U. S., 140 U. S. 118, 11 Sup. Ct. 761, 35 L. Ed. 377. It is not material, except where time is of the essence of the offence, to charge in an indictment the true day on which an offence was committed, or to prove the day as charged; State v. Swain, 97 N. C. 462, 2 S. E. 68. In the absence of a statute abrogating the common-law rule, there is no doubt that an indictment charging the commission of an offence at an impossible date, is fatally defective; as, for instance, charging the commission of the crime on a certain day in the year, 18903, notwithstanding the fact that there was a statutory provision that no indictment should be deemed invalid for stating imperfectly the time when the offence was committed; Terrell v. State, 165 Ind. 443, 75 N. E. 884, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 251, 112 Am. St. Rep. 244, 6 Ann. Cas. 551. As to averments of time and place in an indictment for homicide, see note 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1019.

Sixth, the offence should be properly described. This is done by stating the substantial circumstances necessary to show the nature of the crime, and next, the formal allegations and terms of art required by law. Steph. Cr. Proc. 156. An omission of matter of substance in an indictment is not aided or cured by verdict; U. S. v. Hess, 124 U. S. 483, 8 Sup. Ct. 571, 31 L. Ed. 516. An indictment charging a crime "on or about" a certain date is not defective, these words being surplusage, the real date being that specifically charged; State v. McCarthy, 44 La. Ann. 323, 10 South. 673.

As to the substantial circumstances. The whole of the facts of the case necessary to make it appear judicially to the court that the indictors have gone upon sufficient premises should be set forth; but there should be no unnecessary matter, nor anything which on its face makes the indictment repugnant, inconsistent, or absurd. And if there is no necessary ambiguity, the court is not bound, it has been observed, to create one by reading the indictment in the only way which will make it unintelligible. It is a clear principle that the language of an indictment must be construed by the rules of pleading, and not by the common interpretation of ordinary language; for nothing indeed differs more widely in construction than the same matter when viewed by the rules of pleading and when construed by the language of ordinary life; 16 Q. B. 846; 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 183; Bac. Abr. Indictment (G 1); Com. Dig. Indictment (G 3). Averments of matters not material or necessary ingredients in the offence charged may be rejected as surplusage; State v. Kern, 51 N. J. L. 259, 17 Atl. 114. An indictment is not insufficient by reason of any defect or imperfection in matter of form only, which shall not tend to the prejudice of the defendant; Caba v. U. S., 152 U. S. 211, 14 Sup. Ct. 513, 38 L. Ed. 415. All indictments ought to charge a man with a particular offence, and not with being an offender in general: to this rule there are some exceptions, as indictments against a common barrator, a common scold, and a keeper of a common bawdy-house; such persons may be indicted by these general words; 1 Chitty, Cr. Law 230, and the authorities there cited. The offence must not be stated in the disjunctive, so as to leave it uncertain on what it is intended to rely as an accusation: as, that the defendant erected or caused to be erected a nuisance; Com. v. Grey, 2 Gray (Mass.) 501, 61 Am. Dec. 476; 6 D. & R. 143; 2 Rolle, Abr. 31.

There are certain terms of art used, so appropriated by the law to express the precise idea which it entertains of the offence, that no other terms, however synonymous they may seem, are capable of filling the same office: such, for example, as traitorously (q. v.), in treason; feloniously (q. v.), in felony; Kaelin v. Com., 84 Ky. 354, 1 S. W. 594; State v. Bryan, 112 N. C. 848, 16 S. E. 909; State v. Hang Tong, 115 Mo. 389, 22 S. W. 381; burglariously (q. v.), in burglary; maim (q. v.), in mayhem, etc.

Seventh, the conclusion of the indictment should conform to the provision of the constitution of the state on the subject, where there is such provision; as in Pennsylvania; Const. art. 5, s. 11, which provides that all "prosecutions shall be carried on in the name and by the authority of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and conclude against the peace and dignity of the same"; see State v. McClung, 35 W. Va. 280, 13 S. E. 654; it is not necessary that each count should so conclude; Stebbins v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 294, 20 S. W. 552. As to the necessity and propriety of having several counts in an indictment, see 1 Chitty, Cr. Law 248; Steph. Cr. Proc. 153; COUNT; as to joinder of several offences in the same indictment, see 1 Chitty, Cr. Law 253; Archb. Cr. Pl. 60; in one count, see 9 L. R. A. 182, note. A count in an indictment may refer to allegations in other counts to avoid repetition; People v. Graves, 5 Park. Cr. R. (N. Y.) 134; People v. Danihy, 63 Hun 579, 18 N. Y. Supp. 467; Blitz v. U. S., 153 U. S. 308, 14 Sup. Ct. 924, 38 L. Ed. 725. Several defendants may, in some cases, be joined in the same indictment; Archb. Cr. Pl. 59; as where one is charged with assault with intent to kill, and another as accessory before the fact; State v. Lang, 65 N. H. 284, 23 Atl. 432; Com. v. Devine, 155 Mass. 224, 29 N. E. 515.

At common law an indictment cannot be amended by the court. It was said by Lord Mansfield in Rex v. Wilkes: "Indictments are found upon the oaths of a jury, and ought only to be amended by themselves;" 4 Burr. 2527. The rule has been continuously adhered to; Hawk. P. C. b. 2, c. 25, § 97; Stark. Cr. Pl. 287; Whart. Cr. Pl. & Pr. § 90; Com. v. Drew, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 279; State v. Sexton, 10 N. C. 184, 14 Am. Dec. 584. "It is a well-settled rule of law that the statute respecting amendments does not extend to indictment;" Shaw, C. J., in Com. v. Child, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 200; and "an amendment cannot be allowed even with the consent of the prisoner"; Com. v. Mahar, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 120; People v. Campbell, 4 Park. Cr. R. (N. Y.) 387. The caption, however, may be amended, being, as it is said, no part of the indictment itself; State v. Williams, 2 McCord (S. C.) 301; State v. Society, 42 N. J. L. 504; Allen v. State, 5 Wis. 337.

In England the rule forbidding an amendment of an indictment has been changed by stat. 14 and 15 Vict. c. 100. In this country the subject does not rest on the common law, but there is also to be considered the constitutional guaranty to an accused of a trial, "on a presentment or indictment by a grand jury." It was settled by the United States supreme court that in the federal courts an indictment cannot be amended by the court, ~~both~~ by reason of the common-law rule and the constitutional provision; Ex parte Bain, 121 U. S. 1, 7 Sup. Ct. 781, 30 L. Ed. 849. The question whether the rule could be changed by statute was not actually involved, but it would seem to be settled in the negative by the reasoning of the opinion in that case. The question had been considered in some state courts, and it has been held that without amendment of the state constitution, the legislature may authorize amendment of indictments by the court, not changing the offence; Miller v. State, 53 Miss. 403; in other cases it was held that the legislature might dispense with or regulate matter of form; Brown v. People, 29 Mich. 232; State v. O'Flaherty, 7 Nev. 157; but they could not "dispense with such allegations as are essential to reasonable particularity and certainty in the description of the offence; McLaughlin v. State, 45 Ind. 338.

It is said by Bishop that "if a statute should authorize a material amendment to be made in an indictment for an offence which, by the constitution of the state was punishable only by indictment, the statutory direction would be a nullity." Bish. Cr. Proc., 2d ed. § 97; 26 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 446.

An indictment may be quashed at common law for such deficiency in body or caption as will make a judgment given on it against the defendant erroneous, but it is a matter of discretion: Bac. Abr. Indictment, K: 1 Chitty, Cr. Law 298; Archb. Cr. Pl. 66.

After verdict in a criminal case, it will be presumed that those facts without proof of which the verdict could not have been found were proved, though they are not distinctly alleged in the indictment; provided it contains terms sufficiently general to comprehend them in reasonable intendment; 2 C. & K. 868; 1 Tayl. Ev. § 73; Steph. Cr. Proc. 171. After verdict, defective averments in the second indictment may be cured by reference to sufficient averments in the first count; 2 Den. Cr. Cas. 340. A single good count in an indictment is sufficient to sustain a verdict of guilty and judgment thereon; Mead v. State, 53 N. J. L. 601, 23 Atl. 264; Hornsby v. State, 94 Ala. 55, 10 South. 522.

It is not error to join distinct offences in one indictment, in separate counts, against the same person; Ingraham v. U. S., 155 U. S. 434, 15 Sup. Ct. 148, 39 L. Ed. 213.

In an indictment for a statutory offence, while it is doubtless true that it is not always sufficient to use simply the language of the statute in describing the offence, yet, if such language is, according to the natural import of the words, fully descriptive of the offence, then it ordinarily is sufficient; Potter v. U. S., 155 U. S. 438, 15 Sup. Ct. 144, 39 L. Ed. 214. The general rule is that the offence can be described in the words of the statute, and it is for the defendant to show that greater particularity is required by reason of the omission from the statute of some element of the offense; Armour Packing Co. v. U. S., 209 U. S. 84, 28 Sup. Ct. 428, 52 L. Ed. 681.

The fact that a grand jury has ignored an indictment is not a bar to the subsequent finding of a true bill for the same offence; U. S. v. Martin, 50 Fed. 918. The finding of an indictment must appear from the order book of the court in which defendant was indicted; if it does not so appear, a verdict against him will be set aside; Simmons v. Com., 89 Va. 156, 15 S. E. 386; Goodson v. State, 29 Fla. 511, 10 South. 738, 30 Am. St. Rep. 135. The fact that the foreman of the grand jury in signing his name to the indorsement of "a true bill" used his initials instead of his full Christian name, is not ground for quashing the indictment; Zimmerman v. State, 4 Ind. App. 583, 31 N. E. 550; State v. Orrick, 106 Mo. 111, 17 S. W. 176, 329. One cannot be convicted of a higher degree of offence than that charged in the indictment; McCullough v. State, 132 Ind. 427, 31 N. E. 1116; but there may be a conviction of a lesser offence; Brown v. State, 31 Fla. 207, 12 South. 640.

U. S. R. S. § 1235, provides that no indictment shall be deemed insufficient, nor the trial or judgment thereon be affected, by reason of any defect in matter of form only, which shall not tend to the prejudice of the defendant.

See AD TUNC ET IBIDEM; INFAMOUS CRIME; INFORMATION; GRAND JURY; AGAINST THE WILL; RECITAL.

INDICTOR. He who causes another to be indicted. The latter is sometimes called the indictree.

INDIFFERENT. To have no bias or partiality. Mitchell v. Kirtland, 7 Conn. 229. A juror, an arbitrator, and a witness ought to be indifferent; and when they are not so they may be challenged. See Fitch v. Smith, 9 Conn. 42.

INDIGENA, INDIGENÆ. A native; born or bred in the same country or town. Ainsw. A subject born, or naturalized by act of parliament. Opposed to alienigena. Rymer, to. 15, p. 37; Co. Litt. 8a; U. S. v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S. 662, 18 Sup. Ct. 456, 42 L. Ed. 890.

INDIGENT. One who is destitute of property or means of comfortable sustenance; one who is needy or poor. Juneau County v. Wood County, 109 Wis. 330, 85 N. W. 387.

The term was designated for the benefit of the laboring population which is only self-supporting while employed, and is applied to those who were afforded a temporary support from the county for a special time; People v. Supervisors, 121 N. Y. 345, 24 N. E. 830. See DEPENDENT.

INDIGENT INSANE. Those who have no income over and above what is sufficient to support those who may be legally dependent on them. In re Hybart, 119 N. C. 359, 25 S. E. 963.

INDIRECT EVIDENCE. Evidence which does not prove the fact in question, but one from which it may be presumed.

Inferential evidence as to the truth of a disputed fact, not by testimony of any witness to the fact, but by collateral circumstances ascertained by competent means. 1 Stark. Ev. 15; Wills, Circ. Ev. 24; Best, Ev. 21, § 27, note; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 13.

INDITEE (L. Fr.). In Old English Law. A person indicted. 9 Coke.

INDIVIDUUM (Lat.). In the Civil Law. That cannot be divided. Calv. Lex.

INDIVISIBLE. That cannot be separated.

The effect of the breach of a contract depends in a large degree upon whether it is to be regarded as indivisible or divisible; i. e. whether it forms a whole, the performance of every part of which is a condition precedent to bind the other party or is composed of several independent parts, the performance of any one of which will bind the other party pro tanto. This question is one of construction, and depends on the circumstances of each case; and the only test is whether the whole quantity of the things concerned, or the sum of the acts to be done, is of the essence of the contract. It depends, therefore, in the last resort, simply upon the intention of the parties; Broumel v. Rayner, 68 Md. 47, 11 Atl. 833; Wooten v. Walters, 110 N. C. 251, 14 S. E. 734, 736. See 9 Q. B. D. 648; Gill v. Lumber Co., 151 Pa. 534, 25 Atl. 120; Norrington v. Wright, 115 U. S. 188, 6 Sup. Ct. 12, 29 L. Ed. 366; Barrie v. Earle, 143 Mass. 1, 8 N. E. 639, 58 Am. Rep. 126; King Philip Mills v. Slater, 12 R. I. 82, 34 Am. Rep. 603; Pope v. Porter, 102 N. Y. 366, 7 N. E. 304.

When a consideration is entire and indivisible, and it is against law, the contract is void in toto; Woodruff v. Hinman, 11 Vt. 592, 34 Am. Dec. 712; Frazier v. Thompson, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 235. When the consideration is divisible, and part of it is illegal, the contract is void only pro tanto. In such case, it has been said, the connection between the different contracts is physical, not legal. See, generally, Harr. Contr. 132; Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 220, 17 L. Ed. 530.

To ascertain whether a contract is divisible or indivisible is to ascertain whether it may or may not be enforced in part, or paid in part, without the consent of the other party. See ENTIRETY; INDEPENDENT PROMISES.

INDIVISUM (Lat.). That which two or more persons hold in common without partition; undivided.

INDORSE. To write on the back. Bills of exchange and promissory notes are indorsed by a party's writing his name on the back. See INDORSEMENT. Writs in Massachusetts are indorsed in some cases by a person's writing his name on the back, in which case he becomes liable to pay the costs of the suit.

INDORSEE. The person or party to whom a bill of exchange is indorsed, or transferred by indorsement. See INDORSEMENT.

INDORSEE IN DUE COURSE. An indorsee in due course is one who, in good faith, in the ordinary course of business, and for value, before its apparent maturity or presumptive dishonor, and without knowledge of its actual dishonor, acquires a negotiable instrument duly indorsed to him, or indorsed generally, or payable to the bearer.

INDORSEMENT. That which is written on the back of an instrument in writing and which has relation to it.

Writing one's name on the back of a promissory note or other negotiable instrument. Partridge v. Davis, 20 Vt. 499.

Written on the back of an original instrument, or on an "allonge" attached thereto, if there be not sufficient space on the original paper. Fountain v. Bookstaver, 141 Ill. 461, 31 N. E. 17; Crutchfield v. Easton, 13 Ala. 337; Bishop v. Chase, 156 Mo. 158, 56

S. W. 1080, 79 Am. St. Rep. 515. It need not appear that it was physically impossible to indorse on the instrument; it may be on another paper when necessity or convenience requires it; Crosby v. Roub, 16 Wis. 616, 84 Am. Dec. 720.

An indorsement is generally made primarily for the purpose of transferring the rights of the holder of the instrument to some other person. It has, however, various results, such as rendering the indorser liable in certain events; and hence an indorsement is sometimes made merely for the purpose of additional security. This is called an accommodation indorsement when done without consideration.

It was said by Chief Justice Gibson that "the contract of indorsement is not an independent one, but a parasite which, like the chameleon, takes the hue of the thing with which it is connected. Attached to commercial paper, it becomes a commercial contract operating as a contingent guaranty of payment and a transfer of the title where the paper is negotiable; attached to any other chose in action, it becomes an equitable assignment of the beneficial interest without recourse to the assignor"; Patterson v. Poin Dexter, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 227, 234, 40 Am. Dec. 554, quoted with approval in National Union Bank v. Shearer, 225 Pa. 470, 480, 74 Atl. 351, 17 Ann. Cas. 664.

A blank indorsement is one in which the name of the indorser only is written upon the instrument. It is commonly made by writing the name of the indorser on the back; Folwell v. Beaver, 13 S. & R. (Pa.) 315; but a writing across the face may answer the same purpose; Folger v. Chase, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 63; 16 East 12. Its effect is to make the instrument thereafter payable to bearer; Byles, Bills *151; Neg. Instr. Act § 131. If an instrument payable to bearer is indorsed specially, it may nevertheless be further negotiated by delivery. id. § 129.

The holder may convert a blank indorsement into a special indorsement by writing over the signature of the indorser in blank any contract consistent with the character of the indorsement. id. § 130.

A conditional indorsement is one made subject to some condition without the performance of which the instrument will not be or remain valid. 4 Taunt. 30. A bill may be indorsed conditionally, so to impose on the drawee who afterwards accepts a liability to pay the bill to the indorsee or his transferees in a particular event only; Byles, Bills *150. An indorsement on a note, making it payable on a contingency does not affect its negotiability; Tappan v. Ely, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 362.

But the person required to pay the instrument may disregard the condition and make payment to the indorsee or his transferee, whether the condition has been fulfilled or not. Neg. Instr. Act § 136.

An indorsement in full, or a special indorsement, is one in which mention is made of the name of the indorsee. Chitty, Bills 170. The omission of the words "or order" is not material, for the indorsee takes it with all its incidents, including its negotiable quality; Byles, Bills *151. The omission of the words "or order" in a special indorsement will not restrain the negotiability of a bill; 2 Burr. 1216; 1 Stra. 557.

A qualified indorsement is one which restrains or limits, or qualifies, or enlarges the liability of the indorser, in any manner different from what the law generally imports as his true liability, deducible from the nature of the instrument. Chitty, Bills 261; 7 Taunt. 160. The words commonly used are sans recours, without recourse; Upham v. Prince, 12 Mass. 14. An indorsement without recourse, or at the indorsee's "own risk," will not expose the indorser to any liability; Lawrence v. Dobyne, 30 Mo. 196; Cady v. Shepard, 12 Wis. 639; Fitchburg Bank v. Greenwood, 2 Allen (Mass.) 434; Craft v. Fleming, 46 Pa. 140. But such an indorsement warrants the genuineness of all prior signatures; Dumont v. Williamson, 18 Ohio St. 516, 98 Am. Dec. 186; that the indorser has title to the note; Mays v. Callison, 6 Leigh (Va.) 230; that the note is valid between the original parties, and not illegal or without consideration; Blethen v. Lovering, 58 Me. 437; Challiss v. McCrum, 22 Kan. 157, 31 Am. Rep. 181; and that the parties were competent to contract; id. The assignment without recourse leaves the assignor liable as vendor; Bevan v. Fitzsimmons, 40 Ill. App. 108.

It does not render the note non-negotiable; Page v. Ford (Or.) 131 Pac. 1013; Neg. Instr. Act § 135.

A restrictive indorsement is one which restrains the negotiability of the instrument to a particular person or for a particular purpose; Hermann v. Bank, 1 Rob. (La.) 222. Such are "Pay A. B. or order, for my use," or "for my account," or "only." Neg. Instr. Act §§ 132, 133, 134.

By the law merchant, bills and notes payable to order can be transferred only by indorsement; Russell v. Swan, 16 Mass. 314; Humphreyville v. Culver, 73 Ill. 485; Habersham v. Lehman, 63 Ga. 380; Central Trust Co. v. Bank, 101 U. S. 68, 25 L. Ed. 876; Osgood's Adm'rs v. Artt, 17 Fed. 575; Sto. Prom. N. § 120; Hatch v. Barrett, 34 Kan. 223, 8 Pac. 129. Indorsement is not complete before delivery of the note; Dann v. Norris, 24 Conn. 333; Spencer v. Carstarphen, 15 Colo. 445, 24 Pac. 882.

Delivery means transfer of possession, either actual or constructive, from one person to another. Neg. Instr. Act § 124. Hence the word indorsee in a declaration on a bill imports a delivery; Wood's Byles, Bills § 153.

An instrument promising to pay a sum certain with interest, as per annexed coupons, reciting that note and coupons were secured by mortgage, was negotiable; but an indorsement, "for value received, we hereby assign and transfer the within bond, together with all our interest in, and rights under the same, without recourse," was not a commercial indorsement, but a mere assignment passing an equitable interest subject to the defences of the makers, and the negotiability of the instrument was thereby destroyed, and the subsequent indorsement of the transferee did not make him liable for payment in the absence of any independent contract; De Hass v. Roberts, 59 Fed. 853.

When, by such an assignment, the legal title is left in the payee, the equitable interest merely passing to the transferee, it necessarily follows that the negotiable character of the instrument is destroyed; Aniba v. Yeomans, 39 Mich. 171. And a subsequent indorsement by the transferee does not, in the absence of a special contract, render him liable; Dan. Neg. Inst. 666; Gray v. Donahoe, 4 Watts (Pa.) 400; Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Piolet, 126 Pa. 194, 17 Atl. 603, 4 L. R. A. 190, 12 Am. St. Rep. 860. The indorsement of a non-negotiable note without proof of a special contract to become responsible means nothing and creates no liability; Fear v. Dunlap, 1 G. Greene (Ia.) 334; Dan. Neg. Inst. 709. See also Graham v. Wilson, 6 Kan. 489; Story v. Lamb, 52 Mich. 525, 18 N. W. 248; First Nat. Bank of Trenton v. Gay, 71 Mo. 627. The person making such indorsement guarantees the note to be genuine, and that it is what it purports to be; nothing more. He does not guaranty its payment, although he might do this by independent contract expressed in the contract or otherwise; Fear v. Dunlap, 1 G. Greene (Ia.) 334.

The effect of the indorsement of a negotiable promissory note or bill of exchange is to transfer the property in the note to the person mentioned in the indorsement when it is made in full; Brown v. McWhite, 30 S. C. 356, 9 S. E. 277; or, when made in blank, to any person to whose possession it may lawfully come thereafter even by mere delivery, so that the possessor may sue upon it in his own name at law, as well as if he had been named as the payee; Evans v. Gee, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 80, 9 L. Ed. 639; Seabury v. Hungerford, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 80; Everett v. Tidball, 34 Neb. 803, 52 N. W. 816; Howland v. Bates, 1 Misc. 91, 20 N. Y. Supp. 373; Jones v. Shapera, 57 Fed. 457, 6 C. C. A. 423.

Any person who has possession of the instrument is presumed to be, the legal bona fide owner for value, until the contrary is shown; Palmer v. Marshall, 60 Ill. 289.

The payee of a note can restrain its negotiability, but a subsequent indorser can revive its negotiable quality; Holmes v. Hooper, 1 Bay (S. C.) 160.

The parties are presumed to stand to each other in the relations in which their names appear. Where the holder has knowledge, the facts may be shown as between him and the other parties; Whitehouse v. Hanson, 42 N. H. 9.

An indorsement on the last day of grace is good; Crosby v. Grant, 36 N. H. 273; contra, Pine v. Smith, 11 Gray (Mass.) 38. An indorsement is presumed to be of the same date as the instrument; Snyder v. Oatman, 16 Ind. 265; Stewart v. Smith, 28 Ill. 397; or at least to have been made before maturity; Blum v. Loggins, 53 Tex. 136; Collins v. Gilbert, 94 U. S. 753, 24 L. Ed. 170.

An indorsement may be made before the bill or note itself, and so render the indorser liable to all subsequent parties; Byles, Bills *167; Durham v. Clogg, 30 Md. 284. A blank indorsement upon a blank piece of paper, with intent to give a person credit, is, in effect, a letter of credit; if a promissory note is afterwards written on the paper, the indorser cannot object; Dougl. 496; Violett v. Patton, 5 Cra. (U. S.) 142, 3 L. Ed. 61; but if the holder had notice of any fraud he cannot fill in the blanks; 3 Q. B. D. 643.

When the indorsement is made before the note becomes due, the indorsee and all subsequent holders are entitled to recover the face of the note against the maker, without any right on his part to offset claims which he may have against the payee; or, as it is frequently stated, the indorsee takes it free of all equities between the antecedent parties of which he had no notice; 8 M. & W. 504; Savings Bank of New Haven v. Bates, 8 Conn. 505; Thompson v. Gibson, 1 Mart. N. S. (La.) 150; Swift v. Tyson, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 1, 10 L. Ed. 865. The indorser of a promissory note before maturity without recourse is responsible thereon if the note is fraudulent, fictitious, or forged; Palmer v. Courtney, 32 Neb. 773, 49 N. W. 754.

An indorsement admits the signatures and capacity of every prior party; Byles, Bills *155.

The blank indorsement of a non-negotiable bill has been held to operate as the drawing of a bill payable to bearer; 33 L. J. Q. B. 209. The indorsement of a non-negotiable note by a payee operates to assign the payee's rights to the indorser, who takes the former's place; Gorman v. Ketchum, 33 Wis. 427.

After a bill is due, the indorsee takes it on the credit of the indorser and subject to all equities; 4 M. & G. 101; as was said by Lord Ellenborough, "it comes disgraced to the indorsee;" 1 Campb. 19. But the maker can only set up such defences as are connected with the note, not those arising out of an independent transaction; Arnot v. Woodburn, 35 Mo. 99; 3 H. & N. 891; such as set-off as against the holder; Way v. Lamb, 15 Ia. 79; 10 Exch. 572. It is otherwise as to a check, which may be transferred by indorsement after it is payable; Byles, Bills *171; but taking a check six days old is a circumstance from which the jury may infer fraud; 9 B. & C. 388. A note payable on demand is not to be taken as overdue without some evidence of demand of payment and refusal; 4 B. & C. 327; although it is several years old and no interest has been paid on it; Byles, Bills *171; a promissory note payable on demand is intended to be a continuing security; 9 M. & W. 15; but it has been held to be overdue and dishonored after a reasonable time; Carll v. Brown, 2 Mich. 401; so after three months; Herrick v. Woolverton, 41 N. Y. 581, 1 Am. Rep. 461; (but see Herrick v. Woolverton, 42 Barb. [N. Y.] 50); after ten months; Morey v. Wakefield, 41 Vt. 24, 98 Am. Dec. 562.

A bill or note cannot be indorsed for part of the amount due the holder, as the law will not permit one cause of action to be cut up into several, and such an indorsement is utterly void as such, but when it has been paid in part, it may be indorsed as to the residue; Frank v. Kaigler, 36 Tex. 305.

Indorsers, also, unless the indorsement be qualified, become liable to pay the amount demanded by the instrument upon the failure of the principal, the maker of a note, or the acceptor of a bill, upon due notification of such failure, to any subsequent indorsee who can legally claim to hold through the particular indorser; Story, Bills § 224.

The indorsement of a draft to a fictitious indorsee is usually treated as making it payable to bearer; see FICTITIOUS PAYEE; Philips v. Bank, 140 N. Y. 556, 35 N. E. 982, 23 L. R. A. 584, 37 Am. St. Rep. 596; Neg. Instr. Act § 9; but not unless the maker knows the payee to be fictitious and actually intends the paper to be made payable to a fictitious person; Chism v. Bank, 96 Tenn. 641, 36 S. W. 387, 32 L. R. A. 778, 54 Am. St. Rep. 863; Shipman v. Bank, 126 N. Y. 318, 27 N. E. 371, 12 L. R. A. 791, 22 Am. St. Rep. 821; Armstrong v. Bank, 46 Ohio St. 512, 22 N. E. 866, 6 L. R. A. 625, 15 Am. St. Rep. 655; contra, Kohn v. Watkins, 26 Kan. 691, 40 Am. Rep. 336.

In most of the cases a person not a party to the instrument who writes his name on the back of it before delivery is in many states considered an original promisor; Malbon v. Southard, 36 Me. 147; White v. Howland, 9 Mass. 314, 6 Am. Dec. 71; Baker v. Block, 30 Mo. 225; Carr's Ex'x v. Rowland, 14 Tex. 275; Sylvester v. Downer, 20 Vt. 355, 49 Am. Dec. 786; and in Pennsylvania it was held that such irregular indorser was not liable to the payee; Schafer v. Bank, 59 Pa. 144, 98 Am. Dec. 323. By Neg. Instr. Act § 156, it is provided that: Where a person, not otherwise a party to an instrument, places thereon his signature in blank before delivery, he is liable as indorser in accordance with the following rules: If the instrument is payable to the order of a third person, he is liable to the payee and all subsequent parties; if it is payable to the order of maker or drawer or to bearer, then he is liable to all parties subsequent to the maker or drawer; if he signs for the accommodation of the payee, he is liable to all parties subsequent to the payee.

One who takes a note from its maker or payee is chargeable with knowledge that the indorsement of a third party thereon was for accommodation, and in a case of a corporation, such an act is ultra vires; Brill Co. v. Ry. Co., 189 Mass. 431, 75 N. E. 1090, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 525.

A plaintiff, in suing the first indorsee may omit to state in his declaration all the indorsements but the first indorsement in blank, and aver that the first blank indorser indorsed directly to himself; in such case all the intervening indorsements must be struck out; Byles, Bills *155; Merz v. Kaiser, 20 La. Ann. 377.

An indorsement by an officer of a corporation, where the fact appears on the instrument, does not render him individually liable; State Nat. Bank v. Singer, 39 La. Ann. 813, 2 South. 599.

An indorsement by one of several executors will not transfer the property; 2 C. & K. 37; Smith v. Whiting, 9 Mass. 334; contra, in case of administrators; Sanders v. Blain's Adm'r; 6 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 446, 22 Am. Dec. 86; and see Wheeler v. Wheeler, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 34. An executor cannot complete his testator's indorsement by delivering the instrument, which has already been signed by the testator; Wood's Byles, Bills 58; 1 Exch. 32.

The holder may at any time strike out any indorsement which is not necessary to his title. The indorser whose indorsement is struck out and all indorsers subsequent to him are thereby relieved from liability on the indorsement; Neg. Instr. Act § 147.

By the general law merchant, the indorser of a negotiable instrument is bound instantly, and may be sued after maturity, upon demand and notice of non-payment. But by the statutes of some of the states the maker must first be sued and his property subjected; Watson v. Hahn, 1 Colo. 385; Mason v. Burton, 54 Ill. 349; Booth v. Storrs, 54 Ill. 472; Harrison v. Pike, 48 Miss. 46.

The effect of acceptance upon a bill is to remove the acceptor to the head of the list as principal, while the drawer takes his place as first indorser.

A course of decisions with respect to restrictive indorsement has given rise to much discussion, resulting in so general a change in clearing-house rules as to amount to a revolution in banking methods.

The litigation arising from the relations between a bank, its depositor, and the indorsee of a check or draft commences with the early English case of Price v. Neal, followed in England and this country, in which it was held by Lord Mansfield that if the drawee pays a bill which he afterwards finds to be forged, he has no recourse against an innocent indorser; 3 Burr. 1354; nor has a bank which paid a forged check; Taunt. 76; Levy v. Bank, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 27. See also Bank of U. S. v. Bank, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 333, 6 L. Ed. 334; U. S. Nat. Bank v. Bank, 59 Hun 495, 13 N. Y. Supp. 411. The precise principle on which the doctrine of Price v. Neal was founded, has been a subject of varying opinion and the different theories concerning it, as also a voluminous citation of the cases, will be found in an article by Professor J. B. Ames in 4 Harv. L. Rev. 297. An extended review and discussion of the cases will also be found in Keener, Quasi-Cont. 154. While it is true that a bank pays a forged check at its own peril, if the depositor be free from negligence; Shipman v. Bank, 126 N. Y. 319, 27 N. E. 371, 12 L. R. A. 791, 22 Am. St. Rep. 821; it was held that no title passed through a forged indorsement, and hence payment by a bank made on the faith of it may be recovered from an indorsee even if bona fide for value; Canal Bank v. Bank, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 290.

A later decision had a very far-reaching effect with respect to the effect of restrictive indorsements. What has been characterized as "the doctrine, newly announced by the courts," has been thus stated: "Where a draft is indorsed to a bank for collection or for account of the indorser, the form of indorsement carries notice to the bank of payment that the bank to whom the paper is thus indorsed is a mere agent of the indorser to collect, having no proprietary interest in the paper; hence if the paper turns out to be forged (i. e. raised in amount, or payee's indorsement forged), the agent bank's own indorsement is not a guaranty of genuineness, and it is under no liability to repay the amount collected, after it has paid the same over to its principal." 13 Banking L. J. 75.

The first case was National Park Bank v. Bank, 114 N. Y. 28, 20 N. E. 632, 11 Am. St. Rep. 612, and this, it was said at a convention of bankers, "proved a revelation to many of us, and pointed out the great danger which lurked in checks and other paper having restrictive indorsements," and the second case, National City Bank of Brooklyn v. Westcott, 118 N. Y. 468, 23 N. E. 900, 16 Am. St. Rep. 771, was said "to have opened the eyes of banks, heretofore unacquainted with the decision (of the Seaboard Bank Case), to the real status of liability in case of restrictive indorsement;" address of S. G. Nelson, 13 Bkg. L. J. 445. The same doctrine was followed in other cases, so that it is fully established in New York and some other states and in the federal circuit court; Wells, Fargo & Co. v. U. S., 45 Fed. 337; U. S. v. Bank, 70 Fed. 232; Mechanics' Bank v. Packing Co., 70 Mo. 643; Germania Bank of Minneapolis v. Boutell, 60 Minn. 189, 62 N. W. 327, 27 L. R. A. 635, 51 Am. St. Rep. 519; Northwestern Nat. Bank v. Bank, 107 Mo. 402, 17 S. W. 982, 15 L. R. A. 102; and the basic principle of these decisions was already approved by the United States supreme court, which held that "the words 'for collection' evidently had a meaning. That meaning was intended to limit the effect which would have been given to the indorsement without them, and warned the party that, contrary to the purpose of a general or blank indorsement, this was not intended to transfer the ownership of the note or its proceeds." Sweeney v. Easter, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 166, 173, 17 L. Ed. 681; which was followed in a case of indorsement "for collection"; Commercial Nat. Bank v. Armstrong, 148 U. S. 50, 13 Sup. Ct. 533, 37 L. Ed. 363; and as to an indorsement "for account," it was said, "It does not purport to transfer the title of the paper, or the ownership of the money when received;" White v. Bank, 102 U. S. 658, 26 L. Ed. 250. In one state the contrary view has been taken and the bank of deposit of a draft with a forged indorsement, although a mere "indorsee for collection," was held liable to refund to its correspondent bank which had paid the money; Rhodes v. Jenkins, 18 Colo. 49, 31 Pac. 491, 36 Am. St. Rep. 263. See Onondaga County Sav. Bank v. U. S., 64 Fed. 703, 12 C. C. A. 407.

The result of the decisions cited was the general adoption of a rule by most of the clearing-house associations, substantially like that of New York, excluding, from the exchanges, paper having a qualified or restricted indorsement, such as "for collection" or "for account of," unless the same was guaranteed. In Chicago such paper was absolutely excluded. The result has been to make the question, what is a restrictive indorsement, one of vital importance and the judicial opinion is not uniform. The following have been held to be restrictive: "for collection;" Sweeney v. Easter, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 166, 173, 17 L. Ed. 681; People's Bank of Baltimore v. Keech, 26 Md. 521, 90 Am. Dec. 118; "for account;" White v. Bank, 102 U. S. 658, 26 L. Ed. 250; "for my use;" Wilson v. Holmes, 5 Mass. 543, 4 Am. Dec. 75; "credit my account;" Lee v. Bank, 1 Bond. 387, Fed. Cas. No. 8,186; "Pay to P. or order only;" Power v. Finnie, 4 Call (Va.) 411; "for deposit;" Beal v. Somerville, 50 Fed. 647, 1 C. C. A. 598, 17 L. R. A. 291 (contra, National Commercial Bank v. Miller, 77 Ala. 168, 54 Am. Rep. 50); "for deposit to the credit of;" Freeman v. Bank, 87 Ga. 45, 13 S. E. 160; contra (by a divided court), Ditch v. Bank, 79 Md. 192, 29 Atl. 72, 138, 23 L. R. A. 164, 47 Am. St. Rep. 375; but while the presumption is that it is restrictive, the bank may show by extrinsic evidence that it was not so, either by reason of a special agreement; Beal v. Somerville, 50 Fed. 647, 1 C. C. A. 598, 17 L. R. A. 291; or because the proceeds were passed to the depositor's credit and subject to check before collection; Fourth Nat. Bank of Cincinnati v. Mayer, 89 Ga. 108, 14 S. E. 891.

Where a bank to which a forged check was sent for collection credited the person sending it with the amount, without actually remitting the money, it could, on discovering the forgery, charge back the amount; Birmingham Nat. Bank v. Bradley, 103 Ala. 109, 15 South. 440, 49 Am. St. Rep. 17. See articles critically reviewing the cases, in the latter of which the conclusion is reached that an indorsement for deposit is restrictive; 13 Banking L. J. 361, 429; and see also Norton, Bills & N. 123; Daniel, Neg. Instr. §§ 636, 637, 698.

The indorsement or assignment of an instrument by a corporation or by an infant passes the property therein, notwithstanding that from want of capacity the corporation or infant may incur no liability thereon. Neg. Instr. Act § 138.

Where the holder of an instrument payable to his order transfers it for value without indorsing it, the transfer vests in the transferee such title as the transferor had therein, and the transferee acquired, in addition, the right to have the indorsement of the transferor. Neg. Instr. Act § 123.

See GUARANTY; BILLS OF EXCHANGE; PROMISSORY NOTES; NEGOTIABILITY.

In Criminal Law. An entry made upon the back of a writ or warrant.

When a warrant for the arrest of a person charged with a crime has been issued by a justice of the peace of one county, which is to be executed in another county, it is necessary, in some states, that it should be indorsed by a justice of the county where it is to be executed: this indorsement is called backing.

INDORSER. The person who makes an indorsement.

By section 154, a person placing his signature upon an instrument otherwise than as maker, drawer or acceptor, is deemed to be an indorser, unless he clearly indicates by appropriate words his intention to be bound in some other capacity. Neg. Instr. Act § 154.

The indorser of a bill of exchange, or other negotiable paper, by his indorsement undertakes to be responsible to the holder for the amount of the bill or note, if the latter shall make a legal demand from the payer, and, in default of payment, give proper notice thereof to the indorser. But the indorser may make his indorsement conditional, which will operate as a transfer of the bill if the condition be performed; or he may make it qualified, so that he shall not be responsible on non-payment by the payer; Chitty, Bills 179, 180.

To make an indorser liable on his indorsement to parties subsequent to his own indorsee, the instrument must be commercial paper; for the indorsement of a bond or single bill will not, per se, create a responsibility; Folwell v. Beaver, 13 S. & R. (Pa.) 311. See Story, Bills 202; Evans v. Gee, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 80, 9 L. Ed. 639.

When there are several indorsers, the first in point of time is generally, but not always, first responsible; there may be circumstances which will cast the responsibility, in the first place, as between them, on a subsequent indorsee; Chalmers v. McMurdo, 5 Munf. (Va.) 252, 7 Am. Dec. 684; Rhinehart v. Schall, 69 Md. 352, 16 Atl. 126; Sweet v. Woodin, 72 Mich. 393, 40 N. W. 471.

The fact that an indorsee, when he puts his name on a draft, did not think it would render him liable as an indorser, will not relieve him; First Nat. Bank v. Crabtree, 86 Ia. 731, 52 N. W. 559. Where the owner and holder of a promissory note after maturity sells and indorses the note, signing his name after that of the original payee, he is an indorser and not a joint maker; Lank v. Morrison, 44 Kan. 594, 24 Pac. 1106.

INDUCEMENT. In Contracts. The benefit which the promisor is to receive from a contract is the inducement for making it.

In Criminal Law. The motive. Confessions are sometimes made by criminals under the influence of promises or threats. When these promises or threats are made by persons in authority, the confessions cannot be received in evidence. See CONFESSION.

In Pleading. The statement of matter which is introductory to the principal subject of the declaration or plea, and which is necessary to explain or elucidate it. Such matter as is not introductory to, or necessary to elucidate the substance or gist of, the declaration, plea, etc., nor collaterally applicable to it, is surplusage.

An inducement is, in general, more a matter of convenience than of necessity, since the same matter may be stated in the body of the declaration; but by its use confusion of statement is avoided; 1 Chitty, Pl. 259.

But in many cases it is necessary to lay a foundation for the action by a statement, by way of inducement, of the extraneous or collateral circumstances which give rise to the plaintiff's claim. For instance, in an action for a nuisance to property in the possession of the plaintiff, the circumstances of his being possessed of the property should be stated as inducement, or by way of introduction to the mention of the nuisance; 1 Chitty, Pl. 292; Steph. Pl. 257.

When a formal traverse is adopted, it should be introduced with an inducement, to show that the matter contained in the traverse is material; 1 Chitty, Pl. 38. See TRAVERSE; INNUEUDO; COLLOQUIUM.

In an indictment there is a distinction between the allegation of facts constituting the offence, and those which must be averred by way of inducement. In the former case, the circumstances must be set out with particularity; in the latter, a more general allegation is allowed. An "inducement to an offence does not require so much certainty." Com. Dig. Indictment (G 5). In an indictment for an escape, "debito modo commissus" is enough, without showing by what authority; and even "commissus" is sufficient; 1 Vent. 170. So, in an indictment for disobedience to an order of justices for payment of a church-rate, an averment, by way of inducement, that a rate was duly made as by law required, and afterwards duly allowed, and that the defendant was by it duly rated, was held sufficient, without setting out the facts which constituted the alleged due rating, etc., although in the statement of the offence itself it would not have been sufficient; 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 222.

INDUCIÆ (Lat.). In Civil Law. A truce; cessation from hostilities for a time agreed upon. Also, such agreement itself. Calv. Lex. So in international law; Grotius, de Jure Bell. lib. 3, c. 2, § 11; Huber, Jur. Civit. p. 743, § 22.

In Old Practice. A delay or indulgence allowed by law. Calvinus, Lex.; Du Cange; Bract. fol. 352 b.; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 5, § 8. See Bell. Dict.; Burton, Law of Scotl. 561. So used in old maritime law; e. g. an induciæ of twenty days after safe arrival of vessels was allowed in case of bottomry bond, to raise the principal and interest; Locceivus, de Jure Marit. lib. 2, c. 6, § 11.

INDUCIÆ LEGALES (Lat.). In Scotch Law. The days between the citation of the defendant and the day of appearance; the days between the teste day and day of return of the writ.

INDUCTIO. In the Civil Law. Obliteration, by drawing the pen or stylus over the writing. Dig. 28, 4; Calv. Lex.

INDUCTION. In Ecclesiastical Law. The giving a clerk, instituted to a benefice, the actual possession of its temporalities, in the nature of livery of seisin. Ayliffe, Parerg. 299.

INDULGENCE. Forbearance (q. v.); delay in enforcing a legal right.

INDULTO. In Spanish Law. The condonation or remission of the punishment imposed on a criminal for his offence. L. 1, t. 32, pt. 7. This power is exclusively vested in the king.

The right of exercising this power has been often contested, chiefly as impolitic for the reason set forth in the following Latin verses:

"Plus sæpe nocet patientia regis
Quam rigor: ille nocet paucis; hæc incitat omnes, Dum se ferre suos sperant impune reatus."

INDUSTRIAL AND PROVIDENT SOCIETIES. Societies formed in England for carrying on any labor, trade, or handicraft, whether wholesale or retail, including the buying and selling of land, and also (but subject to certain restrictions) the business of banking (I. and P. Soc. Act, 1876, 6). Such a society (which must consist of seven persons at least) when registered under the act becomes a body corporate with limited liability, and with the word "limited" as the last word in its name (id. 7, 11), and is regulated by rules providing for the amount of the shares, the holding of meetings, the mode in which the profits are to be applied, etc.; id. 9.

INDUSTRIAM, PER (Lat.). A qualified property in animals feræ naturæ may be acquired per industriam, i. e. by a man's reclaiming and making them tame by art, industry, and education; or by so confining them within his own immediate power that they cannot escape and use their natural liberty. 2 Steph. Com. 5.

INEBRIATE. See HABITUAL DRUNKARD.

INEBRIETY. See DIPSOMANIA; DRUNKENNESS.

INELIGIBILITY. The incapacity to be lawfully elected; disqualification to hold an office if elected or appointed to it. State v. Murray, 28 Wis. 99, 9 Am. Rep. 489.

This incapacity arises from various causes; and a person may be incapable of being elected to one office who may be elected to another: the incapacity may also be perpetual or temporary.

Among perpetual inabilities may be reckoned, the inability of a citizen born in a foreign country to be elected president of the United States.

Among the temporary inabilities may be mentioned, the holding of an office declared by law to be incompatible with the one sought; the non-payment of the taxes required by law; the want of certain property qualifications required by the constitution; the want of age, or being too old.

As to the effect on an election of the candidate having the highest number of votes being ineligible, see ELECTION. See also ELIGIBILITY.

INE, CODE OF. A code of the West Saxons dating from 688 to 695. Adopted by Alford, probably with alterations. Seebohm, Tribal Customs, 386.

INEVITABLE ACCIDENT. A term used in the civil law, nearly synonymous with fortuitous event. Neal v. Saunderson, 2 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 572, 41 Am. Dec. 609.

Any accident which cannot be foreseen and prevented. Though used as synonymous with act of God (q. v.), it would seem to have a wider meaning, the act of God being any cause which operates without aid or interference from man; 4 Dougl. 287, 290, per Lord Mansfield; McArthur v. Sears, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 198; Fish v. Chapman, 2 Ga. 349, 46 Am. Dec. 393. In Story on Bailments § 489, the two phrases are treated as synonymous, but in a later edition, the editor, Judge Bennett, notes the distinction just mentioned and considers the phrase inevitable accident one of wider significance. See Hays v. Kennedy, 41 Pa. 379, 80 Am. Dec. 627, where this and similar expressions are discussed and distinguished; Webb, Poll. Torts 160.

Inevitable accident is a relative term and must be construed not absolutely but reasonably with regard to the circumstances of each particular case, and where having reference to a marine collision, it may be regarded as an occurrence which the party charged with the collision could not possibly prevent by the exercise of ordinary care, caution, and maritime skill; The Morning Light, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 560, 17 Wall. 862; 2 E. L. & E. 559. With reference to this subject Chief Justice Drake said that inevitable accident occurs only when the disaster happens from natural causes, without negligence or fault on either side; and when both parties have endeavored, by every means in their power, with due care and caution, and with a proper display of nautical skill, to prevent the occurrence of the accident; Sampson v. U. S., 12 Ct. Cl. 491; Union S. S. Co. v. Steamship Co., 24 How. (U. S.) 307, 16 L. Ed. 699.

Where a rat made a hole in a box where water was collected in an upper room, so that the water trickled out and flowed on the plaintiff's goods in a lower room; L. R. 6 Ex. 217; where pipes were laid down with plugs, properly made, to prevent the pipes bursting, and a severe frost prevented the plugs from acting and the pipes burst and flooded the plaintiff's cellar; 11 Ex. 781; where a horse took fright without any default in the driver or any known propensity in the animal, and the plaintiff was injured; 3 Esp. 533; where a horse, travelling on the highway, became suddenly frightened at the smell of blood; Jackson v. Town of Bellevue, 30 Wis. 257; where a horse, being suddenly frightened by a passing vehicle, became unmanageable and injured the plaintiff's horse; 1 Bingham 13; where a mill dam, properly built, was swept away by a freshet of unprecedented violence; Livingston v. Adams, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 175; it was held that no action would lie; otherwise when the falling of the tide caused a vessel to strand, as this could have been foreseen; Bohannon v. Hammond, 42 Cal. 227. A bailee is exempt from liability for loss of the consigned goods arising from inevitable accident; he may, however, enlarge his liability by contract; Sturm v. Boker, 150 U. S. 312, 14 Sup. Ct. 99, 37 L. Ed. 1093. See Act of God.

INFALISTATUS. In Old English Law. Exposed upon the sands, or seashore. A species of punishment mentioned in Hengham. Cowell.

INFAMIA (Lat.). Infamy; ignominy or disgrace.

By infamia juris is meant infamy established by law as the consequence of crime; infamia facti is where the party is supposed to be guilty of such crime, but it had not been judicially proved. Com. v. Green, 17 Mass. 515, 541.

INFAMIS (Lat.). In Roman Law. One who, in consequence of the application of a general rule, and not by virtue of an arbitrary decision of the censors, lost his political rights but preserved his civil rights. Savigny, Droit Rom. § 79.

INFAMOUS CRIME. A crime which works infamy in one who has committed it.

The fifth amendment of the constitution of the United States declares that, with certain exceptions not here material, "no person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury." A similar provision is contained in many of the state constitutions, although in some later ones there is a tendency to abridge the common-law strictness of requiring indictment by a grand jury.

It is settled that the provision of the federal constitution above quoted restricts only the United States so that a state may authorize an offence—capital or infamous—to be prosecuted by information; State v. Jackson, 21 La. Ann. 574; this rule of construction has been uniformly applied to the general restrictions contained in the first eight amendments; Barron v. Baltimore, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 243, 8 L. Ed. 672; Murphy v. People, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 815; Pom. Const. L. §§ 231–8.

Under the fifth amendment of the United States constitution, a person charged with murder, committed in Oklahoma Territory prior to statehood, must be prosecuted by indictment; Reed v. State, 2 Okl. Cr. App. 589, 103 Pac. 1042; Hayes v. State, 3 Okl. Cr. App. 1, 103 Pac. 1061; but an indictment is not required even in cases of common-law felonies under a state constitutional provision that no one shall be deprived of his liberty except by the laws of the land, and the legislature may authorize prosecutions by an information; State v. Stimpson, 78 Vt. 124, 62 Atl. 14, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1153, 6 Ann. Cas. 639.

It was said by Mr. Justice Miller, "There has been great difficulty in deciding what was meant a hundred years ago by the phrase infamous crime, which is used in this constitutional amendment. That difficulty is not diminished by the fact of the obscurity of the language itself as construed by what is known of the laws and usages of our ancestors at that time, in connection with the fact that both state and federal legislation in regard to crime may have made that infamous since, which would not have been so considered then;" Miller, Const. U. S. 504. The question was not authoritatively decided by the supreme court until 1885, when in Ex parte Wilson the theory that the true test is the nature of the crime, as understood at common law, was distinctly negatived, and it was said by Mr. Justice Gray for the court: "When the accused is in danger of being subjected to an infamous punishment, if convicted, he has the right to insist that he shall not be put upon his trial except on the accusation of a grand jury;" and the fifth amendment, declaring in what cases a grand jury should be necessary, practically affirmed the rule of the common law. This was that informations were not allowed for capital crimes nor for any felony, i. e. an offence which caused a forfeiture; 4 Bla. Com. 94, 95, 310; thus the requirement of an indictment depended upon the consequences of the convict, and it was concluded that the constitutional substitution of the words "a capital or otherwise infamous crime" for capital crimes or felonies, "manifestly had in view that rule of the common law, rather than the rule on the very different question of the competency of witnesses. The leading word capital describing the crime by its punishment only, the associated words or otherwise infamous crime must, by an elementary rule of construction, include crimes subject to any infamous punishment, even if they should be held to include also crimes infamous in their nature, independently of the punishment affixed to them."

Having determined that the character of the punishment was to be the criterion applied in such cases, the court discussed the question what punishment would be considered infamous, and carefully confining the decision to the requirements of the case, continued thus: "Deciding nothing beyond what is required by the facts of the case before us, our judgment is that a crime, punishable by imprisonment for a term of years at hard labor, is an infamous crime, within the meaning of the Fifth Amendment of the constitution." Ex parte Wilson, 114 U. S. 417, 418, 5 Sup. Ct. 935, 29 L. Ed. 89; U. S. v. Petit, 114 U. S. 429 note, 5 Sup. Ct. 1190, 29 L. Ed. 93.

This decision was followed by a number of others which adhered to the same doctrine and decided that imprisonment in a state prison or a penitentiary with or without hard labor was an infamous punishment; Mackin v. U. S., 117 U. S. 348, 6 Sup. Ct. 777, 29 L. Ed. 909; Ex parte Bain, 121 U. S. 1, 7 Sup. Ct. 781, 30 L. Ed. 849; Parkin-

Before this decision there had been a tendency on the part of the courts towards the doctrine that the question of infamy was to be determined by the nature of the crime and not at all by the character of the punishment.

Prior to the independence of the United States there were understood to be two kinds of infamy,—one based upon the opinion of the people respecting the mode of punishment, and the other having relation to the future credibility of the offender; Eden, Penal L. ch. 75. Because the legal bearing of the subject was mainly if not entirely with respect to the settlement of rules determining what crimes would disqualify the perpetrator from testifying. Accordingly the classification of crimes other than treason or felony, which were held to be infamous, were naturally those the commission of which would tend to cast discredit upon the veracity of the criminal,—denominated generally by the term crimen falsi. The manifest purpose of the constitutional provision under consideration was the incorporation into fundamental law of one of the great guarantees of liberty. "A mere reference to the history and adoption of this provision into the federal constitution is sufficient to show that it was not a question of competency or incompetency to testify that the framers of our government were considering, but rather in consequences to the liberty of the individual in securing him against accusation and trial for crimes of great magnitude, without the previous interposition of a grand jury;" Butler v. Wentworth, 84 Me. 25, 24 Atl. 456, 17 L. R. A. 764.

As was said by Shaw, C. J., in an opinion quoted with approval in Ex parte Wilson, supra, "The state prison for any term of time is now by law substituted for all the ignominious punishment formerly in use; and, unless this is infamous, then there is now no infamous punishment other than capital."

It is said in a case subsequent to that in which the supreme court settled the principle, under the laws of the United States, an infamous crime is one for which the statutes authorized the courts to award an infamous punishment. Its character as being infamous does not depend on whether the punishment ultimately awarded is an infamous one, but whether it is in the power of the courts to award an infamous punishment, or whether the accused is in danger of being subjected to an infamous punishment; Ex parte McClusky, 40 Fed. 71; Ex parte Wilson, 114 U. S. 417, 5 Sup. Ct. 935, 29 L. Ed. 89; But-

The authoritative settlement of this question by the supreme court renders it unnecessary to refer to the earlier decisions of the federal courts, which in some cases supported a different view. Many of them are referred to in the opinion of the supreme court, and the theories on which they are based are expressly disapproved. In some of the state courts the same conclusion was reached; Gudger v. Penland, 108 N. C. 593, 13 S. E. 168, 23 Am. St. Rep. 73; State v. Reeves, 97 Mo. 668, 10 S. W. 841, 10 Am. St. Rep. 349; Butler v. Wentworth, 84 Me. 25, 24 Atl. 456, 17 L. R. A. 764.

It has also been held that a crime to the conviction and punishment of which congress has superadded a disqualification to hold office, is thereby made infamous; U. S. v. Waddell, 112 U. S. 76, 5 Sup. Ct. 35, 28 L. Ed. 673; Ex parte Wilson, 114 U. S. 417, 5 Sup. Ct. 935, 29 L. Ed. 89. The course of decisions cited renders the cases as to particular crimes of little value, but of those held to be infamous under the principle stated are, larceny; U. S. v. Fuller, 3 N. M. (Johns.) 367, 9 Pac. 597; Ex parte McClusky, 40 Fed. 71; assault with intent to kill; Ex parte Brown, 40 Fed. 81; selling liquors without paying a revenue tax; U. S. v. Johannesen, 35 Fed. 411; In re Mills, 135 U. S. 263, 10 Sup. Ct. 762, 34 L. Ed. 107; refusing to register voters; U. S. v. Cobb, 43 Fed. 570; counterfeiting United States securities; Ex parte Wilson, 114 U. S. 417, 5 Sup. Ct. 935, 29 L. Ed. 89; embezzlement and making false entries by an officer of a national bank; U. S. v. De Walt, 128 U. S. 393, 9 Sup. Ct. 111, 32 L. Ed. 485; Ex parte Bain, 121 U. S. 1, 7 Sup. Ct. 781, 30 L. Ed. 849; In re Claasen, 140 U. S. 200, 11 Sup. Ct. 735, 35 L. Ed. 409. When a state authorizes prosecution by information, one accused of grand larceny before its admission as a state cannot be so prosecuted; State v. Kingsly, 10 Mont. 537, 26 Pac. 1066. See INFAMY; INDICTMENT; INFORMATION.

INFAMY. That state which is produced by the conviction of crime and the loss of honor, which renders the infamous person incompetent as a witness, or juror.

The loss of character or position which results from conviction of certain crimes, and which formerly involved disqualification as a witness and juror.

When a man was convicted of an offence inconsistent with the common principles of honesty and humanity, the law considered his oath of no weight, and excluded his testimony as of too doubtful and suspicious a nature to be admitted in a court of justice to deprive another of life, liberty, or property; Bull. N. P. 291; County of Schuylkill v. Copley, 67 Pa. 386, 5 Am. Rep. 441; U. S. v.

Brookins, 3 Wash. C. C. 99, Fed. Cas. No. 14,652.

To affect the credibility of a witness it may be shown that he has been convicted of felony; Clifford v. Fire-Proofing Co., 232 Ill. 150, 83 N. E. 448; but mere rumor of accusation of crime cannot be a basis for his impeachment; Sheppard v. State, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 604, 120 S. W. 446. One convicted of felony but not sentenced is a competent witness, although several days have passed since conviction and no motion for a new trial has been filed; Rice v. State, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 648, 100 S. W. 771.

The statutory abolition of this disqualification, see infra, has rendered the subject obsolete in England; Stark. Ev. (Sharsw. ed.) 118; and equally so in the United States as a question of evidence, but the constitutional guarantee against conviction of an infamous crime, otherwise than by indictment, has to a considerable extent involved the discussion of the common-law definition of such crimes. As to this branch of the subject, see INFAMOUS CRIME.

The crimes which at common law rendered a person incompetent were treason; 5 Mod. 16, 74; felony; Co. Litt. 6; 1 T. Raym. 369; larceny; Taylor v. State, 62 Ala. 164; even petit larceny at common law; 5 Mod. 75; Sylvester v. State, 71 Ala. 17; Burns v. Campbell, id. 271; but not if reduced to a misdemeanor; Barbour v. Com., 80 Va. 287; Welsh v. State, 3 Tex. App. 114; receiving stolen goods; Rohan v. Sawin, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 287; see Clee v. Seaman, 21 Mich. 290; all offences founded in fraud, and which come within the general notion of the crimen falsi of the Roman law; Leach 496; as perjury and forgery; Co. Litt. 6; Fost. 209; Poage v. State, 3 Ohio St. 229; piracy; 2 Rolle, Abr. 886; swindling, cheating; Fost. 209; barratry; 2 Salk. 690; conspiracy; 1 Leach 442; subornation of perjury; 2 G. & B. 145; suppression of testimony by bribery or by a conspiracy to procure the absence of a witness, or other conspiracy to accuse one of a crime and barratry; 1 Leach 442; bribing a witness to absent himself from a trial in order to get rid of his evidence; Fost. 208. From the decisions, Greenleaf deduces the rule "that the crimen falsi of the common law not only involves the charge of falsehood, but also is one which may injuriously affect the administration of justice, by the introduction of falsehood and fraud;" 1 Greenl. Ev. § 373.

But the attempt to procure the absence of a witness, not amounting to a conspiracy; State v. Keyes, 8 Vt. 57, 30 Am. Dec. 450; keeping a gaming house; 1 R. & M. N. P. 270; a bawdy house; Deer v. State, 14 Mo. 348; adultery; Little v. Gibson, 39 N. H. 505; maliciously obstructing railroad cars; Com. v. Dame, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 384; deceits in false weights, etc.; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 373; false pretences; Fisher v. Ins. Co., 33 Fed. 544; Ritter v. Press Co., 68 Mo. 458; embezzlement under some conditions of the law; Schuylkill County v. Copley, 67 Pa. 386, 5 Am. Rep. 441; conspiracy to cheat and defraud creditors; Bickel's Ex'r v. Fasig's Adm'r, 33 Pa. 463; were held not infamous. The test has been said to be "whether or not the crime shows such depravity or such a disposition to pervert public justice in the courts as creates a violent presumption against the truthfulness of the offered witness,—the difficulty being in the application of this test." 1 Bish. New Cr. L. 974. By statute in England and in most of the states, the disqualification of infamy is removed, but a conviction may usually be proved to affect credibility; Com. v. Gorham, 99 Mass. 420; Donohue v. People, 56 N. Y. 208; Curtis v. Cochran, 50 N. H. 242. But the difference in statutory regulations is such as to preclude general statement and to require reference to the local law in particular cases.

In Alabama one convicted of an infamous crime cannot execute the office of executor, administrator, or guardian, and conviction extinguishes all private trusts not susceptible of delegation, and also disqualifies him from holding office or voting; Bibb v. State, 83 Ala. 84, 3 South. 711. Other disabilities have been created by statute in other states. See Barker v. People, 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 686, 15 Am. Dec. 322.

As the law was administered prior to the statutory removal of the disability to testify, it was the crime not the punishment which rendered the offender unworthy of belief; 1 Phill. Ev. 25; but that is not now recognized as the true test by which to determine what, in the sense of the American constitutional law, is an infamous crime. See that title.

In order to incapacitate the party the judgment must have been pronounced by a court of competent jurisdiction; 2 Stark. 183; 1 Sid. 51. The disqualification came only from the final judgment of the court; Bull. N. P. 392; State v. D'Amery, 48 Me. 327; Blaufus v. People, 69 N. Y. 107, 25 Am. Rep. 148; and not from the crime; State v. Free, 1 McMull. (S. C.) 494; or mere conviction, or the infamous nature of the punishment; 1 Bish. New Cr. L. § 975. The proof of the crime was by the record of conviction; Com. v. Quin, 5 Gray (Mass.) 478.

It has been held that a conviction of an infamous crime in another country, or another of the United States, does not render the witness incompetent on the ground of infamy; Com. v. Green, 17 Mass. 515; State v. Landrum, 127 Mo. App. 653, 106 S. W. 1111; contra, State v. Candler, 170 N. C. 393; though this doctrine appears to be at variance with the opinions entertained by foreign jurists, who maintain that the state or condition of a person in the place of his domicile accompanies him everywhere; Story, Conf. Laws § 620, and the authorities there cited; Foelix, Traité de Droit Intern. Privé 31; Merlin, Répert. Loi, 6, n. 6. In some states such a record has the same effect as a domestic one; State v. Foley, 15 Nev. 64, 37 Am. Rep. 458; Chase v. Blodgett, 10 N. H. 22; in some it is admitted only on the question of credibility; Comm. v. Knapp, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 496, 20 Am. Dec. 491; and again it has been held that the full faith and credit, required to be given to records of other states, does not extend to enforcing in one state personal disabilities imposed upon a person convicted of crime in another state; Sims v. Sims, 75 N. Y. 466; reversing Sims v. Sims, 12 Hun (N. Y.) 231; and expressly disapproving Chase v. Blodgett, 10 N. H. 24 and State v. Candler, 10 N. C. 393. The question is to be determined by the law of the forum, and therefore the record should set forth a copy of the indictment; 9 Wis. 140. In some states the record is rejected altogether; Campbell v. State, 23 Ala. 44. See State v. Ridgely, 2 Harr. & McH. (Md.) 120, 1 Am. Dec. 372; State v. Harston, 63 N. C. 294.

The competency of such a witness was restored by pardon; U. S. v. Rutherford, 2 Cra. C. C. 528, Fed. Cas. No. 16,210; State v. Blaisdell, 33 N. H. 388; Yarborough v. State, 41 Ala. 405; unless the disability is annexed to the conviction, by statute; Foreman v. Baldwin, 24 Ill. 298; whether granted before sentence; Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 332, 18 L. Ed. 356; or after it has been complied with; Hoffman v. Coster, 2 Whart. (Pa.) 453. See Boyd v. U. S., 142 U. S. 450, 12 Sup. Ct. 292, 35 L. Ed. 1077; Martin v. State, 21 Tex. App. 1, 17 S. W. 430. But the completion of the sentence does not remove the disability; U. S. v. Brown, 4 Cra. C. C. 607, Fed. Cas. No. 14,661; State v. Benoit, 16 La. Ann. 273; contra, State v. Connor, 7 La. Ann. 379. A pardon does remove it even if it contains a clause declaring that it is intended to relieve from imprisonment and not from legal disabilities incident to conviction, such clause being held repugnant; People v. Pease, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 333; but after a pardon the conviction is admissible to affect credibility; Baum v. Clause, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 196; Curtis v. Cochran, 50 N. H. 242.

The judgment for an infamous crime, even for perjury, did not preclude the party from making an affidavit with a view to his own defence; 2 Stra. 1148; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 374. He might, for instance, make an affidavit in relation to the irregularity of a judgment in a cause in which he was a party; for otherwise he would be without a remedy. But the rule was confined to defence; and he could not, at common law, be heard upon oath as complainant; 2 Salk. 461. When the witness became incompetent from infamy of character, the effect was the same as if he were dead; if he had attested any instrument as a witness, previous to his conviction, evidence might be given of his handwriting; 2 Stra. 833; Stark. Ev. pt. 2, § 193, pt. 4, p. 723.

A person infamous cannot be a juror, if indeed the disqualification of infamy does not extend to more crimes in jurors than in witnesses; 1 Bish. New Cr. L. § 977; 1 Co. Litt. 6 b.

See INFAMOUS CRIME; CRIMEN FALSI.

INFANGTHEF, INFANGENETHEF. The right of the lord of the manor to sit in judgment on the thief caught on his own land.

The jurisdictional powers granted in the charters of the thirteenth century frequently included this right, which extended to the hanging of the thief so caught, and, for this purpose, the manorial gallows was erected on the land of the lord. The privilege of utfangenethef, more rarely given, conferred the right of hanging the thief, wherever caught, if he had upon his person the stolen goods, and if he were prosecuted by the loser of the goods; 1 Poll. & Maitl. 564; Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 11.

INFANS. In the Civil Law. A child under the age of seven years; so called "quasi impos fandi" (as not having the faculty of speech). Cod. Theodos. 8, 18, 8.

INFANT. One who is not of full age. In England and this country one under the age of twenty-one years. Co. Litt. 171. Under the common law full age was attained at twenty-one, and under the civil law at twenty-five; 1 Bla. Com. 463. This period is arbitrary and is fixed by statute. In the United States the common-law period has been generally adopted. In Louisiana and Texas the age of majority was twenty-one years as well under the early Spanish laws as under the common law; Means v. Robinson, 7 Tex. 502.

But he is reputed to be twenty-one years old, or of full age, the first instant of the last day of the twenty-first year next before the anniversary of his birth; because, according to the civil computation of time, which differs from the natural computation, the last day having commenced, it is considered as ended. Savigny, Dr. Rom. § 182; Wells v. Wells, 6 Ind. 447. Accordingly, a man is held entitled to vote on the day before the twenty-first anniversary of his birth; State v. Clarke, 3 Harring. (Del.) 557; Hamlin v. Stevenson, 4 Dana (Ky.) 597. See AGE.

If, for example, a person were born at any hour of the first day of January, 1810 (even a few minutes before twelve o'clock of the night of that day), he would be of full age at the first instant of the thirty-first of December, 1830, although nearly forty-eight hours before he had actually attained the full age of twenty-one years, according to years, days, hours, and minutes, because there is in this case no fraction of a day; 1 Sid. 162; 1 Kebl. 589; 1 Salk. 44, 625; Raym. 1094; 1 Bla. Com. 463, 464;

1 Lilly, Reg. 57; Comyns, Dig. Infant (A); Savigny, Dr. Rom. §§ 383, 384; 2 Kent 233. See AGE; FRACTION OF A DAY.

A curious case occurred in England of a young lady who was born after the house-clock had struck while the parish clock was striking, and before St. Paul's had begun to strike, twelve, on the night of the fourth and fifth of January, 1805; the question was whether she was born on the fourth or fifth of January. Coventry gives it as his opinion that she was born on the fourth because the house-clock does not regulate anything but domestic affairs, that the parochial clock is much better evidence, and that a metropolitan clock ought to be received with "implicit acquiescence." Coventry, Ev. 182. It is conceived that this can only be prima facie; because if the facts were otherwise, and the parochial and metropolitan clocks should both have been wrong, they would undoubtedly have had no effect in ascertaining the age of the child.

The sex makes no difference at common law: a woman is, therefore, an infant until she has attained the age of twenty-one years; Co. Litt. 161. It is otherwise, however, in some of the United States; Stevenson v. Westfall, 18 Ill. 209; Develin v. Riggsbee, 4 Ind. 464. In Idaho, act 1864, females come of age at the age of eighteen. The same rule exists in Vermont, Ohio, Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, Kansas, Nebraska, Maryland, Missouri, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Oregon, Nevada, and Washington; see 2 Kent 233 note; Stevenson v. Westfall, 18 Ill. 209; Dent v. Cock, 65 Ga. 400; Sparhawk v. Buell's Adm'r, 9 Vt. 41; Cogel v. Raph, 24 Minn. 194; Parker v. Starr, 21 Neb. 680, 33 N. W. 424; Jackson v. Allen, 4 Colo. 263.

Before arriving at full age, an infant may do many acts. A male at fourteen is of discretion, and may consent to marry; and at that age he may disagree to and annul a marriage he may before that time have contracted; he may then choose a guardian, and if his discretion be proved, may, at common law, make a will of his personal estate; he may act as executor at the age of seventeen years; he may incur a liability in equity if he actually represented himself to be of full age and the party dealing with him was misled; Pollock, Contr. 81; he cannot be adjudicated a bankrupt in the absence of an express representation to the creditor that he was of full age; id. 82.

On arriving at full age men are sui juris for all private purposes and also may vote and hold office except in cases especially otherwise provided for by law. See AGE.

A female at seven may be betrothed or given in marriage; at nine she is entitled to dower; at twelve she may consent or disagree to marriage; and, at common law, at seventeen she may act as executrix. At full age they may exercise all rights which belong to their sex. At common law the age of puberty was as above stated, fourteen for males and twelve for females, and this was taken from the civil law; Inst. 1. 22; Bla. Com. 436. While this may have been fixed in the civil law with due regard to natural development in the climate where that law had its origin, the fact that it is not so in countries governed by the common law is recognized by statutes in many states changing the age of consent to marriage.

Considerable changes of the common law have taken place in many of the states. In New York and several other states an infant is now deemed competent to be an executor; in Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, and other states, if an infant is named as executor in the will, administration with the will annexed will be granted during his minority, unless there shall be another executor who shall except, when the minor on arriving at full age may be admitted as joint executor; Tyler, Inf. & Cov. 133.

As the services of an infant are held in law to belong to his parent, it is the general rule that the infant cannot recover damages for their loss by reason of personal injury during minority; Clark Mile-End Spool Cotton Co. v. Shaffery, 58 N. J. L. 229, 33 Atl. 284; Farrar v. Wheeler, 145 Fed. 482, 75 C. C. A. 386; Comer v. Lumber Co., 59 W. Va. 688, 53 S. E. 906, 8 Ann. Cas. 1105, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 552, and note, where the cases are collected at large. But where a child has been abandoned by his father at the age of nine years, he is emancipated and the father has lost the right to his services and earnings; Swift & Co. v. Johnson, 138 Fed. 867, 71 C. C. A. 619, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1161; hence in a statutory action for a son's death for the sole benefit of the father, he could recover only nominal damages.

As a general rule the law of the domicile of birth determines the age of majority; 2 Kent 233, where are also stated some qualifications of the rule. See DOMICIL.

In general, an infant is not bound by his contracts, unless to supply him necessities; Bacon, Abr. Infancy, etc. (I 3); 9 Viner, Abr. 391; 1 Comyns, Contr. 150, 151; Penrose v. Curren, 3 Rawle (Pa.) 351, 24 Am. Dec. 356; but see Vasse v. Smith, 6 Cra. (U. S.) 226, 3 L. Ed. 207; Horner v. Thwing, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 492; Vance v. Woid, 1 N. & McC. (S. C.) 197, 9 Am. Dec. 683; or unless, by some legislative provision, he is empowered to enter into a contract; as, with the consent of his parent or guardian, to put himself apprentice, or enlist in the service of the United States; Com. v. Murray, 4 Binn. (Pa.) 487, 5 Am. Dec. 412; McDonald v. Montague, 30 Vt. 357; but a contract of enlistment is not voidable like other contracts of an infant; In re Morrissey, 137 U. S. 157, 11 Sup. Ct. 57, 34 L. Ed. 644. See ENLISTMENT. A dwelling-house is not within the definition of necessities, so as to render an infant liable on a contract for its erection; Allen v. Lardner, 78 Hun 603, 29 N. Y. Supp. 213.

At common law, contracts for articles other than necessities made by an infant, after full age might be ratified by him, and would then become in all respects binding. In England Lord Tenterden's Act,

9 Geo. IV. c. 14, § 5, required the ratification to be in writing. But now by the Infants' Relief Act, 1874, 37 & 38 Vict. c. 62, "All contracts entered into by infants for the repayment of money lent, or to be lent, or for goods supplied, or to be supplied (other than contracts for necessities), and all accounts stated shall be absolutely void," and "no action shall be brought whereby to charge any person upon any promise made after full age to pay any debt contracted during infancy, or upon any ratification made after full age of any promise or contract made during infancy, whether there shall or shall not be any new consideration for such promise or ratification after full age."

Contracts made with him are merely voidable; Holmes v. Rice, 45 Mich. 142, 7 N. W. 772; and may be enforced or avoided by him on his coming of age; Vaughan v. Parr, 20 Ark. 600; New Hampshire Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Noyes, 32 N. H. 345; Peterson v. Laik, 24 Mo. 541, 69 Am. Dec. 441; Phipps v. Phipps, 39 Kan. 495, 18 Pac. 707; but must be avoided within a reasonable time; Mustard v. Wohlford's Heirs, 15 Gratt. (Va.) 329, 76 Am. Dec. 209; Palmer v. Miller, 25 Barb. (N. Y.) 399; Dolph v. Hand, 156 Pa. 91, 27 Atl. 114, 36 Am. St. Rep. 25. See Mette v. Feltgen, 148 Ill. 357, 36 N. E. 81. But to this general rule there may be an exception in case of contracts for necessities; because these are for his benefit. See NECESSARIES. Elrod v. Myers, 2 Head (Tenn.) 33; Sinklear v. Emert, 18 Ill. 63; Wilhelm v. Hardman, 13 Md. 140; New Hampshire Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Noyes, 32 N. H. 345; Merriam v. Cunningham, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 40; Sams v. Stockton, 14 B. Monr. (Ky.) 232; but an infant is not liable upon a bill of exchange at the suit of an indorsee of the bill, although it was accepted for the price of necessities; [1891] 1 Q. B. 413; bills and notes of an infant, whether negotiable or not, are voidable; Fant v. Cathcart, 8 Ala. 725; State v. Plaisted, 43 N. H. 413; Boody v. McKenney, 23 Me. 517. The privilege of avoiding a contract on account of infancy is strictly personal to the infant, and no one can take advantage of it but himself; Voorhees v. Wait, 15 N. J. L. 343; Smith v. Reid, 51 N. C. 494; Campbell v. Wilson, 23 Tex. 252, 76 Am. Dec. 67; Jones v. Butler, 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 641; Alsworth v. Cordtz, 31 Miss. 32; Hooper v. Payne, 94 Ala. 223, 10 South. 431. See Baldwin v. Rosier, 48 Fed. 810. When the contract has been performed, and it is such as he would be compellable by law to perform, it will bind him; Co. Litt. 172 a. And all the acts of an infant which do not touch his interest, but take effect from an authority which he has been trusted to execute, are binding; 3 Burr. 1794; Fonbl. Eq. b. 1, c. 2, § 5, note c. The contracts of an infant, when not intrinsically illegal, are voidable, not void, and may be ratified by him upon arriving at maturity; Kendrick v. Neisz, 17 Colo. 506, 30 Pac. 245; Holmes v. Rice, 45 Mich. 142, 7 N. W. 772; but not during his minority; Lansing v. R. Co., 126 Mich. 663, 86 N. W. 147, 86 Am. St. Rep. 567; contra, Stafford v. Roof, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 626.

He may still avoid the contract even if he has spent the consideration; New York Building Loan Banking Co. v. Fisher, 23 App. Div. 363, 48 N. Y. Supp. 152; Price v. Furman, 27 Vt. 268, 65 Am. Dec. 194; Eureka Co. v. Edwards, 71 Ala. 248, 46 Am. Rep. 314; Walsh v. Young, 110 Mass. 396; contra, Johnson v. Ins. Co., 56 Minn. 365, 57 N. W. 934, 59 N. W. 992, 26 L. R. A. 187, 45 Am. St. Rep. 473; L. R. 24 Q. B. 166; but if he still has the consideration in specie he must return it as a prerequisite to a disaffirmance; Dickerson v. Gordon, 52 Hun 614, 5 N. Y. Supp. 310; Harvey v. Briggs, 68 Miss. 60, 8 South. 274, 10 L. R. A. 62; Craig v. Van Beber, 100 Mo. 584, 13 S. W. 906, 18 Am. St. Rep. 569; or, if he has received consideration for a release, it may be credited by the jury as against recovery, if he sues before his majority; Worthy v. Oil Mill, 77 S. C. 69, 57 S. E. 634, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 690, 12 Ann. Cas. 688, and note. The other party need not be placed in statu quo; Dube v. Beaudry, 150 Mass. 448, 23 N. E. 222, 6 L. R. A. 146, 15 Am. St. Rep. 228; Morse v. Ely, 154 Mass. 458, 28 N. E. 577, 26 Am. St. Rep. 263; Dawson v. Helmes, 30 Minn. 107, 14 N. W. 462; Whitcomb v. Joslyn, 51 Vt. 79, 31 Am. Rep. 678. An infant has been enjoined from breach of contract; Mutual Milk & Cream Co. v. Prigge, 112 App. Div. 652, 98 N. Y. Supp. 458; [1892] 3 Ch. 502; but these decisions have been criticized as indefensible 20 Harv. L. Rev. 64. The title to chattels purchased by an infant passes to him and his repudiation of the contract does not revest it in the vendor; Lamkin & Foster v. Le Doux, 101 Me. 581, 64 Atl. 1048, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 104, and note.

The contract cannot be avoided by an adult with whom the infant deals; Gates v. Davenport, 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 160; Johnson v. Rockwell, 12 Ind. 76; Warwick v. Cooper, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 659; Monaghan v. Ins. Co., 53 Mich. 238, 18 N. W. 797; Patterson v. Lippincott, 47 N. J. L. 457, 1 Atl. 506, 54 Am. Rep. 178; Towle v. Dresser, 73 Me. 252; or by a third person in a collateral proceeding; Doane v. Covell, 56 Me. 527; Beardsley v. Hotchkiss, 96 N. Y. 201; Winchester v. Thayer, 129 Mass. 129. See Thaw v. Ritchie, 136 U. S. 519, 10 Sup. Ct. 1037, 34 L. Ed. 531.

The doctrine of estoppel is inapplicable to infants; Brown v. McCune, 5 Sand. (N. Y.) 228; Lackman v. Wood, 25 Cal. 147; Sewell v. Sewell, 92 Ky. 500, 18 S. W. 162, 36 Am. St. Rep. 606. Even where an infant fraudulently represented himself as being of full age, he was not estopped from setting up a defence of infancy to a contract entered into under the fraudulent representation; Merriam v. Cunningham, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 40; Burley v. Russell, 10 N. H. 184, 34 Am. Dec. 146; Wieland v. Kobick, 110 Ill. 16, 51 Am.

Rep. 676; Alvey v. Reed, 115 Ind. 148, 17 N. E. 265, 7 Am. St. Rep. 418; Millsaps v. Estes, 137 N. C. 535, 50 S. E. 227, 70 L. R. A. 170, 107 Am. St. Rep. 496; Kirkham v. Wheeler-Osgood Co., 39 Wash. 415, 81 Pac. 869, 4 Am. Cas. 532; Conrad v. Lane, 26 Minn. 389, 4 N. W. 695, 37 Am. Rep. 412 and note; Alt v. Graff, 65 Minn. 191, 68 N. W. 9; Whitecomb v. Joslyn, 51 Vt. 79, 31 Am. Rep. 678; Carolina Interstate Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Black, 119 N. C. 329, 25 S. E. 975; Tobin v. Spann, 85 Ark. 556, 109 S. W. 534, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 672; Sims v. Everhardt, 102 U. S. 313, 26 L. Ed. 87.

The rule that an infant is not liable in tort for misrepresentation in obtaining a contract which he afterwards repudiates is generally stated to have been laid down in Johnson v. Pye, 1 Sid. 258, 1 Keb. 905, 914, 1 Lev. 169, in only one of which reports is the decision to that effect, and the contrary is stated by high early authorities; Com. Dig. Actions on the case for deceit, A. 10; Bac. Abr. Infancy I. 3. But the doctrine seems to be established in England; 9 Exch. 422 (where Johnson v. Pye was recognized as authority); 1 B. & S. 836; 12 C. B. (N. S.) 272; 18 Ch. D. 109. In this country there was early a disposition to repudiate the rule; Badger v. Phinney, 15 Mass. 359, 8 Am. Dec. 105; Walker v. Davis, 1 Gray (Mass.) 506 (the authority of which cases, however, was not controlling in Slayton v. Barry, 175 Mass. 513, 56 N. E. 574, 49 L. R. A. 560, 78 Am. St. Rep. 510); Fitts v. Hall, 9 N. H. 441, where Parker, C. J., in a much discussed opinion, expressly disregarded Johnson v. Pye, as does Judge Cowen in Wallace v. Morss, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 391, and Judge Daly in Eckstein v. Frank, 1 Daly (N. Y.) 335 (the latter disapproving an intermediate case in Brown v. McClune, 5 Sandf. [N. Y.] 224), followed in Schunemann v. Paradise, 46 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 426; and the infant was held liable for fraud though a contract obtained by him was void; Gaunt v. Taylor, 60 Hun 586, 15 N. Y. Supp. 589. To the same effect are Yeager v. Knight, 60 Miss. 730; Rice v. Boyer, 108 Ind. 472, 9 N. E. 420, 58 Am. Rep. 53; Neff v. Landis, 110 Pa. 204, 1 Atl. 177; Hughes v. Gallans, 10 Phila. 618; New York Bldg. Loan Banking Co. v. Fisher, 20 Misc. 242, 45 N. Y. Supp. 795.

In equity a false representation as to his age estops an infant from pleading his infancy; Charles v. Hastedt, 51 N. J. Eq. 171, 26 Atl. 564; Ferguson v. Bobo, 54 Miss. 121; Commander v. Brazil, 88 Miss. 668, 41 South. 497, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1117; Ingram v. Ison, 80 S. W. 787, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 48; but not the mere failure to tell his age; Baker v. Stone, 136 Mass. 405; Davidson v. Young, 38 Ill. 145. Under the Spanish law, governing contracts made and acts done in Louisiana and Texas before the introduction of the common law, if a minor represented himself to be of age and from his person appeared to be so, any contract with him was valid; Means v. Robinson, 7 Tex. 502, 513; contra, Kilgore v. Jordan, 17 Tex. 341. An infant cannot retain the benefits of his contract, and thus affirm it, after becoming of age, and yet plead infancy to avoid the payment of the purchase money; Henry v. Root, 33 N. Y. 526; Utermehle v. McGreal, 1 App. D. C. 359; but see Morse v. Ely, 154 Mass. 458, 28 N. E. 577, 26 Am. St. Rep. 263; Bloomer v. Nolan, 36 Neb. 51, 53 N. W. 1039, 38 Am. St. Rep. 690.

A conveyance of land by a minor without consideration is void; Robinson v. Coulter, 90 Tenn. 705, 18 S. W. 250, 25 Am. St. Rep. 708. The deed of an infant is held not void but voidable only; Vallandigham v. Johnson, 85 Ky. 288, 3 S. W. 173; and so is a mortgage; Skinner v. Maxwell, 66 N. C. 45; State v. Plaisted, 43 N. H. 413; Monumental Bldg. Ass'n No. 2 v. Herman, 33 Md. 128; but the deed may be ratified after reaching his majority, either expressly or impliedly; Darraugh v. Blackford, 84 Va. 509, 5 S. E. 542; but see Hill v. Nelms, 86 Ala. 442, 5 South. 796; Hoffert v. Miller, 86 Ky. 572, 6 S. W. 447; and not before; Sims v. Everhardt, 102 U. S. 300, 26 L. Ed. 87.

A ward of chancery who married without consent was imprisoned for contempt; [1909] 2 Ch. 260. The filing of a bill against an infant or paying into court funds settled upon an infant constitutes him a ward of chancery; 3 K. & G. 213.

An infant may disaffirm a marriage settlement executed by her, after the disability of infancy and coverture is removed; Smith v. Smith's Ex'r, 107 Va. 112, 57 S. E. 577, 122 Am. St. Rep. 831, 12 Ann. Cas. 857, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1185, where the English and American authorities are collected in the opinion and note.

It is frequently held that an infant is not competent to appoint an agent; Holden v. Curry, 85 Wis. 504, 55 N. W. 965; Ware v. Cartledge, 24 Ala. 622, 60 Am. Dec. 489; Robbins v. Mount, 27 N. Y. Super. Ct. 553; Trueblood v. Trueblood, 8 Ind. 195, 65 Am. Dec. 756; Turner v. Bondalier, 31 Mo. App. 582; Burns v. Smith, 29 Ind. App. 181, 64 N. E. 94, 94 Am. St. Rep. 268; Poston v. Williams, 99 Mo. App. 513, 73 S. W. 1099; 16 M. & W. 778; to buy beer for him; State v. Field, 139 Mo. App. 20, 119 S. W. 499; nor can he execute a power of attorney; 2 Edm. Sel. Cas. 132; Glass v. Glass, 76 Ala. 368; Pickler v. State, 18 Ind. 266 (where it is said it would be "probably void"); nor can he legally appoint an attorney to appear for and defend him in an action; Fuller v. Smith, 49 Vt. 253; but on the other hand there are cases which hold that he can create an agency, at least so far that acts done under it are not void but voidable; Coursolle v. Weyerhaeuser, 69 Minn. 328, 72 N. W. 697; Hardy

v. Waters, 38 Me. 450. An infant may be an agent and his agency may be created by parol; Talbot v. Bowen, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 436, 10 Am. Dec. 747; or a trustee; Des Moines Ins. Co. v. McIntire, 99 Ia. 50, 68 N. W. 565. A service by one as deputy sheriff is good; Irving v. Edrington, 41 La. Ann. 671, 6 South. 177; State v. Toland, 36 S. C. 515, 15 S. E. 599; contra, Gilson v. Kuenert, 15 S. D. 291, 89 N. W. 472; or he may be a notary; U. S. v. Bixby, 9 Fed. 78; or an appraiser; White v. Land Co., 82 S. W. 571, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 775; id., 83 S. W. 628, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 1235; or clerk of a militia company; In re Dewey, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 265; or a deputy clerk to take acknowledgments; Talbott's Devises v. Hooser, 75 Ky. 408.

The property of an infant is not liable to a mechanic's lien for material purchased by him during infancy; Bloomer v. Nolan, 36 Neb. 51, 53 N. W. 1039, 38 Am. St. Rep. 690. When avoiding an executory contract relating to his personal property, he need not refund the money received, where he has squandered it; Petrie v. Williams, 68 Hun 589, 23 N. Y. Supp. 237.

The protection which the law gives an infant is to operate as a shield to him, to protect him from improvident contracts, but not as a sword to do injury to others; Clark v. Tate, 7 Mont. 171, 14 Pac. 761. An infant is, therefore, responsible for his torts, as for slander, trespass, and the like; Conklin v. Thompson, 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 218; Baxter v. Bush, 29 Vt. 465, 70 Am. Dec. 429; Wheeler & Wilson Mfg. Co. v. Jacobs, 2 Misc. 236, 21 N. Y. Supp. 1006; but he cannot be made responsible in an action ex delicto, where the cause arose on a contract; Penrose v. Curren, 3 Rawle (Pa.) 351, 24 Am. Dec. 356; Andrews v. Woodmansee, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 233; Fitts v. Hall, 9 N. H. 441; Humphrey v. Douglass, 10 Vt. 71, 33 Am. Dec. 177; Wallace v. Morss, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 391; Lowery v. Cate, 108 Tenn. 54, 64 S. W. 1068, 57 L. R. A. 673, 91 Am. St. Rep. 744; 38 Am. L. Rev. 371, where the cases are collected. But see Vasse v. Smith, 6 Cra. (U. S.) 226, 3 L. Ed. 207; Badger v. Phinney, 15 Mass. 359, 8 Am. Dec. 105; Peigne v. Sutcliffe, 4 McCord (S. C.) 387, 17 Am. Dec. 756. It is well settled that an infant bailee of a horse is liable in an action ex delicto for every tortious wilful act causing injury or death to the horse, the same as though he were an adult; Campbell v. Stakes, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 137, 19 Am. Dec. 561; Eaton v. Hill, 50 N. H. 235, 9 Am. Rep. 189; Field, Inf. 32.

With regard to the responsibility of infants for crimes, the rule is that no infant within the age of seven years can be guilty of felony or be punished for any capital offence; for within that age an infant is, by presumption of law, doli incapax and cannot be endowed with any discretion; and against this presumption no averment shall be received. 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 25-29. The law assumes that this legal incapacity ceases when the infant attains the age of fourteen years; id.; but subjects this assumption to the effect of proof; State v. Learnard, 41 Vt. 585. Between the age of seven and fourteen years an infant is deemed prima facie to be doli incapax; but in this case the maxim applies, malitia supplet aetatem: malice supplies the want of mature years; 1 Russ. Cr. 2, 3; Godfrey v. State, 31 Ala. 323, 70 Am. Dec. 494; State v. Nickleson, 45 La. Ann. 1172, 14 South. 134; and the question whether such a child is capable of committing an assault with intent to murder, is for the jury; McCormack v. State, 102 Ala. 156, 15 South. 438. See State v. Milholland, 89 Ia. 5, 56 N. W. 403; 1 Bishop, N. Cr. L. § 368. The reports abound with cases where clear evidence of criminal consciousness was shown, and of very marked atrocity, from the age of nine years and upward; 1 Russ. Cr. 2-6; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 25-29. See DISCRETION. See also 36 L. R. A. 196, note, for English and American authorities on criminal capacity of children with respect to different crimes.

The Court of Chancery has a general jurisdiction over the persons and property of infants which is, in this country, usually vested in a court specially designated by statute. This equitable care and oversight is very wide; U. S. v. Morse, 218 U. S. 493, 31 Sup. Ct. 37, 54 L. Ed. 1123, 21 Ann. Cas. 782; and is exercised over them as infants without regard to property, and whether or not they are wards of court; [1892] 2 Ch. 496; and has been exercised in the removal of a guardian appointed by the mother after the father's death, for the welfare of the child; id.; or excluding the father from guardianship, if an improper person; 2 Bligh (N. S.) 124; or removing a guardian however appointed; Cowls v. Cowls, 3 Gilman (Ill.) 435, 44 Am. Dec. 708; Miner v. Miner, 11 Ill. 43; or providing that the child shall be brought up in the father's religion, even if the mother's is different; L. R. 6 Ch. 544; or changing the religion in which he was to be brought up, from that of the father, on the application of the child who was a ward of the court aged thirteen; [1907] 2 Ch. 557, C. A.; the paramount duty of the court being to consult the welfare of the child as above religious distinctions and parental wishes; 8 De G. M. & G. 760, 771; [1893] 1 Ch. 143, 148.

The income of a trust fund for the benefit of an infant may be applied to his maintenance or education with the consent of other interested persons; Pitts v. Trust Co., 21 R. I. 544, 45 Atl. 553, 48 L. R. A. 783, 79 Am. St. Rep. 821; 5 Ves. 195; 11 id. 604; where there is no other provision practicable; 1 Cr. & Ph. 317; and this may be without, or in opposition to, provisions of the will; 1 Madd. 253; 5 Ves. 195.

Infant defendants are not properly before the court when not served with summons, and there is no appointment of a guardian ad litem to represent them; Carrigan v. Drake, 36 S. C. 354, 15 S. E. 339. Where infant defendants have no special or separate defence, no separate answer is necessary, but joinder in the general answer of defendants is sufficient; Western Lumber Co. v. Phillips, 94 Cal. 54, 29 Pac. 328. See GUARDIAN AD LITEM.

Not only does the state exercise oversight and control over the person and property of infants, but the constitutional guarantees of personal liberty, trial by jury and the like, including those secured by the fourteenth amendment of the federal constitution are generally held not impaired by statutes providing for investigation or care of infants either as delinquents or in the absence or default of natural guardians. Such decisions have been rendered in cases of the commitment of delinquent children to reformatory institutions; Ex parte Crouse, 4 Whart. (Pa.) 9; Com. v. Fisher, 213 Pa. 48, 62 Atl. 198, 5 Ann. Cas. 92; Reynolds v. Howe, 51 Conn. 472; Rule v. Geddes, 23 App. D. C. 31; Ex parte Ah Peen, 51 Cal. 280; State v. Children's Home Society, 10 N. D. 493, 88 N. W. 273; Wilkison v. Board of Children's Guardians, 158 Ind. 1, 62 N. E. 481; Roth v. House of Refuge, 31 Md. 329; Milwaukee Industrial School v. Supervisors of Milwaukee County, 40 Wis. 328, 22 Am. Rep. 702; but when the commitment is penal in its nature and not merely reformatory or for care, education, etc., it has been held that there must be some sort of trial and conviction; State v. Ray, 63 N. H. 406, 56 Am. Rep. 529; People v. Turner, 55 Ill. 280, 8 Am. Rep. 645 (though a statute providing less summary proceedings was held constitutional; In re Ferrier, 103 Ill. 367, 43 Am. Rep. 10; County of McLean v. Humphreys, 104 Ill. 378).

If a parent or guardian deems the commitment to be an infringement of his rights, he has his remedy by a proper proceeding; In re Sharp, 15 Idaho 120, 96 Pac. 563, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 886, where the general subject is discussed in the opinion and a note classifying the cases.

The commitment of a destitute child to a charitable institution at the public expense is not a criminal proceeding, and on being satisfied that the parents have reformed and become able to care for the child, the power of the chancery court to intervene and restore to them the custody of the child is limited only by the necessities of the case, having due regard to the welfare of the infant; In re Knowack, 158 N. Y. 482, 53 N. E. 676, 44 L. R. A. 699.

As to the rights of counsel respecting an infant's suit, see ATTORNEY; as to infant's right of action for death of parent, see DEATH; as to custody of infants in divorce proceedings, see DIVORCE; as to enlistment of infants, see ENLISTMENT.

And see generally as to the liability of an infant who misrepresents his age, 8 Y. L. J. 235; 16 id. 56, where the cases are collected. See CHILD; AGE; EN VENTRE SA MÈRE; BASTARD; ADOPTION; ELECTION OF RIGHTS AND REMEDIES; RELIGIOUS EDUCATION; DISCRETION.

INFANTICIDE. In Medical Jurisprudence. The murder of a new-born infant. It is thus distinguishable from abortion and feticide, which are limited to the destruction of the life of the fœtus in utero.

The crime of infanticide can be committed only after the child is wholly born; 5 C. & P. 329; 6 id. 349. But the destruction of a child en ventre sa mère is a high misdemeanor; 1 Bla. Com. 129. See 2 C. & K. 784; 7 C. & P. 850.

This question involves an inquiry, first, into the signs of maturity, the data for which are—the length and weight of the fœtus, the relative position of the centre of its body, the proportional development of its several parts as compared with each other, especially of the head as compared with the rest of the body, the degree of growth of the hair and nails, the condition of the skin, the presence or absence of the membrana pupillaris, and in the male the descent or non-descent of the testicles; Dean, Med. Jur. 140; Tayl. Med. Jur. 534.

Second, was it born alive? The second point presents an inquiry of great interest both to the legal and medical professions and to the community at large. In the absence of all direct proof, what organic facts proclaim the existence of life subsequent to birth? These facts are derived principally from the circulatory and respiratory systems. From the former the proofs are gathered—from the character of the blood, that which is purely fœtal being wholly dark, like venous blood, and forming coagula much less firm and solid than that which has been subjected to the process of respiration. From the condition of the heart and blood-vessels. The circulation anterior and subsequent to birth must necessarily be entirely different. That anterior, by means of the fœtal openings,—the foramen ovale, the ductus arteriosus, and the ductus venosus,—is enabled to perform its circuit without sending the entire mass of the blood to the lungs for the purpose of oxygenation. When the extra-uterine life commences, and the double circulation is established, these openings usually close; so that their closure is considered probable evidence of life subsequent to birth; 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 478; Dean, Med. Jur. 142. From the difference in the distribution of the blood in the different organs of the body. The two organs in which this difference is most perceptible are the liver and the lungs,—especially the latter. The circulation of the whole mass of the blood through the lungs distends and fills them with blood, so that their relative weight will be nearly doubled, and any incision into them will be followed by a free effusion.

From the respiratory system proofs of life subsequent to birth are derived. From the thorax: its size, capacity, and arch are increased by respiration. From the lungs: they are increased in size and volume, are projected forward, become rounded and obtuse, of a pinkish-red hue, and their density is inversely as their volume; Dean, Med. Jur. 149 et seq. The fact of the specific gravity of the lungs being diminished in proportion to their diminution in density gives rise to a celebrated test,—the hydrostatic,—the relative weight of the lungs with water; 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 459 et seq. The rule is, that lungs which have not respired are specifically heavier than water, and if placed within it will sink to the bottom of the vessel. If they have respired, their increase in volume and decrease in density render them specifically lighter than water, and when placed within it they will float. There are several objections to the sufficiency of this test; for example lungs which have never respired may become so distended with putrefactive gases as to float, and, on the other hand, lungs which have respired may be the seat of congestion or inflammation which would cause them to sink; but it is fairly entitled to its due weight in the settlement of this question; Dean, Med. Jur. 154 et seq. From the state of the diaphragm: prior to respiration it is found high up in the thorax. The act of expanding the lungs enlarges and arches the thorax, and, by necessary consequence, the diaphragm descends.

The fact of life at birth being established, the next inquiry is, how long did the child survive? The proofs here are derived from three sources. The fatal openings, their partial or complete closure. The more perfect the closure, the longer the time. The series of changes in the umbilical cord. These are—1, the withering of the cord; 2, its deshication or drying, and, 3, its separation or dropping off,—occurring usually four or five days after birth; 4, cicatization of the umbilicus,—occurring usually from ten to twelve days after birth. The changes in the skin, in the process of exfoliation of the epidermis, which commences on the abdomen, and extends thence successively to the chest, groin, axillæ, interscapular space, limbs, and, finally, to the hands and feet.

As to the modes by which the life of the child may have been destroyed. The criminal modes most commonly resorted to are—1, suffocation; 2, drowning; 3, cold and exposure; 4, starvation; 5, wounds, fractures, and injuries of various kinds; a mode not unfrequently resorted to is the introduction of sharp-pointed instruments in different parts of the body; also, luxation and fracture of the neck, accomplished by forcibly twisting the head of the child, or pulling it backwards; 6, strangulation; 7, poisoning; 8, intentional neglect to tie the umbilical cord; and, 9, causing the child to inhale air deprived of its oxygen, or gases positively deleterious. All these modes of destroying life, together with the natural or accidental ones, will be found fully discussed by the writers on medical jurisprudence. 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 509; Dean, Med. Jur. 179; Ryan, Med. Jur. 137; Dr. Cummins, Proof of Infanticide Considered; Storer & Heard, Criminal Abortion; Brown, Infanticide; Toulmouche, Études sur Infanticide.

INFEOFFMENT. The act or instrument of feoffment. In Scotland it is synonymous with saisine, meaning the instrument of possession: formerly it was synonymous with investiture. Bell, Dict.

INFERENCE. A conclusion drawn by reason from premises established by proof.

A deduction or conclusion from facts or propositions known to be true. Gates v. Hughes, 44 Wis. 336.

When the facts are submitted to the court, the judges draw the inference; when they are to be ascertained by a jury, the jury must do so. The witness is not permitted, as a general rule, to draw an inference and testify that to the court or jury. It is his duty to state the facts simply as they occurred. Inferences differ from presumptions

INFERIOR COURTS. An inferior court is a court of special and limited jurisdiction; it must appear on the face of its proceedings that it has jurisdiction, and that the parties were subjected to its jurisdiction by proper process, or its proceedings will be void. Cooley, Const. Lim. 508. Another distinction between superior and inferior courts is: in the latter case, a want of jurisdiction may be shown even in opposition to the recitals contained in the record; id. 509; citing Sheldon v. Wright, 5 N. Y. 497; Sears v. Terry, 26 Conn. 273; this is the general rule, though there are apparent exceptions of those cases where the jurisdiction may be said to depend upon the existence of a certain state of facts, which must be passed upon by the courts themselves, and in respect to which the decision of the court once rendered, if there was any evidence whatever on which to base it, must be held final and conclusive in all collateral inquiries, notwithstanding it may have erred in its conclusions; Cooley, Const. Lim. 509, citing 1 B. & B. 432; Freem. Judg. § 523; Wanzer v. Howland, 10 Wis. 16.

INFICIATIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. Denial. Denial of fact alleged by plaintiff,—especially, a denial of debt or deposit. Voc. Jur. Utr.; Calvinus, Lex.

INFIDEL. One who does not believe in the existence of a God who will reward or punish in this world or that which is to come. Willes 550. One who professes no religion that can bind his conscience to speak the truth. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 368. One who does not recognize the inspiration or obligation of the Holy Scriptures, or generally recognized features of the Christian religion. Gibson v. Ins. Co., 37 N. Y. 580.

This term has been very indefinitely applied. Under the name of infidel, Lord Coke comprises Jews and heathens; Co. 2d Inst. 506; Co. 3d Inst. 165; and Hawkins includes among infidels such as do not believe either in the Old or New Testament; Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 2, c. 46, s. 148.

The objection to the competency of witnesses who have no religious belief is removed in England and in most of the United States by statutory enactments; 1 Whart. Ev. § 395.

It has been held that at common law it is only requisite that the witness should believe in the existence of a God who will punish and reward according to desert; 1 Atk. 21; Butts v. Swartwood, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 431; Wakefield v. Ross, 5 Mas. 18, Fed. Cas. No. 17,050; Arnold v. Estate of Arnold, 13 Vt. 362; Blair v. Seaver, 26 Pa. 274; that it is sufficient if the punishment is to be in this world; Shaw v. Moore, 49 N. C. 25; contra, Atwood v. Welton, 7 Conn. 66. And see People v. McGarren, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 460; Cubbison v. McCreary, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 262; Brock v. Milligan, 10 Ohio 121. A witness's belief is to be presumed till the contrary appear; Donnelly v. State, 26 N. J. L. 463; id., 26 N. J. L. 601; and his disbelief must be shown by declarations made previously, and cannot be inquired into by examination of the witness himself; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 370, n.; Scott v. Hooper, 14 Vt. 535.

INFIGHT (Sax.). An assault upon an inhabitant of same dwelling. Gloss. Anc. Inst. & Laws of Eng.

INFIRM. Weak, feeble.

When a witness is infirm to an extent likely to destroy his life, or to prevent his attendance at the trial, his testimony de bene esse may be taken at any age. 1 P. Wms. 117. See WITNESS.

INFIRMATIVE. Weakening. Webster, Dict. Tending to weaken or render infirm; disprobabilizing. 3 Benth. Jud. Ev. 13, 14. Exculpatory is used by some authors as synonymous. See Wills, Circ. Ev. 120; Best, Pres. § 217.

INFLUENCE. Most frequently used in connection with "undue," and refers to persuasion, machination, or constraint of will presented or exerted to procure a disposition of property, by gift, conveyance, or will. Anderson, L. Dict.

INFORMALITY. Want of customary or legal form.

INFORMATION. In French Law. The act or instrument which contains the depositions of witnesses against the accused. Pothier, Proc. Civ. sect. 2, art. 5.

In Practice. A complaint or accusation exhibited against a person for some criminal offence. 4 Bla. Com. 308.

An accusation in the nature of an indictment, from which it differs only in being presented by a competent public officer on his oath of office, instead of a grand jury on their oath. 1 Bish. Cr. Proc. § 141.

It differs in no respect from an indictment in its form and substance, except that it is filed at the mere discretion of the proper law officer of the government, ex officio, without the intervention of a grand jury; 4 Bla. Com. 308. The process has not been formally put in motion by congress for misdemeanors, but is common in civil prosecutions for penalties and forfeitures; 3 Story, Const. 659. The information is usually made upon knowledge given by some other person than the officer called the relator. "It comes from the common law without the aid of statutes; 5 Mod. 459; it is a concurrent remedy with indictment for all misdemeanors except misprision of treason, but not permissible in any felony." Bish. Cr. Pr. § 14; Com. v. Inhabitants of Waterborough, 5 Mass. 257; Com. v. Barrett, 9 Leigh (Va.) 665.

As to the power of a legislature to dispense with indictment, see INFAMOUS CRIME.

A state law which permits the prosecution of felonies by information does not violate the United States Constitution; Bolln v. Nebraska, 176 U. S. 83, 20 Sup. Ct. 287, 44 L. Ed. 382; and a legislature may modify or entirely abolish the constitutional provisions regarding the grand jury; State v. Guglielmo, 46 Or. 250, 79 Pac. 577, 80 Pac. 103, 69 L. R. A. 466, 7 Ann. Cas. 976.

Under United States laws, informations are resorted to for illegal exportation of goods; U. S. v. Mann, 1 Gall. 3, Fed. Cas. No. 15,717; in cases of smuggling; U. S. v. Lyman, 1 Mas. 482, Fed. Cas. No. 15,647; and a libel for seizure is in the nature of an information; Sawyer v. Steele, 3 Wash. C. C. 464, Fed. Cas. No. 12,406; The Samuel, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 9, 4 L. Ed. 23. The provisions of the United States constitution which provide that no person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime, unless on presentment, etc., of a grand jury, have been held to apply only to the proceedings in the federal courts; Whart. Cr. Pl. & Pr. 88; Niles v. State, 24 Ala. 672; State v. Keyes, 8 Vt. 57, 30 Am. Dec. 450.

An information is sufficiently formal if it follows the words of the statute; The Emily, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 381, 6 L. Ed. 116; Whiting v. State, 14 Conn. 487, 36 Am. Dec. 499; but enough must appear to show whether it is found under the statute or at common law; Knowles v. State, 3 Day (Conn.) 103. It must, however, allege the offence with sufficient fulness and accuracy; Whitney v. State, 10 Ind. 404; and must show all the facts demanding a forfeiture, as in a penal action, when it is to recover a penalty; Com. v. Messenger, 4 Mass. 462; Merriam v. Langdon, 10 Conn. 461.

An information cannot be made on "information and belief" unless the facts are stated showing the source of information and the grounds of belief; People v. Wyatt, 186 N. Y. 383, 79 N. E. 330, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 159, 9 Ann. Cas. 972.

Where it is for a first offence, the fact need not be stated; Kilbourn v. State, 9 Conn. 560; otherwise, where it is for a second or subsequent offence for which an additional penalty is provided; Wilde v. Com., 2 Mete. (Mass.) 408. It need not show that there has been a preliminary examination or a waiver thereof; State v. Geer, 48 Kan. 752, 30 Pac. 236. It cannot be amended by adding charges; Com. v. Rodes, 1 Dana (Ky.) 595; contra, that it can be amended before trial; State v. Rowley, 12 Conn. 101; State v. Weare, 38 N. H. 314; 1 Salk. 471. By the common law a mistake in an information may be amended at any time; State v. White, 64 Vt. 372, 24 Atl. 250. The information charging a statutory offence cannot be amended after verdict so as to include another offence found by the jury; Turner v. Dickerman, 88 Mich. 359, 50 N. W. 310. It must be signed by the officer before filing; State v. Nulf, 15 Kan. 404; but not necessarily in Texas; Raspberry v. State, 1 Tex. App. 664; and must conclude with "against the peace and dignity of the state;" Wood v. State, 27 Tex. App. 538, 11 S. W. 525. In England, a verification was not required; but it is usually otherwise by statute in America; Baramore v. State, 4 Ind. 524; District of Columbia v. Herliby, 1 McArth. (D. C.) 466.

A part of the defendants may be acquitted and a part convicted; State v. Taylor, 1 Root (Conn.) 226; and a conviction may be of the whole or a part of the offence charged; Hill v. Davis, 4 Mass. 137. In some states it is a proceeding by the state officer, filed at his own discretion; State v. Dover, 9 N. H. 468; Levy v. State, 6 Ind. 281; in others, leave of court may be granted to any relator to use the state officer's name, upon cause shown; Camman v. Min. Co., 12 N. J. L. 84; Respublica v. Griffiths, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 112, 1 L. Ed. 311; Cleary v. Dellesseline, 1 McCord (S. C.) 35; State v. Dellesseline, id. 52. See State v. Terrebone, 45 La. Ann. 25, 12 South. 315. In England, the right to make an information was in the attorney-general, who acted without the interference of the court; 3 Burr. 2089. In former times the officer proceeded upon any application, as of course; 4 Term 285; but by an act passed in 1692, it was provided that leave of court must be first obtained and security entered; see 2 Term 190. It is said to be doubtful whether leave of court is necessary in this country; 1 Bish. Cr. Pr. § 144. A prosecuting officer may, on his own motion, present a bill to the grand jury, without presenting an affidavit charging the offence, if he deems it necessary for the public good; and his action in doing so will be disturbed only in case of abuse of discretion; State v. Bowman, 43 S. C. 108, 20 S. E. 1010. It is sufficient for the district attorney to be present in court when the accused first appears and there to ratify the information filed by his deputy in his absence; State v. Guglielmo, 46 Or. 250, 79 Pac. 577, 80 Pac. 103, 69 L. R. A. 466, 7 Ann. Cas. 976.

See INDICTMENT; GRAND JURY; INFAMOUS CRIME.

INFORMATION AND BELIEF. Said to be the proper words for an averment in a bill in equity; see Elliott & Hatch Book-Printer Co. v. Fisher, 109 Fed. 330. See AFFIDAVIT.

INFORMATION IN THE NATURE OF A QUO WARRANTO. A proceeding against the usurper of a franchise or office. See QUO WARRANTO.

INFORMATION OF INTRUSION. A proceeding instituted by the state prosecuting officer against intruders upon the public domain. See Com. v. Andre's Heirs, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 224; Com. v. Hite, 6 Leigh (Va.) 588, 29 Am. Dec. 226.

INFORMATUS NON SUM (Lat. I am not informed). A formal answer made in court or put upon record by an attorney when he has nothing to say in defence of his client. Styles, Reg. 372.

INFORMER. A person who informs or prefers an accusation against another, whom he suspects of the violation of some penal statute.

When the informer is entitled to the penalty or part of the penalty, upon the conviction of an offender, he is or is not at common law a competent witness, according as the statute creating the penalty has or has not made him so; 1 Phill. Ev. 97; Ros. Cr. Ev. 107; Com. v. Frost, 5 Mass. 57; 1 Saund. 262, c. See U. S. v. Murphy, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 213, 10 L. Ed. 937; 4 East 180. The court is not bound to instruct the jury that the testimony of such a witness is to be received with great caution and distrust, since the credibility of witnesses is for the jury, and counsel are permitted to argue the question to them; State v. Hoxsie, 15 R. I. 1, 22 Atl. 1059, 2 Am. St. Rep. 838.

INFORTIATUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. The second part of the Digest or Pandects of Justinian. See DIGEST.

This part, which commences with the third title of the twenty-fourth book and ends with the thirty-eighth book, was thus called because it was the middle part, which, it was said, was supported and fortified by the two others. Some have supposed that this name was given to it because it treats of successions, substitutions, and other important matters, and, being more used than the others, produced greater fees to the lawyers.

INFRA (Lat.). Below, under, beneath, underneath. The opposite of supra, above. Thus, we say, primo gradu est—supra, pater, mater, infra, filius, filia: in the first degree of kindred in the ascending line, above is the father and the mother, below, in the descending line, son and daughter. Inst. 3. 6. 1.

In another sense, this word signifies within: as, infra corpus civitatis, within the body of the country; infra præsidia, within the guards. So of time, during: infra furorem, during the madness. This use is not classical. The sole instance of the word in this sense in the Code, infra anni spatium, Code, b. 5, tit. 9, § 2, is corrected to intra anni spatium, in the edition of the Corpus Jur. Civ. of 1833 at Leipsic. The use of infra for intra seems to have sprung up among the barbarians after the fall of the Roman empire.

INFRA ÆTATEM (Lat.). Within or under age.

INFRA ANNUM LUCTUS (Lat.). Within the year of grief or mourning. 1 Bla. Com. 457; Cod. 5. 9. 2. But intra anni spatium is the phrase used in the passage in the Code referred to. See Corp. Jur. Civ. 1833, Leipsic. Intra tempus luctus occurs in Novella 22, c. 40. This year was at first ten months, afterwards twelve. 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 612. See ANNUS LUCTUS.

INFRA BRACHIA (Lat.). Within her arms. Used of a husband de jure as well as de facto. Co. 2d Inst. 317. Also, inter brachia. Bracton, fol. 148 b. It was in this sense that a woman could only have an appeal for murder of her husband inter brachia sua. Woman's Lawyer, pp. 332, 335.

INFRA CORPUS COMITATUS (Lat.). Within the body of the county.

The common-law courts have jurisdiction infra corpus comitatus: the admiralty, on the contrary, has no such jurisdiction, unless, indeed, the tide-water may extend within such county. Waring v. Clarke, 5 How. (U. S.) 441, 451, 12 L. Ed. 226. See ADMIRALTY; FAUCES TERRE.

INFRA DIGNITATEM CURIÆ (Lat.). Below the dignity of the court. Example: in equity a demurrer will lie to a bill on the ground of the triviality of the matter in dispute, as being below the dignity of the court. See Smets v. Williams, 4 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 364. See MAXIMS (de minimis non curat lex).

INFRA HOSPITIUM (Lat.). Within the inn. When once a traveller's baggage comes infra hospitium, that is, in the care and under the charge of the innkeeper, it is at his risk. See GUEST; INNKEEPER.

INFRA PRÆSIDIA (Lat. within the walls). A term used in relation to prizes, to signify that they have been brought completely in the power of the captors; that is, within the towns, camps, ports, or fleet of the captors. Formerly the rule was, and perhaps still in some countries is, that the act of bringing a prize infra præsidia changed the property; but the rule now established is that there must be a sentence of condemnation to effect this purpose. 1 C. Rob. 134; 1 Kent 104; Chitty, Law of Nat. 98; Abbott, Shipp. 14; Hugo, Droit Romain § 90.

INFRACTION (Lat. infrango, to break in upon). The breach of a law or agreement; the violation of a compact. In the French law this is the generic expression to designate all actions which are punishable by the Code of France.

INFRINGEMENT. A word used to denote the act of trespassing upon the incorporeal right secured by a patent or copyright. Any person who, without legal permission, shall make, use, or sell to another to be used, the thing which is the subject-matter of any existing patent, is guilty of an infringement, for which damages may be recovered at law by an action on the case, or which may be remedied by a bill in equity for an injunction and an account.

The manufacture, sale, or use of an invention protected by letters patent, within the area and time described therein by a person not duly authorized to do so. Rob. Pat. § 890.

Infringement is a mixed question of law and fact; California Artificial Stone Paving Co. v. Molitor, 113 U. S. 609, 5 Sup. Ct. 618, 28 L. Ed. 1106. Whether a device is an infringement is determined by the claims of the patent, and not by the actual invention; Meissner v. Mannfg. Co., 9 Blatchf. 363, 5 Fish. 285, Fed. Cas. No. 9,397. There is no infringement unless the invention can be practised completely by following the specifications. An infringement is a copy made after, and agreeing with, the principle laid down in the patent; and if the patent does not fully describe everything essential to the thing patented, no infringement will take place by the fresh invention of processes which the patentee has not communicated to the public; Page v. Ferry, 1 Fish. 298, Fed. Cas. No. 10,662. Where the same advantages are gained by substantially the same means, there is infringement; Wallicks v. Cantrell, 12 Fed. 790. The test is whether the defendant uses anything which the plaintiff has invented; Crompton v. Knowles, 7 Fed. 199.

However different, apparently, the arrangements and combinations of a machine may be from the machine of the patentee, it may in reality embody his invention, and be as much an infringement as if it were a servile copy of his machine. If the machine complained of involves substantial identity with the one patented, it is an infringement. If the invention of the patentee be a machine, it is infringed by a machine which incorporates, in its structure and operation, the substance of the invention,—that is, an arrangement which performs the same service, or produces the same effect, in the same way, or substantially the same way; Sickels v. Borden, 3 Blatchf. 535, Fed. Cas. No. 12,832. A device may be an infringement though it be itself a new invention; Zeun v. Kaldenberg, 16 Fed. 539. To obtain the same result by the same mode of operation constitutes infringement; Shaver v. Mfg. Co., 30 Fed. 68; and so where there is a mere formal change; Strobbridge v. Landers, 11 Fed. 880; or variations in size, form, and degree; Asmus v. Alden, 27 Fed. 684; Lull v. Clark, 13 id. 456.

An invention limited to certain forms is infringed only by the use of those forms; Toepfer v. Goetz, 31 Fed. 913.

Where the same result is accomplished, the same function performed, and the mode of operation is the same, a mere difference in the location of parts will not avoid infringement; 42 O. G. 297.

An improvement may be an infringement; Brainard v. Cramme, 12 Fed. 621. An improvement and its original are separate inventions, and the inventor of one infringes by the use of the other; Royer v. Coupe, 29 Fed. 358; American Bell Telephone Co. v. Dolbear, 15 Fed. 448. It is, however, presumed that use under one patent does not infringe another; Smith v. Woodruff, 1 MacArthur (D. C.) 459; and the grant of a second patent is prima facie evidence that the inventions are different, and that the later patented invention is not an infringement of the former; La Baw v. Hawkins, 1 Bann. & A. 428, Fed. Cas. No. 7,960; American Pin Co. v. Oakville Co., 3 Blatchf. 190, Fed. Cas. No. 313.

To experiment with a patented article for scientific purposes, or for curiosity, or amusement, is said not to constitute infringement; Poppenhusen v. Falke, 4 Blatchf. 493, Fed. Cas. No. 11,279, but this cannot be invariably true. To make and exhibit a device at a fair, but not for use or sale, is not an infringement; Standard Measuring Mach. Co. v. League, 15 Fed. 390; nor is mere exposure for sale; 4 A. & E. 251; nor advertising an invention; 19 O. G. 727; but the latter is strong evidence of infringement; 19 O. G. 727. To make an article for sale abroad is an infringement; Ketchum Harvester Co. v. Harvester Co., 8 Fed. 586.

An infringement may be committed by repairing as well as making the invention, if it involves reconstruction either in whole or in part; Goodyear Dental Vulcanite Co. v. Preterre, 3 Bann. & A. 471, Fed. Cas. No. 5,596. To make a part with intent to use it, or to sell it to be used, in connection with the other parts of the invention, is infringement; Celluloid Mfg. Co. v. American Zylonite Co., 30 Fed. 437.

One who makes and sells one element of a patented combination with the intention and for the purpose of bringing about its use in such a combination, is guilty of infringement; Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Brass Co., 80 Fed. 712, 26 C. C. A. 107; but not where the article made by the alleged infringer was not separately patented and was of a perishable nature (sheets of toilet paper); id. It has been held that replacing broken or worn-out parts is not necessarily infringement; Shickle, Harrison & Howard Iron Co. v. Car Coupler Co., 77 Fed. 739, 23 C. C. A. 433; Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Specialty Co., 75 Fed. 1009, 22 C. C. A. 1. See Heaton-Peninsular Button-Fastener Co. v. Specialty Co., 77 Fed. 288, 25 C. C. A. 267, 35 L. R. A. 728, citing many cases.

No act of making, use, or sale can be an infringement of a patented invention unless it is performed during the life of the patent; Marsh v. Nichols, Shepard & Co., 128 U. S. 605, 9 Sup. Ct. 168, 32 L. Ed. 538; Rein v. Clayton, 37 Fed. 354, 3 L. R. A. 78; see Kirk v. U. S., 163 U. S. 55, 16 Sup. Ct. 911, 41 L. Ed. 66. An infringement may be committed by the use, after the patent issues, of a device constructed before the creation of the monopoly, notwithstanding the good faith of its purchaser or maker and his belief that it will never be protected by a patent; 3 Rob. Pat. § 907; Lyon v. Donaldson, 34 Fed. 789.

One who buys a patented article of manufacture from one authorized to sell it at the place where it is sold, becomes possessed of an absolute property in it, unrestricted in time or place; Keeler v. Folding Bed Co., 157 U. S. 659, 15 Sup. Ct. 738, 39 L. Ed. 848, whether a patentee may protect himself and his assignees by special contracts brought home to the purchasers was not decided in the case. A licensee of a patent for Michigan sold pipes to be laid in Connecticut, where he had no patent right; it was held that he was not liable for infringement; Hobbie v. Jennison, 149 U. S. 355, 13 Sup. Ct. 879, 37 L. Ed. 766; see Adams v. Burks, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 453, 21 L. Ed. 700.

A re-issue is not infringed by an act committed before the surrender of the original patent; 2 Rob. Pat. § 696. A re-issue with a broader claim is not infringed by the use of devices made before the original patent, though they are covered by the new claim; Ives v. Axle Co., 11 Fed. 510, 20 Blatchf. 333. A device which does not infringe the original cannot infringe the re-issue, if the scope of the original is measured by its description and not by its claims alone; Cammer v. Newton, 4 Bann. & A. 159, Fed. Cas. No. 2,344.

A patent for a combination of old elements is not infringed by using less than all the elements, where the two combinations are not the same in operation; Faurot v. Hawes, 3 Fed. 456. A claim for a combination of three elements is not infringed by the use of two only, though the third is useless, for the patentee must stand by his claim; Coolidge v. McCone, 1 Bann. & A. 78, Fed. Cas. No. 3,186. A combination is not infringed where one essential element is omitted and another is substituted accomplishing the same result in a different way; Schmidt v. Freese, 12 Fed. 563.

A patent for a manufacture is infringed in whatever way the article is made; Celluloid Mfg. Co. v. American Zylonite Co., 30 Fed. 437; Badische Anilin & Soda Fabrik v. Mfg. Co., 3 Bann. & A. 235, Fed. Cas. No. 721.

Where a product is patented as the result of a certain process it is infringed only when made by that process; Cochrane v. Soda Fabrik, 111 U. S. 293, 4 Sup. Ct. 455, 28 L. Ed. 433.

A patent for a composition of matter is infringed if the new element does the same thing as the one for which it is substituted, though otherwise it is different; Woodward v. Morrison, 5 Fish. 357, Fed. Cas. No. 18,008. A composition of matter is not infringed, if elements are substituted producing different results; Smith v. Murray, 27 Fed. 69.

One is not liable in damages as an infringer if the patentee put his invention on the market not marked patented (with date), unless he had notice of the patent; Dunlap v. Schofield, 152 U. S. 244, 14 Sup. Ct. 576, 38 L. Ed. 426; Coupe v. Royer, 155 U. S. 584, 15 Sup. Ct. 199, 39 L. Ed. 263.

The burden is on the complainant to prove actual or constructive notice; Dunlap v. Schofield, 152 U. S. 244, 14 Sup. Ct. 576, 38 L. Ed. 420.

Speaking in a general sense, it is doubtless true that the test of infringement in respect to the claims of a design-patent is the same as in respect to a patent for an art, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter; but it is not essential to the identity of the design that it should be the same to the eye of an expert. If in the eye of an ordinary observer, giving such attention as a purchaser usually gives, two designs are substantially the same; if the resemblance is such as to deceive such an observer and sufficient to induce him to purchase, one supposing it to be the other, the one patented is infringed by the other; Miller v. Smith, 5 Fed. 359; Gorham Mfg. Co. v. White, 14 Wall. (U. S.) 511, 20 L. Ed. 731.

In granting letters patent to authors and inventors for the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries, the United States reserves no right to publish such writings or use such inventions; James v. Campbell, 104 U. S. 356, 26 L. Ed. 786.

The United States is liable, under its contract, for the use of a patented article, but it is not liable in tort; U. S. v. Mfg. Co., 156 U. S. 552, 15 Sup. Ct. 420, 39 L. Ed. 530. While it has no right to use a patented device, yet no suit will lie against it without its consent; Belknap v. Schild, 161 U. S. 10, 16 Sup. Ct. 443, 40 L. Ed. 599; jurisdiction to recover royalties or compensation under a contract is in the court of claims; U. S. v. Palmer, 128 U. S. 262, 9 Sup. Ct. 104, 32 L. Ed. 442. It is doubtful whether a government official who uses an invention solely for the benefit of the government can be sued for infringement, and whether the case is not one solely for the court of claims; James v. Campbell, 104 U. S. 356, 26 L. Ed. 786. Where an officer of the United States uses, in his official capacity, a patented device made and used by the United States, the patentee is not entitled to an injunction, and cannot recover profits, if the only profit is a saving to the United States; but such officers, although acting under its orders, are personally liable to be sued for their own infringement of a patent; Belknap v. Schild, 161 U. S. 10, 16 Sup. Ct. 443, 40 L. Ed. 599; see Kirk v. U. S., 163 U. S. 49, 16 Sup. Ct. 911, 41 L. Ed. 66. A city is liable for an infringement by its officers for its benefit; Munson v. City of New York, 3 Fed. 338, 5 Bann. & A. 486.

The managing officers of corporations have been, in some cases, joined as defendants in cases involving the infringement of patents; Iowa Barb-Steel Wire Co. v. Wire Co., 30 Fed. 123; Nichols v. Pearce, 7 Blatchf. 5, Fed. Cas. No. 10,246; contra, Matthews & Willard Mfg. Co. v. Lamp Co., 73 Fed. 212; but in Glucose Sugar Refining Co. v. Preserving Co., 135 Fed. 540, Adams, D. J., after considering and citing many authorities, concludes that the weight of authority, and especially of the more recent cases, as well as reason, is against the joinder of officers of a corporation in ordinary cases. He admits that there is much contrariety of opinion. This case was followed in American Bank Protection Co. v. Protection Co., 181 Fed. 350, even where the directors had signed indemnity agreements to purchasers of infringing articles. In Whiting Safety Catch Co. v. Wheeled Scraper Co., 148 Fed. 396, the joinder was sustained because the individual defendant owned all the corporate stock, directed its affairs, and conspired with it to commit the infringement.

INFUSION. In Medical Jurisprudence. A pharmaceutical operation, which consists in pouring a hot or cold fluid upon a substance whose medical properties it is desired to extract. The product of this operation. An infusion differs from a decoction in that the latter is produced by boiling the drug.

Although infusion differs from decoction, they are said to be ejusdem generis; and in the case of an indictment which charged the prisoner with giving a decoction, and the evidence was that he had given an infusion, the difference was held to be immaterial; 3 Campb. 74.

INGENIUM (Lat. of middle ages). A net or hook. Du Cange; hence, probably, the meaning given by Spelman of artifice, fraud (engin). A machine, Spelman, Gloss., especially for warlike purposes; also, for navigation of a ship. Du Cange.

INGENUI (Lat.). In Civil Law. Those freemen who were born free. Vicat, Vocab.

They were a class of freemen, distinguished from those who, born slaves, had afterwards legally obtained their freedom: the latter were called, at various periods, sometimes liberti, sometimes libertini. An unjust or illegal servitude did not prevent a man from being ingenuus.

INGRESS, EGRESS, AND REGRESS. These words are frequently used in leases to express the right of the lessee to enter, go from, and return to the lands in question.

INGRESSU (Lat.). An ancient writ of entry, by which the plaintiff or complainant sought an entry into his lands. Abolished in 1833. Tech. Dict.

INGROSSING. The act of copying from a rough draft a writing in order that it may be executed: as ingrossing a deed.

INHABITANT. One who has his domicile in a place; one who has an actual fixed residence in a place. As used in the federal jurisdiction act of 1789, it means citizen. Shaw

v. Mining Co., 145 U. S. 444, 12 Sup. Ct. 935, 36 L. Ed. 768.

A mere intention to remove to a place will not make a man an inhabitant of such place, although, as a sign of such intention, he may have sent his wife and children to reside there; 1 Ashm. 126. Nor will his intention to quit his residence, unless consummated, deprive him of his right as an inhabitant; Barnet's Case, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 153, 1 L. Ed. 77; Lyle v. Foreman, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 480, 1 L. Ed. 232. See 14 Viner, Abr. 420; 6 Ad. & E. 153.

"The words 'inhabitant,' 'citizen,' and 'resident,' as employed in different constitutions to define the qualifications of electors, mean substantially the same thing; and one is an inhabitant, resident, or citizen at the place where he has his domicile or home;" Cooley, Const. Lim. 755; Munroe v. Williams, 37 S. C. 81, 16 S. E. 535, 19 L. R. A. 665. But the terms "resident" and "inhabitant" have also been held not synonymous, the latter implying a more fixed and permanent abode than the former, and importing privileges and duties to which a mere resident would not be subject; Board of Sup'rs of Tazewell County v. Davenport, 40 Ill. 197; Bartlett v. Mayor, etc., 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 44; Isham v. Gibbons, 1 Bradf. (N. Y.) 69; Lee v. City of Boston, 2 Gray (Mass.) 484; State v. Ross, 23 N. J. L. 517. Where a question was to be submitted to the "inhabitants" of a municipality it has been held to mean legal voters; Walnut v. Wade, 103 U. S. 683, 26 L. Ed. 526. When relating to municipal rights, powers, or duties, the word inhabitant is almost universally used as signifying precisely the same as domiciled; Borland v. City of Boston, 132 Mass. 98, 42 Am. Rep. 424.

Property conveyed to the inhabitants of a town as a body politic and corporate vests in the town as a corporation; Town of Newmarket v. Smart, 45 N. H. 87. See ALIEN; CITIZEN; DOMICIL; NATURALIZATION; HOME.

INHERENT POWER. An authority possessed without its being derived from another. A right, ability, or faculty of doing a thing, without receiving that right, ability, or faculty from another.

INHERITABLE BLOOD. Blood of an ancestor which, while it makes the person in whose veins it flows a relative, will also give him the legal rights of inheritance incident to that relationship. See 2 Bla. Com. 254, 255. Descendants can derive no title through a person whose blood is not inheritable. Such, in England, are persons attainted and aliens. But attainder is not known in this country. See 4 Kent 413, 424; 1 Hill. R. P. 148; 2 id. 190.

INHERITANCE. A perpetuity in lands to a man and his heirs; the right to succeed to the estate of a person who dies intestate. Dig. 50. 16. 24. The term is applied to lands.

It includes all the methods by which a child or relation takes property from another at his death, except by devise, and includes as well succession as descent; as applied to personal property, it can mean nothing else than to signify succession; Horner v. Webster, 33 N. J. L. 413.

The property which is inherited is called an inheritance.

The term inheritance includes not only lands and tenements which have been acquired by descent, but every fee-simple or fee-tail which a person has acquired by purchase may be said to be an inheritance, because the purchaser's heirs may inherit it; Littleton § 9. This would now be called an estate of inheritance; 1 Steph. Com. 231. See ESTATES.

In Civil Law. The succession to all the rights of the deceased. It is of two kinds: that which arises by testament, when the testator gives his succession to a particular person; and that which arises by operation of law, which is called succession ab intestat. Heineccius, Lec. El. §§ 484, 485.

INHERITANCE ACT. The English statute of 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 106, regulating the law of inheritance. 2 Chitty, Stat. 575; 2 Bla. Com. 37; 1 Steph. Com. 388.

INHERITANCE TAX. See TAX.

INHIBITION. In Civil Law. A prohibition which the law makes or a judge ordains to an individual. Halifax, Anal. p. 126.

In English Law. The name of a writ which forbids a judge from further proceeding in a cause depending before him: it is in the nature of a prohibition. Termes de la Ley; Fitzh. N. B. 39. Also a writ issuing out of a higher court christian to a lower and inferior, upon an appeal; 2 Burn, Ec. L. 339. In the government of the Protestant Episcopal church, a bishop can inhibit a clergyman of his diocese from performing clerical functions.

INITIAL (from Lat. initium, beginning). Beginning; placed at the beginning. Webster. Thus, the initials of a man's name are the first letters of his name: as, G. W. for George Washington. Initials are no part of a name; Monroe Cattle Co. v. Becker, 147 U. S. 47, 13 Sup. Ct. 217, 37 L. Ed. 72. A middle name or initial is not recognized by law; Milk v. Christie & Todd, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 102; Bratton v. Seymour, 4 Watts (Pa.) 329; Allen v. Taylor, 26 Vt. 599; King v. Hutchins, 28 N. H. 561; McKay v. Speak, 8 Tex. 376; Long v. Campbell, 37 W. Va. 665, 17 S. E. 197; Johnson v. Day, 2 N. Dak. 295, 50 N. W. 701; Hicks v. Riley, 83 Ga. 332, 9 S. E. 771. But see Com. v. Perkins, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 388; but the first initial is, and a variance therein is fatal to an indictment; English v. State, 30 Tex. App. 470, 18 S. W. 94. In an indictment for forgery, an instrument signed "T. Tupper" was averred to have been made with intent to defraud Tristram Tupper, and it was held good; State v. Jones, 1 McMull. (S. C.) 236, 36 Am. Dec. 257. Signing of initials is good signing within the Statute of Frauds; 12 J. B. Moore 219; 2 Mood. & R. 221; Add. Contr. 46, n.; Palmer v. Stephens, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 471. When in a will the legatee is described by the initials of his name only, parol evidence may be given to prove his identity; 3 Ves. 148. The fact that the foreman of the grand jury in signing his name to the indorsement of "a true bill" on the indictment, used only the initials of, instead of his full Christian name, is not ground for quashing the indictment; Zimmerman v. State, 4 Ind. App. 583, 31 N. E. 550. As to the use of an initial in a ballot, see ELECTION. See NAME.

INITIATE. Commenced.

A husband was, in feudal law, said to be tenant by the curtesy initiate when a child who might inherit was born to his wife, because he then first had an inchoate right as tenant by the curtesy, and did homage to the lord as one of the pares curtis; whence curtesy. This right became consummated on the death of the wife before the husband. See 2 Bla. Com. 127; 1 Steph. Com. 247.

INITIATE TENANT BY CURTESY. A husband becomes tenant by curtesy initiate in his wife's estate of inheritance upon the birth of issue capable of inheriting the same. The husband's estate by curtesy is not said to be consummate till the death of the wife. 2 Bla. Com. 127, 128; 1 Steph. Com. 365, 366.

INITIATIVE. In French Law. The name given to the important prerogative conferred by the charte constitutionnelle, art. 16, on the king to propose, through his ministers, projects of laws. 1 Toullier, n. 39. See VERO.

INITIATIVE, REFERENDUM, AND RECALL. Initiative is the right of a specified number of the electorate to unite in proposing laws to the legislative body, which, after due consideration, must submit the same to the vote of the people for their approval or disapproval.

Referendum is the referring of legislative acts to the electorate for their final acceptance or rejection.

At the end of 1911, the initiative and referendum were in force in 209 cities in 25 states, and were a part of the fundamental law, for state purposes, in 11 states: Maine, Missouri, South Dakota, Arkansas, Oklahoma, California, Colorado, Arizona, Montana, Oregon, and Washington. In 1912 Idaho, Wyoming, and Nebraska adopted these measures.

Recall is provision for the retirement of an elected officer, by a vote of the electorate. In 1911 the right to recall was provided in Idaho, Montana, North and South Dakota, Washington, Wisconsin, Wyoming, and California. Like provisions were adopted in 1912 in Ohio, Arizona, and Nebraska. In Illinois, certain questions of public policy are submitted to an election. In Iowa, Michigan, and Massachusetts the recall exists in connection with the commission form of city governments. So, also, in Parkersburg, West Virginia. California and Arizona provide for the recall of judges.

An initiative and referendum amendment to the state constitution was held not repugnant to the national constitution guaranteeing to every state a republican form of government; Kadderly v. Portland, 44 Or. 118, 74 Pac. 710, 75 Pac. 222; nor does that provision of the federal constitution prohibit a direct vote of the voters of a subdivision of a state in strictly local affairs; In re Pfahler, 150 Cal. 71, 88 Pac. 270, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1092, 11 Ann. Cas. 911. Whether the initiative and referendum provisions in the constitution of Oregon so alter the form of its government as to make it no longer republican, according to Article IV, § 4 of the United States constitution, is a purely political question as to which the courts have no jurisdiction; Pacific States Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Oregon, 223 U. S. 118, 32 Sup. Ct. 224, 56 L. Ed. 377, dismissing writ of error to the judgment in 53 Or. 162, 99 Pac. 427; to the same effect, Kiernan v. Portland, 223 U. S. 151, 32 Sup. Ct. 231, 56 L. Ed. 386.

See Referendum in America by Dr. E. P. Oberholtzer.

The report of a special committee of the American Bar Association on the Recall of Judges (Rome G. Brown, Chairman) to the 1913 meeting, contains much information on that subject. The practice was adopted in Oregon in 1908; in California in 1911; in Colorado in 1912 (and also a provision for the recall of judicial decisions as to the constitutionality of statutes and of certain city charters); Arizona in 1912; Nevada in 1912. In Kansas and Minnesota a vote will be taken in 1914. In Arkansas a constitutional amendment was adopted in 1912, but was held to have been improperly submitted. The report gives an extensive bibliography on Judicial Recall.

INJUNCTION. A prohibitory writ, issued by the authority and generally under the seal of a court of equity, to restrain one or more of the defendants or parties or quasi parties to a suit or proceeding in equity, from doing, or from permitting his servants or others who are under his control to do, an act which is deemed to be inequitable so far as regards the rights of some other party or parties to such suit or proceedings in equity. Eden, Inj. c. 1; Kerr, Inj. 9; Jeremy, Eq. Jur. b. 3, c. 2, § 1; Story, Eq. Jur. § 861; Will, Eq. Jur. 341; 2 Green, Ch. 136; 1 Madd. 126.

The writ of injunction may be regarded as the correlation of the writ of mandamus, the one enjoining the performance of an unlawful act, the other requiring the performance of a lawful or neglected act; Beach, Inj. § 9.

Under the present practice in England, injunction is not by writ, but the order of the court has the same effect.

The interdict of the Roman law resembles, in many respects, our injunction. It was used in three distinct but cognate senses. 1. It was applied to signify the edicts made by the prætor, declaratory of his intention to give a remedy in certain cases, chiefly to preserve or to restore possession; this interdict was called edictal: edictale, quod prætorii edictis proponitur, ut sciant omnes ea forma posse implorari. 2. It was used to signify his order or decree, applying the remedy in the given case before him, and was then called decretal: decretale, quod prætor re nata implorantibus decrevit. It is this which bears a strong resemblance to the injunction of a court of equity. 3. It was used, in the last place, to signify the very remedy sought in the suit commenced under the prætor's edict; and thus it became the denomination of the action itself. Livingston on the Batture case; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 865.

Mandatory injunctions command the defendant to do a particular thing. Preventive, commands him to refrain from an act. The former are resorted to rarely and are seldom allowed before a final hearing; Corning v. Nail Factory, 40 N. Y. 191; Audenried v. R. Co., 68 Pa. 370, 8 Am. Rep. 195; 10 Ves. 192; 20 Am. Dec. 389, note; Bailey v. Schnitzius, 45 N. J. Eq. 178, 13 Atl. 247, 16 Atl. 680. They are not granted except to prevent a failure of justice and then only when the right is clearly established; Buettgenbach v. Gerbig, 2 Neb. (unof.) 889, 90 N. W. 654; Budd v. Camden Horse R. Co., 63 N. J. Eq. 804, 52 Atl. 1130, affirming 61 N. J. Eq. 543, 48 Atl. 1028; nor where there is unreasonable delay in the application; MacKintyre v. Jones, 9 Pa. Super. Ct. 543.

Preliminary or interlocutory injunctions are used to restrain the party enjoined from doing or continuing to do the wrong complained of, either temporarily or during the continuance of the suit or proceeding in equity in which such injunction is granted, and before the rights of the parties have been settled by the decree of the court in such suit or proceeding. The sole object of a preliminary injunction is to preserve the status quo until the merits can be heard. The status quo is the last actual peaceable uncontested status which preceded the pending controversy, and a wrongdoer cannot shelter himself behind a sudden or recently changed status, though made before the chancellor's hand actually reached him; Fredericks v. Huber, 180 Pa. 572, 37 Atl. 90. See RE-STRAINING ORDER.

Final or perpetual injunctions are awarded, or directed to be issued, or the preliminary injunction already issued is made final or perpetual, by the final decree of the court, or when the rights of the parties so far as relates to the subject of the injunction are finally adjudicated and disposed of by the order or decree of the court; 2 Freem. Ch. 106; Caruthers v. Hartsfield, 3 Yerg. (Tenn.) 366, 24 Am. Dec. 580; Kruson v. Kruson, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 184; Kerr, Inj. *12.

In England, injunctions were divided into common injunctions and special injunctions; Eden, Inj. 178, n.; Will. Eq. Jur. 342. The common injunction was obtained of course when the defendant in the suit in equity was in default for not entering his appearance, or for not putting in his answer to the complainant's bill within the times prescribed by the practice of the court; Story, Eq. Jur. § 892; 18 Ves. 523; Jeremy, Eq. Jur. Special injunctions were founded upon the oath of the complainant, or other evidence of the truth of the charges contained in his bill of complaint. They were obtained upon a special application, and usually upon notice of such application given to the party whose proceedings were sought to be enjoined; Story, Eq. Jur. § 892; Jeremy, Eq. Jur. 339; 18 Ves. 522.

In the federal courts and in the equity courts of most of the states the English practice of granting the common injunction has been discontinued or superseded, either by statute or by rules of the courts; the preliminary injunctions are, therefore, all special injunctions in the courts of this country where such English practice has been superseded.

When used. The injunction is used in a great variety of cases, of which cases the following are some of the most common: to stay proceedings at law by the party enjoined; Albritton v. Bird, R. M. Charlt. (Ga.) 93; Lyles v. Halton, 6 Gill & J. (Md.) 122; Bell v. Cunningham, 1 Sumn. 89, Fed. Cas. No. 1,246; Gridley v. Wynant, 23 How. (U. S.) 500, 16 L. Ed. 411; Monson v. Lawrence, 27 Conn. 579; Frith v. Roe, 23 Ga. 139; to restrain the transfer of stocks, of promissory notes, bills of exchange, and other evidences of debt; Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 904, 955; 2 Vern. 122; Osborn v. Bank, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 738, 6 L. Ed. 204; Jones v. Edwards, 57 N. C. 257; Burns v. Weesner, 134 Ind. 442, 34 N. E. 10; to restrain the transfer of the title to property; Morris Canal & Banking Co. v. Mayor, etc., 12 N. J. Eq. 252; Gayle v. Fattle, 14 Md. 69; Stringham v. Brown, 7 Ia. 33; Conant v. Warren, 6 Gray (Mass.) 562; Lee v. Simpson, 37 Fed. 12, 2 L. R. A. 659; or the parting with the possession of such property; 3 V. & B. 168; Oneida Mfg. Society v. Lawrence, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 440; to restrain the party enjoined from setting up an unequitable defence in a suit at law; Mitf. Eq. Pl. 134; to restrain the collection of illegal taxes; St. Louis &

S. F. R. Co. v. Apperson, 97 Mo. 300, 10 S. W. 478; Norman, etc., v. Roaz, 85 Ky. 557, 4 S. W. 316; Clee v. Sanders, 74 Mich. 692, 42 N. W. 154; or taxes imposed in contravention of the United States constitution; In re Tyler, 149 U. S. 164, 13 Sup. Ct. 785, 37 L. Ed. 689; to restrain the infringement of a patent; Atwill v. Ferrett, 2 Blatchf. 39, Fed. Cas. No. 640; Sullivan v. Redfield, 1 Paine 441, Fed. Cas. No. 13,597; Schneider v. Glass Co., 36 Fed. 582; or a copyright, or the pirating of trade-marks; 17 Ves. 424; Schneider v. Williams, 44 N. J. Eq. 391, 14 Atl. 812; Smail v. Sanders, 118 Ind. 105, 20 N. E. 296; Brown Chemical Co. v. Stearns & Co., 37 Fed. 360; to restrain a party from passing off his goods as those of another by means of simulating his labels, packages, etc.; Lawrence Mfg. Co. v. Mfg. Co., 138 U. S. 537, 11 Sup. Ct. 396, 34 L. Ed. 997; to prevent the removal of property; Trustees of Davidson College v. Chambers' Ex'rs, 56 N. C. 253; or the evidences of title to property, or the evidences of indebtedness, out of the jurisdiction of the court; to restrain the committing of waste; 4 Kent 161; Brady v. Waldron, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 148; Parsons v. Hughes, 12 Md. 1. Cowles v. Shaw, 2 Ia. 496; Thomas v. James, 32 Ala. 723; to prevent the creation or the continuance of a private nuisance; Hill v. Sayles, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 454; Cunningham v. Rice, 28 Ga. 30; Weimer v. Lowery, 11 Cal. 104; Snyder v. Cabell, 29 W. Va. 48, 1 S. E. 241; Ulbricht v. Water Co., 86 Ala. 587, 6 South. 78, 4 L. R. A. 572, 11 Am. St. Rep. 72; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Whalen, 149 U. S. 157, 13 Sup. Ct. 822, 37 L. Ed. 686; or of a public nuisance particularly noxious to the party asking for the injunction; Mitf. Eq. Pl. 124; City of New York v. Mapes, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 46; Packet Co. v. Sorrels, 50 Ark. 466, 8 S. W. 683; De Vaughn v. Minor, 77 Ga. 809, 1 S. E. 433; to restrain illegal acts of municipal officers; Pope v. Inhabitants of Halifax, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 410; Baldwin v. City of Buffalo, 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 396; Lumsden v. City of Milwaukee, 8 Wis. 485; Briggs v. Borden, 71 Mich. 87, 38 N. W. 712; Pennoyer v. McConaughy, 140 U. S. 1, 11 Sup. Ct. 699, 35 L. Ed. 363; to prevent a purpresture; Langsdale v. Bonton, 12 Ind. 467; to restrain the breach of a covenant or agreement; 1 D. M. & G. 619; Singer Sewing-Mach. Co. v. Embroidery Co., 1 Holmes 258, Fed. Cas. No. 12,904, see infra; to restrain the publication of a libel; [1891] 2 Ch. 269; Grand Rapids School Furniture Co. v. Furniture Co., 92 Mich. 558, 52 N. W. 1009, 16 L. R. A. 721, 31 Am. St. Rep. 611; [1892] 1 Ch. 571; but see [1891] 2 Ch. 294; to restrain the alienation of property pending a suit for specific performance; 3 D. J. & S. 63; to restrain the disclosure of confidential communications, papers, and secrets; Kerr, Inj. § 436; Blsph. Eq. 427; Little v. Gallus, 4 App. Div. 569, 38

N. Y. Supp. 487; 9 Hare 255; to restrain the publication of unpublished manuscripts, letters, etc.; 4 H. L. C. 867; 2 Mer. 437; to restrain members of a firm from doing acts inconsistent with the partnership articles, etc.; 12 Beav. 414; to restrain waste, even though the title be in litigation; Erhardt v. Boaro, 113 U. S. 537, 5 Sup. Ct. 565, 28 L. Ed. 1116; to restrain the cutting of timber on land the title to which is in dispute; Wood v. Braxton, 54 Fed. 1005; to restrain the construction of a permanent tunnel through a lot; Richards v. Dower, 64 Cal. 62, 28 Pac. 113; or a continuous trespass, where a party claims a right of way over the land, the use of which if permitted will ripen into an easement; Murphy v. Lincoln, 63 Vt. 278, 22 Atl. 418; Learned v. Castle, 78 Cal. 454, 18 Pac. 872, 21 Pac. 11; see Warren Mills v. Seed Co., 65 Miss. 391, 4 South. 298, 7 Am. St. Rep. 671; Heilbron v. Canal Co., 75 Cal. 426, 17 Pac. 535, 7 Am. St. Rep. 183; Ellis v. Wren, 84 Ky. 254, 1 S. W. 440; to restrain trespass, leaving the question of title to be settled by a suit at law; Cheesman v. Shreve, 37 Fed. 36; to restrain a railway from entering and taking possession of land without first having acquired the right to do so; Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Michener, 117 Ind. 465, 20 N. Kuehnle, 76 N. J. Eq. 256, 73 Atl. 1054 (which was put on the ground of nuisance, as the court had no jurisdiction to enforce, by injunction, the Sunday laws); to restrain a defaulting or insolvent executor or administrator from getting in assets; Kerr, Inj. § 451; 1 Will. Exec. 275; to restrain a trustee from the misuse of his powers; 1 Hare 146; to protect certain liens, as that of an equitable mortgagee, or of a solicitor upon his client's papers; 7 D. M. & G. 288; to restrain companies from doing illegal acts, either as against the public or third parties, or the members thereof; 13 Beav. 45; to restrain the unlawful diversion of water; Heilbron v. Canal Co., 75 Cal. 426, 17 Pac. 535, 7 Am. St. Rep. 183; Dayton v. Drainage Com'rs, 128 Ill. 271, 21 N. E. 198; or the pollution of a stream; Barrett v. Cemetery Ass'n, 159 Ill. 385, 42 N. E. 891, 31 L. R. A. 109, 50 Am. St. Rep. 168; or the flowage of land by a water company, unless the award is paid; Wilmington Water-Power Co. v. Evans, 166 Ill. 548, 46 N. E. 1083; to restrain the erection of a house across a public alley; Cohen v. Bank, 81 Ga. 723, 7 S. E. 811. It lies to prevent a threatened breach of trust in the diversion of corporate funds by illegal payment out of its capital or profits; Pollock v. Trust Co., 157 U. S. 429, 15 Sup. Ct. 673, 39 L. Ed. 759; at the suit of a private person to prevent the publication of his picture (but not where the person is of public reputation); Corliss v. E. W. Walker Co., 64 Fed. 280, 31 L. R. A. 283; but not to restrain the publication of a biography of the complainant or of a member of his family: Corliss v. E. W. Walker Co., 57 Fed. 434; but it will lie to enjoin the publication of a picture of a deceased member of complainant's family, where the respondent had not observed the conditions under which he obtained it; Corliss v. E. W. Walker Co., 57 Fed. 434. See PRIVACY.

Equity will enjoin the construction of a street railway over a part of a turnpike road, the fee of which is owned by the complainant; Philadelphia & Trenton R. Co. v. R. Co., 6 Pa. D. R. 269; at the suit of a wife, whose title is not disputed, will enjoin her husband's creditors from selling her property for payment of his debts; Smith v. Eline, 18 Pa. C. C. R. 560; and will enjoin a hardware store situated in a populous district from keeping and selling dynamite, and from overloading its building with a stock of hardware, when it thereby becomes a menace to passers-by; McDonough v. Roat, 8 Kulp (Pa.) 433.

An injunction will be granted to restrain a company in voluntary liquidation from distributing its assets among its shareholders without providing for future liabilities under a lease; 32 Ch. D. 41; to restrain a husband from going to his wife's house settled to her separate use, in a case where proceedings are pending between them for divorce or a judicial separation, and they are living apart; 24 Ch. 346; to enjoin a husband from dealing with his property where alimony is claimed; [1893] P. 284; [1896] P. 36, but see [1896] P. 35; against trades unionists who maliciously induce employer's contractees to break their contracts; [1893] 1 Q. B. 715; for maliciously inducing an employer to dismiss his employes; [1895] 2 Q. B. 21; against picketing; [1896] 1 Ch. 811; to restrain the publication of notes of a lecture where the audience was limited and were admitted by ticket; 28 Ch. D. 374; to restrain the publication of any valuable information, e. g. of prices communicated to a limited public for a limited purpose; [1896] 1 Q. B. 147; to restrain the sale of a volume of letters; 2 Atk. 341; to restrain the publication of confidential information obtained during service; 19 Q. B. D. 629; such as drawings; [1892] 2 Ch. 518; advertisements; [1893] 1 Ch. 218; to restrain the vendor of a good will from soliciting his former customers; [1896] App. Cas. 7; or a photographer who had taken a likeness of a lady in order to supply her with copies for money, from selling or exhibiting copies; 40 Ch. D.

345; or to prevent a fraudulent transfer or removal from the jurisdiction of a debtor's property, in aid of an execution; People v. Van Buren, 136 N. Y. 252, 32 N. E. 775, 20 L. R. A. 446.

An injunction will not be granted, as a rule, to take property out of the possession of one party and put it into that of another whose title has not been established at law; Lacassagne v. Chapuis, 144 U. S. 119, 12 Sup. Ct. 659, 36 L. Ed. 368; Roy v. Moore, 85 Conn. 159, 82 Atl. 233; Flannery v. Hightower, 97 Ga. 592, 25 S. E. 371 (but record evidence of title is not absolutely necessary to sustain a bill to enjoin an ejectment; Michie v. Ellair, 54 Mich. 518, 20 N. W. 564; and if the plaintiff's title is the better one in respect to possession, an injunction will issue; Dosoris Pond Co. v. Campbell, 25 App. Div. 179, 50 N. Y. Supp. 819; id., 164 N. Y. 596, 58 N. E. 1087); nor where both the possession of realty and the right of possession are in doubt; Stone v. Snell, 4 Neb. (Unof.) 430, 94 N. W. 525; nor where the title to personal property is the sole question in dispute; Kistler v. Weaver, 135 N. C. 388, 47 S. E. 478; nor to restrain a defendant in a case pending for the infringement of letters patent, from issuing circulars alleging that the plaintiff's patent in suit is invalid; Baltimore Car-Wheel Co. v. Bemis, 29 Fed. 95; Kidd v. Horry, 28 Fed. 773; (contra, Emack v. Kane, 34 Fed. 46; Bell v. Mfg. Co., 65 Ga. 452; and it lies in England by statute; 14 Ch. Div. 763; Kidd v. Horry, 28 Fed. 774; L. R. 7 Eq. 488); nor to restrain a patentee who has begun, and is proceeding with, a suit on his patent, from notifying a manufacturer's customers, in a courteous way, that he intends to enforce his rights; New York Filter Co. v. Schwarzwaldner, 58 Fed. 577; nor to restrain defendant from falsely representing that a patentee's invention is an infringement of his, and thus deterring purchasers; Whitehead v. Kitson, 119 Mass. 484.

It is necessary to the obtaining an injunction, as to other equitable relief, that there should be no plain, adequate, and complete remedy at law; Greene v. Mumford, 5 R. I. 472, 73 Am. Dec. 79; Thomas v. Protective Union, 121 N. Y. 45, 24 N. E. 24, 8 L. R. A. 175; Pusey v. Wright, 31 Pa. 387; Thomas v. James, 32 Ala. 723; Coe v. Mfg. Co., 37 N. H. 254; Franklin Telegraph Co. v. Harrison, 145 U. S. 459, 12 Sup. Ct. 900, 36 L. Ed. 776; where there is adequate remedy at law one will not be granted; Harding v. Hawkins, 141 Ill. 572, 31 N. E. 307, 33 Am. St. Rep. 347; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Cannon, 49 Fed. 517; Wardens St. Peter's Episcopal Church v. Town of Washington, 109 N. C. 21, 13 S. E. 700; Wolf River Lumber Co. v. Boom Co., 83 Wis. 426, 53 N. W. 678; Planet Property & Financial Co. v. Ry. Co., 115 Mo. 613, 22 S. W. 616. An injunction will not be granted while the rights between the parties are undetermined, except in cases where material and irreparable injury will be done; Spring v. Strauss, 3 Bosw. (N. Y.) 607; Bell v. Purvis, 15 Md. 22; Burnett v. Whitesides, 13 Cal. 156; Branch Turnpike Co. v. Board of Suprs., id. 190; Reed v. Jones, 6 Wis. 680; Watrous v. Rodgers, 16 Tex. 410; Patterson v. McCamant, 28 Mo. 210; Cohen v. L'Engle, 24 Fla. 542, 5 South. 235; but where it is irreparable and of a nature which cannot be compensated, and where there will be no adequate remedy, an injunction will be granted; Webber v. Gage, 39 N. H. 182; Pope v. Inhabitants of Halifax, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 410; Cunningham v. R. Co., 27 Ga. 499; U. S. v. Parrott, 1 McAll. 271, Fed. Cas. No. 15,998; Wood v. Braxton, 54 Fed. 1005; Griffith v. Hilliard, 64 Vt. 643, 25 Atl. 427. A preliminary injunction against the infringement of a patent will not be granted in case of doubt as to the infringement; Norton Door Check & Spring Co. v. Hall, 37 Fed. 691; where defendant confessedly intends to regain possession of certain premises by force, such act being punishable as a breach of the peace, he will not be restrained by injunction; Latham v. R. Co., 45 Fed. 721.

The owner of a dwelling-house, called for 60 years "Ashford Lodge," is not entitled to an injunction restraining the proprietor of an adjoining house known as "Ashford Villa" for 40 years from changing its name to "Ashford Lodge"; 10 Ch. D. 294. An injunction will not lie to prevent a club from carrying out the decision of the members when acting under their rules, unless it be shown that the rules are contrary to natural justice, or that what has been done is contrary to the rules, or that there has been bad faith in a decision; 13 Eq. 63; 13 Ch. D. 346; 17 Ch. D. 615. A member of an incorporated club has a standing in equity for an injunction to restrain the club from carrying out its declared purpose of committing an act which, if found to be criminal, will imperil the charter of the club; Klein v. Livingston Club, 177 Pa. 224, 35 Atl. 606, 34 L. R. A. 94, 55 Am. St. Rep. 717.

Where there was a conspiracy to prevent workmen by intimidation or persuasion from entering into or continuing in the plaintiff's employment, an injunction was granted to restrain the maintenance of a patrol of two men in front of the plaintiff's premises, placed there in furtherance of such conspiracy; Vegelahn v. Guntner, 167 Mass. 92, 44 N. E. 1077, 35 L. R. A. 722, 57 Am. St. Rep. 443; but a corporation is not entitled to an injunction against persons or organizations on the ground that they have conspired to injure it by compelling its members to leave it; Silver State Council No. 1 of American Order of Steam Engineers v. Rhodes, 7 Colo. App. 211, 43 Pac. 451. See Borcorr.

Where a city had power to build waterworks, the fact that by so doing it would violate contract rights of an existing water company does not give an individual property owner the right to enjoin the city on the ground that his taxes would be increased thereby; Moore v. City of Walla Walla, 60 Fed. 961.

Equity will not enjoin a municipal corporation in the exercise of its lawful powers, unless the proposed act is ultra vires and would work irreparable injury; Murphy v. East Portland, 42 Fed. 308; but a resident taxpayer and real estate owner is entitled to bring a suit to enjoin the execution of a municipal contract illegally awarded, whatever may be alleged to be his ulterior purpose; Mazet v. City of Pittsburgh, 137 Pa. 561, 20 Atl. 693.

An injunction against a newspaper to restrain it from copying literary matter from another newspaper will not be refused because such is the practice of newspapers; [1892] 3 Ch. 489, where the cases are collected.

In England, equity, in special cases of contracts for personal services, will restrain the violation of the contract, whenever the legal remedy of damages would be inadequate and the contract is of such a kind that its negative specific enforcement is possible. This rule was at first applied to contracts which were in form expressly negative, but has since been extended to affirmative contracts which imply negative stipulations; Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1343; L. R. 16 Eq. 149; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. R. Co., 1 McCra. 558, 3 Fed. 423; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. R. Co., 1 McCra. 565, 3 Fed. 430; Singer Sewing Mach. Co. v. Embroidery Co., 1 Holmes 253, Fed. Cas. No. 12,904. But where there was a contract for personal service containing a stipulation by the employed that he will "act exclusively for" his employer, the employed will not be restrained by injunction from entering the employ of another person in the absence of a negative covenant in the contract, express or implied, which is clear and definite; 75 L. T. Rep. 526; Sternberg v. O'Brien, 48 N. J. Eq. 370, 22 Atl. 348.

An injunction will not be granted to enforce a part of a bilateral contract where it cannot specifically enforce the whole; Wely v. Jacobs, 171 Ill. 624, 49 N. E. 723, 40 L. R. A. 98, 49 N. E. 723; unless the terms of the agreement are distinct and independent; 6 Sim. 333; 1 De G., M. & G. 604.

An injunction restraining the breach of a contract is a negative specific enforcement of that contract. The jurisdiction of equity to grant such injunction is substantially coincident with its jurisdiction to compel specific performance, and wherever a contract is one of a class which will be specifically enforced, a court of equity will restrain its breach by injunction, if this is the only practical mode of enforcement; Wely v. Jacobs, 171 Ill. 624, 49 N. E. 723, 40 L. R. A. 98. The breach of a negative promise will be enjoined whenever the contract is one of which the court would decree specific performance, if by such decree its observance by the party refusing to perform could be practically enforced; Metropolitan Exhibition Co. v. Ewing, 42 Fed. 198, 7 L. R. A. 381.

In this class of cases it is considered proper to interfere directly by preventing a breach which the person has bound himself not to make; L. R. 43 Ch. Div. 165; 1 De G. M., & G. 604. If the negative remedy of injunction will oblige the defendant either to carry out his contract or to lose all benefit of the breach, and the remedy at law is inadequate, and there is no reason of policy against it, the court will restrain conduct which is contrary to the contract, although it may be unable to enforce a specific performance of it; Philadelphia Ball Club v. Lajoie, 202 Pa. 210, 51 Atl. 973, 58 L. R. A. 227, 90 Am. St. Rep. 627.

Usually, in view of the peculiar personal relations which result from a contract of service, it would be inexpedient from the standpoint of public policy, to attempt to enforce such a contract specifically. It is held to be an invasion of one's natural liberty to compel him to work for another. One who is placed under such constraint is in a condition of involuntary servitude; Arthur v. Oakes, 63 Fed. 310, 11 C. C. A. 209, 25 L. R. A. 414. But where the promised service is of a special, unique, or unusual and extraordinary or intellectual character which gives it peculiar value, the loss of which can not be reasonably compensated in damages in an action at law, an injunction will be granted where there is an express negative covenant; Philadelphia Ball Club v. Lajoie, 202 Pa. 210, 51 Atl. 973, 58 L. R. A. 227, 90 Am. St. Rep. 627; Duff v. Russell, 14 N. Y. Supp. 134, affirmed 133 N. Y. 678, 31 N. E. 622; [1894] 1 Q. B. 125; 1 De G., M. & G. 604; but there must be a clear and definite negative covenant; Gossard Co. v. Crosby, 132 Ia. 155, 109 N. W. 483, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1115, and note; or, if one is to be implied, which is quite possible, it must be so definite that the court can see exactly the limit of the injunction that it is to grant; 75 L. T. N. S. 528, following [1891] 2 Ch. 428, where it was held that from a contract by an agent to act exclusively for his employer, a negative covenant not to do business for other employers could not be implied. In the Iowa case above cited, it is said: "The better and greater weight of the authorities tends to these conclusions: 1. That equity will not undertake to decree specific performance of contracts for personal service. 2. In the absence of an express negative covenant, equity will not aid the enforcement of these contracts by injunction. 3. Even when there is an express negative covenant, injunction will not be granted save in exceptional cases where by reason of the peculiar or extraordinary character of the promised service, a violation of the agreement will cause injury to the other party for which an action at law will afford no adequate remedy."

An injunction will be granted where the remedy at law, though there be one, is inadequate: To protect an innocent purchaser of the stock and good-will of a business by enjoining the sale thereof by the sheriff, where the damages recoverable would be only for the value of the stock, without compensation for the loss of business; North v. Peters, 138 U. S. 271, 11 Sup. Ct. 346, 34 L. Ed. 936; to prevent the illegal sale of a church-pew under an attachment, upon the ground that it would be an outrage to the owners' religious feelings; Deutsch v. Stone, 27 Weekly Law Bull. (Ohio) 20; to prevent the illegal issue of corporate bonds; Denny v. Denny, 113 Ind. 22, 14 N. E. 593; Watson v. Sutherland, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 74, 18 L. Ed. 580; to prevent the destruction of ornamental trees on the plaintiff's grounds; Shipley v. Ritter, 7 Md. 408, 61 Am. Dec. 371; to restrain the cutting off of the supply of natural gas furnished under a contract; Graves v. Gas Co., 83 Ia. 714, 50 N. W. 283; where the redress at law would be inadequate by reason of the defendant's insolvency; Saltus v. Belford Co., 133 N. Y. 499, 31 N. E. 518. An injunction will be granted to enjoin a public nuisance if it be continuous and peculiarly injures the plaintiff or his property; Lamming v. Galusha, 135 N. Y. 239, 31 N. E. 1024; or where a criminal prosecution is threatened, under color of an invalid statute, for the purpose of compelling the relinquishment of a property right; Central Trust Co. v. R. Co., 80 Fed. 218.

An injunction will not be granted on the application of a private person, to protect purely public rights; Springer v. Walters, 139 Ill. 419, 28 N. E. 761; nor, except in a great emergency, to interfere with public improvements; Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Everett, 40 N. J. Eq. 350, 3 Atl. 126; nor to restrain the abuse of a public trust, unless the complainant can show some peculiar interest therein; Chicago v. Building Ass'n, 102 Ill. 379, 40 Am. Rep. 598; nor to compel the lessees of an opera house to allow the plaintiff to use the house under a contract therefor, where the effect would be to compel the lessee to break a contract with an innocent third party; Foster v. Ballenberg, 43 Fed. 824; nor to prevent the maintenance of a nuisance on a highway where it could be abated by indictment; Inhabitants of the Township of Raritan v. R. Co., 49 N. J. Eq. 11, 23 Atl. 127.

As a general rule equity has no jurisdiction to enjoin criminal prosecutions; Minneapolis Brewing Co. v. McGillivray, 104 Fed. 258; Fitts v. McGhee, 172 U. S. 516, 19 Sup.

Ct. 269, 43 L. Ed. 535; Davis & F. Mfg. Co. v. Los Angeles, 189 U. S. 207, 23 Sup. Ct. 498, 47 L. Ed. 778; In re Sawyer, 124 U. S. 200, 8 Sup. Ct. 482, 31 L. Ed. 402; Portis v. Fall, 34 Ark. 375; Paulk v. City of Sycamore, 104 Ga. 24, 30 S. E. 417, 41 L. R. A. 772, 69 Am. St. Rep. 128; State v. Wood, 155 Mo. 425, 56 S. W. 474, 48 L. R. A. 596; Flaherty v. Fleming, 58 W. Va. 669, 52 S. E. 857, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 461. So enforcement of contempt proceedings will not be enjoined; Sanders v. Metcalf, 1 Tenn. Ch. 419; Tyler v. Hamersley, 44 Conn. 419, 26 Am. Rep. 471; nor impeachment of city officers, where the power to impeach is given by charter; State v. Judges of Civil Dist. Court, 35 La. Ann. 1075.

There are cases, however, which form an exception to the general rule, in which it has been held that criminal acts may be restrained by injunction. In In re Sawyer, 124 U. S. 200, 8 Sup. Ct. 482, 31 L. Ed. 402, Field, J., says: "In many cases proceedings criminal in their character, taken by individuals or organized bodies of men, tending, if carried out to despoil one of his property or other rights, may be enjoined by a court of equity." This is on the ground that the action sought to be enjoined is in the nature of a fraudulent use or an abuse of legal proceedings where the rights of the applicant for an injunction are clear, and the proceedings are obviously nothing but a circuitous method of depriving him of his property, or where municipal authorities are in fact attacking the vested property rights of individuals or corporations; Georgia Ry. & Elec. Co. v. Oakland City, 129 Ga. 576, 59 S. E. 296, where it was held that as a clear right was being invaded under an invalid ordinance, an injunction, might be granted, not against the proceeding altogether but against the excessive multiplicity of prosecutions. And injunctions were granted where a city attempted unlawfully to destroy a railroad franchise which it had no right to revoke, by means of a quasi criminal ordinance; Port of Mobile v. R. Co., 84 Ala. 115, 4 South. 106, 5 Am. St. Rep. 342; also where a city sought, by threatening arrest and prosecution of its employees, to prevent a railroad company from fencing a strip of land forming a part of its right of way but which it was sought to claim as a street; Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Atlanta, 118 Ga. 486, 45 S. E. 256; and city officials were enjoined from closing a club house under an invalid ordinance which declared that every place where liquor was sold was a nuisance; Canon City v. Manning, 43 Colo. 144, 95 Pac. 537, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 272. But an injunction was refused against a county attorney for prosecuting salesmen for the sale of alcohol to druggists for use as a drug, on the ground that such sales were not in violation of the law, and that it was a question for the criminal court; Greiner-Kelley Drug Co. v. Truett, 97 Tex. 377, 79 S. W. 4.

So an injunction is sometimes granted to prevent an illegal action which is also a crime. The indictment is a punitive and not a preventive remedy and therefore does not oust the jurisdiction of equity; State v. Maury, 2 Del. Ch. 141; or it may be granted against acts which are indictable when they make a continuing injury to property or business; Vegetahn v. Guntner, 167 Mass. 92, 44 N. E. 1077, 35 L. R. A. 722, 57 Am. St. Rep. 443. This comparatively recent development of equity jurisdiction is now comparatively well settled. Its efficiency has been in preventing the evils of strikes. See Judge Taft's Address, Report of Amer. Bar Ass'n, 1895, p. 265; 6 L. R. Eq. 551; Cœur d'Alene Consolidated & Min. Co. v. Miners' Union, 51 Fed. 260, 19 L. R. A. 382; Toledo, A. A. & N. M. Ry. Co. v. Pennsylvania Co., 54 Fed. 730, 19 L. R. A. 387; Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. R. Co., 60 Fed. 803; Arthur v. Oakes, 63 Fed. 310, 11 C. C. A. 209, 25 L. R. A. 414; U. S. v. Agler, 62 Fed. 824; Hamilton-Brown Shoe Co. v. Saxey, 131 Mo. 212, 32 S. W. 1106, 52 Am. St. Rep. 622; In re Debs, 158 U. S. 564, 15 Sup. Ct. 900, 39 L. Ed. 1092; 33 Am. L. Reg. (N. S.) 609.

An injunction has also been granted to restrain a prize fight; Columbian Athletic Club v. State, 143 Ind. 98, 40 N. E. 914, 28 L. R. A. 727, 52 Am. St. Rep. 407; 35 Am. L. Reg. (N. S.) 100; an injunction will lie to restrain railroad employees from acts of violence and intimidation and from enforcing rules of labor unions resulting in irreparable injury to the company and the public, such as those requiring an arbitrary strike without cause; Toledo, A. A. & N. M. Ry. Co. v. Pennsylvania Co., 54 Fed. 746, 19 L. R. A. 395. And also to restrain a railroad company and its employees from refusing to interchange interstate commerce, freight, and traffic facilities with a connecting line of railway; Toledo, A. A. & N. M. Ry. Co. v. Pennsylvania Co., 54 Fed. 730, 19 L. R. A. 387.

An injunction will be granted to restrain one from inducing a breach of a contract of employment; Employing Printers' Club v. Doctor Blosser Co., 122 Ga. 509, 50 S. E. 353, 69 L. R. A. 90, 106 Am. St. Rep. 137, 2 Ann. Cas. 694; Flaccus v. Smith, 199 Pa. 133, 48 Atl. 894, 54 L. R. A. 640, 85 Am. St. Rep. 779; [1903] 2 K. B. 545; Beekman v. Marsters, 195 Mass. 205, 80 N. E. 817, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 201, 122 Am. St. Rep. 232, 11 Ann. Cas. 332, where it is said, "No case has been cited which holds that a right to compete justifies a defendant in intentionally inducing a third person to take away from the plaintiff his contractual rights"; and in [1902] 2 K. B. 86, in discussing the rights of a labor union to induce the plaintiff's employers to break their contract of apprenticeship with him, it is said: "The plaintiffs have a cause of action against the defendants, unless the court is satisfied when they interfered with the contractual right of the plaintiff, the defendants had a sufficient justification for their interference. I think their sufficient justification for interference with plaintiff's right must be an equal or superior right in themselves, and that no one can legally excuse himself to a man of whose contract he has procured a breach on the ground that he acted on a wrong understanding of his own rights, or without malice or bona fide, or in the best interests of himself, nor even that he acted as an altruist, seeking the good of another and careless of his own advantage."

So a malicious interference with an existing contract will be restrained; American Law Book Co. v. Edward Thompson Co., 41 Misc. 396, 84 N. Y. Supp. 225; or an attempt to induce a breach of a contract for the exclusive sale of a certain article within a certain territory; New York Phonograph Co. v. Jones, 123 Fed. 197; or one for the sale of manufactured articles under certain restrictions either as to the price on a re-sale or as to the manner of their use; Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. Goldthwaite, 133 Fed. 794.

But it has been held that, where defendants maliciously and by slanderous representations induced their son to break an engagement of marriage with the plaintiff, the plaintiff had no right of action against the defendants; Leonard v. Whetstone, 34 Ind. App. 383, 68 N. E. 197, 107 Am. St. Rep. 252.

The granting of an injunction is not limited to a case where damages could not be recovered in an action at law; Schuyler v. Curtis, 15 N. Y. Supp. 787; but as a general rule it will not be granted where the party may be compensated in damages; Lewis v. Lumber Co., 99 N. C. 11, 5 S. E. 19.

In England and here this writ was formerly used as the means of enforcing their decisions, orders, and decrees. But subsequent statutes have in most cases given to courts of equity the power of enforcing their decrees by the ordinary process of execution against the property of the party; so that an injunction to enforce the performance of a decree is now seldom necessary. See DECREE; WRIT OF ASSISTANCE.

Injunctions may be used to restrain the commencement or the continuance of proceedings in foreign courts, upon the same principles upon which they are used to restrain proceedings at law in courts of the same state or country where such injunction is granted, the jurisdiction in this class of cases, however, being purely in personam; 3 Myl. & K. 104; Story, Eq. Jur. § 899; High, Inf. § 103; Bisph. Eq. 424. But a state court will not grant an injunction to stay proceedings at law previously commenced in a federal court. But it is otherwise when the state court has first acquired jurisdiction;

Home Ins. Co. v. Howell, 24 N. J. Eq. 238; Akerly v. Vilas, 15 Wis. 401; Knowlton v. Steamship Co., 53 N. Y. 76. Nor will a federal court grant an injunction to stay proceedings at law previously commenced in a state court, except where such injunction may be authorized by any law relating to proceedings in bankruptcy; Dial v. Reynolds, 96 U. S. 340, 24 L. Ed. 644; such suit being prohibited by U. S. R. S. § 720. As to what suits to enjoin state officers are suits against the state, see STATE.

And upon the ground of comity, as well as from principles of public policy, the equity courts of one state will not grant an injunction to stay proceedings previously commenced in a court of a sister state, where the courts of such sister state have the power to afford the party applying for the injunction the equitable relief to which he is entitled; Harris v. Pullman, 84 Ill. 20, 25 Am. Rep. 416; the power exists but could not be exercised where the court of law has concurrent jurisdiction and first assumed it, unless there be some special equity; Bank of Bel lows Falls v. R. Co., 28 Vt. 470; but in a proper case, the equity courts of one state can restrain persons within their jurisdiction from the prosecution of suits in another state; Cole v. Cunningham, 133 U. S. 107, 10 Sup. Ct. 269, 33 L. Ed. 538; Bigelow v. Smelting Co., 74 N. J. Eq. 457, 71 Atl. 153.

A very strong case should be made out to warrant a court of equity in interfering with a judgment at law; Hines v. Beers, 76 Ga. 9; Whitehill v. Butler, 51 Ark. 341, 11 S. W. 477; but it will enjoin a judgment at law if the matters set up in the bill, as a ground of relief, constitute equities unavailable as a defence in the action at law; Johnson v. Christian, 128 U. S. 374, 9 Sup. Ct. 87, 32 L. Ed. 412; no injunction against proceedings at law will issue where the plaintiff has a good defence at law; Cruikshank v. Bidwell, 176 U. S. 73, 20 Sup. Ct. 280, 44 L. Ed. 377; Clark v. Reeder, 40 Fed. 513. An injunction will lie to restrain a multiplicity of suits; Blindell v. Hagan, 54 Fed. 40. See MULTIPLICITY.

Established principles of equity jurisdiction are: (1) That one may not be enjoined from doing lawful acts to protect and enforce his rights of property or of person, unless his acts to that effect are clearly shown to be done unnecessarily, not for the purpose of preserving and enforcing his rights, but maliciously to vex, annoy and injure another; and (2) that where the injury to the applicant, if the preliminary injunction is refused, will be probably greater than the injury to the opponent if it is granted, it should be issued; while if the contrary is the probable result the application for it should be denied; Kryptok Co. v. Lens Co., 190 Fed. 767, 111 C. C. A. 495, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1, citing Russell v. Farley, 105 U. S. 433, 26 L. Ed.

1060; Shubert v. Woodward, 167 Fed. 47, 92 C. C. A. 509; Blount v. Societe, 53 Fed. 98, 3 C. C. A. 455.

An injunction bill is usually sworn to by the complainant, or is verified by the oath of some other person who is cognizant of the facts and charges contained in such bill, so far at least as relates to the allegations in the bill upon which the application for the preliminary injunction is based. And an order allowing such injunction is thereupon obtained by a special application, either with or without notice to the party enjoined and with or without security to such party, as the law or the rules and practice of the court may have prescribed in particular classes of cases; Perry v. Parker, 1 W. & M. 280, Fed. Cas. No. 11,010. Unless a preliminary injunction is to be applied for, a bill ordinarily need not be sworn to.

Equity rule 73 (U. S. S. C., 33 Sup. Ct. xxxix) provides that no temporary restraining order shall be made unless upon affidavit or a verified bill.

The bill must disclose a primary equity in aid of which this secondary remedy is asked; Washington v. Emery, 57 N. C. 29; Smith v. Lard, 28 Ga. 585; Pittman v. Robicheau, 14 La. Ann. 108.

Where the plaintiff has slept on his rights and allowed the alleged wrong to exist for a long time, he is not entitled to an injunction; Morris v. Edwards, 62 Tex. 205; as where the plaintiff had permitted the completion of the building which he sought to enjoin; Orne v. Fridenberg, 143 Pa. 487, 22 Atl. 832, 24 Am. St. Rep. 567; and where the plaintiff who was the owner of land bounded by a highway, permitted a railway to be built on the highway; Planet Property & Financial Co. v. Ry. Co., 115 Mo. 613, 22 S. W. 616. But it is otherwise where the plaintiff seeks the aid of an injunction for the protection of his legal rights, there being laches, but nothing to constitute an estoppel; Syracuse Solar Salt Co. v. R. Co., 67 Hun 153, 22 N. Y. Supp. 321. But delay in bringing suit is not a defence if it appear that matters still remain in statu quo; 2 Sim. N. S. 78. An injunction in a patent case will not be granted where, by reason of the plaintiff's delay, the defendant would be subjected to special hardship; Ney Mfg. Co. v. Drill Co., 56 Fed. 152; nor where the plaintiff has been guilty of misrepresentations as to his goods covered by a trademark; Manhattan Medicine Co. v. Wood, 108 U. S. 218, 2 Sup. Ct. 436, 27 L. Ed. 706; Joseph v. Macowsky, 96 Cal. 518, 31 Pac. 914, 19 L. R. A. 53. An injunction will not be granted when the plaintiff's right is doubtful; Babcock & Wilcox Co. v. Exposition Co., 54 Fed. 214; Preston v. Smith, 26 Fed. 884; nor, it has been held, where the right on which it is claimed is, as a matter of law, unsettled; Citizens' Coach Co. v. R. Co., 29

N. J. Eq. 299; Delaware, Lackawanna & W. R. Co. v. Transit Co., 43 N. J. Eq. 71, 10 Atl. 490.

Formerly the plaintiff could not obtain relief by injunction until his rights had been settled at law; Gardner v. Newburgh, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 162, 7 Am. Dec. 526; but this doctrine is not now maintained.

Injunctions are not granted where complainant's rights are not clear, and where an injury more or less irreparable is not likely to result unless defendants are enjoined; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Transit Co., 45 N. J. Eq. 50, 17 Atl. 146, 6 L. R. A. 855.

An injunction is ordinarily preventive, and will not be granted to correct a wrong already done or restore to a party rights of which he has been deprived; Com'rs of Highways v. Deboe, 43 Ill. App. 25; East Saginaw St. Ry. v. Wildman, 58 Mich. 286, 25 N. W. 193.

There must be at least a reasonable probability of injury to the plaintiff in order to justify an injunction; Genet v. Canal Co. & Co., 122 N. Y. 505, 25 N. E. 922; Lorenz v. Waldron, 96 Cal. 243, 31 Pac. 54; a mere threat of injury is not ordinarily a sufficient ground; Bond v. Wool, 107 N. C. 139, 12 S. E. 281; Johnson Railroad Signal Co. v. Signal Co., 55 Fed. 487, 5 C. C. A. 204. There must be a well-grounded apprehension of immediate injury; Potter v. Street Ry., 83 Mich. 285, 47 N. W. 217, 10 L. R. A. 176; Ruge v. Fish Co., 25 Fla. 656, 6 South. 489; Sherman v. Clark, 4 Nev. 142, 97 Am. Dec. 516. It is not necessary to prove that a wrong has actually been committed; where rights had been infringed, and the party has good reason to believe they will be infringed, an injunction will issue; Poppenhusen v. Comb Co., 4 Blatch. 184, Fed. Cas. No. 11,281. A bill will lie for an injunction, if a patent right has been admitted, upon the well-grounded proof of an intention to violate the right; Woodworth v. Stone, 3 Story, 749, Fed. Cas. No. 18,021. A bill in equity will lie for an injunction to prevent an anticipated infringement of a patent, no infringement having actually occurred; Sherman v. Nutt, 35 Fed. 149; where there was no proof of actual sales, but the defendant had exhibited his lamps at a fair, and distributed circulars to the public and otherwise advertised his lamps for sale, it was held that if sales had not actually been made, such a wrong was threatened, and that was sufficient to call for an injunction; White v. Heath, 10 Fed. 291. Where the defendant had formerly been engaged in infringing, the mere fact that since the commencement of the suit he had ceased to do so and did not threaten to renew his sales, is not an answer to an application for a preliminary injunction to restrain the continuance or renewal of such infringement; Potter v. Crowell, 3 Fish. Pat. Cas. 112, Fed. Cas. No. 11,323.

An injunction writ should contain upon its face sufficient to inform the party enjoined of what he is restrained from doing or from permitting to be done by those who are under his control, without the necessity of his resorting to the complainant's bill; Summers v. Farish, 10 Cal. 347.

Where a preliminary injunction is needed, the complainant's bill should contain a proper prayer for such process; Walker v. Devereau, 4 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 229; Sullivan v. Judah, id. 444; 3 Sim. 273. Damages for breach of covenant may be decreed in conjunction with relief by injunction; Stofflet v. Stofflet, 160 Pa. 529, 28 Atl. 857. A court of equity may impose any terms in its discretion as a condition of granting or continuing an injunction; Myers v. Block, 120 U. S. 206, 7 Sup. Ct. 525, 30 L. Ed. 642.

The remedy of the party injured by the violation of an injunction by the party enjoined is by an application to the court to punish the party enjoined for contempt in disobeying the process of the court; People v. McKane, 78 Hun 154, 28 N. Y. Supp. 981; Lake Erie & W. Ry. Co. v. Bailey, 61 Fed. 494.

To render a person amenable to an injunction, it is neither necessary that he be a party to the suit or served with a copy of it, so long as he appears to have had actual notice; Ex parte Lennon, 166 U. S. 548, 17 Sup. Ct. 658, 41 L. Ed. 1110; and a stranger with notice or knowledge of its terms, is bound thereby, and may be punished for contempt for violating its provision; State v. Lavery, 31 Or. 77, 49 Pac. 852; Garrigan v. U. S., 163 Fed. 16, 89 C. C. A. 494, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1295; O'Brien v. People, 216 Ill. 354, 75 N. E. 108, 108 Am. St. Rep. 219, 3 Ann. Cas. 966.

Where trustees of a friendly society who had been enjoined from distributing certain funds, resigned, and their successors, with notice of the injunction, proceeded to make the forbidden distribution, both sets of trustees were held to be in contempt and were committed; 51 L. J. Ch. 414. See 66 L. T. Ch. D. 267.

Where the complainant in an injunction case after its issue contracted with the defendant in reference to the subject matter in a way inconsistent with the injunction, such contract would relieve from contempt for violating it; Howard v. Durand, 36 Ga. 346, 91 Am. Dec. 767; Com. v. Ward, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. 479; James v. Mayrant, Harp. Eq. (S. C.) 180; Rodgers v. Nowill, 17 Jur. 111; Kempson v. Kempson, 61 N. J. Eq. 303, 48 Atl. 244; but a mere acquiescence in the violation of the injunction was held insufficient; Bond v. Pennsylvania Co., 126 Fed. 749, 61 C. C. A. 355; and a mere offer by an agent of the complainant to purchase an article which the defendant is enjoined from selling in order to ascertain whether the injunction is being violated, is not such an invitation to violate it as to relieve from the contempt; Ex parte Cash, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 623, 99 S. W. 1118, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 304, 123 Am. St. Rep. 865. The mere consent or solicitation of one party to the violation of the injunction by the other will not justify it, but there must be some action by the court; Bowers v. Von Schmidt, 87 Fed. 293. See CONTEMPT.

Lord Cairns' Act (21 & 22 Vict. c. 27, § 2) conferred upon the Court of Chancery jurisdiction to award damages in lieu of an injunction. It enacts that "in all cases in which the Court of Chancery has jurisdiction to entertain an application for an injunction * * * against the commission or continuance of any wrongful act * * * it shall be lawful for the same court, if it shall think fit, to award damages to the party injured, either in addition to or in substitution for such injunction." "Such jurisdiction ought not to be exercised except under very exceptional circumstances. I will not attempt to specify them or lay down rules for the exercise of judicial discretion. It is sufficient to refer by way of example to trivial and occasional nuisances; cases in which a plaintiff has shown that he only wants money; vexatious and oppressive cases; and cases where the plaintiff has so conducted himself as to render it unjust to give him more than pecuniary relief. In all such cases as these and in all others where an action for damages is really an adequate remedy—as where the acts complained of are already finished—an injunction can be properly refused"; Per Lindley, L. J., in [1895] 1 Ch. 287, 316.

In this country there has been no legislation by Congress except as to one class of cases, and the federal courts of equity have no inherent power to ascertain the damages sustained by reason of tortious acts untended with profits to the wrong doer. It was said, in relation to this subject, that it required an act of parliament to change the law in England, and the only modification to be found in the federal law is with respect to the infringement of patents which has been effected by direct act of congress. R. S. § 4921; Corbin v. Taussig, 137 Fed. 151.

In some cases in the state courts damages have been settled as an incident to injunctive relief "under special circumstances"; Reese v. Wright, 98 Md. 272, 56 Atl. 976; or the right to an account for past damages as an incident to the injunction suit to restrain a continuing trespass; Lonsdale Co. v. Woonsocket, 25 R. I. 428, 56 Atl. 448; Roberts v. Vest, 126 Ala. 355, 28 South. 412; or damages for past injury in a suit to restrain further detention of land; Busby v. Mitchell, 29 S. C. 447, 7 S. E. 618; and in one case past damages for a nuisance were held recoverable under a practice act in an injunction suit; Platt v. City of Waterbury, 72 Conn. 531, 45 Atl. 154, 48 L. R. A. 691, 77 Am. St. Rep. 335. But it was held that damages for past overflows of land, the right to recover which was complete at the time of filing the bill and which could be enforced in a single action at law, could not be recovered in a suit to enjoin future overflows; Stephenson v. Morgan, 64 N. J. Eq. 219, 53 Atl. 677; and where the suit was to enjoin a trespass, the judgment could only cover such damages as had accrued and not permanent ones; Stowers v. Gilbert, 156 N. Y. 600, 51 N. E. 282; and in one state it was held that where the Court of Chancery, prior to the adoption of the constitution, had jurisdiction in a case independently of any statute, the legislature could not confer jurisdiction to adjudicate damages as incident to an injunction against a trespass; McMillan v. Wiley, 45 Fla. 487, 33 South. 993.

A remainderman or reversioner in a suit to enjoin waste may, to avoid multiplicity of actions, have damages as at law; Williamson v. Jones, 43 W. Va. 562, 27 S. E. 411, 38 L. R. A. 694, 64 Am. St. Rep. 891; Corbin v. Taussig, supra. But as a rule damages are not recoverable in equity; see Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 112, 178.

In many jurisdictions in a suit for injunction it is held that affirmative relief may be given to the defendant as well as an injunction relating to the same matter; Sternberg v. Wolff, 56 N. J. Eq. 389, 39 Atl. 397, 39 L. R. A. 762, 67 Am. St. Rep. 494; Collinsville Granite Co. v. Phillips, 123 Ga. 830, 51 S. E. 666; Smith v. Richardson, 1 Utah, 245.

Equity will restrain the commission of injuries outside of its territorial jurisdiction, by a decree in personam, where it has acquired jurisdiction over the defendant. Such are suits for the specific performance of contracts, for the enforcement of trusts, for relief on the ground of fraud, for settling partnership accounts; Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1318. Penn v. Lord Baltimore, 1 Ves. Sen. 144; Brown v. Desmond, 100 Mass. 267; Newton v. Bronson, 13 N. Y. 587, 67 Am. Dec. 89; Tardy v. Morgan, 3 McLean, 358, Fed. Cas. No. 13,752; Potter v. Hollister, 45 N. J. Eq. 508, 18 Atl. 204; and where a resident of another state having no property in the state of the forum is a plaintiff in an action at law, he is so far amenable to the jurisdiction of the courts of that state that an injunction bill may be entertained against him; Chalmers v. Hack, 19 Me. 124; a defendant may be enjoined from committing waste upon property situated abroad; Marshall v. Turnbull, 32 Fed. 124. But where the suit is strictly local, the subject-matter is specific property, and the relief such that, if granted, it must act directly upon the subject-matter, and not upon the person of the defendant, the jurisdiction must be exercised in the place where the subject-matter is situated, as a suit to abate a nuisance; Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1318; Miss. & Mo. R. R. Co. v. Ward, 2 Black (U. S.) 485, 17 L. Ed. 311.

An injunction may issue to restrain a party over whom the court has jurisdiction from bringing a suit in a foreign state which would result in oppression; Royal League v. Kavanagh, 233 Ill. 175, 84 N. E. 178. The rule has been applied to a divorce suit; Kempson v. Kempson, 63 N. J. Eq. 783, 52 Atl. 360, 625, 58 L. R. A. 484, 92 Am. St. Rep. 682; to a patent suit where suits in another jurisdiction were enjoined until the pending cause should be decided; Commercial Acetylene Co. v. Lighting Co., 159 Fed. 935, 87 C. C. A. 206; and to a suit for the administration of a trust fund, where the fund and all the contesting creditors were within the state; O'Connor v. Root, 130 Ia. 553, 107 N. W. 608; also to a case where the foreign jurisdiction was sought in order to evade the laws of the domicile; Sandage v. Mfg. Co., 142 Ind. 148, 41 N. E. 380, 34 L. R. A. 363, 51 Am. St. Rep. 165; Miller v. Gittings, 85 Md. 601, 37 Atl. 372, 37 L. R. A. 654, 60 Am. St. Rep. 352; and to a case in which insolvency proceedings were pending and a creditor sought to prosecute attachment proceedings in another state; Hazen v. Bank, 70 Vt. 543, 41 Atl. 1046, 67 Am. St. Rep. 680; and where a party had accepted a legacy under a will and threatened proceedings in another state attacking the will; Rader v. Stubblefield, 43 Wash. 334, 86 Pac. 560, 10 Ann. Cas. 20; or where a party had recognized the validity of an assessment for creditors and was about to seek a preference over other creditors by proceedings in another state; Kendall v. Coke Co., 182 Pa. 1, 37 Atl. 823, 61 Am. St. Rep. 688; also where the foreign suit involved the same cause of action and was intended to reach practically the same result; Webster v. Ins. Co., 62 Misc. 345, 115 N. Y. Supp. 892; United Cigarette Mach. Co. v. Wright, 156 Fed. 244. Where the court could not enforce its decree, no injunction will be granted; Hawley v. Bank, 134 Ill. App. 96; American School-Furniture Co. v. J. M. Sauder Co., 106 Fed. 731. See a full note in 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 267; and see Kessler v. Eldred, 206 U. S. 285, 27 Sup. Ct. 611, 51 L. Ed. 1065.

Where equity has issued a writ of ne exeat, it may enjoin a suit in another state for false imprisonment under the writ; Gooding v. Reid, Murdock & Co., 177 Fed. 684, 101 C. C. A. 310.

In the Judicial Code of March 3, 1911, 36 Stat. 1087, it is provided in section 264 that injunctions may be granted by any justice of the supreme court or any judge of a district court in cases in which they might be granted by such courts respectively. But applications for an injunction or restraining order in a cause pending in the circuit to which he is allotted shall not be heard by a justice of the supreme court elsewhere than within such circuit unless it is otherwise stipulated in writing by the parties. Section 265 provides that no injunction shall be granted by any federal court to stay proceedings in any state court except in cases where it is authorized in bankruptcy proceedings; and (by section 266) no interlocutory injunction suspending or restraining the enforcement of a state law, by restraining the action of a state officer in its enforcement, shall be granted upon the ground of the unconstitutionality of such statute, except upon application presented to a justice of the supreme court or to a circuit or district judge and it must be heard and determined by three judges of whom at least one shall be a supreme court or circuit judge; and an appeal may be taken from the order made in such case direct to the supreme court. Section 263 authorizes the granting of a restraining order upon notice of motion for an injunction where there appears to be danger of irreparable injury by reason of delay.

The equity rules (No. 73, 33 Sup. Ct. xxxix) provide that no preliminary injunction shall be granted without notice, nor shall any temporary restraining order unless it clearly appears that immediate and irreparable loss or damage will result before the matter can be heard on notice in which case a temporary restraining order may be granted without notice, but there must be a hearing in not more than ten days with precedence of all other matters not of the same character. The opposite party may move to dissolve the temporary restraining order on two days notice and the matter shall be heard as expeditiously as possible. Rule 74 provides that on appeal from a final decree granting or dissolving an injunction, the justice or judge allowing the same may suspend, modify or restore the injunction during the pendency of the appeal upon such terms as he may consider proper; and an injunction, when granted, independent of a statute, will usually not be modified or dissolved except by the judge who granted it; Klein v. Fleetford, 35 Fed. 98. It is provided in section 36 of the judicial Code that all injunctions in a state court in cases afterwards removed to a federal court, remain in full force until dissolved or modified.

As to injunctions in particular cases, see the title of the particular subject to which the remedy is to be applied; and as to injunctions against enforcing an illegal contract, see full note in 48 L. R. A. 842.

INJURIA ABSQUE DAMNO (Lat.). Wrong without damage. Wrong done without damage or loss will not sustain an action. The following cases illustrate this principle: 1

Ld. Raym. 940, 948; 2 B. & P. 86; 5 Co. 72; 9 id. 113; Bull. N. P. 120.

INJURIOUS WORDS. In Louisiana. Slander, or libellous words.

INJURY (Lat. in, negative, jus, a right). A wrong or tort; cited in Woodruff v. Min. Co., 18 Fed. 753, 781.

Any legal wrong which will give a cause of action to the one whose rights, person or property are injured thereby. Penn. R. Co. v. Merchant, 119 Pa. 561, 13 Atl. 690, 4 Am. St. Rep. 659 (as used in Pa. Constitution).

Absolute injuries are injuries to those rights which a person possesses as being a member of society.

Private injuries are infringements of the private or civil rights belonging to individuals considered as individuals.

Public injuries are breaches and violations of rights and duties which affect the whole community as a community.

Injuries to personal property are the unlawful taking and detention thereof from the owner; and other injuries are some damage affecting the same while in the claimant's possession or that of a third person, or injuries to his reversionary interests.

Injuries to real property are ousters, trespasses, nuisances, waste, subtraction of rent, disturbances of right of way, and the like.

Relative injuries are injuries to those rights which a person possesses in relation to the person who is immediately affected by the wrongful act done.

It is obvious that the divisions overlap each other, and that the same act may be, for example, a relative, a private, and a public injury at once. For many injuries of this character the offender may be obliged to suffer punishment for the public wrong and to recompense the sufferer for the particular loss which he has sustained. The distinction is more commonly marked by the use of the terms civil injuries to denote private injuries, and of crimes, misdemeanors, etc., to denote the public injury done: though not always; as, for example, in case of a public nuisance which may be also a private nuisance.

Injuries arise in three ways: first, by non-feasance, or the not doing what was a legal obligation, or duty, or contract, to perform; second, misfeasance, or the performance in an improper manner of an act which it was either the party's duty or his contract to perform; third, malfeasance, or the unjust performance of some act which the party had no right or which he had contracted not to do.

The remedies are different as the injury affects private individuals or the public.

When the injuries affect a private right and a private individual, although often also affecting the public, there are three descriptions of remedies: first, the preventive, such as defence, resistance, recaption, abatement of nuisance, surety of the peace, injunction, etc.; second, remedies for compensation, which may be by arbitration, suit, action, or summary proceedings before a justice of the peace; third, proceedings for punishment, as by indictment, or summary proceedings before a justice. When the injury is such as to affect the public, it becomes a crime, misdemeanor, or offence, and the party may be punished by indictment, or summary conviction for the public injury, and by civil action at the suit of the party for the private wrong. But in cases of felony the remedy by action for the private injury is generally suspended until the party particularly injured has fulfilled his duty to the public by prosecuting the offender for the public crime; and in cases of homicide the remedy is merged in the felony; 1 Chitty, Pr. 10; Ayliffe, Pand. 592.

There are many injuries for which the law affords no remedy. In general, it interferes only when there has been a visible physical injury inflicted, while it leaves almost totally unprotected the whole class of the most malignant mental injuries and sufferings, unless in a few cases where, by a fiction, it supposes some pecuniary loss, and sometimes affords compensation to wounded feelings. A parent, for example, cannot sue, in that character, for an injury inflicted on his child, and when his own domestic happiness has been destroyed, unless the fact will sustain the allegation that the daughter was the servant of her father, and that by reason of such seduction he lost the benefit of her services; but the proof of loss of service has reference only to the form of the remedy. And when the action is sustained in point of form, damages may be given not only for the loss of service, but also for all that the plaintiff can feel from the nature of the injury; Phelin v. Kenderdine, 20 Pa. 354; Lavery v. Crooke, 52 Wis. 612, 9 N. W. 599, 38 Am. Rep. 768. Another instance may be mentioned. A party cannot recover damages for verbal slander in many cases: as, when the facts published are true; for the defendant would justify, and the party injured must fail. Nor will the law punish criminally the author of verbal slander imputing even the most infamous crimes, unless done with intent to extort a chattel, money, or valuable thing. The law presumes, perhaps unnaturally enough, that a man is incapable of being alarmed or affected by such injuries to his feelings. See 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 591.

The true and sufficient reason for these rules would seem to be the uncertain character of the injury inflicted, the impossibility of compensation, and the danger, supposing a pecuniary compensation to be attempted, that injustice would be done under the excitement of the case. The sound principle, as the experience of the law amply indicates, is to inflict a punishment for crime, but not put up for sale, by the agency of a court of justice, those wounded feelings which would constitute the ground of the action.

The rule as indicated above has its limitations, however, in particular cases; Wyman v. Leavitt, 71 Me. 227, 36 Am. Rep. 303. Thus, it has been held that, when bodily pain is caused, mental pain follows necessarily, and the sufferer is entitled to damages for the mental pain as well as for the bodily; Lawrence v. R. Co., 29 Conn. 390; Fairchild v. Stage Co., 13 Cal. 599; Pennsylvania & O. Canal Co. v. Graham, 63 Pa. 290, 3 Am. Rep. 549; Ford v. Jones, 62 Barb. (N. Y.) 484; but damages for the mental suffering of one person, on account of physical injury to another, are too remote to be given by court or jury; 2 C. & P. 292.

There is a material distinction between damages and injury. Injury is the wrongful act or tort which causes loss or harm to another. Damages are allowed as an indemnity to the person who suffers loss or harm from the injury. The word injury denotes the illegal act, the term damages means the sum recoverable as amends for the wrong; City of North Vernon v. Voegler, 103 Ind. 319, 2 N. E. 821.

In Civil Law. A delict committed in contempt or outrage of any one, whereby his body, his dignity, or his reputation is maliciously injured. Voet, Com. ad Pand. 47, t. 10, n. 1.

A real injury is inflicted by any act by which a person's honor or dignity is affected: as, striking one with a cane, or even aiming a blow without striking; spitting in one's face; assuming a coat of arms, or any other mark of distinction proper to another, etc. The composing and publishing defamatory libels may be reckoned of this kind; Erskine, Pr. 4. 4. 45.

A verbal injury, when directed against a private person, consists in the uttering contumelious words, which tend to injure his reputation by making him little or ridiculous. Where the offensive words are uttered in the heat of a dispute and spoken to the person's face, the law does not presume any malicious intention in the utterer, whose resentment generally subsides with his passion; and yet even in that case the truth of the injurious words seldom absolves entirely from punishment. Where the injurious expressions have a tendency to blacken one's moral reputation or fix some particular guilt upon him, and are deliberately repeated in different companies, or handed about in whispers to confidants, the crime then becomes slander, agreeably to the distinction of the Roman law; Dig. 15, § 12 de Injur.

INLAGARE, INLEGIARE. To restore to protection of law. Opposed to utlagare. Bract. lib. 3, tr. 2, c. 14, § 1; Du Cange.

INLAGATION. Restoration to the protection of law.

INLAGH. A man who is under the protection of the law, and not outlawed. Cowell.

INLAND. Within the same country. The demesne reserved for the use of the lord. Cowell. Inland, or domestic, navigation is that carried on in the interior of the country, and does not include that upon the great lakes; Moore v. Transp. Co., 24 How. (U. S.) 1, 16 L. Ed. 674; The Cotton Plant, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 577, 19 L. Ed. 983. As to what are inland bills of exchange, see BILLS OF EXCHANGE.

INMATE. One who dwells in a part of another's house, the latter dwelling at the same time in the said house. Kitch. 45 b; Com. Dig. Justices of the Peace (B 85); 1 B. & C. 578; 2 M. & R. 227; 2 Russ. Cr. 937; 1 M. & G. 83; Johnson v. Santa Clara County, 28 Cal. 545. See LODGER.

INN. A house where a traveller is furnished with everything he has occasion for while on his way. Bac. Abr. Inns (B); 3 B. & Ald. 283; Kisten v. Hildebrand, 9 B. Monr. (Ky.) 72, 48 Am. Dec. 416. A public house of entertainment for all who choose to visit it. Wintermute v. Clarke, 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 247; Fay v. Imp. Co., 93 Cal. 253, 26 Pac. 1099, 28 Pac. 943, 16 L. R. A. 188, 27 Am. St. Rep. 198; Foster v. State, 84 Ala. 451, 4 South. 833. A coffee-house or a mere eating-house is not an inn. To constitute an inn there must be some provision for the essential needs of a traveller upon his journey, namely, lodging as well as food; 13 Rep. 299, citing People v. Jones, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 316. See INNKEEPER.

INNAVIGABLE. A term applied in foreign insurance law to a vessel not navigable, through irremediable misfortune by a peril of the sea. The ship is relatively innavigable when it will require almost as much time and expense to repair her as to build a new one. Targa, 238, 256; Emerigon, to. 1, 577, 591; 3 Kent 323, n.

INNER BARRISTER. See BARRISTER.

INNER TEMPLE. See INNS OF COURT.

INNINGS. Lands gained from the sea by draining. Cunningham, Law Dict.; Callis, Sewers 38.

INNKEEPER. The keeper of a common inn for the lodging and entertainment of travellers and passengers, their horses and attendants, for a reasonable compensation. Bac. Abr. Inns, etc.; Story, Bailm. § 475. Any one who makes it his business to entertain travellers and passengers, and provide lodging and necessities for them, their horses and attendants, is an innkeeper. Edw. Bailm. § 450; even though the house is situated on enclosed grounds; Fay v. Imp. Co., 93 Cal. 253, 26 Pac. 1099, 28 Pac. 943, 16 L. R. A. 188, 27 Am. St. Rep. 198. But one who entertains strangers occasionally, although he may receive compensation for it, is not an innkeeper; State v. Matthews, 19 N. C. 424; Bonner v. Welborn, 7 Ga. 296; 1 Morr. 184.

See GUEST; BOARDER. It is not necessary that he should furnish accommodations for horses and carriages; 3 B. & Ald. 283; the keeper of a tavern; id.; and of a hotel; 2 Chitty 484; is an innkeeper. So is one who keeps a hotel on what is called the European plan, furnishing lodging to guests, and keeping an eating-house where they may purchase meals at their option; Krohn v. Sweeney, 2 Daly (N. Y.) 200. But the keeper of a mere restaurant is not an innkeeper if he only furnishes meals to his guests; Carpenter v. Taylor, 1 Hilt. (N. Y.) 193. Nor is the keeper of a coffee-house, nor of a boarding-house, nor lodging-house; 8 Co. 32; 2 E. & B. 144; Hall v. Pike, 100 Mass. 495; Jalie v. Cardinal, 35 Wis. 118. One who receives lodgers and boards them under a special contract for a limited time, or who lets rooms to guests by the day or week, and does not furnish them entertainment, is not an innkeeper; Cromwell v. Stephens, 2 Daly (N. Y.) 15. See Moore v. Development Co., 87 Cal. 483, 26 Pac. 92, 22 Am. St. Rep. 265. Where the plaintiff attended a ball given by an innkeeper, stabled his horse at the inn, drank and paid for liquors, and paid for his ticket of admission to the ball, it was held that the relationship of innkeeper and guest did not exist; Fitch v. Casler, 17 Hun (N. Y.) 126. Where one boarded with his family at a hotel in New York, paying a specified amount for his rooms, and an additional amount for board if he took his meals regularly, and if not, paying for whatever he ordered at the restaurant attached to the hotel, it was held that the innkeeper was liable for personal property stolen from the plaintiff's room; Hancock v. Rand, 17 Hun (N. Y.) 279 (criticized in 20 Alb. L. J. 64, citing many cases); and see Lusk v. Belote, 22 Minn. 468. Where one merely leaves his horse with an innkeeper, the relation of innkeeper and guest does not exist; Healey v. Gray, 68 Me. 489, 28 Am. Rep. 80; so where he leaves goods at the inn without indicating any intention to become a guest; Toub v. Schmidt, 60 Hun 409, 15 N. Y. Supp. 616; so when a guest paid his bill and left the inn, having deposited money with a clerk, to be kept till his return; Whitemore v. Haroldson, 2 Lea (Tenn.) 312. It terminates when the guest delivers his baggage to a porter to be checked for safe keeping, the porter having no authority to receive it, and pays his bill, and in his absence the baggage is stolen; Glenn v. Jackson, 93 Ala. 342, 9 South. 259, 12 L. R. A. 382.

The business of an innkeeper at common law is of a quasi public character invested with many privileges and burdened with many responsibilities; De Wolf v. Ford, 193 N. Y. 397, 86 N. E. 527, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 860, 127 Am. St. Rep. 969. They are not insurers of the safety of their guests. They are bound only to reasonable care. They are not liable for acts of their servants beyond the scope of their employment; Clancy v. Barker, 131 Fed. 161, 66 C. C. A. 469, 69 L. R. A. 653 (citing 47 L. J. C. P. 598; Weeks v. McNulty, 101 Tenn. 499, 48 S. W. 809, 43 L. R. A. 185, 70 Am. St. Rep. 693; Sheffer v. Willoughby, 163 Ill. 518, 45 N. E. 253, 34 L. R. A. 464, 54 Am. St. Rep. 483; Stanley v. Bircher's Ex'r, 78 Mo. 245, 248; Curtis v. Dinneen, 4 Dak. 245, 30 N. W. 148), Thayer, C. J., dissented upon the ground that the relation of an innkeeper to his guest is practically like that of a common carrier to a passenger, citing Clancy v. Barker, 71 Neb. 83, 98 N. W. 440, 103 N. W. 446, 69 L. R. A. 642, 115 Am. St. Rep. 559, 8 Ann. Cas. 682. He must protect a guest against third persons; a fortiori, he must protect him from injuries from his servants, and since the servants are provided, among other things for the purpose of protecting guests, every injury inflicted upon the guest by the servant, either intentionally or negligently, is a breach of his duty of protection and renders the innkeeper liable to the guest; Clancy v. Barker, 71 Neb. 83, 98 N. W. 440, 103 N. W. 446, 69 L. R. A. 642, 115 Am. St. Rep. 559, 8 Ann. Cas. 682; Curran v. Olson, 88 Minn. 307, 92 N. W. 1124, 60 L. R. A. 733, 97 Am. St. Rep. 517; contra, Rahmel v. Lehnendorff, 142 Cal. 681, 76 Pac. 659, 65 L. R. A. 88, 100 Am. St. Rep. 554. In Rommel v. Schambacher, 120 Pa. 579, 11 Atl. 779, 6 Am. St. Rep. 732, the same rule was applied where the assault (a practical joke) was by the plaintiff's drunken companion in a saloon, but in full view of the defendant. He is bound to take in and receive all travellers and way-faring persons, and to entertain them, if he can accommodate them, for a reasonable compensation; Wand Inns, 46; 3 B. & Ald. 285; 4 Exch. 367. See Willis v. McMahan, 89 Cal. 156, 26 Pac. 649. For a refusal to do so he is liable civilly and criminally; 7 C. & P. 213. While he must accept all proper persons if he has room, he need not assign a guest to any particular apartment; but a room once assigned to a guest is his until he gives it up, subject to the right of access of the innkeeper at all reasonable times and for all reasonable purposes; De Wolf v. Ford, 193 N. Y. 397, 86 N. E. 527, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 860, 127 Am. St. Rep. 969. If all rooms are full he need not receive guests; [1902] 1 K. B. 696.

It is no defence that the traveller did not tender the price of his entertainment, or that the guest was travelling on Sunday, or that the innkeeper had gone to bed, or that the guest refused to tell his name, otherwise if the guest was drunk, or was behaving in an improper manner; Com. v. Naylor, 34 Pa. 86; 7 C. & P. 213. He may enforce reasonable rules to prevent immorality, drunkenness or other offensive conduct, inconsistent with the proprieties of life; De Wolf

v. Ford, 193 N. Y. 397, 86 N. E. 527, 127 Am. St. Rep. 969, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 860. The innkeeper may demand prepayment; 9 Co. 87. He may not exclude persons from entering the inn and going into the public room on lawful business; Markham v. Brown, 8 N. H. 523, 31 Am. Dec. 209.

He must guard their goods with proper diligence. It has been held that he is liable only for the goods which are brought within the inn; 8 Co. 32; Scheffer v. Corson, 5 S. D. 233, 58 N. W. 555. A delivery of the goods into the personal custody of the innkeeper is not, however, necessary in order to make him responsible; for, although he may not know anything of such goods, he is bound to pay for them if they are stolen or carried away, even by an unknown person; Dig. 4, 9, 1; 3 B. & Ald. 283; 1 Sm. L. C. 47; Washburn v. Jones, 14 Barb. (N. Y.) 193; 8 Co. 32; Fay v. Imp. Co., 93 Cal. 253, 26 Pac. 1099, 28 Pac. 943, 16 L. R. A. 188, 27 Am. St. Rep. 198; Bowell v. De Wald, 2 Ind. App. 303, 28 N. E. 430, 50 Am. St. Rep. 240; Labold v. Hotel Co., 54 Mo. App. 567; Quinton v. Courtney, 2 N. C. 41; Houser v. Tully, 62 Pa. 92, 1 Am. Rep. 390. Thus, when a guest's luggage was, at his suggestion, taken to the commercial room, 8 B. & C. 9; and when a lady's reticule with money in it was left for a few minutes on a bed in her room; 2 B. & Ad. 803; the innkeeper was held liable; and if he receive the guest, the custody of the goods may be considered as an accessory to the principal contract, and the money paid for the apartments as extending to the care of the box and portmanteau; Jones, Bailm. 94; 1 Bla. Com. 430; 2 Kent 458. The particular responsibility of an innkeeper does not extend to goods lost or stolen from a room occupied by a guest for a purpose of business distinct from his accommodation as guest, such as the exhibition of samples of merchandise; Fisher v. Kelsey, 121 U. S. 383, 13 Sup. Ct. 929, 30 L. Ed. 930. The liability of an innkeeper is the same in character and extent with that of a common carrier; Berkshire Woollen Co. v. Proctor, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 417; Manning v. Wells, 9 Humphr. (Tenn.) 746, 51 Am. Dec. 688; Mateer v. Brown, 1 Cal. 221, 52 Am. Dec. 303; 8 B. & C. 9; Norcross v. Norcross, 53 Me. 163; Thickstun v. Howard, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 535.

He is an insurer of a guests's goods; De Wolf v. Ford, 193 N. Y. 397, 86 N. E. 527, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 860, 127 Am. St. Rep. 969; he owes the duty of safely keeping the property of his guests; Rockhill v. Hotel Co., 237 Ill. 98, 86 N. E. 740, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 576. Even where the plaintiff's horse and wagon containing goods of value were destroyed in the night by fire, the cause of which was unknown it was held that the innkeeper was liable; Hulett v. Swift, 33 N. Y. 571, 88 Am. Dec. 405; contra, Cutler v. Bonney, 30 Mich. 259, 18 Am. Rep. 127, n. See 6 L. R. A. 483, n. It is held that he is prima facie liable for the loss of goods; Rockhill v. Hotel Co., 237 Ill. 98, 86 N. E. 740, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 576; Watt v. Kilbury, 53 Wash. 446, 102 Pac. 403.

His liability does not cease as soon as the guest has paid his bill and left; the guest has a reasonable time to remove his baggage; Kaplan v. Titus, 64 Misc. 81, 117 N. Y. Supp. 944. An innkeeper is liable for a valise delivered to the hotel porter at leaving; Rockhill v. Hotel Co., 237 Ill. 98, 86 N. E. 740, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 576. He is liable for baggage entrusted by a guest to a hotel porter sent to a railroad station to solicit guests; Coskery v. Nagle, 83 Ga. 696, 10 S. E. 491, 6 L. R. A. 483, 20 Am. St. Rep. 333; but not if he changes his mind and does not go to the hotel; Tulane Hotel Co. v. Holohan, 112 Tenn. 214, 79 S. W. 113, 105 Am. St. Rep. 930, 2 Ann. Cas. 345; or merely goes there, receives a telegram and leaves without registering; L. R. 12 Q. B. Div. 27.

He is responsible for the acts of his domestics and servants, as well as for the acts of his other guests, if the goods are stolen or lost; Berkshire Woollen Co. v. Proctor, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 417; McDonald v. Edgerton, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 560; Labold v. Hotel Co., 54 Mo. App. 567; but he is not responsible for any tort or injury done by his servants or others to the person of his guest, without his own co-operation or consent; 8 Co. 32. But it has been held that he is liable to a female guest for a servant's unjustifiable acts in the course of his employment in forcing his way into her room while she was in scant attire, accusing her of immoral conduct and ordering her to leave the hotel; De Wolf v. Ford, 193 N. Y. 397, 86 N. E. 527, 127 Am. St. Rep. 969, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 860; he must exercise reasonable care that neither he nor his servants shall by uncivil, harsh, or cruel treatment, destroy the comfort or peace of the guest; id.

The innkeeper will be excused whenever the loss has occurred through the fault of the guest, the act of God, or of the public enemy; 4 M. & S. 306; Hadley v. Upshaw, 27 Tex. 547, 86 Am. Dec. 654; Elcox v. Hill, 98 U. S. 218, 25 L. Ed. 103. An omission on the part of the guest to lock his door will not necessarily prevent his recovery; 6 H. & N. 265; Classen v. Leopold, 2 Sweeny (N. Y.) 705. Where a guest was given a room temporarily and in his absence his baggage was placed in the hall, the innkeeper was held liable for its loss; [1891] 2 Q. B. 11. When the guest misleads the innkeeper as to the value of a package and thus throws him off his guard, it has been held that he cannot recover; Edw. Bailm. § 466. See Bendetson v. French, 46 N. Y. 266. The failure of a guest to inform an innkeeper that his valise placed in the cloak or baggage room, contains valuables, is not negligence; Bowell v. De Wald, 2 Ind. App. 303, 28 N. E. 430, 50 Am. St. Rep. 240; guest may retain personal custody of necessary wearing apparel and jewelry worn daily, for which the innkeeper becomes liable; Fay v. Imp. Co., 93 Cal. 253, 26 Pac. 1099, 28 Pac. 943, 16 L. R. A. 188, 27 Am. St. Rep. 198; a guest may recover for the loss of goods brought into the inn in the usual manner; Epps v. Hinds, 27 Miss. 657, 61 Am. Dec. 528; Sasseen v. Clark, 37 Ga. 242.

An innkeeper may make reasonable regulations as to the manner in which he will receive and keep goods; Orange County Bank v. Brown, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 85, 114, 24 Am. Dec. 129. He must furnish reasonable accommodations. See 8 M. & W. 269. When the proprietor of a hotel employs a servant to receive and keep the property of guests while at meals, his liability for the default of this servant in the custody of property so received is not affected by the fact that he has also provided a check-room for the safe-keeping of such property; Labold v. Hotel Co., 54 Mo. App. 567.

The innkeeper is entitled to a just compensation for his care and trouble in taking care of his guest and his property; and, to enable him to obtain this, the law invests him with some peculiar privileges, giving him a lien upon the goods brought into the inn by the guest, and, it has been said, upon the person of his guest (contra, 3 M. & W. 248), for his compensation; 3 B. & Ald. 287; see Mowers v. Fethers, 61 N. Y. 34, 19 Am. Rep. 244; Dunlap v. Thorne, 1 Rich. (S. C.) 213; McDaniels v. Robinson, 26 Vt. 335, 62 Am. Dec. 574; 3 M. & W. 248; Cook v. Kane, 13 Or. 482, 11 Pac. 226, 57 Am. Rep. 28; and this though the goods belong to a third person, if the innkeeper was ignorant of the fact; Schoul, Bailm. 326; 12 Q. B. 197; Young v. Kimball, 23 Pa. 193; Fox v. McGregor, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 41; Covington v. Newberger, 99 N. C. 523, 6 S. E. 205; Manning v. Hollenbeck, 27 Wis. 202; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Miller, 52 Minn. 516, 55 N. W. 56, 21 L. R. A. 229, 38 Am. St. Rep. 568; a lien was also held to attach upon the goods of the wife; 25 Q. B. Div. 491. Sewing machines were sent by his principal to a commercial traveller while he was at an inn, to be used in the course of business for sale to customers in the neighborhood. The innkeeper had express notice that they were the property of the employer but he received them as the baggage of the traveller, who left the inn without paying his bill; held that the innkeeper had a lien on the goods for the amount of the bill; [1895] 2 Q. B. 501. The court below considered that the question of knowledge was immaterial, because "the goods in question were of a kind which a commercial traveller would in the ordinary course carry about with him to the inns at which he put up as part of the regular apparatus of his calling, and which the innkeeper would consequently be bound to receive into his inn and to take care of while they were there."

At common law this lien could be enforced only by legal proceedings, and not by a sale; Fox v. McGregor, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 41; Edw. Bailm. § 476. This has been changed in New York by statute. As to detaining the horse of a guest, see Peet v. McGraw, 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 654; Mason v. Thompson, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 280, 20 Am. Dec. 471. The landlord may also bring an action for the recovery of his compensation. Where an innkeeper owes his guest for labor more than the guest owes for board, he has no lien; Hanlin v. Walters, 3 Colo. App. 519, 34 Pac. 686. An innkeeper's lien does not attach to goods in possession of one who is received as a boarder, and not as a guest or traveller; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Miller, 52 Minn. 516, 55 N. W. 56, 21 L. R. A. 229, 38 Am. St. Rep. 568.

An innkeeper in a town through which lines of stages pass has no right to exclude the driver of one of these lines from his yard and the common public rooms where travellers are usually placed, who comes there at proper hours, and in a proper manner, to solicit passengers for his coach and without doing any injury to the innkeeper; Markham v. Brown, 8 N. H. 523, 31 Am. Dec. 209.

The common-law liability of innkeepers has been changed in England and in most of the states by statute which provides that the innkeeper shall not be liable for money, etc., if he provides a safe for safe-keeping, and duly notifies his guests thereof. If due notice is not given, the common-law liability remains; Holstein v. Phillips, 146 N. C. 366, 59 S. E. 1037, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 475, 14 Ann. Cas. 323; L. R. 2 Ex. Div. 463. If, under the statute, the guest delivers the articles to the innkeeper, the latter's liability is not affected by the statute.

Where a trunk filled with goods for sale was left by an expressman on the sidewalk in the usual place in front of the inn and the expressman's check was given to the clerk, the innkeeper was held not liable; Becker v. Haynes, 29 Fed. 441; so of a stock of jewelry left with an attendant in the coat room; Elcox v. Hill, 98 U. S. 218, 25 L. Ed. 103; and of a package containing a gold locket of the value of $221 handed to the clerk without any information as to its contents; Horton v. Arcade Co., 114 Mo. App. 357, 89 S. W. 363.

Under the New York statute an innkeeper was held not liable for $50 stolen from under the guest's pillow while asleep; but was liable for a valuable watch; Ramaley v. Leland, 43 N. Y. 539, 3 Am. Rep. 728; see also Becker v. Warner, 90 Hun 187, 35 N. Y. Supp. 739; and for a gold watch and silver forks and a silver soup ladle stolen from a guest's trunk; Briggs v. Todd, 28 Misc. 208, 59 N. Y. Supp. 23. But in Rains v. Maxwell House Co., 112 Tenn. 219, 79 S. W. 114, 64 L. R. A. 470, 2 Ann. Cas. 488, the statute was held to apply to a watch. Money necessary for travelling expenses ($90) and a watch were held not within the statute; Maltby v. Chapman, 25 Md. 310. If the innkeeper is shown to have been negligent he is liable to the full value of the goods; [1891] 2 Q. B. 11; otherwise under the English statute, only for their value up to £30.

The act does not apply where a guest had packed her goods to leave the hotel and delivered them to the hotel porter sent to receive them; Rockhill v. Hotel Co., 237 Ill. 98, 86 N. E. 740, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 576; nor where the loss of goods is due to the negligence of the innkeeper's servant; id.

It has been held that a hotelkeeper, in whose safe a boarder deposits money for safe-keeping, is no more than a bailee, and when the money is stolen from the safe by his night clerk, is not liable therefor, in the absence of proof of want of ordinary care in employing him; Taylor v. Downey, 104 Mich. 532, 62 N. W. 716, 29 L. R. A. 92, 53 Am. St. Rep. 472. See Beale, Innkeepers.

INNOCENCE. The absence of guilt. See PRESUMPTION.

An act authorizing one alleging that he had been unjustly convicted of crime to present a claim for damages to the state board of claims was passed in New York in 1905. See Roberts v. State, 160 N. Y. 217, 54 N. E. 678.

Provisions for the compensation of innocent persons who have been imprisoned exist in many European states, including Germany, Hungary, Austria, France, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Portugal and Spain and in Mexico. See 3 Journ. Cr. L. & Criminology 684.

INNOCENT AGENT. One who does the forbidden thing, moved thereto by another person, yet incurs no legal guilt, because either not endowed with sufficient mental capacity or not acquainted with the necessary facts. Bish. Cr. L. § 310; Smith v. State, 21 Tex. App. 107, 17 S. W. 552.

INNOCENT CONVEYANCES. In English Law. A technical term used to signify those conveyances made by a tenant of his leasehold which do not occasion a forfeiture: these are conveyances by lease and release, bargain and sale, and a covenant to stand seised by a tenant for life. 1 Chitty, Pr. 243.

INNOMINATE CONTRACTS. In Civil Law. Contracts which have no particular names, as permutation and transaction. Inst. 2. 10. 13. There are many innominate contracts; but the Roman lawyers reduced them to four classes, namely, do ut des, do ut facias, facio ut des, and facio ut facias. Dig. 2. 14. 7. 2.

INNONIA. In Old English Law. A close or inclosure (clausum inlausura). Spel. Gloss.

INNOTESCIMUS (Lat.). In English Law. An epithet used for letters patent, which are always of a charter of feoffment, or some other instrument not of record, concluding with the words Innotescimus per presentes, etc. Tech. Dict.

INNOVATION. In Scotch Law. The exchange of one obligation for another, so that the second shall come in the place of the first. Bell, Dict. Also the earlier use for NOVATION.

INNOXIARE. To purge one of a fault and declare him innocent. Toml.

INNS OF CHANCERY. See INNS OF COURT.

INNS OF COURT. Voluntary noncorporate legal societies seated in London having their origin about the end of the 13th and the beginning of the 14th century. Encyc. Brit. They consist of the Inns of Court and Chancery.

The four principal Inns of Court are the Inner Temple, Middle Temple, Lincoln's Inn, and Gray's Inn.

To each of the four Inns of Court certain Inns of Chancery were attached. To the Inner Temple, Clifford's Inn, Lyon's Inn and Clements' Inn; to the Middle Temple, the Strand Inn, New Inn and a third of which the name even is forgotten; to Lincoln's Inn, Thavie's Inn (Thavy) and Furnival's Inn; and to Gray's Inn, Staple Inn and Barnard's Inn. In these dwelt the clerks of the chancery who prepared the original writs issuing out of chancery, and also the younger apprentices who acquired some elementary knowledge of civil procedure by copying those writs. Many students entered an Inn of Chancery and passed from there to an Inn of Court. In Hale's time this custom had become obsolete. These Inns of Chancery gradually fell into the hands of solicitors and now have ceased to exist. See [1902] 1 Ch. 774; Ogd. C. L. 1424. See 17 L. Q. R. 7, citing [1902] 2 Ch. 511.

There were formerly two (if not three) Serjeant's Inns, whose membership was confined to the Serjeants and Judges of the Superior Courts of Westminster. They no longer exist. See SERJEANTS-AT-LAW.

Of the origin of the Inns of Court Inderwick says: "The fixture of a certain court for the trial of civil causes in London also encouraged the calling or profession of advocacy, and led to the institution of the Inns of Court, where students of the law could congregate as at a University, hear lectures on the Roman law and the laws of their country, and prepare themselves for their future duties." King's Peace 91. Each inn is self-governing, and quite distinct from all others, all, however, possessing equal privileges; but latterly they have joined in imposing certain educational tests for the admission of students. It is entirely in the discretion of an inn of court to admit any particular person as a member. One who desires to enter must have passed an examination at some University in the British Dominion, approved by the Council of Legal Education, or some other examination required by the Consolidated Regulations of the four Inns.

No person can be called to the bar, and therefore no person can become a judge, unless he is a member of an Inn of Court. The Benchers of the four Inns are said to have the power to disbar barristers of their Inn; but see BARRISTER. As to the exercise of such power, see COUNCIL OF THE BAR. The Inns are not subject to the jurisdiction of the courts, but only to the control of the judges as visitors. See L. R. 18 Eq. 127.

The Benchers and Readers of the Inns were those who have publicly lectured in their Inn. They governed their Inn, under a Treasurer or Pensioner. From the Readers, the Serjeants-at-Law were usually appointed. Below them came the Utter-Barristers. The remaining or junior members were Inner-Barristers. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 423.

See Leaming, Phila. Lawy. in London Courts; Odgers, C. L.; 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L.; [1900] 2 Ch. 511 (as to Clifford's Inn); BENCHERS; BARRISTERS; Bellot, Exclusion of Attorneys from Inns of Court in 26 L. Q. R. 37, and Jurisdiction of the Inns of Court over Inns of Chancery in 26 L. Q. R. 384; L. R. 18 Eq. 127; Bellot, Inner & Middle Temple, with bibliography.

INNUENDO (Lat. innuere, to nod at, to hint at; meaning. The word was used when pleadings were in Latin, and has been translated by "meaning").

In Pleading. A clause in the declaration, indictment, or other pleading containing an averment which is explanatory of some preceding word or statement.

An averment of the meaning of alleged libellous words. Collins v. Pub. Co., 152 Pa. 187, 25 Atl. 546, 34 Am. St. Rep. 636. The defamatory meaning which the plaintiff sets on words complained of, in an action for libel; its office is to show how they came to have that defamatory meaning and how they relate to him. Buckstaff v. Viall, 84 Wis. 129, 54 N. W. 111.

It derives its name from the leading word by which it was always introduced when pleadings were in Latin. It is mostly used in actions of slander, and is then said to be a subordinate averment, connecting particular parts of the publication with what has gone before, in order to elucidate the defendant's meaning more fully. 1 Stark. Sland. 431.

It is the office of an innuendo to define the defamatory meaning which the plaintiff sets on the words, to show how they come to have that meaning, and also to show how they relate to the plaintiff, whenever that is not clear on the face of them; Ogd. Lib. & Sl. *100. See COLLOQUIUM. It may be used to point to the plaintiff as the person intended in the defendant's statement. It may show that a general imputation of crime is intended to apply to the plaintiff; Heard, Sland. § 226; 1 H. L. Cas. 637; Nestle v. Van Slyck, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 282; but it cannot be allowed to give a new sense to words where there is no such charge; 8 Q. B. 825. See Glatz v. Thein, 47 Minn. 278, 50 N. W. 127.

Where a defamatory meaning is apparent on the face of the libel itself, no innuendo is necessary, though often inserted; Sanford v. Rowley, 93 Mich. 119, 52 N. W. 1119; Republican Pub. Co. v. Miner, 3 Cal. App. 568, 34 Pac. 485; where the words prima facie are not actionable, an innuendo is essential to the action; Odg. Lib. & Sl. *99.

Its office is to deduce inferences from premises already stated, not to state the premises themselves. An innuendo is not an issuable averment. Facts extrinsic to the article and essential to the identification of the article with the person complaining cannot be embodied in an innuendo; Duvivier v. French, 104 Fed. 278, 43 C. C. A. 529, per Grosscup, C. J., citing McLaughlin v. Fisher, 136 Ill. 111, 24 N. E. 60.

It may point to the injurious and actionable meaning, where the words complained of are susceptible of two meanings; 8 Q. B. 841; and generally explain the preceding matter; 12 Ad. & E. 317; but cannot enlarge and point the effect of language beyond its natural and common meaning in its usual acceptance; Heard, Sland. § 219; Newell, Def. Sland. & L. 619, 620; 9 Ad. & E. 282; Commonwealth v. Snelling, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 335; Viedt v. Newspaper Co., 19 D. C. 534; unless connected with the proper introductory averments; 1 C. B. 728; Ryan v. Madden, 12 Vt. 51; Maxwell v. Allison, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 343; Van Vechten v. Hopkins, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 211, 4 Am. Dec. 339. These introductory averments need not be in the same count; 2 Wils. 114; Bloss v. Tobey, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 329. Where the language of an alleged libel was ambiguous, the innuendoes averring the meaning plaintiff claimed should be attached to the words complained of, are proper; Barnard v. Pub. Co., 63 Hun 626, 17 N. Y. Supp. 573.

For the innuendo in case of an ironical libel, see 7 Dowl. 210; 4 M. & W. 446.

If not warranted by preceding allegations, it may be rejected as superfluous; Heard, Sland. § 225; but only where it is bad and useless,—not where it is good but unsupported by evidence, even though the words would be actionable without an innuendo; Newell, Def. Sland. & L. 629; 3 H. L. Cas. 395; 1 Ad. & E. 558; 4 B. & C. 655; Cro. Eliz. 609. See Turton v. New York Recorder, 3 Misc. 314, 22 N. Y. Supp. 766.

In the case of words not per se actionable, the innuendo must be pleaded and proved; Unterberger v. Scharff, 51 Mo. App. 102.

See LIBEL.

INOFFICIOSUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. Inofficious; contrary to natural duty or affection. Used of a will of a parent which disinherited a child without just cause, or of that of a child which disinherited a parent, and which could be contested by querela inofficiosi testamenti; designated by Blackstone as remarkable on the ground "that the testator had lost the use of his reason;" 1 Com. 447; 2 id. 502; 2 Steph. Com. 589; Dig. 2. 5. 3, 13; Paulus, lib. 4, tit. 5, § 1. Even a brother or sister could set aside such a testament if the person actually instituted heir was turpis or infamous. The old writ de rationabili parte bonorum, in the English law, resembled in some respects the querela inofficiosi testamenti; but there is nothing which corresponds to it in the English law at the present day; Moz. & W.

INOFFICIOUS TESTAMENT. In Civil Law. A testament contrary to the natural duty of the parent, because it totally disinherited the child, without expressly giving the reason therefor. See preceding title.

INOFICIOSIDAD. In Spanish Law. Every thing done contrary to a duty or obligation assumed, as well as in opposition to the piety and affection dictated by nature: inoficiosum dicitur id omne quod contra pietatis officium factum est. The term applies especially to testaments, donations, dower, etc., which may be either revoked or reduced when they affect injuriously the rights of creditors or heirs.

INOPS CONSILII (Lat.). Destitute of or without counsel. In the construction of wills a greater latitude is sometimes given, because the testator is supposed to have been inops consilii.

INORDINATUS. An intestate.

INPENY and OUTPENY. Money which by the custom of some manors is paid by an incoming and an outgoing tenant. Spelm.; Holth.

INQUEST. A body of men appointed by law to inquire into certain matters: as, the inquest examined into the facts connected with the alleged murder. The grand jury is sometimes called the grand inquest.

The judicial inquiry itself by a jury summoned for the purpose, is called an inquest. The finding of such men, upon an investigation, is also called an inquest, or an inquisition.

The most familiar use of the word is to designate the inquiry by a coroner (q. v.) into the causes of death, whether sudden, violent, or in prison. To justify an inquest it is not necessary that a death should be both sudden and violent; either is sufficient; Lancaster County v. Dern, 2 Grant (Pa.) 262. The authority to hold an inquest extends to bodies brought into the county; People v. Fitzgerald, 105 N. Y. 146, 11 N. E. 378, 59

Am. Rep. 483; and when a person died in one county and was buried in another it was held that the inquest should be held by the coroner of the latter. After the verdict is returned the duty is completed and a second inquest cannot be held unless the first is quashed by a competent court; 3 El. & El. 137. No inquest can be held in any case except upon view of the body; this is jurisdictional and can be waived by no one; 3 B. & A. 260; if buried it may be exhumed, but must be reburied; 2 Hawk. P. C. 77. A post-mortem examination may be ordered; Allegheny County v. Watt, 3 Pa. 462; but it should not be made before the jury have viewed the body; 1 Witth. & Beck. Med. Jur. 336; nor should it be in the presence of the jury, but they are to be instructed by the testimony of the physicians designated to make it; People v. Fitzgerald, 105 N. Y. 146, 11 N. E. 378, 59 Am. Rep. 483.

See DEAD BODY.

In holding an inquest the coroner acts judicially; Com. v. Hawkins, 3 Gray (Mass.) 463; People v. Devine, 44 Cal. 452; Boisliniere v. Board of County Com'rs, 32 Mo. 375. No person is entitled by reason of being suspected of causing the death, to be present, or to have counsel, or cross-examine the witnesses or produce others; 2 Hawk. P. C. 77; Crisfield v. Perine, 81 N. Y. 622, affirmed 15 Hun 200. The coroner may select and summon the jurors of inquest and fine any who are absent for non-attendance; Ex parte McAnnully, T. U. P. Charlt. (Ga.) 310; they must be sworn; 3 B. & A. 260; and this must appear in the certificate or be proved aliunde; People v. White, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 167; they are the sole arbiters of the facts; but the coroner may instruct them in the law; id.; and compel the attendance of witnesses, for which purpose he has common-law powers; Com. v. Taylor, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 387.

After hearing the evidence the jury should retire to deliberate upon their verdict, without the presence of the coroner, and, when agreed upon, it should be put in writing and is final, and the inquisition should be signed by the coroner and jury; 6 C. & P. 179, 602; the jury may sign by marks; State v. Evans, 27 La. Ann. 297; and if several bear the same Christian and surname they need not be distinguished in the caption by abode or otherwise; 7 C. & P. 538.

The effect of the inquisition is to authorize the arrest and commitment of the person charged by it, and upon his arrest he may make his own statement and have it returned with the inquisition, but he cannot be discharged until his case is passed upon by the grand jury; People v. Collins, 20 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 111; except of course after hearing by a judge upon habeas corpus.

The testimony of a witness, not charged with crime, given at the inquest may be used against him, if afterwards accused; he must claim his privilege if he wishes to protect himself; Williams v. Com., 29 Pa. 102; Clough v. State, 7 Neb. 320; but if at the time of inquest he is in custody on suspicion, he cannot be examined as a mere witness, but only as an accused party in the same manner as if brought before a committing magistrate; People v. Mondon, 103 N. Y. 211, 8 N. E. 496, 57 Am. Rep. 709; the doctrine that silence gives consent does not apply to a coroner's inquest; People v. Willett, 92 N. Y. 29. These rules were settled by the New York court of appeals as the result of a series of cases; Hendrickson v. People, 10 N. Y. 13, 61 Am. Dec. 721; People v. McMahon, 15 N. Y. 384; Teachout v. People, 41 N. Y. 7; People v. Mondon, 103 N. Y. 211, 8 N. E. 496, 57 Am. Rep. 709; People v. McGloin, 91 N. Y. 241.

Where the accused testifies voluntarily at the coroner's inquest, his evidence may be used against him on his subsequent trial for murder; Reg. v. Wiggins, 10 Cox C. C. 562. But testimony given by persons suspected of crime cannot be regarded as voluntary, so as to be admissible upon a subsequent trial, if, because of the temper of the community, their refusal to answer questions would almost certainly have resulted in their immediate arrest; Tuttle v. People, 33 Colo. 243, 79 Pac. 1035, 70 L. R. A. 33, 3 Ann. Cas. 513. For admissibility, on a trial for murder of testimony of accused at coroner's inquest, see note 70 L. R. A. 33.

Preventing a coroner from holding an inquest over a dead body, when it is required by law, is indictable; 13 Q. B. D. 331. Where the captain of a man-of-war, mistaking his legal duty, had prevented the coroner from holding an inquest on the body of a man hanged on his ship, the court, granting an information, refused to proceed also against his boatswain, who had participated in the transaction under his order; Andr. 231; but, adds Bishop, "an information is in a measure discretionary with the court, and perhaps on an indictment the boatswain would have been deemed liable;" 1 Bish. N. Cr. L. § 688 (3).

In Massachusetts there is now no coroner, but an inquest is held in such cases by a justice of certain designated courts, after an examination by regular medical examiners and a report that the death was caused by violence, or without such report upon the direction of the prosecuting officer. See CORONER; CONFESSION; ADMISSION.

INQUEST OF OFFICE. An inquiry made by the king's officer, his sheriff, coroner, or escheator, either virtute officii, or by writ sent to him for that purpose, or by commissioners specially appointed, concerning any matter that entitles the king to the possession of lands or tenements, goods or chattels. It is done by a jury of no determinate number.—either twelve, or more, or less; 3 Bla. Com. 258; Finch, Law 323. An inquest of office was bound to find for the king upon the direction of the court. The reason given is that an inquest concluded no man of his right, but only gave the king an opportunity to enter, so that he could have his right tried; 3 Bla. Com. 260; 4 Steph. Com. 61; F. Moore 730; 3 Hen. VII. 10; 2 Hen. IV. 5. An inquest of office was also called, simply, "office."

INQUEST OF SHERIFFS. An inquest which directs a general inquiry as to the methods in which the sheriffs had been conducting the local government of the country (1170). 1 Holdsw. H. E. L. 21.

INQUIRY, WRIT OF. A writ sued out by a plaintiff in a case where the defendant has let the proceedings go by default, and an interlocutory judgment has been given for damages generally, where the damages do not admit of calculation. It issues to the sheriff of the county in which the venue is laid, and commands him to inquire, by a jury of twelve men, concerning the amount of damages. The sheriff thereupon tries the cause in his sheriff's court, and some amount must always be returned to the court. But the return of the inquest merely informs the court, which may, if it choose, in all cases assess damages and thereupon give final judgment. 2 Archb. Pr., Waterman ed. 952; 3 Bla. Com. 398; 3 Chitty, Stat. 495, 497.

INQUISITION. In Practice. An examination of certain facts by a jury impanelled by the sheriff for the purpose. The instrument of writing on which their decision is made is also called an inquisition. The sheriff or coroner, and the jury who make the inquisition, are called the inquest.

An inquisition on an untimely death, if omitted by the coroner, may in England be taken by justices of gaol delivery and oyer and terminer, or of the peace; but it must be done publicly and openly; otherwise it will be quashed. Inquisitions either of the coroner or of the other jurisdictions are traversable; 1 Burr. 18.

INQUISITOR. A designation of sheriffs, coroners super visum corporis, and the like, who have power to inquire into certain matters.

In Ecclesiastical Law. The name of an officer who is authorized to inquire into heresies, and the like, and to punish them. A judge.

INROLMENT, ENROLMENT (Law Lat. irrotulatio). The act of putting upon a roll.

Formerly, the record of a suit was kept on skins of parchment, which, best to preserve them, were kept upon a roll or in the form of a roll; what was written upon them was called the inrolment. After, when such records came to be kept in books, the making up of the record retained the old name of inrolment. Thus, in equity, the inrolment of a decree is the recording of it, and will prevent the rehearing of the cause, except on appeal or by bill of review. The decree may be enrolled immediately after it has been passed and entered, unless a cavcat has been entered; 2 Freem. 179; Davoue v. Fanning, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 199. And before signing and inrolment, a decree cannot be pleaded in bar of a suit, though it can be insisted on by way of answer; 2 Ves. 577; Davoue v. Fanning, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 199. See Saunders, Ord. in Ch. Inrolment.

Transcribing upon the records of a court deeds, etc., according to the statutes on the subject. See 1 Chitty, Stat. 425, 426; 2 id. 69, 76-78; 3 id. 1497. Placing on file or record generally; as annuities, attorneys, etc.

INSANE PERSON. See INSANITY.

INSANITY. In Medical Jurisprudence. The prolonged departure, without any adequate cause, from the states of feeling and modes of thinking usual to the individual in health.

Insanity is such a deprivation of reason that the subject is no longer capable of understanding and acting with discretion in the ordinary affairs of life. Snyder v. Snyder, 142 Ill. 60, 31 N. E. 303.

Legal insanity, which exonerates from crime or incapacitates from civil action, is a mental deficiency with reference to the particular act in question and not a general incapacity. It is the latter only as the result of judicial ascertainment that a person is non compos mentis, by inquisition in lunacy, or similar statutory proceeding, and this only results in a general civil disability and not, proprio vigore, in immunity from punishment for crime.

It results that there can be no general definition of legal insanity. It is a state or condition which must be noted with reference to each class of actions to which it is applied.

In criminal law it "is any defect, weakness, or disease of the mind rendering it incapable of entertaining, or preventing its entertaining in the particular instance, the criminal intent which constitutes one of the elements in every crime." 1 Bish. New Cr. L. § 381.

As a cause of civil incapacity it is such defect or weakness as prevents rational assent to a contract or due consideration of the facts properly and naturally entering into the testamentary disposition of one's estate. It is a want of due proportion in quality or quantity, or both,—between the mental capacity and power and the particular act, civil or criminal, as to which the inquiry arises.

The legal and the medical ideas of insanity are essentially different, and the difference is one of substance. The failure to keep it in mind has been the fruitful cause of confusion in trials involving the question of mental capacity for crime or contract, and has tended to render valueless and often absurd the testimony of witnesses called as experts. Many of these have testified without any conception of the real nature and definition of the insanity, which alone could have relation to the case.

The distinction between the medical and the legal idea of insanity has, perhaps, not been better stated than by Ray, who is quoted by Ordonaux, and again by Witthaus & Becker: "Insanity in medicine has to do with a prolonged departure of the individual from his natural mental state arising from bodily disease." "Insanity in law covers nothing more than the relation of the person and the particular act which is the subject of judicial investigation. The legal problem must resolve itself into the inquiry, whether there was mental capacity and moral freedom to do or abstain from doing the particular act." 1 Whitt. & Beck. Med. Jur. 181; U. S. v. Faulkner, 35 Fed. 730.

Of late years this word has been used to designate all mental impairments and deficiencies formerly embraced in the terms lunacy, idiocy, and unsoundness of mind. Even to the middle of the last century the law recognized only two classes of persons requiring its protection on the score of mental disorder, viz.: lunatics and idiots. The former were supposed to embrace all who had lost the reason which they once possessed and their disorder was called dementia accidentalis; the latter, those who had never possessed any reason, and this deficiency was called dementia naturalis. Lunatics were supposed to be much influenced by the moon; and another prevalent notion respecting them was that in a very large proportion there occurred lucid intervals, when reason shone out, for a while, from behind the cloud that obscured it, with its natural brightness. It may be remarked, in passing, that lucid intervals are far less common than they were once supposed to be, and that the restoration is not so complete as the descriptions of the older writers would lead us to infer. In modern practice, the term lucid interval signifies merely a remission of the disease, an abatement of the violence of the morbid action, a period of comparative calm; and the proof of its occurrence is generally drawn from the character of the act in question. It is hardly necessary to say that this is an unjustifiable use of the term, which should be confined to the genuine lucid interval that does occasionally occur.

It began to be found at last that a large class of persons required the protection of the law, who were not idiots, because they had reason once, nor lunatics in the ordinary signification of the term, because they were not violent, exhibited no very notable derangement of reason, were independent of lunar influences, and had no lucid intervals. Their mental impairment consisted in a loss of intellectual power, of interest in their usual pursuits, of the ability to comprehend their relations to persons and things. A new term—unsoundness of mind—was therefore introduced to meet this exigency; but it has never been very clearly defined.

The law has never held that all lunatics and idiots are absolved from all responsibility for their civil or criminal acts. This consequence was attributed only to the severest grades of these affections,—to lunatics who have no more understanding than a brute, and to idiots who cannot "number twenty pence nor tell how old they are." Theoretically the law has changed but little, even to the present day; but practically it exhibits considerable improvement: that is, while the general doctrine remains unchanged, it is qualified, in one way or another, by the courts, so as to produce less practical injustice.

Insanity implies the presence of disease or congenital defect in the brain, and though it may be accompanied by disease in other organs, yet the cerebral affection is always supposed to be primary and predominant. It is to be borne in mind, however, that bodily diseases may be accompanied, in some stage of their progress, by mental disorder which may affect the legal relations of the patient.

To give a definition of insanity not congenital, or, in other words, to indicate its essential element, the present state of our knowledge does not permit. Most of the attempts to define insanity are sententious descriptions of the disease, rather than proper definitions. For all practical purposes, however, a definition is unnecessary, because the real question at issue always is, not what constitutes insanity in general, but wherein consists the insanity of this or that individual. Neither sanity nor insanity can be regarded as an entity to be handled and described, but rather as a condition to be considered in reference to other conditions. Men vary in the character of their mental manifestations, inasmuch that conduct and conversation perfectly proper and natural in one might in another, differently constituted, be indicative of insanity. In determining, therefore, the mental condition of a person, he must not be judged by any arbitrary standard of sanity or insanity, nor compared with other persons unquestionably sane or insane. He can properly be compared only with himself. When a person, without any adequate cause, adopts notions he once regarded as absurd, or indulges in conduct opposed to all his former habits and principles, or changes completely his ordinary temper, manners, and disposition,—the man of plain practical sense indulging in speculative theories and projects, the miser becoming a spendthrift and the spendthrift a miser, the staid, quiet, unobtrusive citizen becoming noisy, restless, and boisterous, the gay and joyous becoming dull and disconsolate even to the verge of despair, the careful, cautious man of business plunging into hazardous schemes of speculation, the discreet and pious becoming shamefully reckless and profligate,—no stronger proof of insanity can be had. And yet not one of these traits, in and by itself alone, disconnected from the natural traits of character, could be regarded as conclusive proof of insanity. In accordance with this fact, the principle has been laid down, with the sanction of the highest legal and medical authority, that it is the prolonged departure, without any adequate cause, from the states of feeling and modes of thinking usual to the individual when in health, which is the essential feature of insanity. Gooch, Lond. Quart. Rev. xliii. 355; Combe, Ment. Derang. 196; Melway v. Croft, 3 Curt. Eccl. 671.

Insanity produced by alcoholism is of two kinds: Delirium tremens, caused by the breaking down of the person's system by long continued or habitual drunkenness, and brought on by abstinence from drink, and called "settled insanity," to distinguish it from "temporary insanity," or drunkenness, directly resulting from drink; Evers v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 318, 20 S. W. 744, 18 L. R. A. 421, 37 Am. St. Rep. 811. See DRUNKENNESS.

Criminal Responsibility. There is a concurrence in the law of civilized countries in absolving persons mentally unsound from criminal responsibility. In France, Germany, and Austria the rule is in substance that if a person is unconscious of the nature of his act, or his will is affected or the character of the act is not perceived, there is no crime; 1 Witth. & Beck. Med. Jur. 181; Krafft-Ebing, Ger. Psycho-Path.

That insanity, in some of its forms, annuls all criminal responsibility, and, in the same or other forms, disqualifies its subject from the performance of certain civil acts, is a well-established doctrine of the common law. In the application of this principle there has prevailed, for many years, the utmost diversity of opinion. The law as expounded by Hale, who divided insanity into partial insanity as to certain subjects, partial as to degree, and total insanity, was that partial insanity was not sufficient to excuse a person in the committing of any capital offence; 1 Hale, P. C. 30; and his doctrine was received without question until the beginning of the present century; 8 How. St. Tr. 322; 16 id. 764; 19 id. 947.

This ancient doctrine received its first serious shock in Hadfield's case, 27 id. 1281, 1311, in which Erskine, for the defence, admitted the language used by Coke and Hale as to requiring deprivation of memory and understanding to absolve from crime, but contended that, if taken literally, the words would apply to idiocy alone. He insisted that "of all the cases that have filled Westminster Hall with complicated considerations, the insane persons have not only had the most perfect knowledge and recollection of all the relations in which they stood towards others, and of the acts and circumstances of their lives, but have, in general, been remarkable for subtlety and acuteness; and that delusion of which the criminal act in question was the immediate unqualified offspring, was the kind of insanity which should rightly exempt from punishment." These views prevailed and Lord Kenyon held that the prisoner was deranged immediately prior to the act and that it was unlikely that he had meanwhile recovered, though, strictly speaking, proof might be required of his condition at the very moment of the shooting; accordingly the prisoner was acquitted with the approbation of the court. Subsequently, in Bellingham's case, 1 Collinson, Lun. 636; Shelf. Lun. 462, Lord Mansfield held that it must be proved that the prisoner was incapable of judging between right and wrong; that at the time of the act he did not consider that murder was a crime against the laws of God and nature; and that there was no other proof of insanity which would excuse crime. Similar language was used in Parker's case, Collin. Lun. 477; Higginson's case, 1 C. & K. 129; Stokes' case, 3 C. & K. 185, and so for about a generation the law of England was practically as settled by Hadfield's and Bellingham's cases, though there were occasional variations from it. The special feature of the law of that period was that, to make a person responsible for crime, there must be a knowledge of right and wrong in the abstract. But the tendency of the cases was towards the modification of the test, so as to make the knowledge of right and wrong refer solely to the act in question; 5 C. & P. 168; 9 id. 525; 1 Cox, Cr. Cas. 80; 3 id. 275. This was pronounced to be the law by the English judges, in their answer to the questions propounded to them by the House of Lords on the occasion of the McNaghten trial, 10 Cl. & F. 200, where it was said by Tindal, C. J., for himself and the other judges: "To establish a defence on the ground of insanity, it must be clearly proved that at the time of committing the act, the party accused was laboring under such a defect of reason, from disease of the mind, as not to know the nature or quality of the act he was doing; or, if he did know it, that he was not aware he was doing what was wrong." Most of the English cases will be found in 1 Russ. Cr., Shars. ed. 14, and in the notes will be found a collection of American cases.

The test laid down in McNaghten's case has been generally applied in England and this country. In the former it has been definitely recognized as the law, and in the latter it has been generally adopted, though with frequent variations, as will appear infra.

As to the answers of the judges, Sir J. F. Stephen (3 Hist. Cr. L. 154) has stated his opinion that their authority is questionable, adding that he "knows that some of the most distinguished judges on the bench have been of the same opinion"; he also observes that they "leave untouched the most difficult questions connected with the subject." It appears that, since that case, neither the Court for Crown Cases Reserved nor any other English court in banc has delivered a considered written opinion on the subject.

In Coleman's case, in New York, Davis, J., charged the jury that the "test of the responsibility for criminal acts, when insanity is asserted, is the capacity of the accused to distinguish between right and wrong at the time and with respect to the act which is the subject of inquiry." He left it to the jury to determine "whether or not at the time the accused committed the act she knew what she was doing, and knew that in shooting him she was doing a wrongful act." 1 N. Y. Cr. Rep. 1. With variations of expression this is the prevailing doctrine of the American courts; Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Terry, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 590, 21 L. Ed. 236; People v. Pico, 62 Cal. 50; State v. Windsor, 5 Harring. (Del.) 512; State v. Danby, 1 Houst. Cr. Cas. (Del.) 166; State v. West, id. 371; Humphreys v. State, 45 Ga. 190; Westmoreland v. State, id. 225; State v. Lawrence, 57 Me. 574; State v. Mohn, 25 Kan. 182; U. S. v. Faulkner, 35

Fed. 730; Com. v. Heath, 11 Gray (Mass.) 303; Cunningham v. State, 56 Miss. 269, 21 Am. Rep. 360; People v. Finley, 38 Mich. 482; State v. Shippey, 10 Minn. 223 (Gil. 178), 88 Am. Dec. 70; State v. Erb, 74 Mo. 199; State v. Kotovsky, 74 Mo. 247; Hawe v. State, 11 Neb. 537, 10 N. W. 452, 38 Am. Rep. 375; State v. Spencer, 21 N. J. L. 196; State v. Brandon, 53 N. C. 463; Thomas v. State, 40 Tex. 60; Dove v. State, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 348; Dunn v. People, 109 Ill. 635; State v. Alexander, 30 S. C. 74, 8 S. E. 440, 14 Am. St. Rep. 879; Com. v. Winnemore, 1 Brewst. (Pa.) 356; Com. v. Mosler, 4 Pa. 264; U. S. v. Shults, 6 McLean, 121, Fed. Cas. No. 16, 286; Walker v. People, 88 N. Y. 86; Loeffner v. State, 10 Ohio St. 599. In many of the cases it is difficult to distinguish with certainty between what the court intends for a statement of the law and what is rather in the nature of practical suggestions addressed to the jury. In a New Hampshire case it was held that no one of the circumstances ordinarily relied upon is, as a matter of law, a test of mental disease, but that all symptoms and all tests of mental disease are purely matters of fact to be determined by the jury; State v. Pike, 49 N. H. 399, 6 Am. Rep. 533; and the same doctrine has been followed in other states; Hopps v. People, 31 Ill. 385, 83 Am. Dec. 231; Bradley v. State, 31 Ind. 492; Stevens v. State, 31 Ind. 485, 99 Am. Dec. 634. Very similar were the remarks addressed to the jury by the Lord Justice Clerk in a Scotch Justiciary case: "The question is one of fact, that matter of fact being whether when he committed this crime the prisoner was of an unsound mind. The counsel for the crown very properly said that this was entirely for you. It is not a question of medical science, neither is it one of legal definition, although both may materially assist you. It is a question for your common and practical sense." 3 Couper 16.

It was said that mental unsoundness, to render one free from criminal liability, must be such on the particular subject out of which the acts charged as an offence are claimed to have sprung, as to render him incapable of discerning the wrong of committing the same; U. S. v. Faulkner, 35 Fed. 730; Kearney v. People, 11 Colo. 258, 17 Pac. 782. Occasionally the court has thought it sufficient for the jury to consider whether the prisoner was sane or insane,—of sound memory and discretion, or otherwise; see State v. Cory, State v. Prescott, in Ray, Med. Jur. 55. The capacity to distinguish between right and wrong has been held not to be a safe test in all cases; State v. Felter, 25 Ia. 67, per Dillon, C. J.; Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Terry, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 580, 21 L. Ed. 236. See also Brown v. Com., 78 Pa. 122. In Whart. & St. Med. Jur. § 120, this test is said to be generally satisfactory, but not to cover all cases. An instruction has been sustained, where there was a defence of insanity, that the defendant was not responsible unless he was conscious of his act at the time it was committed; People v. Clendennin, 91 Cal. 35, 27 Pac. 418.

The definition of insanity, in the trial of a case involving that issue, is for the court; Whart. & St. Med. Jur. § 112; see 1 F. & F. 87; and it has entire discretion as to the method of disposing of a suggestion that the prisoner is so insane as to render him unable to make a rational defence; U. S. v. Chisholm, 149 Fed. 284.

It is not error to instruct that insanity is a defence sometimes resorted to in default of other defences, and, while it is to be justly weighed, it is to be reckoned with; People v. Allender, 117 Cal. 81, 48 Pac. 1014.

It is proper to refuse to charge that if the defendant at the time of the act was affected with a mental disease that impaired his will and rendered him likely at any time to commit such an act, he must be acquitted; People v. Barthleman, 120 Cal. 7, 52 Pac. 112. Where the accused killed his wife during an attack of epilepsy, it is not error to charge that if he was insane up to the time of the act and was sane afterwards and remained sane until the present time they should find that he was sane when he committed the act; Taylor v. U. S., 7 App. D. C. 27; Snell v. U. S., 16 App. D. C. 501.

The defence of insanity is a legal defence and an instruction that it is viewed with disfavor is error; State v. Barry, 11 N. D. 428, 92 N. W. 809. Where the accused had been twice adjudged insane and committed to an asylum, but was discharged therefrom nearly two years before the act, there was no presumption of insanity; State v. Austin, 71 Ohio St. 317, 73 N. E. 218, 104 Am. St. Rep. 778.

The law of self-defence is applicable alike to the insane and the sane and the two defences are consistent and either one, if sustained, would justify a verdict of "not guilty"; State v. Wade, 161 Mo. 441, 61 S. W. 800.

In homicide, where there was evidence to support the request, the court should have charged that defendant was not guilty if he was laboring under such a defect of mind and reason as not to know the nature and quality of the acts he was doing, and was incapable of forming a criminal intent; that if the jury were not convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that, on the night of the shooting, defendant was of sound mind and discretion, and was capable of forming a criminal intent, they should acquit; that it was incumbent upon the prosecution to prove beyond a reasonable doubt the criminal intent with which the fatal shot was fired, and defendant's mental capacity for forming an intent to commit the alleged crime; and that

If the jury could not say that they had a moral certainty that, on the night of the shooting, defendant's mind and discretion were sufficient for him to form a rational intent to kill, his guilt had not been established: People v. Muste, 137 Mich. 216, 100 N. W. 455.

The rule already stated as to partial insanity applies equally to delusions, which as has been stated were first brought within the law of mental irresponsibility for crime by Hadfield's case, supra. In McNaghten's case, supra, the question as to delusions was answered thus: "That if a person was acting under an insane delusion, and was in other respects sane, he must be considered in the same situation as to responsibility as if the facts with respect to which the delusion exists were real. That is to say, that the acts of the criminal should be judged as if he had really been in the circumstances he imagined himself to be in. For example, if, under the influence of delusion, he supposes another man to be in the act of attempting to take his life, and he kills him, as he supposes, in self-defence, he would be exempt from punishment. If his delusion was that the deceased had inflicted an injury upon him in character and fortune, and he killed him in revenge for such supposed injury, he would be liable to punishment." In the Guiteau case, the jury were charged by Cox, J., on this subject, as follows: "An insane delusion is never the result of reasoning and reflection. It is not generated by them and it cannot be dispelled by them. . . . Whenever convictions are founded on evidence, on comparison of facts and opinions and arguments, they are not insane delusions. The insane delusion does not relate to mere sentiments or theories, or abstract questions of law, politics, or religion. All these are the subject of opinions, which are beliefs founded on reasoning and reflection. These opinions are often absurd in the extreme, and result from naturally weak or ill-trained reasoning powers, hasty conclusions from insufficient data, ignorance of men and things, credulous dispositions, fraudulent imposture, and often from perverted moral sentiments. But still, they are opinions, founded upon some kind of evidence, and liable to be changed by better external evidence or sounder reasoning. But they are not insane delusions;" Guiteau's Case, 10 Fed. 161. Following this opinion it was said that: "An insane delusion is an incorrigible belief, not the result of reasoning in the existence of facts which are either impossible absolutely or impossible under the circumstances of the individual." State v. Lewis, 20 Nev. 333, 22 Pac. 241.

It is a logical result of the nature of delusion and its legal relations as shown by these definitions that it will be of no avail as a defence unless, if true, the facts supposed to exist would have excused the crime; id.; Thurman v. State, 32 Neb. 224, 49 N. W. 338; People v. Taylor, 138 N. Y. 398, 34 N. E. 275; Smith v. State, 55 Ark. 259, 18 S. W. 237. This rule is well illustrated by a case in which it was held that an instruction that "defendant would not be responsible if he killed deceased under an insane delusion that deceased was trying to marry defendant's mother, and that this delusion caused the killing," was properly refused; Bolling v. State, 54 Ark. 588, 16 S. W. 658.

In order that delusion may be a defence it must be connected with the crime, and if a person has an insane delusion upon any one subject, but commits a crime not connected therewith, he is equally guilty as if he were in all respects sane; State v. Gut, 13 Minn. 341 (Gil. 315); Bovard v. State, 30 Miss. 600; State v. Huting, 21 Mo. 464. "A man whose mind squints, unless impelled to crime by this very mental obliquity, is as much amenable to punishment as one whose eye squints." Gibson, C. J., in Com. v. Mosler, 4 Pa. 264. See also Alison, Cr. L. 647; Ray, Insan. 106, 135, 227; 3 Couper 357; State v. Simms, 71 Mo. 538; 1 Bish. N. Cr. L. 394.

"Where a defendant is acting under an insane delusion as to circumstances which, if true, would relieve the act from responsibility, such delusion is a defence;" Whart. & St. Med. Jur. § 125; but such delusions must involve an honest mistake as to the object to which the crime is directed; id. § 127; 3 F. & F. 839. The term delusion as applied to insanity, does not mean a mere mistake of fact, or being induced by false evidence to believe that a fact exists which does not exist; Middleditch v. Williams, 45 N. J. Eq. 726, 17 Atl. 826, 4 L. R. A. 738.

A disposition to multiply the tests, so as to recognize essential facts in the nature of insanity, has been manifested in this country to a much greater extent than in England.

The existence of an irresistible impulse to commit a crime has been recognized in the law; Steph. Cr. L. 91; and medical authorities are generally in agreement that, as it is put by Bishop, "the mental and physical machine may slip the control of its owner; and so a man may be conscious of what he is doing, and of its criminal character and consequences, while yet he is impelled to it by a power to him irresistible." 1 New Cr. L. 387; 3 Witth. & Beck. 270, 275; 1 Beck, Med. Jur., 10th ed. 723; Ray, Insan., 3d ed. §§ 17, 18, 22. But the writer last quoted adds: "Whether or not such is truly so must, in the nature of things, be a pure question of fact, it cannot be of law."

In England the courts have refused to recognize this ground of exemption from responsibility and limit the test to ability to distinguish between right and wrong; Clarke, Cr. L. 56; 1 Bish. N. Cr. L. § 387; 3 C. & K. 185; 1 F. & F. 666; 3 Cox, C. C. 275.

The American cases are very difficult to classify with reference to this test, as indeed they are on most branches of the subject, nor is such the present purpose; all that is possible being, by reference to a selection of the cases, to illustrate the progress of the law and the direction in which, but not, critically, the precise extent to which, changes have been made since Lord Hale's time, keeping pace with the growth of scientific knowledge.

A full understanding of the scope of the doctrine now under consideration involves the further subject of power of resistance, which enters largely into this class of cases and is also more particularly referred to, infra.

In Roger's case, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 500, 41 Am. Dec. 458, the jury were directed to consider, in addition to the test of right and wrong, whether the prisoner, in committing the homicide, acted from an irresistible and uncontrollable impulse; and this case has been much relied on in American courts; Ray, Med. Jur. 58.

In Freth's case, 3 Phila. (Pa.) 105, Judge Ludlow charged: "If the prisoner was actuated by an irresistible inclination to kill, and was utterly unable to control his will, or subjugate his intellect, and was not actuated by anger, jealousy, revenge, and kindred evil passions, he is entitled to an acquittal," etc.

In the leading case of State v. Harrison it was said by Brannon, J.: "This irresistible-impulse theory test has been only recently presented, and while it is supported by plausible arguments, it is rather refined, and introduces what seems to me a useless element of distinction for a test, and is misleading to juries, and fraught with great danger to human life, so much so that even its advocates have warningly said it should be very cautiously applied and only in the clearest cases. What is this irresistible impulse? How shall we of the courts and juries know it? Does it exist when manifested in one single instance, as in the present case, or must it be shown to be habitual, or, at least, to have evinced itself in more than a single instance? . . . I admit the existence of irresistible impulse and its efficacy to exonerate from responsibility, but not as consistent with an adequate realization of the wrong of the act. It is that uncontrollable impulse produced by the disease of the mind, when that disease is sufficient to override judgment and obliterate the sense of right as to the acts done, and deprives the accused of power to choose between them;" 36 W. Va. 729, 15 S. E. 982, 18 L. R. A. 224.

For other cases in which irresistible impulse is regarded as a defence, see Stevens v. State, 31 Ind. 485, 99 Am. Dec. 634; Blackburn v. State, 23 Ohio St. 146; Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Terry, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 580, 21 L. Ed. 236; but it is held that no impulse, however irresistible, is a defence, where there is a knowledge as to the particular act between right and wrong; State v. Brandon, 53 N. C. 463; State v. Miller, 111 Mo. 542, 20 S. W. 243; Lovegrove v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 491, 21 S. W. 191; People v. Clendennin, 91 Cal. 35, 27 Pac. 418; Thomas v. State, 71 Miss. 345, 15 South. 237; Patterson v. State, 86 Ga. 70, 12 S. E. 174; Wilcox v. State, 94 Tenn. 106, 28 S. W. 312; Tayl. Med. Jur. 720; and that it was a crime morally, and punishable by the laws of the country; State v. Alexander, 30 S. C. 74, 8 S. E. 440, 14 Am. St. Rep. 879; Williams v. State, 50 Ark. 511, 9 S. W. 5.

As a perfectly natural outgrowth of the doctrine of irresistible impulse, there is to be found in the American cases a tendency more noticeable in late years, to add an additional qualification to the right and wrong test. These cases hold, not merely that the accused, to be considered accountable, must be able to distinguish between right and wrong with respect to the act in question, but must have sufficient mental power to control his impulses.

As the theory of irresistible impulses owes much of its development to the courts of Pennsylvania, so also has this correlative doctrine of the necessity of power to control it received great attention in that state. In Mosler's case, 4 Pa. 264, Gibson, C. J., said: "His insanity must be so great as entirely to destroy his perception of right and wrong; and it is not until that perception is thus destroyed that he ceases to be responsible. It must amount to delusion or hallucination, controlling his will and making the commission of the act, in his apprehension, a duty of overruling necessity. The law is, that, whether the insanity be general or partial, the degree of it must be so great as to have controlled the will of its subject, and to have taken from him the freedom of moral action." And this language is repeated in Ortwein's case, 76 Pa. 414, 18 Am. Rep. 420, by Agnew, C. J., who declares it to be the law of the state. The essential relation of power to such cases is thus put, in Haskell's case, 2 Brewst. (Pa.) 491, by Brewster, J.: "A review of all the authorities I have been able to examine satisfies me that the true test in all these cases lies in the word 'power.' Has the defendant in a criminal case the power to distinguish right from wrong, and the power to adhere to the right and avoid the wrong? In these cases has the defendant, in addition to the capacities mentioned, the power to govern his mind, his body, and his estate? If he possess this power over his imagination he will be able to expel all delusive images, and the like control over his will would subdue all homicidal and other monomania. . . . I use the word power with reference to that control which humanity can expect from humanity."

Other cases supporting this view are, Smith v. Com., 1 Duv. (Ky.) 224; Com. v. Rogers, 7 Mete. (Mass.) 500, 41 Am. Dec. 458.

Other cases seem to hold that one mentally disordered, though knowing right and wrong, and that the act is forbidden and punishable, is criminally responsible whether he has power over his conduct or not; Walker v. People, 26 Hun (N. Y.) 67; Flanagan v. People, 52 N. Y. 467, 11 Am. Rep. 731; People v. Carpenter, 102 N. Y. 238, 6 N. E. 584; Anderson v. State, 42 Ga. 9; Brinkley v. State, 58 Ga. 296; People v. Hoin, 62 Cal. 120, 45 Am. Rep. 651; State v. Murray, 11 Or. 413, 5 Pac. 55; State v. Scott, 41 Minn. 365, 43 N. W. 62; State v. Pratt, Houst. Cr. Cas. (Del.) 249; State v. Pagels, 92 Mo. 300, 4 S. W. 931. Though a crime is committed through lack of sufficient will power to control the conduct, and under an irresistible and uncontrollable impulse, the offender is responsible for the act; State v. Miller, 111 Mo. 542, 20 S. W. 243. In discussing this class of cases Bishop considers that a doctrine that "our law punishes any man for what he does under a necessity which it is impossible for him to resist," would be an "unprecedented horror." He assumes that the cases which appear to hold it are to be explained upon the theory that the judges do not believe in the existence of an irresistible or uncontrollable impulse. He himself does not assume to know whether as a fact there is, but as the experts assert it, he deems it to be the duty of a judge, where there is evidence tending to support the theory, to submit it to the jury and cast the responsibility upon them. 1 Bish. N. Cr. L. § 383 b, 387.

To this remarkable diversity of views may be attributed, in some measure, no doubt, the actual diversity of results. To any one who has followed with some attention the course of criminal justice in trials where insanity has been pleaded in defence, it is obvious that, if some have been properly convicted, others have just as improperly been acquitted. It must be admitted, however, that the verdict in such cases is often determined less by the instructions of the court than by the views and feelings of the jury and the testimony of experts.

The defence of irresistible impulse has been the subject of legislation in some states, as in New York and Michigan, where by statute a morbid propensity, or uncontrollable impulse to commit a crime, in the mind of one who is conscious of the nature of the act or that it is wrong, or to be incapable of such knowledge, is no defence. See N. Y. Pen. Code § 21; Mich. Pen. Code §§ 19, 20.

What is sometimes called moral insanity, as distinguished from mental unsoundness, is not a defence to a charge of crime; Whart. & St. Med. Jur. §§ 164, 174; Tayl. Med. Jur. 677; 6 Jur. 201; 4 Cox, C. C. 149; Com. v. Heath, 11 Gray (Mass.) 303; Flanagan v. People, 52 N. Y. 467, 11 Am. Rep. 731; People v. McDonell, 47 Cal. 134; People v. Kerrigan, 73 Cal. 222, 14 Pac. 849; Guiteau's Case, 10 Fed. 161; State v. Potts, 100 N. C. 457, 6 S. E. 657; People v. Wood, 126 N. Y. 269, 27 N. E. 362; Flanagan v. People, 52 N. Y. 469, 11 Am. Rep. 731; but see Smith v. Com., 1 Duv. (Ky.) 224; Scott v. Com., 4 Mete. (Ky.) 227, 83 Am. Dec. 461; Andersen v. State, 43 Conn. 514, 21 Am. Rep. 669; St. Louis Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Graves, 6 Bush (Ky.) 268. See also Mann, Med. Jur. of Insan. 66, 120, 135. Nor, however violent and unnatural, will it defeat a will unless it is the emanation of a delusion; Taylor v. McClintock, 87 Ark. 243, 112 S. W. 405.

Morbid religious feelings may be of such a character as to amount to partial insanity, which, though sometimes the basis of delusions affecting criminal cases, is more frequently met with in connection with the subject of undue influence. In a case in which it was alleged that a testator was insane on the subject of spiritualism, it was held that, as an abstract proposition, a belief in spiritualism, though a person may be a monomaniac on that subject or any other form of religion, does not prove insanity; Connor v. Stanley, 72 Cal. 556, 14 Pac. 306, 1 Am. St. Rep. 84; Chafin Will Case, 32 Wis. 557; Will of Smith, 52 Wis. 543, 8 N. W. 616, 9 N. W. 665, 38 Am. Rep. 756; Turner v. Hand, 3 Wall. Jr. 88, Fed. Cas. No. 14,257; nor belief in the transmigration of souls; Bonard's Will, 16 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 128.

Insanity is not necessarily established by mere eccentricity of mind, manifesting itself in absurd opinions or extravagancies of dress and manners; Lee's Heirs v. Lee's Ex'rs, 4 McCord (S. C.) 183, 17 Am. Dec. 722; or an irritable temper and an excitable disposition; Willis v. People, 32 N. Y. 715; or depression coupled with a monomania or delusion that, by the lands wearing out and buildings going to ruin, starvation and the poorhouse were threatened; Gillespie v. Shulherrier, 50 N. C. 157. Insanity produced by continued dissipation is a good defence; State v. Harrigan, 9 Houst. (Del.) 369, 31 Atl. 1052; mania à potu is a species of insanity; State v. Dillahun, 3 Harr. (Del.) 551; and so is delirium tremens; People v. O'Connell, 62 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 436; Macconnehey v. State, 5 Ohio St. 77; Kelley v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 216, 20 S. W. 357; but it must be shown to exist at the time the act is perpetrated, not antecedently;

State v. Sewell, 48 N. C. 245. As to drunkenness in its varied forms, see that title.

If the accused was wanting in self-governing power, whether caused by insanity, gross intoxication or other controlling influences other than depravity or wickedness of heart, then his mind was not fully conscious of its own purposes and he was not guilty of murder in the first degree; Com. v. Van Horn, 188 Pa. 143, 41 Atl. 469. Where a defendant was insane from drugs, the court must charge thereon, though a charge on the general issue of insanity is given; Burton v. State, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 493, 81 S. W. 742. If the accused had sufficient mind to know right from wrong and to understand the nature and quality of the act, he was sane in law; Eckert v. State, 114 Wis. 160, 89 N. W. 826; if he did not possess the power to avoid the wrong and do the right, he was irresponsible; People v. Barthleman, 120 Cal. 7, 52 Pac. 112; Abbott v. Com., 107 Ky. 624, 55 S. W. 196; Jolly v. Com., 110 Ky. 190, 61 S. W. 49, 22 Ky. Law Rep. 1622.

Suicide is not conclusive evidence of insanity, but is admissible to show the absence of a sound and disposing mind; Pettitt's Ex'rs v. Pettitt, 4 Humph. (Tenn.) 191. Epilepsy alone does not establish insanity which will excuse crime; Lovegrove v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 491, 21 S. W. 191; Com. v. Buccieri, 153 Pa. 535, 26 Atl. 228; and in its milder forms, causing temporary fits of insanity, the prima facie presumption is in favor of mental soundness; Corbit v. Smith, 7 Ia. 60, 71 Am. Dec. 431. See 3 Witth. & Beck. Med. Jur. 319. Proof that insanity was hereditary is admissible; Shaeffer v. State, 61 Ark. 241, 32 S. W. 679; but that alone is insufficient when the other evidence clearly shows that defendant knew that he was committing a wrong; Lovegrove v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 491, 21 S. W. 191; Snow v. Benton, 28 Ill. 306.

An insane person cannot be legally charged with a criminal intent; State v. Brown, 36 Utah 46, 102 Pac. 641, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 545. Where it is admitted that a defendant in a murder case is neither an idiot nor an insane person, it is not competent to prove that he is weakminded; Rogers v. State, 128 Ga. 67, 57 S. E. 227, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 999, 119 Am. St. Rep. 364.

In reply to a defence of want of criminal capacity, proof was admitted that defendant had sometimes feigned insanity; Naanes v. State, 143 Ind. 299, 42 N. E. 609. But insanity cannot be proved by reputation; Walker v. State, 102 Ind. 502, 1 N. E. 856; State v. Coley, 114 N. C. 879, 19 S. E. 705.

See HYPNOTISM; KLEPTOMANIA.

The effect of the plea of insanity has sometimes been controlled by the instructions of the court in regard to the burden of proof and the requisite amount.

In many of the American states, there has been a tendency towards a relaxation of the rule settled in England, and which formerly prevailed in almost all the states, to treat a plea of insanity as being strictly one in confession and avoidance which must be proved by the defendant either beyond a reasonable doubt or, as was said in many American cases, by a preponderance of evidence. See BURDEN OF PROOF.

The English rule was thus stated in McNaghten's case: "Every man is presumed to be sane, and to possess a sufficient degree of reason to be responsible for his crimes, until the contrary be proved to their satisfaction;" 10 Cl. & F. 200; and it is the settled law of England; 3 C. & K. 188; 4 Cox, C. C. 149; 3 id. 155.

As to whether such proof must be by a preponderance of evidence or beyond a reasonable doubt, the language of the English judges is not entirely free from ambiguity.

In many of the American cases the English rule is adhered to; State v. Spencer, 21 N. J. L. 202, followed in Genz v. State, 59 N. J. L. 488, 37 Atl. 69, 59 Am. St. Rep. 618; Ortwein v. Com., 76 Pa. 414, 18 Am. Rep. 420; Com. v. Gerade, 145 Pa. 289, 22 Atl. 464, 27 Am. St. Rep. 689; State v. Brandon, 53 N. C. 463; Kriel v. Com., 5 Bush. (Ky.) 362; Moore v. Com., 92 Ky. 630, 18 S. W. 833; Lovegrove v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 491, 21 S. W. 191; Boswell v. State, 63 Ala. 307, 35 Am. Rep. 20; Maxwell v. State, 89 Ala. 156, 7 South. 824; Parsons v. State, 81 Ala. 577, 2 South. 854, 60 Am. Rep. 193 (where the subject is discussed at large); Bolling v. State, 54 Ark. 588, 16 S. W. 658; People v. Bawden, 90 Cal. 195, 27 Pac. 204; State v. De Rance, 34 La. Ann. 186, 44 Am. Rep. 426; State v. Clements, 47 La. Ann. 1088, 17 South. 502; State v. Lawrence, 57 Me. 574; Com. v. Rogers, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 500, 41 Am. Dec. 458; State v. Hanley, 34 Minn. 430, 26 N. W. 397; State v. Pagels, 92 Mo. 310, 4 S. W. 931; Bond v. State, 23 Ohio St. 349; State v. Bundy, 24 S. C. 439, 58 Am. Rep. 263; Baccigalupo v. Com., 33 Gratt. (Va.) 807, 36 Am. Rep. 795; State v. Strauder, 11 W. Va. 747, 27 Am. Rep. 606. See 36 Am. Rep. 467, n.

The terms of this rule cannot be better stated than in Com. v. Drum, 58 Pa. 9: "Where the killing is admitted, and insanity or want of legal responsibility is alleged as an excuse, it is the duty of the defendant to satisfy the jury that insanity actually existed at the time of the act, and a doubt as to such insanity will not justify a jury in acquitting upon that ground." This language was quoted with strong approval in Ortwein v. Com., 76 Pa. 414, 425, 18 Am. Rep. 420. In a much later Pennsylvania case it was said that "the burden of proof of insanity was with the defence from the beginning, and that it never shifted." Com. v. Heidler, 191 Pa. 375, 43 Atl. 211.

Many of the cases above cited rest upon the idea that the issue is to be determined in each case by a preponderance of evidence, so that an effort to deduce from them a well established rule, supported by the weight of authority, as to whether the test is to be considered a preponderance of evidence or the establishment of the defence beyond a reasonable doubt, is subject to the same ambiguity that attaches to the language of the English judges. In addition to this question which arises upon the cases which put the burden of the defence upon the accused many courts have held that when evidence of insanity is introduced by the defendant, the burden of proving his criminal capacity is cast upon the prosecution (and most of the cases go to the extent of including this as one of the elements of the crime which must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt); U. S. v. Faulkner, 35 Fed. 730; Guiteau's Case, 10 Fed. 161, and note; Hodge v. State, 26 Fla. 11, 7 South. 593; Brown v. State, 40 Fla. 459, 25 South. 63; State v. Johnson, 40 Conn. 136; Langdon v. People, 133 Ill. 382, 24 N. E. 874; Plake v. State, 121 Ind. 433, 23 N. E. 273, 16 Am. St. Rep. 408; State v. Nixon, 32 Kan. 205, 4 Pac. 159; People v. Garbutt, 17 Mich. 9, 97 Am. Dec. 162 (but where the evidence is insufficient to raise a reasonable doubt, it does not shift the burden of proof to the prosecution; Snider v. State, 56 Neb. 309, 76 N. W. 574); State v. Pressler, 16 Wyo. 214, 92 Pac. 806, 15 Ann. Cas. 93; Territory v. McNabb, 16 N. M. 625, 120 Pac. 907; Cunningham v. State, 56 Miss. 269, 21 Am. Rep. 360; State v. Bartlett, 43 N. H. 224, 80 Am. Dec. 154; Brotherton v. People, 75 N. Y. 159; Walker v. People of N. Y., 88 N. Y. 81; King v. State, 91 Tenn. 617, 20 S. W. 169; Revoir v. State, 82 Wis. 295, 52 N. W. 84; and the supreme court of the United States has accepted this latter doctrine; Davis v. U. S., 160 U. S. 469, 16 Sup. Ct. 353, 40 L. Ed. 499; where it was held that the jury, to convict, must be "able, upon their consciences, to say that the evidence before them, by whomsoever adduced, is sufficient to show beyond a reasonable doubt the existence of every fact necessary to constitute the crime charged."

In a later case, Battle v. U. S., 209 U. S. 38, 28 Sup. Ct. 422, 52 L. Ed. 670, where the defence of insanity was interposed, the same court said: "The judge instructed the jury that the burden of proof was on the government to prove that fact beyond a reasonable doubt, and he was not called upon to go further. Until evidence is given on the other side, the burden of proof is satisfied by a presumption arising from the fact that most men are sane. In this case there was the merest shadow of evidence that the defendant was not of sound mind. The jury were told to consider all the evidence, including the bearing of the prisoner and the manner of his own testimony, and the evidence relied upon by him was stated. In the circumstances he could ask no more."

In a criminal case the burden is on the defendant to prove by a preponderance of evidence the defence of insanity; People v. Suesser, 142 Cal. 354, 75 Pac. 1093; State v. Scott, 49 La. Ann. 253, 21 South. 271, 36 L. R. A. 721; State v. Robbins, 109 Ia. 650, 80 N. W. 1061; People v. Willard, 150 Cal. 543, 89 Pac. 124; Fults v. State, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 502, 98 S. W. 1057; Thomas v. State, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 293, 116 S. W. 600; State v. Hancock, 151 N. C. 699, 66 S. E. 137; Pribble v. People, 49 Colo. 210, 112 Pac. 220; though he need not prove it beyond a reasonable doubt; Burt v. State, 38 Tex. Cr. R. 397, 40 S. W. 1000, 43 S. W. 344, 39 L. R. A. 305, 330; Adair v. State, Okl. Cr. 284, 118 Pac. 416; but only to the satisfaction of the jury; State v. Porter, 213 Mo. 43, 111 S. W. 529, 127 Am. St. Rep. 589; and when that is done the burden is shifted; Hobbs v. State, 8 Ga. App. 53, 68 S. E. 515; but if not established by the state's evidence, defendant must prove it by direct evidence to the satisfaction of the jury; State v. Cole, 2 Pennewill (Del.) 344, 45 Atl. 391; or at least so as to raise a reasonable doubt; Johnson v. State, 57 Fla. 18, 49 South. 40. The burden of the defence of temporary insanity is on the defendant; State v. Hand, 1 Marv. (Del.) 545, 41 Atl. 192; or of incapacity produced by delirium tremens at the very time of the act; State v. Kavanaugh, 4 Pennewill (Del.) 131, 53 Atl. 335.

Where the defence is insanity, until the defendant furnishes evidence thereon sufficient to raise a reasonable doubt, the prosecution may rest on the legal presumption that men are sane; State v. Wetter, 11 Idaho 433, 83 Pac. 341; and the mere fact of the commission of the crime is not sufficient to overcome this presumption; Davis v. State, 44 Fla. 32, 32 South. 822.

The rule that a person adjudged insane continues so until the contrary is shown, applies only to insanity of a nature liable to be permanent; Hempton v. State, 111 Wis. 127, 86 N. W. 596.

As to the rule on the subject, applied by the class of cases last referred to, see BURDEN OF PROOF. The cases of the former class, which put the burden on the defendant, as has already been suggested, in very many instances hold that a preponderance of proof only is required; and in some states the latter cases show a virtual abandonment of the rule formerly adhered to by them. As for example in Massachusetts as will appear by the review of cases in that state in Davis v. U. S., 160 U. S. 481, 483, 16 Sup. Ct. 353, 40 L. Ed. 499. It results that it is not practicable to state what might be designated as a prevailing American rule. The subject is very fully discussed by Mr. Justice Harlan in the case last cited. The cases holding different views of the subject will be found collected in the opinion and argument in that case and also in 14 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 25; 16 id. 449; Cl. Cr. L. 58; Mann, Med. Jur. of Insan. ch. iii.; Witth. & Beck. 508. And see memorandum on plea of insanity, State v. Baber, 11 Mo. App. 586.

A statute imposing upon the accused the burden of proving the defence of insanity is constitutional; McGhee v. State (Ala.), 59 South. 573.

In England, under 46 & 47 Vict. c. 38, relating to the trial of lunatics, the jury returns a verdict that the prisoner is "guilty, but insane at the time," whereupon the court records the verdict and orders the prisoner to be imprisoned during the pleasure of the Crown. Under 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 94, the verdict was "not guilty, on the ground of insanity."

In some states in this country, where the verdict is an acquittal by reason of insanity, the fact must be so returned by the jury, and in such case the court are required to direct the confinement of the prisoner in an insane asylum.

A statute is not unconstitutional which provides that one acquitted of murder on the ground of insanity may be committed to the state lunatic asylum till he becomes sane. The fact of sanity is not established by the fact that he is placed on trial, if, under the statute, an insane person may be tried if he is competent to understand the proceeding and make his defense. His right to habeas corpus, after committal, to establish his sanity, satisfies his constitutional right to a hearing. The state may summarily deprive him of his liberty, under the police power, though no appeal is allowed from the order of acquittal. These questions were decided in People v. Chanler, 133 App. Div. 159, 117 N. Y. Supp. 322, id., 196 N. Y. 525, 89 N. E. 1109, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 946. See also People v. Baker, 59 Misc. 359, 110 N. Y. Supp. 848. In subsequent habeas corpus proceedings the burden is on the petitioner to prove recovery of reason; People v. Lamb (the Thaw case) 118 N. Y. Supp. 389; so also in State v. Snell, 46 Wash. 327, 89 Pac. 931, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1191; and he is not denied the protection of the law in such case; Petition of Dowdell, 169 Mass. 387, 47 N. E. 1033, 61 Am. St. Rep. 290; Petition of Le Donne, 173 Mass. 550, 54 N. E. 244. A committal of such person until the further order of the court is not void for uncertainty; and is no deprivation of due process of law; In re Brown, 39 Wash. 160, 81 Pac. 552, 109 Am. St. Rep. 868, 4 Ann. Cas. 488, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 540, where there is a full note on the confinement of one acquitted of crime by reason of insanity.

The insanity of one acquitted of murder on that ground is presumed to continue until the contrary is shown; State v. Snell, supra; and the court may thereupon commit him to an asylum until he is proved sane; People v. Baker, supra; and so a court may stay an execution on the ground of insanity until a prisoner recovers; Ex parte State, ex rel. Atty. Gen., 150 Ala. 489, 43 South. 490, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1129, 124 Am. St. Rep. 79.

A jury cannot disregard an overwhelming mass of evidence of insanity on the part of the accused and convict him on a legal presumption of sanity; State v. Brown, 36 Utah 46, 142 Pac. 641, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 545.

Side by side with this doctrine of the criminal law which makes persons, who from a medical point of view are considered insane, responsible for their criminal acts is another equally well authorized, viz.: that a kind and degree of insanity which would not excuse a person for a criminal act may render him legally incompetent for the management of himself or his affairs; Bellingham's case, 5 C. & P. 168. This implies that the mind of an insane person acts more clearly and deliberately, and with a sounder view of its relations to others, when about to commit a great crime than when buying or selling a piece of property. It is scarcely necessary to add that no ground for this distinction can be found in our knowledge of mental disease. On the contrary, we know that the same person who destroys his neighbor, under the delusion that he has been disturbing his peace or defaming his character, may, at the very time, dispose of his property with as correct an estimate of its value and as clear an insight into the consequences of the act as he ever had. If a person is incompetent to manage property, it is because he has lost some portion of his mental power; and this fact cannot be justly ignored in deciding upon his responsibility for criminal acts. Insanity once admitted, it is within the reach of no mortal comprehension to know exactly how far it may have affected the quality of his acts. To say that, possibly, it may have had no effect at all, is not enough: it should be proved by the party who affirms it. See Maudsley, Responsibility in Mental Disease 111.

By the French penal code there can be no crime nor offence if the accused were in a state of madness at the time of the act. Art. 64. The same provision was introduced into Livingston's Code and into the Revised Statutes of New York, vol. 2, § 697. The law of Arkansas provides that a lunatic or insane person without lucid intervals shall not be found guilty of any crime or misdemeanor with which he may be charged; Rev. Stat. 236. In New York, however, in spite of this clear and positive provision of law, the courts have always acted upon the doctrines of the common law, and instructed the jury respecting the tests of that kind of insanity which annuls criminal responsibility; Freeman v. People, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 27, 47 Am. Dec. 216. In this case, the court declared that the insanity mentioned in the statute means only insanity in reference to the criminal act, and therefore its qualities must be defined.

Civil Incapacity. The general principle governing the civil incapacity of a person of an unsound mind is that any civil act is invalid if the actor was at the time laboring under such mental defect as to render him incapable of performing the act in question, rationally and without detriment to any person affected thereby.

The rule as to contracts is that insanity is such a defect as precludes rational assent, with respect to the nature of the contract, whether marriage, partnership, sale, or the like.

A judicial ascertainment of the insanity of a person is said to deprive him of contractual capacity, as a matter of law, and subsequent contracts are void; 4 Co. 123 b; Bac. Abr. Idiots and Lunatics (F.); Carter v. Beckwith, 128 N. Y. 312, 28 N. E. 582; Leonard v. Leonard, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 280; Imhoff v. Witmer's Adm'r, 31 Pa. 243; but when no conservator was appointed and there was no appearance of incapacity, a purchase was held valid; McCormick v. Littler, 85 Ill. 62, 28 Am. Rep. 610. See also 5 B. & C. 170; Sawyer v. Lufkin, 56 Me. 308; Richardson v. Strong, 35 N. C. 106, 55 Am. Dec. 430.

Such incapacity is not retroactive; Knox v. Knox, 30 S. C. 377, 9 S. E. 353; prior acts are not void but voidable; Jackson v. Gumaer, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 552; but the condition is conclusively presumed to continue, after the finding, until it is superseded; In re Otis, 101 N. Y. 580, 5 N. E. 571; People v. Tax Com'rs, 100 N. Y. 215, 3 N. E. 85; but see McCleary v. Barcalow, 6 Ohio Cir. Ct. Rep. 481; Reese v. Reese, 89 Ga. 645, 15 S. E. 846. A deed or mortgage executed by such person during the period of lunacy, as found, is voidable, the presumption being against validity, but subject to be overcome by proof of sanity; Hughes v. Jones, 116 N. Y. 67, 22 N. E. 446, 5 L. R. A. 637, 15 Am. St. Rep. 386; and see Mott v. Mott, 49 N. J. Eq. 192, 22 Atl. 997; 1 Gr. Ev. § 556. The fact that one who assigns a leasehold interest is found to be a lunatic a few months later is only prima facie evidence of his incompetency at the time of his assignment; Sbarbero v. Miller, 72 N. J. Eq. 248, 65 Atl. 472.

The marriage of a person insane is void; Inhabitants of Middleborough v. Inhabitants of Rochester, 12 Mass. 363; Gathings v. Williams, 27 N. C. 487, 44 Am. Dec. 49; Powell v. Powell, 18 Kan. 371, 26 Am. Rep. 774; Wightman v. Wightman, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 343; L. R. 1 P. & D. 335; Waymire v. Jetmore, 22 Ohio St. 271; True v. Ranney, 21 N. H. 52, 53 Am. Dec. 164. A marriage contracted while one party was insane from delirium tremens was held void; Clement v. Mattison, 3 Rich. (S. C.) 93; but mere weakness of mind not amounting to derangement is not sufficient; Rawdon v. Rawdon, 28 Ala. 565; Crump v. Morgan, 38 N. C. 91, 40 Am. Dec. 447; and for that merely, or intoxication, a court has no power to declare a marriage null and void; Elzey v. Elzey, 1 Houst. (Del.) 308. The same degree of mental capacity which enables a person to make a valid deed or will is sufficient to enable him to marry; Inhabitants of Atkinson v. Inhabitants of Medford, 46 Me. 510. It was held that a marriage celebrated by a person while insane might be affirmed upon recovery without a new solemnization; Cole v. Cole, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 57, 70 Am. Dec. 275.

Other civil contracts made by insane persons are voidable, not void; Turner v. Rusk, 53 Md. 65; George v. R. Co., 34 Ark. 613; McClain v. Davis, 77 Ind. 419; Van Patton v. Beals, 46 Ia. 62; Ingraham v. Baldwin, 9 N. Y. 45; Broadwater v. Darne, 10 Mo. 277; Ordron, Jud. Asp. Insan. ch. 6.

With respect to contracts, persons non compos mentis and infants are said to be parallel, both in law and reason; Seaver v. Phelps, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 304, 22 Am. Dec. 372; Breckenridge's Heirs v. Ormsby, 1 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 236, 19 Am. Dec. 71. A power of attorney made by an insane person is absolutely void; Dexter v. Hall, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 9, 21 L. Ed. 73; and a contract executory on both sides cannot be enforced against an insane person; Ewell, L. Cas. Disab. 525, where the cases are collected.

The test of legal capacity to contract, it was said, is that the party is capable of recollecting the property he is about to dispose of, the manner of distributing it, and the object of his bounty; the particular act being attended with the consent of his will and understanding; Miller v. Rutledge, 82 Va. 863, 1 S. E. 202.

Pollock enumerates three different theories as to contracts by insane persons which "have, at different times, been entertained in English courts and supported by respectable authority;" Poll. Cont. 87. These theories, with some of the authorities cited in support of them, are substantially as follows: 1. That it is no ground, whatever, for avoiding a contract; Co. Litt. 2 b; 4 Co. 123 b; Bract. fol. 100 a, 165 b. As to this it is characterized as a frivolous technicality and doubtful whether it was really supported by the authorities Coke had before him; Poll. Cont. 89. 2. If one who contracts is too drunk or insane to know what he is about, his agreement is void for want of the consenting mind, but if his mind is only so confused or weak that he may know what he is about, but not fully understand the terms and effect, and this is known to the other party, the contract will be voidable at his option. The first division of this class would be simply void for want of consent; 2 Stra. 1104; 3 Campb. 33; Reinskopf v. Rogge, 37 Ind. 207; Burke v. Allen, 29 N. H. 106, 61 Am. Dec. 642; the second would come under the head of fraud; Miller v. Finley, 26 Mich. 249, 12 Am. Rep. 306; Wilson v. Oldham, 12 B. Monr. (Ky.) 55; Caulkins v. Fry, 35 Conn. 170. 3. The doctrine which has prevailed as already stated that all contracts by insane persons are voidable, not void, see supra.

In some courts what has been termed the Massachusetts doctrine prevails that contracts of insane persons are voidable without any reference to the knowledge of the other party; Seaver v. Phelps, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 304, 22 Am. Dec. 372; in others what is termed the English doctrine (because supported by more recent English authorities) that they are voidable if the other party knows of the insanity; Stockmeyer v. Tobin, 139 U. S. 176, 11 Sup. Ct. 504, 35 L. Ed. 123; Martinez v. Moll, 46 Fed. 724; (under La. Civ. Code); [1892] 1 Q. B. 599; Lancaster County Nat. Bank v. Moore, 78 Pa. 407, 21 Am. Rep. 24; and reasonable ground for knowledge is equivalent thereto; Lincoln v. Buckmaster, 32 Vt. 652; and there is still a third doctrine supported by some courts that if the other party was ignorant and the contract reasonable and not capable of rescission, so that the parties could be restored to their original position, the contract will be sustained; Mathiessen & Welch's Refining Co. v. McMahon's Adm'r, 38 N. J. L. 536; Young v. Stevens, 48 N. H. 133, 2 Am. Rep. 202, 97 Am. Dec. 592; Northwestern Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Blankenship, 94 Ind. 535, 43 Am. Rep. 185; Riggs v. Tract Society, 84 N. Y. 330; Alexander v. Haskins, 68 Ia. 73, 25 N. W. 935; Appeal of Kneidler, 92 Pa. 428.

The cases last cited rest upon Molton v. Camroux, 2 Ex. 487; 4 id. 17, which is considered the cornerstone of the law as to contracts with insane persons; Poll. Cont. 92; Leake, Cont. 248; but has been recently characterized as containing "loose statements" which have given rise to "an anomalous doctrine;" Harr. Cont. 235.

Whatever may be said of it, the case undoubtedly settled the law that such a contract was voidable and not void, and this was confirmed inferentially by a later case which held that such a contract might be ratified after the disability had passed; L. R. 8 Ex. 132.

It is generally considered that contracts for necessities for an insane person are binding, if suited to their condition in life; 5 B. & C. 170; Richardson v. Strong, 35 N. C. 106, 55 Am. Dec. 430; Pearl v. McDowell, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 658, 20 Am. Dec. 199; Maddox v. Simmons, 31 Ga. 512; Skidmore v. Romaine, 2 Bradf. Sur. (N. Y.) 122; Crowther v. Rowlandson, 27 Cal. 376; Fitzgerald v. Reed, 9 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 94; and this rule has been extended to other things which were reasonable and proper; Kendall v. May, 10 Allen (Mass.) 59; but if the other party has knowledge of the insanity the nature of the liability is rather quasi-contractual; 44 Ch. D. 94; Sawyer v. Lufkin, 56 Me. 308; Keener, Quasi-Cont. 20. This liability is not removed by the appointment of a committee, where necessities are furnished in good faith and the committee has failed to provide them; Barnes v. Hathaway, 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 452; Stannard v. Burns' Adm'r, 63 Vt. 244, 22 Atl. 460.

Statutes making the estates of insane persons liable for their maintenance in state institutions are valid; Kaiser v. State, 80 Kan. 364, 102 Pac. 454, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 295.

The fact that a husband causes his wife to be placed in an insane asylum is not evidence of his refusal to support her, nor of consent to her absence outside the home, rendering him liable for her support; Richardson v. Stuesser, 125 Wis. 66, 103 N. W. 261, 69 L. R. A. 829, 4 Ann. Cas. 784.

Deeds executed by persons of unsound mind are absolutely void; Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, 129 Ala. 279, 30 South. 578; Riggs v. Tract Society, 95 N. Y. 503; Ballew v. Clark, 24 N. C. 23; Bensell v. Chancellor, 5 Whart. (Pa.) 371, 34 Am. Dec. 561; 3 Witth. & Beck. Med. Jur. 386. In other cases it has been held that such a deed is voidable only; Arnold v. Iron Works, 1 Gray (Mass.) 434; Somers v. Pumphrey, 24 Ind. 231; Cates v. Woodson, 2 Dana (Ky.) 452. Other cases again hold that want of perfect soundness of mind does not affect the conveyance if there is still capacity for fully comprehending the import of the act; Miller v. Craig, 36 Ill. 109; Dennett v. Dennett, 44 N. H. 531, 84 Am. Dec. 97; Odell v. Buck, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 142; Rippy v. Gaut, 39 N. C. 443. See

Smith v. Elliott's Adm'r, 1 Patt. & H. (Va.) 307; 1 Pingr. Mortg. § 349.

An action cannot be dismissed because it is brought by an insane person in his own name, unless the statute so provides; Wiesmann v. Donald, 125 Wis. 600, 104 N. W. 916, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 961.

As to testamentary capacity as affected by insanity, see WILL; DEMENTIA; UNDUE INFLUENCE.

In most states the statutes of limitation do not run against a person insane, nor does adverse possession ripen into title while the person out of possession is insane; Clarity v. Sheridan, 91 Ia. 304, 59 N. W. 52; but a plaintiff's claim is not affected by the insanity of the defendant's ancestor after the statute had begun to run; Asbury v. Fair, 111 N. C. 251, 16 S. E. 467. The time of sanity required in order to allow the statute to begin to run is such as will enable the party to examine his affairs and institute an action, and is for the jury; Clark's Executor v. Trail's Adm'rs, 1 Metc. (Ky.) 35.

Insanity is not a defence in an action of tort; but damages are compensatory and not punitive; McIntyre v. Sholty, 121 Ill. 660, 13 N. E. 239, 2 Am. St. Rep. 140; Lassone v. R. R., 66 N. H. 345, 24 Atl. 902, 17 L. R. A. 525; Williams v. Hays, 143 N. Y. 442, 38 N. E. 449, 26 L. R. A. 153, 42 Am. St. Rep. 743; Meyer v. Ry. Co., 54 Fed. 116, 4 C. C. A. 221.

A master of a vessel cannot excuse himself for negligently causing its destruction by showing that the orders which were given by him while temporarily insane caused such destruction; Williams v. Hays, 143 N. Y. 442, 38 N. E. 449, 26 L. R. A. 153, 42 Am. St. Rep. 743; but it is a complete defence in an action for words spoken slanderously about the plaintiff that they were uttered under an insane delusion of their truth; Irvine v. Gibson, 117 Ky. 306, 77 S. W. 1106, 111 Am. St. Rep. 251, 4 Ann. Cas. 569; and where a visitor falls through a hole in the floor of a building owned by a lunatic and left unguarded by him, there is no cause of action; Ward v. Rogers, 51 Misc. 299, 100 N. Y. Supp. 1058.

INSCRIPTION. In Civil Law. An engagement which a person who makes a solemn accusation of a crime against another enters into that he will suffer the same punishment, if he has accused the other falsely, which would have been indicted upon him had he been guilty. Code, 9. 1. 10; 9. 2. 16 and 17.

In Evidence. Something written or engraved.

Inscriptions upon tombstones and other proper places, as rings, and the like, are held to be evidence of pedigree; Bull. N. P. 233; 10 East 120; 13 Ves. 145. But their value as evidence depends largely on the authority under which they were made, and the length of time between their establishment and the events they commemorate; Clark v. Cassidy, 62 Ga. 407; Wanita Woolen Mills v. Rollins, 75 Miss. 253, 22 South. 819; Shotwell v. Harrison, 22 Mich. 415; Fondren v. Durfee, 39 Miss. 326; Terwilliger v. Industrial Benefit Ass'n. 83 Hun 323, 31 N. Y. Supp. 938; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 106. See DECLARATION; HEARSAY EVIDENCE.

INSCRIPTIONES (Lat.). The name given by the old English law to any written instrument by which anything was granted. Blount.

INSENSIBLE. In Pleading. That which is unintelligible is said to be insensible. Steph. Pl. 378.

INSIDIATOIRES VIARUM (Lat.). Persons who lie in wait in order to commit some felony or other misdemeanor.

INSIMUL COMPUTASSENT (Lat.). They had accounted together. See ASSUMPSIT.

INSINUACION. In Spanish Law. The presentation of a public document to a competent judge, in order to obtain his approbation and sanction of the same, and thereby giving it judicial authenticity.

"Insinuatio est ejus quod traditur sive agitur coram quocumque iudice in scripturam redactio."

This formality is requisite to the validity of certain donations inter vivos. Escriche, voc. Insinuacion.

INSINUATION. In Civil Law. The transcription of an act on the public registers, like our recording of deeds. It was not necessary in any other alienation but that appropriated to the purpose of donation. Inst. 2. 7. 2; Pothier, Traité des Donations, Entre Vifs, sec. 2, art. 3, § 3; 8 Toullier, n. 198.

INSINUATION OF A WILL. In Civil Law. The first production of it; or, leaving it in the hands of the register in order to its probate. 21 Hen. VIII. c. 5; Jacob, Law Dict.

INSOLVENCY. The condition of a person who is insolvent (q. v.). Inability to pay one's debts.

Bankruptcy, which is one species or phase of insolvency, denotes the condition of a trader or merchant who is unable to pay his debts in the course of business; 2 Bell, Com. 162; 1 M. & S. 338; Herick v. Borst, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 650; Thompson v. Thompson, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 134. Insolvency, then, as distinguished from strict bankruptcy, is the condition or status of one who is unable to pay his debts; and insolvent laws are distinguished from strict bankruptcy laws by the following characteristics:

Bankruptcy laws apply only to traders or merchants; insolvent laws, to those who are not traders or merchants. Bankrupt laws discharge absolutely the debt of the honest debtor; Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 230, 6 L. Ed. 606; Le Roy v. Crowninshield, 2 Mas. 161, Fed. Cas. No. 8,268; Pugh v. Bussel, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 394; Van Hook v. Whitlock, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 43, 37 Am. Dec. 246; 4 B. & Ald. 654; Baldw. 296. Insolvent laws discharge the person of the debtor from arrest and imprisonment, but leave the future acquisitions of the debtor still liable to the creditor; Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 122, 4 L. Ed. 529; Pollitt v. Parsons, 2 H. & J. (Md.) 61. Both laws contemplate an equal, fair, and honest division of the debtor's present effects among his creditors pro rata. A bankrupt law may contain those regulations which are generally found in insolvent laws, and an insolvent law may contain those which are common to a bankrupt law; per Marshall, C. J., Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 195, 4 L. Ed. 529. And insolvent laws quite coextensive with the English bankrupt system have not been infrequent in our colonial and state legislation, and no distinction was ever attempted to be made in the same between bankruptcies and insolvencies; 3 Sto. Const. 11; Blsh. Insolv. Debt. 4.

Under the United States constitution the power to pass a bankrupt law is vested in congress, and this is held to include power to pass an act which provides for voluntary bankruptcy, or, strictly speaking, an insolvent law. So in the absence of congressional action, the states have passed laws which, though called insolvent laws, were in fact bankrupt laws, and their right to do so has been sustained, such laws being held valid; see BANKRUPT; except as limited by the prohibition against impairing the obligation of contracts, which title see; see also Cook v. Moffat, 5 How. (U. S.) 295, 12 L. Ed. 159; Hall v. Boardman, 14 N. H. 38; Savoy v. Marsh, 10 Metc. (Mass.) 594, 43 Am. Dec. 451. Stone v. Tibbetts, 26 Me. 110; Towne v. Smith, 1 Woodb. & M. 115, Fed. Cas. No. 14,115; Larrabee v. Talbott, 5 Gill (Md.) 437, 46 Am. Dec. 637; Baldwin v. Hale, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 229, 17 L. Ed. 531; Cooley, Const. Lim. 360; Miller, Const. U. S. 616.

U. S. Bankruptcy Act of 1898 supersedes all state insolvent laws from the date of its passage; Parmenter Mfg. Co. v. Hamilton, 172 Mass. 178, 51 N. E. 529, 70 Am. St. Rep. 258.

So far as the jurisdiction of the state extends, its insolvent laws may have all the essential operation of a bankrupt law, not being limited to a mere discharge of the person of the debtor on surrendering his effects. And a creditor out of a state who voluntarily makes himself a party and accepts a dividend, is bound by his own act, and is deemed to have waived his ex-territorial immunity and right; Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 122, 4 L. Ed. 529; Braynard v. Marshall, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 194; Norton v. Cook, 9 Conn. 314, 23 Am. Dec. 342; Pugh v. Bussel, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 394; Browne v. Stackpole, 9 N. H. 478. See 4 B. & Ald. 654;

Van Hook v. Whitlock, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 43, 37 Am. Dec. 246; Scribner v. Fisher, 2 Gray (Mass.) 43; Beer v. Hooper, 32 Miss. 246.

The effect of a discharge upon non-resident creditors is examined in 6 Harv. L. Rev. 349, containing a very complete list of cases, to that date and concluding that it is the generally accepted doctrine that, in such case, a discharge will be of no effect (even in the courts of the state where the discharge is granted) against a non-resident, unless he becomes a party by voluntary appearance or personal service. The correctness of this conclusion, though it is admitted as established, is seriously challenged on grounds of expediency which are stated at large.

Where a discharge under a state insolvency law is obtained, it does not discharge the debt of a non-resident creditor who refuses to prove its claim in such proceedings; Bergner & Engel Brewing Co. v. Dreyfus, 172 Mass. 154, 51 N. E. 531, 70 Am. St. Rep. 251.

Insolvency may of course be simple or notorious. Simple insolvency is attended by no badge of notoriety. Notorious or legal insolvency, with which the law has to do, is designated by some public act or legal proceeding. This is the situation of a person who has done some notorious act to divest himself of all his property: as, making an assignment, applying for relief, or having been proceeded against in invitum under bankrupt or insolvent laws; Bish. Insolv. Debt. 3, n.; Thelusson v. Smith, 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 396, 4 L. Ed. 271; 7 Toullier, n. 45; Domat, liv. 4, tit. 5, nn. 1, 2; 2 Bell, Com. 165.

It is with regard to the latter that the insolvency laws (so called) are operative. They are generally statutory provisions by which the property of the debtor is surrendered for his debts; and upon this condition, and the assent of a certain proportion of his creditors, he is discharged from all further liabilities; Bartlet v. Prince, 9 Mass. 431; Otis v. Warren, 16 Mass. 53; 2 Kent 321; Ingr. Insolv. 9. This legal insolvency may exist without actual inability to pay one's debts when the debtor's estate is finally settled and wound up. (See definition). Insolvency, according to some of the state statutes, may be of two kinds, voluntary and involuntary. The latter is called the proceeding against the creditor in invitum. Voluntary insolvency, which is the more common, is the case in which the debtor institutes the proceedings, and is desirous of availing himself of the insolvent laws, and petitions for that purpose.

Involuntary insolvency is where the proceedings are instituted by the creditors in invitum, and so the debtor forced into insolvency. The circumstances entitling either debtor or creditors to invoke the aid of the insolvent law are in a measure peculiar to each state. But their general characteristics are as follows:

Proceedings by creditors may usually be taken for fraudulent concealment, conveyance, or collusive attachment, of property; by petition in the designated tribunal, on notice to the debtor; possession of the property is taken by an officer of the courts, usually after proof of the allegations, and a meeting of creditors is called for the choice of an assignee by a vote of creditors, having relation both to number and amount. The assignee becomes practically the owner, in trust, with power to wind up the estate; he acts under the general direction of the court, calling meetings of creditors when required. The right to a discharge varies in different states, in some being conditioned upon payment of a certain percentage or the assent of the majority of creditors or upon more stringent conditions in case of subsequent insolvency. The statutes vary as to the grounds of refusing a discharge for fraud, as in cases of paying or securing debts within a certain time before the application, or when the debtor is insolvent, or has reasonable cause to believe himself so. As to all these details the state statutes should be referred to.

As to American and English bankrupt law proper, see BANKRUPT LAWS; BANKRUPT.

The English act 34 Geo. III. ch. 69, was called an insolvent debtor's act; but the first insolvency act properly so called was passed in 1826. The act of 7 & 8 Vict. cap. 70, called "an act for facilitating arrangements between debtor and creditor," is properly an insolvency law. This provided for the discharge of a non-trading debtor if he had a certain concurrence from his creditors. This was one-third, both in value and number, to the initiatory steps. To the discharge, a proportional consent at an initiatory meeting, and, finally, the consent of three-eighths in both number and value, or nine-tenths in value of creditors to the sum of twenty pounds and upwards.

Many of the states have laws for the distribution of insolvent estates, and also laws for the relief of poor debtors. These are not properly called insolvent laws in the sense in which we have used the words,—though the latter relieve the debtor's body from restraint upon a surrender of his goods and estate, and leave his future acquisitions still liable. See POOR DEBTORS.

INSOLVENT (Lat. in, privative, solvere, to pay). The condition of a person who is unable to pay his debts. 2 Bla. Com. 285, 471; Brouwer v. Harbeck, 9 N. Y. 589.

One who is unable to pay his debts as they fall due in the usual course of trade or business. 2 Kent 389; 1 M. & S. 338; Lee v. Kilburn, 3 Gray (Mass.) 600; Mitchell v. Bradstreet Co., 116 Mo. 226, 22 S. W. 358, 724, 20 L. R. A. 138, 38 Am. St. Rep. 592; although his assets in value exceed the amount of his liability; In re Ramazzina, 110 Cal. 488, 42 Pac. 970; or the embarrassment is only temporary; Langham v. Lanier, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 4, 26 S. W. 255; but it is held that mere inability to pay debts promptly as they mature is not conclusive; Mensing v. Atchison (Tex.) 26 S. W. 509; that one who has sufficient property subject to legal process to satisfy all legal demands is not insolvent; • Smith v. Collins, 94 Ala. 394, 10

South. 334; and that a person who suspended business because of difficulties arising out of the commencement of an action was not necessarily an insolvent; American Water-works Co. of New Jersey v. Venuer, 18 N. Y. Supp. 379.

One who is unable to pay commercial paper in the due course of business is insolvent; Warren v. Nat. Bank, 10 Blatchf. 493, Fed. Cas. No. 17,202; Clarke v. Mott (Cal.) 33 Pac. 884.

A corporation is insolvent when its assets are insufficient for the payment of its debts, and it has ceased to do business, or has taken, or is in the act of taking, a step which will practically incapacitate it from conducting the corporate enterprise with reasonable prospect of success, or its embarrassments are such that early suspension and failure must ensue; Corey v. Wadsworth, 99 Ala. 68, 11 South. 350, 23 L. R. A. 618, 42 Am. St. Rep. 29.

A bank is insolvent when the cash value of its assets realizable in a reasonable time is not equal to its liabilities exclusive of stock liabilities; Ellis v. State, 138 Wis. 513, 119 N. W. 1110, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 444, 131 Am. St. Rep. 1022. An allegation that a corporation cannot pay its current obligations as they mature is sufficient for insolvency proceedings in equity; American Can Co. v. Preserving Co., 171 Fed. 540.

The clearing house rules, making members responsible for clearances of outside banks, for which they engage to clear, for one day after notice of the termination of their agreement, require payment of checks of such outside bank though known to be insolvent; and a contract for a deposit by the latter of cash and notes as indemnity for such clearances is valid, and the payments are not within a statute forbidding payments by an insolvent corporation made with intent to prefer creditors, and the money and securities held under the aforesaid contract are applicable to the amount of the checks so paid; O'Brien v. Grant, 146 N. Y. 163, 40 N. E. 871, 28 L. R. A. 361.

An insolvent building association may make an assessment on stock of a borrowing member to cover losses, and thereby equalize the members, so that they may go out on an equal footing at the closing up of the association; Wohlford v. Sav. Ass'n, 140 Ind. 662, 40 N. E. 694, 29 L. R. A. 177.

INSPECTION (Lat. inspicere, to look into). The examination of certain articles made by law subject to such examination, so that they may be declared fit for commerce. Quoted in Patapsco Guano Co. v. Board of Agriculture, 171 U. S. 345, 356, 18 Sup. Ct. 862, 43 L. Ed. 191.

The decision of the inspectors is not final; the object of the law is to protect the community from fraud, and to preserve the character of the merchandise abroad; Clints- man v. Northrop, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 45. See Griswold v. Ins. Co., 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 205; Hancock v. Sturges, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 331; Seaman v. Patten, 2 Cal. (N. Y.) 312. Quantity is as legitimate a subject of inspection as quality; State v. Ins. Co., 40 La. Ann. 465, 4 South. 504.

In Practice. Examination.<sup>1</sup> As to the right to inspect public records, see RECORDS.

INSPECTION LAWS. The right in the states to enact inspection laws, quarantine and health laws is undoubted and is recognized in the constitution; Story, Const. 515; Cooley, Const. Lim. 730. These may be carried to the extent of ordering the destruction of private property, when infected with disease or otherwise dangerous; id.; Thurlow v. Massachusetts, 5 How. (U. S.) 632, 12 L. Ed. 256.

The object of such laws is "to improve the quality of articles produced by the labor of the country; to fit them for exportation, or it may be for domestic use"; Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 203, 6 L. Ed. 23; to protect the community from frauds and impositions, and, as to articles designed for exportation, to preserve our reputation in foreign markets; Clintsman v. Northrop, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 46.

Whenever inspection laws act on the subject before it becomes an article of commerce, they are confessedly valid; and also when, although operating on articles in interstate commerce, they provide for inspection under the police power of a state in the interest of public health etc.; Minnesota v. Barber, 136 U. S. 313, 10 Sup. Ct. 862, 34 L. Ed. 455; Patapsco Guano Co. v. Board of Agriculture, 171 U. S. 345, 18 Sup. Ct. 862, 43 L. Ed. 191; so as to oleomargarine inspection; Plumley v. Massachusetts, 155 U. S. 461, 15 Sup. Ct. 154, 39 L. Ed. 223; so as to a statute regulating the sale of commercial fertilizers for the protection of the public; Steiner v. Ray, 84 Ala. 93, 4 South. 172, 5 Am. St. Rep. 332; Vanmeter v. Spurrier, 94 Ky. 22, 21 S. W. 337. A Virginia act for the inspection of flour was held invalid because it required the inspection of flour from other states when it was not required from the native product; Voight v. Wright, 141 U. S. 62, 11 Sup. Ct. 855, 35 L. Ed. 638; a statute for the inspection of fertilizers was held not applicable where the sale and delivery were without the state; Martin v. Guano Co., 77 Ga. 257.

An inspection law (hides) affecting interstate commerce, is not, for that reason, invalid unless it is in conflict with an act of congress, or is an attempt to regulate interstate commerce; New Mexico v. R. Co., 203 U. S. 38, 27 Sup. Ct. 1, 51 L. Ed. 78. Congress has not enacted any legislation destroying the right of a state to provide for the inspection of cattle and prohibiting the bringing in of diseased cattle not inspected and passed as healthy either by state or national officials; Asbell v. Kansas, 209 U. S. 251, 28 Sup. Ct. 485, 52 L. Ed. 778, 14 Ann. Cas. 1101.

A state may declare that certain articles shall not be sold within its limits without inspection, and charge the cost of the inspection on those offering the article for sale; Patapsco Guano Co. v. Board of Agriculture, 52 Fed. 690. The question of the constitutionality of an inspection law affecting interstate commerce depends not only upon whether the excess proceeds of the tax may be used for other purposes, but whether they are actually so used; Foote v. Maryland, 232 U. S. 494, 34 Sup. Ct. 377, 58 L. Ed. —. If it has a real relation to the protection of the people and is reasonable, it is not invalid because it may incidentally affect interstate commerce, provided it does not conflict with legislation enacted by congress pursuant to its constitutional authority; Savage v. Jones, 225 U. S. 501, 32 Sup. Ct. 790, 56 L. Ed. 1182. Prima facie the charge is reasonable; Red "C." Oil Mfg. Co. v. Board, 222 U. S. 380, 32 Sup. Ct. 152, 56 L. Ed. 240.

A state cannot, under the guise of exerting its police powers, or of enacting inspection laws, make discrimination against the products and industries of some of the states in favor of the products and industries of its own or of other states; Brimmer v. Rebman, 138 U. S. 78, 11 Sup. Ct. 213, 34 L. Ed. 862; Voight v. Wright, 141 U. S. 62, 11 Sup. Ct. 855, 35 L. Ed. 638.

See POLICE POWER; COMMERCE; LICENSE.

INSPECTOR. The name given to certain officers whose duties are to examine and inspect things over which they have jurisdiction: as, inspector of bark, one who is by law authorized to examine bark for exportation, and to approve or disapprove of its quality. Inspectors of customs are officers appointed by the general government.

INSPEXIMUS (Lat.). We have seen. A word sometimes used in letters patent, reciting a grant, inspeximus such former grant, and so reciting it verbatim: it then grants such further privileges as are thought convenient. 5 Co. 54.

Inspeximus charters appear to have originated in 11 Henry III, when he announced to all religious and other persons who wished to enjoy their liberties that they must renew their charters under the king's new seal. A renewal tax was levied.

It was not until the time of Edward I that such charters became common; in the 13th year of his reign their various forms were prescribed by parliament. An inspeximus is nothing more than a royal acknowledgment of having seen some diplomas granted by the king, or one of his predecessors, which he confirms under the great seal, etc.; A. M. Eaton in 1902 Am. Bar Ass'n

Rep. 310. They were also called charters of confirmation.

INSTALLATION, INSTALMENT. The act by which an officer is put in public possession of the place he is to fill. The president of the United States, or a governor, is installed into office, by being sworn agreeably to the constitution and laws.

INSTALMENT. A part of a debt due by contract, and agreed to be paid at a time different from that fixed for the payment of the other part. For example, if I engage to pay you one thousand dollars, in two payments, one on the first day of January and the other on the first day of July, each of these payments or obligations to pay will be an instalment.

In such case, each instalment is a separate debt so far that it may be tendered at any time, or the first may be sued for although the other shall not be due; 3 Dane, Abr. 493, 494; 1 Esp. 129; 1 Maule & S. 706.

Successive actions may be brought for instalments as they fall due; but all sums due when an action is begun must be included in it; Puckett v. Annuity Ass'n, 134 Mo. App. 501, 114 S. W. 1039. See SALES; PERFORMANCE; INDEPENDENT PROMISES.

INSTANCE. Literally, standing on, hence, urging, solicitation. Webster, Dict.

In Civil and French Law. In general, all sorts of actions and judicial demands. Dig. 44, 7, 58.

In Ecclesiastical Law. Causes of instance are those proceeded in at the solicitation of some party, as opposed to causes of office, which run in the name of the judge. Halif. Anal. p. 122.

INSTANCE COURT. In English Law. That branch of the admiralty court which had the jurisdiction of all matters except those relating to prizes.

The term is sometimes used in American law for purposes of explanation, but has no proper application to admiralty courts in the United States, where the powers of both instance and prize courts are conferred without any distinction; Glass v. The Betsy, 3 Dall. (U. S.) 6, 1 L. Ed. 485; The Emulous, 1 Gall. 563, Fed. Cas. No. 4,479; 3 Kent 355, 378. See ADMIRALTY.

INSTANCIA. In Spanish Law. The institution and prosecution of a suit from its inception until definitive judgment. The first instance, "primera instancia," is the prosecution of the suit before the judge competent to take cognizance of it at its inception; the second instance, "segunda instancia," is the exercise of the same action before the court of appellate jurisdiction; and the third instance, "tercera instancia," is the prosecution of the same suit, either by an application of revision before the appellate tribunal that has already decided the cause, or before some higher tribunal, having jurisdiction of the same.

All civil suits must be tried and decided, in the first instance, within three years; and all criminal, within two years.

As a general rule, three instances are admitted in all civil and criminal cases. Art. 285, Const. 1812.

INSTANTER (Lat.). Immediately; presently. This term, it is said, means that the act to which it applies shall be done within twenty-four hours; but a doubt has been suggested by whom is the account of the hours to be kept, and whether the term instanter as applied to the subject-matter may not be more properly taken to mean "before the rising of the court," when the act is to be done in court, or "before the shutting of the office the same night," when the act is to be done there; 6 East 587; Tidd, Pr., 3d ed. 508, n.; 3 Chitty, Pr. 112. See 3 Burr. 1509; Co. Litt. 157.

INSTANTLY. Immediately; directly; without delay; at once. The word is a frequent occurrence in indictments for murder where the death is charged as having been the immediate result of a wound or blow inflicted. Where the killing has been alleged to have been caused by a battery it is necessary to allege an assault and to specify the time when the mortal stroke was given and the time of the death; the allegation that he "instantly did die" is insufficient; Lester v. State, 9 Mo. 666; as was an indictment which described the assault and then charges that of the mortal wound inflicted by defendant the deceased "did instantly die;" State v. Lakey, 65 Mo. 217; otherwise had the averment been that the deceased "did then and there instantly die;" State v. Steeley, 65 Mo. 218, 27 Am. Rep. 271. 8 Dowl. 157; 11 Ad. & El. 127; 3 Per & Dav. 52.

INSTAR (Lat.). Like; resembling; equivalent: as, instar dentium, like teeth; instar omnium, equivalent to all.

INSTIGATION. The act by which one incites another to do something, as, to injure a third person, or to commit some crime or misdemeanor, to commence a suit, or to prosecute a criminal. See ACCOMPLICE.

INSTITOR (Lat.). In Civil Law. A clerk in a store; an agent.

He was so called because he watched over the business with which he was charged; and it is immaterial whether he was employed in making a sale in a store, or whether charged with any other business. Institor appellatus est ex eo, quod negotio gerendo instet; nec multum facit tabernæ sit prepositus, an cuilibet alii negotiationi; Dig. lib. 14, tit. 3, 1, 3. Mr. Bell says that the charge given to a clerk to manage a store or shop is called institorial power; 1 Bell, Com. 479, 5th ed.; Erskine, Inst. 3. 3. 46; 1

Stair, Inst. by Brodie, b. 1, tit. 11, §§ 12, 18, 19; Story, Ag. § 8.

INSTITUTE. In Scotch Law. The person first called in the tailzie; the rest, or the heirs of tailzie, are called substitutes; Erskine Pr. 3. 8. 8. See TAILZIE, HEIR OF; SUBSTITUTES.

In Civil Law. One who is appointed heir by testament, and is required to give the estate devised to another person, who is called the substitute.

To name or to make an heir by testament; Dig. 28. 5. 65. To make an accusation; to commence an action.

INSTITUTES. Elements of jurisprudence; text-books containing the principles of law made the foundation of legal studies.

The word was first used by the civilians to designate those books prepared for the student and supposed to embrace the fundamental legal principles arranged in an orderly manner. Two books of Institutes were known to the civil lawyers of antiquity,—Gaius and Justinian.

I. COKE'S INSTITUTES. Four volumes of commentaries upon various parts of the English law.

Sir Edward Coke wrote four volumes of Institutes, as he was pleased to call them, though they have little of the institutional method to warrant such a title. The first volume is a very extensive commentary upon an excellent little treatise of tenures, compiled by Judge Littleton in the reign of Edw. IV. This comment is a rich mine of valuable common-law learning, collected and heaped together from the ancient reports and year-books, but greatly defective in method. The second volume is a comment on many old acts of parliament, without any systematic order; the third, a more methodical treatise on the pleas of the crown; and the fourth, an account of the several species of courts. These Institutes are usually cited thus: the first volume as Co. Litt., or 1 Inst.; the second, third, and fourth as, 2, 3, or 4 Inst., without any author's name. 1 Bla. Com. 72.

II. GAIUS'S INSTITUTES. A tractate upon the Roman law, ascribed to Caius or Gaius.

Of the personal history of this jurist nothing is known. Even the spelling of his name is matter of controversy, and he is known by no other title than Gaius, or Caius. He is believed to have lived in the reign of Marcus Aurelius. The history of Gaius's Institutes is remarkable. In 1816, Niebuhr was sent to Rome by the king of Prussia. On his way thither, he spent two days in the cathedral library of Verona, and at this time discovered these Institutes, which had been lost to the jurists of the middle ages. In 1817, the Royal Academy of Berlin charged Goeschen, Bekker, and Hollweg with the duty of transcribing the discovered manuscript. In 1819, Goeschen gave the first completed edition, as far as the manuscript could be deciphered, to his fellow-jurists. It created an unusual sensation, and became a fruitful source of comment. It formed a new era in the study of Roman law. It gave the modern jurist the signal advantage of studying the source of the Institutes of Justinian. It is believed by the best modern scholars that Gaius was the first original tractate of the kind, not being compiled from former publications. The language of Gaius is clear, terse, and technical,—evidently written by a master of law and a master of the Latin tongue. The Institutes were unquestionably practical. There is no attempt at criticism or philosophical discussion: the disciple of Sabinus is content to teach law as he finds it. Its arrangement is solid and logical, and Justinian follows it with an almost servile imitation.

The best editions of Gaius are Goeschen's 2d ed., Berlin, 1824, in which the text was again collated by Bluhme, and the 3d ed. of Goeschen, Berlin, 1842, edited by Lachman from a critical revision by Goeschen which had been interrupted by his death. Gneist's edition (1857) is a recension of all the German editions prior to that date. In France, Gaius attracted equal attention, and we have three editions and translations: Boulet, Paris, 1827; Demangeat, 1866; and Pellat, 1870.

In 1859, Francesco Lisi, a learned Italian scholar, published, at Bologna, a new edition of the first book of Gaius, with an Italian translation en regard. The edition is accompanied and enriched by many valuable notes, printed in both Latin and Italian.

See also Abdy & Walker; S. F. Harris; Muirhead; T. L. Mears, Gaius, Poste's translation, 1890.

III. JUSTINIAN'S INSTITUTES are an abridgment of the Code and Digest, composed by order of that emperor and under his guidance, with an intention to give a summary knowledge of the law to those persons not versed in it, and particularly to students. Inst. Proem. § 3.

The lawyers employed to compile it were Tribonian, Theophilus, and Dorotheus. The work was first published on the 21st of November, 529, and received the sanction of statute law by order of the emperor. They are divided into four books: each book is divided into titles, and each title into separate paragraphs or sections, preceded by an introductory part. The first part is called principium, because it is the commencement of the title; those which follow are numbered, and called paragraphs. The work treats of the rights of persons, of things, and of actions. The first book treats of persons; the second, third, and the first five titles of the fourth book, of things; and the remainder of the fourth book, of actions. The method of citing the Institutes should be understood, and is now commonly by giving the number of the book, title, and section, thus: Inst. I. 2. 5.—thereby indicating book I. title 2, section 5. Where it is intended to indicate the first paragraph, or principium, thus: Inst. B. I. 2. pr. Frequently the citation is simply I. or J. I. 2. 5. A second mode of citation is thus: § 5, Inst. or I. I. 2.—meaning book I, title 2, paragraph 5. A third method of citation, and one in universal use with the older jurists, was by giving the name of the title and the first words of the paragraph referred to, thus: § senatusconsultum est I de jure nat. gen. et civil.—which means, as before, Inst. B. I. tit. 2, § 5. See 1 Colquhoun, s. 61.

The first printed edition of the Institutes is that of Schoyffer, fol. 1468. The last critical German edition is that of Schrader, 4to, Berlin, 1832. This work of Schrader is the most learned and most elaborate commentary on the text of Justinian in any language, and was intended to form a part of the Berlin Corpus Juris. It is impossible in this brief article to name all the commentaries on these Institutes, which in all ages have commanded the study and admiration of jurists. More than one hundred and fifty years ago one Homberg printed a tract De Multitudine nimia Commentatorum in Institutiones Juris. But we must refer the reader to the best recent French and English editions. Ortolan's Institutes de l'Empereur Justinien avec le texte, la traduction en regard, et les explications sous chaque paragraphe, Paris, 3 vols., 8th Ed. 1870; Sohm's Institutes by Ledlie, 1892. This is, by common consent of scholars, regarded as the best historical edition of the Institutes ever published. Du Caurroy's Institutes de Justinien traduites et expliquées par A. M. Du Caurroy, Paris, 1851, 8th ed. 2 vols. 8vo. The Institutes of Justinian: with English Introduction, Translation, and Notes, by Thomas Collet Sandars, M. A. London, 1853, 8vo; 9th Ed. 1898, 1910. This work has been prepared expressly for beginners, and is founded mainly upon Ortolan, with a liberal use of LaGrange, Du Caurroy, Warnkoenig, and Puchta, as well as Harris and Cooper. The English edition of Harris, and the American one of Cooper, have ceased to attract attention. See J. B. Moyle's Institutiones Justiniani.

The most authoritative German treatises on the Pandects are the following: Windscheid, Dr. B., 3d ed., Dusseldorf, 1875; 2 vols.; Vangerow, Dr. K. A., 7th ed., Marburg, 1869; Brintz, Dr. A. B., 2d ed., Erlangen, 1879; Ihering, Dr. R., Jena, 1881. Incomparably the most philosophical exposition of the Roman system of jurisprudence is Savigny's Gesch. des röm. Rechts, coupled with his System des heut. röm. Rechts, the latter published in Berlin in 1840. Of both, French translations have been published by Guenoux. See also Sandars' Justinian, with an introduction by William G. Hammond (1876), and Abdy and Walker's translation of the Institutes (1876), and T. L. Mears.

IV. THEOPHILUS' INSTITUTES. A paraphrase of Justinian, made, it is believed, soon after A. D. 533.

It is generally supposed that in A. D. 534, 535, and 536, Theophilus read his commentary in Greek to his pupils in the law school of Constantinople. He is conjectured to have died some time in A. D. 536. This paraphrase maintained itself as a manual of law until the eighth or tenth century. This text was used in the time of Hexabiblos of Harmenipulus, the last of the Greek jurists. It is also conjectured that Theophilus was not the editor of his own paraphrase, but that it was drawn up by some of his pupils after his explanations and lectures, inasmuch as it contains certain barbarous phrases, and the texts of the manuscripts vary greatly from each other.

It has, however, always been somewhat in use, and jurists consider that its study aids the text of the Institutes; and Cujas and Hugo have both praised it. The first edition was that of Zuichem, fol., Basle, 1531; the best edition is that of Reitz, 2 vols. 4to, 1751, Haag. There is a German translation by Wüsterman, 1823, 2 vols. 8vo; and a French translation by Mons. Ilrégier, Paris, 1847, 8vo, whose edition is prefaced by a learned and valuable introduction and dissertation. Consult Mortreuil, Hist. Du Droit Byzant., Paris, 1843; Smith, *Dict. INSTITUTION (Lat. instituere, to form, to establish).

In Civil Law. The appointment of an heir; the act by which a testator nominates one or more persons to succeed him in all his rights active and passive. Halifax, Anal. 39; Pothier, Tr. des Donations testamentaires, c. 2, s. 1, § 1; La. Civ. Code, 1598; Dig. 28. 5; 1, 1; 28. 6. 1, 2, § 4.

In Ecclesiastical Law. To become a parson or vicar, four things are necessary, viz.: holy orders, presentation, institution, induction. Institution is a kind of investiture of the spiritual part of the benefice; for by institution the care of the souls of the parish is committed to the charge of the clerk,—previous to which the oath against simony and of allegiance and supremacy are to be taken. By institution the benefice is full: so that there can be no fresh presentation (except the patron be the king), and the clerk may enter on parsonage-house and glebe and take the tithes; but he cannot grant or let them, or bring an action for them, till induction. See 1 Bla. Com. 389; 1 Burn, Eccl. Law 169.

In Political Law. A law, rite, or ceremony enjoined by authority as a permanent rule of conduct or of government: as, the Institutions of Lycurgus. Webster, Dict. An organized society, established either by law or the authority of individuals, for promoting any object, public or social. A private school or college may, by courtesy, be called an institution; but in legal parlance it implies foundation by law, by enactment or prescription; one may open and keep a private school, but cannot properly be said to institute it; Dodge v. Williams, 46 Wis. 70, 1 N. W. 92, 50 N. W. 1103.

In Practice. The commencement of an action: as, A B has instituted a suit against C D to recover damages for trespass.

INSTRUCTIONS. Orders given by a principal to his agent in relation to the business of his agency.

The agent is bound to obey the instructions he has received; and when he neglects so to do he is responsible for the consequences, unless he is justified by matter of necessity; Dusar v. Perit, 4 Binn. (Pa.) 361; 1 Liverm. Ag. 368. See AGENT.

In Practice. The statement of a cause of action given by a client to his attorney, and which, where such is the practice, are sent to his pleader to put into legal form of a declaration. Warren, Law Stud. 284.

Instructions to counsel are their indemnity for any aspersions they may make on the opposite party; but attorneys who have a just regard to their own reputation will be cautious, even under instructions, not to make any unnecessary attack upon a party or witness. For such unjustifiable conduct the counsel will be held responsible. Eunom. Dial. 2, § 43, p. 132. For a form of instructions, see 3 Chitty, Pr. 117, 120, n.

Also the written or oral address of the presiding judge, in jury trials, delivered usually at the close of the arguments of counsel to the jury, informing them of the law applicable to the cause at trial, and their duties thereunder. A. & E. Encyc.

An omission to give instructions is not assignable as error where no request was made therefor in the court below; State v. Jackson, 112 N. C. 851, 17 S. E. 149; Bailey v. State, 26 Tex. App. 706, 9 S. W. 270; Duncombe v. Powers, 75 Ia. 185, 39 N. W. 261; Stuckslager v. Neel, 123 Pa. 53, 16 Atl. 94; State v. Johnson, 37 Minn. 493, 35 N. W. 373; People v. Fice, 97 Cal. 459, 32 Pac. 531; and errors or inaccuracies in charging the jury cannot be considered on appeal unless duly excepted to on the trial; State v. Hair, 37 Minn. 351, 34 N. W. 893; Georgia Pac. R. Co. v. West, 66 Miss. 310, 6 South. 207; Paddleford v. Cook, 74 Ia. 433, 38 N. W. 137; Frauenthal v. Bridgeman, 50 Ark. 348, 7 S. W. 388; Schroeder v. Rinehard, 25 Neb. 75, 40 N. W. 593; Chemical Co. of Canton v. Johnson, 101 N. C. 223, 7 S. E. 770, 775; a refusal to give instructions not excepted to cannot be complained of on appeal; Burns v. People, 126 Ill. 282, 18 N. E. 550. Where a charge correctly states the law of the case, a judgment will not be reversed because the charge was abstract; Bonner v. State, 97 Ala. 47, 12 South. 408; State v. King, 111 Mo. 576, 20 S. W. 299; but an instruction is wrong which states hypothetically facts as to which there is no evidence; Jackson v. State, 88 Ga. 784, 15 S. E. 677; State v. Brackett, 45 Ia. Ann. 46, 12 South. 129. It is not error to recall a jury and charge them again at their request; Caston v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 304, 20 S. W. 585. The improper admission of evidence is cured by an instruction not to consider the evidence so admitted; Shepard v. Ry. Co., 77 Ia. 54, 41 N. W. 504; Durant v. Mining Co., 97 Mo. 62, 10 S. W. 484; Dismukes v. State, 83 Ala. 287, 3 South. 671. Refusal to give correct instructions is not error if the court has already given them on the same point; Bener v. Edgington, 76 Ia. 105, 40 N. W. 117; People v. Madden, 76 Cal. 521, 18 Pac. 402; Beck v. State, 76 Ga. 452; Louisville, N. A. & C. Ry. Co. v. Wright, 115 Ind. 394, 16 N. E. 145, 17 N. E. 584, 7 Am. St. Rep. 432; Va. Midland R. Co. v. White, 84 Va. 498, 5 S. E. 573, 10 Am. St. Rep. 874; or where given in different words; Grand Trunk Ry. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 408, 12 Sup. Ct. 679, 36 L. Ed. 485; Anthony v. R. Co., 132 U. S. 172, 10 Sup. Ct. 53, 33 L. Ed. 301.

The principles governing the subject of peremptory instructions were clearly stated by Harlan, J., in Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Randolph, 78 Fed. 754, 24 C. C. A. 305:

"It is well settled that if, at the close of the plaintiff's evidence, the court refuses to give a peremptory instruction for the defendant, such refusal cannot be assigned for error if the defendant does not stand upon the case made by the plaintiff, but introduces evidence in support of his defence" (citing Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Cummings, 106 U. S. 700, 1 Sup. Ct. 493, 27 L. Ed. 266; Accident Ins. Co. v. Crandal, 120 U. S. 527, 7 Sup. Ct. 635, 30 L. Ed. 740; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Callaghan, 161 U. S. 91, 16 Sup. Ct. 493, 40 L. Ed. 628). "But the failure of the defendant, at the close of the plaintiff's evidence, to ask a peremptory instruction will not, of itself, preclude such a motion at the close of the whole evidence." Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Randolph, 78 Fed. 759, 24 C. C. A. 305.

"A mere scintilla of evidence in favor of one party does not entitle him of right to go to the jury" (citing Schuykill & D. Imp. & R. Co. v. Munson, 14 Wall. [U. S.] 442, 448, 20 L. Ed. 867). Nor can it "be withdrawn from the consideration of the jury simply because, in the judgment of the court, there is a preponderance of evidence in favor of the party asking a peremptory instruction. If the facts are entirely undisputed or uncontradicted, or if, upon any issue dependent upon facts, there is no evidence whatever in favor of one party, or, what is the same thing, if the evidence is so slight as to justify the court in regarding the proof as substantially all one way, then the court may direct a verdict according to its view of the law arising upon such a case. If a verdict is rendered contrary to the evidence, the remedy of the losing party is a motion for a new trial." 78 Fed. 759, 24 C. C. A. 305.

The conclusions were thus stated:

"That there must be something more than a scintilla of evidence supporting the case of the party upon whom the burden of proof rests, to require the submission of the case to the jury; that where there is a real conflict of evidence on a question of fact, whatever may be the opinion of the judge who tries the case as to the value of that evidence, he must leave the consideration of it for the decision of the jury; that where there are material and substantial facts which, if credited by the jury, would in law justify a verdict in favor of one party, it is not error for the trial judge to refuse a peremptory instruction to the jury; that it is not a 'proper standard to settle for a peremptory instruction that the court, after weighing the evidence in the case, would, upon motion for a new trial, set aside the verdict,' and that the court 'may, and often should, set aside a verdict, when clearly against the weight of the evidence, where it would not be justified in directing a verdict'; that, upon reason and authority, 'there is a difference between the legal discretion of the court to set aside a verdict as against the weight of evidence, and that obligation which the court has to withdraw a case from the jury, or direct a verdict for insufficiency of evidence'; and that 'in the latter case it must be so insufficient in fact as to be insufficient in law.'" 78 Fed. 760, 24 C. C. A. 305 (citing Mt. Adams & E. P. Inclined R. Co. v. Lowery, 74 Fed. 463, 20 C. C. A. 596).

In French Law. The means used and formality employed to prepare a case for trial. It is generally applied to criminal cases, and is then called criminal instruction; it is then defined the acts and proceedings which tend to prove positively a crime or delict, in order to inflict on the guilty person the punishment which he deserves.

INSTRUMENT. A document or writing which gives formal expression to a legal act or agreement, for the purpose of creating, securing, modifying, or terminating a right; a writing executed and delivered as the evidence of an act or agreement.

The writing which contains some agreement, and is so called because it has been prepared as a memorial of what has taken place or been agreed upon. It includes bills, bonds, conveyances, leases, mortgages, promissory notes, and wills, but scarcely accounts, ordinary letters or memoranda. The agreement and the instrument in which it is contained are very different things,—the latter being only evidence of the existence of the former. The instrument or form of the contract may be valid, but a contract itself may be void on account of fraud. See Ayliffe, Parerg. 305; Dun. Adm. Pr. 220. A forthcoming bond is an "instrument for the payment of money." Coe v. Straus, 11 Wis. 72. A bank check payable in confederate currency was held not "an instrument payable in money" under the Alabama Code in relation to commercial paper; Bank of Mobile v. Brown, 42 Ala. 108.

A statute requiring "any instrument of writing" sued on to be filed, does not apply to a contract signed by both parties and deposited with a third person for safe keeping, it applies only to obligations executed only by the party sued; Bowling v. Hax, 55 Mo. 446.

INSTRUMENT OF SASINE. An instrument in Scotland by which the delivery of "sasine" (i. e. seisin) is attested. Moz. & W.

INSTRUMENTA (Lat.). That kind of evidence which consists of writings not under seal: as, court-rolls, accounts, and the like. 3 Co. Litt., Thomas ed. 487.

INSUFFICIENCY. In Chancery Practice. After filing of defendant's answer, the plaintiff has six weeks in which to file exceptions to it for insufficiency,—which is the fault of not replying specifically to specific charges in the bill. Smith, Ch. Pr. 344; Mitf. Eq. Pl. 376, note. Sanders, Ord. in Ch., Index; Beach, Mod. Eq. Pr. 413.

Under the Judicature Act, 1875, order xxxi., rules 6, 9, 10, interrogatories are to be answered by affidavit, and if the party interrogated answers insufficiently, the party interrogating may apply to the court for an order requiring him to answer further. Moz. & W.

INSULA (Lat. island). A house not connected with other houses, but separated by a surrounding space of ground. Calvinus, Lex.

INSULAR POSSESSIONS. See PHILIPPINES; PORTO RICO; TERRITORY.

INSUPER. Moreover; over and above. An old exchequer term, applied to a charge made upon a person in his account. Blount.

INSURABLE INTEREST. Such an interest in a subject of insurance as will entitle the person possessing it to obtain insurance.

It is essential to the contract of insurance, as distinguished from a wager, that the assured should have a legally recognizable interest in the insured subject, the pecuniary value of which may be appreciated and computed or valued. An earlier examination of the subject, as connected with life insurance, results in the conclusion from the authorities, that at common law that contract was not one of indemnity, and wagering policies were not unlawful, and therefore that logically, in such policies, an insurable interest should not be required, but that the American courts adopted what has been termed a rule of American common law that all wagers were void on grounds of public policy and, therefore, that there must be an insurable interest; 35 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 65. This rule, it was said, obtains in all the states except New Jersey and Rhode Island; Trenton Mut. Life & Fire Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 24 N. J. L. 576; Mowry v. Home Life Ins. Co., 9 R. I. 354; and see Clark v. Allen, 11 R. I. 439, 23 Am. Rep. 496.

Absence of an insurable interest is always a defense for the insurer even though there is an incontestible clause; Bromleys' Adm'r v. Life Ins. Co., 122 Ky. 402, 92 S. W. 17, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 747, 121 Am. St. Rep. 467, 12 Ann. Cas. 685.

The case of Godsall v. Boldero, 9 East 72, was so generally cited and relied on in the American cases that it is not easy to estimate the influence of that case before it was overruled by Dalby v. I. & L. L. Assurance Company, 15 C. B. 365. It is of special interest to note that the New Jersey case in which the court expressly refused to follow Godsall v. Boldero, was decided about the time of the case which overruled it, but before it was reported in the United States. See also 2 Sm. L. Cas., 9th Am. ed. 1530, where both the English cases mentioned are reported, and the authorities in both countries are collected, the conclusion of the American editors being, that as to fire, marine, and life insurance there must be some interest in the insurer. See also Biddle, Ins. § 184, where it is said that wagering policies were not void in England at common law. See WAGER.

Where the subject-matter is property, as in fire and marine insurance, the question whether there is an insurable interest is generally free from difficulty and the rule established by the decisions is comparatively simple. It is not requisite that the insured party should have an absolute property in the insured subject, or that the subject or interest should be one that can be exclusively possessed or be transferable by delivery or assignment. Insurable interest involves neither legal nor equitable title; Carter v. Ins. Co., 12 Ia. 287; Pedrick v. Fisher, 1 Sprague 565, Fed. Cas. No. 10,900. The subject or interest must, however, be such that it may be destroyed, lost, damaged, diminished, or intercepted by the risks insured against. The interests usually insured are those of the owner in any species of property, of mortgagor, mortgagee, holder of bottomry or respondentia bond, of an agent, consignee, lessee, factor, carrier, bailee, or party having a lien or entitled to a rent or income, or being liable to a loss depending upon certain conditions or contingencies, or having the certainty or probability of a profit or pecuniary benefit depending on the insured subject; 1 Phill. Ins. c. 3; 11 E. L. & Eq. 2; 48 id. 292; Cobb v. Ins. Co., 6 Gray (Mass.) 192; Allen v. Ins. Co., 2 Md. 111; Rohrbach v. Ins. Co., 62 N. Y. 47, 20 Am. Rep. 451; Home Protection of North Ala. v. Caldwell Bros., 85 Ala. 607, 5 South. 338; California Ins. Co. v. Compress Co., 133 U. S. 387, 10 Sup. Ct. 365, 33 L. Ed. 730. Property subject to a deed of trust is encumbered under a provision against a chattel mortgage, and the insured has not unconditional and sole ownership; Hunt v. Fire Ins. Co., 196 U. S. 47, 25 Sup. Ct. 179, 49 L. Ed. 381. See Clymer Opera Co. v. Fire Ins. Co., 238 Pa. 137, 85 Atl. 1111.

It was formerly held that the interest in property insured must exist when the insurance was effected, and also at the time of the loss; Howard v. Ins. Co., 3 Den. (N. Y.) 301; Chrisman v. Ins. Co., 16 Or. 283, 18 Pac. 466; Folsom v. Ins. Co., 38 Me. 414; Biddle, Ins. § 157. This is not now the rule;

Arnould, Ins. 59; and in a case in which the insurance was upon a cargo, "on account of whom it may concern," the author just cited is approvingly quoted by Mr. Justice Swayne to the effect that, "it is now clearly established that an insurable interest, subsisting during the risk and at the time of loss, is sufficient, and the assured need not also allege or prove that he was interested at the time of effecting the policy," and he adds, "This is consistent with reason and justice, and is supported by analogies of the law in other cases." Hooper v. Robinson, 98 U. S. 528, 25 L. Ed. 219; Sun Ins. Office of London v. Merz, 64 N. J. L. 301, 45 Atl. 785, 52 L. R. A. 330.

It has been held that there is an insurable interest in an attaching creditor; 86 Me. 518; a purchaser in possession under a contract of sale; Dupuy v. Ins. Co., 63 Fed. 680; Quinn v. Parke & Lacy Machinery Co., 5 Wash. 276, 31 Pac. 866; Carpenter v. Ins. Co., 135 N. Y. 298, 31 N. E. 1015; 21 Can. S. C. R. 288; a person admitted as a partner, though the consideration was unpaid; Hanover Fire Ins. Co. v. Shrader, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 255, 31 S. W. 1100, 32 S. W. 344; a husband, in personal property in the name of his wife; id.; a commission merchant in goods consigned to him; Putnam v. Ins. Co., 5 Metc. (Mass.) 386; persons liable by contract, statute, or common law for the safe keeping of property; Savage v. Ins. Co., 36 N. Y. 655; carriers; Chase v. Ins. Co., 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 595; railroad companies; Monadnock R. Co. v. Ins. Co., 113 Mass. 77; warehousemen; Pelzer Mfg. Co. v. Office, 36 S. C. 213, 15 S. E. 562; a pipeline company in oil in its tanks; Western & A. Pipe Lines v. Ins. Co., 145 Pa. 347, 22 Atl. 665, 27 Am. St. Rep. 703; a sheriff in goods levied on; White v. Madison, 26 N. Y. 117; Warren v. Ins. Co., 31 Ia. 464, 7 Am. Rep. 160; one liable as indorser of a mortgage note; Williams v. Ins. Co., 107 Mass. 377, 9 Am. Rep. 41; or a trustee liable for the safe-keeping of property; Howard Fire Ins. Co. v. Chase, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 509, 18 L. Ed. 524; or who gives bond for its delivery; Fireman's Ins. Co. v. Powell, 13 B. Mon. (Ky.) 311; one in possession for life under a parol agreement to pay repairs, taxes, and insurance; Berry v. Ins. Co., 132 N. Y. 49, 30 N. E. 254, 28 Am. St. Rep. 548; a carpenter or builder erecting or repairing a building, to be paid for on completion; Protection Ins. Co. v. Hall, 15 B. Mon. (Ky.) 411; a vendor of land before payment in full; Wood v. North Western Ins. Co., 46 N. Y. 421; (but not one paid in full who has not conveyed; 2 N. S. W. L. R. 239); a lessor; Ely v. Ely, 80 Ill. 532; a tenant; id.; or subtenant; Georgia Home Ins. Co. v. Jones, 49 Miss. 80; (but not a tenant of glebe land after death of the lessor; 20 U. C. C. P. 170); a tenant by the curtesy; Harris v. Ins. Co., 50 Pa. 341; a simple contract creditor of the estate of a deceased person in lands of the latter, though subject to dower and homestead rights; Creed v. Sun Fire Office of London, 101 Ala. 522, 14 South. 323, 23 L. R. A. 177, 46 Am. St. Rep. 134; a mechanic's lien holder; Stout v. Ins. Co., 12 Ia. 371, 79 Am. Dec. 539; the successful bidder at an execution sale; Aetna Ins. Co. v. Miers, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 139; the owner of lands, on buildings in process of erection; Foley v. Ins. Co., 71 Hun 369, 24 N. Y. Supp. 1131; the grantee of property conveyed in fraud of creditors; German Ins. Co. of Freeport v. Hyman, 34 Neb. 704, 52 N. W. 401; a grantee of property, although the conveyance may be subsequently declared fraudulent on petition of creditors before the loss occurred; Steinmeyer v. Steinmeyer, 64 S. C. 413, 42 S. E. 184, 59 L. R. A. 319, 92 Am. St. Rep. 809; one holding property in trust; Cross v. Ins. Co., 132 N. Y. 133, 30 N. E. 390; or who has an equitable interest; Swift v. Ins. Co., 18 Vt. 305; a mortgagee, to the extent of his mortgage interest; Fox v. Ins. Co., 52 Me. 333; Holbrook v. Ins. Co., 1 Curt. C. C. 193, Fed. Cas. No. 6,589; and a mortgagor, on his interest in the same building; Traders' Ins. Co. v. Robert, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 405; Strong v. Ins. Co., 10 Pick. (Mass.) 40, 20 Am. Dec. 507; but the interests are independent and insurance by the mortgagor cannot be claimed by the mortgagee; McDonald v. Black's Adm'r, 20 Ohio 185, 55 Am. Dec. 448; where the mortgagor insures and makes the loss payable to the mortgagee, as his interest may appear, the company is estopped to deny the insurable interest; Appleton Iron Co. v. Assurance Co., 46 Wis. 23, 1 N. W. 9, 50 N. W. 1100; a mortgagor who conveys subject to the mortgage, has an insurable interest in the real estate, being liable to the mortgagee for any deficiency; Hanover Fire Ins. Co. v. Bohn, 48 Neb. 743, 67 N. W. 774, 58 Am. St. Rep. 719. A partner may have an insurable interest in a building erected by the partnership on land of the other partner; Converse v. Ins. Co., 10 Cush. (Mass.) 37; and an agent in control may insure the property in his own name; Roberts v. Ins. Co., 165 Pa. 55, 30 Atl. 450, 44 Am. St. Rep. 642; a master of a ship on his right to primage on freight; Pedrick v. Fisher, 1 Sprague 565, Fed. Cas. No. 10,900; or a half-owner of property in possession, may, if so authorized by the other owners, insure all the property in his own name; Hiebner v. Ins. Co., 55 Ill. App. 275.

A partnership has been held to have no insurable interest in household furniture and wearing apparel of one of the partners; Georgia Home Ins. Co. v. Hall, 94 Ga. 630, 21 S. E. 828; so also an administratrix in real estate of the intestate; Bradford v. Ins. Co., 8 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 261, note; a charterer, who advances on the personal credit of the owner, who must pay, without regard to the issue of the voyage; Lee v. Barreda, 16 Md. 190; a stockholder as an individual in the property of the corporation; Phillips v. Ins. Co., 20 Ohio 174. It was held that an interest in the profit to be derived by the insured from the adventure of laying an Atlantic cable was insurable; though the insured was a shareholder in the company and would derive his profits from dividends; L. R. 2 Exch. 139.

Life Insurance. The insurable interest in life insurance rests upon a different basis from that on property. It has been said "that while in fire and marine insurance it is the interest and not the thing that is insured, in life insurance it is the thing and not the interest;" 35 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 79.

With regard to the nature and amount of interest necessary for a policy of life insurance, no definite general principle seems yet to have been established, though the classes of insurable interests have been increasing. Every person has an insurable interest in his own life; Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. France, 94 U. S. 561, 24 L. Ed. 287; Union Fraternal League v. Walton, 109 Ga. 1, 34 S. E. 317, 46 L. R. A. 424, 77 Am. St. Rep. 350; Bloomington Mut. Ben. Ass'n v. Blue, 120 Ill. 121, 11 N. E. 331, 60 Am. Rep. 558; Campbell v. Life Ins. Co., 98 Mass. 381; Scott v. Dickson, 108 Pa. 6, 56 Am. Rep. 192; 1 Moo. & Rob. 481. It has been a much mooted question whether the beneficiary must have an interest. It has been held in many cases that a person may insure his own life and pay the premiums, for a beneficiary designated by him; Campbell v. Ins. Co., 98 Mass. 381; Gambis v. Life Ins. Co., 50 Mo. 44; Olmsted v. Keyes, 85 N. Y. 593; and there are dicta to this effect, frequently referred to, of Sharswood, J., American & Health Ins. Co. v. Robertshaw, 26 Pa. 189, and Paxson, J., in Scott v. Dickson, 108 Pa. 6, 56 Am. Rep. 192. To the contrary are Gilbert v. Moose's Adm'rs, 104 Pa. 74, 49 Am. Rep. 570; Watson v. Mut. Life Ass'n, 21 Fed. 698; and see Mutual Benefit Ass'n v. Hoyt, 46 Mich. 473, 9 N. W. 497, and a dictum in Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. France, 94 U. S. 561, 24 L. Ed. 287. If the beneficiary pays the premiums, it is generally held that he must have an interest; Goldbaum v. Leon, 79 Tex. 638, 15 S. W. 564; Amick v. Butler, 111 Ind. 578, 12 N. E. 518, 60 Am. Rep. 722; Riner v. Riner, 166 Pa. 617, 31 Atl. 347, 45 Am. St. Rep. 693. See Biddle, Ins. § 194; 35 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 79, where the authorities are collected.

It was held that when the policy is caused by the assured to be issued to another, the effect is the same as if issued to the applicant and assigned to the other, and an insurable interest is not required; Classey v. Ins. Co., 84 Hun 350, 32 N. Y. Supp. 335. A member of a beneficial association may change the beneficiary according to the rule and substitute a new one without regard to insurable interest; 22 Wash. L. R. 329; and where the policy was for the benefit of the insured unless he sustained a fatal accident, and in that case to a nephew, the latter contingency having happened, the nephew was not required to show an insurable interest; American Employers' Liability Ins. Co. v. Barr, 68 Fed. 873, 16 C. C. A. 51.

The interest required to support an insurance on the life of another has been found by the courts difficult to define, and indeed as was said they "have left it very much undefined;" Mowry v. Ins. Co., 9 R. I. 346. Many attempts to formulate a definition have been made, but they are similar mainly in their vagueness and generality. One of those most quoted was that of Chief Justice Shaw, in Loomis v. Ins. Co., 6 Gray (Mass.) 396: "It must appear that the insured has some interest in the life of the cestui que vie; that his temporal affairs, his just hopes and well-grounded expectations of support, of patronage, and advantages in life will be impaired so that the real purpose is not a wager, but to secure such advantage, supposed to depend on the life of another; such, we suppose, would be sufficient to prevent it from being regarded as a mere wager.

. . . We cannot doubt that a parent has an interest in the life of a child, and, vice versa, a child in that of a parent, not merely on the ground of a provision of law that parents and grandparents are bound to support their lineal kindred when they may stand in need of relief, but upon considerations of strong morals and the force of natural affection between near kindred, operating often more efficaciously than those of positive law." This was quoted with approval in Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Schaefer, 94 U. S. 457, 24 L. Ed. 251, and in the opinion, Bradley, J., added some observations not more definite: "Precisely what interest is necessary in order to take a policy out of the category of a mere wager has been the subject of much discussion. In marine and fire insurance the difficulty is not so great, because there insurance is considered as strictly an indemnity. But in life insurance the loss can seldom be measured by pecuniary values. Still, an interest of some sort in the insured life must exist. A man cannot take out insurance on the life of a total stranger, nor on that of one who is not so connected with him as to make the continuance of the life a matter of some real interest to him. . . . Indeed, it may be said generally that any reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit or advantage from the continued life of another creates an insurable interest in such life. . . . The essential thing is, that the policy shall be obtained in good faith, and not for the purpose of speculating upon the hazard of a life in which the insured has no interest." In the same court, later, Field, J., in Warnock v. Davis, 104 U. S. 775, 26 L. Ed. 924, says: "It may be stated generally, however, to be such an interest arising from the relations of the party obtaining the insurance, either as creditor of or surety for the assured, or from the ties of blood or marriage to him, as will justify a reasonable expectation of advantage or benefit from the continuance of his life. It is not necessary that the expectation of advantage or benefit should be always capable of pecuniary estimation. . . . But in all cases there must be a reasonable ground, founded on the relations of the parties to each other, either pecuniary or of blood or affinity, to expect some benefit or advantage from the continuance of the life of the assured." The last quotation was approved in Appeal of Corson, 113 Pa. 438, 6 Atl. 213, 57 Am. Rep. 479.

Notwithstanding the high authority both of these judges and the courts for which they were speaking, their utterances have been characterized as dicta, and such they are technically, but they undoubtedly fairly represent the views of those courts and all others who recognize that the interest may be based upon kinship and need not be pecuniary. Any effort to extract a more precise definition from the American cases is likely to end in the conclusion of another able judge, who said: "The question, what is such an interest in the life of another as will support a contract of insurance upon the life, is one to which a complete and satisfactory answer, resting upon sound principles, can hardly yet be said to have been given;" Hoar, J., in Forbes v. Ins. Co., 15 Gray (Mass.) 249, 77 Am. Dec. 360.

In England a pecuniary interest is required and must be proved; [1892] 1 Q. B. 864; with the possible exception that it is presumed in case of a wife who insures the life of her husband; Peake, Add. Cas. 70. The American courts take a less restricted view as shown by the definitions quoted, but no certain rule can be stated and the cases must be referred to, to ascertain whether any given relationship has been held sufficient.

A creditor may always insure the life of the debtor; Ulrich v. Reineohl, 143 Pa. 238, 22 Atl. 862, 13 L. R. A. 433, 24 Am. St. Rep. 534; Martin v. Stubbings, 126 Ill. 387, 18 N. E. 657, 9 Am. St. Rep. 620; Rittler v. Smith, 70 Md. 261, 16 Atl. 890, 2 L. R. A. 844; Mace v. Life Ass'n, 101 N. C. 122, 7 S. E. 674; and in such case it has been termed a contract of indemnity, differing from other life insurance; Sharswood, J., in 4 Big. L. & Ac. Cas. 458; but this would be only as to the creditor; 15 C. B. 365; Goldbaum v. Leon, 79 Tex. 638, 15 S. W. 564; Crotty v. Ins. Co., 144 U. S. 621, 12 Sup. Ct. 749, 36 L. Ed. 566; and it is said that there is no further interest after the payment of the debt; id.; Ulrich v. Reineohl, 143 Pa. 238, 22 Atl. 862, 13 L. R. A. 433, 24 Am. St. Rep. 534; but the question of interest is determined at the time of insurance and not of loss; see infra; Biddle, Ins. § 189. When the debtor pays the premiums, and assigns the policy as collateral security, the policy is in trust for him, and he is entitled to have it delivered up to him on payment; L. R. 5 Ch. App. 32; but it is otherwise if the creditor pays the premiums and there is no agreement for redemption; 2 De G. & J. 582; Appeal of Corson, 113 Pa. 438, 6 Atl. 213, 57 Am. Rep. 479.

In cases other than these of creditors it may be said, in the language of Mr. Justice Bradley, that any reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit or advantage from the continued life of another creates an insurable interest in such life; Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Schaefer, 94 U. S. 457, 24 L. Ed. 251; United Brethren Mut. Aid Soc. v. McDonald, 122 Pa. 324, 15 Atl. 439, 1 L. R. A. 238, 9 Am. St. Rep. 111; Bevin v. Ins. Co., 23 Conn. 244; Valton v. Assurance Society, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 9; McKee v. Ins. Co., 28 Mo. 383, 75 Am. Dec. 129; 28 E. L. & Eq. 312; Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. O'Brien, 92 Mich. 584, 52 N. W. 1012.

It has been held that there was an insurable interest in a tenant, in the life of the landlord who had a life estate; Scott v. Dickson, 108 Pa. 6, 56 Am. Rep. 192; or of one partner in the life of another; Valton v. Assurance Co., 20 N. Y. 32; whose interest was not fully paid for; Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Luchs, 108 U. S. 498, 2 Sup. Ct. 949, 27 L. Ed. 800; Bevin v. Ins. Co., 23 Conn. 244; Trenton Mut. Life & Fire Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 24 N. J. L. 576.

When an adequate interest exists at the time of the insurance, it is immaterial if there occur before death a diminution or entire cessation of it; Sides v. Ins. Co., 16 Fed. 650; Rawls v. Ins. Co., 27 N. Y. 282, 84 Am. Dec. 280; Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Schaefer, 94 U. S. 457, 24 L. Ed. 251; and see note by J. D. Brannan on the last case in 16 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 399. But see Chrisman v. Ins. Co., 16 Or. 283, 18 Pac. 466.

On the subject of relationship there is little but confusion. It is said to be only of importance as tending to give rise to a reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit from the continuance of the life of the insured; May, Ins. § 107; Bliss, Ins. § 31; United Brethren Mut. Aid Soc. v. McDonald, 122 Pa. 324, 15 Atl. 439, 1 L. R. A. 238, 9 Am. St. Rep. 111; Rombach v. Ins. Co., 35 La. Ann. 233, 48 Am. Rep. 239; or when there is a legal claim on the insured for support or service; id.; Charter Oak Life Ins. Co. v. Brant, 47 Mo. 419, 4 Am. Rep. 328; Keystone Mut. Benefit Ass'n v. Norris, 115 Pa. 446, 8 Atl. 638, 2 Am. St. Rep. 572. The interest has been held to exist in the case of a wife in the life of her husband; Central Nat. Bank v. Hume, 128 U. S. 195, 9 Sup. Ct. 41, 32 L. Ed. 370; McKee v. Ins. Co., 28 Mo. 383, 75 Am. Dec. 129 (but see Charter Oak Life Ins. Co. v. Brant, 47 Mo. 419, 4 Am. Rep. 328); Thompson v. Ins. Co., 46 N. Y. 674 (and see criticism of this case in 25 Am. L. Rev. 185 and 35 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 171); Wallace v.

Ins. Co., 97 Minn. 27, 106 N. W. 84, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 478 (which he cannot after divorce compel her to relinquish); and the husband in the life of the wife; Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Paterson, 41 Ga. 338, 5 Am. Rep. 535; Currier v. Ins. Co., 57 Vt. 406, 52 Am. Rep. 134; the marriage gives an interest; Keystone Mut. Benefit Ass'n v. Norris, 115 Pa. 446, 8 Atl. 638, 2 Am. St. Rep. 572; Holabird v. Ins. Co., 2 Dill. 166, Fed. Cas. No. 6, 587; and before marriage a feme sole has an interest in the life of her betrothed; Chisholm v. Ins. Co., 52 Mo. 213, 14 Am. Rep. 414; and so, semble, in Pennsylvania; Appeal of Corson, 113 Pa. 438, 6 Atl. 213, 57 Am. Rep. 479. As to other relations, it has been held that a son has an interest (on different grounds) in the life of his father; Appeal of Plymouth Mfg. Co., *81 Pa. 154; Guardian Mut. Life Ins. Co. of New York v. Hogan, 80 Ill. 35, 22 Am. Rep. 180; but not merely as son; id.; Continental Life Ins. Co. v. Volger, 89 Ind. 572, 46 Am. Rep. 185 (contra, Tucker v. Ins. Co., 50 Hun 50, 4 N. Y. Supp. 505); a father, in that of a minor son; Mitchell v. Ins. Co., 45 Me. 104, 71 Am. Dec. 529; or an adult son; Reserve Mut. Ins. Co. v. Kane, 81 Pa. 154, 22 Am. Rep. 741; Central Nat. Bank v. Hume, 128 U. S. 193, 9 Sup. Ct. 41, 32 L. Ed. 370; Loomis v. Ins. Co., 6 Gray (Mass.) 396; Grattan v. Ins. Co., 15 Hun (N. Y.) 74 (contra, in England, 1 Ch. D. 419); and the interest exists when relationship is by adoption; Hodge v. Ellis, 76 Ga. 272; as where the relation of father is assumed; Carpenter v. Ins. Co., 161 Pa. 9, 28 Atl. 943, 23 L. R. A. 571, 41 Am. St. Rep. 880; but a stepson has no interest in the life of his stepfather; United Brethren Mut. Aid Soc. v. McDonald, 122 Pa. 324, 15 Atl. 439, 1 L. R. A. 238, 9 Am. St. Rep. 111; nor a son-in-law in the life of the mother-in-law; Stambaugh v. Blake, 22 W. N. C. (Pa.) 407. A grandmother has an interest in the life of a grandchild; Burke v. Ins. Co., 155 Pa. 295, 26 Atl. 445; an old woman who lived with her daughter and the father-in-law of the latter, who had promised to keep her for life had an interest in his life; 16 Ins. L. J. 682. There is much difference of opinion as to brother and sister, but it is said that the relationship, without more, does not give an interest; Biddle, Ins. § 193; Lewis v. Ins. Co., 39 Conn. 100; Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. France, 94 U. S. 561, 24 L. Ed. 287; however, it has been held that a policy will stand if there is dependence, or indebtedness; Keystone Mut. Ass'n v. Beaverson, 16 W. N. C. (Pa.) 188; see Goodwin v. Ins. Co., 73 N. Y. 480; [1892] 1 Q. B. 864; the last being the case of a stepsister. No interest exists in case of uncle or aunt and nephew or niece; Riner v. Riner, 166 Pa. 617, 31 Atl. 347, 45 Am. St. Rep. 693; Singleton v. Ins. Co., 66 Mo. 63, 27 Am. Rep. 321; but an aunt who stands in loco parentis to a nephew has an insurable interest in his life; Weber v. Ins.

Co., 172 Pa. 111, 33 Atl. 712. One who was merely the "protector of the deceased whenever he stood in need of protection" has no insurable interest in his life; [1899] A. C. 604.

An insurance procured by a religious society, supported largely by voluntary contributions, on the life of one of its members, is void; Trinity College v. Ins. Co., 113 N. C. 244, 18 S. E. 175, 22 L. R. A. 291. In the absence of any insurable interest, the law will presume that the policy was taken out for the purpose of a wager or speculation; United Brethren Mut. Aid Soc. v. McDonald, 122 Pa. 324, 15 Atl. 439, 1 L. R. A. 238, 9 Am. St. Rep. 111; and wagering contracts in life insurance are not valid; Crotty v. Ins. Co., 144 U. S. 621, 12 Sup. Ct. 749, 36 L. Ed. 566.

The amount of insurable interest is the value of the insured subject as agreed by the policy, or its market value, or the pecuniary loss to which the assured is liable by the risks insured against, though the insured subject—for example, life or health—has not a market value; Mead v. Ins. Co., 7 N. Y. 530; 2 Pars. Mar. Law, c. 2, sec. 2.

In insurance cases generally an interest must be averred and some proof thereof be made; Biddle, Ins. § 197, and cases cited; but on fire policies if the application or policy shows an interest, it is generally sufficient, prima facie; id.; and so it was held on a life policy; Lewis v. Ins. Co., 39 Conn. 100; and the fact that the policy was made payable to plaintiff made a prima facie case; Parks v. Ins. Co., 26 Mo. App. 511. The facts showing interest are to be determined by the jury; Mitchell v. Ins. Co., 32 Ia. 421; Guardian Mut. Life Ins. Co. of New York v. Hogan, 80 Ill. 37, 22 Am. Rep. 180; Shaak v. Meily, 26 W. N. C. (Pa.) 569.

The weight of authority is that a policy of life insurance may be assigned to one who has no insurable interest; Grigsby v. Russell, 222 U. S. 149, 32 Sup. Ct. 58, 56 L. Ed. 133, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 642, where all the cases are given in the brief of counsel. A policy of life insurance is not avoided by a cessation of insurable interest; id.; distinguishing Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Schaefer, 94 U. S. 457, 24 L. Ed. 251, and Warnock v. Davis, 104 U. S. 775, 26 L. Ed. 924.

See, generally, articles by Erskine Hazard Dickson, 35 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 65, 161.

INSURANCE. A contract whereby, for an agreed premium, one party undertakes to compensate the other for loss on a specified subject by specified perils.

"An agreement by which one party, for a consideration (which is usually paid in money either in one sum or at different times during the continuance of the contract of the risk), promises to make a certain payment of money upon the destruction or Injury of something in which the other party has an interest." Com. v. Wetherbee, 105 Mass. 149, 160.

An insurance in relation to property is a contract whereby the insurer becomes bound, for a definite consideration, to indemnify the insured against loss or damage, to a certain property named in the policy, by reason of certain perils to which it may be exposed. Dover Glass-Works Co. v. Ins. Co., 1 Marv. (Del.) 32, 29 Atl. 1039, 65 Am. St. Rep. 264.

"In fire insurance and marine insurance the thing insured is property; in life or accident insurance, it is the life or health of a person. In either case neither the time and amounts of payments by the assured, nor the modes of estimating or securing the payment of the sum to be paid by the insurer, affect the question whether the agreement between them is a contract of insurance. All that is requisite to constitute such a contract is the payment of the consideration by the one, and the promise of the other to pay the amount of the insurance upon the happening of injury to the subject by a contingency contemplated in the contract;" Com. v. Wetherbee, 105 Mass. 160; Masonic Association v. Taylor, 2 S. D. 324, 15 N. W. 93; Physicians Defense Co. v. Cooper, 199 Fed. 576, 118 C. C. A. 50.

Any one sui juris and capable of contracting generally may be insured, but insurance has been held not to be a necessary for which an infant might contract and be held liable against his option on coming of age; N. H. Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Noyes, 32 N. H. 345; Monaghan v. Ins. Co., 53 Mich. 238, 18 N. W. 797. In recent years, contracts of insurance by married women have been generally held valid, usually under statutes; McQuitty v. Ins. Co., 15 R. I. 573, 10 Atl. 635; Queen Ins. Co. v. Young, 86 Ala. 424, 5 South. 116, 11 Am. St. Rep. 51; Commercial Ins. Co. v. Spankneble, 52 Ill. 53, 4 Am. Rep. 582; Charter Oak Life Ins. Co. v. Brant, 47 Mo. 419, 4 Am. Rep. 328.

Any one otherwise capable of contracting may become an insurer, and formerly the business was largely conducted by partnerships, but, with the exception of risks taken at Lloyds (q. v.) and some other large partnerships, the business is now conducted, mainly, by insurance companies (q. v.), though, in England, quasi corporations organized under the Joint Stock Companies Acts insure under the authority of letters patent securing limited liability. See JOINT STOCK COMPANY.

The insurer is sometimes called the underwriter, and the insured, the assured. The agreed consideration is called the premium; the written contract, a policy; the events insured against, risks or perils; and the subject, right, or interest to be protected, the insurable interest. See these several titles. As to insured and assured, see Connecticut

Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Luchs, 108 U. S. 504, 2 Sup. Ct. 949, 27 L. Ed. 800.

The policy is usually issued upon the application (q. v.) of the insured in writing, which contains the statement of facts entering into and forming a part of the contract.

It is reasonable to stipulate in a fire insurance policy that, if any statements made by the applicant are untrue, the policy shall be void; Deming Inv. Co. v. Ins. Co., 16 Okl. 1, 83 Pac. 918, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 607.

A renewal reinstates the original contract with all its terms and also incorporates into it the new terms expressed in the renewal application and representations contained therein become part of the contract; Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. McTague, 49 N. J. L. 587, 9 Atl. 766, 60 Am. Rep. 661.

It is not a false representation for a pregnant woman to state she is in sound bodily health, and she is not required to inform the company of her pregnancy; Merriman v. Grand Lodge, 77 Neb. 544, 110 N. W. 302, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 983, 124 Am. St. Rep. 867, 15 Ann. Cas. 124.

See REPRESENTATION; WARRANTY.

Whether facts concealed or misstated in an application are material is a question for the jury; State Ins. Co. of Des Moines v. Du Bois, 7 Colo. App. 214, 44 Pac. 756.

The happening of the event insured against and the consequent damage to the subject-matter, is termed the loss (q. v.).

Where the insurance is on property, an alienation will terminate the contract unless the insurance be transferred with the consent of the underwriter. See ASSIGNMENT. An alienation of part of the property or diminution of the interest of the insured will not, in the absence of an express condition, avoid the policy; Pennsylvania Fire Ins. Co. v. Dougherty, 102 Pa. 568; Ætna Fire Ins. Co. v. Tyler, 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 385, 30 Am. Dec. 90; Sides v. Ins. Co., 16 Fed. 650; Gordon v. Ins. Co., 2 Pick. (Mass.) 249; Tiefenthal v. Ins. Co., 53 Mich. 306, 19 N. W. 9; 14 U. C. Q. B. 342; 25 Beav. 444; and the sale of a part does not avoid a policy forbidding merely "sale or transfer;" Quarrier v. Ins. Co., 10 W. Va. 507, 27 Am. Rep. 582; Blackwell v. Ins. Co., 48 Ohio St. 533, 29 N. E. 278, 14 L. R. A. 431, 29 Am. St. Rep. 574.

There is usually a clause, varying in exact terms, forbidding any change in title or possession, and, in such case, the sale of an undivided half interest is within its meaning and avoids the policy; McEwan v. Ins. Co., 1 Mich. N. P. 118; but a distinction has been taken between a sale of an interest in property and a sale of the property, and the assignment by a new partner to his firm of his insured property as firm assets was not a forfeiture; Scanlon v. Union Fire Ins. Co., 4 Biss. 511, Fed. Cas. No. 12,436; Savage v. Ins. Co., 52 N. Y. 502, 11 Am. Rep. 741. Clauses against alienation are conditions precedent; Lett v. Ins. Co., 125 N. Y. 82, 25

N. E. 1088; Home Ins. Co. of New York v. Bethel, 42 Ill. App. 475; and the question usually is whether there is a sale outright or by reason of something in the nature of a defeasance, either in law or by contract, the insured has not wholly parted with the property. As to such cases it is difficult, if not impossible, to lay down any general rule, and each case must be governed by the application of the general principles of the law of contracts and conditions to the particular form of the policy and the facts of the case. If there is, in fact, a total alienation, the opinion or motives of the parties in respect to it are not material; Langdon v. Fire Ins. Ass'n, 22 Minn. 193. A conveyance upon a condition to be performed before title vests will not avoid; Tittmore v. Ins. Co., 20 Vt. 546; so where the owner of an equity of redemption sells with a stipulation for payment of the mortgage by the purchaser and is compelled to take back the title for non-performance; Worthington v. Bearse, 12 Allen (Mass.) 382, 90 Am. Dec. 152; or where, for other reasons, the sale is not carried out and there is a reconveyance before loss; Power v. Ins. Co., 19 La. 28, 36 Am. Dec. 665; but see Davidson v. Ins. Co., 71 Ia. 532, 32 N. W. 514, 60 Am. Rep. 818.

An executory contract to convey the insured property with a consideration fully paid, but no transfer of title or possession, is not a change in interest, title or possession within the meaning of a forfeiture clause; Garner v. Ins. Co., 73 Kan. 127, 84 Pac. 717, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 654, 117 Am. St. Rep. 460, 9 Ann. Cas. 459; nor is the filing of a voluntary petition in bankruptcy where the fire occurs before the appointment of the receiver or trustee; Gordon v. Ins. Co., 120 La. 441, 45 South. 384, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 827, 124 Am. St. Rep. 434, 14 Ann. Cas. 886. Such conditions will apply to a mortgagee although there is a slip attached to the policy making the loss payable to him; Brecht v. Ins. Co., 160 Fed. 399, 87 C. C. A. 351, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 197; where property is insured in a trade name, a change in the personnel of the partners avoids the policy; American Steam Laundry Co. v. Ins. Co., 121 Tenn. 13, 113 S. W. 394, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 442; although the trade name is continued by the new owners; id. Void means voidable and the insurer must with reasonable promptness notify the assured of its intention to avoid the policy and tender the unearned premium which it has received; Glens Falls Ins. Co. v. Michael, 167 Ind. 659, 74 N. E. 964, 79 N. E. 905, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 708.

Policies of insurance also usually contain conditions for forfeiture in case of incumbrance without notice, or in case the property be "levied upon or taken into possession or custody," and such conditions are valid; Dover Glass-Works Co. v. Ins. Co., 1 Marv. (Del.) 32, 29 Atl. 1039, 65 Am. St. Rep. 264.

Where the property insured is subject to deeds of trust and there is a condition in the policy against a chattel mortgage, it was held that they were one and the same thing; Hunt v. Ins. Co., 196 U. S. 47, 25 Sup. Ct. 179, 49 L. Ed. 381. A breach renders the policy void; id.; Gray v. Assur. Co., 82 Hun 380, 31 N. Y. Supp. 237; and the question whether the execution of a mortgage increased the risk is immaterial; Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co. v. Niewedde, 12 Ind. App. 145, 39 N. E. 757; breach of any promissory warranty avoids the policy irrespective of its materiality; McKenzie v. Ins. Co., 112 Cal. 548, 44 Pac. 922; nor does it matter that the loss was not produced or contributed to by the breach; Cogswell v. Chubb, 1 App. Div. 93, 36 N. Y. Supp. 1076. A judgment recovered in invitum is not within such condition; Gerling v. Ins. Co., 39 W. Va. 689, 20 S. E. 691; but a confession of judgment is; Hench v. Ins. Co., 122 Pa. 128, 15 Atl. 671, 9 Am. St. Rep. 74; and an agreement by one heir to pay the other heirs, in instalments, for property taken under a will; Renninger v. Ins. Co., 168 Pa. 350, 31 Atl. 1083. A technical seizure where the possession is unchanged is not an avoidance; Caraher v. Ins. Co., 63 Hun 82, 17 N. Y. Supp. 858; Smith v. Ins. Co., 89 Pa. 287; 5 Ont. App. 605. A provision for forfeiture for the levy of an execution relates to personalty and not to land; Colt v. Fire Ins. Co., 54 N. Y. 595; Hammel v. Ins. Co., 54 Wis. 72, 11 N. W. 349, 41 Am. Rep. 1.

Under these conditions, a breach as to part of the insured property, which is not destroyed or injured, may not avoid the policy as to another part unaffected by the breach. Thus it was held that a recovery, under a live-stock policy, for a cow killed would not be prevented by the existence of incumbrances, in violation of a covenant in the policy, where the property actually lost was not encumbered; German Ins. Co. v. Fairbank, 32 Neb. 750, 49 N. W. 711, 29 Am. St. Rep. 459. Such contract is severable and any breach of the condition would avoid only as to such property as was covered by the incumbrance; Schuster v. Ins. Co., 102 N. Y. 260, 6 N. E. 406; Perry v. Ins. Co., 11 Fed. 478; 46 U. C. Q. B. 334; 10 Ont. 236; Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Walsh, 54 Ill. 164, 5 Am. Rep. 115. The same principle applies to the defence that the property insured was sold and conveyed; if the contract is severable, a breach as to one part does not operate as a defence with respect to property not included; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Grimes, 33 Neb. 340, 50 N. W. 168.

In insurance on manufacturing establishments it is usual to stipulate for avoidance if operations should cease without the consent of the insurer, and such provision is valid and is violated though a watchman was employed and the risk not increased; Dover Glass Works Co. v. Ins. Co., 1 Marv.

(Del.) 32, 29 Atl. 1039, 65 Am. St. Rep. 264; and the same is true of all conditions which are warranties. As to the distinction between representation and warranty and the law as to both, see those titles; and as to increase of risk, see RISKS AND PERILS.

Insurance on buildings or their contents is usually upon condition that if the former is suffered to be vacant or unoccupied, the policy will be void. In such case the forfeiture does not depend upon the insured's knowledge of the fact of vacancy; Schuermann v. Ins. Co., 161 Ill. 437, 43 N. E. 1093, 52 Am. St. Rep. 377; and a purchaser of the house and assignee of the policy is bound by the condition; Ranspach v. Ins. Co., 109 Mich. 699, 67 N. W. 967. Temporary absence of a tenant will not work a forfeiture; Huber v. Assur. Co., 92 Hun 223, 36 N. Y. Supp. 873; Burlington Ins. Co. v. Lowery, 61 Ark. 108, 32 S. W. 383, 54 Am. St. Rep. 196; nor will merely sleeping in the house occasionally and daily visits of the owner's wife to get provisions prevent forfeiture; Agricultural Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, 82 Md. 88, 33 Atl. 429, 30 L. R. A. 633, 51 Am. St. Rep. 457; or visits twice a day by an employé; Stapleton v. Ins. Co., 16 Misc. 483, 38 N. Y. Supp. 973. The insurer cannot establish a forfeiture without proving that the premises were unoccupied for any purpose; Pabst Brewing Co. v. Ins. Co., 2 Mo. App. 934. Buildings are vacant where the occupant has moved his family because of sickness with the intention of returning, and although he himself returns nearly every day; Knowlton v. Ins. Co., 100 Me. 481, 62 Atl. 289, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 517; so of the removal of a tenant, although the insured owner has no notice of such removal; Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Vogel, 166 Ind. 239, 76 N. E. 977, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 966, 117 Am. St. Rep. 382, 9 Ann. Cas. 91.

Keeping on hand certain articles is usually prohibited, either specifically or as a class. The breach of a condition against keeping inflammable substances does not prevent recovery, when the use of the particular substance was a necessary and usual incident of the subject insured; Maril v. Ins. Co., 95 Ga. 604, 23 S. E. 463, 30 L. R. A. 835, 51 Am. St. Rep. 102; as the use of gasoline, in a silver-plating business, one day's supply only being brought in at once; Fraim v. Ins. Co., 170 Pa. 151, 32 Atl. 613, 50 Am. St. Rep. 753; or keeping an inflammable substance for sale as was customary where there was a clause, written in ink on the policy, containing the words "merchandise such as is usually kept in a country store;" Yoch v. Ins. Co., 111 Cal. 503, 44 Pac. 189, 34 L. R. A. 857; Faust v. Ins. Co., 91 Wis. 158, 64 N. W. 883, 30 L. R. A. 783, 51 Am. St. Rep. 876; Mascott v. Ins. Co., 68 Vt. 253, 35 Atl. 75.

The use of a gasoline torch by a painter will not avoid the policy, where the work has continued for less than the fifteen days allowed for repairs; Garrebrant v. Ins. Co., 75 N. J. L. 577, 67 Atl. 90, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 443; but the storing of seed cotton by a tenant, against a provision in the policy, even without the knowledge of the insured, will avoid it; Edwards v. Ins. Co., 128 Ga. 353, 57 S. E. 707, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 484, 119 Am. St. Rep. 385, 10 Ann. Cas. 1036; a temporary increase of hazard, which ceases before the loss, will not prevent recovery; Sumter Tobacco Warehouse Co. v. Assurance Co., 76 S. C. 76, 56 S. E. 654, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 736, 121 Am. St. Rep. 941, 11 Ann. Cas. 780. Where a typewritten rider stipulated for insurance on such articles as are usually kept in a painter's shop, it prevailed against a printed condition against keeping benzine on the premises; Mascott v. Ins. Co., 68 Vt. 253, 35 Atl. 75.

As to hazardous and extra-hazardous risks, generally, see RISKS AND PERILS.

Iron Safe Clause. In order to promote the accurate adjustment of the loss, there is usually included in policies of insurance, on such property as a stock of merchandise, what is known as the "iron safe clause," which, in one form or another, provides that the books of the insured showing all business transactions, and the last inventory of the business, shall be kept in a fireproof safe at night and when the store is not opened for business. Such a clause is an express promissory warranty; Farmers' Fire Ins. Co. v. Bates, 60 Ill. App. 39; Home Ins. Co. of New Orleans v. Cary, 31 S. W. 321; but a substantial compliance only is required; Royal Ins. Co. v. Brown, 36 S. W. 591. Keeping the books in the safe at night, does not mean from sunrise to sunset, but from the close of business of the day according to custom; Jones v. Ins. Co., 38 Fed. 19; and where according to custom the door was locked but customers could get in by knocking, and the clerk who was in the store writing up books was absent for a short time when the fire occurred, the store was "opened for business" and the policy was not void; Sun Ins. Co. v. Jones, 54 Ark. 376, 15 S. W. 1034. But where the insurance was on a stock of liquor in a saloon, it did not excuse the violation of the iron safe clause that the same books were kept for a hotel and the saloon, the latter being opened night and day except Sunday, and the books being needed for constant settlements with the guests in the hotel; Southern Ins. Co. v. Parker, 61 Ark. 207, 32 S. W. 507 (distinguishing the last two cases). The clause was held not to have been violated by failure to keep a blotter, containing the record of the sales of the day before, locked in the safe; Brown v. Ins. Co., 89 Tex. 590, 35 S. W. 1060 (reversing Palatine Ins. Co. v. Brown, 34 S. W. 462); where a cash sales book covering twenty-one days before the sale was inadvertently left out of the safe and burned, and the books were kept in a primitive manner but showed purchases and credit sales, some cash sales, and an inventory, taken shortly before the fire, it was held that a finding of compliance with the policy was warranted; Western Assur. Co. v. Redding, 68 Fed. 708, 15 C. C. A. 619; in another case it was said not to be an excuse for violation that through oversight the books were not put in the safe the night before the fire; Goldman v. Ins. Co., 48 La. Ann. 223, 19 South. 132.

Where the bookkeeper, fearing the safe would not stand, took out the books to remove them to a safe place, and some of them fell and were burned, it was held that the covenant was not broken unless he was negligent; East Texas Fire Ins. Co. v. Harris, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 647, 25 S. W. 720.

Where the application showed in answer to inquiry that the books were kept in a dwelling at night a breach of the condition was not enforced; Sprott v. Ins. Ass'n, 53 Ark. 215, 13 S. W. 799.

The insurer must prove that the fire occurred at a time mentioned in the stipulation; Allemania Fire Ins. Co. v. Fred, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 311, 32 S. W. 243.

The character of the safe is not warranted; Sneed v. Assurance Co., 73 Miss. 279, 18 South. 928; and it is sufficient if it be one of a kind ordinarily known as fireproof; Knoxville Fire Ins. Co. v. Hird, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 82, 23 S. W. 393.

The stipulation in such a clause, that a set of books should be kept, including a record of all business transactions, does not require a book known as a "cash book," or any particular system of bookkeeping; Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. v. Ellington, 94 Ga. 785, 21 S. E. 1006. The lost inventory of the business, within this clause, means the lost inventory of the goods insured; Manchester Fire Ins. Co. v. Simmons, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 607, 35 S. W. 722. The clause is complied with, by an inventory made, and books kept from the date of the policy, but an invoice is not an inventory; Home Ins. Co. of New York v. Bank, 71 Miss. 608, 15 South. 932. The question whether there was reasonable time between the issue of the policy and the fire to make an inventory is for the jury unless the evidence is undisputed; Allen v. Ins. Co., 106 Mich. 204, 64 N. W. 15. Where the inventory was shown to the adjuster after the fire, and afterwards lost, there was a performance of the condition; Pelican Ins. Co. v. Wilkerson, 53 Ark. 353, 13 S. W. 1103. But where the books do not furnish the necessary data, to verify the accounts rendered, the policy is avoided; id. The clause is not complied with where only unitemized bills are kept; Coggins v. Ins. Co., 144 N. C. 7, 56 S. E. 506, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 839, 119 Am. St. Rep. 924; a requirement to keep a set of books which clearly and plainly represent a complete record of the business is a promissory warranty; Ætna Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 127 Ga. 491, 56 S. E. 643, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.)

607, 9 Ann. Cas. 461; and where the balances from an old set of books were carried forward into a new set and the old ones were exposed to fire and lost, there is not a compliance with the requirements of the clause; Ætna Ins. Co. v. Mount, 90 Miss. 612, 44 South. 162, 45 South. 835, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 471.

Formal policy not required. Though a policy is the usual instrument by which insurance is effected, it is not necessary; First Baptist Church v. Ins. Co., 19 N. Y. 305; New England Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Robinson, 25 Ind. 536; Succession of Hearing, 26 La. Ann. 326; and it may be evidenced by a memorandum or note; Goodall v. Ins. Co., 25 N. H. 169; 76 L. T. N. S. 228; State Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Porter, 3 Grant (Pa.) 123; or a letter; Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. v. Bennett, 1 Ohio N. P. 71; 14 L. C. Jur. 219. Where the correspondence was held sufficient to create a valid contract for a policy of fire insurance, it was held that, after the property had been destroyed by fire, the insured was entitled to a decree for the amount agreed to be insured, less premium; Eames v. Ins. Co., 94 U. S. 621, 24 L. Ed. 298. In the absence of a statute forbidding it, it may be verbal; Henning v. Ins. Co., 2 Dill. 26, Fed. Cas. No. 6,366; Hamilton v. Ins. Co., 5 Pa. 339 (though this had been questioned; Smith v. Odlin, 4 Yeates [Pa.] 468); Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Farrish, 73 Ill. 166; Relief Fire Ins. Co. v. Shaw, 94 U. S. 574, 24 L. Ed. 291; Croft v. Ins. Co., 40 W. Va. 508, 21 S. E. 854, 52 Am. St. Rep. 902; Amazon Ins. Co. v. Wall, 31 Ohio St. 633, 27 Am. Rep. 533; overruling Cockerill v. Ins. Co., 16 Ohio, 148; Potter v. Ins. Co., 63 Fed. 382; and when made without specifying any date for the insurance to take effect, commences immediately; id. A usage to show a parol contract was inadmissible; 14 Ins. L. J. (Mass.) 427. In Canada it was held that to recover at law, on a contract of insurance by a corporation, there must be a sealed policy, but on a parol contract the plaintiff may sue for a breach to deliver a policy, or proceed in equity; 16 U. C. Q. B. 477. The agreement to pay a premium is sufficient to support a verbal contract; Flitton v. Ins. Ass'n, 20 Fed. 766. See generally as to verbal contracts, Biddle, Ins. § 138, where the subject is treated historically.

An offer by a newspaper in each issue to pay a sum named to the heirs of one accidentally dying within twenty-four hours from the last issue, provided that the printed slip containing the offer should be found on the person of the deceased, is a contract of insurance; Com. v. Philadelphia Inquirer, 15 Pa. C. C. R. 463.

Binding Receipt. The usual practice is for the agent, upon the payment of the premium, to issue what is termed a binding receipt, which is, in effect, an executory contract to issue a policy if the risk is accepted by the company, and, meanwhile, the insurance is in force. Such contracts are valid and will be enforced at law and in equity; Gold v. Ins. Co., 73 Cal. 216, 14 Pac. 786; Sandford v. Ins. Co., 11 Paige 547; and a charter provision requiring "all policies or contracts" to be signed by certain officers has been held not to apply to such agreements; Baile v. Ins. Co., 73 Mo. 371; Franklin F. Ins. Co. v. Colt, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 560, 22 L. Ed. 423; First Baptist Church v. Ins. Co., 19 N. Y. 305; Amazon Ins. Co. v. Wall, 31 Ohio St. 633, 27 Am. Rep. 533.

Where an insurance company delivers a binding slip on certain property, a complete temporary contract of insurance exists; Smith & Wallace Co. v. Ins. Co., 68 N. J. L. 674, 54 Atl. 458; so where such slip accompanies a new agreement; Belt v. Ins. Co., 163 N. Y. 555, 57 N. E. 1104, and the company is estopped from denying the authority of its agent issuing the binding slip where there is no notice to the applicant of any limitation of authority; Starr v. Ins. Co., 41 Wash. 228, 83 Pac. 116; Schlesinger v. Ins. Co., 37 App. Div. 531, 56 N. Y. Supp. 37. The question whether the binder was considered by both parties to be temporary insurance is for the jury; Underwood v. Ins. Co., 66 App. Div. 531, 73 N. Y. Supp. 251. A memorandum on the books of the company, made by the agent and assented to by the applicant, is a sufficient binder; Queen Ins. Co. of America v. Laundry Co., 7 Ga. App. 787, 68 S. E. 310. It need not even state the premium to be paid by the insured; Jacobs v. Ins. Co., 148 Ill. App. 325. It becomes ineffective on delivery of policy to the insured; Goodhue v. Ins. Co., 184 Mass. 41, 67 N. E. 645; but there is no temporary insurance where the company declines the risk; Mohrstadt v. Ins. Co., 115 Fed. 81, 52 C. C. A. 675.

See AGREEMENT FOR INSURANCE.

Adjustment. Where a loss occurs, the ascertainment of the amount due upon the policy is termed adjustment (q. v.). Notice of the loss must be given in accordance with the terms of the condition, which is precedent to recovery; Central City Ins. Co. v. Oates, 86 Ala. 558, 6 South. 83, 11 Am. St. Rep. 67; L. R. 20 Ir. 93; Patrick v. Ins. Co., 43 N. H. 621, 80 Am. Dec. 197. This is distinct from proof of loss (q. v.), which must be also made as stipulated, or, in default of express provision, in a reasonable time; Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Brown, 128 Pa. 392, 18 Atl. 396. See Loss.

More Than One Policy. Other insurance may be taken on the same property without restriction unless there be such in the contract; Agricultural Ins. Co. v. Bemiller, 70 Md. 400, 17 Atl. 380; 14 Q. L. R. 293; Mowry v. Ins. Co., 9 R. I. 346; and no notice is required unless so stipulated; Murray v. Ins. Co., 2 Wash. C. C. 186, Fed. Cas. No. 9,961; but when the insurance is on property, only one indemnity can be collected, and there is a right of contribution among insurers; Peoria Marine & Fire Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 18 Ill. 553; Clarke v. Assur. Co., 146 Pa. 561, 23 Atl. 248, 15 L. R. A. 127, 28 Am. St. Rep. 821; but it is usual to stipulate that each insurer, if there are more than one, shall be liable only pro rata; Barnes v. Ins. Co., 9 Fed. 813.

Where there are thirty insurers and the loss is less than the total amount insured, the holder of the policy is not limited in his recovery to the proportionate share of each insurer, but may recover for the whole loss, leaving to him his remedy against his associates; Sumner v. Piza, 91 Fed. 677; where there is a promise by the insured to take out insurance to the value of eighty per cent. of the property and he fails to do so, although the loss is less than the amount of insurance, he is regarded as an insurer for the difference between the amount actually insured and the eighty per cent; and he must sustain the loss of this proportion; Stephenson v. Ins. Co., 116 Wis. 277, 93 N. W. 19; Farmers' Feed Co. of New Jersey v. Ins. Co., 173 N. Y. 241, 65 N. E. 1105. It is usual to require notice to the company when other insurance is placed upon the property in other companies; Northern Assur. Co. v. Bldg. Ass'n, 183 U. S. 308, 22 Sup. Ct. 133, 46 L. Ed. 213. An agreement that several insurers are to be liable pro rata and that a single suit shall be brought, which shall be decisive as against all, is valid; New Jersey & Pennsylvania Concentrating Works v. Ackermann, 6 App. Div. 540, 39 N. Y. Supp. 585.

As to excessive insurance on the same property, see DOUBLE INSURANCE.

Time Limit for Suit. It is usual in policies to have a time limit requiring an action to be brought within a designated period of the loss. Such condition is precedent to a recovery; Becket v. Imp. Co., 67 Ia. 338, 25 N. W. 271; 14 L. C. Jur. 256; and will apply in a forum other than that of the domicile of the insurer; Fullam v. Ins. Co., 7 Gray (Mass.) 61, 66 Am. Dec. 462. In some courts the time of the limitation is held to be computed from the date of the event which causes the loss; Johnson v. Ins. Co., 91 Ill. 92, 33 Am. Rep. 47; Steel v. Ins. Co., 47 Fed. 863; Chambers v. Ins. Co., 51 Conn. 17, 50 Am. Rep. 1; 19 Nov. Scot. Rep. 372; 18 Ont. 355; in others, from the time the loss was payable; Cooper v. Benefit Ass'n, 132 N. Y. 334, 30 N. E. 833, 16 L. R. A. 138, 28 Am. St. Rep. 581; Case v. Ins. Co., 83 Cal. 473, 23 Pac. 534, 8 L. R. A. 48; Matt v. Aid Ass'n, 81 Iowa, 135, 46 N. W. 857, 25 Am. St. Rep. 483; Spare v. Ins. Co., 17 Fed. 568.

The parties may agree to a reasonable time within which suit may be brought; six months is reasonable. It begins to run from the date of the fire, although there may be a provision making the loss payable sixty days after proofs have been received by the company; Appel v. Ins. Co., 76 Ohio St. 52, 80 N. E. 955, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 674, 10 Ann. Cas. 821.

Limiting Jurisdiction of Courts. Efforts have been made both by contract and by statute to limit the right of suit on a policy to a particular jurisdiction; such provisions in a policy or by law have been held illegal; Nute v. Ins. Co., 6 Gray (Mass.) 174; Amesbury v. Ins. Co., id. 596; Reichard v. Ins. Co., 31 Mo. 518; May, Ins. § 490. Statutes which attempt thus to limit the jurisdiction are strictly construed, and as they generally provide that, after a loss, the directors shall meet and adjust the loss, and if it is not paid in a given time, suit may be brought in a particular court, the limitation is in many states confined to the exact case mentioned, and it is only where the amount has been so determined that it takes effect; Nevins v. Ins. Co., 25 N. H. 22; Martin v. Ins. Co., 53 Me. 419; Arnet v. Ins. Co., 22 Wis. 516; Boynton v. Ins. Co., 4 Metc. (Mass.) 212; Indiana Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Routledge, 7 Ind. 25; but in other cases the limitation has been enforced without reference to such previous ascertainment of the loss; Dutton v. Ins. Co., 17 Vt. 369. See May, Ins. § 491.

Specifying the Law of the Contract. So, with respect to the effort to provide in the policy that the law of a certain state should determine its construction, where life policies have been issued in a state other than the same state of the company, it has been held that they are governed by statutory provisions in the state of the insured, although the policies stipulated that the contract was to be governed by the law of the same state.

A provision in a policy limiting recovery in cases of suicide is ineffectual as against a state statute declaring suicide to be no defense to an action; Whitfield v. Ins. Co., 205 U. S. 489, 27 Sup. Ct. 578, 51 L. Ed. 897.

See LEX LOCI; FOREIGN CORPORATIONS; as to the rights and remedies of and against insurance companies in countries or states other than those of their domicile, and the effect of non-compliance with statutes regulating the manner of doing business.

The business of life insurance is not commerce; a state statute regulating insurance contracts between its residents and foreign corporations, is not invalid as a regulation of interstate commerce; Cravens v. Ins. Co., 148 Mo. 583, 50 S. W. 519, 53 L. R. A. 305, 71 Am. St. Rep. 628, affirmed in 178 U. S. 389, 20 Sup. Ct. 962, 44 L. Ed. 1116; State v. Ins. Co., 71 Neb. 320, 99 N. W. 36, 100 N. W. 405, 102 N. W. 1022, 106 N. W. 767; Fisher v. Ins. Co., 136 N. C. 217, 48 S. E. 667; N. Y. Life Ins. Co. v. Deer Lodge County, 43 Mont. 243, 115 Pac. 911, affirmed 231 U. S. 595, 34 Sup. Ct. 274, 58 L. Ed. —, following Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 19 L. Ed. 357.

Subrogation. An insurer is entitled to subrogation (q. v.) in cases where such right would attach under the general principles applying to that subject; as, when payment is made for loss or damage to goods in transit, there is a subrogation to the rights of the owner against the carrier; Houston Direct Nav. Co. v. Ins. Co. (Tex.) 31 S. W. 560; Over v. R. Co., 63 Fed. 34; Stoughton v. Gas Co., 165 Pa. 428, 30 Atl. 1001; Southard v. R. Co., 60 Minn. 382, 62 N. W. 442, 619. And, on payment by the insurer of a loss which he was not legally bound to pay, he has a right of action against one through whose negligence the property was destroyed; Ry. Co. v. Fire Ass'n, 60 Ark. 325, 30 S. W. 350, 28 L. R. A. 83; he becomes entitled pro tanto, and should join the owner as plaintiff in an action for negligent burning; Wunderlich v. Ry. Co., 93 Wis. 132, 66 N. W. 1144. So, an insurer of title who paid off liens prior to a mortgage, as to which the mortgagee was indemnified by bond of the mortgagor, was subrogated to the right of action of the latter on the bond; St. Paul Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. Johnson, 64 Minn. 492, 67 N. W. 543.

Since a policy of fire insurance is a contract of indemnity, the insurer is entitled to recover from the insured not merely the value of any benefit received by him by way of compensation from other sources in excess of his actual loss, but also the full value of any rights or remedies of the insured against third parties which have been renounced by him, and to which, but for that renunciation, the insurer would have a right to be subrogated; [1896] 2 Q. B. 377.

Expected profits may be insured, as crops, against hail and frost or other risks, even before they are sown, but the profits must be insured as such; 3 N. & M. 819; Putnam v. Ins. Co., 5 Metc. (Mass.) 391; Loomis v. Shaw, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 36; Niblo v. Ins. Co., 1 Sandf. (N. Y.) 551; or the future profits of one to whom the insured has advanced money to pursue an enterprise; Morrell v. Ins. Co., 10 Cush. (Mass.) 282, 57 Am. Dec. 92; Miller v. Ins. Co., 2 E. D. Sm. (N. Y.) 268; or a portion of the cargo of a ship expected to arrive, even if the insured has no property in such cargo, but has only purchased, for a specified sum, the right to take such goods for a further specified sum; French v. Ins. Co., 16 Pick. (Mass.) 397; but even if the insured has an ownership in the property, if he becomes insolvent before the arrival of the cargo and the goods are intercepted by the vendor, by right of stoppage in transitu, there can be no recovery on the policy; 10 B. & C. 99.

As to reinsurance, see that title.

The several forms of insurance contracts are classified mainly with reference to the character of the perils insured against. See infra.

Life Insurance. The insurance of the life of a person is a contract by which the insurer, in consideration of a certain premium, either in a gross sum or periodical payments, undertakes to pay the person for whose benefit the insurance is made, a stipulated sum, or annuity equivalent, upon the death of the person whose life is insured, whenever this shall happen, if the insurance be for the whole life, or in case this shall happen within a certain period, if the insurance be for a limited time.

An agreement by the insurer to pay to the insured or his nominee a specified sum of money, either on the death of a designated life, or at the end of a certain period, provided the death does not occur before, in consideration of the present payment of a fixed amount, or of an annuity till the death occurs or the period of insurance is ended. Biddle, Ins. § 2. Bunyon's definition varies little, as does that of Park, but the latter elaborates the consideration which is described as "a certain sum proportioned to the age, health, profession, and other circumstances of the person whose life is the object of insurance." Park, Ins. ch. xxii. In a leading case it was said by Parke, B., to be "a mere contract to pay a certain sum of money on the death of a person, in consideration of the due payment of a certain annuity for his life, the amount of the annuity being calculated, in the first instance, according to the probable duration of the life; and when once fixed, it is constant and invariable;" 15 C. B. 365.

A mutual contract by which the insurer, on the one hand, comes under an obligation to pay a certain sum of money upon the death of the insured, who, on the other hand, becomes bound to pay certain sums, either annually or otherwise, in the name of premiums, and these obligations are counterparts of one another. 3 Can. S. C., 4th ser. 1078.

The person whose life is insured is frequently termed the "life."

The sum to be paid in case of loss depends entirely upon the stipulation in the policy, and not at all upon the amount of the pecuniary interest in the life; Bevin v. Ins. Co., 23 Conn. 244.

There must be an insurable interest (q. v.).

A large proportion of life insurance is now effected through the medium of beneficial associations (q. v.); they are generally formed under state incorporation laws and are subject to their own rules and regulations so far as they are consistent with the general or statutory law of the state. The benefits and advantages conferred by these associations are held to be insurance, and subject to regulation by the insurance laws of the state; State v. Nichols, 78 Ia. 747, 41 N. W. 4; Goodman v. Lodge No. 7, 67 Md. 117, 9 Atl. 13, 13 Atl. 627. While the rules and regulations enter into and become a part of the contract of insurance, the usage of the association will not bind courts in construing the contract, if the latter be clear and unambiguous; and words having a fixed meaning, either general or technical, will be interpreted according to that meaning as in other cases; Wiggin v. Knights of Pythias, 31 Fed. 122.

Some of the conditions of policies of life insurance are peculiar to this class of insurance. Among the most important of these are those relating to self-destruction and insanity. The risk in life insurance is the death of the insured proceeding from causes other than his voluntary act; Supreme Commandery of the Knights of the Golden Rule v. Ainsworth, 71 Ala. 436, 46 Am. Rep. 332. See SUICIDE.

Entering the military service is also usually stipulated against, but death at the hands of a roving band of thieves and robbers, while engaged as an engineer in building a bridge, under the direction of a military commander, is not within such a stipulation; Welts v. Life Ins. Co., 48 N. Y. 34, 8 Am. Rep. 518; but even an involuntary entrance will defeat a recovery; Dillard v. Ins. Co., 44 Ga. 119, 9 Am. Rep. 167.

The receipt of the premium by the insurer, after a known violation of the condition against residence abroad, is a waiver of the right to a forfeiture; Bevin v. Ins. Co., 23 Conn. 244; whether the knowledge be actual or constructive; L. R. 11 Eq. 197. Where a condition against absence from home beyond a stipulated time is violated, the insured will be excused if he be detained by reason of illness occurring within the time specified; Baldwin v. Ins. Co., 3 Bosw. (N. Y.) 530; but not where the illness occurs after the limits of the stipulation; Nightingale v. Ins. Co., 5 R. I. 38. Where the contract restricts the insured to the settled limits of the United States, it covers all regions within the boundaries of the country, whether inhabited or not; Casler v. Ins. Co., 22 N. Y. 427; and a permission to travel by sea in "a first rate vessel" will cover any mode of travel whether by cabin or steerage; Taylor v. Ins. Co., 13 Gray (Mass.) 434.

Equity cannot cancel a life insurance policy for fraud, if brought after death; Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Griesa, 156 Fed. 398; but if brought before the death, it does not abate on the death of the insured; Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Blair, 130 Fed. 971.

Where the insured commits murder, and thereafter assigns a policy on his life and is executed for his crime, his beneficiaries cannot recover on the policy; Burt v. Ins. Co., 187 U. S. 362, 23 Sup. Ct. 139, 47 L. Ed. 216; death by legal execution for crime is not a risk contemplated by the policy; Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. McCue, 223 U. S. 234, 32 Sup. Ct. 220, 56 L. Ed. 419, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 57; Collins v. Ins. Co., 30 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 257, citing many cases; so where the assignee of a policy causes the death of the assured by felonious means; Mutual Life

Ins. Co. v. Armstrong, 117 U. S. 591, 6 Sup. Ct. 577, 29 L. Ed. 997; where the assignee of a beneficiary has murdered the assured, a constructive trust is established for the heirs of the assured; Schmidt v. Life Ass'n, 112 Ia. 41, 83 N. W. 800, 51 L. R. A. 141, 84 Am. St. Rep. 323. Where the insured is convicted and executed for a crime of which he is in fact innocent, insurance on his life is likewise unrecoverable; Burt v. Ins. Co., 105 Fed. 419, 44 C. C. A. 548. But recovery can be had for death of the insured, slain by the husband with whose wife insured was committing adultery; Supreme Lodge K. P. v. Crenshaw, 129 Ga. 195, 58 S. E. 628, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 258, 121 Am. St. Rep. 216, 12 Ann. Cas. 307.

The weight of decision has been in favor of the view, that the contract of life insurance between citizens of different states is not dissolved, but only suspended, by a war between the states; Hamilton v. Ins. Co., 9 Blatchf. 234, Fed. Cas. No. 5,986; Semmes v. Ins. Co., 13 Wall. (U. S.) 159, 20 L. Ed. 490; but, contra, New York Life Ins. Co. v. Statham, 93 U. S. 24, 23 L. Ed. 789.

Tontine. A system of insurance which under various forms is based upon the idea of a loan or investment of property for the benefit of a number of persons, the income at first being divided among all and the shares of members who die passing not to their own legal representatives but to increase the interest of the surviving member, until, at last, after the number of members has gradually diminished by successive deaths, the last survivor takes the whole income, or, if such be the terms agreed upon, the whole principal. The system took its name from Lorenzo Tonti, an Italian of the seventeenth century, who first conceived the idea and put it in practice. Merlin, Repert.; Dalloz, Dict.; Schriber v. Rapp, 5 Watts (Pa.) 351, 30 Am. Dec. 327.

A policy of this character was the subject of litigation in the Massachusetts Supreme Court in a case in which the system is illustrated. It was to continue ten years if the insured should so long live, but in case of his death before that time, the dividends would not inure to the benefit of his estate, but be held by the company for the benefit of other policy holders and forfeited by him. The estate of the deceased received only the amount of the policy, which, however, would be forfeited for non-payment of premiums during the tontine term; policies of this character are kept in classes of ten, fifteen, or twenty years, called respectively the tontine periods, and accounts are kept with the funds of each class to ascertain the amount due upon each policy at the expiration of its tontine term, at which time the surplus profits are apportioned equitably among such policies as complete the term; Pierce v. Assurance Society, 145 Mass. 56, 12 N. E. 858, 1 Am. St. Rep. 433. Under such an insurance the failure of the company to place all dividends accruing upon a policy in a reserve fund in accordance with the terms of the policy did not excuse the non-performance of his contract by the insured, and a suit by such policy holder for an accounting by the company cannot be maintained on the ground of the failure to keep and invest the fund accruing from the dividends separately; Bogardus v. Ins. Co., 101 N. Y. 328, 4 N. E. 522. No trust relation exists between the company and the insured but it is simply one of contract measured by the terms of the policy; Cohen v. Ins. Co., 50 N. Y. 610, 10 Am. Rep. 522; Hencken v. Ins. Co., 98 N. Y. 627, affirming 11 Daly (N. Y.) 282. The situation of the parties is that of debtor and creditor merely, the amount of the debt being determined by the equitable apportionment to be made by the corporation through its officers; Pierce v. Assur. Soc., 145 Mass. 56, 12 N. E. 858, 1 Am. St. Rep. 433. The apportionment of the fund is not absolutely conclusive upon the policy holders. It is prima facie right, but may be shown to be based on erroneous principles; id.

The holder of a policy who has the option at the expiration of the tontine period to withdraw his share of the surplus is entitled to the inspection of books and papers, and a rule of court authorizing such inspection will be granted in order that he may intelligently exercise his options; Ellinger v. Assur. Soc., 132 Wis. 259, 111 N. W. 567, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1089.

Fire Insurance. A contract by which the insurer, in consideration of a certain premium received by him, either in a gross sum or by annual payments, undertakes to indemnify the insured against all loss or damage which he may sustain to a certain amount, in his property mentioned in the policy, by fire during the time agreed upon.

Fire insurance is said to be in effect a contract of indemnity against loss or damage suffered by an owner or person having an interest in the property insured. Donnell v. Donnell, 86 Me. 518, 30 Atl. 67.

The principles applying to the subject are, in general, those governing marine policies and other kinds of insurance of property against the various perils which attend its use and ownership, and therefore the point to be mainly considered, as applied to fire insurance alone, is the exact definition of the peril insured against. With respect to the nature of the contract as an indemnity, the necessity of an interest in the property, the policy and the application, the effect of warranties and representations, respectively, and the loss and its adjustment, reference should be had to the discussion of the subject generally, supra, and in the various titles referred to.

It has frequently been said that to recover under a fire policy there must be an actual fire or ignition, and that it is not sufficient that there has been an injurious increase of heat which caused damage to the insured property, while nothing had taken fire which ought not to be on fire. The authority usually relied upon, for this general statement, is the early and leading case of Austin v. Drewe, 6 Taunt. 436, but this case has been much criticised; see Scripture v. Ins. Co., 10 Cush. (Mass.) 356, 57 Am. Dec. 111; 1 Bennett, Fire Ins. Co., 104; Case v. Ins. Co., 13 Ill. 676; May, Ins. § 402.

There can be no recovery for damage by smoke from a lighted lamp when there is no ignition outside of the lamp; Fitzgerald v. Ins. Co., 30 Misc. 72, 62 N. Y. Supp. 824; or if the smoke proceeded from a fire "out of place," it is no defense that it originated in a fire in the place intended for it; Collins v. Ins. Co., 9 Pa. Super. Ct. 576; and a furnace fire built of unsuitable material, which becomes uncontrollable and develops extraordinary and excessive heat, so as to char woodwork and furniture and generally injure personal property, is a hostile fire, although there is no ignition; O'Connor v. Ins. Co., 140 Wis. 388, 122 N. W. 1038, 1122, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 501, 133 Am. St. Rep. 1081, 17 Ann. Cas. 1118. Damage to the interior of a boiler resulting from over-heating and absence of water in the boiler is not covered by a fire policy; American Towing Co. of Baltimore v. Ins. Co., 74 Md. 25, 21 Atl. 553.

A fire in a theatre, caused by the excessive heating of its walls by a fire outside, was held to be covered by the policy; Sohier v. Ins. Co., 11 Allen (Mass.) 336; and when a building is blown up by gunpowder to prevent the spreading of fire, the insurer against fire is liable if, but for being blown up, it would have been burned; City Fire Ins. Co. v. Corlies, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 367, 34 Am. Dec. 258; Greenwald v. Ins. Co., 3 Phila. (Pa.) 323; Miller v. Ins. Co., 41 Ill. App. 395; L. R. 3 Exch. 71. These cases are distinguished from explosion, which is not fire, within a fire policy, when it occurs some distance off; 19 C. B. N. S. 126; Caballero v. Ins. Co., 15 La. Ann. 217; even though it was caused by fire; id.; and when the explosion is within the building, there must be ignition to bring it within the fire insurance; St. John v. Ins. Co., 11 N. Y. 516; but damage from fire caused by explosion on the premises is covered; Scripture v. Ins. Co., 10 Cush. (Mass.) 356, 57 Am. Dec. 111; Renshaw v. Ins. Co., 103 Mo. 595, 15 S. W. 945, 23 Am. St. Rep. 904; (unless it is expressly excepted; Greenwald v. Ins. Co., 3 Phila. [Pa.] 323); so also if the damage is from explosion caused by fire, as where a steamboat was burned as the result of an explosion of gunpowder; Waters v. Ins. Co., 11 Pet. (U. S.) 213, 9 L. Ed. 691; or when coals were thrown out of the stove; Daws v. Ins. Co., 127 Mass. 346, 34 Am. Rep. 384. In this case the policy contained the provision that "if a building shall fall, except as the result of a fire," the insurance should cease; and this was held to apply to inherent defects in the building. And when, under a similar policy "against fire originating in any case," there occurred an explosion and loss, it was held immaterial whether the fire resulted in combustion or explosion; Renshaw v. Ins. Co., 33 Mo. App. 394.

Although a fire is raging in an adjacent building and at the time of the expiration of the policy a loss is inevitable, yet if, in fact, no fire has broken out at such expiration, there can be no recovery; Rochester German Ins. Co. v. Peasler Co., 120 Ky. 752, 87 S. W. 1115, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 1155, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 364, 9 Ann. Cas. 324.

A loss by reason of fire started by an explosion caused by a fire coming in contact with escaping gas was not within a policy which excepted loss by reason of or resulting from any explosion whatever; 2 Ins. L. J. 190. When damages by explosion are excepted unless caused by fire, the insurer is held liable only for the result of fire and not of the explosion which caused it; L. R. 3 Exch. 71; or by one caused by fire in its course; id.; contra, Washburn v. Ins. Co., 2 Fed. 633; Transatlantic Fire Ins. Co. of Hamburg v. Dorsey, 56 Md. 70, 40 Am. Rep. 403.

Though a fire policy provides that there shall be no recovery for loss caused by earthquakes, the insured can recover for damage from a fire originally caused by an earthquake; Williamsburgh City Fire Ins. Co. v. Willard, 164 Fed. 404, 90 C. C. A. 392, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 103.

A fire in a chimney, caused by accidental ignition of soot, or smoke issuing from such fire, is within a policy covering all loss or damage by fire to all goods contained in the building; Way v. Ins. Co., 166 Mass. 67, 43 N. E. 1032, 32 L. R. A. 608, 55 Am. St. Rep. 379. So also a loss by spontaneous combustion was held to be within a fire policy; 9 L. C. Q. B. 448; but see a criticism of this case in Providence Washington Ins. Co. v. Adler, 65 Md. 162, 4 Atl. 121, 57 Am. Rep. 314. Where a policy insures against explosion and accident and there was an exception of explosion or loss caused by the burning of the building, a destruction of the property by an explosion caused by raising a cloud of starch dust in an endeavor to extinguish flames was held a fire loss and not within the policy; American Steam Boiler Ins. Co. v. Refining Co., 57 Fed. 294, 6 C. C. A. 336, 21 L. R. A. 572.

Fire insurance does not cover damage by lightning without combustion; Andrews v. Ins. Co., 37 Me. 256; Kenniston v. Ins. Co., 14 N. H. 341, 40 Am. Dec. 192; even when the policy covers "fire, by lightning;" Babcock v. Ins. Co., 4 N. Y. 326. It is quite usual to add to a fire policy what is known as a "lightning clause," which covers loss from that cause with or without fire; but a company authorized to take fire risks is not thereby authorized to insure against lightning; Andrews v. Ins. Co., 37 Me. 256. A policy of insurance against lightning was held to cover destruction by tornado when the former accompanied the latter; Spensley v. Ins. Co., 54 Wis. 433, 11 N. W. 894.

Under a lightning clause attached to a fire policy, on horses "contained in" a barn, the insurer was held liable for a brood mare pasturing in a field. The policy against loss by lightning was said to be a contract of insurance of a peculiar kind, which must be construed in a reasonable, common-sense view, and so as not to reduce the contract to an absurdity; Haws v. Fire Ass'n, 114 Pa. 431, 7 Atl. 159; in this case the insurance was on horses alone, and, on that ground, they were distinguished in a later case, in which the policy embraced also property kept in a barn, other than live stock, and the company was held not liable for a horse killed by lightning while in pasture; Haws v. Ins. Co., 130 Pa. 113, 15 Atl. 915, 18 Atl. 621, 2 L. R. A. 52.

Where an insurance policy excepts loss caused directly or indirectly by fire it is an accident, and not a fire, policy, and the complaint must show that the loss was not caused directly or indirectly by fire; Western Refrigerator Co. v. Ins. & Sec. Co., 51 Fed. 155.

When the insurance was against loss by "fire or storm," it did not cover damage by a freshet caused by melting snow with prevailing south winds and rain; Stover v. Ins. Co., 3 Phila. (Pa.) 38.

The exception of "loss by fire occasioned by mobs or riots," does not extend to a loss from the burning of a bridge by military authorities in time of war; Harris v. Ins. Co., 50 Pa. 341; of the risks of this class, usurped power is not an ordinary mob but a rebellious one or one having political purpose; 2 Wilson 363; it is "rebellion conducted by authority;" Lord Mansfield in Langdale v. Mason, 2 Marsh. Ins. 792; but it is not necessary that the destruction be commanded by a superior officer; Barton v. Ins. Co. of New York, 42 Mo. 156, 97 Am. Dec. 329; insurrection is "a seditious rising against the government, a rebellion, a revolt;" Spruill v. Life Ins. Co., 46 N. C. 126; and a riot is "where three or more persons actually do an unlawful act, either with or without a common cause . . . the intention with which the parties assemble, or at least act, being unlawful;" id.; but in another case it was held that the destruction of property in a riot is within the exception even if the rioters assembled originally for a lawful purpose; Dupin v. Ins. Co., 5 La. Ann. 482.

The exemption of loss "by explosion of any kind, by means of invasion," etc., means by explosion and invasion, etc., not explosion caused by invasion; Smiley v. Ins. Co., 14 W. Va. 33.

See CIVIL COMMOTION; INSURRECTION; INVASION; MOB; RIOT; USURPED POWER.

Losses caused by the effort made to prevent the destruction of property by fire must be borne by the insurers and not by the insured; Agnew v. Ins. Co., 3 Phila. (Pa.) 193; as by water; Lewis v. Ins. Co., 10 Gray (Mass.) 159; or theft; Independent Mut. Ins. Co. v. Agnew, 34 Pa. 96, 75 Am. Dec. 638; Witherell v. Ins. Co., 49 Me. 200; Newmark v. Fire & Life Ins. Co., 30 Mo. 160, 77 Am. Dec. 608; unless expressly excluded; Fernandez v. Ins. Co., 17 La. Ann. 131; or removal when required by due diligence, according to the circumstances; Brady v. Ins. Co., 11 Mich. 425; Case v. Fire Ins. Co., 13 Ill. 676; (but see Hillier v. Ins. Co., 3 Pa. 470, 45 Am. Dec. 656); or falling of walls after an interval of a day; 7 Sc. Sess. Cas., 1st ser. 52; but the fire must be the proximate cause; Nave v. Ins. Co., 37 Mo. 429, 90 Am. Dec. 394. See Lewis v. Ins. Co., 10 Gray (Mass.) 159.

Insurance against fire covers a loss by the negligence of the insured not amounting to fraud; Cumberland Val. Mut. Protection Co. v. Douglas, 58 Pa. 419, 98 Am. Dec. 298. The contract of fire insurance is to be construed with reference to the laws of the state in which the property is situated and the policy issued; King Brick Mfg. Co. v. Ins. Co., 164 Mass. 291, 41 N. E. 277; Perry v. Ins. Co., 67 N. H. 291, 33 Atl. 731, 68 Am. St. Rep. 668.

An insane person cannot be held, in setting fire to his property, to have had such a fraudulent or wrongful design as to defeat the insurance thereon, though his estate may afterwards be called upon to respond for the act; D'Autremont v. Fire Ass'n, 65 Hun 475, 20 N. Y. Supp. 344; Bindell v. Ins. Co., 128 Ky. 389, 108 S. W. 325, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 189, 129 Am. St. Rep. 303.

Marine Insurance. A contract of indemnity by which one party, for a stipulated premium, undertakes to indemnify the other, to the extent of the amount insured, against all perils of the sea, or certain enumerated perils, to which his ship, cargo, and freight, or some of them, may be exposed during a certain voyage or fixed period of time.

A contract of indemnity (not perfect but approximate; 1 H. L. Cas. 287; 4 App. Cas. 755); against all losses accruing to the subject-matter of the policy from certain perils during the adventure. This subject-matter need not be strictly a property in the ship, goods, or freight; 2 B. & P. N. R. 269; L. R. 7 Q. B. 302; any reasonable expectation of pecuniary profit from the preservation of the subject-matter is insurable as a marine risk; as, where the joint owners of a vessel and cargo engaged in a joint adventure have a lien for their several interests and for advancements, each part-owner had an insurable interest in the joint venture; International Marine Ins. Co. v. Winsmore, 124 Pa. 61, 16 Atl. 516.

The insured must have a lawful interest at the time of the loss. See INSURABLE INTEREST.

The contract is one recognized by the general law and usage of nations, and therefore either native or alien may be insured. It was settled in England after much judicial discussion (and some temporary legislation) that the insurance of enemy's property is illegal; 13 Ves. 64; see 3 Kent 254. The same rule was recognized by continental jurists; id. 255; Val. Com. ii. 32; and in this country; Griswold v. Waddington, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 438, where the subject was extensively discussed, and it is said that "it may be considered the established law of this country;" 3 Kent 256. Such contracts, made before the outbreak of war, are annulled by it; Snow, Lect. Int. L. 101.

Insurance by British underwriters of a foreign subject's treasure which is later captured by the foreign government of the insured, though war is afterwards declared between the two governments, is valid even though the seizure is made in contemplation of war and in order to support the war; [1902] A. C. 484, affirming [1901] 2 K. B. 419; [1900] 2 Q. B. 339; so where the treasure belongs to a British subject insured by British underwriters but situated in a foreign hostile country; [1901] 2 K. B. 849.

It may also be in favor of A, or whom it may concern, but those general words will only apply to a person with an interest in the subject and who was in the contemplation of the contract; Bauduy v. Ins. Co., 2 Wash. C. C. 391, Fed. Cas. No. 1,112; Hooper v. Robinson, 98 U. S. 528, 25 L. Ed. 219; Duncan v. Ins. Co., 129 N. Y. 237, 29 N. E. 76; if such person has authorized or adopted it; Sanders v. Ins. Co., 44 N. H. 238. The intention of the insurer need not have fastened upon the very person, who seeks to take the benefit; an intention covers a person who takes such relation to the insurer as brings him within the clauses of the policy; Duncan v. Ins. Co., 129 N. Y. 237, 29 N. E. 76. See Haynes v. Rowe, 40 Me. 181. The insurance "on advances" is distinct from the ship itself; Providence Washington Ins. Co. v. Bowring, 50 Fed. 613, 1 C. C. A. 583, 1 U. S. App. 183.

As to who may be insurers in a marine policy there is no special rule.

An insurance on a ship named makes the latter a part of the contract and no other can be substituted, but a cargo may be changed from one ship to another; 3 Kent 257; and the master may be changed; Walden v. Ins. Co., 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 138. An insurance on the ship includes everything appurtenant to it; Boulay-Paty iii. 379; 1 Term 611, note. An insurance on goods need not name the ship, but may be "on any ship or ships;" Emer. i. 173; 2 H. Bla. 343.

Marine policies in England and this country usually contain the words "lost or not lost," and in such case they cover losses already accrued as well as future ones; Commercial Ins. Co. v. Hallock, 27 N. J. L. 645, 72 Am. Dec. 379. It is so without the words in other foreign countries; Roccus, de Ass. n. 51; 3 Kent 259; and it was said by Story, J., that "it would be so without reference to the words"; Hammond v. Allen, 2 Summ. 397, Fed. Cas. No. 6,000.

The most perfect good faith is required in this contract with respect to representations, warranties, and concealment, as to all of which see the several titles.

The insured is required both to pay the premium, and to represent fully and fairly all the circumstances relating to his subject-matter of the insurance, which may influence the determination of the underwriters in undertaking the risk or estimating the premium. A concealment of such facts amounts to a fraud, which avoids the contract; 3 Kent 282.

Where a policy covers a loss by perils of the sea or other perils, the insured may recover for a loss occasioned by the negligence of the master or crew or other persons employed by him; Copeland v. Ins. Co., 2 Metc. (Mass.) 432; General Mut. Ins. Co. v. Sherwood, 14 How. (U. S.) 351, 14 L. Ed. 452; L. R. 4 C. P. 117; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Transp. Co., 117 U. S. 323, 6 Sup. Ct. 1176, 29 L. Ed. 873.

Perils and Loss. Insurance on goods carried on deck of an inland river steamer, according to custom, and lost, may be recovered; [1904] 1 K. B. 252; but there can be no recovery for loss occurring as a result of pushing through dangerous ice by the master of the vessel; Standard Marine Ins. Co. v. Transp. Co., 133 Fed. 636, 67 C. C. A. 602, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1095.

As to the perils insured against generally, see PERILS OF THE SEA; RISKS AND PERILS; and as to the different kinds of marine policies, see POLICY, Loss.

If, before the termination of the adventure, the assured has parted with all interest in the subject-matter of the insurance, he cannot recover on any loss subsequent to his transfer of the property; L. R. 7 Q. B. 302; and the insurer can take nothing by subrogation but the rights of the assured; Hall v. R. Co., 13 Wall. (U. S.) 367, 20 L. Ed. 594; The Potomac, 105 U. S. 630, 26 L. Ed. 1194; Mobile & M. Ry. Co. v. Jurey, 111 U. S. 584, 4 Sup. Ct. 566, 28 L. Ed. 527.

Sue and Labor Clause. This clause, common to all marine policies, protects the assured in times of danger and allows him to incur expenses for repairs or salvage up to the value of the property saved without affecting his rights under the policy. See 22 L. Q. R. 406.

England codified marine insurance in 1906.

Accident Insurance. That form of insurance which provides for specified payments in case of an accident resulting in bodily injury or death, as distinguished from casualty insurance, which is a term applied to insurance against loss or damage to property occasioned by accident. Employers' Liability Assur. Corp. v. Merrill, 155 Mass. 404, 29 N. E. 529. A foreign corporation, although an accident insurance company, has been held authorized to issue "horse or vehicle policies," "elevator policies," "general liability policies," and "outside liability policies;" id.

Accident insurance is intended to furnish indemnity against accidents and death caused by accidental means, and the language of the policy must be construed with reference to that proposition. In case of doubt the construction should be liberal in favor of the insured; Healey v. Acc. Ass'n, 133 Ill. 556, 25 N. E. 52, 9 L. R. A. 371, 23 Am. St. Rep. 637.

Accident policies have been held to cover death from shock and physical strain resulting from being run away with in a covered carriage, where there was no mark of physical injury nor contact with any physical object; McGlinchey v. Casualty Co., 80 Me. 251, 14 Atl. 13, 6 Am. St. Rep. 190; and see [1896] 2 Q. B. 248; suicide by an insane man; Accident Ins. Co. v. Crandal, 120 U. S. 527, 7 Sup. Ct. 685, 30 L. Ed. 740; death from drowning; 5 H. & N. 211; s. c., on appeal, 6 id. 839; falling into the water in a fit; 22 L. T. N. S. 820; 6 Q. B. Div. 42; death from inhaling illuminating gas; Paul v. Ins. Co., 112 N. Y. 472, 20 N. E. 347, 3 L. R. A. 443, 8 Am. St. Rep. 758; Fidelity & Casualty Co. of N. Y. v. Waterman, 59 Ill. App. 297; Pickett v. Ins. Co., 144 Pa. 79, 22 Atl. 871, 13 L. R. A. 661, 27 Am. St. Rep. 618; U. S. Mut. Acc. Ass'n v. Newman, 84 Va. 52, 3 S. E. 805; by taking poison; Healey v. Accident Ass'n, 133 Ill. 556, 25 N. E. 52, 9 L. R. A. 371, 22 Am. St. Rep. 637; or an overdose of medicine; Penfold v. Ins. Co., 85 N. Y. 319, 39 Am. Rep. 660; Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Hazelett, 105 Ind. 212, 4 N. E. 582, 55 Am. Rep. 192; death caused by a piece of beef-steak passing into the windpipe while eating; American Accident Co. v. Reigart, 94 Ky. 547, 23 S. W. 191, 21 L. R. A. 651, 42 Am. St. Rep. 374; death from blood-poisoning, caused by the bite of a mosquito (although poison was expressly excepted); Omberg v. Accident Ass'n, 101 Ky. 303, 40 S. W. 909, 72 Am. St. Rep. 413; falling into the water as the result of a wound; Mallory v. Ins. Co., 47 N. Y. 52, 7 Am. Rep. 410; falling on a railroad track in a fit and being run over; 7 Q. B. Div. 216; being struck by the handle of a pitchfork while making hay and having peritonitis as a result of it; North American Life & Acc. Ins. Co. v. Burroughs, 69 Pa. 43, 8 Am. Rep. 212; spraining the back while lifting a heavy weight; 1 F. & F. 505; being attacked and killed by a highwayman; Hutchcraft's Ex'r v. Ins. Co., 87 Ky. 300, 8 S. W. 570, 12 Am. St. Rep. 484; accidental shooting by a deputy sheriff who did not know at whom he was shooting and did not intend to kill the assured (there being an exception of death from design either of the insured or another person); Utter v. Ins. Co., 65 Mich. 545, 32 N. W. 812, 8 Am. St. Rep. 913; hernia resulting from an accidental fall (although the policy excluded hernia); 17 C. B. N. S. 122; rupture of a blood-vessel sustained while exercising with Indian clubs; McCarthy v. Ins. Co., 8 Biss. 362, Fed. Cas. No. 8,682; falling from the cars while walking during sleep; Scheiderer v. Ins. Co., 58 Wis. 13, 16 N. W. 47, 46 Am. Rep. 618.

Stepping out of a railway carriage when it has come to a full stop at a station and slipping off the iron step, thereby sustaining injuries, is a railway accident; 10 Exch. 45; death caused by blood poisoning resulting from an accidental cut is within the provision of external violence and accidental means; Central Accident Ins. Co. v. Rembe, 220 Ill. 151, 77 N. E. 123, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 933, 110 Am. St. Rep. 235, 5 Ann. Cas. 155; or from an accidental abrasion of the skin followed by bacterial infection; Cary v. Ins. Co., 127 Wis. 67, 106 N. W. 1055, 115 Am. St. Rep. 997, 9 Ann. Cas. 484; Jones v. Casualty Co., 140 N. C. 262, 52 S. E. 578, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 932, 111 Am. St. Rep. 843; contra, where there is an exemption of liability for death resulting from poisoning; McGlothter v. Accident Co., 89 Fed. 685, 32 C. C. A. 318; Hill v. Ins. Co., 22 Hun (N. Y.) 187; and so where blood poisoning results from a wound in the hand caused by assaulting another; Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York v. Stacey's Ex'rs, 143 Fed. 271, 74 C. C. A. 409, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 657, 6 Ann. Cas. 955; and death by accidental asphyxiation under an exemption from liability for death caused by gas or vapor; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Ayers, 217 Ill. 391, 75 N. E. 506, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 168; but there may be a recovery for peritonitis caused by pressure on the bones of the hand during sleep; Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Fitzgerald, 165 Ind. 317, 75 N. E. 262, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 422, 112 Am. St. Rep. 232, 6 Ann. Cas. 551.

It has been strongly contended that such cases as those enumerated were not within the ordinary accident policy because there was no extraordinary injury according to the ordinary meaning of the term, but, in reply to this in a leading case of drowning, the court said: "That argument if carried to its extreme length would apply to every case where death was immediate;" 6 H. & N. 839; and in a case of death from the inhalation of gas, the court said: "We think it a sufficient answer that the gas in the atmosphere as an extraordinary cause was a violent agency in the sense that it worked on the intestate so as to cause his death; that death is the result of accident or is unnatural, imports the extraordinary and violent agency of the cause;" Paul v. Ins. Co., 112 N. Y. 472, 20 N. E. 347, 3 L. R. A. 443, 8 Am. St. Rep. 758. The view which these courts considered untenable was, however, taken by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania on a policy exactly similar. The court said: "The object of the company is to insure bodily injuries produced in a certain manner specified, that is, caused by external, violent, and accidental means; not injuries caused by any one of these means, but by all of them combined;" Pollock v. Acc. Ass'n, 102 Pa. 230, 48 Am. Rep. 204; but this language seems to be a dictum, because there was a condition in the policy excepting death or injury caused by the taking of poison, and the point of the case was that an involuntary taking of poison by mistake was within the exception; but in a New York case of death from inhaling gas there was also a proviso excepting death caused by inhaling gas, and the court construed it "to mean a voluntary and intelligent act by the assured and not an involuntary and unconscious act;" Paul v. Ins. Co., 112 N. Y. 472, 20 N. E. 347, 3 L. R. A. 443, 8 Am. St. Rep. 758. This case and the Pennsylvania case are therefore in direct opposition on the construction of the condition, and the former was decided after consideration of and with express dissent from the latter.

An exception that if the insured should die by his own hand, sane or insane, the policy should be void, "covers all conscious acts of the insured by which death by his own hand is compassed, whether he was at the time sane or insane, if the act was done for the purpose of self-destruction, it matters not that the insured had no conception of the wrong involved in its performance;" Streeter v. Acc. Soc., 65 Mich. 199, 31 N. W. 779, 8 Am. St. Rep. 882. In this case it was held that whether a fall six weeks before the insured shot himself was the cause of the killing was too conjectural to be submitted to the jury as a direct cause of the suicide. See CAUSA PROXIMA.

It has been held that death was not the result of accident within the meaning of the policy where it was occasioned by epilepsy; Tennant v. Ins. Co., 31 Fed. 322; sunstroke; 3 El. & El. 478; rupture caused by jumping from a train where nothing unforeseen happened from the time the insured left the platform to the time he alighted on the ground; Southard v. Assur. Co., 34 Conn. 574, Fed. Cas. No. 13,182; United States Mut. Acc. Ass'n v. Barry, 131 U. S. 100, 9 Sup. Ct. 755, 33 L. Ed. 60.

Where the insured was assassinated, there could be no recovery under a policy which excepted death or injury inflicted by design of himself or another; Travellers' Ins. Co. v. McConkey, 127 U. S. 661, 8 Sup. Ct. 1360, 32 L. Ed. 308; Hutchcraft's Ex'r v. Ins. Co., 87 Ky. 300, 8 S. W. 570, 12 Am. St. Rep. 484; but where the death was the result of an accident, the fact that the negligence of the assured may have contributed to it is no defence in the absence of an express stipulation in the policy to that effect; Schneider v. Ins. Co., 24 Wis. 28, 1 Am. Rep. 157; Providence Life Ins. & Inv. Co. of Chicago v. Martin, 32 Md. 310; Champlin v. Assur. Co., 6 Lans. (N. Y.) 71.

Accident policies usually cover the risk incident to a specific occupation, a substantial change of which will, if it increase the risk, render the policy void. Such a stipulation is held to mean engaging in another employment as a usual business; Provident Life Ins. Co. v. Fennell, 49 Ill. 180; but it was not such a change for a school teacher while disengaged to be employed in building operations; id.; or for one to engage in pitching hay while visiting his grandfather; North American Life & Accident Ins. Co. v. Burroughs, 69 Pa. 43, 8 Am. Rep. 212; or for a locomotive engineer to climb over the tender to apply the brakes on a car; Providence Life Ins. Co. & Investment Co. of Chicago v. Martin, 32 Md. 310. In all such cases the question what is a substantial change of occupation is to be left to the jury; Stone's Adm'rs v. Casualty Co., 34 N. J. L. 371.

The expression "voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger," used in stating the exceptions to the liability of an insurance company upon an accident policy, refers only to dangers of a real and substantial character which the insured recognized, but to which he, nevertheless, purposely and consciously exposed himself, intending at the same time to assume all the risks of the situation. Voluntary riding upon the platform of a rapidly moving railroad car is not, of itself and as a matter of law, a voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger and presents a question of fact for the jury. Where an accident insurance policy exempts the insurer from liability for injuries received while violating rules of a corporation, the question is for the jury as to whether the insured knew of a rule of the corporation which he is alleged to have violated, and the court should charge that in order to bind insured, it must be one which the corporation enforced or used reasonable effort to enforce; Travellers' Ins. Co. v. Randolph, 78 Fed. 754, 24 C. C. A. 305; opinion by Harlan, J., considering all the cases at length; and see 7 Am. L. Rev. 590, where the question whether death from freezing while climbing Mount Blanc was or was not a voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger was discussed with reference to a case in which the point was raised but not settled, the suit being compromised.

In an exception prohibiting exposure to obvious or unnecessary danger and requiring diligence on the part of the assured, there can be no recovery where death was caused by being struck by a railroad train while running along the tracks in front of it in the night-time for the purpose of getting on a train approaching in an opposite direction on a parallel track; Tuttle v. Ins. Co., 134 Mass. 175, 45 Am. Rep. 316; nor where it was caused by falling from the platform of a railroad car between eleven and twelve o'clock at night when the train was in motion; Sawtelle v. Pass. Assur. Co., 15 Blatchf. 216, Fed. Cas. No. 12,392; or from unnecessarily passing on a dark and rainy night over a trestle known to be dangerous with two packages in his hands, although it was the usual route home of the assured and many others; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Jones, 80 Ga. 541, 7 S. E. 83, 12 Am. St. Rep. 270; or where a shop hand of a railway company went on the platform when the train was in motion to leave the train when it should stop to cross over by a switch to another track (the exception not being applicable to the exposure of railway employes in the performance of their duty); Hull v. Acc. Ass'n, 41 Minn. 231, 42 N. W. 936; but where the insured by a voluntary act exposed himself to a hidden danger, the existence of which he had no reason to suspect, and thereby lost his life, his death was caused by accident and the company is liable; Burkhard v. Ins. Co., 102 Pa. 262, 48 Am. Rep. 205; a clause prohibiting voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger does not prohibit one from walking or being on a railway bridge or road-bed; Traders' & Travelers' Acc. Co. v. Wagley, 74 Fed. 457, 20 C. C. A. 588; Lehman v. Indemnity Co., 7 App. Div. 424, 39 N. Y. Supp. 912; see also where a passenger is overcome by the heat of the car, or nausea, and goes upon the platform; Marx v. Ins. Co., 39 Fed. 321; or getting from the platform at a depot upon the cars while in motion at a rate of speed less than that of a man walking; Schneider v. Ins. Co., 24 Wis. 28; going to the rescue of a shipwrecked crew, although the policy prohibited the insured from engaging in the business of wrecking; Tucker v. Ins. Co., 50 Hun 50, 4 N. Y. Supp. 505. Playing indoor baseball is not a voluntary exposure to danger; Hunt v. Accident Ass'n, 146 Mich. 521, 109 N. W. 1042, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 938, 119 Am. St. Rep. 655, 10 Ann. Cas. 449.

The exception against death or injury happening while the insured was intoxicated, or in consequence thereof, prevents a recovery, without reference to the question whether the condition was the cause of the injury or not; Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co. v. Jones, 94 Ala. 434, 10 South. 530; Shader v. Assur. Co., 66 N. Y. 441, 23 Am. Rep. 65; as, where the deceased, being under the influence of liquor, was killed by a pistol shot while dining with a friend; id. To be under the influence of intoxicating liquor within the meaning of such exception means to have drunk enough to disturb the action of the mental and physical faculties so that they are no longer in their normal condition; id.; the expression is equivalent to "intoxicated"; Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co. v. Jones, 94 Ala. 434, 10 South. 530.

Where the death was caused by inadvertently taking an overdose of opium which had been prescribed by a physician, it was held within the exception of any death caused wholly or in part by medical treatment for disease; Bayless v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 14 Blatchf. 143, Fed. Cas. No. 1,138.

The question frequently arises what is total disability for which the policy entitles the insured to claim indemnity. In an English case in which this question was much discussed, it was held that a solicitor who had sprained his ankle while riding on horseback and was under the care of a surgeon for six weeks, unable to leave the house or transact business which could not be attended to in the house, but could write letters, read law, and the like while lying on a couch, was not totally disabled; 5 H. & N. 546. This judgment was affirmed in Exchequer Chamber. The provision in this and similar cases is usually for a weekly allowance in case of accident causing any bodily injury of so serious a nature as wholly to disable the insured from following his business. Under such a clause total disability to labor must be shown; Rhodes v. Ins. Co., 5 Lans. (N. Y.) 71; by it is meant disability from doing substantially all kinds of the plaintiff's accustomed labor to some extent, and that the assured must be deprived of the power to do to any extent substantially all the kinds of his usual labor; 8 Am. Law Reg. N. S. 233; where the provision was for total disability there could be no recovery if the assured were able to do some parts of the accustomed work pertaining to his business or, if totally disabled in his own pursuit, he should be able to engage in some other; Lyon v. Assur. Co., 46 Ia. 631.

Where the provision was that the injured must be "wholly disabled to prevent him from the prosecution of any and every kind of business pertaining to his occupation," it was held error to instruct the jury that the defendant was to pay the amount agreed, if by the accident the plaintiff had been disabled in any way from prosecuting the business in which he was engaged, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover for such time as he was "rendered wholly unable to do his accustomed labor, that is, to do substantially all kinds of his accustomed labor to some extent;" Saveland v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 67 Wis. 174, 30 N. W. 237, 58 Am. Rep. 863.

It has been held that the meaning of the word accident, as used in a policy, is for the jury, as it is also to determine whether there was exposure to unnecessary danger; Travelers' Preferred Acc. Ass'n v. Stone, 50 Ill. App. 222; or whether the total loss of three fingers and a part of another on the same hand, destruction of the thumb, and a cutting of the hand is a loss of the hand causing "immediate, continuous, and total disability" within the meaning of that clause in an accident insurance policy; Lord v. Acc. Ass'n, 89 Wis. 19, 61 N. W. 293, 26 L. R. A. 741, 46 Am. St. Rep. 815; and see Sneck v. Ins. Co., 88 Hun 94, 34 N. Y. Supp. 545, where the plaintiff's hand was cut off a short distance above the knuckles, leaving nearly the whole palm and part of the second joint of the thumb, and it was held to be a loss of the entire hand within the meaning of the policy; overruling Sneck v. Ins. Co., 81 Hun 331, 30 N. Y. Supp. 881. See REPRESENTATION; ACT OF GOD.

A provision in a policy that the medical adviser of the insurer may examine the body of the insured or attend any post mortem examination which may be held, only authorizes examination of the body unburied and does not warrant exhumation and autopsy, nor does an exception of injuries of which there is no visible mark; Wehle v. Acc. Ass'n, 11 Misc. 36, 31 N. Y. Supp. 865.

See, generally, Cook, L. & Acc. Ins.; Niblack, Mut. Ben. & Acc. Insurance.

Casualty Insurance. A contract by which a person is indemnified against loss or damage to property, occasioned by accident. The term is thus applied in contradistinction to accident insurance by the Massachusetts Supreme Court, in Employers' Liability Assur. Corp. v. Merrill, 155 Mass. 404, 29 N. E. 529. The question was whether a foreign company licensed to do business in the state, but by statute restricted to one kind or class of business, was authorized to issue policies covering special classes of accidents, involving bodily injury and death. In this connection the court said: "The distinguishing feature of what is known in our legislation as 'accident insurance' is that it indemnifies against the effects of accidents resulting in bodily injury or death. Its field is not to insure against loss or damage to property, although occasioned by accident. So far as that class of insurance has been developed, it has been with reference to boilers, plate glass, and perhaps to domestic animals and injuries to property by street cars, and is known as 'casualty insurance.'"

The distinction is founded in reason and the terminology is well adapted to the subject. Its precision is in sharp contrast to the vagueness and want of definiteness which characterize the references of text writers and judges to the various forms of insurance which have come into use with the increase in number of perils to life and property.

Among the perils covered by this kind of insurance are included: the loss of horses and cattle, theft of valuables, breakage of plate glass, loss by tornadoes or force of the elements, explosion or bursting of boilers, etc. These policies usually stipulate certain exceptions against which they will not insure, as fire and lightning; but such a policy was held to cover a loss by flood; Iley v. Indemnity Co., 181 Pa. 220, 37 Atl. 402, 59 Am. St. Rep. 644. An exception against loss caused by leakage resulting from earthquakes or cyclones will cover leakage caused by a wind storm which resembles a tornado more than a cyclone; Maryland Casualty Co. v. Finch, 147 Fed. 388, 77 C. C. A. 566, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 308.

A carrier may lawfully insure against liability for loss of goods occasioned by the negligence of a servant; Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. R. Co. v. Ins. Co., 64 Minn. 61, 66 N. W. 132; in such a case the liability of the insured becomes fixed on the happening of the accident, although the amount is contingent, to the extent that the amount which the insured may be adjudged to pay has not yet been ascertained; American Casualty Ins. Company's Case, 82 Md. 535, 34 Atl. 778, 38 L. R. A. 97.

A policy against loss or damage to property, and loss of life or injury to employees of the insured or other persons, payable to the insured for the benefit of such persons or their legal representatives, is a contract of indemnity, and a person who is injured by such explosion cannot sue the insurer; Embler v. Ins. Co., 8 App. Div. 186, 40 N. Y. Supp. 450.

In a policy on live stock the insurer is stopped to deny that the sum named in the policy is the insurable value of the horse; Illinois Live Stock Ins. Co. v. Koehler, 58 Ill. App. 557. Where the policy covering "two horses" was cancelled as to one, the insured may show that it was cancelled as to a mare covered by the policy; Pfeifer v. Ins. Co., 62 Minn. 536, 64 N. W. 1018. The provision for notice to the insurer by telegram, of the sickness of an animal, did not require such notice of a sickness which lasted only ten minutes and did not recur for seven weeks; Kells v. Ins. Co., 64 Minn. 390, 67 N. W. 215, 71 N. W. 5, 58 Am. St. Rep. 541. Where the insured had given notes for the horse, and in his contract for purchase stipulated that in case of the death of the animal within a certain time the vendor should take the insurance and give up the notes, it was not a breach of the stipulation in the policy that the vendee "is the sole, absolute, and unconditional owner;" id. The insurer is not bound by the consent of his agent to kill the horse insured, although suffering from an incurable disease; Tripp v. Live-Stock Ins. Co., 91 Ia. 278, 59 N. W. 1.

Where plate glass was insured and the insurer, exercising his option, employed a person with whom he had a contract for that purpose to replace it (the policy providing that the insured should when necessary remove any woodwork, gas fixtures, or other obstruction), the negligent removal of gas pipes by the contractor and a resulting explosion causing a breakage of the new glass, did not render the insurer liable; McCauley v. Casualty Co., 16 Misc. 574, 38 N. Y. Supp. 773.

Credit Insurance. A contract by which the insured is indemnified against loss by the failure of his customers to pay for goods sold to them. It is insurance against excess loss by the insured, i. e. against a loss which is in excess of a specified percentage of gross sales. It usually limits the losses insured against to a fixed amount by reason of sales to any one person, and limits the sales, covered by the policy, to customers having at least a specified minimum commercial rating by a specified commercial agency. It usually provides for an initial loss to be borne by the insured.

The insured is frequently termed the "indemnified," and so referred to in the policy. Such contract is not a contract of suretyship, but a policy of insurance; Tebbets v. Guarantee Co., 73 Fed. 95, 19 C. C. A. 281; Shakman v. Credit Co., 92 Wis. 366, 66 N. W. 528, 32 L. R. A. 383, 53 Am. St. Rep. 920; Mercantile Credit & Guaranty Co. v. Littleford Bros., 18 Ohio Cir. Ct. 889; and to be construed most strongly against the insurer; id.

It is like any other insurance contract and is governed largely by the same rules; Wadsworth v. Jewelers Co., 132 N. Y. 540, 29 N. E. 1104; Clafin v. Credit Co., 165 Mass. 501, 43 N. E. 293, 52 Am. St. Rep. 528. The agent who solicits it is within the purview of a statute making him the agent of the insurer; Shakman v. Credit Co., 92 Wis. 366, 66 N. W. 528, 32 L. R. A. 383, 53 Am. St. Rep. 920.

There is a distinction between this loss and other kinds of insurance with respect to the value of the policy, which has been thus stated: The loss provable on a policy of insurance is ordinarily the reserve value of the policy, or the amount sufficient to re-insure the holder in a solvent company for the same amount, to be paid upon a loss happening on the same conditions and within the same time. Credit insurance is peculiar; there does not appear to be any reserve value to the policies, nor are there any general tables to show the rate of re-insurance, nor any other solvent company in which re-insurance could be obtained. When no losses occurred it may be assumed that the premium is a fair price for the risk, and the loss may be taken to be a proportionate part of the premium. When actual losses have been sustained after the insolvency and before the proof, these losses may be accepted as evidence of the value of the policy; Duryee v. Credit Co. (N. J.) 32 Atl. 690.

Under a policy of indemnity to the insured, to the extent of $10,000, against losses in excess of one-fourth of one per cent. of their annual sales, twelve per cent. additional to be deducted from the total gross losses, the claim not to exceed $7,500, by any one firm, where there was a loss with one firm of $20,000, the total gross loss from which deductions were to be made was $7,500, and the balance was the indemnity to be paid; Rice v. Ins. Co., 164 Mass. 285, 41 N. E. 276.

A policy of credit insurance was terminated by the insolvency of the insured, and the deduction to be made before the "excess" was ascertained was calculated on the amount of sales made up to the time of insolvency and not on the amount stipulated for the term of the policy; 25 Ins. L. J. 842.

A provision in such a policy that amounts realized from other security or indemnity shall be deducted before the adjustment of a loss, does not entitle the insurer to deduct the proceeds of a policy in another company which provides that it shall not cover losses insured by the first company, but shall only attach when that company's policy is exhausted; American Credit Indemnity Co. v. Wood, 73 Fed. 81, 19 C. C. A. 284. One who is the agent of the insurer for the purpose of soliciting such insurance, transmitting applications, and collecting premiums, and who receives pay therefor, has power to make an additional agreement providing that if the customer is not rated in Dun's and is rated in Bradstreet's, the latter shall be binding on the insurer; Shakman v. Credit Co., 92 Wis. 366, 66 N. W. 528, 32 L. R. A. 383, 53 Am. St. Rep. 920; and to vary details of the policy as to credit rating; id.

Employer's Liability Insurance. A contract by which the company agrees to reimburse an employer for any loss occasioned by his liability for damages to an employé, injured in his service.

The liability of the insurer becomes fixed on the happening of the accident or casualty, even though the amount of such liability is contingent, to the extent that the amount which the insured may be adjudged to pay has not been ascertained; American Casualty Ins. Co.'s Case, 82 Md. 535, 34 Atl. 778, 38 L. R. A. 97.

Under a policy of insurance against damage for which the insured may be liable under an employer's liability act (q. v.) where the workman has recovered damages for injuries in a common-law action, and not under the statute, the insurer will not be liable to reimburse the amount so recovered; 16 Can. S. C., 4th ser. 212; but where the policy contained a clause agreeing to indemnify the insured against damages sustained by the employé while engaged in operations cor-nected with the business of iron work, it was held to cover injuries received by reason of the construction of a building for the use of such business; Hoven v. Assur. Corp., 93 Wis. 201, 67 N. W. 46, 32 L. R. A. 388.

There is no obligation on the part of the insurer which can become the subject of garnishment in proceedings by an employé to enforce a judgment against the insured; Allen v. Ins. Co., 145 Fed. 881, 76 C. C. A. 265, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 958.

A policy which provides that the employer shall not settle with an employé without the consent of the insurer, who was to assume control of litigation, is a contract of indemnity against liability, and payment by the employer of a judgment recovered against him is not a condition precedent to the insurer's liability; id.; and a person who is injured cannot sue the insurer; Embler v. Ins. Co., 8 App. Div. 186, 40 N. Y. Supp. 450. But where the insurer was prohibited from suing until after judgment against him, in which case an action might be brought within thirty days after such judgment, it was held that the contract was not one of indemnity merely, so that an action would lie after judgment was recovered against the employer, though it was paid by him, such payment not being a condition precedent to recovery; Anoka Lumber Co. v. Casualty Co., 63 Minn. 286, 65 N. W. 353, 30 L. R. A. 689; nor is a discharge of liabilities by the insured, under a clause in the policy promising to pay "all damages with which the insured may be legally charged," such a contract being not one of indemnity alone, but also a contract to pay liabilities; American Employers' Liability Ins. Co. v. Fordyce, 62 Ark. 562, 36 S. W. 1051, 54 Am. St. Rep. 305. When the insured was required to give immediate notice to the insurer upon the occurrence of an accident and notice of any claim on account of it, the notice under the condition is not required until an accident happens and the employer has received notice of a claim made on account thereof; Anoka Lumber Co. v. Casualty Co., 63 Minn. 286, 65 N. W. 353, 30 L. R. A. 689.

Such a policy is in no sense a contract between the insurer and the employé, and any sum paid by the company to the employer on account of the death of an employé, whose widow had a right of action, is not an asset of the estate of the deceased; Hawkins v. McCalla, 95 Ga. 192, 22 S. E. 141.

It is generally provided in such policies that the insurer shall have control of the defence of any suits against the employer on claims covered by the insurance, and such a condition is strictly enforced; 15 Can. L. T. 86.

Fidelity Insurance. A contract to indemnify the insured against loss by reason of the default or dishonesty of the employé.

Bonds of indemnity given by fidelity insur- ance companies are analogous to ordinary policies of insurance, and are governed by the same principles of interpretation; Mechanics' Savings Bank & Trust Co. v. Guarantee Co., 68 Fed. 459.

All conditions in the policy must be complied with as in other cases of insurance, and where one of them is the prosecution of the person whose action is insured against, before he can recover, against the insurer, it was held, by an equally divided court, that the insured must conform to this condition even if he thereby became liable to an action for damages; 9 Ins. L. J. 160.

A statement in the application as to the frequency of measures usually taken by the employer to secure the fidelity of the employed is a warranty the breach of which will defeat recovery; 28 Scot. L. Rep. 394; but in an application for insurance, declarations of the integrity of a clerk, in answer to questions which manifestly relate to the course of business of the employer, are mere representations and not warranties; 7 Exch. 744. Where the bond provides that answers made to questions asked in the application shall be warranties, and the answers are made on the employer's "best knowledge and belief," mere falsity of the answers is not sufficient to avoid the bond, but the company must show that they are "knowingly false;" Mechanics' Savings Bank & Trust Co. v. Guarantee Co., 68 Fed. 459; and if such answers involved no misrepresentation or concealment, the contract could not be affected by loose parol statements, or concealment of facts about which no inquiry was made, or conduct on which no reliance was placed; Supreme Council Catholic Knights of America v. Casualty Co., 63 Fed. 48, 11 C. C. A. 96.

A representation that the person whose integrity is insured "has never been in arrears or default of his accounts" covers any which may have occurred prior to the time when he entered the service of the insured; 30 U. C. C. P. 360. To charge an embezzling employé with interest on the money embezzled converts the embezzlement into a debt and the insurer is not liable therefor; Milwaukee Theater Co. v. Casualty Co., 92 Wis. 412, 66 N. W. 360.

Leaving money temporarily in an insecurely locked room when there were various means of safe-keeping available, was held a violation of a guarantee of "diligent and faithful performance of his duty," for which an insurer was liable; 6 Leg. N. (Can.) 311; 16 Can. L. J. 334. So allowing a customer to make an overdraft on a bank was held negligence in the bank's agent who permitted it, the agent and the customer being together involved in brokerage transactions; 7 Revue Légale 57; s. c. 14 L. C. Jur. 186.

Where the employer retains the employé in his service after he knows of the latter's dishonesty, and without notice to and assent of the insurer, he cannot recover; Lancashire Ins. Co. v. Callahan, 68 Minn. 277, 71 N. W. 261, 64 Am. St. Rep. 475; but this rule will not apply to mere breaches of duty or contract obligation, not involving dishonesty of the servant or fraud and concealment on the part of the master; id.

A bank cannot recover for loss occurring after it has been informed that its teller is engaged in speculation and where it has not so notified the insurer, or not made any investigation; Guarantee Co. of N. A. v. Trust Co., 183 U. S. 402, 22 Sup. Ct. 124, 46 L. Ed. 253; the employer is not bound to use diligence to discover dishonesty, but where, in the exercise of reasonable and ordinary care, he could not have failed to infer dishonesty, he may properly be charged with knowledge of such fact; National Bank of Asheville v. Casualty Co., 89 Fed. 819, 32 C. C. A. 355; and if a bank's cashier leaves without notice, taking $5,000 of its money, and the president, with knowledge of the facts, but without disclosure to the company, renews the cashier's bond and pays the premium, there can be no recovery on the bond; id.

The employé is bound to reimburse the insurer for the loss sustained through him; Fidelity & Casualty Co. of N. Y. v. Eickhoff, 63 Minn. 170, 65 N. W. 351, 30 L. R. A. 586, 56 Am. St. Rep. 464; but, upon the payment of a loss, the insurer is subrogated to the rights of the employer in the prosecution of dishonest employes; London Guar., etc., Co. v. Geddes, 22 Fed. 639. And a stipulation between the insurer and the employé that the evidence of payment by the insurer to the employer should be conclusive evidence against the employé as to the fact and extent of his liability to indemnify the insurer, is void as against public policy; id.

Where the indemnity was for one year, and it was provided that a claim under the bond or any renewal thereof should embrace only acts during its currency, it was held that each renewal was a separate contract, and the discovery, during the term of the renewal of theft committed during the running of the bond under a previous renewal, would not make the company liable therefor, when the discovery was too late to hold the insurer under the bond on the renewal in force when the thefts were committed; De Jernette v. Casualty Co., 98 Ky. 558, 33 S. W. 828; and when it was provided that any claim under the bond should cover only defaults committed during its currency, and within twelve months prior to its discovery, it was held that it did not cover a default committed more than twelve months prior to such discovery which would have occurred within the year but for the falsification of the books within the year preceding; Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Bank, 71 Fed. 116, 17 C. C. A. 641; reversing Consolidation Nat. Bank of Philadelphia v. Casualty Co., 67 Fed. 874.

In American Surety Co. v. Pauly, 72 Fed. 470, 18 C. C. A. 644, on this subject, it was held (1) Where a policy stipulates for a notification of the dishonesty of the employé as soon as practicable after the occurrence of the act, and the evidence as to when the dishonesty was discovered was conflicting, the question what is a reasonable time is for the jury. (2) It is not necessary to give notice of suspicions of dishonesty. (3) The fact that the insured corporation has passed into the hands of a receiver will not absolve the insurer from liability. (4) Where proof of loss under the bond is set forth with reasonable plainness and in a manner which a person of ordinary intelligence cannot fail to understand, a failure to explicitly aver that a loss has been caused is immaterial. (5) The fact that one member of a corporation was cognizant of an employé's dishonesty, and that fraudulent collusion existed between them, cannot make the corporation responsible for a false certificate of character issued by him without the knowledge of other directors; American Surety Co. v. Pauly, 72 Fed. 470, 18 C. C. A. 644.

Guaranty Insurance. This term has sometimes been used to express indiscriminately the classes of insurance herein entitled Credit, Fidelity, and Title Insurance. The latter designations are conceived to be better adapted to the subject-matter, and their employment is not only the better usage but undoubtedly leads to a clearer understanding of the varied subject-matter now involved in the law of insurance.

The expression "Guaranty Insurance" has, however, an extended use in England and Canada, and is there used to designate insurance of the integrity of employes, the phrase "policy of guaranty" being in frequent use by the courts; 7 Jur. N. S. 1109; 30 U. C. C. P. 360; 16 Can. L. J. 334; 14 L. C. Jur. 186.

The term is also used in a few English cases involving the guaranty of merchants against losses in business from the bankruptcy, insolvency, or assignment with preference of their customers; 7 H. & N. 5.

In an American case of a date long prior to the use of these modern forms of insurance, an action of debt was sustained upon a policy of insurance guaranteeing to the bearer the payment of a note, and it was held that there was authority to issue such a policy under charter powers such as were at that time conferred upon insurance companies generally, and it was also held that the policy passed by delivery; Ellicott v. Ins. Co., 8 G. & J. (Md.) 166.

Title Insurance. A contract to indemnify the owner or mortgagee of real estate from loss by reason of defective titles, liens, or incumbrances.

Answers to questions in applications for such policies are held to amount to a warranty and the question of materiality cannot be raised; Stensgaard v. Ins. Co., 50 Minn. 429, 52 N. W. 910, 17 L. R. A. 575.

Where a title insurance company undertook to defend the interest of insured in the premises against a lien, it was bound to protect him through all stages of the proceeding to enforce the lien, as well after as before judgment therein, or notify him that it could not do so, and furnish him necessary information of the status of the proceeding in time to enable him to protect himself; and if, after giving such notice, the company defended the proceeding, but thereafter abandoned the defence, it was necessary for it to give insured another such notice; Quigley v. Trust Co., 64 Minn. 149, 66 N. W. 364.

Where an insurer agrees to indemnify a mortgagee against loss not exceeding $2,200 by reason of incumbrances, and to defend the land against such claims, a loss occurring by reason of the negligence of the insurer is not limited to the $2,200; Quigley v. Trust Co., 60 Minn. 275, 62 N. W. 287.

Under a title insurance policy, the fact that the conveyancing was done, not by the insurer but by the conveyancer of the insured, was held no defence, and the right of the insurer to do conveyancing, draw deeds, write wills, or the like, was denied, and their action in assuming such right, unwarranted by their charter, was declared to be a usurpation on the commonwealth; Gauler v. Trust Co., 9 Pa. C. C. R. 634.

In cases of defective title, or an incumbrance requiring removal, the insured would be entitled, in an action on the policy, to recover the costs and expenses incurred in curing the defect or removing the incumbrance; but in case of total loss of title the value of the property lost is the measure of damages, and where the insured had been compelled to pay more than the amount of the policy to get a good title, judgment was entered for that sum; id.

When the title was insured under a policy to the mortgagee and the latter bought in the property at a foreclosure sale, the purchase did not cancel the mortgage so as to annul the policy, but the insurer was liable to redeem the property from a sale under prior mechanic's liens; Minnesota Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. Drexel, 70 Fed. 194, 17 C. C. A. 56.

See LIEN; MORTGAGE; TITLE; WARRANTY.

Insurance against Birth of Issue. A form of insurance common in England by which the heir presumptive protects his interest against either the birth of an heir apparent or the attainment of majority, or to a particular age by an existing heir apparent. It is also and more commonly practised by tenants for life under settlements, who are entitled to reversions in fee simple subject to estates tail in their own issue by a particular marriage, and who, by this method, are enabled to mortgage their estates without burdening their life interests with premiums on life insurance. In this form of insurance the principal elements to consider are the age and the health of the party and the age at which women will cease to bear children. See Jac. Ch. 585, 586; 4 Hare 124; 5 De G. & S. 226; 10 Beav. 463; 19 id. 565.

INSURANCE AGENT. An agent for effecting insurance may be such by appointment or the recognition of his acts done as such; 2 Phill. Ins. § 1848; Perkins v. Ins. Co., 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 645. He may be agent for either of the parties to the policy, or for distinct purposes for both; People v. Imlay, 20 Barb. (N. Y.) 68.

An insurance agent's powers may be more or less extensive according to the express or implied stipulations and understandings between him and his principals. They may be for filling up and issuing policies signed in blank by his principals, for transmitting applications to his principals filled up by himself, as their agent or that of the applicant, for receiving and transmitting premiums, for adjusting and settling losses, or granting liberties and making new stipulations, or for any one or more of these purposes; First Baptist Church v. Ins. Co., 19 N. Y. 305; Bouton v. Ins. Co., 25 Conn. 542; Campbell v. Ins. Co., 37 N. H. 35, 72 Am. Dec. 324; Augusta Insurance & Banking Co. of Georgia v. Abbott, 12 Md. 348; Howard Fire Ins. Co. v. Bruner, 23 Pa. 50; New York Union Mut. Ins. Co. v. Johnson, id. 72; East Texas Fire Ins. Co. v. Brown, 82 Tex. 631, 18 S. W. 713; Hahn v. Assurance Co., 23 Or. 576, 32 Pac. 683, 37 Am. St. Rep. 709.

It is reasonable for insurance companies to insert in their policies conditions that their agents shall not have authority to alter the expressed terms of the policies; Northern Assur. Co. v. Bldg. Ass'n, 183 U. S. 308, 22 Sup. Ct. 133, 46 L. Ed. 213; or to waive any stipulation therein unless endorsed on or added to the policy; Gish v. Ins. Co., 16 Okla. 59, 87 Pac. 869, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 826. An agent cannot act so as to bind his company beyond the scope of his authority; Deming Inv. Co. v. Ins. Co., 16 Okla. 1, 83 Pac. 918, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 607; Northern Assur. Co. v. Bldg. Ass'n, 183 U. S. 308, 22 Sup. Ct. 133, 46 L. Ed. 213; contra, Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Schlink, 175 Ill. 284, 51 N. E. 795, where it was held the agent could waive a condition before delivery. A present contract of insurance is not affected by signing an application and the statement of an agent that he would take care of it and get a policy; Whitman v. Ins. Co., 128 Wis. 124, 107 N. W. 291, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 407, 116 Am. St. Rep. 25.

A general agent is one who represents the insurer in the conduct of the business generally in a particular place or territory. The powers of the general agent are thus stated by Dwight, Com., in Pitney v. Ins. Co., 65

N. Y. 6: "It is clear that a person authorized to accept risks, to agree upon and settle the terms of insurance, and carry them into effect by issuing and renewing policies, must be regarded as the general agent of the company. (Post v. Ins. Co., 43 Barb. [N. Y.] 351.) The possession of blank policies and renewal receipts, signed by the president and secretary, is evidence of a general agency. (Carroll v. Ins. Co., 40 Barb. [N. Y.] 292.) The power of such an agent of a stock company is plenary as to the amount and nature of the risk, the rate of premium, and generally as to the terms and conditions, and he may make such memoranda and indorsements, modifying the general provisions of the policy, and even inconsistent therewith, as in his discretion seems proper, before the policy is delivered, and in some cases even afterward. (May, Ins. 129.) He may also insert, by memorandum or indorsement, a description of the property inconsistent with the description of the same contained in the application, and such change will be effectual to protect the insured, although the policy itself provides that all conditions named in the application are to be fully complied with and that the application shall be a part of the policy, and a warranty on the part of the insured. (May, Ins. 129; Gloucester Mfg. Co. v. Ins. Co., 5 Gray [Mass.] 497, 66 Am. Dec. 376.)"

An agent holding a commission from an insurance company authorizing him to take risks generally, without placing any limitation thereon, either as to the kinds of risks or as to the territory within which they may be, is a general agent; and the fact that the policy provides that, in any matter relating to the insurance, no person shall be deemed the agent of the company unless authorized in writing, and that the agent's commission states that he shall be subject to the rules of the company, and to such instructions as may be given him from time to time, do not impose on one dealing with the agent a duty to ascertain his authority to issue a policy on a risk extrahazardous and located in a place other than the town in which is situated the agent's office; German Fire Ins. Co. v. Tile Co., 15 Ind. App. 623, 43 N. E. 41.

The resident agent of an insurance company having general authority to issue policies and renewals, fix rates and accept risks, collect premiums and cancel insurance, and perform all the duties of a recording agent, is a general agent for the locality; Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Orr, 56 Ill. App. 629. If the agent acts as such for both the company and the insured the contract may be avoided by either party who, at the time of the contract, did not know of such business agency for the other party or had, not knowing the facts, ratified it; British-American Assur. Co. v. Cooper, 6 Colo. App. 25, 40 Pac. 147.

When an insurance agent solicited business in an adjoining state, assumed to act with full authority, received the premium and issued the policy, he may be considered as a general agent and not a special agent without authority to make the contract; Hahn v. Guardian Assur. Co., 23 Or. 576, 32 Pac. 683, 37 Am. St. Rep. 709.

It has been held in a federal case that before the execution of a policy, the power and authority of a local and soliciting agent are co-extensive with the business entrusted to his care, and his positive knowledge as to material facts and his acts and declarations within the scope of his employment are obligatory on his principal, unless restricted by limitations well known to the other party at the time of the transaction; West End Hotel & Land Co. v. Ins. Co., 74 Fed. 114.

The powers of agents were extensively discussed by the Kansas supreme court: "The bulk of the fire insurance business of the state is done by eastern companies, who are represented here by agents." "It is a matter of no small moment therefore that the exact measure and limit of the powers of these agents be understood. All the assured knows about the company is generally through the agent. All the information as to the powers of, and limitations upon, the agent is received from him. Practically, the agent is the principal in the making of the contract. It seems to us therefore that the rule may be properly thus laid down that an agent authorized to issue policies of insurance and consummate the contract binds his principal by every act, agreement, representation, or waiver, within the ordinary scope and limit of insurance business which is not known by the insured to be beyond the authority granted to the agent;" German Ins. Co. v. Gray, 43 Kan. 497, 23 Pac. 637, 8 L. R. A. 70, 19 Am. St. Rep. 150; and it was held in that case that an insurance company might, through its agents, by a parol contract, waive provisions stated in the policy with reference to the manner of altering or waiving its terms and conditions; Westchester Fire Ins. Co. v. Earle, 33 Mich. 143; the court, in considering the question whether an agent of a company might change by parol the conditions of a policy wherein it was provided that it could only be done upon the consent of the company written thereon, held that a written bargain is of no higher legal degree than a parol one. "Either may vary or discharge the other, and there can be no more force in an agreement in writing not to agree by parol than in a parol agreement not to agree in writing. Every such agreement is ended by the new one which contradicts it;" American Central Ins. Co. v. McLanathan, 11 Kan. 533.

"Where insurance companies deal with the community through a local agency, persons having transactions with the company are entitled to assume, in the absence of knowledge as to the agent's authority, that the acts and declarations of the agent are valid as if they proceeded directly from the company;" Hardwick v. Ins. Co., 20 Or. 547, 26 Pac. 840.

An attempted restriction upon the power of the officer or agents, acting within the scope of their general authority, to waive provisions of the policy, unless such waiver is written upon the policy itself, is ineffectual; Dick v. Ins. Co., 92 Wis. 46, 65 N. W. 742.

A provision in the application or in the policy making the person procuring the application the agent of the insured and not of the company, cannot change the legal status of such person as agent of the company or the law of agency if he is in fact the agent of the company; Coles v. Ins. Co., 41 W. Va. 261, 23 S. E. 733.

A broker was held to be the agent of the company where he solicited applications which were sent by him to the agent, by whom policies were sent to the broker and the premiums were charged to the broker; in such case the finding by the jury that the broker was the duly authorized agent of the company within the meaning of the provisions in the policy requiring payments of the premiums to the company or its duly authorized agent within a certain time, will not be disturbed; Estes v. Ins. Co., 67 N. H. 462, 33 Atl. 515. In the absence of direct proof of the broker's authority to act for the insurer or insured he may establish his agency by showing that the act relied on was within the scope of his authority; American Fire Ins. Co. v. Brooks, 83 Md. 22, 34 Atl. 373. Where insurance is procured through a broker, though at his solicitation, he is the agent of the insured and his acts will not bind the company, but when his employment extends only to the procurement of the policy he ceases to be an agent of the insured on the execution and delivery; id.

A broker owes no duty of care or skill to the underwriter when he is acting on the instructions of his principal; 11 Com. Cas. 107.

A broker employed by a firm of insurance agents to solicit business on commission, having a desk in their office, is not such an agent as that notice to him by a policy holder is notice to the firm; Arff v. Ins. Co., 2 N. Y. Supp. 188, 49 Hun. 610; and one is a mere broker who only represented the company in a single transaction and whose name did not appear on the policy, though he may have told the insurer that he represented the company, collected the premiums, and delivered the policy; Gude v. Ins. Co., 53 Minn. 220, 54 N. W. 1117.

An agent has no power to delegate his authority so as to impose a liability on the company; 15 Can. L. T. 49; Dwelling House Ins. Co. v. Snyder, 59 N. J. L. 18, 34 Atl. 931.

But an insurance company is bound by the acts of a clerk of its agent in accepting risks and issuing policies against the same in the performance of his duties, and one dealing with the clerk, as such, is not bound to inquire into his authority as to those matters; id. An agent's solicitor who took applications on which policies were issued has been held the agent of the company in effecting such insurance; McGonigle v. Ins. Co., 168 Pa. 1, 31 Atl. 868.

It has been held that a general agent (appointed by contract in this case) had power to waive cash payments of premiums and extend credit; Pythian Life Ass'n v. Preston, 47 Neb. 374, 66 N. W. 445; American Employers' Liability Ins. Co. v. Fordyce, 62 Ark. 562, 36 S. W. 1051, 54 Am. St. Rep. 305; to receive notice of loss; Germania Fire Ins. Co. v. Stewart, 13 Ind. App. 627, 42 N. E. 286; waive proofs of loss; Bolan v. Fire Ass'n, 2 Mo. App. Rep. 1375; Loeb v. Ins. Co., 99 Mo. 50, 12 S. W. 374; contra, Ermentrout v. Ins. Co., 63 Minn. 305, 65 N. W. 635, 30 L. R. A. 346, 56 Am. St. Rep. 481. An agent who has power to adjust losses may by parol waive formal proofs of loss; McGuire v. Ins. Co., 7 App. Div. 575, 40 N. Y. Supp. 300. He cannot waive the iron safe clause, when that authority is expressly withheld from him by the policy; Roberts, Willis & Taylor Co. v. Ins. Co., 13 Tex. Civ. App. 64, 35 S. W. 955. He can insure goods subject to chattel mortgage by indorsement on, or annexation to, the policy, though it is forbidden in the printed conditions; McGuire v. Ins. Co., 7 App. Div. 575, 40 N. Y. Supp. 300. Local agents cannot bind the company by consenting to vacancies; McLeary v. Ins. Co. (Tex.) 32 S. W. 583; or that insurance on a risk, not usually taken by the company should take effect from the application (nor will it matter that a special agent, having no power to contract, was present and approved); O'Brien v. Ins. Co., 108 Cal. 227, 41 Pac. 298.

An agent, during the continuance of his agency, may at any time, even after loss, correct a policy issued by him by inserting the property included in the contract but omitted by mistake from the policy; Taylor v. Ins. Co., 98 Ia. 521, 67 N. W. 577, 60 Am. St. Rep. 210. The agent of a company, whose authority has been revoked by the execution by it of an assignment for the benefit of creditors, has thereafter no authority to cancel policies and pay rebates or to set off rebates against a claim by the assignee for premiums collected; Franzen v. Zimmer, 90 Hun 103, 35 N. Y. Supp. 612. The agent is liable for failure to cancel policy when directed to do so; London Assur. Corp. v. Russell, 1 Pa. Super. Ct. 320; and when directed to cancel or reinsure a risk cannot reinsure in another company for which he is agent without its assent; Empire State Ins. Co. v. Ins. Co., 138 N. Y. 446, 34 N. E. 200.

Notice to an agent of matters within his commission is such to the company; 1 E. L. & Eq. 140; Capitol Ins. Co. v. Bank, 50 Kan. 449, 31 Pac. 1069; Bergeron v. Banking Co., 111 N. C. 45, 15 S. E. 883; Forward v. Ins. Co., 142 N. Y. 382, 37 N. E. 615, 25 L. R. A. 637.

The insurer has been held bound or estopped by the knowledge or action of or notice to the agent in the following cases: By his knowledge of foreclosure proceedings; Dick v. Ins. Co., 92 Wis. 46, 65 N. W. 742; of the existence of a mortgage, and his attaching a clause making the loss payable to the mortgagee; Georgia Home Ins. Co. v. Stein, 72 Miss. 943, 18 South. 414; of a chattel mortgage; Robbins v. Ins. Co., 149 N. Y. 477, 44 N. E. 159; of incumbrance; German Ins. Co. v. Everett (Tex.) 36 S. W. 125; McDonald v. Fire Ass'n, 93 Wis. 348, 67 N. W. 719; McGuire v. Ins. Co., 7 App. Div. 575, 40 N. Y. Supp. 300; where the agent is informed as to incumbrances and fills out the application, describing the property as not incumbered; Coles v. Ins. Co., 41 W. Va. 261, 23 S. E. 733; Perry v. Ins. Co., 67 N. H. 291, 33 Atl. 731, 68 Am. St. Rep. 668; where the agent, having power to issue and cancel policies, allowed a policy to remain in force after notice of an incumbrance; Phoenix Assur. Co. of London v. Coffman, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 631, 32 S. W. 810; where the application stated that no other company had refused to insure, and the agent had notice to the contrary; id.; where the agent incorrectly stated the title of the insured, after being correctly informed thereof; State Ins. Co. of Des Moines v. Du Bois, 7 Colo. App. 214, 44 Pac. 756; where the agent was acquainted with premises of the insured and could have made an accurate description through his knowledge of them, the company is estopped to avoid its obligation by showing a mis-description of the property; Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Moore, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 644, 36 S. W. 146. Where the insured makes true answers to the questions in an application, the validity of the insurance is not affected by the falsity of the answers inserted by the agent; Robinson v. Ins. Co., 1 App. Div. 269, 37 N. Y. Supp. 146; Bernard v. Ins. Ass'n, 17 Misc. 115, 39 N. Y. Supp. 356; Smith v. Ins. Co., 173 Pa. 16, 33 Atl. 567. In such case he will be regarded as the agent of the company, and not of the applicant and his knowledge of the falsity of the answer will be imputed to the company; Clubb v. Acc. Co., 97 Ga. 502, 25 S. E. 333. The company is not estopped by the agent's knowledge when that is acquired by him by virtue of his relation as attorney for the insured in a transaction with which the company was not connected; Union Nat. Bank v. Ins. Co., 71 Fed. 473, 18 C. C. A. 203; or when the knowledge of the agent is acquired after the issuance of the policy; Taylor v. Ins. Co., 98 Ia. 521, 67 N. W. 577, 60 Am. St. Rep. 210; West End Hotel & Land Co. v. Ins. Co., 74 Fed. 114. Or where the notice was to one of a firm of insurance agents, another member of which issued the policy in suit and was given several months before the policy was applied for; Queen Ins. Co. of America v. May (Tex.) 35 S. W. 829; and it was held that when the policy provided that no agent could stipulate for a modification of its provisions not brought to the knowledge of his principal officer, knowledge of the general superintendent that material statements in the application were false was not knowledge of the company; Ward v. Ins. Co., 66 Conn. 227, 33 Atl. 902, 50 Am. St. Rep. 80.

An agent's knowledge of the state of title is notice to the company; Clymer Opera Co. v. Ins. Co., 238 Pa. 137, 85 Atl. 1111; contra, Northern Assur. Co. v. Bldg. Ass'n, 183 U. S. 308, 22 Sup. Ct. 133, 46 L. Ed. 213; Gish v. Ins. Co., 16 Okl. 59, 87 Pac. 869, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 826; but the company is not estopped by the knowledge of its agents where the insured is a party to a deception in an answer in the application; Mudge v. Supreme Court, 149 Mich. 467, 112 N. W. 1130, 119 Am. St. Rep. 686, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 279. Where the agent prepares the application from former applications and tells the applicant that it is all right, the company is estopped from the defence of falsity of the answers; Roe v. Ins. Ass'n, 137 Ia. 696, 115 N. W. 500.

Mere notice to an agent by insured that he would not pay the premium does not terminate the policy; Taylor v. Assur. Soc., 134 Fed. 932.

INSURANCE COMPANY. A company which issues policies of insurance,—an incorporated company, and either a stock company, a mutual one, or a mixture of the two. In a stock company, the members or stockholders pay in a certain capital which is liable for the contracts of the company. In a mutual company, the members are themselves the parties insured; in other words, all the members contribute premiums to the fund, which is liable for indemnity to each member for loss, according to the terms of the contract. In the mixed class, certain members, who may or may not be insured, contribute a certain amount of the capital, for which they hold certificates of shares, and are entitled to interest on the same at a stipulated rate, or to an agreed share of the surplus receipts, after the payment of losses and expenses, to be estimated at certain periods.

There are in some states companies formed upon the plan combining a stock capital with mutual insurance and issuing both bonds of mutual insurance and stock policies based upon the capital.

In New York it has been held that, under the statutes then in force regulating the formation of insurance companies and their organization, they could not be organized upon this plan so as to accept premium notes from some customers and cash premiums from others and assess the premium notes to pay losses in either branch of the business; Hart v. Achilles, 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 576. See also White v. Haight, 16 N. Y. 310.

Beneficial societies are sometimes held to be insurance companies within the meaning of the statutes regulating such companies; Berry v. Indemnity Co., 46 Fed. 439; and see State v. Benevolent Society, 72 Mo. 146; Com. v. Wetherbee, 105 Mass. 149; State v. Critchett, 37 Minn. 13, 32 N. W. 787; Golden Rule v. People, 118 Ill. 492, 9 N. E. 342. Where the main purpose of an order is that of life insurance, and insurance against sickness and disability, whatever purposes it may have, it is amenable to the laws of that state relating to insurance companies; it therefore must comply with the requirements of the statutes of that state (if the order is organized under the laws of another state), as to foreign insurance companies, before it can do business in that state; State v. Nichols, 78 Ia. 747, 41 N. W. 4. But in Wisconsin an association incorporated for the purpose of fraternal benevolent insurance upon the co-operative or assessment plan was a charitable and benevolent order within the meaning of the statute which, in line with the defined policy of the state, was exempted from the general laws relating to life insurance; State v. Whitmore, 75 Wis. 332, 43 N. W. 1133. In Pennsylvania a foreign mutual aid association of the same character was held not liable for violation of the laws regulating insurance companies; Com. v. Mutual Aid Ass'n, 94 Pa. 481; and the same association was held not to be a mutual insurance company in Ohio, the state of its incorporation; State v. Mutual Ass'n, 26 Ohio St. 19; so in many other states such associations are held not to be insurance companies within the purview of the general insurance laws of the state; State v. Ass'n, 35 Kan. 51, 9 Pac. 956; Sherman v. Com., 82 Ky. 102; State v. Aid Ass'n, 59 Ia. 125, 12 N. W. 782; Commercial League Ass'n of America v. People, 90 Ill. 166; Supreme Council of Order of Chosen Friends v. Fairman, 62 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 386; Elsev v. Relief Ass'n, 142 Mass. 224, 7 N. E. 844; Barbaro v. Occidental Grove, 4 Mo. App. 429; Rensenhouse v. Seeley, 72 Mich. 603, 40 N. W. 765; State v. Investment Co., 48 Minn. 110, 50 N. W. 1028. In Pennsylvania it was explicitly decided that an association organized not to do business for profit or gain but to aid pecuniarily the widows, orphans, heirs, and devisees of its members, is not an insurance company; Northwestern Masonic Aid Ass'n v. Jones, 154 Pa. 99, 26 Atl. 253, 35 Am. St. Rep. 810.

A physicians' defense company which contracts to pay the expenses of defending physicians against civil malpractice suits is an insurance company; Physicians' Defense Co. v. Cooper, 199 Fed. 576, 118 C. C. A. 50; Physicians' Defense Co. v. O'Brien, 100 Minn. 490, 111 N. W. 396; contra, Vredenburg v. Defense Co., 126 Ill. App. 509; State v. Laylin, 73 Ohio St. 90, 76 N. E. 567.

A state has power to prohibit foreign insurance companies from doing business within its limits. It may impose such conditions as it pleases; Swing v. Lumber Co., 205 U. S. 275, 27 Sup. Ct. 497, 51 L. Ed. 799; Whitfield v. Ins. Co., 205 U. S. 489, 27 Sup. Ct. 578, 51 L. Ed. 895; Carroll v. Ins. Co., 199 U. S. 401, 26 Sup. Ct. 66, 50 L. Ed. 246.

Membership in a mutual company does not necessarily imply liability to assessment; Given v. Rettew, 162 Pa. 638, 29 Atl. 703. A surplus of such a company belongs equitably to the policy holders in the proportion in which they contributed to it and the directorate has no option to declare dividends; U. S. Life Ins. Co. v. Spinks, 96 S. W. 889, 29 Ky. L. Rep. 960, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1053; contra, Greeff v. Assurance Society, 160 N. Y. 19, 54 N. E. 712, 46 L. R. A. 288, 73 Am. St. Rep. 659.

Dividends of a mutual life company returned to policy holders are not income and are not taxable as such; Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Herold, 198 Fed. 199; Fuller v. Ins. Co., 70 Conn. 647, 41 Atl. 4; L. R. 14 A. C. 381.

See INSURANCE.

INSURANCE POLICY. See POLICY.

INSURED. A person whose life or property interest is covered by a policy of insurance. See INSURANCE.

INSURER. The underwriter in a policy of insurance; the party agreeing to make compensation to the other. Sometimes, applied improperly to denote the party insured. See INSURANCE.

INSURGENTS. Rebels contending in arms against the government of their country who have not been recognized by other countries as belligerents. Insurgents have no standing in international law until recognized as belligerents. When recognized as belligerents the rules relating to contraband and other rules of war apply to them, but until so recognized their acts are merely the acts of individuals which may be piracy or any other crime according to the circumstances. The United States and other countries have statutes regulating dealings with insurgents in other countries and filibustering expeditions, as they are called, and expeditions to supply insurgents with arms and ammunition are forbidden; Snow, Lect. Int. Law 132.

In general insurgents have no belligerent rights. Their war-vessels are not received in foreign ports, they cannot establish blockades which third powers will respect, and they must not interfere with the commerce of other nations. In the older books on international law they were usually treated as pirates. Their hostilities are never regarded as legal war. As late as 1885 in The Ambrose Light, 25 Fed. 408, this subject was discussed and the authorities fully reviewed, and it was held that the liability of a vessel to seizure as piratical, turned wholly on the question whether the insurgents had obtained any previous recognition of belligerent rights, either from their own or any other government. The court only refrained from entering a decree of forfeiture of the vessel, as a pirate, because of an implied recognition of the insurgents as belligerents, contained in a letter of the secretary of state of the date of the seizure. In recent years, however, a certain amount of recognition has been accorded to insurgents. In 1894, when insurgents were bombarding Rio Janeiro, Admiral Benham took the position that American merchant vessels, moving about the harbor and discharging cargoes, did so at their own risk. But any attempt on the part of the insurgents to prevent legitimate movements of our merchant vessels at other times was not to be permitted. Of this official action it has been said: "This establishment of this point, which seemed to be the logical outcome of recent practice, almost recognizes an imperfect status, or right of action afloat, for insurgents;" Snow, Lect. Int. L. 25.

In U. S. v. Trumbull, 48 Fed. 99, it was held that insurgents may purchase arms in the United States without violating U. S. R. S. § 5283, provided the arms are not designed to constitute any part of the furnishings or fittings of the vessel which carries them. This case was a prosecution in connection with the Itata which was also libelled for forfeiture by the United States. There was much discussion as to the meaning of the word "people" as used in the statute. It had been previously said to be one of the denominations of a foreign power; U. S. v. Quincy, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 467, 8 L. Ed. 458; and that a vessel could not be said to be in the service of a foreign people, etc., unless they had received recognition as belligerents; The Carondelet, 37 Fed. 800; the case of The Salvador, L. R. 3 C. P. 218, cited to the contrary, is distinguishable as resting on the broader provisions of the English foreign enlistment act; but in the Itata case the question was not raised by the facts, and it was simply held that the neutrality laws did not cover the case of a vessel which receives arms and munitions of war, in this country, with intent to carry them to a party of insurgents in a foreign country, but not with intent that they shall constitute any part of the fittings or furnishings of the vessel herself; and that she could not be condemned as piratical on the ground that she is in the employ of an insurgent party which has not been recognized by our government as having belligerent rights; The Itata, 56 Fed. 505, 5 C. C. A. 608. See also U. S. v. Weed, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 62, 18 L. Ed. 531; The Watchful, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 91, 18 L. Ed. 763; Snow, Lect. Int. L. 135.

In The Three Friends, 166 U. S. 1, 17 Sup. Ct. 495, 41 L. Ed. 987, the vessel was seized for a violation of U. S. R. S. § 5283, and was released by the district court upon the ground, inter alia, that the libel did not show that the vessel was fitted out and armed with intent that it should "be employed in the service of a foreign prince or state, or of any colony, district, or people with whom the United States are at peace." The libel was amended so as to read "in the service of a certain people, to wit, certain people then engaged in armed resistance to the government of the King of Spain, in the island of Cuba." The district court held that the word "people" was used in an individual and personal sense and not as an organized and recognized political power in any way corresponding to a state, prince, colony, or district. The supreme court reversed the decree, holding that the vessel had been invidently released, and that the word "people" in the statute covers any insurgent or insurrectionary body conducting hostilities, although its belligerency has not been recognized; and although the political department of the government had not recognized the existence of a de facto belligerent power engaged in hostility with Spain, it had recognized the existence of insurrectionary warfare, and the case sharply illustrated the distinction between recognition of belligerency, and of a condition of political revolt. See BELLIGERENCY.

INSURRECTION. A rebellion of citizens or subjects of a country or state against its government.

Any open and active opposition of a number of persons to the execution of the laws of the United States, of so formidable a character as to defy, for the time being, the authority of the government, constitutes an insurrection, even though not accompanied by bloodshed and not of sufficient magnitude to make success possible; In re Charge to Grand Jury, 62 Fed. 828.

As to the distinctions involved in the different words used to express organized resistance to governmental authority, see REBELLION.

The constitution of the United States, art. 1, § 8, gives power to congress "to provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions."

Whenever the United States shall be invaded, or be in imminent danger of invasion, from any foreign nation or Indian tribe, it shall be lawful for the president of the United States to call forth such number of the militia of the state, or states, most convenient to the place of danger or scene of action, as he may judge necessary to repel such invasion, and to issue his orders, for that purpose, to such officer or officers of the militia as he shall think proper. And in case of an insurrection in any state against the government thereof, it shall be lawful for the president of the United States, on application of the legislature of such state, or of the executive (when the legislature cannot be convened), to call forth such number of the militia of any other state or states, as may be applied for, as he may judge sufficient to suppress such insurrection; U. S. R. S. pp. 287, 1029.

Whenever the laws of the United States shall be opposed, or the execution thereof obstructed, in any state, by combinations too powerful to be suppressed by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings, or by the powers vested in the marshals by this act, it shall be lawful for the president of the United States to call forth the militia of such state, or of any other state or states, as may be necessary to suppress such combinations, and to cause the laws to be duly executed; and the use of militia so to be called forth may be continued, if necessary, until the expiration of thirty days after the commencement of the next session of congress.

Whenever it may be necessary, in the judgment of the president, to use the military force hereby directed to be called forth, the president shall forthwith, by proclamation, command such insurgents to disperse, and retire peaceably to their respective abodes, within a limited time; U. S. R. S. § 5300.

The president may declare by proclamation whenever the inhabitants of any state or part thereof are found by him to be in a state of insurrection, that such inhabitants are in a state of insurrection against the United States and thereupon all commercial intercourse between them and the citizens of the United States shall be unlawful and shall cease so long as such condition of hostility continues, and all goods and chattels, wares and merchandise coming from such state or section into other parts of the United States or proceeding from other parts of the United States to such state or section together with the vessel or vehicle conveying the same shall be forfeited to the United States; but commercial intercourse may, in the discretion of the president, be permitted and licensed with loyal persons residing in such insurrectionary section, so far as to supply such persons with necessities; U. S. R. S. §§ 5300-5304.

Capital cases for insurrection by a citizen of the United States against the government of any foreign countries having treaties with the United States may be tried before the minister of the United States in such country; id. § 4090. See INSURGENTS.

INTAKERS. In English Law. The name given to receivers of goods stolen in Scotland, who take them to England. 9 Hen. V. c. 27.

INTEGER (Lat.). Whole; untouched. Res integra means a question which is new and undecided. 2 Kent 177.

INTEMPERATE. If the habit is to drink to intoxication whenever occasion offers, and sobriety or abstinence is the exception, then the charge of intemperate habits is established, and it is not necessary that this custom should be an everyday rule; Tatum v.

State, 63 Ala. 152. See Mullinix v. People, 76 Ill. 213. See HABITUAL DRUNKARD; DRUNKENNESS.

INTENDANT. One who has the charge, management, or direction of some office, department, or public business.

INTENDED TO BE RECORDED. This phrase is frequently used in conveyancing, in deeds which recite other deeds which have not been recorded. In Pennsylvania, it has been construed to be a covenant, on the part of the grantor, to procure the deed to be recorded in a reasonable time; Penn. v. Preston, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 14.

INTENDENTE. In Spanish Law. The immediate agent of the minister of finance, or the chief and principal director of the different branches of the revenue, appointed in the various departments in each of the provinces of the Spanish monarchy. See Es-criche, Intendente.

INTENDMENT OF LAW. The true meaning, the correct understanding, or intention, of the law; a presumption or inference made by the courts. Co. Litt. 78.

It is an intendment of law that every man is innocent until he is proved to be guilty; see PRESUMPTION OF INNOCENCE; that every one will act for his own advantage; that every officer acts in his office with fidelity; that the children of a married woman, born during the coverture, are the children of the husband. See BASTARDY. Many things are intended after verdict, in order to support a judgment; but intendment cannot supply the want of certainty in a charge in an indictment for a crime; 5 Cro. 121. See Com. Dig. Pleader (C 25), (S 31); Dane, Abr. Index; 14 Viner, Abr. 449; Westcott v. Garrison, 6 N. J. L. 132.

INTENT. See COMMON INTENT; INTENTION.

INTENTIO (Lat.). In Civil law. The formal complaint or claim of a plaintiff before the praetor. "Reus exceptionem velut intentionem implet;" id est, reus in exceptione actor est. The defendant makes up his plea as if it were a declaration; i. e. the defendant is plaintiff in the plea.

In Old English Law. A count or declaration in a real action (narratio). Bracton, lib. 4, tr. 2, c. 2; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 7; Du Cange.

INTENTION, INTENT. A design, resolve, or determination of the mind.

In Criminal Law. To render an act criminal, a wrongful intent must exist; 7 C. & P. 428; U. S. v. Pearce, 2 McLean 14, Fed. Cas. No. 16,020; State v. Berkshire, 2 Ind. 207; State v. Bartlett, 30 Me. 132; Smith v. Kline, 19 Vt. 564; State v. Voight, 90 N. C. 741. And with this must be combined a wrongful act; as mere intent is not punishable; 9 Co. 81 a; 2 C. & P. 414; Com. v. Morse, 2 Mass. 138; Ross v. Com., 2 B. Monr. (Ky.) 417;

Torrey v. Field, 10 Vt. 358; U. S. v. Riddle, 5 Cra. (U. S.) 311, 3 L. Ed. 110; but see R. & R. 308; 1 Lew. Cr. Cas. 42; and generally, perhaps always, the intent and act must concur in point of time; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 207; Cl. Cr. L. 45, 238, 265; but a wrongful intent may render criminal an act otherwise innocent; 1 C. & K. 600; Com. v. Hersey, 2 Allen (Mass.) 181; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 255; Ransom v. State, 22 Conn. 153.

In considering whether a defendant charged with doing a criminal act did it with criminal intent, his prior and accompanying acts are all to be considered, and the rule in civil cases as to the existence of a fraudulent intent may be invoked; State v. Musick, 101 Mo. 260, 14 S. W. 212.

Where a transaction on its face is as consistent with honesty as with fraud, it will be presumed that the intent was lawful; State v. Gritzner, 134 Mo. 512, 36 S. W. 39.

Courts must judge the intent a man has in doing an act by the means he employs and the thing to be accomplished. If they all be lawful, courts cannot impute malice or unlawful motives to the actor; Barton v. Rogers, 21 Idaho, 609, 123 Pac. 478, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 681.

Generally, where any wrongful act is committed, the law will infer conclusively that it was intentionally committed; Hill v. Com., 2 Gratt. (Va.) 594; Taylor v. State, 4 Ga. 14; Com. v. Hersey, 2 Allen (Mass.) 179; as the intent to take life may be inferred from the character of the assault, the use of a deadly weapon and the attendant circumstances; Jackson v. State, 94 Ala. 85, 10 South. 509; Winn v. State, 82 Wis. 571, 52 N. W. 775; and also that the natural, necessary, and even probable consequences were intended; 5 C. & P. 538; People v. Herrick, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 87; Com. v. Blanding, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 304, 15 Am. Dec. 214; Hill v. Com., 2 Gratt. (Va.) 594; State v. Fuller, 1 Bay (S. C.) 245, 1 Am. Dec. 610; West v. State, 9 Humphr. (Tenn.) 66.

Generally speaking, when a statute makes an act indictable, irrespective of guilty knowledge, ignorance of fact is no defence; Com. v. Wentworth, 118 Mass. 441; L. R. 2 C. C. 154; Beckham v. Nacke, 56 Mo. 546; see Halsted v. State, 41 N. J. L. 552, 32 Am. Rep. 247; contra, Farrell v. State, 32 Ohio St. 456, 30 Am. Rep. 614, where the subject is fully treated. See IGNORANCE.

Intent is in a certain sense essential to the commission of a crime and in some classes of cases it is necessary to show moral turpitude; but there is a class of cases where purposely doing a thing prohibited by statute may amount to an offence though the act does not involve moral wrong, for instance where shippers pay a rate under the honest belief that it is the lawful rate when it is not; Armour Packing Co. v. U. S., 209 U. S. 85, 28 Sup. Ct. 428, 52 L. Ed. 681; a mistake of law as to the right to ship under the contract after the change of rate is unavailing; id.

When by the common law, or by the provision of a statute, a particular intention is essential to an offence, or a criminal act is attempted but not accomplished, and the evil intent only can be punished, it is necessary to allege the intent with distinctness and precision, and to support the allegations with proof. On the other hand, if the offence does not rest merely in tendency, or in an attempt to do a certain act with a wicked purpose, but consists in doing an unlawful or criminal act, the evil intention will be presumed, and need not be alleged, or, if alleged, it is a mere formal averment, which need not be proved; Com. v. Hersey, 2 Allen (Mass.) 180; 6 East 474; Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 306, 52 Am. Dec. 711; State v. Smith, 93 N. C. 516.

This proof may be of external and visible acts and conduct from which the jury may infer the fact; 8 Co. 146; or it may be by proof of an act committed, as, in case of burglary with intent to steal, proof of burglary and stealing is conclusive; 5 C. & P. 510; 2 Mood. & R. 40. When a man intending one wrong fails, and accidentally commits another, he will, except where the particular intent is a substantive part of the crime, be held to have intended the act he did commit; People v. Enoch, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 159, 27 Am. Dec. 197; Com. v. Call, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 515; U. S. v. Ross, 1 Gall. 624, Fed. Cas. No. 16,196; 1 C. & K. 746.

Where intent is a material ingredient of the crime it is necessary to be averred, but it may always be averred in general terms; Evans v. U. S., 153 U. S. 584, 14 Sup. Ct. 934, 38 L. Ed. 830; 153 U. S. 608, 14 Sup. Ct. 939, 38 L. Ed. 839.

As to when a party can prove his intent under various circumstances, see note in 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 367.

As to the distinction between intention and motive, see Pollock's First Book of Jurispr. 144, where he defines intention as the wish or desire accompanying an act and having regard not only to the act itself, but to the consequences to be produced; and as including will, but including much more than is commonly understood by will.

As to "motive," external or internal, he points out that external motive is a particular inducement to a course of action, but that motive can also mean internal motive, the general moral quality or disposition of the agent which is a constant element as compared with particular inducements, and gives weight in his deliberation to this or that inducement. The effect of general moral quality or disposition in the process of deliberation or choice is for many purposes more important than the average or objective value of things reputed desirable; this he deems to be the meaning of motive according to the best modern authors.

In Contracts. An intention to enter into the contracts is necessary: hence the person must have sufficient mind to enable him to intend.

In Wills. The intention of the testator governs unless the thing to be done be opposed to some unbending rule of law; 6 Cruise, Dig. 295; Smith v. Bell, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 68, 8 L. Ed. 322. This intention is to be gathered from the instrument, and from every part of it; 3 Ves. 105; Brown v. Bartlett, 58 N. H. 511; Hinton v. Milburn's Ex'rs, 23 W. Va. 166; Metcalf v. First Parish in Framingham, 128 Mass. 374; Banks v. Jones, 60 Ala. 605; Mather v. Mather, 103 Ill. 607; and from a later clause in preference to an earlier; Woodbury v. Woodbury, 74 Me. 413; Murfitt v. Jessop, 94 Ill. 158; Hemphill v. Moody, 62 Ala. 510.

See INTERPRETATION; CONSTRUCTION; STATUTES; WILLS.

INTENTIONE. A writ that lay against him who entered into lands after the death of a tenant in dower, or for life, etc., and held out to him in reversion or remainder. Fitz. N. B. 203.

INTER ALIA (Lat.). Among other things: as, "the said premises, which, inter alia, Titius granted to Caius."

INTER ALIOS (Lat.). Between other parties, who are strangers to the proceeding in question.

INTER APICES JURIS. See APEX JURIS.

INTER CÆTEROS. Among others; in a general clause; not by name (nominatim). A term applied in the civil law to clauses of disinheritance in a will. Inst. 2, 13, 1; id. 2, 13, 3.

INTER CANEM ET LUPUM (Lat. between the dog and the wolf). The twilight; because then the dog seeks his rest, and the wolf his prey. Co. 3d Inst. 63.

INTER PARTES (Lat. between the parties). A phrase signifying an agreement professing in the outset, and before any stipulations are introduced, to be made between such and such persons: as, for example, "This indenture, made the — day of —, 1848, between A B of the one part, and C D of the other." It is true that every contract is in one sense inter partes, because to be valid there must be two parties at least; but the technical sense of this expression is as above mentioned; Addison, Contr. 9.

This being a solemn declaration, the effect of such introduction is to make all the covenants comprised in a deed to be covenants between the parties and none others: so that should a stipulation be found in the body of a deed by which "the said A B covenants with E F to pay him one hundred dollars," the words "with E F" are inoperative, unless they have been used to denote for whose benefit the stipulation may have been made, being in direct contradiction with what was previously declared, and C D alone can sue for the non-payment; it being a maxim that where two opposite intentions are expressed in a contract, the first in order shall prevail; 7 M. & W. 63. But this rule does not apply to simple contracts inter partes; 2 D. & R. 277.

When there are more than two sides to a contract inter partes, for example, a deed, as, when it is made between A B of the first part, C D of the second, and E F of the third, there is no objection to one covenanting with another in exclusion of the third. See 5 Co. 182; 4 Q. B. 207.

INTER SE, INTER SESE (Lat.). Among themselves. Story, Partn. § 405.

INTER-STATE LAW. See EXTRADITION; FUGITIVE FROM JUSTICE; COMMERCE; INTER-STATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

INTER VIVOS (Lat.). Between living persons; as a gift inter vivos, which is a gift made by one living person to another. It is a rule that a fee cannot pass by grant or transfer inter vivos, without appropriate words of inheritance. 2 Pres. Est. 64. See DONATIO MORTIS CAUSA; GIFTS.

INTERCALARE. In the Civil Law. To introduce or insert among or between others; to introduce a day or month into the calendar; to intercalate. Dig. 50, 16, 98, pr.

INTERCEDERE. In the Civil Law. To become bound for another's debt.

INTERCHANGEABLY. By way of exchange or interchange. This term properly denotes the method of signing deeds, leases, contracts, etc., executed in duplicate, where each party signs the copy he delivers to the others.

INTERCOMMON. To enjoy a right of common mutually with the inhabitants of a contiguous town, vill, or manor. When the commons of two adjacent manors join, and the inhabitants of both have immemorially fed their cattle promiscuously on each other's common, this is called intercommoning. 2 Bla. Com. 33; Terms de la Ley.

INTERDICT. In Civil Law. The formula according to which the prætor ordered or forbade anything to be done in a cause concerning true or quasi possession until it should be decided definitely who had a right to it. But in modern civil law it is an extraordinary action, by which a summary decision is had in questions of possession or quasi possession. Heineccius, Elem. Jur. Civ. § 1287. Interdicts are either prohibitory, restitutory, or exhibitory; the first being a prohibition, the second a decree for restoring possession lost by force, the third a decree for the exhibiting of accounts, etc.; id. 1290; Howe, Stud. Civ. L. 252; Dig. 4, 15, 2. It is said by the writers of the Institutes that some (including Gaius) thought that from the true etymology of the word interdict, it should be applied only to prohibitory orders, and that those which were restitutory or exhibitory were properly decreta, but that "the usage has obtained of calling them all interdicts as they are pronounced between two parties, inter duos dicuntur;" id. Interdicts were decided by the praetor without the intervention of a judex, differing in this from actions (actiones).

According to Isidorus, however, the derivation is from quod interim dicitur. See Voc. Jur. Utr.; Sand. Just. 489; Mackeldey, Civ. Law §§ 258-64. In the formulary procedure the interdict was preliminary and conservative, and afterwards made final or not according to the result of the litigation. After the disappearance of this procedure "no doubt the remedies remained by the forms of action which succeeded. Some of the most important of these were really injunctions, either prohibitory or mandatory." Howe, Stud. Civ. L. 253. Like an injunction, the interdict was merely personal in its effects; and it had also another similarity to it, by being temporary or perpetual. Dig. 43. 1. 1, 3, 4. This similitude prompts the suggestion by the author last quoted, that "it is easy to perceive how they may have been adopted from the Roman and Canon law into the equity practice of England, and thence into that of America;" Howe, Stud. Civ. L. 254. See Story, Eq. Jur. § 865; Halifax, Anal. ch. 6. See INJUNCTION.

In Ecclesiastical Law. An ecclesiastical censure, by which divine services are prohibited either to particular persons or particular places. These tyrannical edicts, issued by ecclesiastical powers, have been abolished in England since the reformation, and were never known in the United States. See 2 Burn, Eccl. Law 340. Baptism was allowed during an interdict; but the eucharist was denied, except in the article of death, and burial in consecrated ground was denied, unless without sacred offices. For the ancient form of an interdict, see Tomlin's L. Dict. h. t.

INTERDICTION. A prohibition of commercial intercourse between the citizens or subjects of the country enacting or proclaiming it and some other specified country or port.

By act of March 1, 1809, congress interdicted commercial intercourse between the United States and Great Britain, and in a case arising under this act, the United States supreme court held that the term interdiction means an entire cessation, for the time being, of all trade whatever.

It has been held in England and in this country that interdiction of commerce with the port of destination is not a loss within a policy of marine insurance; 11 East 22; Smith v. Ins. Co., 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 176, 5 L.

Ed. 235; Andrews v. Ins. Co., 3 Mas. 6, Fed. Cas. No. 374; contra, 9 East 283; Olivera v. Ins. Co., 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 183, 4 L. Ed. 365; Thompson v. Read, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 440; Simonds v. Ins. Co., 1 Wash. C. C. 382, 4 Dall. 417, Fed. Cas. No. 12,875. See 3 Kent 293.

In Civil Law. A judicial decree, by which a person is deprived of the exercise of his civil rights.

The condition of the party who labors under this incapacity.

There can be no voluntary interdiction, as erroneously stated by some writers: the status of every person is regulated by the law, and can in no case be affected by contract.

Interdiction is the civil law proceeding by which, as by inquisition in lunacy (q. v.) under English and American law, a person is found to be incapable of the management of himself and his estate. It is devised for the special protection of the rights and persons of those who are unable to administer them themselves, and although the person interdicted is not permitted to exercise his legal rights, he is by no means deprived of their enjoyment. These rights are exercised for his benefit by a curator, who is held to a strict accountability, and the fidelity of whose administration is secured, in most cases, by a bond of security, and always by a tacit mortgage on all his property.

By the law of the twelve tables, prodigals alone could be interdicted. Curators were appointed for those afflicted with mental aberration, idiocy, or incurable diseases, qui perpetuo morbo laborant; but no decree of interdiction was pronounced against them. By the modern civil law, prodigality and profligacy are not sufficient reasons for interdiction; but whenever a person is prostrated, either by mental or physical disease, to such a degree as to be permanently disabled from administering his estate, he may be interdicted.

A decree of interdiction can be pronounced only by the court having jurisdiction of the domicile of the person to be affected. The causes assigned are imbecility, insanity, and madness.

The application may be by any relative, or wife or husband; or, in case of madness, the public law officer must apply, or in case of imbecility or insanity he may do so. The proceeding is by petition; the acts relied on are stated in writing; and the opinion of the family council is taken, the petitioners not participating. The judgment must be given at a public sitting, and, pending the proceedings, temporary administration may be provided for. Even if the application is rejected, the person against whom the proceedings are taken may be forbidden to go to law, compromise, borrow, receive payment of capital or give discharges, conveyances, or mortgages without advice of counsel appointed by the same judgment.

An appeal is provided, and there may be another examination. The decree must be duly served and recorded, and posted in the tribunal of birth. From the day of judgment all acts are void, and it may have a retroactive effect, by which previous acts are annulled.

After death a person's sanity can only be attacked if he has been interdicted, unless the insanity result from the act questioned.

A guardian or curator is appointed, as in case of minors, to which it is by statute assimilated; the husband for his wife, as of right; the wife may be appointed for her husband, in which case the family council regulate the manner of administration.

No one is compelled to act as guardian for more than ten years. The income must be used primarily to better the condition of the interdicted person. If his child marry, the family council fix the dowry. Interdiction ceases with the causes which made it necessary, and it may be withdrawn by proceedings similar to those by which it was obtained.

Such are substantially the rules on the subject of interdiction found in the law of Louisiana and the French Code. They are substantially the same in all the modern codes having the civil law for their basis.

In Louisiana it has been held that mental weakness is not sufficient unless interdiction be necessary for protection of person or property; Interdiction of Watson, 31 La. Ann. 757; the motives of the party applying should be fully investigated; Francke v. His Wife, 29 La. Ann. 302; trial by jury cannot be demanded and judgment may be at chambers; In re Ross, 38 La. Ann. 523; a non-resident cannot be interdicted; Interdiction of Dumas, 32 La. Ann. 679; testimony of experts does not control the court and is of little weight when they had seen defendant only once; Interdiction of Watson, 31 La. Ann. 757; and opinions of non-experts are of little weight; they should state facts; Eloi v. Eloi, 36 La. Ann. 563; costs of proceeding to interdict a wife, include fees of her lawyers, and are a debt of the community; Breaux v. Francke, 30 La. Ann. 336.

A judge may in the exercise of a sound legal discretion, without a special statutory authority, exclude relations from a family meeting to recommend a curator, and he is not restricted to a narrow construction of the term "conflicting interest" in the statute disqualifying persons, having such an interest, for participating in the family meeting; Interdiction of Bothick, 44 La. Ann. 1037, 11 South. 712. In the selection of a curator the family meeting is not limited to applicants, nor to persons suggested by relations of the interdict; id.

In Scotch Law. A legal restraint laid upon persons liable to be imposed upon, though having, to some extent, the exercise of reason, to prevent them from signing any deed affecting heritage, to their own prejudice, without the consent of their curators or interdictors. It is nearly superseded in practice by voluntary trusts. In cases where a trust cannot be obtained, the law relating to unconscionable bargains and to facility and circumvention is usually sufficient protection.

INTERDICTION OF FIRE AND WATER. Banishment by an order forbidding all persons to supply the person banished with fire or water, they being considered the two necessities of life.

INTERDICTION SALVIANUM (Lat.). In Roman Law. The Salvian interdict. A process which lay for the owner of a farm to obtain possession of the goods from his tenant who had pledged them to him for the rent of the land. Inst. 4, 15, 3.

INTERESSE (Lat.). Interest. The interest of money; also an interest in lands.

INTERESSE TERMINI (Lat.). An interest in the term. The demise of a term in land does not vest any estate in the lessee, but gives him a mere right of entry on the land, which right is called his interest in the term, or interesse termini. See Co. Litt. 46; 2 Bla. Com. 144; 10 Vin. Abr. 348; Dane, Abr. Index; 1 Washb. R. P.

A lessee for years who has never obtained seisin, was, unless he entered and took actual possession, deemed to have no estate, but merely a contractual interesse termini. This entry is still essential to the recovery of the land in specie; Jenks, Mod. Land L., 77, 344. If the lessee dies before entry, his executors can enter; Co. Litt. 46 b.

INTEREST (Lat. it concerns; it is of advantage).

In Contracts. The right of property which a man has in a thing. See INSURABLE INTEREST.

On Debts. The compensation which is paid by the borrower of money to the lender for its use, and, generally, by a debtor to his creditor in recompense for his detention of the debt.

The compensation allowed by law or fixed by the parties to a contract for the use or forbearance or detention of money. Fisher v. Hoover, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 81, 21 S. W. 930.

A consideration paid for the use of money or for forbearance in demanding it when due. Maryland Casualty Co. v. Power Co., 157 Fed. 514, 85 C. C. A. 106.

Legal interest is the rate of interest established by the law of the country, which will prevail in the absence of express stipulation; conventional interest is a certain rate agreed upon by the parties. Fowler v. Smith, 2 Cal. 568.

Interest is a matter of local regulation and the decisions of state courts are binding on the courts of the United States; Bond v. John V. Farwell Co., 172 Fed. 58, 96 C. C. A. 546; where a judgment is rendered prior to the passage of an act reducing the rate of interest, it draws interest only at the reduced rate after the act takes effect; O'Brien v. Young, 95 N. Y. 428, 47 Am. Rep. 64.

It has been said that at common law interest was not allowed; it can be secured only by statute; Pacific Coast S. S. Co. v.

U. S., 33 Ot. Cl. 36; Sanderson v. Read, 75 Ill. App. 190. On the other hand, a party liable for a principal sum is liable for interest; it is an incident of the debt; Tidball v. Bank, 100 Va. 741, 42 S. E. 867.

Who is bound to pay interest. The party to a contract who has expressly or impliedly undertaken to pay interest is, of course, bound to do so.

Executors; Adams v. Spalding, 12 Conn. 350; Findlay v. Smith, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 264; administrators; Gwynn v. Dorsey, 4 Gill & J. (Md.) 453; Crowder v. Shackelford, 35 Miss. 321; assignees of bankrupts or insolvents; In re Dyott's Estate, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 557; but see Thomas v. Car Co., 149 U. S. 95, 13 Sup. Ct. 824, 37 L. Ed. 663; guardians; Royston v. Royston, 29 Ga. 82; and trustees; Fay v. Howe, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 528; Dennis v. Dennis, 15 Md. 75; Royston v. Royston, 29 Ga. 82; Dickinson v. Owen, 11 Cal. 71; who have kept money an unreasonable length of time; Boynton v. Dyer, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 1; Royston v. Royston, 29 Ga. 82; and have made or might have made it productive; Gwynn v. Dorsey, 4 Gill & J. (Md.) 453; Stearns v. Brown, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 530; Lockhart v. Horn, 3 Woods, 542, Fed. Cas. No. 8,446; Bourne v. Maybin, 3 Woods, 724, Fed. Cas. No. 1,700; are chargeable with interest. Where a litigant claiming money as his own, was permitted to collect and retain it, subject only to the order of the court should it afterwards be decided he was not entitled to it, he is chargeable with interest; Kenton Ins. Co. v. Bank, 93 Ky. 129, 19 S. W. 185. When a loan is negotiated, the retention of a portion of it for an unreasonable time entitles the borrower to a rebate of interest; Dodge v. Tulleys, 144 U. S. 451, 12 Sup. Ct. 728, 36 L. Ed. 501.

Who are entitled to receive interest. The lender upon an express or implied contract for interest. Executors, administrators, etc., are in some cases allowed interest for advances made by them on account of the estates under their charge; Jennison v. Hapgood, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 77. The rule has been extended to trustees; Dilworth's Lessee v. Sinderling, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 488, 2 Am. Dec. 469; and compound interest, even, allowed; Barrell v. Joy, 16 Mass. 228.

On what claims allowed. When the debtor expressly undertakes to pay interest, he or his personal representatives having assets are bound to pay it. But if a party has accepted the principal, it has been determined that he cannot recover interest in a separate action; Tillotson v. Preston, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 229. See Williams v. Craig, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 315, 1 L. Ed. 153; Blodgett v. Gardiner, 45 Me. 542; Candee v. Webster, 9 Ohio St. 452.

On contracts where, from the course of dealings between the parties, a promise to pay is implied; 3 Brown, Ch. 436; Wood v.

Hickok, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 501; Parker's Heirs v. Parker's Adm'r, 33 Ala. 459; Veiths v. Hagge, 8 Ia. 163. On account stated or other liquidated sum, whenever the debtor knows precisely what he is to pay and when he is to pay it; 2 Burr. 1085; 2 Cox 219; McMahon v. R. Co., 20 N. Y. 463; Kellenberger v. Foresman, 13 Ind. 475; Milton v. Blackshear, 8 Fla. 161; Henderson Cotton Mfg. Co. v. Machine Shops, 86 Ky. 668, 7 S. W. 142. But interest is not due for unliquidated damages, or on a running account where the items are all on one side, unless otherwise agreed upon; Van Beuren v. Van Gaasbeck, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 496; Catlin v. Aiken, 5 Vt. 177; Shewel v. Givan, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 313; Harrison v. Handley, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 443; Watkins v. Wassell, 20 Ark. 410; Nichols v. Ry. Co., 7 Utah 510, 27 Pac. 693; see Palmer v. Murray, 8 Mont. 312, 21 Pac. 126; but when the damages are to be assessed on the principle of compensation, and with reference to a definite standard, the jury may give additional damages in the nature of interest. This, however, is not strictly interest, but compensation for delay, measured by the rate of interest; Richards v. Gas Co., 130 Pa. 37, 18 Atl. 600. On the arrears of an annuity secured by a specialty; 3 Atk. 579; Addams v. Heffernan, 9 Watts (Pa.) 530; or given in lieu of dower; Elliott v. Beeson, 1 Harr. (Del.) 106; Smyser v. Smyser, 3 W. & S. (Pa.) 437. On bills and notes if payable at a future day certain, after due; 3 D. & B. 70; Rollman v. Baker, 5 Humphr. (Tenn.) 406; Joyner v. Turner, 19 Ark. 690; Ayres v. Hayes, 13 Mo. 252; Ramsdell v. Hulett, 50 Kan. 440, 31 Pac. 1092; if payable on demand, after a demand made; 5 Ves. 133; Nelson v. Cartmel's Adm'r, 6 Dana (Ky.) 7; Pate v. Gray, 1 Hempst. 155, Fed. Cas. No. 10,794a; Maxcy v. Knight, 18 Ala. 300; In re Estate of King, 94 Mich. 411, 54 N. W. 178. See Pullen v. Chase, 4 Ark. 210; Henry v. Roe & Burnside, 83 Tex. 446, 18 S. W. 806. But see Packer v. Roberts, 40 Ill. App. 613, where interest on a note due on demand was held to run from its date. Where the terms of a promissory note are that it shall be payable by instalments, and on the failure of any instalment the whole is to become due, interest on the whole becomes payable from the first default; 4 Esp. 147. Where, by the terms of a bond or a promissory note, interest is to be paid annually, and the principal at a distant day, the interest may be recovered before the principal is due; Sparks v. Garrigues, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 165; Greenleaf v. Kellogg, 2 Mass. 568. An accepted draft bears interest from the time of delivery, when no time of payment is stated therein; Clark v. Loan Ass'n, 65 Hun 625, 20 N. Y. Supp. 363.

When not stipulated for by contract or authorized by statute, interest is allowed by the courts as damages for the detention of money or property; U. S. v. North Carolina, 136 U. S. 211, 10 Sup. Ct. 920, 34 L. Ed. 336.

On a deposit by a purchaser, which he is entitled to recover back, paid either to a principal or an auctioneer; Sugd. Vend. 327; 5 Taunt. 625. But see 4 Taunt. 334. For goods sold and delivered, after the customary or stipulated term of credit has expired; 2 B. & P. 337; Knox v. Jones, 2 Dall. (Pa.) 193, 1 L. Ed. 345; *Bispham v. Where goods are sold on a definite term of credit, interest runs from the date when the account becomes due, unless there are deductions or discounts to be adjusted; Harding, Whitman & Co. v. Knitting Mills, 142 Fed. 228; and so, where a tradesman regularly charges interest on an open account and the purchaser makes no objection thereto, an agreement to pay interest will be inferred; [1901] 2 Ch. 548.

On judgment debts; 2 Ves. 162. In a judgment on sci. fa. the interest is calculated on the old judgment and the new judgment entered for a lump sum; Berryhill v. Wells, 5 Binn. in an action for causing its death; St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. v. Biggs, 50 Ark. 169, 6 S. W. 724; Township of Plymouth v. Graver, 125 Pa. 24, 17 Atl. 249, 11 Am. St. Rep. 867. On purchase-money which has lain dead, where the vendor cannot make a title; Sugd. Vend. 327. On purchase-money remaining in purchaser's hands to pay off incumbrances; 1 Sch. & L. 134. On taxes wrongfully collected; County of Galveston v. Gas Co., 72 Tex. 509, 10 S. W. 583. See Boott Cotton Mills v. City of Lowell, 159 Mass. 383, 34 N. E. 367. Rent in arrear due by covenant bears interest, unless under special circumstances, which may be recovered in action; Obermyer v. Nichols, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 159, 6 Am. Dec. 439. See West v. Weyer, 46 Ohio St. 66, 18 N. E. 537, 15 Am. St. Rep. 552; but no distress can be made for such interest; Bantleon v. Smith, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 146, 4 Am. Dec. 430. Interest cannot, however, be recovered for arrears of rent payable in wheat; Van Rensselaer's Ex'rs v. Platner's Adm'rs, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 276. See Graham v. Woodson, 2 Call. (Va.) 249; Cooke v. Wise, 3 Hen. & M. (Va.) 463.

Interest cannot be recovered as damages for the detention of the principal, after the principal sum has been paid; Stewart v. Barnes, 153 U. S. 456, 14 Sup. Ct. 849, 38 L. Ed. 781. Where interest is recoverable, not as a part of the contract, but by way of damages, if the plaintiff has been guilty of laches in unreasonably delaying the prosecution of his claim, it may be properly withheld; U. S. v. Sanborn, 135 U. S. 271, 10 Sup. Ct. 812, 34 L. Ed. 112. Interest allowed for non-payment of a judgment is in the nature of statutory damages; Morley v. R. Co., 146 U. S. 162, 13 Sup. Ct. 54, 36 L. Ed. 925.

On legacies. On specific legacies it has been held that interest is to be calculated from the date of the death of the testator; 2 Ves. Sen. 563; Shobe's Ex'rs v. Carr, 3 Munf. (Va.) 10; so on a gift of a fund in trust to pay the income to a sister for life; In re Hilyard's Estate, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 30.

A general legacy, when the time of payment is not named by the testator, is not payable till the end of one year after testator's death, at which time the interest commences to run; 1 Sch. & L. 10; Eyre v. Golding, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 475; Wood v. Hammond, 16 R. I. 98, 17 Atl. 324, 18 Atl. 198; Couch v. Eastham, 29 W. Va. 784, 3 S. E. 23; and this is so whether the will has been proved during the year or not; Ogden v. Pattee, 149 Mass. 82, 21 N. E. 227, 14 Am. St. Rep. 401. Where only the interest is given, no payment will be due till the end of the second year; 7 Ves. 89. As a general rule pecuniary legacies do not bear interest till they are payable (one year after testator's death); Appeal of Townsend, 106 Pa. 268, 51 Am. Rep. 523.

Where a general legacy is given, and the time of payment is named by the testator interest is not allowed before the arrival of the appointed period of payment, and that notwithstanding the legacies are vested; Prec. in Ch. 337. But when that period arrives, the legatee will be entitled although the legacy be charged upon a dry reversion; 2 Atk. 108. See, also, 1 Cox, Ch. 133. When the executor can pay a legacy without any possible inconvenience to the estate, it has been held that interest begins to run at once; Van Rensselaer v. Van Rensselaer, 113 N. Y. 207, 21 N. E. 75. When a legacy is given payable at a future day with interest, and the legatee dies before it becomes payable, the arrears of the interest up to the time of his death must be paid to his personal representatives; McClell. 141. And a bequest of a sum to be paid annually for life bears interest from the death of testator; Eyre v. Golding, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 475; Flickwir's Estate, 26 W. N. C. (Pa.) 374; and so also for a legacy of income for the support and maintenance of the legatee; Appeal of Townsend, 106 Pa. 268, 51 Am. Rep. 523; especially is this so when the legacy is to be paid by the executors transferring to the trustees for the legatee interest-bearing securities belonging to the testator's estate; id.

Where the legatee is a child of the testator, or one towards whom he has placed himself in loco parentis, the legacy bears interest from the testator's death, whether it be particular or residuary, vested but payable at a future time, or contingent if the child have no maintenance. In that case the court will do what in common presumption the father would have done—provide necessities for the child; 2 P. Wms. 31; 1 Dick. Ch. 310; 2 Brown, Ch. 59; Davison v. Rake, 44 N. J. Eq. 506, 16 Atl. 227. In case of a child en ventre sa mère at the time of the father's death, interest is allowed only from its birth; 2 Cox, Ch. 425. Where maintenance or interest is given by the will, and the rate specified, the legatee will not, in general, be entitled to claim more than the maintenance or rate specified; 3 Atk. 697, 716; 3 Ves. 286, n. And see further, as to interest in cases of legacies to children; 15 Ves. 363; 4 Madd. 275; 1 P. Wms. 783; 3 V. & B. 183.

Interest is not allowed by way of maintenance to any other person than the legitimate children of the testator; 3 Ves. 10; 4 id. 1; unless the testator has put himself in loco parentis; 1 Sch. & L. 5, 6. A wife; 15 Ves. 301; a niece; 3 Ves. 10; a grandchild; 1 Cox, Ch. 133; are, therefore, not entitled to interest by way of maintenance. See 2 Wms. Exec. 743. Nor is a legitimate child entitled to such interest if he have a maintenance, although it may be less than the amount of the interest of the legacy; 1 Sch. & L. 5; 3 Ves. 17. But see In re Bostwick, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 103; 2 Roper, Leg. 202; Appeal of Townsend, 106 Pa. 268, 51 Am. Rep. 523, cited above.

Where an intention, though not expressed, is fairly inferable from the will, interest will be allowed; 1 Swanst. 561, n.

Interest is not allowed for maintenance, although given by immediate bequest for maintenance, if the parent of the legatee, who is under moral obligation to provide for him, be of sufficient ability: so that the interest will accumulate for the child's benefit until the principal becomes payable; 3 Atk. 399; 1 Brown, Ch. 386; 3 id. 60, 416. But to this rule there are some exceptions; 3 Ves. 730; 4 Brown, Ch. 223; 4 Madd. 275, 289.

Where a fund, particular or residuary, is given upon a contingency, the intermediate interest undisposed of—that is to say, the intermediate interest between the testator's death, if there be no previous legatee for life, or, if there be, between the death of the previous taker and the happening of the contingency—will sink into the residue for the benefit of the next of kin, or executor of the testator, if not bequeathed by him; but if not disposed of, for the benefit of his residuary legatee; 1 Brown, Ch. 57; 2 Atk. 329.

Where a legacy is given by immediate bequest, whether such legacy be particular or residuary, and there is a condition to divest it upon the death of the legatee under twenty-one, or upon the happening of some other event, with a limitation over, and the legatee dies before twenty-one, or before such other event happens, which nevertheless does take place, yet, as the legacy was payable at the end of the year after the testator's death, the legatee's representatives, and not the legatee over, will be entitled to the interest which accrued during the legatee's life, until the happening of the event which was to divest the legacy; 1 P. Wms. 501; 5 Ves. 335, 522.

Where a residue is given, so as to be vested, but not payable at the end of the year from the testator's death, but upon the legatee's attaining twenty-one, or upon any other contingency, and with a bequest over divesting the legacy, upon the legatee's dying under age, or upon the happening of the contingency, then the legatee's representatives in the former case, and the legatee himself in the latter, shall be entitled to the interest that became due during the legatee's life or until the happening of the contingency; 2 P. Wms. 419; 1 Brown, Ch. 81, 335; 3 Mer. 335.

Where a residue of personal estate is given, generally, to one for life with remainder over, and no mention is made by the testator respecting the interest, nor any intention to the contrary to be collected from the will, the rule appears to be settled that the person taking for life is entitled to interest from the death of the testator, on such part of the residue bearing interest as is not necessary for the payment of debts. And it is immaterial whether the residue is only given generally, or directed to be laid out, with all convenient speed, in funds or securities, or to be laid out in lands. See 6 Ves. 520; 9 id. 89, 549, 553. Interest, in case of a remainder in an estate in money, does not run until the death of the life tenant; McCook v. Harp, 81 Ga. 229, 7 S. E. 174.

But where a residue is directed to be laid out in land, to be settled on one for life, with the remainder over, and the testator directs the interest to accumulate in the mean time until the money is laid out in land, or otherwise invested on security, the accumulation shall cease at the end of one year from the testator's death, and from that period the tenant for life shall be entitled to the interest; 6 Ves. 520; 2 S. & S. 396. Where a gift is made of the residue of the testator's estate to one person for life, and the principal is given over to another one at the death of the life tenant, the legatee is entitled to interest from the testator's death; Davison v. Rake, 44 N. J. Eq. 506, 16 Atl. 227.

Where no time of payment is mentioned by the testator, annuities are considered as commencing from the death of the testator; and, consequently, the first payment will be due at the end of the year from that event; if, therefore, it be not made then, interest, in those cases wherein it is allowed at all, must be computed from that period; Eyre v. Golding, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 475. See Saunderson v. Stearns, 6 Mass. 37; 1 Hare & W. Lead. Cas. 356.

How much interest is to be allowed. As to time. In actions for money had and received, interest is allowed from the date of service of the writ; Hunt v. Nevers, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 500, 26 Am. Dec. 616; McIlvaine v. Wilkins, 12 N. H. 474. See U. S. v. Curtis, 100 U. S. 119, 25 L. Ed. 571. On debts payable on demand, interest is payable only from the demand; Hunt v. Nevers, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 500, 26 Am. Dec. 616; Wells v. Abernethy, 5 Conn. 222; Pope v. Barrett, 1 Mas. 117, Fed. Cas. No. 11,273. The words "with interest for the same" carry interest from date; 1 Stark. 452, 507; Horn v. Hansen, 56 Minn. 43, 57 N. W. 315, 22 L. R. A. 617. Interest upon a quantum meruit for services rendered, does not begin to run until a demand is made; Farr v. Semple, 81 Wis. 230, 51 N. W. 319. It is allowed on the amount found as damages for breach of contract, from the date they accrued; Gulf, Colorado & S. F. Ry. Co. v. McCarty, 82 Tex. 608, 18 S. W. 716. Interest coupons bear interest from maturity of the coupons; Town of Solon v. Bank, 114 N. Y. 122, 21 N. E. 168; Cairo v. Zane, 149 U. S. 122, 13 Sup. Ct. 803, 37 L. Ed. 673; Scotland County v. Hill, 132 U. S. 107, 10 Sup. Ct. 26, 33 L. Ed. 261.

See COUPONS.

Interest on a dividend declared by a receiver should be allowed from the time it was declared and ought to have been paid; Armstrong v. Bank, 133 U. S. 433, 10 Sup.

Ct. 450, 33 L. Ed. 747. Interest runs on liability of shareholders to creditors of a national bank from the time it goes into liquidation; Richmond v. Irons, 121 U. S. 27, 7 Sup. Ct. 788, 30 L. Ed. 864.

Interest may be computed from the commencement of an action for the balance due on a general account and the enforcement of lien; North v. La Flesh, 73 Wis. 520, 41 N. W. 633; Tootle v. Wells, 39 Kan. 452, 18 Pac. 692.

The general rule is that interest is not payable until the principal is due, unless the parties contract otherwise; Hutchins v. Dixon, 11 Md. 32. On a note payable on or before three years after date with interest at 8 per cent. per annum, the interest is to be paid at maturity; Ramsdell v. Hulett, 50 Kan. 440, 31 Pac. 1092; Tanner v. Investment Co., 12 Fed. 646; Koehring v. Muemminghoff, 61 Mo. 403, 21 Am. Rep. 402; contra, Cook v. Wiles, 42 Mich. 439, 4 N. W. 169, where the interest was held to be payable each year.

The mere circumstance of war existing between two nations is not a sufficient reason for abating interest on debts due by the subjects of one belligerent to another; American Ins. Co. v. Canten, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 524, 7 L. Ed. 242; Paul v. Christie, 4 H. & McH. (Md.) 161. But a prohibition of all intercourse with an enemy during war furnishes a sound reason for the abatement of interest until the return of peace; Hoare v. Allen, 2 Dall. (Pa.) 102, 1 L. Ed. 307; Foxcraft v. Nagle, 2 Dall. (Pa.) 132, 1 L. Ed. 319; Deniston v. Imbrie, 3 Wash. C. C. 396, Fed. Cas. No. 3,802; Sims v. Willing, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 1103; Bean v. Chapman, 62 Ala. 58. See infra.

A debt barred by the statute of limitations and revived by an acknowledgment bears interest for the whole time; Williams v. Finney, 16 Vt. 297.

As to the allowance of simple and compound interest. Interest upon interest is not allowed, except in special cases; 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 287; Birchard v. Knapp's Estate, 31 Vt. 679; Stokely v. Thompson, 34 Pa. 210; and the uniform current of decisions is against it, as being a hard, oppressive exaction, and tending to usury; Connecticut v. Jackson, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 14, 7 Am. Dec. 471; Kennon v. Dickins, 1 N. C. 522, 2 Am. Dec. 642; Wheelock v. Moulton, 13 Vt. 430; Levens v. Briggs, 21 Or. 333, 28 Pac. 15, 14 L. R. A. 188; but interest on interest may be allowed if agreed upon after the interest becomes due; Barbour v. Tompkins, 31 W. Va. 410, 7 S. E. 1; Merek v. Mortgage Co., 79 Ga. 213, 7 S. E. 265; Sanford v. Lundquist, 80 Neb. 414, 118 N. W. 129; though both interest on the principal and on the interest are computed at the maximum rate allowed by law; id.

By the civil law, interest could not be demanded beyond the principal sum, and payments exceeding that amount were applied to the extinguishment of the principal; Ridley's Views of the Civil, etc., Law 84.

Where a partner has overdrawn the partnership funds, and refuses, when called upon to account, to disclose the profits, recourse would be had to compound interest as a substitute for the profits he might reasonably be supposed to have made; Stoughton v. Lynch, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 213.

When executors, administrators, or trustees convert the trust-money to their own use, or employ it in business or trade, or fail to invest, they have been charged with compound interest; Fay v. Howe, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 528; Schieffelin v. Stewart, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 620, 7 Am. Dec. 507. Nothing but very culpable conduct will justify the compounding of interest against an administrator; Alvis v. Oglesby, 87 Tenn. 172, 10 S. W. 313; Cranston v. Wilsey, 71 Mich. 356, 39 N. W. 9. Interest cannot ordinarily be compounded against a guardian; In re Ward's Estate, 73 Mich. 220, 41 N. W. 431; Peelle v. State, 118 Ind. 512, 21 N. E. 288; but it may be in some cases; Latham v. Wilcox, 99 N. C. 367, 6 S. E. 711.

In actions for negligence, interest cannot be allowed by the jury as such, but they may, in computing their verdict, consider the lapse of time since the cause of action arose; Plymouth Tp. v. Graver, 125 Pa. 24, 17 Atl. 249, 11 Am. St. Rep. 867. The question of allowances of interest on damages for tort is for the jury. They should not be directed to allow it; Brent v. Thornton, 106 Fed. 35, 45 C. C. A. 214. Interest may be recovered for the wrongful conversion of personal property, computed from the time of the conversion; Drumm-Flato Commission Co. v. Edmisson, 208 U. S. 534, 28 Sup. Ct. 367, 52 L. Ed. 606.

In an action to recover the annual interest due on a promissory note, interest will be allowed on each year's interest until paid; Greenleaf v. Kellogg, 2 Mass. 568; Catlin v. Lyman, 16 Vt. 45; Talliaferro's Ex'rs v. King's Adm'r, 9 Dana (Ky.) 331, 35 Am. Dec. 140; Gibbes v. Chisolm, 2 N. & McC. (S. C.) 38, 10 Am. Dec. 560; Bledsoe v. Nixon, 69 N. C. 89, 12 Am. An infant's contract to pay interest on interest after it has accrued will be binding upon him when the contract is for his benefit; 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 286; 1 Atk. 489; 3 id. 613. The including in a note payable a year after date with a certain rate of interest, until paid, of a year's interest, is not compounding interest; Foard v. Grinter's Ex'rs (Ky.) 18 S. W. 1034. As to interest on interest coupons, see infra.

As limited by the penalty of a bond. It is a general rule that the penalty of a bond limits the amount of the recovery; 2 Term 388. But in some cases the interest is recoverable beyond the amount of the penalty; U. S. v. Gurney, 4 Cra. (U. S.) 333, 2 L. Ed. 638; Fake v. Eddy's Ex'r, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 76; Lewis v. Dwight, 10 Conn. 95; Bank of U. S. v. Magill, Paine, 661, Fed. Cas. No. 929; Potter v. Webb, 6 Greenl. (Me.) 14; Judge of Probate v. Heydock, 8 N. H. 491. The recovery depends on principles of law, and not on the arbitrary discretion of a jury; Smedes v. Hooghtaling, 3 Caines (N. Y.) 49, 2 Am. Dec. 250.

The exceptions are—where the bond is to account for moneys to be received; 2 Term 388; where the plaintiff is kept out of his money by writs of error; 2 Burr. 1094; or delayed by injunction; 1 Vern. 349; 16 Viner, Abr. 303; if the recovery of the debt be delayed by the obligor; 6 Ves. 92; 1 Vern. 349; if extraordinary emoluments are derived from holding the money; 2 Bro. P. C. 251; or the bond is taken only as a collateral security; 2 Bro. P. C. 333; or the action be on a judgment recovered on a bond; 1 East 436. See, also, Carter v. Carter, 4 Day (Conn.) 30, 4 Am. Dec. 177; Smedes v. Hooghtaling, 3 Caines (N. Y.) 49, 2 Am. Dec. 250; Harris v. Clap, 1 Mass. 308, 2 Am. Dec. 27; Com. Dig. Chancery (3 S 2); Viner, Abr. Interest (E).

But these exceptions do not obtain in the administration of the debtor's assets where his other creditors might be injured by allowing the bond to be rated beyond the penalty; 5 Ves. 329. See Viner, Abr. Interest (C 5).

Interest may be added to the amount of recovery on a bond although the total sum exceeds the penalty thereof; American Surety Co. v. Surety Co., 81 Conn. 252, 70 Atl. 584, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 83.

Upon a bond given to appear in a United States court to answer to an indictment, no interest can be recovered; U. S. v. Broadhead, 127 U. S. 212, 8 Sup. Ct. 1191, 32 L. Ed. 147.

As to the allowance of foreign interest. The rate of interest of the place of performance is to be allowed, where such place is specified; De Wolf v. Johnson, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 367, 6 L. Ed. 343; Scotfield v. Day, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 102; Braynard v. Marshall, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 194; Hawley v. Sloo, 12 La. Ann. 815; Thomas v. Beckman, 1 B. Monr. (Ky.) 29; Archer v. Dunn, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 327; Austin v. Imus, 23 Vt. 286; Vinson v. Platt, 21 Ga. 135; Whitlock v. Castro, 22 Tex. 108; Davis v. Coleman, 29 N. C. 424; 5 C. & F. 1; otherwise, of the place of making the contract; 11 Ves. 314; Winthrop v. Carleton, 12 Mass. 4; Ingraham v. Arnold, 1 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 406; Arrington v. Gee, 27 N. C. 590; Fanning v. Consequa, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 511, 8 Am. Dec. 442; Lapice v. Smith, 13 La. 91, 33 Am. Dec. 555; Smith v. Mead, 3 Conn. 253, 8 Am. Dec. 183; Hill v. George, 5 Tex. 87; Wheeler v. Pope, id. 262. But the rate of interest of either place may be reserved; and this provision will govern, if an honest transaction and not a cover for usury; Mullen v. Morris, 2 Pa. 85; Peck v. Mayo, 14 Vt. 33, 39 Am. Dec. 205; Depau v. Humphreys, 8 Mart. N. S. (La.) 1; Van Schaick v. Edwards, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 355; De Wolf v. Johnson, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 367, 6 L. Ed. 343. Coupons, after their maturity, bear interest at the rate fixed by the law of the place where they are payable, where there is no stipulation as to the rate after maturity; Cairo v. Zane, 149 U. S. 122, 13 Sup. Ct. 803, 37 L. Ed. 673; Scotland County v. Hill, 132 U. S. 107, 10 Sup. Ct. 26, 33 L. Ed. 261. See also Dacey, Conf. L., Moore's ed. 616, 625.

How computed. In casting interest on notes, bonds, etc., upon which partial payments have been made, every payment is to be first applied to keep down the interest; but the interest is never allowed to form a part of the principal so as to carry interest; Smith v. Shaw, 2 Wash. C. C. 167, Fed. Cas. No. 13,107; Meredith v. Banks, 6 N. J. L. 108; Anonymous, 3 N. C. 17; Dean v. Williams, 17 Mass. 417; Treat v. Stanton, 14 Conn. 445; Woodward v. Jewell, 140 U. S. 247, 11 Sup. Ct. 784, 35 L. Ed. 478.

When a partial payment exceeds the amount of interest due when it is made, it is correct to compute the interest to the time of the first payment, add it to the principal, subtract the payment, cast interest on the remainder to the time of the second payment, add it to the remainder, and subtract the second payment, and in like manner from one payment to another, until the time of judgment; Perl. Int. 168; Fay v. Bradley, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 194; Lightfoot v. Price, 4 Hen.

& M. (Va.) 431; Com. v. Vanderslice, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 458; Smith v. Shaw, 2 Wash. (C. C.) 167, Fed. Cas. No. 13,107. See Williams v. Houghtaling, 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 86. The same rule applies to judgments; Hodgdon v. Hodgdon, 2 N. H. 169; Com. v. Vanderslice, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 452.

Where a partial payment is made before the debt is due, it cannot be apportioned part to the debt and part to the interest. As, if there be a bond for one hundred dollars, payable in one year, and at the expiration of six months fifty dollars be paid in, this payment shall not be apportioned part to the principal and part to the interest, but at the end of the year, interest shall be charged on the whole sum, and the obligor shall receive credit for the interest of fifty dollars for six months; Tracy v. Wikoff, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 124, 1 L. Ed. 65.

A secured creditor of a bankrupt, selling his securities after the filing of the petition, must apply the proceeds, other than interest and dividends accrued since the filing, first to pay the debt with interest to date of petition, and not first to pay interest accrued since the petition. Interest and dividends accrued after the filing can be applied to interest on the debt accrued after the filing. This is also the English rule; Sexton v. Dreyfus, 219 U. S. 339, 31 Sup. Ct. 256, 55 L. Ed. 244.

When interest will be barred. When the money due is tendered to the person entitled to it, and he refuses to receive it, the interest ceases; 3 Campb. 296; Loomis v. Knox, 60 Conn. 343, 22 Atl. 771; Riley v. McNamara, 83 Tex. 11, 18 S. W. 141. See Cheney v. Libby, 134 U. S. 68, 10 Sup. Ct. 498, 33 L. Ed. 818. A tender by a junior mortgagee to a senior mortgagee of the amount due on the senior mortgage, with accrued costs of foreclosure, does not, unless kept good, prevent the running of interest; Nelson v. Loder, 132 N. Y. 288, 30 N. E. 369.

Where the plaintiff was absent in foreign parts beyond seas, evidence of that fact may be given in evidence to the jury on the plea of payment, in order to extinguish the interest during such absence; McCall v. Turner, 1 Call. (Va.) 133; Blake's Ex'rs v. Quash's Ex'rs, 3 McCord (S. C.) 340; Borland v. Sharp, 1 Root (Conn.) 178. But see Schaeffer's Estate, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 263.

Whenever the law prohibits the payment of the principal, interest during the prohibition is not demandable; Hoare v. Allen, 2 Dall. (Pa.) 102, 1 L. Ed. 307; Foxcraft v. Nagle, 2 Dall. (Pa.) 132, 1 L. Ed. 319; Crawford v. Willing, 4 Dall. (Pa.) 286, 1 L. Ed. 836. Where payment has been prevented by war, interest cannot be recovered; Selden v. Preston, 11 Bush (Ky.) 191. See supra.

If the plaintiff has accepted the principal, he cannot recover the interest in a separate action; 1 Esp. 110; Tillotson v. Preston, 3

Johns. (N. Y.) 229. See Kellogg v. Richards, 14 Wend. 116.

For or against Government or State. Interest is not to be awarded against a sovereign government, unless its consent has been manifested by an act of its legislature or by a lawful contract of its executive officers; U. S. v. North Carolina, 136 U. S. 211, 10 Sup. Ct. 920, 34 L. Ed. 336. The U. S. is not liable to pay interest or claims against it, in the absence of express statutory provision therefor; U. S. v. Bayard, 127 U. S. 251, 8 Sup. Ct. 1156, 32 L. Ed. 159; Wightman v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cl. 144; U. S. v. Verdier, 164 U. S. 213, 17 Sup. Ct. 42, 41 L. Ed. 407; but this does not apply to subordinate governmental agencies (The National Home); National Volunteer Home v. Parrish, 229 U. S. 494, 33 Sup. Ct. 944, 57 L. Ed. 1296; interest must be allowed to the United States under U. S. R. S. § 966; id. A city is not liable for interest on its loans, after maturity, if it has provided funds to pay them; Friend v. City of Pittsburgh, 131 Pa. 305, 18 Atl. 1060, 6 L. R. A. 636, 17 Am. St. Rep. 811.

A general interest statute cannot be applied as against a county, and in an action to recover taxes wrongfully exacted, interest cannot be recovered; Jackson County Com'rs v. Kaul, 77 Kan. 715, 96 Pac. 45, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 552.

For exceeding the legal rates of interest the penalty is variously fixed by the different states. See USURY.

In Practice. Concern; advantage; benefit. Such a relation to the matter in issue as creates a liability to pecuniary gain or loss from the event of the suit. Inhabitants of Northampton v. Smith, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 395, 396.

When used as a criterion of the proper parties to a suit it means interest in the object, not interest in the subject-matter; Penn. v. Bahnson, 89 Va. 253, 15 S. E. 586.

A person may be disqualified to act as a judge, juror, or witness in a cause by reason of an interest in the subject-matter in dispute. As to the disqualifying interest of judges, see JUDGE; as to the disqualifying interest of jurors, see CHALLENGE.

The old rule that interest disqualifies a witness has been abolished here and in England by statute. The only question now is one of credibility with the jury. A few cases may be given for historical reasons.

An interest disqualifying a witness must be legal, as contradistinguished from mere prejudice or bias arising from relationship, friendship, or any of the numerous motives by which a witness may be supposed to be influenced; 2 Hawk. Pl. Cr. 46, s. 25; must be present; Gilkinson v. The Scotland, 14 La. Ann. 417; Paxton v. Paxton, 38 W. Va. 616, 18 S. E. 765; must be certain, vested, and not uncertain and contingent; 2 P. Wms. 287; Ely v. Forward, 7 Mass. 25; Edwards

v. McKinnon, 25 Ga. 337; Millett v. Parker, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 608; Dundas v. Muhlenberg's Ex'rs, 35 Pa. 351; must be an interest in the event of the cause, or the verdict must be lawful evidence for or against him in another suit, or the record must be an instrument of evidence for or against him; Bass v. Peevey, 22 Tex. 295; Van Nuy's v. Terhune, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 83. But an interest in the question does not disqualify the witness; People v. Howell, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 302; Miles v. O'Hara, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 32; Baring v. Reeder, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 165, 168; or the fact that he has a case of the same kind pending; Warren v. McGill, 103 Cal. 153, 37 Pac. 144.

An attorney will under most circumstances be permitted to testify in behalf of his client; but the courts do not look with favor upon the practice; Follansbee v. Walker, 72 Pa. 229, 13 Am. Rep. 671. See Mealer v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. R. 102, 22 S. W. 142. Probably the test would lie in his withdrawal from the case.

The magnitude of the interest is altogether immaterial; a liability for costs is sufficient; 5 Term 174; Butler v. Warren, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 57.

Interest will not disqualify a person as a witness if he has an equal interest on both sides; 7 Term. 480; Wright v. Nichols, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 298; Cushman v. Loker, 2 Mass. 108; Cameron v. Paul, 6 Pa. 322; Hidell v. Dwinell, 89 Ga. 532, 16 S. E. 79.

INTEREST, MARITIME. See MARITIME INTEREST.

INTEREST OR NO INTEREST. A provision in a policy of insurance, which imports that the policy is to be good though the insured have no insurable interest in the subject-matter. This constitutes a wager policy, which is bad by statute 19 Geo. II. c. 37, and generally, from the policy of the law; 2 Par. Mar. Law 89, note. See INSURABLE INTEREST; POLICY.

INTERFERENCE. See PATENTS.

INTERIM (Lat.). In the mean time; meanwhile. An assignee ad interim is one appointed between the time of bankruptcy and appointment of the regular assignee. 2 Bell, Com. 355.

INTERIM CURATOR. A person appointed by justices of the peace to take care of the property of a felon convict until the appointment by the Crown of an administrator or administrators for the same purpose. Moz. & W.

INTERIM ORDER. An order to take effect provisionally, or until further directions. The expression is used especially with reference to orders given pending an appeal. Usually, ad interim.

INTERLAQUEARE. In Old Practice. To link together, or interchangeably. Writs were called interlaqueata where several were issued against several parties residing in different counties, each party being summoned by a separate writ to warrant the tenant, together with the other warrantors. Flota, lib. 5, c. 4, § 2.

INTERLINEATION. Writing between two lines.

Interlineations are made either before or after the execution of an instrument. Those made before should be noted previously to its execution; those made after are made either by the party in whose favor they are, or by strangers.

When made by the party himself, whether the interlineation be material or immaterial, they render the deed void; Cutts v. U. S., 1 Gall. 71, Fed. Cas. No. 3,522; Hunt v. Gray, 35 N. J. L. 227, 10 Am. Rep. 232; unless made with the consent of the opposite party. See 11 Co. 27 a; Hatch v. Hatch, 9 Mass. 307, 6 Am. Dec. 67; Jackson v. Mallin, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 293; President and Directors of Cumberland Bank v. Hall, 6 N. J. L. 215. But see Wicke's Lessee v. Caulk, 5 H. & J. (Md.) 41; McMicken v. Beauchamp, 2 La. 290; 4 Bingh. 123; Arrison v. Harmstead, 2 Pa. 191. See Express Pub. Co. v. Aldine Press, 126 Pa. 347, 17 Atl. 608.

When the interlineation is made by a stranger to an instrument in the hands of the promisee, though without his knowledge, if it be immaterial, it will not vitiate the instrument, but if it be material, it will, in general, avoid it; 11 Co. 27 a; L. R. 10 Ex. 330; see Murray v. Peterson, 6 Wash. 418, 33 Pac. 969; otherwise if the instrument be not then in the possession of a party; 6 East 309. If made while in the possession of an agent of the promisee, it avoids the instrument; L. R. 10 Ex. 330; contra, Hunt v. Gray, 35 N. J. L. 227, 10 Am. Rep. 232. The insertion of the words "or order" without the consent of the maker constitutes a material alteration which avoids the note; Taylor v. Moore (Tex.) 20 S. W. 53. An interlineation made in a bond, after its execution, by an agent of the obligee, without authority, will not invalidate it, but is only an act of spoliation; White Sewing Mach. Co. v. Dakin, 86 Mich. 581, 49 N. W. 583, 13 L. R. A. 313.

The decisions vary as to the effect of interlineations, when an instrument is put in evidence. In a late case the rule is stated thus: If the interlineation is in itself suspicious, as, if it appears to be contrary to the probable meaning of the instrument as it stood before the insertion of the interlined words; or if it is in a handwriting different from the body of the instrument, or appears to have been written with different ink, in all such cases, if the court considers the interlineation suspicious on its face, the presumption will be that it was an unauthorized alteration after execution. On the other hand, if the interlineation appears in the same handwriting with the original instrument, and bears no evidence on its face of having been made subsequent to the execution of the instrument, and especially if it only makes clear what was the evident intention of the parties, the law will presume that it was made in good faith, and before execution; Cox v. Palmer, 3 Fed. 16. See Zimmerman v. Camp, 155 Pa. 152, 25 Atl. 1086. Where interlineations in a deed are in the handwriting of the officer who attested it officially, the presumption is that they were made at or before the execution of the instrument; Bedgood v. McLain, 89 Ga. 793, 15 S. E. 670; but it has been held that an alteration appearing on the face of a deed is presumed to have been made after its execution, and the burden is upon the party presenting it to explain the alteration; Sisson v. Pearson, 44 Ill. App. 81.

If an instrument appears to have been altered, it is incumbent on the party offering it to explain its appearance. Generally speaking, if nothing appears to the contrary, the alteration will be presumed to be contemporaneous with the execution of the instrument; but if there is ground of suspicion, the law presumes nothing, but leaves the questions of the time when, the person by whom, and the intent with which it was done, to the jury, upon proofs to be adduced by the party offering the instrument; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 564; Stillwell v. Patton, 108 Mo. 352, 18 S. W. 1075; Martin v. Kline, 157 Pa. 473, 27 Atl. 753; Houston v. Jordan, 82 Tex. 352, 18 S. W. 702. See De Long v. Soucie, 45 Ill. App. 234. In cases of negotiable instruments, the holder is held to clearer proof than in cases of deeds; 2 Dan. Neg. Instr. § 1417. See Wilson v. Hayes, 40 Minn. 531, 42 N. W. 467, 4 L. R. A. 196, 12 Am. St. Rep. 754. In a carefully considered case, Beaman's Adm'rs v. Russell, 20 Vt. 205, 49 Am. Dec. 775, the court adopt what it calls the old common-law rule that an alteration of an instrument, if nothing appear to the contrary, should be presumed to have been made at the time of the execution. So, also, 1 Shepl. 386; Rankin v. Blackwell, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 198; contra, Hills v. Barnes, 11 N. H. 395; Cochran v. Nebeker, 48 Ind. 459. It has been held, when a place of payment was inserted, that it was a question for the jury, but that it lay on the plaintiff to account for the alteration, etc.; 6 C. & P. 273; Davis v. Carlisle, 6 Ala. 707; such an insertion after delivery is a material alteration; Winter v. Pool, 100 Ala. 503, 14 South. 411; Gwin v. Anderson, 91 Ga. 827, 18 S. E. 43. But in Hayden v. Goodnow, 39 Conn. 164, it was held that the burden of proof of accounting for an alteration is not necessarily on the party producing the instrument. See Sisson v. Pearson, 44 Ill. App. 81.

In Nell v. Case, 25 Kan. 510, 37 Am. Rep. 259, it was held that a negotiable note offered in evidence, bearing on its face an apparent material alteration, is admissible in evidence, and the question as to the time of alteration is for the jury. The court said: If there is neither extrinsic nor intrinsic evidence as to when the alteration was made, it is to be presumed that it was made before or at the time of the execution. Perhaps there might be cases where the alteration is attended with such manifest circumstances of suspicion that the court might refuse to allow the note to go to the jury without some explanation, etc. This title is fully treated in a note in 37 Am. Rep. 260. As to alteration of negotiable instruments, see 7 Harv. Law Rev. 1. See ALTERATION; ERASURE.

INTERLOCUTOR. Properly means a judgment or judicial order pronounced in the course of a suit, which does not finally determine the cause. But in Scotch practice, the term is extended to the judgments of the Court of Session or the Lord Ordinary, which exhaust the point at issue, and which if not appealed against will have the effect of finally deciding the case. Bell; Moz. & W.

INTERLOCUTORY. Something which is done between the commencement and the end of a suit or action which decides some point or matter, which, however, is not a final decision of the matter in issue: as, interlocutory judgments, or decrees, or orders. The term seems to have originated with Lord Ellesmere; 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 213.

See DECREE; JUDGMENT; ORDER; INJUNCTION.

INTERLOPERS. Persons who interrupt the trade of a company of merchants, by pursuing the same business with them in the same place, without lawful authority.

INTERNAL REVENUE. See REVENUE; TAXATION.

INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION. Arbitration may be defined in the words of the First Hague Conference as "the settlement of differences between states by judges of their own choice, and on the basis of respect for law." Arbitration thus differs from mediation, which is an interposition by a third party in the endeavor to reconcile opposing claims. On the other hand, arbitration differs from a judicial decision rendered by a court imposed upon the parties, as in the case of municipal courts in relation to the citizens of the state. It is essential to arbitration that the judges of the dispute in question be freely chosen by the parties, and that the parties shall have obligated themselves to accept the decision rendered. At the First Hague Conference, which met in 1899, a Permanent Court of Arbitration was established. This court is permanent only in the sense that it is composed of a list of judges, nominated by the signatory powers, from among whom the arbitrators in each individual case are to be selected by the parties to the dispute. See HAGUE TRIBUNAL.

At the Second Hague Conference, which met in 1907, a vœu was expressed calling the attention of the powers to the advisability of adopting an annexed Draft Convention for the Establishment of a Court of Arbitral Justice. This court, in the words of the Convention, is to be "freely and easily accessible, composed of judges representing the various judicial systems of the world, and capable of insuring continuity in arbitral jurisprudence." It is to consist of judges and deputy judges chosen for a period of twelve years. The difficulty of reaching an agreement as to the method of selecting the judges and the constitution of the court prevented the establishment of the court. Inasmuch as the judges are to form a permanent staff, the court is to that extent judicial rather than arbitral in character.

While a decision based upon the principles of law is generally desired by the parties to a dispute, it is not inconsistent with the arbitration that the arbitrator should compromise conflicting claims which it is impossible otherwise to adjust, provided, however, that the powers of the arbitrator have not been limited by the parties to a strictly legal decision.

Arbitration was not unknown among the ancients, and many instances of its application occurred between the city-states of Greece; for example, in the time of Solon five Spartans were chosen to arbitrate between Athens and Megara as to the possession of the island of Salamis. II Philipson, 127-165. While the refusal of Imperial Rome to recognize other nations as on a footing of equality made impossible the existence of arbitration between Rome and other states, it frequently happened that Rome intervened as arbitrator between her more or less subject nations.

In the Middle Ages the position of dominance held by the Holy Roman Empire among the states of Europe likewise militated against a system of arbitration, though there are instances in which the Emperor arbitrated between feudal lords. Moreover, the exercise by the papacy of spiritual dominion over the states of the Christian world made it possible for the Pope to exercise the rôle of mediator or arbitrator between Christian princes. The upheaval brought about by the religious wars of the 16th and 17th centuries caused the practice of arbitration to become practically obsolete, but in the closing years of the 18th century the practice was revived under the influence of the United States.

There are two general classes of arbitration treaties; those entered into for the settlement, by arbitration, of a specific dispute which has arisen between two nations, and those which are entered into with the object of submitting to arbitration disputes which may arise in the future. The former are called Special Arbitration Treaties or Compromis; the latter are called General Arbitration Treaties. Since the First Hague Conference General Arbitration Treaties have been universally adopted. These treaties usually provide for the settlement of all disputes of a legal nature with the exception of differences which affect the vital interests, the independence or the honor of the two contracting parties. An early case of an agreement to arbitrate future disputes is to be found in the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo entered into between the United States and Mexico on February 2, 1848. Under this treaty the two nations agreed to "endeavor, in the most sincere and earnest manner, to settle the differences so arising, and to preserve the state of peace and friendship in which the two countries are now placing themselves, using, for this end, mutual representations and pacific negotiations." In case of failure, a resort shall not be had to reprisals or hostility of any kind "until the government of that which deems itself aggrieved shall have maturely considered, in the spirit of peace and good neighborhood, whether it would not be better that such difference should be settled by the arbitration of commissioners appointed on each side, or by that of a friendly nation. And should such course be proposed by either party, it shall be acceded to by the other, unless deemed by it altogether incompatible with the nature of the difference, or the circumstances of the case."

The first arbitral agreement entered into by the United States was that with Great Britain under the Treaty of 1794, commonly called the Jay Treaty, which provided for three mixed commissions. One commission met in 1798 to determine what was the St. Croix River contemplated by the Treaty of Peace of 1783 as the boundary of the two countries. Another commission met in Philadelphia in 1797 to determine the compensation due British subjects in consequence of impediments which certain states of the United States had, in violation of the provisions of the Treaty of Peace, interposed to the collection of debts by British creditors. No decision was reached and the claims were afterwards adjusted by the Treaty of January 8, 1802. The third commission, which finished its report in 1804, passed upon claims of citizens of the United States arising from losses and damages sustained "by reason of irregular or illegal captures or condemnations of their vessels and other property" during the war between Great Britain and France; and also upon claims of British subjects for losses sustained from captures made within the territorial waters of the United States or by French privateers armed within the United States.

The Treaty of Ghent, December 24, 1814, provided for three arbitral commissions. One related to the ownership of certain islands in Passamaquoddy Bay. The award divided ownership, assigning the larger number to Great Britain. The second commission undertook to decide the boundary line from the source of the River St. Croix to the St. Lawrence River. No decision was rendered, and the question was referred to the arbitration of the King of the Netherlands in 1827. His award, however, was not satisfactory, and the matter was finally settled by the Webster-Ashburton Treaty of 1842. The third commission, which undertook to determine the north-eastern boundary through the Great Lakes, likewise failed to reach an agreement, and the question was finally settled by the Treaty of 1842.

After the Treaty of Ghent a controversy arose as to the compensation due to citizens of the United States for slaves who were in the territory in possession of the British at the time of the treaty. By the Convention of October 20, 1818, the question was referred to the arbitration of the Emperor of Russia, who rendered an award in favor of the United States without, however, fixing the amount of the indemnity, which was decided by a mixed commission under the Convention of July 12, 1822.

On February 8, 1853, there was a convention at London for a general settlement of all claims pending between the United States and Great Britain. On July 1, 1863, a convention was concluded between the two countries to determine the compensation due to the Hudson's Bay Company and the Puget's Sound Agricultural Company on claims for damages, as well as for the transfer to the United States of all their property and rights in territory acknowledged by the Treaty of 1846 to be under the sovereignty of the United States. The commission rendered an award of $650,000 in favor of the British claimants.

The Treaty of Washington of May 8, 1871, provided for four distinct arbitrations, the principal of which was that held at Geneva with the object of settling the claims brought by the United States against Great Britain for losses and damages sustained by the depredations of the Alabama and other Confederate cruisers fitted out and armed in British ports.

The arbitrators declined to recognize the claims of the United States for the indemnity for the loss in the transfer of the American merchant marine to the British flag; for enhanced payment of marine insurance; for expenses incurred in pursuit of the Confederate cruisers; and for the prolongation of the war and the increased expenditures for the suppression of the rebellion. But they awarded, in compensation for the direct loss growing out of the destruction of vessels and their cargoes, the sum of $15,500,000. The arbitral commission sat from December 15, 1871, to September 14, 1872.

The dispute as to the San Juan water boundary was referred to the German Emperor, who, on October 21, 1872, made an award in favor of the United States. Claims of British subjects against the United States, and of citizens of the United States against Great Britain (excepting the Alabama claims) arising out of injuries during the Civil War, were referred to a mixed commission appointed by the United States, Great Britain and Spain.

The fourth arbitration under the Treaty of Washington was to determine the compensation due to Great Britain for privileges accorded by that treaty to the United States in connection with the fisheries along the northeastern coast of Canada. The arbitral commission rendered an award in 1877 in favor of Great Britain to the amount of $5,500,000.

Under the Treaty of February 29, 1892, the United States and Great Britain submitted certain questions relating to the protection of the fur seals in Behring Sea to a tribunal of arbitration which sat in Paris. An award was rendered denying the ownership of the United States of seals outside of its maritime jurisdiction, but recognizing the necessity of imposing restrictions upon the killing of seals on the high seas. Claims of British subjects for the seizure and detention of their vessels engaged in the seal fisheries of Behring Sea were settled by a mixed commission appointed in 1896.

In 1903 a joint commission was appointed to determine the boundary between Alaska and the Dominion of Canada, and an award was rendered in the same year largely in favor of the United States. In 1909 a special agreement was signed submitting to arbitration questions relating to the proper interpretation of the fishery rights granted to United States citizens by the Treaty of 1818. See FISHERIES ARBITRATION.

The arbitrations between the United States and Great Britain have been, on the whole, more important than those held with other foreign countries. A brief reference to the more important cases between the United States and countries other than Great Britain and the date of the special agreement referring the question to arbitration is here given.

Brazil: March 14, 1870.—Claim for indemnity for loss of the whaling ship "Canada" and its cargo through interference of Brazilian officials in 1856.

Chile: November 10, 1858.—Claim growing out of the seizure of the American brig "Macedonia" by the Chilean navy was referred to the arbitration of the King of Belgium. August 7, 1892.—Mutual claims arising out of the Chilean wars of 1879-82 and 1890-91 were referred to a mixed commission. December 1, 1909.—Claim brought by the Alsop Company against the Chilean government.

China: May 24, 1884.—Indemnity to American citizens for disputes of a fishery in Chinese territory.

Colombia: September 10, 1857; February 10, 1864.—Rights under the Treaty with New Granada of 1846. August 17, 1874.—Indemnity for capture and use by insurgents of steamer "Montijo."

Costa Rica: July 2, 1860.—Indemnity to American citizens for injuries and losses sustained by acts of Costa Rican authorities.

Denmark: December 6, 1883.—Claim arising from seizure of vessels belonging to an American firm.

Dominican Republic: 1897.—Claim arising from seizure by Dominican authorities of toll bridge owned by American citizen. 1903.—Two arbitrations between the Dominican government and American firms.

Ecuador: November 25, 1862.—Mutual claims of citizens for losses arising from governmental acts. February 28, 1893.—Indemnity for arrest of American citizen charged with complicity in the revolution of 1834.

France: January 15, 1880.—Claims of French citizens for injury to persons and property during the American Civil War and claims of American citizens for like injuries during the Franco-Prussian War.

Germany: November 7, 1899.—Samoan claims arising from military operations of Great Britain and the United States against Apia in 1899.

Guatemala: February 23, 1900.—Indemnity due American citizen for breach of contract and damages to property caused by authorities of Guatemala.

Haiti: May 24, 1884.—Personal claims arising from governmental action of Haiti against American citizens upon charges of piracy and traffic in slaves. January 25, 1885.—Indemnity for damages sustained by American citizens during riots at Port-au-Prince. May 24, 1888.—Indemnity for arrest and imprisonment of United States citizen in 1884. October 18, 1899.—Indemnity for seizure and sale of property belonging to American citizen.

Mexico: April 11, 1839.—Indemnity to American citizens for losses suffered during revolutions. July 4, 1868.—Mutual claims arising since 1848. March 2, 1897.—Personal injuries sustained by American citizens at the hands of Mexican agents in 1892. May 22, 1902.—Agreement reached referring to the Permanent Court of Arbitration at the Hague the claims advanced by the United States on behalf of the Roman Catholic Church in California against Mexico in regard to a permanent fund for mission purposes, known as the "Pious Fund of the Californias," donated by Spanish and Mexican subjects prior to the acquisition of California by the United States. June 24, 1910.—Ownership of a tract of land situated on the Rio Grande near El Paso, Texas.

Nicaragua: March 22, 1900.—Indemnity for seizure and detention of certain launches belonging to American citizens.

Paraguay: February 4, 1859.—Indemnity for confiscation of property of United States and Paraguay Navigation Company composed of American citizens.

Peru: December 20, 1862.—Indemnity for capture and confiscation of two American ships. January 12, 1863.—Mutual claims. December 4, 1863.—Mutual claims. May 17, 1898.—Indemnity for arrest and detention of American citizen during revolution of 1885.

Portugal: February 26, 1851.—Indemnity for destruction of American vessel by French fleet in Portuguese waters in 1814. June 13, 1891.—Indemnity for rescission of railway concession held by American and British citizens in Portuguese East Africa under grant from the Portuguese Government.

Russia: September 8, 1900.—Indemnity for seizure of American fishing vessels in Behring Sea by Russian cruisers.

Salvador: May 4, 1864.—Indemnity to American citizen for seizure of property. December 19, 1901.—Claims of American company arising from withdrawal of concessions made by government of Salvador.

Siam: 1897.—Indemnity for attack by Siamese soldiers upon United States vice-consul at Siam. July 26, 1897.—Indemnity to American citizen for seizure and sale of personal property.

Spain: October 27, 1795.—Claims for illegal captures of American vessels by Spanish subjects. 1870.—Indemnity for seizure of American steamer by Spanish authorities. February 12, 1871.—Claims of American citizens growing out of insurrection in Cuba. February 28, 1885.—Indemnity for seizure and detention of American vessel.

Venezuela: April 25, 1866; December 5, 1885.—Mutual long-standing claims of a varied character. January 19, 1892.—Indemnity for seizure of American ships by Venezuelan government. February 17, 1903.—Pecuniary claims of American citizens. May 7, 1903.—Question of the preferential right of Great Britain, Germany and Italy to payment of obligations due from Venezuela prior to similar payment to other powers. February 13, 1909.—Claim of Orinoco Steamship Company against Venezuela brought in 1903 but not satisfactorily decided.

INTERNATIONAL LAW. Nature and Sources. International law is the law governing the relations between states. It is sometimes called Public International Law to distinguish it from Private International Law or, as the latter should more properly be called, the Conflict of Laws (q. v.). Private international law is the law which is applied when citizens of different nations are parties to a suit or other legal proceeding. Since it does not involve nations themselves, but only their citizens, it has no claim to the name "international." See PRIVATE INTERNATIONAL LAW.

International law was not altogether unknown among the ancients, and many instances occur of its application by the Greek city-states, and by the Italian tribal states before the establishment of the Roman Empire; but the development of international law into the definite and well-recognized state in which it exists today did not begin until modern times.

In 1625 Hugo van Groot, better known as Grotius, published his treatise entitled De jure belli ac pacis, which marks an era in the growth of international law. Grotius bases his system, first, upon the law of nature, and secondly, upon the customs in existence between nations. He first deduces from the law of nature the principles which should properly govern the conduct of states, and he thus establishes a priori certain rules of international law. But since the law of nature is illustrated in the practices which are universally observed by mankind, Grotius found it possible to establish the rules of international law by arguing a posteriori from the customs of nations. His system has, therefore, a double foundation.

After Grotius, certain writers, led by Pufendorf, built up a system of international law based chiefly upon the law of nature, while another school, the Positivists, laid stress upon the positive character of international law as evidenced by the customs actually in existence between nations. Between these two schools there developed later a third school called the Grotian school, which takes account both of the law of nature as the basis of international law, and of the customs of nations as the embodiment of a positive system. The standpoint of the Grotian school has found greater favor among the Latin states of the continent of Europe, while the Positivist school is represented by English, American and German writers, though in each case with notable exceptions.

As a positive science international law may be defined as the collection of those generally accepted rules of conduct which nations consider so far binding upon themselves in their relations with one another as to lead them actually to abide by them in their general practice. Much discussion has attended the question as to how far these rules can properly lay claim to the title of "law." The Austinian school, which restricts law to the category of commands imposed by a political superior upon a political inferior, refuses to recognize the so-called international law as anything more than international morality, since it lacks the elements of law-giver, command, and sanction. On the other hand, the school of historical jurisprudence, of which Savigny may be regarded as the founder, taking law as the expression of the common will of a political community, maintains that international law possesses the character of true law inasmuch as it consists of rules adopted by the common consent of nations and enforced largely by the moral sanction of public opinion. Lord Russell of Killowen, in an address before the American Bar Association in 1896, considered Austin's definition as applying rather to the later development of arbitrary power than to that body of customary law which, in earlier stages of society, precedes law strictly so called, and which is made up of rules and customs which are laws in every real sense of the word, as, for example, the law merchant. And he continued: "In stages later still, as government becomes more frankly democratic, resting broadly on the popular will, laws bear less and less the character of commands imposed by a coercive authority and acquire more and more the character of customary law founded on consent."

Since international law is a body of rules actually accepted by nations as regulating their mutual relations, it follows that the test of the existence of a given rule is to be found in the consent of nations to abide by that rule. Now this consent is evidenced chiefly by the usages and customs of nations, which form therefore the principal source of international law. To ascertain what these usages and customs are it has been common to turn to the writings of publicists and to the decisions of state courts. The Habana, 175 U. S. 677, 20 Sup. Ct. 290, 44 L. Ed. 320.

But while usage is the older and original source of international law, treaties are a later source of increasing importance. Until recently these treaties generally had their international effect only when the rule contained in them came to be gradually adopted by other nations and thus became part of the customary law, as, for example, the Declaration of Paris of 1856; but with the establishment of The Hague Conferences there have come into existence conventions of a law-making character, in that they are signed and ratified by the nations as a body.

State Sovereignty and Its Corollaries.

The subjects of international law are sovereign states. The fundamental principles recognized by international law are that these states are independent each of the others in all that regards their domestic affairs, that they possess certain territory over which they have complete jurisdiction, and that they are all legally equal. Under these three principles it will be found convenient to group the chief rules of international law.

As a consequence of the sovereignty and independence of the states which form the family of nations, each state has a right to enter into such treaties and alliances with other states as it may find necessary or convenient. In order to maintain their independence the states of Europe have found it necessary from time to time to enter into alliances by which they have sought to maintain a balance of power. These alliances are an expression of the danger to the independence of states which might arise if any one of them should acquire a position of dominance. This necessity of maintaining a balance of power has led to the practice of intervention (q. v.) by which states have at times interfered in the affairs of other states. Intervention is ultimately based upon the principle of self-preservation, as the first law of international relations as of nature.

The principle of the equality of states is illustrated in the whole history of international relations from the time of the Treaty of Westphalia in 1648. Switzerland and Belgium, for example, have been recognized as having equal rights with Great Britain and Russia. But, while this legal equality is recognized, there is no denial of the fact that certain of the Great Powers have exercised a predominating influence in international relations.

Over the territory within their boundaries as well as over the persons residing in that territory, states have complete jurisdiction. State territory may be acquired in several ways: by discovery followed by occupation; by military conquest followed by subjugation; by prescription; and by accretion. It is recognized that a maritime belt, traditionally measured by a marine league from the shore, is part of the territory of the state which it surrounds. See TERRITORIAL WATERS. When the boundary between two states is marked by a river, the river takes on an international character, and apart from special cases determined by treaty, the mid-channel of the river constitutes the dividing line between the two countries. A river is likewise recognized as being international in character when it flows through two or more countries, though this is for purposes of commerce and does not exclude the jurisdiction of each state over that portion of the river within its domains. See RIVERS. Moreover, when a narrow body of water forms a passage way between two portions of the open sea or between the open sea and a bay or gulf open to the commerce of the world, the canal or strait assumes an international character and is open to the commerce of the world, subject to the purely administrative restrictions or tolls imposed by the power controlling the canal or strait.

After many struggles between maritime powers with conflicting interests, the open sea has come to be regarded as insusceptible of appropriation by any single state and as possessing, therefore, a purely international character. No state can exercise jurisdiction over the vessels of another state sailing the high seas, nor assume any exclusive right of fishing in certain waters not within the three-mile belt. See SEA.

The jurisdiction of a state over the persons residing within its domains gives rise to rules of international law when such persons happen to be citizens of another state. For many years it was held that a man could not, of his own accord, throw off his allegiance to one country and adopt the citizenship of another. While the United States courts recognized this principle, the Executive Department made constant efforts to obtain from European powers an acknowledgment of the right of Expatriation (q. v.), and in 1868 Congress passed an act in which the right was declared to be a "natural and inherent" one, but many foreign governments still exact military service of persons who, being born within their jurisdiction, have become the naturalized citizens of another state. See NATIONALITY; NATURALIZATION.

It has now become the general practice of nations to deliver up fugitive criminals which escape from one state and take refuge in another. This practice of extradition is still based upon treaties between individual nations defining the precise crimes for the commission of which a fugitive will be delivered up. See EXTRADITION; ASYLUM; FUGITIVE FROM JUSTICE.

The needs of international intercourse have given rise to a class of diplomatic agents (q. v.) whose position has now come to be definite in character. These agents are not only the channel of communication between the government which sends them and the government to which they are sent, but they are also the personal representatives of their government at the foreign court. See AMBASSADOR; MINISTER; CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES.

Treaties are the contracts entered into by states for the purpose of creating special relations between them. Good faith in the observance of these treaties has come to be a recognized principle of international law. When a difficulty arises as to their meaning, practically the same rules of interpretation are applied as those of municipal law in the case of contracts between individuals. See TREATY.

It is inevitable that disputes should arise between nations. International law recognizes three ways in which these disputes may be settled,—by amicable methods, by forcible methods falling short of war, and by war. When negotiations between the foreign offices of the two states have failed to settle a dispute it is not uncommon for the states to have recourse to arbitration. The practice of arbitration has come to be more and more general during the past one hundred years, and it is significant of the growth of international law, both in definiteness and in comprehension, that nations have been willing to submit questions of the highest importance to a decision based upon its principles. The Hague Tribunal (q. v.) represents a permanent court for the settlement, by arbitration, of disputes between nations. See INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION.

When friendly negotiations between states have failed to settle a dispute between two states, international law recognizes that a third state may offer its good offices and mediation. Special rules were laid down at The Hague Conference of 1907 defining the conditions of such mediation. See MEDIATION.

Apart from these amicable methods of settling international disputes, there are certain measures, such as retorsion (q. v.), reprisals (q. v.), embargo (q. v.), and pacific blockade (q. v.), by which one state endeavorors to exercise compulsion over another state without having recourse to actual war.

War is the status of armed conflict between two or more states. However improper a means of settling international disputes it may be from the standpoint of morality and justice, it is recognized by international law as a legal means of coercing an alleged offender. In the course of centuries certain rules have developed defining the rights of the belligerent parties and the limits within which armed forces may be employed, as well as the relations between belligerent powers and third parties not involved in the war.

At the First Hague Conference a Convention concerning the Laws and Customs of War on Land was adopted in which definite rules are laid down concerning the qualifications of belligerents, prisoners of war, the sick and wounded, the means of injuring the enemy, sieges and bombardments, spies, flags of truce, capitulations, armistices, military authority over the territory of the hostile state, and the internment of belligerents and the care of the wounded in neutral countries. A convention was also adopted providing for the adaptation of the principles of the Geneva Convention to maritime war. At the Second Hague Peace Conference, held in 1907, other conventions were adopted dealing with the commencement of hostilities, the status of enemy merchant-ships at the outbreak of hostilities, the conversion of merchant-ships into war-ships, the laying of automatic submarine contact mines, bombardment by naval forces in time of war, restrictions on the exercise of the right of capture in maritime war, and the establishment of an International Prize Court. Besides these conventions certain declarations were adopted prohibiting the discharge of projectiles, etc., from balloons, the use of asphyxiating gases, and the use of bullets with a hard envelope. See WAR.

In recognizing that the state of war confers certain rights and imposes certain restrictions upon the belligerent parties, international law at the same time recognizes the existence of new rules governing the relations between the belligerents and other states not parties to the conflict. The principle upon which these rules are based is that the successful prosecution of war makes it necessary for the belligerents to impose certain restrictions, such as the establishment of blockades (q. v.) and the prohibition of traffic in contraband (q. v.), upon the intercourse between neutral states and the enemy. These restrictions are imposed in virtue of the rights of belligerents as against neutrals. On the other hand, if third parties wish to remain neutral in a contest between two or more states, it is incumbent upon them to abstain absolutely from all participation in the conflict. This abstention imposes both active and passive duties. The passive duties are fulfilled if the nation refrains, in its corporate capacity, from giving either direct or indirect assistance to either belligerent. The active duties require the neutral state to prevent any use of its territory for the purposes of either belligerent, whether such use be made by the belligerents themselves or by citizens of the neutral state in the interest of the belligerents.

But there are limits to the extent to which belligerents may interfere with the intercourse of neutral states with the enemy. These limits mark what may be called the rights of neutrals. For a detailed statement of the rights and duties of belligerents and neutrals, see NEUTRALITY.

It has been suggested within recent years that certain rules of international law need to be modified when applied to the states of the American Continent. These modified rules may be said to constitute American International Law. On January 4, 1909, the First Pan American Scientific Congress held "that on this Continent there are problems sui generis or of a distinctly American character and that the states of this hemisphere, by means of agreements more or less general, have regulated matters which are of sole concern to them, or which, if of universal interest, have not yet been susceptible of universal agreement—thus incorporating in international law principles of American origin."

The codification of international law has been much discussed within recent years. The idea was first suggested by Bentham, whose fondness for ideal codes, not based upon the facts of international and national life, is well known. In 1863, at the request of President Lincoln, a code of the laws of war was drawn up by Francis Lieber for the use of the Federal armies, a large portion of which is embodied in the Convention concerning the Laws and Customs of War on Land, adopted by the Second Hague Conference. More elaborate and comprehensive codes are those of Bluntschli, published in 1868, of David Dudley Field, published in 1872, and of Pasquale Fiore, published in 1890. The conventions of the two Hague Conferences, together with the Declaration of London (q. v.), represent an attempt to codify international law upon certain specific heads. How far codification can be successfully carried has been much discussed. Certain parts of international law are still in an undeveloped state, and it might perhaps be unwise to define rules which may soon be outgrown. Besides, it is clear, from the obstinate position taken by the powers at the Hague Conferences, that they are not yet ready for an agreement which will be in conflict with principles which they have long considered essential to their welfare and prosperity. While it is generally recognized by nations that the principles of international law should, in point of justice and morality, come up to the standard of the municipal law of individual states, at the same time the conflicting commercial interests of the Great Powers, and the increasingly intense national spirit manifested by them, make it difficult for them to reach an agreement upon any subject in which national interests are intimately involved. For a critical bibliography of the principal writers on international law, see 1 Opp. 83-103; also Hershey, Essentials of Int. Pub. Law 86-91.

International law is said by Sir F. Pollock to be a true branch of law notwithstanding all that may be said about its want of sovereign power and a tribunal. Its doctrines are founded on legal, not simply on ethical, ideas. They are not merely prevalent opinions as to what is really right and proper, but something as closely analogous to civil laws as the nature of the case will admit. They have been discussed by the methods appropriate to jurisprudence and not by those of moral philosophy. They appeal not to the general feelings of moral rightness, but to precedents, to treaties and to the opinion of specialists. They assume the existence among statesmen and publicists of a sense of legal as distinguished from moral obligation in the affairs of nations. Oxford Lectures 18. See also Westlake, Intern. Law.

INTERNMENT. Used of foreign troops of a belligerent coming into neutral territory. Hague Treaty, 1907. See TROOPS, FOREIGN.

INTERNUNCIO. A Papal minister of the second order, accredited to minor states where there is no nuncio (q. v.).

INTERPELLATE. To address with a question, especially when formal and public; originally used with respect to proceedings in the French legislature; used in reference to questions by the court to counsel during an argument.

INTERPLEADER. A proceeding in the action of detainee, by which the defendant states the fact that the thing sued for is in his hands, and that it is claimed by a third person, and that whether such person or the plaintiff is entitled to it is unknown to the defendant, and thereupon the defendant prays that a process of garnishment may be issued to compel such third person so claiming to become defendant in his stead. 3 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, c. 23; Mitt. Eq. Pl. 141; Story, Eq. Jur. § 800. Interpleader is allowed to avoid inconvenience; for two parties claiming adversely to each other cannot be entitled to the same thing; Brooke, Abr. Interpleader 4; hence the rule which requires the defendant to allege that different parties demand the same thing.

If two persons sue the same person in detainee for the thing, and both actions are depending in the same court at the same time, the defendant may plead that fact, produce the thing (e. g. a deed or charter) in court, and aver his readiness to deliver it to either as the court shall adjudge, and thereupon pray that they may interplead. In such a case it has been settled that the plaintiff whose writ bears the earliest teste has the right to begin the interpleading, and the other will be compelled to answer; Brooke, Abr. Interpleader, 2.

Under the Pennsylvania practice, when goods levied upon by the sheriff are claimed by a third party, the sheriff takes a rule of interpleader on the parties, upon which, when made absolute, a feigned issue is framed, and the title to the goods is tested. The goods, pending the proceedings, remain in the custody of the defendant upon the execution of a forthcoming bond.

See 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 748, note; BILL OF INTERPLEADER.

INTERPOLATION. In Civil Law. The act by which, in consequence of an agreement, the party bound declares that he will not be bound beyond a certain time. Wolff, Inst. Nat. § 752.

In the case of a lease from year to year, or to continue as long as both parties please, a notice given by one of them to the other of a determination to put an end to the contract would bear the name of interpolation.

INTERPRETATION. The discovery and representation of the true meaning of any signs used to convey ideas. Lieber, Leg. and Pol. Hermeneutics.

The "true meaning" of any signs is that meaning which those who used them were desirous of expressing. A person adopting or sanctioning them "uses" them as well as their immediate author. Both parties to an agreement equally make use of the signs declaratory of that agreement, though one only is the originator, and the other may be entirely passive. The most common signs used to convey ideas are words. When there is a contradiction in signs intended to agree, resort must be had to construction,—that is, the drawing of conclusions from the given signs, respecting ideas which they do not express. Interpretation is the art of finding out what the author intended to convey; construction is resorted to in comparing two different writings or statutes. Construction is usually confounded with interpretation; but in common use, is generally employed in a sense that is properly covered by both when each is used in a sense strictly and technically correct; Cooley, Const. Lim. 70. Quoting this passage, it is said in U. S. v. Keitel, 211 U. S. 370, 29 Sup. Ct. 123, 53 L. Ed. 230, that while, abstractly, there may be a difference between the two words, yet in "common usage" they have "the same significance." A distinction between the two, first made in the Legal and Political Hermeneutics, has been adopted by Greenleaf and other American and European jurists. Hermeneutics includes both.

Close interpretation (interpretatio restricta) is adopted if just reasons, connected with the formation and character of the text, induce us to take the words in their narrowest meaning. This species of interpretation has generally been called literal, but the term is inadmissible. Lieber, Herm. 66.

Extensive interpretation (interpretatio extensiva, called, also, liberal interpretation) adopts a more comprehensive signification of the word.

Extravagant interpretation (interpretatio excedens) is that which substitutes a meaning evidently beyond the true one: it is, therefore, not genuine interpretation.

Free or unrestricted interpretation (interpretatio soluta) proceeds simply on the general principles of interpretation in good faith, not bound by any specific or superior principle.

Limited or restricted interpretation (interpretatio limitata) is when we are influenced by other principles than the strictly hermeneutic ones. Ernesti, Institutio Interpretis.

Predestined interpretation (interpretatio predestinata) takes place if the interpreter, laboring under a strong bias of mind, makes the text subservient to his preconceived views or desires. This includes artful interpretation (interpretatio vafer), by which the interpreter seeks to give a meaning to the text other than the one he knows to have been intended.

The civilians divide interpretation into:—

Authentic (interpretatio authentica), which proceeds from the author himself; i. e. of a law, by the legislature.

Usual (interpretatio usualis), when the interpretation is on the ground of usage.

Doctrinal (interpretatio doctrinalis), when made agreeably to rules of science. Doctrinal interpretation is subdivided into extensive, restrictive, and declaratory: extensive, whenever the reason of a proposition has a broader sense than its terms, and it is consequently applied to a case which had not been explained; restrictive, when the expressions have a greater latitude than the reasons; and declaratory, when the reasons and terms agree, but it is necessary to settle the meaning of some term or terms to make the sense complete. See Holland, Jurispr. 344.

There can be no sound interpretation without good faith and common sense. The object of all interpretation and construction is to ascertain the intention of the authors, even so far as to control the literal signification of the words; for verba ita sunt intelligenda ut res magis valeat quam pereat. Words are, therefore, to be taken as those who used them intended, which must be presumed to be in their popular and ordinary signification; unless there is some good reason for supposing otherwise, as where technical terms are used; Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 188, 6 L. Ed. 23; Green v. Weller, 32 Miss. 678; Settle v. Van Evrea, 49 N. Y. 281; Weill v. Kenfield, 54 Cal. 111; quoties in verbis nulla est ambiguitas, ibi nulla expositio contra verba fienda est. When words have two senses, of which one only is agreeable to the law, that one must prevail; Cowp. 714; Washington & I. R. Co. v. Nav. Co., 160 U. S. 77, 16 Sup. Ct. 231, 40 L. Ed. 346; when they are inconsistent with the evident intention, they will be rejected; 2 Atk. 32; when words are inadvertently omitted, and the meaning is obvious, they will be supplied by inference from the context, see Gran v. Spangenberg, 53 Minn. 42, 54 N. W. 933; a superfluous negative may be omitted when the meaning is apparent; Waters Pierce Oil Co. v. Deselms, 212 U. S. 159, 29 Sup. Ct. 270, 53 L. Ed. 453. When language is susceptible of two meanings, one of which would work a forfeiture, while the other would not, the latter must prevail; Jacobs v. Spalding, 71 Wis. 177, 36 N. W. 608.

In Constitutions. The object of construction is to give effect to the intent of the people in adopting it; this intent is to be found in the instrument itself; Miller, Const. U. S. 100; People v. Purdy, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 35. The whole is to be examined with a view to arriving at the true intention of each part; it is not to be supposed that any words have been employed without occasion, or without intent that they should have effect as part of the law; if different portions should seem to conflict, the courts should harmonize them, if practicable, and should lean in favor of a construction which will render every word operative, rather than one which may make some idle and nugatory; Wheeling Gas Co. v. City of Wheeling, 8 W. Va. 320; Ogden v. Strong, 2 Paine 584, Fed. Cas. No. 10,460. It must be presumed that words have been employed in their natural and ordinary meaning; Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 1, 188, 6 L. Ed. 23; as understood when the instrument was framed; Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. (U. S.) 393, 15 L. Ed. 691; technical words are presumed to have been employed in their technical sense. Where two provisions of a constitution are irreconcilably repugnant, that which is last in order of time and local position will prevail; Quick v. Whitewater Township, 7 Ind. 570.

It is to be borne in mind that in the construction of the federal and state constitutions a different and indeed an opposite rule is applied. The former, being the framework of a government of delegated powers, is subject to the general rule that a power to be lawfully exercised under an act of congress must be either expressly conferred or necessarily implied from some power granted. On the other hand, the state constitutions are not grants of power, but limitations on the residuum of absolute sovereign power which remains after subtracting that portion of it surrendered to the federal government. Accordingly, in construing a state constitution to ascertain whether a legislative act is valid, the only questions are whether that which it directs or authorizes is forbidden or whether it is included in the powers vested in the federal government.

The first resort is to the natural signification of the words in their order and grammatical arrangement; if they embody a definite meaning which involves no absurdity and no contradiction between different parts of the same instrument, there is no room for construction. This rule is said to apply to contracts, statutes and constitutions; Newell v. People, 7 N. Y. 9; Lake County v. Rollins, 130 U. S. 662, 9 Sup. Ct. 651, 32 L. Ed. 1060. See Manthey v. Vincent, 145 Mich. 327, 108 N. W. 667. If there is an ambiguity, the whole instrument is to be examined in order to determine the meaning of any part; State v. Hostetter, 137 Mo. 636, 39 S. W. 270, 38 L. R. A. 208, 59 Am. St. Rep. 515; People v. Metz, 193 N. Y. 148, 85 N. E. 1070, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 201.

When a constitution gives a general power or enjoins a duty, it also gives by implication every particular power necessary for the exercise of the one by the performance of the other; Field v. People, 2 Scam. (3 Ill.) 79, 83; Parks v. West, 102 Tex. 11, 111 S. W. 726.

The object for which a constitutional grant of power was given will have great influence in the construction; Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 1, 6 L. Ed. 23.

The safest rule is to look to the nature and objects of the particular powers, duties and rights, with all the lights and aids of contemporaneous history; and to give to each word just such force, consistent with its legitimate meaning, as will fairly secure and attain the ends proposed; Prigg v. Pennsylvania, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 539, 10 L. Ed. 1060; the subject or context and the intention of the framers in inserting a word in the federal constitution are all to be considered; McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 316, 4 L. Ed. 579; the mischief to be prevented, as disclosed in the history of the country, will be considered; Craig v. Missouri, 4 Pet. (U. S.) 410, 7 L. Ed. 903. Every word must have due force and appropriate meaning; Holmes v. Jennison, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 540, 614, 10 L. Ed. 579; but the same words have not necessarily the same meaning when found in different parts of the same instrument; their meaning is controlled by the context; Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 1, 8 L. Ed. 25.

As aids to construction, the courts may refer to historical circumstances attending the framing and adoption of the constitution and the consequences attendant upon one construction or the other; Pollock v. Trust Co. (income tax cases) 157 U. S. 429, 15 Sup. Ct. 673, 39 L. Ed. 759; they may look to the history of the times; id. Interpretation must be in the light of the common law; U. S. v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S. 649, 18 Sup. Ct. 456, 42 L. Ed. 890; a clause stricken from the draft may be referred to as an aid in the construction of the remaining clauses; Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cra. (U. S.) 87, 3 L. Ed. 162.

Provisions of the constitution of the United States are not mathematical formulas having their essence in their form, but are organic living institutions transplanted from English soil. Their significance is not to be gathered simply from the words and a dictionary, but by considering their origin and the line of their growth; Gompers v. U. S., 233 U. S. 604, 34 Sup. Ct. 693, 58 L. Ed. —.

An act passed just after a constitution is adopted is a contemporary interpretation of the latter, entitled to much weight; Cooper Mfg. Co. v. Ferguson, 113 U. S. 727, 5 Sup. Ct. 739, 28 L. Ed. 1137.

See CONSTITUTIONALITY.

In Statutes. Where a law is expressed in plain and unambiguous terms, whether those terms are general or limited, the legislature should be intended to mean what they have plainly expressed, and consequently no room is left for construction; Lake County v. Rollins, 130 U. S. 671, 9 Sup. Ct. 651, 32 L. Ed. 1060. Statutes should receive a sensible construction, such as will effectuate the legislative intention, and, if possible, so as to avoid an unjust or absurd conclusion; Lau Ow Bew v. U. S., 144 U. S. 47, 12 Sup. Ct. 517, 36 L. Ed. 340. They should be so construed, if practicable, that one section will not destroy another, but explain and support it; Bernier v. Bernier, 147 U. S. 242, 13 Sup. Ct. 244, 37 L. Ed. 152.

"Such a construction ought to be put upon a statute as will best answer the intention which the makers had in view, for qui hæret in litera, hæret in cortice. In Bacon's Abridgement, Statutes 1, 5; Puffendorf, Book 5, chapter 12; Rutherford, 422, 527; and in Smith's Commentaries, 814, many cases were mentioned where it was held that matters embraced in the general words of the statutes, nevertheless were not within the statutes, because it could not have been the intention of the lawmakers that they should be included. They were taken out of the statutes by an equitable construction. . . . In some cases the letter of a legislative act is restrained by an equitable construction; in others it is enlarged; in others the construction is contrary to the letter. The equitable construction which restrains the letter of a statute is defined by Aristotle, as frequently quoted in this manner: 'Æquitas est correctio legis generaliter lata quæ parti deficit.'" Riggs v. Palmer, 115 N. Y. 506, 510, 22 N. E. 188, 5 L. R. A. 340, 12 Am. St. Rep. 819, opinion by Earl, J.

"All laws should receive a sensible construction. General terms should be so limited in their application as not to lead to injustice, oppression or an absurd consequence. It will always, therefore, be presumed that the legislature intended exceptions to its language, which would avoid results of this character. The reason of the law in such cases should prevail over its letter. The common sense of man approves the judgment mentioned by Puffendorf, that the Bolognian law which enacted 'that whoever drew blood in the streets should be punished with the utmost severity,' did not extend to the surgeon who opened the vein of a person that fell down in the street in a fit. The same common sense accepts the ruling, cited by Plowden, that the statute of 1 Edward II, which enacts that a prisoner who breaks prison shall be guilty of felony, does not extend to a prisoner who breaks out when the prison is on fire—for he is not to be hanged because he would not stay to be burnt.'" U. S. v. Kirby, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 482, 19 L. Ed. 278, quoted in Church of Holy Trinity v. U. S., 143 U. S. 461, 12 Sup. Ct. 511, 36 L. Ed. 226.

The objects and purposes of a statute and the conditions of the enactment must be borne in mind so as to effectuate, rather than to destroy, the spirit of the intent. The purpose of the copyright statute is not so much to protect the thing as to protect the right of reproduction, and the statute should be construed in the character of the property to be protected; American Tobacco Co. v. Werckmeister, 207 U. S. 284, 28 Sup. Ct. 72, 52 L. Ed. 208, 12 Ann. Cas. 595.

"All laws should receive a sensible construction. General terms should be so limited in their application as not to lead to injustice, oppression or absurd consequence. It will always, therefore, be presumed that the legislature intended exceptions to its language which would avoid results of that character. The reason of the law in such cases should prevail over its letter;" Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U. S. 39, 25 Sup. Ct. 358, 49 L. Ed. 643, 3 Ann. Cas. 765, citing U. S. v. Kirby, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 482, 19 L. Ed. 278; Lau Ow Bew v. U. S., 144 U. S. 47, 12 Sup. Ct. 517, 36 L. Ed. 340.

"It is a dangerous assumption to suppose that the legislature foresees every possible result that may ensue from the unguarded use of a single word, or that the language used in statutes is so precisely accurate that you can pick out from various acts this and that expression and, skilfully piecing them together, lay a safe foundation for some remote inference. Your Lordships are aware that from early times courts of law have been continuously obliged, in endeavoring to carry out loyally the intentions of parliament, to observe a series of familiar precautions for interpreting statutes, so imperfect and obscure as they often are. Learned volumes have been written on this single subject." Lord Loreburn, L. C., in Nairn v. University of St. Andrews [1909] L. R. 147, A. C.

"No statute is completely intelligible as an isolated enactment. Every statute is a chapter, or a fragment of a chapter, of a body of law;" Ilbert, Legisl. Meth. & Forms 254.

Reference may be had to the title of an act; Church of Holy Trinity v. U. S., 143 U. S. 457, 12 Sup. Ct. 511, 36 L. Ed. 226.

In construing a tariff act, when it is claimed that the commercial use of a word differs from its ordinary significance, in order that the former may prevail over the latter it must appear that the commercial designation is the result of established usage which was definite, uniform, and general at the time of the passage of the act; Sonn v. Magone, 159 U. S. 418, 16 Sup. Ct. 67, 40 L. Ed. 203.

Statutes, if penal, are to be strictly, and if remedial, liberally construed; Bish. Writ. L. 193; Dwarris, Stat. 246; that penal statutes should be strictly construed, see U. S. v. R. Co., 222 U. S. 8, 32 Sup. Ct. 6, 56 L. Ed. 68; but the rule that penal statutes are to be strictly construed is not violated by allowing their words to have full meaning, or even the more extended of two meanings, where such construction best harmonizes with the context, and most fully promotes the policy and objects of the legislature; U. S. v. Hartwell, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 386, 18 L. Ed. 830. The apparent object of the legislature is to be sought for as disclosed by the act itself, the preamble in some cases, similar statutes relating to the same subject, the consideration of the mischiefs of the old law, and perhaps some other circumstances; Wilberforce, Stat. Law 99; and the court must be controlled by the power manifested by the act and not by the motive which initiated it; Berryman v. Board of Trustees, 222 U. S. 334, 32 Sup. Ct. 147, 56 L. Ed. 225; but the known policy of congress in regard to the subject will be considered; Richardson v. Harmon, 222 U. S. 96, 32 Sup. Ct. 27, 56 L. Ed. 110. Such statutes are to be reasonably construed with a view to effecting their purpose; U. S. v. R. Co., 212 U. S. 509, 29 Sup. Ct. 313, 53 L. Ed. 629.

All statutes are to be construed with reference to the provisions of the common law, and provisions in derogation of the common law are held strictly; Durham v. State, 117 Ind. 477, 19 N. E. 327; Brown v. Fifield, 4 Mich. 322; Powell v. Sims, 5 W. Va. 1, 13 Am. Rep. 629. But statutes in derogation of the common law are not to be construed so strictly as to defeat the obvious intention of congress; Johnson v. Southern Pacific Co., 196 U. S. 1, 25 Sup. Ct. 158, 49 L. Ed. 363. Statutes extending the jurisdiction of the court of claims will be strictly construed; Blackfeather v. U. S., 190 U. S. 368, 23 Sup. Ct. 772, 47 L. Ed. 1099.

Acts of incorporation and those granting franchises and special benefits to corporations are to be construed strictly; nothing passes by implication; Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 544, 9 L. Ed. 773; Bank of Pennsylvania v. Com., 19 Pa. 144; so of a municipal grant to an electric railway; Cleveland Electric Ry. Co. v. Ry. Co., 204 U. S. 116, 27 Sup. Ct. 202, 51 L. Ed. 399.

A provision of a statute copied from that of another state is construed upon the interpretation placed upon the statute by such other state; Norfolk & W. Ry. Co. v. Cheatwood's Adm'x, 103 Va. 356, 49 S. E. 489; James v. Appel, 192 U. S. 120, 24 Sup. Ct. 222, 48 L. Ed. 377; Mann v. Carter, 74 N. H. 345, 68 Atl. 130, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 150; but this does not necessarily include subsequent variations of construction by such courts; Cathcart v. Robinson, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 280, 8 L. Ed. 120; when lower federal courts and the highest court of a foreign country construe like acts, the failure of congress to remedy that part of the act may be regarded as an acquiescence by congress in such judicial construction; White-Smith Music Pub. Co. v. Apollo Co., 209 U. S. 1, 28 Sup. Ct. 319, 52 L. Ed. 655, 14 Ann. Cas. 628.

An amended act is to be construed as if it had read from the beginning as it does with the amendment added to it; Black, Interpr. 357. The old act, so far as re-enacted, stands from its original date and the new stands from the date of the amendment. All of the old which is omitted in the new is repealed; id. 358.

A re-enacted statute receives the same interpretation as the former act; Copper Queen Consol. Min. Co. v. Board of Equalization, 206 U. S. 474, 27 Sup. Ct. 695, 51 L. Ed. 1143. When congress in enacting revised statutes adopts language that has been construed by the courts, they adopt that construction; Sessions v. Romadka, 145 U. S. 29, 12 Sup. Ct. 799, 36 L. Ed. 609.

When two sections of the revised statutes taken together are not free from ambiguity and cannot be harmoniously applied, recourse must be had to legislation prior to the revised statutes from which those sections were drawn; Merchants' Nat. Bank of Baltimore v. U. S., 214 U. S. 33, 29 Sup. Ct. 593, 53 L. Ed. 899. In a general code a later section does not nullify an earlier one; Iglehart v. Iglehart, 204 U. S. 478, 27 Sup. Ct. 329, 51 L. Ed. 575; in the case of a codifying statute, the first step should be to interpret the language; and appeal to earlier decisions can only be made upon some special ground; [1891] L. R. 145, A. C. In the U. S. Revised Statutes, the change of arrangement from earlier statutes will not be regarded as changing their scope and purpose, unless an intent to change the prior law is clearly expressed; Anderson v. S. S. Co., 225 U. S. 187, 32 Sup. Ct. 626, 56 L. Ed. 1047.

Language in a statute which has a well known meaning, sanctioned by decisions, is presumed to be used in that sense; Kepner v. U. S., 195 U. S. 100, 124, 24 Sup. Ct. 797, 49 L. Ed. 114, 1 Ann. Cas. 655. The presence of a provision in one part of a statute and its absence in another is an argument against reading it as implied where omitted; U. S. v. R. Co., 220 U. S. 37, 31 Sup. Ct. 362, 55 L. Ed. 361.

To change the phraseology creates a presumption of a change in intent; Crawford v. Burke, 195 U. S. 176, 25 Sup. Ct. 9, 49 L. Ed. 147; words defined in a prior statute will be understood in the same sense in substitute statutes unless the contrary appears; Purtell v. Coal & Iron Co., 256 Ill. 110, 99 N. E. 899, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 193.

When several acts relate to the same subject matter, a subsequent act may be considered upon the interpretation of prior legislation; Tiger v. Inv. Co., 221 U. S. 286, 31 Sup. Ct. 578, 55 L. Ed. 738; Swigart v. Baker, 229 U. S. 187, 33 Sup. Ct. 645, 57 L. Ed. 1143.

Where one statute relates to a subject generally and another deals with it more specifically, if they cannot be harmonized, the specific statute should control; Stadler v. Helena, 46 Mont. 128, 127 Pac. 454; Gardner v. School Dist., 34 Okl. 716, 126 Pac. 1018; usually a general intent in an act controls a particular intent. Where there is an earlier special and a later general statute (which is broad enough to include the former), the general will not be taken to repeal the special, unless the repeal is express or there is a manifest inconsistency; Rodgers v. U. S., 185 U. S. 83, 22 Sup. Ct. 582, 46 L. Ed. 816. But there will be a repeal where a later statute is a complete revision of the subject to which a former statute applied; U. S. v. Ranellett, 172 U. S. 133, 19 Sup. Ct. 114, 43 L. Ed. 393.

The rule known as the ejusdem generis rule (see that title) does not overrule all other rules. When the particular words exhaust the genus, general words must refer to words outside of those particularized; U. S. v. Mescall, 215 U. S. 26, 30 Sup. Ct. 19, 54 L. Ed. 77, following National Bank of Commerce v. Ripley, 161 Mo. 126, 61 S. W. 587; Gillock v. People, 171 Ill. 307, 49 N. E. 712; Winters v. Duluth, 82 Minn. 127, 84 N. W. 788.

Contemporaneous construction by a department of government is a rule of interpretation, but not an absolute one; it does not preclude inquiry as to its original correctness; Houghton v. Payne, 194 U. S. 88, 24 Sup. Ct. 596, 48 L. Ed. 888; so of a tariff act; Komada & Co. v. U. S., 215 U. S. 392, 30 Sup. Ct. 136, 54 L. Ed. 249; courts will be guided by the construction adopted by officers appointed to enforce an act; Deming v. McClaughry, 113 Fed. 640, 51 C. C. A. 349; in case of doubt, the interpretation of the proper department has great weight; Allemania Fire Ins. Co. of Pittsburg v. Ins. Co., 209 U. S. 327, 28 Sup. Ct. 544, 52 L. Ed. 815, 14 Ann. Cas. 948; any continued executive construction will be adopted; Solomon v. Commissioners of Cartersville, 41 Ga. 157; Wright v. Forrestal, 65 Wis. 341, 27 N. W. 52; but it must be long continued; Mackall v. Casilear, 137 U. S. 562, 11 Sup. Ct. 178, 34 L. Ed. 776.

Debates in congress are not appropriate sources of information as to the meaning of a statute, but reports of legislative committees may be referred to in order to throw light on its intent; Binns v. U. S., 194 U. S. 486, 24 Sup. Ct. 816, 48 L. Ed. 1087, approving Briggs v. U. S., 143 U. S. 357, 12 Sup. Ct. 391, 36 L. Ed. 180; recourse cannot be had to discussions in Parliament which precede the passing of an act; [1906] 2 K. B. 716. Such resort was had in Edger v. Board of Com'rs, 70 Ind. 331; and in Blake v. Bank, 23 Wall. (U. S.) 307, 23 L. Ed. 119, a badly expressed and apparently contradictory revenue act was interpreted by reference to the journals of congress, where it appeared that the peculiar phraseology was the result of an amendment made without due reference to the language in the original bill. The statements of individual members cannot be referred to; 3 Q. B. D. 707; Leese v. Clark, 20 Cal. 387; County of Cumberland v. Boyd, 113 Pa. 52, 4 Atl. 346.

Such debates may show the conditions existing at the time the legislation was enacted; Standard Oil Co. v. U. S., 221 U. S. 1, 31 Sup. Ct. 502, 55 L. Ed. 619, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 834, Ahn. Cas. 1912D, 734. In case of ambiguity, resort may be had to the report of the senate committee where the provision originated, which can be a guide to a true interpretation; Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. v. Stranahan, 214 U. S. 320, 333, 29 Sup. Ct. 671, 53 L. Ed. 1013, following Buttfield v. Stranahan, 192 U. S. 470, 24 Sup. Ct. 349, 48 L. Ed. 525. Resort may be had to the history of the times when the act was passed, but cannot be had to the speeches of members when it was adopted; U. S. v. Freight Ass'n, 166 U. S. 290, 17 Sup. Ct. 540, 41 L. Ed. 1007. But it was held by Lord Bramwell, 8 App. Cas. 501, that the courts cannot look at the history of an act, but only at its language. It was, however, said by Halsbury, L. C., that "it is quite legitimate to refer to the history" of a period "to understand what was the subject matter with which the legislature was then dealing"; [1896] A. C. 504. A court may place itself in the position of the authors of the words to be interpreted at the time they were written; [1906] 2 K. B. 716.

The duty of the court in construing a statute which is reasonably susceptible of two constructions to adopt that which saves its constitutionality, includes the duty of avoiding a construction which raises grave and doubtful constitutional questions, if it can be avoided; U. S. v. Delaware & Hudson Co., 213 U. S. 366, 29 Sup. Ct. 527, 53 L. Ed. 836.

Prof. Roscoe Pound (1912 Tenn. Bar Ass'n) quotes Prof. John C. Gray as "putting the matter very well thus: 'A fundamental misconception prevails and pervades all the books as to the dealing of the courts with statutes. Interpretation is generally spoken of as if its chief function was to discover what the meaning of the legislature really was. But when the legislature has had a real intention, one way or another on a point, it is not once in a hundred times that any doubt arises as to what its intention was. If that were all that the judge had to do with the statute, interpretation of the statutes, instead of being one of the most difficult of a judge's duties would be extremely easy. The fact is that the difficulties of so-called interpretation arise when the legislature has had no meaning at all; when the question which is raised on the statute never occurred to it; when what the judges have to do is, not to determine what the legislature did mean on a point which was present to its mind, but to guess what it would have intended on a point not present to its mind had the point been present.'"

The change of conditions as well as of the meaning of words in their ordinary use frequently creates difficulties in the application of statutes which in England led to the passage in 1889 of the General Interpretation Act, intended to cover the whole subject of statutory interpretation. A synopsis of its provisions, together with an instructive collation of words having a marked difference in their ordinary and judicial meaning, will be found in Ordronaux, Const. Leg. c. xi. In this country the subject has not been so comprehensively treated, but there will usually be found in the general statutes of each state a chapter defining the meaning of certain words as used in the statutes.

As to acts declaring the meaning of a prior act, see STATUTE.

In Contracts. There must always be reference to the surrounding circumstances and the object the parties intended to accomplish; New York, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. R. Co., 116 Ind. 60, 18 N. E. 182; Illges v. Dexter, 77 Ga. 36; Words may be understood in a technical or peculiar sense when such meaning has been stamped upon them by the usage of the trade or place in which the contract occurs. When words are manifestly inconsistent with the declared purpose and object of the contract, they may be rejected; 2 Atk. 32. When words are omitted so as to defeat the effect of the contract, they will be supplied by the obvious sense and inference from the context. When words admit of two senses, that which gives effect to the design of the parties is preferred to that which destroys it; Add. Contr. 45; Cowp. 714.

Impossible things cannot be required. The subject-matter and nature of the context, or its objects, causes, effects, consequences, or precedents, or the situation of the parties, must often be consulted in order to arrive at their intention, as when words have, when literally construed, either no meaning at all or a very absurd one. The whole of an instrument must be viewed together and not each part taken separately; and effect must be given to every part, if possible; Lindley v. Groff, 37 Minn. 338, 34 N. W. 26. Assistance must be sought from the more near before proceeding to the remote. When one part is totally repugnant to the rest, it will be stricken out; but if it is only explanatory, it will operate as a limitation. As to the interpretation of a deed where the granting and habendum clauses are repugnant, see 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) note, 956. Reference to the lex loci or the usage of a particular place or trade is frequently necessary in order to explain the meaning; 2 B. & P. 164; 3 Stark. Ev. 1036; Gracy v. Bailee, 16 S. & R. (Pa.) 126. A court should read a written contract according to the obvious intention of the parties, in spite of clerical errors or omissions which can be corrected by perusing the whole instrument; Monmouth Park Ass'n v. Wallis Iron Works, 55 N. J. L. 132, 26 Atl. 140, 19 L. R. A. 456, 39 Am. St. Rep. 626; Chrisman v. Ins. Co., 16 Or. 283, 18 Pac. 466.

Words, however general, may be limited to the subject-matter in connection with which they are used; general words may be restricted to the same general genus as the words which preceded them; and where for many years words have received a judicial construction, it is reasonable to suppose that the parties so used them, and the courts would resort to such sense in reaching the meaning of the parties; 12 App. Cas. 484.

The enumeration of certain powers in respect to particular subjects in a written instrument is a negation of all other analogous powers with respect to the same subject-matter; Tucker v. Alexandroff, 183 U. S. 437, 22 Sup. Ct. 195, 46 L. Ed. 264.

When the language of the contract is ambiguous, the interpretation of it by the parties is entitled to great, if not controlling, influence; Topliff v. Topliff, 122 U. S. 121, 7 Sup. Ct. 1057, 30 L. Ed. 1110; Old Colony Trust Co. v. Omaha, 230 U. S. 100, 33 Sup. Ct. 967, 57 L. Ed. 1410 (a municipality); as shown by subsequent acts; New York v. Board of Tax Com'rs, 199 U. S. 1, 25 Sup. Ct. 705, 50 L. Ed. 65, 4 Ann. Cas. 381; before any controversy has arisen; Fitzgerald v. Bank, 114 Fed. 474, 52 C. C. A. 276; even if at variance with the literal meaning of the contract; District of Columbia v. Gallaher, 124 U. S. 505, 8 Sup. Ct. 585, 31 L. Ed. 526. Such construction is of more importance than the absolute meaning of the phraseology; Smith v. Crane, 169 Mo. App. 695, 154 S. W. 857; and will be accepted as the proper one; McMillin v. Titus, 222 Pa. 500, 72 Atl. 240; but it is said that this rule does not apply if the contract is free from ambiguity; Sternbergh v. Brock, 225 Pa. 279, 74 Atl. 166, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1078, 133 Am. St. Rep. 877; In re Myers' Estate, 238 Pa. 195, 86 Atl. 89; Russell v. Young, 94 Fed. 45, 36 C. C. A. 71; in such case it cannot be affected by voluntary payments by one party to the other, through mistake, clearly not required by its terms and not demanded by the other party; Sharp v. Behr, 117 Fed. 864.

In Central R. R. Co. v. Jersey City, 209 U. S. 480, 28 Sup. Ct. 592, 52 L. Ed. 896, the interpretation placed by the court upon even a compact between two states, was said to have "the very powerful sanction of the conduct of the parties and of the existing condition of things."

Where a seller agreed to deliver a large quantity of cement "in car load lots f. o. b.," and it had uniformly provided the cars, it was held that this was a practical construction of the contract imposing that duty on the seller; Davis v. Cement Co., 134 Fed. 274 affirmed 142 Fed. 74, 73 C. C. A. 388.

In case of doubt, a party will be held to that meaning which he knew the other party believed the words to bear, if this can be done without making a new contract; Brent v. Chas. H. Lilly Co., 174 Fed. 877.

Words spoken cannot vary the terms of a written agreement; they may overthrow it. Words spoken at the time of the making of a written agreement are merged in the writing; 5 Co. 26; 2 B. & C. 634; parties cannot testify as to their intention or the meaning of a written contract; Gardt v. Brown, 113 Ill. 475, 55 Am. Rep. 434.

No representation, promise or agreement made, or opinion expressed in previous parol negotiations as to the terms or legal effect of the resulting written agreement can be permitted to prevail over the just interpretation of the contract, in the absence of some artifice which concealed its terms and prevented the complainant from reading it; New York Life Ins. Co. v. McMaster, 87 Fed. 63, 30 C. C. A. 532, per Sanborn, C. J. But where a writing is ambiguous or there are repugnant clauses, it is proper to consider all the negotiations leading to the contract, the subject-matter, the purpose to be effected, the consideration passing between the parties and all the surrounding circumstances when the contract was made; McMillin v. Titus, 222 Pa. 500, 72 Atl. 240; and prior negotiations, though merged in the contract, may be resorted to to determine whether the parties intended stipulations for delay as a penalty or liquidated damages; U. S. v. Bethlehem Steel Co., 205 U. S. 105, 27 Sup. Ct. 450, 51 L. Ed. 731.

Where there is a latent ambiguity which arises only in the application and does not appear upon the face of the instrument, it may be supplied by other proof; ambiguitas verborum latens verificatione suppletur; McDermott v. Ins. Co., 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 609.

Usages of the trade or place of making the contract are presumed to be incorporated, unless a contrary stipulation occurs. See LEX LOCI.

The rule that an agreement is to be construed most strongly against the party benefited can only be applied in doubtful cases; Hannibal & St. Joseph R. Co. v. Packet Co., 125 U. S. 260, 8 Sup. Ct. 874, 31 L. Ed. 731; and when other rules of interpretation fail; Patterson v. Gage, 11 Colo. 50, 16 Pac. 560. The more the text partakes of a solemn compact, the stricter should be its construction.

Jessel, M. R., in 6 Ch. D. 270, said: "The meaning of a contract must be ascertained according to the ordinary and proper rules of construction. If we can thus find out its meaning we do not want the maxim [that construction is more strongly against the one who used the words]. If we cannot find out its meaning, then the instrument is void and in that case it may be said to be construed in favor of the grantor, for the grant is annulled." If the intent of a contract cannot be ascertained, it will be held void for uncertainty; Gould v. Gunn (Ia.) 140 N. W. 380.

General expressions used in a contract are controlled by the special provisions therein. When there are two repugnant clauses in a deed, which cannot stand together, the first prevails. With a will the reverse is the case. In all instruments the written part controls the printed, if the two are inconsistent; Hutt v. Zimmer, 78 Hun 23, 28 N. Y. Supp. 1014; Schenck v. Saunders, 13 Gray (Mass.) 37; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Graddy, 25 Neb. 849, 41 N. W. 809; Mansfield Machine Works v. Common Council of Lowell, 62 Mich. 546, 29 N. W. 105; Thornton v. R. Co., 84 Ala. 109, 4 South. 197, 5 Am. St. Rep. 337; Thomas v. Taggart, 209 U. S. 385, 28 Sup. Ct. 519, 52 L. Ed. 845; Georgia Home Ins. Co. v. Jacobs, 56 Tex. 366; a special manuscript addition to a general printed form must govern if there is a repugnancy between them; Moore v. Lichtenberger, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 268; when a contract is embodied in several instruments, its true meaning is to be ascertained from a consideration of all the instruments and their effect upon each other; Howard v. R. Co., 24 Fla. 560, 5 South. 356; Smith v. Theobald, 86 Ky. 141, 5 S. W. 394; Phelps & Bigelow Windmill Co. v. Piercy, 41 Kan. 763, 21 Pac. 793.

If part of a contract is good, and part, being in restraint of trade, is bad, the former may stand; U. S. Consol. Seeded Raisin Co. v. Griffin & Skelley Co., 126 Fed. 364, 61 C. C. A. 334. Different contracts made between the same parties on the same date as to the same matter were construed together in Stadler v. Power Co., 139 Fed. 305, 71 C. C. A. 435.

Dictionaries are not to be taken as authoritative exponents of the meaning of words in an act, but words should be taken in their ordinary sense, and we are therefore sent for instruction to these books (Johnson and Webster); 16 Q. B. D. 641.

A sealed contract to pay a debt whenever, in the debtor's opinion, his circumstances would enable him to do so, is not enforceable; Nelson v. Von Bonnhorst, 29 Pa. 352; but a contract to pay when able is generally held to impose an obligation; Denney v. Wheelwright, 60 Miss. 733; some cases consider it a contract to pay within a reasonable time; Nunez v. Dautel, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 562, 22 L. Ed. 161; Noland v. Bull, 24 Or. 479, 33 Pac. 983; De Wolfe v. French, 51 Me. 420; or to pay at once; Kincaid v. Higgins, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 396. When the debtor has once become able to pay, the right of action vests, though later he becomes unable to pay; Denney v. Wheelwright, 60 Miss. 733.

Where no period is fixed, either party may ordinarily withdraw on reasonable notice; Kenderdine Hydro Carbon Fuel Co. v. Plumb, 182 Pa. 463, 38 Atl. 480; so in contracts of hiring or partnership; L. R. 7 H. L. 550. But a contract between a telegraph company and a railroad company for a railroad telegraph line and service along its right of way was held perpetual in its obligation; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Pennsylvania Co., 129 Fed. 849, 64 C. C. A. 285, 68 L. R. A. 968, following L. R. 7 H. L. 550; Franklin Telegraph Co. v. Harrison, 145 U. S. 459, 12 Sup. Ct. 900, 36 L. Ed. 776, which was a contract between a manufacturing company and a telegraph company for a private wire to New York. These cases went upon the ground that the inherent nature of the contract showed that it must have continuing effect, unless, by its terms one or either party could terminate it.

In addition to the above rules, there are many presumptions of law relating to agreements, such as, that the parties to a simple contract intend to bind their personal representatives; that where several parties contract without words of severalty, they are presumed to bind themselves jointly; that every grant carries with it whatever is necessary to its enjoyment; when no time is mentioned, a reasonable time is meant; and other presumptions arising out of the nature of the case.

It is the duty of the court to interpret all written instruments; see Middlesex Turnpike Corporation v. Swan, 10 Mass. 384, 6 Am. Dec. 139; Lery v. Gadsby, 3 Cra. (U. S.) 180, 2 L. Ed. 404; Hassett v. McArdle, 7 Misc. 710, 28 N. Y. Supp. 48; Fidelity Title & Trust Co. v. Gas Co., 150 Pa. 8, 24 Atl. 339; written evidence; McCoy v. Lightner, 2 Watts (Pa.) 347; and foreign laws; Duffie v. Black, 1 Pa. 388; and where the terms of a parol agreement are shown without any conflict of evidence; Brannock v. Elmore, 114 Mo. 55, 21 S. W. 451; Elliott v. Wanamaker, 155 Pa. 67, 25 Atl. 826; or where a contract is contained in letters, no matter how voluminous they may be; Cincinnati Punch & Shear Co. v. Thompson, 80 Kan. 467, 102 Pac. 848.

Whether a written contract, to be performed in case a consolidation was effected between two corporations, is limited to one resulting from then pending negotiations, or whether it referred to a consolidation under a renewal of negotiations a year later, extrinsic evidence of the circumstances and the acts and declarations of the parties is admissible, and where that is conflicting, the construction of the contract is for the jury; Donner v. Alford, 136 Fed. 750, 69 C. C. A. 402.

Contracts are to be construed liberally in favor of the public, when the subject-matter concerns the interests of the public; Joy v. St. Louis, 138 U. S. 1, 11 Sup. Ct. 243, 34 L. Ed. 843.

See CONSTRUCTION; IN MITIORI SENSU; RECITAL; TITLE; NONSENSE; ET CÆTERA; FROM; PREAMBLE; Beal, Cardinal Rules of Interpretation; Black, Interpretation.

INTERPRETATION CLAUSE. A clause frequently inserted in Acts of Parliament, declaring the sense in which certain words used therein are to be understood.

INTERPRETER. One employed to make a translation.

An interpreter should be sworn before he translates the testimony of a witness; In re Norberg, 4 Mass. 81.

A person employed between an attorney and a client to act as interpreter is considered merely as the organ between them, and is not bound to testify as to what he has acquired in those confidential communications; Andrews v. Solomon, Pet. C. C. 356, Fed. Cas. No. 378; Jackson v. French, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 337, 20 Am. Dec. 699.

Communications made to an interpreter are not hearsay when he translates and communicates what has been said to him, and the party to whom it is made may testify to it; Miller v. Lathrop, 50 Minn. 91, 52

N. W. 274. Conversations carried on through an interpreter may be shown by either party thereto or a third person who hears it, its weight only and not its competency being affected thereby; Com. v. Vose, 157 Mass. 393, 32 N. E. 355, 17 L. R. A. 813.

INTERREGNUM (Lat.). The period, in case of an established government, which elapses between the death of a sovereign and the accession of another. The vacancy which occurs when there is no government. See CORONATION.

INTERROGATOIRE. In French Law.

An act, or instrument, which contains the interrogatories made by the judge to the person accused, on the facts which are the object of the accusation, and the answers of the accused. Pothier, Proc. Crim. s. 4, art. 2, § 1.

INTERROGATORIES. Material and pertinent questions in writing, to necessary points, exhibited for the examination of witnesses or persons who are to give testimony in the cause.

They are either original and direct on the part of him who produces the witnesses, or cross and counter, on behalf of the adverse party, to examine witnesses produced on the other side. Either party, plaintiff or defendant, may exhibit original or cross interrogatories.

The form which interrogatories assume is as various as the minds of the persons who propound them. They should be as distinct as possible, and capable of a definite answer; and they should leave no loop-holes for evasion to an unwilling witness. Care must be observed to put no leading questions in original interrogatories, for these always lead to inconvenience; and for scandal or impertinence interrogatories will, under certain circumstances, be suppressed. See Willis, Int. passim; Gresl. Eq. Ev. pt. 1, c. 3, s. 1; Viner, Abr.; Daniell, Ch. Pr.

INTERRUPTION. The effect of some act or circumstance which stops the course of a prescription or act of limitations. 3 Bligh, N. S. 444; 4 M. & W. 497.

Civil interruption is that which takes place by some judicial act.

Natural interruption is an interruption in fact. Tyler v. Wilkinson, 4 Mas. 404, Fed. Cas. No. 14,312; 2 Y. & J. 285. See EASEMENTS; LIMITATIONS; PRESCRIPTION.

INTERSECTION. The point of intersection of two roads is the point where their middle lines intersect. Pittsburg v. Cluley, 74 Pa. 259.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE. See COMMERCE.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION. A commission of five persons appointed by the president under the act of February 4, 1887, to carry out the purpose of the act. It sits usually in Washington, but can hold sittings at such other places as it may choose. By act of June 29, 1906, it was increased to seven members with terms of seven years. "It is not a court; it is a special tribunal continually engaged in an administrative and semi-judicial capacity in investigating railroad rates and practices"; Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. v. S. P. Co., 6 I. C. C. Rep. 508. Except the rulings of the Supreme Court and the directions of the district court in the particular case, it does not feel itself bound to follow all the decisions of the federal courts; 1 Drinker, Interst. Com. Act, § 262.

The functions of the Commission are to hear complaints as to violations of the Interstate Commerce Act and also to investigate of its own motion any violations which may come to its notice. It may not of itself institute criminal proceedings, but may and frequently does recommend such to the attorney general's department.

Since 1906, it has power not merely to find that a violation of the act has been caused, and to award damages to the injured party, but to prescribe a reasonable rate or regulation for that found to be improper. It may also prescribe joint through routes between connecting carriers, with through rates applicable thereto.

In actions before the Commission to recover damages for violations of the act, the statute of limitations is two years from the accrual of the cause of action. This period begins to run when the freight was payable and not when it was actually paid; Arkansas Fertilizer Co. v. U. S., 193 Fed. 667.

A letter to the Commission, setting out the facts and praying relief, is, however, sufficient to toll the running of the statute; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Dickerson, 191 Fed. 705, 112 C. C. A. 295.

The Commission has exclusive jurisdiction to question the reasonableness or legality of a tariff rate or regulation, filed in the manner prescribed by section 6 of the act. Until the Commission has declared such a rate illegal, no court, state or federal, has power to dispute its validity. Nor can the parties themselves contract for a different rate.

Practice before the Commission is informal compared with that in the courts. The Commission has no power to enforce its own orders, but the provision in the act by which the disobedience of a lawful order of the Commission subjects the offender to a fine of $5,000 for each day's continuance, makes such orders effective. This provision does not apply to orders for the payment of damages, as to which, under its constitutional right, the carrier may insist on a jury trial in the district court.

The usual method of contesting the validity of its orders is by application for an injunction to the proper district court, with appeal to the Supreme Court in the manner provided by the act.

The Constitution of the United States, Art. I, Sec. 8, gives to Congress the power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several states and with the Indian tribes." The Interstate Commerce Act was passed on February 4, and took effect on April 5, 1887. It was amended March 2, 1889, February 10, 1891, and February 8, 1893; supplementary acts were passed February 11, 1893, March 2, 1893, Feb. 19, 1903, June 29, 1906, April 13, 1908, June 18, 1910, and October 22, 1913.

It applies to all carriers engaged in the transportation of oil or other commodity, except water and natural or artificial gas, by means of pipe lines, or partly by pipe lines and partly by railroad, or partly by pipe lines and partly by water, and to telegraph, telephone and cable companies (whether wire or wireless) engaged in sending messages from one state, territory, or district of the United States to any other state, territory, or district, or to any foreign country, and to any carrier engaged in the transportation of passengers and property wholly by railroad (or partly by railroad and partly by water when both are used under a common control, management, or arrangement for a continuous carriage or shipment), from one state or territory or the District of Columbia, or from one place in a territory to another place in the same territory, or from any place in the United States to an adjacent foreign country or from any place in the United States through a foreign country to any other place in the United States, and also to the transportation in like manner of property shipped from any place in the United States to a foreign country and carried from such place to a port of transshipment, or shipped from a foreign country to any place in the United States and carried to such place from a port of entry either in the United States or an adjacent foreign country.

It does not apply to the transportation of persons or property, etc., wholly within a state and not to or from a foreign country. It also extends to bridges and ferries used in connection with any railroad and to express and sleeping car companies. It declares that all charges for services rendered in connection therewith shall be reasonable and just and prohibits all unjust and unreasonable charges.

The charging of any greater or less compensation for any service rendered any shipper or person than is charged or collected from another for a like and contemporaneous service, etc., is declared to be unlawful.

The act provides that if any carrier shall fail to install and operate switch connections, and furnish cars to the best of its ability, without discrimination, the Commission may, on complaint filed, make an order directing the carrier to comply with the act.

Free passes and transportation prohibited except in certain specified cases.

It forbids the giving any undue or unreasonable preference to one person, etc., or locality over another person or place, or to one description of traffic over another, and prohibits the carrier from subjecting any shipper, locality, or traffic to any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage. It imposes a duty to afford reasonable, proper, and equal facilities to connecting carriers, for the interchange of business, without discrimination.

It prohibits charging any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of persons or of like kind of property for a shorter than is charged for a longer distance over the same line in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance, except by authority of the Commission.

It prohibits railroad companies transporting any article or commodity other than timber, which it may own, in whole or in part, or in which it has any interest, except such commodities as may be necessary and intended for its own use in its business as a common carrier.

It prohibits any agreement between carriers for the pooling of freights of competing railroads or for dividing their joint earnings.

It provides that the carriers shall print schedules of their rates, duly classified, and file copies with the Commission and post copies in all their stations and offices for public inspection. These must specify terminal charges and any rules affecting the rates. These rates can only be advanced thirty days after public notice and an amendment of the schedules accordingly; nor can they be reduced except after three days' similar notice and the like amendment. Copies of all agreements between two or more carriers for making a line of through transportation are also required to be filed with the Commission. If joint tariffs of rates are provided for, copies of these tariffs must be filed with the Commission. Such publicity is to be given to these joint tariffs as the Commission may direct. This section contains the same requirement as to thirty days' notice of any advance and three days' notice of any reduction in the joint rates, as is prescribed respecting the rates of the individual carrier.

It is the duty of carrier to furnish written statement of rate on request and to keep posted name of agent to whom application for rate may be made.

It prohibits any scheme between carriers to prevent the continuous transportation of property without change of cars. No breaking of bulk, etc., unless necessary, shall be considered as breaking the continuous passage.

It provides that any carrier committing a breach of this act shall be liable in damages to the person injured, including a counsel fee to be taxed as costs.

Any person aggrieved may complain before the Commission or bring suit in a federal court having jurisdiction, for damages. In the latter cases the court may compel all officers, etc., to appear and testify and to produce the books of the company; but no evidence which they may give shall be used against them in any criminal proceeding.

Any carrier, or, if a corporation, any officer, etc., thereof, guilty of an infraction of the act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and subject to a fine of not to exceed $5,000, or if the offence is an unlawful discrimination in rates, to imprisonment for not to exceed two years, or both in the discretion of the court. False billing, classification etc., of goods is made a misdemeanor, whether by the carrier or its officer, or by the shipper, and so is the act of inducing a common carrier to discriminate unjustly.

It creates the Commission, who have authority, by sec. 12 to inquire into the management of the business of common carriers and to enforce the act; they may institute proceedings for that purpose and for the punishment of violations of the act; they may require the production of all necessary books, contracts, etc.

The Commission has power to establish through routes and joint rates, shipper to have right to designate route; it is unlawful for carriers to disclose information as to shipments. The Commission is empowered to determine maximum allowances to shippers for transportation services and to determine if any party is entitled to an award of damages.

Any person, corporation, association, or any mercantile, agricultural, or manufacturing society, or any body politic or municipal organization or State Railroad Commission may complain before the Commission of any infraction of the act, and the Commission itself may institute any inquiry on its own motion.

If the Commission find that the act has been contravened, it shall notify the carrier thereof.

If any carrier refuses to obey an order of the Commission, the latter or any party interested may apply to the federal court where such carrier has its principal office. Such court shall hear the case speedily, without formal pleadings; the findings of fact of the Commission shall be prima facie evidence of the matter therein stated. If it appear that any lawful order of the Commission has been disobeyed, the court shall enjoin further disobedience thereof. If the matter in dispute is $2,000 or more, either party may appeal to the Supreme Court.

Common carriers are required to make annual reports to the Commission, and the latter may prescribe a uniform system of keeping accounts.

The act expressly excepts the carriage of property free, or at reduced rates, for the United States, state, or municipal governments, or for charitable purposes, or to and from expositions, etc., or the free carriage of destitute persons transported by charitable societies; or the issuance of mileage, excursion, or commutation passenger tickets; or giving reduced rates to ministers of religion; or to certain indigent persons; or the exchange of passes between the officers of railroad companies for their officers and employes.

The initial carrier is liable for damage to the holder of a bill of lading in spite of a contract to the contrary, but the initial carrier has recourse to the carrier responsible.

The provisions of the act are declared to be in addition to all remedies by common law or by statute.

By the act of March 2, 1889, the United States courts are given jurisdiction to issue writs of peremptory mandamus commanding the movement of interstate traffic or the furnishing of cars and other transportation facilities.

Under the Hepburn Act (1906) the Commission may require the carrier to furnish cars and shipping facilities; it may determine, on hearing, what are reasonable rates and enforce them (but not order an increase); it may fix through routes and rates and compel connecting lines to enter into through traffic agreements; but only where the public interest appears to require it.

The primary purpose of the act is to regulate the interstate business of carriers, and the secondary purpose (for which the Commission was established) was to enforce the regulations of the act. This power is not extended by any amendatory acts to mere investigations in regard to annual reports of carriers or of the Commission, or for the purpose of recommending legislation. Quære, whether Congress has power to compel testimony in regard to subjects which do not concern direct breaches of law, and whether it can delegate such power; Harriman v. Commission, 211 U. S. 407, 29 Sup. Ct. 115, 53 L. Ed. 253.

The Commission has no powers except those conferred by Congress; it cannot allow special privileges or relieve hardships, nor prevent anticipated violations of the act, except as therein provided. It will not assume an advisory jurisdiction. It cannot compel a carrier to stop reckless expenditure, nor award damages for defective service, nor require a carrier to adopt a particular form of ticket or bill of lading; 1 Drinker, Interst. Com. Act.

The Act of 1910 created the Commerce Court with jurisdiction to enjoin, set aside or suspend in whole or in part any order of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The proceedings of this court may be reviewed by the Supreme Court.

By Act of Oct. 22, 1913, the commerce court was abolished (from and after Dec. 31, 1913) and its jurisdiction was transferred to the district court. Cases must be heard by three judges (one at least to be a circuit judge) and at least two judges must concur. An appeal lies direct to the Supreme Court from any order granting or denying an interlocutory injunction. Such appeal must be taken in thirty days. An appeal from a final order must be taken in sixty days.

The Elkins Act of Feb. 19, 1903, provides that a carrier corporation is liable to conviction as well as its officers, agents, etc., for willful failure to file and observe tariffs. Discriminations and concessions from tariff charges are forbidden. Rates filed, published or participated in are conclusively deemed the legal rates, as against the carrier. For the acceptance of a rebate the person or firm so accepting shall, in addition to any penalty, forfeit to the United States, three times the amount of money so received and three times the value of any other consideration accepted. The Interstate Commerce Commission will enjoin discrimination and departure from tariff rates through a federal court sitting in equity having jurisdiction and the district attorney must prosecute such proceedings.

The Expedition Act of Feb. 11, 1903, provides for the expediting of causes arising under the Commerce Act, when the cause is of general public importance, by giving it precedence over others.

The Commission is made a body corporate, with legal capacity to be a party plaintiff or defendant in the federal courts, by reason of the provision in the act that it "shall have an official seal, which shall be judicially noticed," and that making it lawful for it to apply by petition for the enforcement of its orders; Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 162 U. S. 197, 16 Sup. Ct. 666, 40 L. Ed. 940.

The Commission has exclusive original jurisdiction to determine whether a regulation or a practice affecting rates or matters sought to be regulated by the act is unjust or unreasonable, unjustly discriminatory, preferential or prejudicial, and this although the regulation or practice complained of has ceased; Mitchell C. & C. Co. v. R. Co., 230 U. S. 247, 33 Sup. Ct. 916, 57 L. Ed. 1472.

The object of the Commerce Act is to compel the establishment of reasonable rates and their universal application. A guarantee to a shipper of a particular train is a discrimination, if not open to all; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Kirby, 225 U. S. 155, 32 Sup. Ct. 648, 56 L. Ed. 1033, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 501.

The orders of the Commission are final unless (1) beyond the power which it could constitutionally exercise; or (2) beyond its statutory power; or (3) based upon a mistake of law. But questions of fact may be involved in the determination of questions of law, so that an order regular on its face may be set aside if it appears that (4) the rate is so low as to be confiscatory and in violation of the constitutional prohibition against the taking property without due process of law; or (5) if the Commission acted so arbitrarily and unjustly as to fix rates contrary to evidence or without evidence to support it; or (6) if the authority therein involved has been exercised in such an unreasonable manner as to cause it to be within the elementary rule that the substance and not the shadow determines the validity of the exercise of the power; Int. Com. Com. v. R. Co., 222 U. S. 541, 32 Sup. Ct. 108, 56 L. Ed. 308, citing Int. Com. Com. v. R. Co., 215 U. S. 452, 30 Sup. Ct. 155, 54 L. Ed. 280; Southern Pac. Co. v. Commission, 219 U. S. 433, 31 Sup. Ct. 288, 55 L. Ed. 283; Int. Com.

Subject to the two leading prohibitions that their charges shall not be unreasonable or unjust, and that they shall not unjustly discriminate, so as to give undue preference to persons or traffic similarly circumstanced, the act leaves common carriers as they were at common law, free to make special contracts, to classify their traffic, to adjust and apportion their rates, and generally, to manage their important interests upon the same principles which are regarded as sound in other pursuits; Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 162 U. S. 184, 16 Sup. Ct. 700, 40 L. Ed. 935; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Grain Co., 222 U. S. 215, 32 Sup. Ct. 39, 56 L. Ed. 171. The act was not designed to prevent competition between different roads, or to interfere with the customary arrangements made by railway companies for reduced fares in consideration of increased mileage, where such reduction does not operate as an unjust discrimination. It is not all discriminations that are prohibited, but only those that are unjust and unreasonable; Interstate Commerce Commission v. R. Co., 145 U. S. 263, 12 Sup. Ct. 844, 36 L. Ed. 699, affirming 43 Fed. 37. The act is not to be construed so as to abridge or take away the common-law right of the carrier to make contracts and adopt proper business methods, further than its terms and recognized purposes require; a railroad company may lawfully charge low rates on coal in the summer months, if its rates are equal to all persons; Interstate Commerce Commission v. R. Co., 5 I. C. Rep. 656 (C. C., M. D. of Tenn.).

Interpretation. The act was intended to be an effective means for redressing wrongs resulting from unjust discrimination and undue preference, and this must be so whether persons or places suffer; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Ry. Co., 218 U. S. 88, 30 Sup. Ct. 651, 54 L. Ed. 959. The words "railway" and "railroad" are completely synonymous; West End Improvement Club v. Ry. & Bridge Co., 17 I. C. C. 239, 244. Section 15 is the dominating and controlling expression of the real object and meaning of the act. It makes of the Commission a special expert body to deal with rates, and not to supplant the courts; Joyes v. R. Co., 17 I. C. C. 361, 369. Carriers are left free to initiate their own rates, rules and regulations; Traer v. R. Co., 14 I. C. C. 165, 169.

The provisions of the Hepburn Act, as amended by the Carmack Amendment, and the Elkins Act forbidding carriers to evade the collection or payment of fixed tariff rates are not intended to extend the jurisdiction in matters outside of its province as a common carrier, nor are they intended to limit and prescribe the use which shall be made of the rates which the carrier puts into effect; California Commercial Ass'n v. Wells-Fargo & Co., 14 I. C. C. 422, 428.

The law stands for what it means from the date when it takes effect and not from the date when it is construed by the Commission. Ordinarily the date of the announcement by the Commission of its interpretation of a particular provision is therefore of little real importance; Liberty Mills v. R. Co., 23 I. C. C. 182, 185.

The act does not apply to the carriage of property by rail or otherwise wholly within a state; Ex parte Koehler, 30 Fed. 867; when the carrier issues no bills of lading to points beyond its line, receives no freight on through bills of lading, and has no arrangement with other roads for a conventional division of charges or a common management; Interstate Commerce Commission v. R. Co., 77 Fed. 942; but if a railroad company, whose line is entirely within one state, issues through bills of lading to points in other states, it is within the act; In re Annapolis, W. & B. R. Co., 1 I. C. Rep. 315. Receivers of railroad companies are common carriers and subject to the act; Independent Refiners' Ass'n of Titusville, Pa., v. R. Co., 6 I. C. Rep. 379. The appointment of a receiver of a part of an interstate road lying within a state does not interfere with interstate commerce; McKinney v. Gas Co., 206 Fed. 772. A carrier subject to the act cannot, by leasing its road, free itself from liability for practices illegal under the act, nor after the termination of the lease escape liability for damages for injuries sustained during the lease; Independent Refiners' Ass'n of Titusville, Pa., v. R. Co., 6 I. C. Rep. 378.

The act does not come within the constitutional prohibition as to impairing the obligation of contracts, although its effect may be to prevent the literal enforcement of pre-existing contracts; Kentucky & I. Bridge Co. v. R. Co., 2 I. C. Rep. 102; id., 2 I. C. C. R. 162; 45 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. (Mont.) 234.

The mere circumstance that there is in a given case a preference does not, of itself, show that such preference is unreasonable; Interstate Commerce Commission v. R. Co., 5 I. C. Rep. 685 (C. C. of A.); id., 74 Fed. 715, 21 C. C. A. 51.

One of the most satisfactory tests of the reasonableness of the rates of one carrier is a comparison with the rates of other carriers operating in the same territory under the same general conditions; Chamber of Commerce of City of Milwaukee v. R. Co., 15 I. C. C. 460, 466. The rates in different directions on the same line between the same points need not be identical; Wilburine Oil Works v. R. Co., 18 I. C. C. 548. Each case must be decided upon its own merits, and in arriving at a conclusion in respect to the rates here involved, the decisions in another case against carriers operating in a different territory under essentially dissimilar circumstances and conditions affords no proper criterion therefor; Chicago Lumber & Coal Co. v. R. Co., 16 I. C. C. 323, 328.

Evidence that the rates on a certain commodity are higher in certain cases than certain other rates, and that they produce a large revenue to the carrier, does not make a prima facie case that they are unreasonable. The reasonableness must be determined by an examination of the whole subject; Howell v. R. Co., 2 I. C. Rep. 162. The fact that a road earns little more than operating expenses is not to be overlooked in fixing rates, but it cannot be made to justify grossly excessive rates. Wherever there are more roads than the business, at fair rates, will remunerate, they must rely upon future earnings for the return on investments and profits; New Orleans Cotton Exchange v. R. Co., 2 I. C. Rep. 289.

The relative fairness of a rate is not determined alone by its being low. Low rates to one place may not be just if still lower rates are given to another place; In re Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co., 2 I. C. Rep. 137. The legitimate interests of carrying companies, as well as of traders and shippers, should be considered in determining the lawfulness of rates under the act. Ocean competition may constitute a dissimilar condition, and conditions which exist beyond the seaboard of the United States can be legitimately regarded for the purpose of justifying a difference in rates charged by railroads between import and domestic traffic; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 5 I. C. Rep. 405; id., 162 U. S. 197, 16 Sup. Ct. 666, 40 L. Ed. 940; City of Spokane v. R. Co., 15 I. C. C. 376.

Trade centres are not, as a matter of right, entitled to have more favorable rates than the smaller towns for which they form distributive centres; and carriers may give the smaller places rates as favorable as the larger ones; when the rates are impartial in themselves as between large and small towns, the fact that one large centre may have an advantage over another in the business of the small places does not make out a case of undue preference. Impartial rates are not rendered illegal by their effect upon the business of localities; Martin v. R. Co., 2 I. C. Rep. 32; that rates should be fixed in inverse proportion to the natural advantages of competing towns with the view of equalizing "commercial conditions" is at variance with justice; Eau Claire Board of Trade v. R. Co., 4 I. C. Rep. 65; Freight Bureau of Cincinnati v. R. Co., 7 id. 180. A through rate does not unjustly discriminate against an intermediate point because less proportionally than the rate from such point to the common destination; Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce v. R. Co., 2 I. C. Rep. 393.

A railroad company is under special obligation to give reasonable rates for its local business. It may accept business from other carriers on through rates which, when divided between them, will give to any one of them for its division less than its own local rates; Lippman & Co. v. R. Co., 2 I. C. Rep. 414.

Through transportation over connecting lines is favored by the act, and the rate is correctly adjusted upon the distance through, and not upon the shorter distances over, the several lines; Coxe Brothers & Co. v. R. Co., 3 I. C. Rep. 460. While the question of distance is important in establishing rates, it is not an absolute and unconditional right from which a departure may not be justified by other considerations. The public benefits, the greater volume of business warranting lower rates to all, and the force of competition may furnish reasons that outweigh a claim of right founded merely on geographical considerations; Imperial Coal Co. v. R. Co., 2 I. C. Rep. 436. See McMorran v. R. Co., id. 604.

When rates are on their face disproportionate or relatively unequal, the burden is on the carrier to justify them; McMorran v. R. Co., 2 I. C. Rep. 604. At any hearing involving a rate increased after Jan. 1, 1910, or sought to be increased after this act, the burden of proving that the increase is just and reasonable is on the carrier.

In determining rates on a short local line, where the cost of service is great, owing to steep grades, sparse population, and light traffic, such circumstances should have much controlling weight. This rule was applied where a road existing under such conditions was charged with unjust rates in transporting oil, as compared with the cost of piping it to the same point; Rice, Robinson & Witherop v. R. Co., 2 I. C. Rep. 298.

Ordinarily there is no better measure of railroad service in carrying goods than distance, though it is not always controlling. And where the rates for carrying freight from a certain territory over one road are considerably greater than the rates charged by another road from neighboring territory to the same place, the higher rates will be held excessive; James & Abbott v. R. Co., 2 I. C. Rep. 609. Greater compensation in the aggregate for the shorter, than for the longer, haul over a direct line is unlawful; Cordele Machine Shop v. R. Co., 6 I. C. Rep. 361.

Mileage, while a circumstance to be considered with the conditions in fixing rates, is by no means controlling or the most important; Interstate Commerce Commission v. R. Co., 5 I. C. Rep. 656 (C. C., M. D. of Tenn.).

A through rate is not necessarily reasonable because it does not exceed the aggregate of two reasonable local rates; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Minnesota, 186 U. S. 257, 22 Sup. Ct. 900, 46 L. Ed. 1151.

There may be cases in which a carrier legitimately engaged in serving some territory is compelled by some new and aggressive competition to reduce normal and reasonable rates, to retain business on its line, and where corresponding reductions at points not affected, or less affected, by such competition, might be unreasonable. But when a carrier voluntarily enters a field of competition where, by reason of a disadvantageous route, or the rigor of the competitive conditions, remunerative rates cannot be charged, and its service to a portion of its patrons is unprofitable, it accepts the legal obligation that its service shall be impartial to all who sustain similar relations to the traffic, and for whom the service itself is not substantially dissimilar; Manufacturers & Jobbers' Union of Mankato v. R. Co., 3 I. C. Rep. 115. Where there has been a consolidation of competing lines that have formerly served the same territory in competitive traffic to the same market, the consolidated lines cannot deprive the public of fair competition, nor give oppressive discrimination with a view to its own interest; Rice, Robinson & Witherop v. R. Co., 3 I. C. Rep. 162.

In fixing reasonable rates on such articles as food products, the operating expenses, bonded debt, fixed charges, dividends on the stock and other necessary expenses are all to be considered, but the claim that any particular rate is to be measured by these as a fixed standard, below which the rate cannot lawfully be reduced, is subject to some qualifications, one of which is that these obligations must be actual and in good faith; Kentucky & I. Bridge Co. v. R. Co., 37 Fed. 567, 2 L. R. A. 289; nor, on the other hand, can these rates be so limited that the shipper may, in all cases, realize actual cost of production; In re Alleged Excessive Freight Rates & Charges on Food Products, 3 I. C. Rep. 93; id., 4 I. C. C. R. 48; in the carriage of great staples which supply an enormous business, and which in market value and actual cost of transportation are among the cheapest articles of commerce, rates yielding only moderate profit to the carrier are both necessary and justifiable; id.

The fact that one company controls parallel lines affords no warrant for giving superior advantages to the patrons of one line and denying similar advantages to those of the other line; Boards of Trade Union v. R. Co., 1 I. C. Rep. 608.

A carrier cannot give a railroad company a lower rate on the same commodity than it gives to others; Interstate Commerce Commission v. R. Co., 225 U. S. 326, 32 Sup. Ct. 742, 56 L. Ed. 1107, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 504.

Ordinarily no adequate reason exists for a difference in rates for a solid carload of one kind of freight from one consignor and a like carload from the same point to the same destination consisting of freight from more than one consignor to one consignee, etc., and such difference is not justified by the difference in the cost of handling; Thurber v. R. Co., 2 I. C. Rep. 742.

The carrier cannot look beyond the transportation to the ownership of the shipment as the basis for determining the applicability of its rates, and the rules of the official classifications, providing that carriers should collect a greater compensation for carload shipments when made by forwarding agents of different shippers, were unjustly discriminatory and unreasonable; Interstate Commerce Commission v. R. Co., 220 U. S. 235, 31 Sup. Ct. 392, 55 L. Ed. 448.

The expense of carrying fruit, etc., from Jersey City, the railroad terminal, to New York, may be added to the rate charged to the latter place; Truck Farmers' Ass'n v. R. Co., 6 I. C. Rep. 295. As to the effect of free cartage at terminals, see Interstate Commerce Commission v. R. Co., 167 U. S. 633, 17 Sup. Ct. 986, 42 L. Ed. 306.

Party-rate tickets are not commutation tickets, and when party rates are lower than the fare for single passengers they are illegal; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. R. Co., 2 I. C. Rep. 729. A sale of mileage tickets to commercial travellers, and a refusal to sell to other passengers except at a higher rate, is unjust discrimination within the act; and the fact that the former release the carrier from liability, or that they may influence business in favor of the road, does not justify such discrimination; Larrison v. R. Co., 1 I. C. Rep. 369. The placing of passenger tickets in the hands of ticket brokers to be disposed of at reduced rates, under the pretence of paying a commission, is a violation of the act; In re Passenger Tariffs & Rate Wars, 2 I. C. Rep. 340. A passenger rate war in which rates are repeatedly reduced by carriers without filing tariffs or reducing intermediate rates, is unlawful; id.; granting free transportation to city officials is unjust discrimination within the act; Harvey v. R. Co., 3 I. C. Rep. 793.

Where the established rate for single passengers is three cents a mile, it is not unlawful to issue what are termed "party-rate tickets" for not less than ten persons, at two cents a mile, which is less than the established rate for single passengers, where such tickets are offered to the public generally; Interstate Commerce Commission v. R. Co., 145 U. S. 263, 12 Sup. Ct. 844, 36 L. Ed. 699. See In re Passenger Tariffs, 2 I. C. Rep. 445, where the Commission held that party rates and passenger carload rates lower than for single passengers are illegal.

The provision that nothing in the act shall apply "to the issuance of mileage passenger tickets" applies only to the issuing of such tickets; the terms upon which they are issued must be in accordance with the general provisions of the act; Larrison v. R. Co., 1 I. C. Rep. 369.

If a reduction in passenger rates be made between competing points, the rates must also be reduced between intermediate points; In re Passenger Tariffs & Rate Wars, 2 I. C. Rep. 340.

The possibility of competition arising at a particular point does not render freight rates to that point, though higher than those to a longer haul to a point where competition prevails, obnoxious to the act, against a greater charge for a shorter than for longer haul under substantially similar circumstances; Int. Com. Com. v. R. Co., 190 U. S. 273, 23 Sup. Ct. 687, 47 L. Ed. 1047.

Section 4, as amended June 18, 1910, makes it unlawful to charge any greater compensation for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line or route in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance, but in special instances on application to the Commission the same may be allowed.

The fact that a railroad company makes an unreasonably low rate does not authorize a rival, extending between the same points, to make greater charges for the shorter haul to intermediate points than it does to the terminal; In re Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co., 2 I. C. Rep. 137.

Where a road makes the same charge to one point that it does to another which is only from a third to two-thirds of the same distance, the charge to the shorter point is presumptively illegal; In re Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co., 2 I. C. Rep. 137. Actual water competition of controlling force relating to traffic important in amount, may justify a lower charge for a longer distance than for a shorter distance included therein; Lehmann, Higginson & Co. v. R. Co., 3 I. C. Rep. 80; but disturbance of rates, secret or open, will not; In re Alleged Violations of the Fourth Section, 7 I. C. Rep. 61; nor will competition between markets or between carriers subject to the act; Brewer & Hanleiter v. R. Co., 7 I. C. Rep. 224; nor possible water competition; San Bernardino Board of Trade v. R. Co., 3 I. C. Rep. 138. Water competition must be such that the freight would go to its destination by water, if the lower rate were not given; James & Mayer Buggy Co. v. R. Co., 3 I. C. Rep. 682; id., 4 I. C. C. R. 744.

When rail rates are advanced with the disappearance of water competition, no inference adverse to the railroad can be drawn, but when the old rates had been maintained for several years after such disappearance, there is a presumption, if the rates are raised, that the advance is made for other reasons; Int. Com. Com. v. R. Co., 227 U. S. 88, 33 Sup. Ct. 185, 57 L. Ed. 431.

On the ground that "through failure of crops" the people of long distance localities were without necessary food for themselves and animals, a temporary order was made in In re Application of Fremont, E. & M. V. R. Co., 6 I. C. Rep. 293, authorizing a carrier to charge less for a longer distance than they were authorized to charge for a shorter distance. And the need of additional facilities for passengers travelling to Chicago during the World's Fair was considered a ground for the same relief; In re Petition of Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co., 6 I. C. Rep. 323.

Under section 4, as amended June 18, 1910, the Commission has power to make an order (such as the one there involved) permitting a lower rate for the longer haul, but only on terms stated in the order, establishing zones for the intermediate points and relative percentages upon which proportionate zones should be based; Intermountain Rate Cases, 234 U. S. 476, 34 Sup. Ct. 986, 58 L. Ed. —.

An intermediate local rate should never exceed the through rate plus the local rate back to the intermediate place; Martin v. R. Co., 2 I. C. Rep. 1.

The classification of freight is expressly recognized by the act; Thurber v. R. Co., 2 I. C. Rep. 742. But in classifying freights the carrier must respect the interests of the shipper on the basis of relative equality and justice; Thurber v. R. Co., 2 I. C. Rep. 742. Common carriers should be held responsible for the correctness of the weight and classification of freight received. The publication of a commodity rate takes the commodity upon which such rate applies out of the classification, so that all shipments of that commodity moving from and to points between which such commodity rate is in effect must be charged for on the basis of the commodity rate and carload minimum. In allowing carload rates, the carrier may properly stipulate for a minimum carload, the more approved method being to charge a given rate per 100 pounds for any excess, rather than to allow the shipper to load as much as he chooses in the car at a stated rate per car; Leonard v. R. Co., 3 I. C. C. 241.

A carload rate and minimum weight specified in a lawful tariff hold out a definite offer to the shipping public to move merchandise on those terms and Commissioner Harlan stated, in Kaye & Carter Lumber Co. v. R. Co., 17 I. C. C. 209, 211, that there should be a rule in all tariffs to the effect that when a carrier, for its own convenience, supplies a larger car than the one ordered, it will do so on the basis of the published rate and minimum weight applicable to the length of car so ordered by the shipper, in all cases where the shipment actually moved could have been loaded into the car ordered. In one case, the Commission held that, even though the shipper had not ordered a car of a particular size, the carrier could collect freight only on the actual weight, the car furnished being larger than required for the shipment tendered; Peerless Agencies Co. v. R. Co., 17 I. C. C. 218.

Lower rates on carload lots than on less quantities are not unlawful; but if the difference be so wide as to destroy competition between large and small dealers, especially upon articles that are of general and necessary use, and that furnish a large volume of business, the act is violated; Thurber v. R. Co., 2 I. C. Rep. 742.

When an article moves in sufficient volume and the demands of commerce will be better served, it is reasonable to give a lower classification for carloads than that which applies to less than carload quantities, but the difference in such classification should not be so wide as to be destructive to competition between large and small dealers; Brownell v. R. Co., 4 I. C. Rep. 285.

It is the duty of a carrier to equip its road with suitable cars for its traffic and to furnish them alike to all who have occasion for their use; Rice, Robinson & Witherop v. R. Co., 3 I. C. Rep. 162. The public must be justly and equally served in furnishing cars; if in a time of special pressure, some one must wait, regular customers of the road are not entitled to preference; Riddle, Dean & Co. v. R. Co., 1 I. C. Rep. 787.

As a general rule, in the movement of passengers and freight, passengers get a preference, then live stock, perishable goods and common freight receive preference in the order named. This rule is of no avail in time of an emergency.

Railroad companies are not required to furnish competing connecting carriers with equal facilities, for the interchange of traffic, when this involves the use of its tracks by such carriers; it may permit such use by one carrier to the exclusion of others; Little Rock & M. R. Co. v. R. Co., 59 Fed. 400; nor is the clause violated by receiving and forwarding without prepayment of freight or car mileage, cars of other companies, containing goods coming from one locality and under like circumstances, refusing goods from a different locality; Oregon Short-Line & U. N. R. Co. v. R. Co., 61 Fed. 158, 9 C. C. A. 409.

A state constitution prohibiting discrimination in charges and facilities does not require a company to make provision for joint business with a new line crossing it, similar to those already made with a rival line at another near point; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. R. Co., 110 U. S. 667, 4 Sup. Ct. 185, 28 L. Ed. 291; but railroad companies may be required to furnish facilities, and prevented from abandoning, stations already established; State v. R. Co., 37 Conn. 153; New Haven & N. R. Co. v. Hamersley, 104 U. S. 1, 26 L. Ed. 629; R. R. Commissioners v. R. Co., 63 Me. 269, 18 Am. Rep. 208; Commonwealth

v. R. Co., 103 Mass. 254, 4 Am. Rep. 555; State v. R. Co., 19 Neb. 476, 27 N. W. 434.

The power of the Commission to regulate accessorial facilities is held to be confined to mere regulation, and cannot be used to invade rights of property by entering the domain of deprivation, construction, and reconstruction of properties to carry out the proposed regulations; Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 74 Fed. 803, 21 C. C. A. 103.

A carrier is not justified in refusing less desirable freights because more money can be made by using its cars in carrying another kind; Riddle, Dean & Co. v. R. Co., 1 I. C. Rep. 787.

In an action for unjust discrimination in freight charges, under sec. 2, it is sufficient to set out the rates charged plaintiff and another shipper, and the circumstances and conditions under which plaintiff's shipment was made, with an allegation that the smaller charges made the other shipper were for like services, under substantially the same circumstances and conditions, without setting out such circumstances and conditions; Kinnavey v. R. Ass'n, 81 Fed. 802.

It is the duty of a carrier of live stock to provide proper facilities for receiving and discharging live stock free from all charges except the regular transportation charges; and it cannot receive and discharge such live stock at a depot, access to which must be purchased; Keith v. R. Co., 1 I. C. Rep. 601.

Carriers may properly refuse refrigeration on less than carload shipments or may require twenty-four hours' advance notice by shippers of the need of refrigerator cars; they may also charge for refrigeration on cars iced by them and not loaded by the shipper; Asparagus Growers' Ass'n v. R. Co., 17 I. C. C. 423.

In enacting the Hepburn act, amending § 20 of the act to regulate commerce, Congress recognized the essential distinctions between property accounts and operating accounts, and between capital and earnings and while prior to that time the practice of different carriers varied, uniformity in regard to the keeping of accounts was essential in the future for proper supervision and regulation; Kansas City Ry. Co. v. U. S., 231 U. S. 423, 34 Sup. Ct. 125, 58 L. Ed. —.

The Hepburn act, requiring pipe line companies to become common carriers and subject to the act is not unconstitutional; Pipe Line Cases, 234 U. S. 548, 34 Sup. Ct. 956, 58 L. Ed. —.

The Act of 1887, and its amendment (Act of 1906), do not apply to street railway companies operating lines between cities in different states; Omaha & C. B. St. R. Co. v. Commission, 179 Fed. 243, affirmed Omaha & C. B. St. R. Co. v. Interst. Com. Com'n, 230 U. S. 324, 33 Sup. Ct. 890, 57 L. Ed. 1501, 46 L. R. A. (N. S.) 385.

Demurrage. A carrier has the right to establish and maintain demurrage regulations under which a reasonable charge will accrue for detention of cars beyond a reasonable period. One of the primary reasons for demurrage is to release equipment and again place it in the transportation service, and also to enable all of its patrons to use its tracks and terminals; Peale, Peacock & Kerr v. R. Co., 18 I. C. C. 25, 35.

Under the statute shippers are not to be put in a position of subserviency to common carriers, and are not required to ask for rates, but are entitled to equal and open rates at all times; In re Tariffs of the Transcontinental Lines, 2 I. C. Rep. 203; but a tariff of rates of which schedules have been filed by a carrier with the Commission and also with its freight agents is in force and operative although the copies thereof may not have been posted at the carrier's depot as required by the act; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Oil Mill, 204 U. S. 449, 27 Sup. Ct. 358, 51 L. Ed. 562.

Complaints, though brought by an individual, may challenge the entire schedule of rates to competing points; Daniels v. R. Co., 6 I. C. Rep. 458.

The Commission can rehear a particular case and amend its original order therein, although the federal court may have refused to enforce such original order; Page v. R. Co., 6 I. C. Rep. 548.

In proceedings before the Commission, all offending carriers need not be made parties defendant, but the case may proceed only against the carrier whose lines the complainant uses; Page v. R. Co., 6 I. C. Rep. 548.

The right asserted by a petitioner in the federal court under the act arises and is claimed under a law of the United States which relates to a subject over which congress has exclusive control; and this is sufficient to sustain the jurisdiction; Kentucky & I. Bridge Co. v. R. Co., 37 Fed. 567, 2 L. R. A. 289. A state court has no jurisdiction; Copp v. R. Co., 43 La. Ann. 511, 9 South. 441, 12 L. R. A. 725, 26 Am. St. Rep. 198.

It is not necessary that a person making a complaint before the Commission should have a pecuniary interest in the violation of the statute complained of; it is sufficient if a responsible party complains of a matter which amounts to a public grievance; Boston & A. R. R. Co. v. R. Co., 1 I. C. Rep. 571; Milk Producers' Protective Ass'n v. R. Co., 7 I. C. Rep. 92.

It is not proper for railroad companies to withhold the larger part of their evidence from the Commission, and first adduce it in the federal court in proceedings by the Commission to enforce its order; the purposes of the act call for a full inquiry by the Commission in the first instance; Cincinnati, New Orleans & T. P. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 5 I. C. Rep. 391; id., 162 U. S. 184, 16 Sup. Ct. 700, 40 L. Ed. 935. It is not necessary to file with a petition for the enforcement of an order of the Commission the transcript of the evidence taken before it, under the provision of the statute making the findings of the fact of the Commission prima facie evidence of the matter stated, but either party may use as evidence any competent testimony taken before the Commission; Interstate Commerce Commission v. R. Co., 5 I. C. Rep. 131; id., 64 Fed. 981. Where the Commission applies for an injunction to restrain a railroad company from disobeying an order of the Commission, a preliminary injunction will not be granted when the company's answer denies the facts upon which the order was based; Interstate Commerce Commission v. R. Co., 49 Fed. 177. A preliminary injunction will not be granted where the question involved is a new one; or where the injury to the defendant is likely to be greater than the benefit to the plaintiff; Shinkle, Wilson & Kreis Co. v. R. Co., 62 Fed. 690; id., 5 I. C. Rep. 287. An action against the carrier for a violation of the act in making unlawful discriminations may be maintained in the name of the United States by the district attorney; U. S. v. R. Co., 5 I. C. Rep. 106 (U. S. C. C., D. of Kans.).

Under the 5th amendment to the constitution of the United States, which declares that "no person . . . shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself," a person under examination by a grand jury, in an investigation into certain alleged violations of the act and its amendments, is not obliged to answer questions where he states that his answers might tend to criminate him; although section 860 of the Revised Statutes provides that no evidence given by him shall in any manner be used against him in any court of the United States in any criminal proceedings. The object of this constitutional provision is to insure that a person shall not be compelled, when acting as a witness in any investigation, to give testimony which may tend to show that he himself has committed a crime; Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, 12 Sup. Ct. 195, 35 L. Ed. 1110.

The provision in the act of February 11, 1893, "that no person shall be excused from attending and testifying or from producing books, etc., before the" Commission, on the ground that the testimony may tend to criminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture; but that no such person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture on account of any matter concerning which he may testify or produce such evidence, affords absolute immunity against prosecution and deprives the witness of his constitutional right to refuse to answer; Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S. 591, 16 Sup. Ct. 644, 40 L. Ed. 819; id., 5 I. C. Rep. 369. This act is said to have been passed in view of the decision in Counselman v. Hitchcock, supra; see Brown v. Walker, supra.

By the act of June 30, 1906, supra, immunity shall extend only to a natural person testifying or producing documentary evidence.

See INCRIMINATION; PRODUCTION OF BOOK; GRAND JURY.

The Commodities Clause. (1906.) This clause, as construed in U. S. v. Delaware & Hudson Co., 213 U. S. 366, 29 Sup. Ct. 527, 53 L. Ed. 836, prohibits an interstate carrier from transporting in such commerce articles or commodities under the following circumstances and conditions: 1. Where the commodity has been manufactured, mined or produced by a carrier under its authority, and, at the time of transportation, the carrier has not in good faith before the act of transportation dissociated itself from such article or commodity; 2. Where the carrier owns the article or commodity to be transported in whole or in part; 3. Where the carrier has, at the time of transportation, an interest, direct or indirect, in a legal or equitable sense, in the commodity, not including commodities manufactured, mined, produced or owned, etc., by a bona fide corporation in which the railroad company is a stockholder.

As a result of this decision the coal railroad companies have organized coal companies to take over their coal lands. See COMMODITIES CLAUSE; HOLDING COMPANIES.

The act of February 4, 1887, is not inconsistent with the act of July 2, 1890. "To protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies;" U. S. v. Freight Ass'n, 166 U. S. 290, 17 Sup. Ct. 540, 41 L. Ed. 1007.

So far as congress adopted the language of the English Traffic Act, it is to be presumed that it had in mind the construction given by the English courts to the adopted language; and intended to incorporate it into the statute; Interstate Commerce Commission v. R. Co., 145 U. S. 263, 12 Sup. Ct. 844, 36 L. Ed. 699.

By act of March 1, 1913, the Commission is directed to make an inventory and appraisal of all the property of common carriers.

See CONSTITUTION OF UNITED STATES; COMMON CARRIERS; TAXATION; SAFETY APPLIANCE ACT; COMMERCE; JURISDICTION.

INTERSTATE RENDITION. See FUGITIVE FROM JUSTICE.

INTERVENING DAMAGES. Damages suffered by an appellee from delay caused by the appeal. Peasely v. Buckminster, 1 Tyler (Vt.) 267.

INTERVENOR. One not originally a party who, by leave of the court, interposes in a suit and becomes a party thereto to protect a right or interest in the subject-matter.

A person who intervenes in a suit, either on his own behalf or on the behalf of the public. See INTERVENTION.

INTERVENTION (Lat. intervenio, to come between or among). The admission, by leave of the court, of a person not an original party to pending legal proceedings, by which such person becomes a party thereto for the protection of some right or interest alleged by him to be affected by such proceedings.

Persons who are not parties to a suit cannot in general file a petition therein for a stay of proceedings or any other cause; the remedy is by original bill. Exceptions are: where the pleadings contain scandal against a stranger, or where a stranger purchases the subject of litigation pending the suit, and the like; creditors are allowed to prove debts and persons belonging to a class on whose behalf the suit is brought are regarded as quasi parties and, of course, may have a standing in court; per Bradley, J., in Anderson v. R. Co., 2 Woods 628, Fed. Cas. No. 358. Third persons may be driven to intervene for their rights in equity if those rights are to be affected, and if at the hearing the court would be compelled to notice their absence and order the case to stand over until they were brought in; Carter v. City of New Orleans, 19 Fed. 659. See 1 Dan. Ch. Pr. 287; Story, Eq. Pl. § 220. It is not necessary to the right of intervention, in order to participate in a trust fund in the custody of the law, that the intervenor should first obtain judgment at law or should have any lien upon the fund. Intervention will be granted, after a foreclosure decree against a railroad company, to unsecured noteholders who pray to have their debts established as equitable liens upon the property and funds of the company paramount to the lien of the mortgage; Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. R. Co., 21 Fed. 264. A holder of railroad bonds secured by a mortgage under foreclosure has an interest in the amount of the trustee's compensation, which entitles him to intervene and to contest it and to appeal from an adverse decision; Williams v. Morgan, 111 U. S. 684, 4 Sup. Ct. 638, 28 L. Ed. 559. Where a part of a canal was sold and the fund brought into court, it was held that the contractor who built the canal could intervene for the protection of his rights either upon the fund or against the purchaser; French v. Gapen, 105 U. S. 509, 26 L. Ed. 951. Bondholders in a foreclosure suit brought by the trustee of the mortgage are quasi parties and may be heard for the protection of their interests; Fidelity Trust & Safety-Vault Co. v. R. Co., 53 Fed. 850.

If one who is a necessary party to a case in a state court is wrongfully excluded and denied leave to file a proper cross bill and answer and to present a motion for removal to the federal court, he will be treated by the latter court as if a party; Hack v. R.

Co., 23 Fed. 356. The case of Iowa Homestead Co. v. R. Co., 8 Fed. 97, was based on special facts.

Where a suit in equity was properly instituted against a railroad company by a stockholder, a bondholder, and the trustees for the bondholders named in the land grant mortgages of the company, and the bill charged that the officers of the company were squandering its property, and the purpose of the suit was the preservation and administration of the assets of the company, and a decree pro confesso had been entered and a receiver appointed, individual stockholders were not permitted to intervene and file a cross bill on a general charge of fraud and collusion on the part of the receiver and erroneous judgment on the part of the court in making the order referred to. In such a suit, it is not the proper practice to allow individual stockholders to intervene to set aside the proceedings or to interpose obstacles to the progress of the suit. Such stockholders may come in to take the benefit of the proceedings and decree, but not to oppose and nullify them. Rival creditors by proceedings before the master may fix the priority of their respective liens, and creditors or stockholders may contest the validity of the claims of other creditors and stockholders, but all in subordination to the general object of the suit, to obtain an administration of the company's assets and property. Persons will not be allowed to intervene as general defendants unless they show that they have an interest in the results as stockholders, and are also able to show fraud and collusion between the plaintiff in the suit and the officers of the company; per Bradley, J., in Forbes v. R. Co., 2 Wood, 323, Fed. Cas. No. 4,926. In Skiddy v. R. Co., 3 Hughes, 320, Fed. Cas. No. 12,922, the Amsterdam Bondholders' Committee, representing a very large number of bonds, filed a petition setting out the grounds for disapproving their trustees' management of the foreclosure suit, and praying intervention, but leave to intervene was denied; Clyde v. R. Co., 55 Fed. 448.

Where the holder of a large amount of bonds, on which foreclosure proceedings were pending, asked leave to intervene, and it appeared that the mortgage trustee was already a party and there was no allegation that it was not acting properly for the interests of all bondholders, leave to intervene was refused (even for the mere purpose of requiring notice to such bondholder of successive steps in the proceedings), on the ground of excessive inconvenience in the administration of the cause; Dallas, J., in the Reading Railroad foreclosure, U. S. C. C., E. D. of Pa.

The practice in respect of intervention in ordinary railroad foreclosure cases probably differs somewhat in different circuits, and varies considerably in different cases. The question of the right to intervene by members of a class already represented on the record appears to be rather a matter of discretion, in view of what is deemed best for the due conduct of the cause. Probably the right to be heard will not ordinarily be refused in any case.

There would seem to be a distinction between the intervention of parties for the purpose of sharing in a fund and the intervention of parties in the course of the administration of a railroad property, during receivership. In the latter class of cases, it would appear, from the authorities, that unless good cause be shown for the intervention of new members of a class already represented on the record, they will not be allowed to come in, upon the ground stated by Dallas, C. J., in the Reading foreclosure,—the excessive inconvenience in the administration of the cause.

In a suit to foreclose a railroad mortgage, certain persons prayed leave to intervene, alleging that the defendant company was made up by an illegal consolidation of three other companies, of one of which they were stockholders, that they never consented to the consolidation and were not bound by it nor by the mortgage, that the original company had no officers to defend for them, and that the consolidated company declined to set up the defence which they desired to make; leave to intervene was refused as there was no charge of fraud or collusion, and the proper remedy was by an independent suit; Central Trust Co. v. R. Co., 48 Fed. 14.

A purchaser at a foreclosure sale may be admitted as a party to the record and allowed to appeal; Blossom v. R. Co., 1 Wall. (U. S.) 655, 17 L. Ed. 673; upon failure to ask leave to come in, the court should compel him to become a party of record; Fitzgerald v. Evans, 49 Fed. 426, 1 C. C. A. 307. The purchaser at a foreclosure sale under a junior mortgage who takes subject to a prior mortgage, will be made a party to proceedings to foreclose such prior mortgage; Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. R. Co., 44 Fed. 115. Parties given leave to intervene in an equity suit after a decree pro confesso, have a right of appeal from a decree affecting their rights, and the supreme court will enforce this right by a mandamus; Ex parte Jordan, 94 U. S. 248, 24 L. Ed. 123. See Williams v. Morgan, 111 U. S. 684, 4 Sup. Ct. 638, 28 L. Ed. 559.

When a creditor's bill in equity is properly removed from a state court to a federal court on the ground of diverse citizenship, the jurisdiction of the latter is not ousted by admitting in the circuit court as co-plaintiffs other creditors who are citizens of the same state as the defendants; Stewart v. Dunham, 115 U. S. 61, 5 Sup. Ct. 1163, 29 L. Ed. 329.

A court of the United States sitting as a court of law, has an equitable power over its own process to prevent abuse, oppression and injustice; which power may be invoked by a stranger to the litigation as incident to the jurisdiction already vested, and without regard to his own citizenship; Gumbel v. Pitkin, 124 U. S. 131, 8 Sup. Ct. 379, 31 L. Ed. 374.

When property in the possession of a third person claiming ownership, is attached on mesne process issuing out of the United States circuit court, as the property of a defendant and citizen of the same state as the person claiming it, such person may seek redress in the circuit court by ancillary proceedings; as, for instance, if the original proceeding is in equity, by a petition pro interesse suo, or by ancillary bill, or by summary motion, according to circumstances; or, if it is at common law, by a summary motion or by a proceeding in the nature of an interpleader; or, if proceedings authorized by statutes of the state afford an adequate remedy, by adopting them as part of the practice of the court; Krippendorf v. Hyde, 110 U. S. 276, 4 Sup. Ct. 27, 28 L. Ed. 145. Where, in equity, an execution is issued and a levy and sale made of certain lands, a third party claiming to be the real owner cannot intervene for the purpose of moving to set aside the execution when there is no privity of estate between him and the defendant in the execution; Ex parte Mensing, 55 Fed. 17.

On a creditors' bill, judgment creditors who choose to intervene may share ratably with complainants in the proceeds of a sale of the property, even if some do not intervene until after the decree of sale; George v. Ry. Co., 44 Fed. 117. The practice of permitting judgment creditors to come in and make themselves parties to a creditors' bill is well settled; Myers v. Fenn, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 205, 18 L. Ed. 604.

Stockholders of a corporation who have been allowed to put in answers in the name of the corporation cannot be regarded as answering for the corporation itself. In a special case, however, where there is an allegation that the directors fraudulently refused to attend to the interests of the corporation, equity may allow a stockholder to become a party defendant for the protection of his own interest and that of such other stockholders as may join him in the defence; Bronson v. R. Co., 2 Wall. (U. S.) 283, 17 L. Ed. 725. Where any fraud has been perpetrated by the directors of a company by which the interests of the stockholders are affected, the stockholders have a right to come in as parties to a suit against the company and ask that their property shall be relieved from the effect of such fraud; Bayliss v. Ry. Co., 8 Biss. 193, Fed. Cas. No. 1,140.

The state can intervene in proceedings to foreclose a railroad mortgage only where it is entitled as a bond or lien holder to share in the proceeds of a sale, or where public interests are at stake which are seriously threatened by the proposed disposition of the property. An intervening petition filed by a state in railroad foreclosure proceedings alleging that bonds and the mortgage securing them were void, and that the railroad company, by collusion and neglect to defend, was about to allow judgment to go against it by default, that the company in consideration of large land grants from the state had agreed to maintain low rates of transportation, which, by foreclosure, would be increased, gives no right of intervention, especially where neither the charter of the company nor any subsequent legislation showed any such contract as the one alleged; State v. Trust Co., 81 Tex. 530, 17 S. W. 60. Permission will not be granted to a state to intervene for the stay of the sale of a railroad under foreclosure proceedings; Anderson v. R. Co., 2 Woods 628, Fed. Cas. No. 359.

In a controversy between two states in relation to the boundary line between them, the attorney-general of the United States may appear on behalf of the United States and adduce evidence, though he does not thereby become a party in the technical sense of the word, and no judgment will be entered for or against the United States; Florida v. Georgia, 17 How. (U. S.) 478, 15 L. Ed. 181.

A petition to intervene need not be as formal as a bill of complaint, yet it should exhibit all the material facts relied on, embodying so much of the record in the original suit as is essential, and proceedings taken therein which would fortify the right of the intervenor should be incorporated in the petition by amendment, and if this is not done, such proceedings cannot be noticed on a demurrer to the petition; Empire Distilling Co. v. McNulta, 77 Fed. 700, 23 C. C. A. 415.

In bills brought on behalf of a class, an intervening member of the class will ordinarily be joined as a plaintiff and this will not generally deprive the court of jurisdiction; Stewart v. Dunham, 115 U. S. 61, 5 Sup. Ct. 1163, 29 L. Ed. 329. If there should be any danger that it would, he may be joined as a defendant or, if he intends to act in hostility to the original complainant, the court may make him a defendant; 1 Fost. Fed. Prac. § 201; Brown v. Steamship Co., 5 Blatchf. 525, Fed. Cas. No. 2,025; Forbes v. R. Co., 2 Woods 323, Fed. Cas. No. 4,926.

A person claiming a right to share in a fund or claiming a right to property in the hands of a receiver is generally allowed to intervene pro interesse suo; 1 Fost. Fed. Pr. § 201.

One who, in an action at law, has been denied the right to intervene, because of his status, cannot afterwards maintain a bill in equity in the same court to enjoin the proceedings and to be permitted to intervene; McDonald v. Seligman, 81 Fed. 753. But where leave to intervene in an equity case is asked and refused, it is not a determination of the merits, but the petitioner is at full liberty to assert his rights in any other appropriate form of proceedings; Credits Commutation Co. v. U. S., 177 U. S. 311, 20 Sup. Ct. 636, 44 L. Ed. 782.

In a treaty relating to the administration by consuls of estates of foreigners dying in a state, "intervene in the possession and administration of the deceased" means that the consul may "temporarily possess the estate for the purpose of protecting it before it comes under the jurisdiction of the laws of the country, or protect the interest of his national in an administration instituted otherwise than by him"; Rocca v. Thompson, 223 U. S. 317, 32 Sup. Ct. 207, 56 L. Ed. 453.

Under Codes. There are provisions in the codes of several of the states, which appear to have been originally adopted from Louisiana, permitting any person who has an interest in any matter in litigation to intervene by rule of court. This interest must be of such a direct and important character that the intervenor will either gain or lose by the direct effect of the judgment; the interest must be that created by a claim in suit or a lien upon the property, or some part thereof, in suit, or a claim to or lien upon the property or some part thereof which is the subject of litigation; Horn v. Water Co., 13 Cal. 62, 73 Am. Dec. 569, per Field, J. See Smith v. Gale, 144 U. S. 518, 12 Sup. Ct. 674, 36 L. Ed. 521.

In Patent Law. Where a third party asked to be made a party defendant, alleging that it was the manufacturer of machines claimed to infringe; that the defendant was its vendee; that it desired to settle the question as to whether or not the machines did infringe, both the complainant and the third party being non-residents, the petitioner was allowed to become a party defendant; Curran v. Car Co., 32 Fed. 835. So of the owner of cars, in a patent suit brought against the user; Standard Oil Co. v. Southern Pac. Co., 54 Fed. 521, 4 C. C. A. 491.

In Admiralty. Any person may intervene in a suit in rem for his interest and he may do so notwithstanding the res has been delivered to a claimant on a stipulation in a certain sum to abide by and perform the decree, the stipulation as far as it goes standing for the res; The Oregon, 45 Fed. 62. An administrator may intervene in a suit in rem to recover the damages allowed by a law of the state for the death of his intestate, caused by the wrongful act or omission of the person in charge of the res; The S. S. Oregon, 42 Fed. 78. When a vessel libelled by a material man has been taken possession of by the court, other material men may intervene by libel praying warrants of arrest in order to retain the property in case security be given for its release; The Julia, 57 Fed. 233. See Admiralty Rule 43.

In International Law. Intervention is the interference of one state in the affairs of another state or states, without the consent of the foreign state. It is essentially a violation of the right belonging to every nation to be sovereign within its own borders and to be independent of foreign control in the administration of its home affairs and in the conduct of its foreign policy. There are, however, certain circumstances which are recognized in international law as justifying intervention. The two forms of intervention best recognized in international law are intervention in the interest of self-protection and intervention in the interest of the balance of power. The fundamental right of a state to preserve its own existence has often been alleged in justification of the violation of the territory of a foreign state, whether for the sake of anticipating an attack on the part of that state or for the sake of preventing such state from being made the basis of operations by a third party. The necessity of maintaining a balance of power between the great powers, and even between the lesser ones, has frequently been alleged in justification of an attack by one or more states upon a third state which, by its aggressive policy and its military preparations, threatens the existence or independence of other states. Intervention has sometimes been exercised in the interests of humanity, when the subjects of a foreign state were being subjected to such treatment as to call forth a protest from the civilized world. Such an intervention took place in 1827 when Great Britain, France and Russia intervened in the war between Greece and Turkey, because of the general horror created by the cruelties committed in the war. Moreover, intervention would be justified in punishment of a state which had deliberately violated the recognized rules of international law.

The United States, being outside the circle of the great European powers, has felt that it could maintain a position of isolation with regard to the questions of European diplomacy. Under the Monroe Doctrine (q. v.) the United States has rather taken an attitude of preventing intervention on the part of the European powers in the affairs of the Central and South American states, than felt called upon itself to intervene. As early as 1782 John Adams expressed his conviction that it should be the rule of the colonies not to meddle in the affairs of Europe. In his Farewell Address of 1796, Washington stated clearly the policy of the new republic. "It must be unwise in us," he said, "to implicate ourselves by artificial ties in the ordinary vicissitudes of her [Europe's] politics, or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities. Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course." The same principles were enunciated by Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, J. Q. Adams, and succeeding Presidents and Secretaries of State. The acts of the United States have been in accordance with her avowed policy. Efforts were made in 1793 by French agents to force the United States to take sides with France against Great Britain, but Washington steadily refused to be influenced by them. In the wars between Spain and her American colonies, the United States maintained an attitude of neutrality and non-intervention. Again in 1822-27, when efforts were made to have the United States intervene between Greece and Turkey, the government refused to take action. Similar efforts were made by Hungarian patriots in 1848, but were alike without success.

The most striking instance of direct intervention on the part of the United States is in connection with the island of Cuba. For many years conditions upon that neighboring island had been a source of great annoyance to the United States, both because of the general horror created by the character of the more or less continuous warfare between the island and Spain, as well as because of the obligation imposed upon the United States of preventing its territory from being made the starting point of hostile expeditions against the Spanish government of that island. The joint resolution of April 20, 1898, which was accepted by Spain as practically amounting to a declaration of war, states that in view of the "abhorrent conditions which have existed for more than three years in the island of Cuba" the United States felt that it was its duty to demand that Spain relinquish its authority over the island of Cuba. The President was in consequence authorized to use the land and naval forces of the United States to carry out the resolution. At the same time the United States distinctly disclaimed any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty over the island. For further cases of political intervention see MONROE DOCTRINE.

Intervention is said to be non-political in character when a government does not forcibly interfere in the affairs of another state, but merely enters into diplomatic negotiations with the government of that state for the purpose of making it reverse its conduct in the treatment of subjects of the first state which happened to be transiently or permanently resident in the second state. This form of intervention is resorted to to protect citizens of the state against wrong or injustice in a foreign state, whether as a result of the positive action of the foreign government or of its omission to extend due protection to the alien. The general rule is that a government will not intervene in favor of its citizens until they have had recourse to the ordinary tribunals of the forelgn country and have been refused justice. For intervention by a state to collect debts owed to its citizens by a foreign state, see CALVO DOCTRINE; DRAGO DOCTRINE. A nation ordinarily will not intervene in matters of business between its citizens and a foreign country. It will, however, interpose its good offices for the alleviation of the punishment of its citizens who are convicted of political offences in a foreign country. Likewise it will endeavor to secure full protection for its citizens who go as foreign missionaries to pagan countries. This does not mean that the United States would assume a protectorship of Christian communities in such countries. On several occasions resolutions have been offered in the United States congress protesting against the cruel treatment of Jews in certain foreign countries. See Moore, VI, §§ 897-926.

The doctrine has been thus spoken of by a distinguished writer, "Historicus": "Its essence is illegality and its justification is its success."

In Civil Law. The act by which a third party becomes a party in a suit pending between other persons.

The intervention is made either to be joined to the plaintiff, and to claim the same thing he does, or some other thing connected with it; or to join the defendant, and with him to oppose the claim of the plaintiff, which it is his interest to defeat. Pothier, Proc. Civ. 1ère part, ch. 2, s. 6, § 3.

In English Ecclesiastical Law. The proceeding of a third person, who, not being originally a party to the suit or proceeding, but claiming an interest in the subject-matter in dispute, in order the better, to protect such interest, interposes his claim. 2 Chitty, Pr. 492; 2 Hagg. Cons. 137; 3 Phill. Eccl. 586; Dunlop, Adm. Pr. 74. The intervenor may come in at any stage of the cause, and even after judgment, if an appeal can be allowed on such judgment; 2 Hagg. Cons. 137.

Intervention is allowed in certain cases, especially in suits for divorce and nullity of marriage, by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144, and 36 & 37 Vict. c. 31, where it is usual for the queen's proctor to intervene, where collusion is suspected.

Intervention in the possession and administration of the property of an alien dying in the United States, as used in a treaty, is defined in Rocca v. Thompson, 223 U. S. 317, 32 Sup. Ct. 207, 56 L. Ed. 453, quoting from this title at length.

See AMICUS CURIAE; EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

INTESTABILIS. A witness incompetent to testify. Calv. Lex.

INTESTABLE. One who cannot lawfully make a testament.

An infant, an insane person, or one civilly dead, cannot make a will, for want of capacity or understanding; a married woman cannot make such a will without some special authority, because she is under the power of her husband. They are all intestable.

INTESTACY. The state or condition of dying without a will.

See Gross, Mediæval Law of Intestacy, 3 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 723 (18 Harv. L. Rev. 120).

INTESTATE. Without a will. A person who dies, having made no will, or one which is defective in form. In that case, he is said to die intestate, and his estate descends to his heirs at law or next of kin. See Kohny v. Dunbar, 21 Idaho 258, 121 Pac. 544, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1107, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 492.

This term comes from the Latin intestatus. Formerly, it was used in France indiscriminately with de-confesse; that is, without confession. It was regarded as a crime, on account of the omission of the deceased person to give something to the church, and was punished by privation of burial in consecrated ground. This omission, according to Fournel, Hist. des Avocats, vol. 1, p. 116, could be repaired by making an ampliative testament in the name of the deceased. See Vely, tom. 6, page 145; Henrion de Pansey, Autorité judiciaire 129, and note. See DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION; WILL.

The Roman horror of intestacy was equalled or surpassed among early Englishmen, the reason being the danger to the intestate's soul if he died without having assigned a fitting part of his estate to pious uses. Pollock's note to Maine's Anc. L. 230.

INTESTATE SUCCESSION. A succession is called intestate when the deceased has left no will, or when his will has been revoked, or annulled as irregular. Therefore the heirs to whom a succession has fallen by the effects of the law only are called "heirs ab intestato." Civil Code La. art. 1096.

INTESTATO. In the Civil Law. Intestate; without a will. Calv. Lex.

INTESTATUS. In the Civil and Old English Law. An intestate. One who dies without a will. Dig. 50, 17, 7.

INTIMACY. As generally applied to persons, it is understood to mean a proper, friendly relation of the parties, but it is frequently used to convey the idea of an improper relation; an intimacy at least disreputable and degrading. Collins v. Pub. Co., 152 Pa. 187, 25 Atl. 546, 34 Am. St. Rep. 636. See McCarty v. Coffin, 157 Mass. 478, 32 N. E. 649.

INTIMATION. In Civil Law. The name of any judicial act by which a notice of a legal proceeding is given to some one; but it is more usually understood to mean the notice or summons which an appellant causes to be given to the opposite party, that the sentence will be reviewed by the superior judge.

INTIMIDATION. The act of intimidating or making fearful; the state of being intimidated.

In Old English Law. By the stat. 38 and 39 Vict. c. 86, 7, every person commits a misdemeanor, who wrongfully uses violence to, or intimidates, any other person, or his wife or children, with a view to compel him to abstain from doing, or to do, any act which he has a legal right to do or abstain from doing. See DURESS.

INTIMIDATION OF VOTERS. Statutes have been enacted in some states to punish the intimidation of voters. Under an early Pennsylvania act, it was held that to constitute the offence of intimidation of voters, there must be a preconceived intention for the purpose of intimidating the officers or interrupting the election; Respublica v. Gibbs, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 429.

INTOL AND UTTOL. Toll or custom paid for things imported, or exported, or brought in and sold out. Tom.; Calv. Lex.

INTOXICATING DRINKS. See LIQUOR LAWS.

INTOXICATION. See DRUNKENNESS.

INTRASTATE COMMERCE. See COMMERCE; INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

INTRA VIRES. An act is said to be intra vires ("within the power") of a person or corporation when it is within the scope of his or its powers or authority. It is the opposite of ultra vires (q. v.).

INTRINSECUM SERVITIUM. Common and ordinary duties with the lord's court. Kenn. Glos. See FORINSEC.

INTRINSIC. The intrinsic value of a thing is its true, inherent, and essential value, not depending upon accident, place, or person, but the same everywhere and to every one. Bank of State of North Carolina v. Ford, 27 N. C. 698.

INTRODUCTION. That part of a writing in which are detailed those facts which elucidate the subject.

INTROMISSION. Dealing with stocks, goods, or cash of a principal coming into the hands of his agent, to be accounted for by the agent to his principal. 29 Eng. Law & Eq. 391. See AGENT.

INTRONISATION. In French Ecclesiastical Law. The installation of a bishop in his episcopal see. Clef des Lois Rom.; André.

INTRUDER. One who, on the death of the ancestor, enters on the land, unlawfully, before the heir can enter.

INTRUSION. The entry of a stranger after the determination of a particular estate of freehold, before the entry of him in reversion or remainder.

This entry and interposition of the stranger differs from an abatement in this, that an abatement is always to the prejudice of an heir or immediate devisee; an intrusion is always to the prejudice of him in remainder or reversion. 3 Bla. Com. 169; Fitzh. N. B. 203; Archb. Civ. Pl. 12; Dane, Abr. Index; 3 Steph. Com. 443.

The name of a writ brought by the owner of a fee simple, etc., against an intruder. New Nat. Brev. 453. Abolished by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 57.

INUNDATION. The overflow of waters by coming out of their bed.

Inundations may arise from three causes: from public necessity, as in defence of a place it may be necessary to dam the current of a stream, which will cause an inundation to the upper lands; they may be occasioned by an invincible force, as by the accidental fall of a rock in the stream, or by a natural flood or freshet; or they may result from the erection of works on the stream. In the first case, the injury caused by the inundation is to be compensated as other injuries done in war; in the second, as there was no fault of any one, the loss is to be borne by the unfortunate owner of the estate; in the last, when the riparian proprietor is injured by such works as alter the level of the water where it enters or where it leaves the property on which they are erected, the person injured may recover damages for the injury thus caused to his property by the inundation; 9 Co. 59; 1 B. & Ald. 258; Sumner v. Tileston, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 198; Bailey v. City of New York, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 531, 38 Am. Dec. 669; Tillotson v. Smith, 32 N. H. 90, 64 Am. Dec. 355; Merritt v. Parker, 1 N. J. L. 460; Williams v. Gale, 3 H. & J. (Md.) 231; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Nuetzel, 43 Ill. App. 108. See DAM; BACKWATER; IRRIGATION; WATERS; WATER COURSE.

INURE. To take effect; to result. See ENURE.

INUREMENT. Use; user; service to the use or benefit of a person; Dickerson v. Colgrove, 100 U. S. 583, 25 L. Ed. 618.

INVADIARE. To mortgage lands. Toml.

INVADIATIO (L. Lat.). A pledge or mortgage.

INVADIATUS. One who is under pledge; one who has had sureties or pledges given for him. Spel. Glos.

INVADING A JUDGE. Assaulting a judge. Patterson.

INVALID. Not valid; of no binding force.

INVASION. The entry of a country by a public enemy, making war. See INSURRECTION.

INVASIONES. The inquisition of serjeanties and knights' fees. Cowell; Calv. Lex.

INVECTA ET ILLATA (Lat.). In Civil Law. Things carried and brought in. Things brought into a building hired (arces), or into a hired estate in the city (prædium urbanum), which are held by a tacit mortgage for the rent. Voc. Jur. Utr.; Domat, Civ. Law.

INVENTIO. In the Civil Law. Finding; one of the modes of acquiring title to property by occupancy. Heinecc. lib. 2, tit. 1, 350.

In Old English Law. A thing found; as goods, or treasure-trove. Cowell. The plural, "inventiones," is also used.

INVENTION. See PATENT.

INVENTIONES. A word used in some ancient English charters to signify treasure-trove.

INVENTOR. One who contrives or produces a thing which did not before exist. One who makes an invention. The word is generally used to denote the author of such contrivances as are by law patentable. See PATENT.

INVENTORY. A list, schedule, or enumeration in writing, containing, article by article, the goods and chattels, rights and credits, and, in some cases, the land and tenements, of a person or persons. A conservatory act, which is made to ascertain the situation of an intestate's estate, the estate of an insolvent, and the like, for the purpose of securing it to those entitled to it.

When the inventory is made of goods and estates assigned or conveyed in trust, it must include all the property conveyed. It is prima facie evidence of the value as against the administrator; In re Childs, 5 Misc. 560, 26 N. Y. Supp. 721; In re Mullon, 74 Hun 358, 26 N. Y. Supp. 683.

In case of intestate estates, it is required to contain only the personal property, or that to which the administrator is entitled. The claims due to the estate ought to be separated; those which are desperate or bad ought to be so returned. The articles ought to be set down separately, as already mentioned, and separately valued. It is not the duty of an administrator to inventory property which was conveyed by his intestate in fraud of creditors; Gardner v. Gardner, 17 R. I. 751, 24 Atl. 785. The duty of having an appraisal and inventory made of a testator's estate, rests on the executor and not on the adult legatees; In re Curry's Will, 19 N. Y. Supp. 728. An item inserted in the inventory by mistake may be stricken out after it is sworn to; In re Payne, 78 Hun 292, 28 N. Y. Supp. 911.

The inventory is to be made in the presence of at least two of the creditors of the deceased, or legatees, or next of kin, or of two honest persons. The appraisers must sign it, and make oath or affirmation that the appraisement is just to the best of their knowledge. See, generally, 14 Vin. Abr. 465; Bac. Abr. Executors, etc. (E 11); Ayl. Par. 305; Com. Dig. Administration (B 7); 2 Add. Eccl. 319; Shoul. Ex. & Ad. 230; 2 Bla. Com. 514; Com. v. Bryan, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 128.

INVEST (Lat. investire, to clothe). To put in possession of a field upon taking the oath of fealty or fidelity to the prince or superior lord. Also, to lay out capital in some permanent form so as to produce an income.

The term would hardly apply to an active capital employed in banking; People v. Ins. Co., 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 358, 8 Am. Dec. 243. It would cover the loaning of money; Shoemaker v. Smith, 37 Ind. 122. Whenever a sum is represented by anything but money, it is invested; People v. Commissioners of Taxes, 23 N. Y. 242.

INVESTITURE. The act of giving possession of lands by actual seisin. The ceremonial introduction to some office of dignity.

When livery of seisin was made to a person by the common law, he was invested with the whole fee; this the foreign feudists, and sometimes our own law-writers, call investiture; but generally speaking, it is termed by the common-law writers the seisin of the fee. 2 Bla. Com. 209, 313; Fearn, Rem. 223, n. (z).

By the canon law, investiture was made per baculum et annulum, by the ring and crosier, which were regarded as symbols of the episcopal jurisdiction. Ecclesiastical and secular fiefs were governed by the same rule in this respect,—that previously to investiture neither a bishop, abbot, nor lay lord could take possession of a fief conferred upon him by the prince.

Pope Gregory VI. first disputed the right of sovereigns to give investiture of ecclesiastical fiefs, A. D. 1045; but Pope Gregory VII. carried on the dispute with much more vigor, A. D. 1073. He excommunicated the emperor Henry IV. The popes Victor III., Urban II., and Paul II. continued the contest. This dispute, it is said, cost Christendom sixty-three battles, and the lives of many millions of men. De Pradt.

INVESTIVE FACT. The fact by means of which a right comes into existence; e. g. a grant of a monopoly, the death of one's ancestor. Holland, Jur. 151.

INVESTMENT. A sum of money left for safekeeping, subject to order, and payable not in the specific money deposited, but in an equal sum; it may or may not bear interest, according to the agreement. In re Law's Estate, 144 Pa. 499, 22 Atl. 831, 14 L. R. A. 103; State v. McFetridge, 84 Wis. 473, 54 N. W. 11, 998, 20 L. R. A. 223.

As to investment of trust funds, see TRUSTEE.

INVIOABILITY. That which is not to be violated. The persons of ambassadors are inviolable. See AMBASSADOR; TELEGRAM.

INVITO. Against, or without the assent or consent; unwilling.

INVITO DEBITORE. Against the will of the debtor.

INVITO DOMINO (Lat.). In Criminal Law. Without the consent of the owner. In order to constitute larceny, the property stolen must be taken invito domino; this is the very essence of the crime. Cases of considerable difficulty arise when the owner has, for the purpose of detecting thieves, by himself or his agents, delivered the property taken, as to whether they are larcenies or not: the distinction seems to be this, that when the owner procures the property to be taken, it is not larceny; and when he merely leaves it in the power of the defendant to execute his original purpose of taking it, in the latter case it will be considered as taken invito domino; 2 Russ. Cr. 66, 105; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 666; Bac. Abr. Felony (C); 2 B. & P. 508. See LARCENY.

INVOICE. An account of goods or merchandise sent by merchants to their correspondents at home or abroad, in which the marks of each package, with other particulars, are set forth. Marsh. Ins. 408; Dane, Abr. Index. An invoice ought to contain a detailed statement, which should indicate the nature, quantity, quality, and prices of the things sold, deposited, etc.; 1 Pard. n. 248. See Graham v. Ins. Co., 2 Wash. C. C. 113, Fed. Cas. No. 5,674; Field v. Moulson, 2 Wash. C. C. 155, Fed. Cas. No. 4,770. Invoice carries no necessary implication of ownership, but accompanies goods consigned to a factor for sale, as well as in the case of a purchaser; Rolker v. Ins. Co., 4 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 76. See BILL OF LADING. Invoice Price. The prime cost, or invoice of the cost. Le Roy v. Ins. Co., 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 343.

An invoice is not evidence of a sale; it is a mere statement of the nature, quantity and cost or price of the things invoiced and is as appropriate to a bailment as to a sale; Dows v. Bank, 91 U. S. 618, 23 L. Ed. 214; In re Smith & Nixon Piano Co., 149 Fed. 113, 79 C. C. A. 53.

INVOLUNTARY. An involuntary act is that which is performed with constraint (q. v.), or with repugnance, or without the will to do it. An action is involuntary which is performed under duress. Wolffus, Inst. § 5.

INVOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER. See MANSLAUGHTER; HOMICIDE.

INVOLUNTARY SERVITUDE. These words, used in the 13th amendment of the United States constitution, have a larger meaning than slavery; Bailey v. Alabama, 219 U. S. 219, 31 Sup. Ct. 145, 55 L. Ed. 191. See SLAVERY; PEONAGE; 11 Col. L. Rev. 363.

I. O. U. See at beginning of letter I.

IOWA (an Indian word denoting "the place or final resting place"). The name of one of the states of the United States, being the sixteenth admitted to the Union.

This state was admitted to the Union by an act of congress approved December 28, 1846.

IPSISSIMIS VERBIS (Lat.). In the identical words: opposed to substantially. Townsend v. Jemison, 7 How. (U. S.) 719, 12 L. Ed. 880; Summons v. State, 5 Ohio St. 346.

IPSO FACTO (Lat.). By the fact itself. By the mere fact. A proceeding ipso facto void is one which has not prima facie validity, but is void ab initio.

IPSO JURE (Lat.). By the operation of law. By mere law.

IPSWICH, DOMESDAY OF. The earliest extant record of any borough court with elective officers sitting regularly and administering a customary law of the sea. Black Book of Admiralty, Vol. II. It was abolished by 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 76. Its twelve "capital portmen" were elected from the most fit, wealthy and discreet of the judges.

IRADE. A decree of the Sultan.

IRELAND. See UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

IRON SAFE CLAUSE. See INSURANCE.

IRRECUSABLE. A term used to indicate a certain class of contractual obligations recognized by the law which are imposed upon a person without his consent and without regard to any act of his own. They are distinguished from recusable obligations which are the result of a voluntary act on the part of a person on whom they are imposed by law. A clear example of an irrecusable obligation is the obligation imposed on every man not to strike another without some lawful excuse. A recusable obligation is based upon some act of a person bound, which is a condition precedent to the genesis of the obligation. These terms were first suggested by Prof. Wigmore in 8 Harv. Law Rev. 200. See Harr. Contr. 6, where this classification is very fully discussed. See CONTRACTUAL OBLIGATION.

IRREGULARITY. The doing or not doing that in the conduct of a suit at law, which, conformably with the practice of the court, ought or ought not to be done. Doe v. Harter, 2 Ind. 252. The term is usually applied to such informality as does not render invalid the act done; thus an irregular distress for rent due is not illegal ab initio.

A party entitled to complain of irregularity should except to it previously to taking any step by him in the cause; Lofft 323, 333; because the taking of any such step is a waiver of any irregularity; 1 B. & P. 342. See ABATEMENT.

The court will, on motion, set aside proceedings for irregularity. On setting aside a judgment and execution for irregularity, they have power to impose terms on the defendant, and will restrain him from bringing an action of trespass, unless a strong case of damage appears. 1 Chitty, Bail. 133, n. And see Baldw. 246.

IRRELEVANCY. The quality or state of being inapplicable or impertinent to a fact or argument.

Irrelevancy, in an answer, consists in statements which are not material to the decision of the case; such as do not form or tender any material issue. People v. McCumber, 18 N. Y. 315, 321, 72 Am. Dec. 515.

IRRELEVANT EVIDENCE. That which does not support the issue, and which, of course, must be excluded. See EVIDENCE.

IRREMOVABILITY. The status of a pauper in England, who cannot be legally removed from the parish or union in which he is receiving relief, notwithstanding that he has not acquired a settlement there. Thus a pauper who has resided in a parish during the whole of the preceding year is irremovable. Stat. 28 and 29 Vict. c. 79, § 8.

IRREPARABLE INJURY. As a ground for injunction, it is that which cannot be repaired, retrieved, put back again, atoned for. Indian River Steamboat Co. v. Trans. Co., 28 Fla. 387, 10 South. 480, 29 Am. St. Rep. 258; it does not necessarily mean that the injury is beyond the possibility of compensation in damages, nor that it must be very great; Newell v. Sass, 142 Ill. 104, 31 N. E. 176. See INJUNCTION.

IRREPLEVABLE. That cannot be replevied or delivered on sureties. Spelled, also, irreplevisable. Co. Litt. 145; 13 Edw. I. c. 2.

IRRESISTIBLE FORCE. A term applied to such an interposition of human agency as is, from its nature and power, absolutely uncontrollable; as, the inroads of a hostile army. Story, Bailm. § 25; Lois des Batim. pt. 2, c. 2, § 1. See INEVITABLE ACCIDENT.

IRRESISTIBLE IMPULSE. See INSANITY.

IRREVOCABLE. Which cannot be revoked or recalled. A power of attorney in which the attorney has an interest granted for consideration is irrevocable. See WILL; POWER OF ATTORNEY.

IRRIGATION. The operation of watering lands or causing water to flow over lands by artificial means for agricultural purposes.

"The word irrigation, in its primary sense, means a sprinkling or watering; but the best lexicographers give it an agricultural or special signification, thus: 'The watering of lands by drains or channels' (Worcester); 'The operation of causing water to flow over lands for nourishing plants' (Webster). The term irrigation as used in Colorado, in the constitution and statutes and judicial opinions, in view of the climate and soil, is in its special sense, to wit: 'The application of water to lands for the raising of agricultural crops and other products of the soil.'" Platte Water Co. v. Irrigation Co., 12 Colo. 529, 21 Pac. 711.

At common law the right of the riparian proprietor to divert the water of a stream for the purposes of irrigation was well recognized, and it was described as an artificial use of the water and not a natural use like taking the water for drinking, domestic purposes, and watering cattle, which would allow the use of all the water in the stream. A riparian owner could use for domestic purposes and watering cattle as much of the water of the stream as he chose, and if he found it necessary, take all the water in the stream, but in using the water for irrigation he was allowed to take only a reasonable amount of it and could not diminish the flow of the stream, so as to cause loss to other riparian owners; Gould, Waters 217; Kinney, Irrig. § 66; Tolle v. Correth, 31 Tex. 362, 98 Am. Dec. 543 and note; Fleming v. Davis, 37 Tex. 173; Tyler v. Wilkinson, 4 Mas. 400, Fed. Cas. No. 14,312; Ingraham v. Hutchinson, 2 Conn. 584.

This doctrine of the common law was sufficient for any irrigation that had been found necessary in England or in the United States east of the Mississippi River. But in what was once known as the Great American Desert and is now called the Arid Region west of the Mississippi, "there has grown up or evolved out of the necessities of the people and the exigencies of the communities interested, a great body of law, custom, regulation, and judicial interpretation. These statutes in general form the principle of prior appropriation as wrought out by the earlier miners, and embodied in federal law, and then by the states and territories, being steadily sustained by the courts, with a few exceptions, as the common law of an arid region such as ours. The development of the beneficial use of water has of course modified the practice of prior appropriations to a first or prior pro rata share of the natural waters, when taken from bed or source for industrial purposes;" Senate Report on Irrigation, 1890.

After the discovery of gold in California had brought great numbers of people to that region, the miners developed a sort of code of their own, called the Mining Customs, which in 1851 were recognized by the legislature of California and made a part of the law of the state. By these customs a new principle in water rights was developed, called the Law of Priority of Appropriation, by which the person who first uses the water of a stream is by virtue of priority of occupation entitled to hold the same, and may use all the water in the stream for the purpose of carrying on his mining operations; Kinney, Irrig. § 104; Geertson v. Barrack, 3 Idaho, 344, 29 Pac. 42. This doctrine beginning in the Mining Customs and sanctioned by the legislature of California and the supreme court of that state, was afterwards approved by the supreme court of the United States, and congress not only passed acts which sanctioned the doctrine as regarded mines, but extended it to all other beneficial uses or purposes for which water may be essential, as irrigation for the purposes of agriculture and horticulture and to milling, manufacturing, and municipal purposes, in the Arid Region.

The rights of a riparian owner to the use of the water flowing by his land are not the same in the arid states of the west as they are in the eastern states. These rights have been altered by many of the western states by their conditions and laws because of the totally different circumstances in which their inhabitants are placed; Clark v. Nash, 198 U. S. 361, 25 Sup. Ct. 676, 49 L. Ed. 1085, 4 Ann. Cas. 1171.

In order to make an appropriation of water valid under the Arid Region doctrine, there must be a bona fide intention to use the water for some beneficial purpose; Davis v. Gale, 32 Cal. 33, 91 Am. Dec. 554; Woolman v. Garringer, 1 Mont. 543; Dick v. Caldwell, 14 Nev. 167; Munroe v. Ivie, 2 Utah 535; Ft. Morgan Land & Canal Co. v. Ditch Co., 18 Colo. 1, 30 Pac. 1032, 36 Am. St. Rep. 259. The intention to appropriate must be shown by the work and labor usual in such enterprises to accomplish the end. If there is no actual intention to appropriate the water for a beneficial purpose, or if there is unnecessary delay in the completion of the works for the appropriation of the water, a subsequent appropriator who diverts and applies the water for a beneficial purpose has the superior right; Ball v. Kehl, 87 Cal. 505, 25 Pac. 679; Feliz v. Los Angeles, 58 Cal. 80; Basey v. Gallagher, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 682, 22 L. Ed. 452; Jennison v. Kirk, 98 U. S. 453, 25 L. Ed. 240. A ditch or canal company may appropriate or divert water and then sell it to other persons, provided the water is all applied to beneficial purposes by the persons to whom it is sold; Combs v. Ditch Co., 17 Colo. 146, 28 Pac. 966, 31 Am. St. Rep. 275. It is also necessary to the validity of an appropriation that the water be used continuously. If allowed to run to waste for any length of time it will be treated as abandoned and open for a fresh appropriation. But water once lawfully appropriated is not lost by a change in its use;

Hill v. Smith, 27 Cal. 476; Sims v. Smith, 7 Cal. 148, 68 Am. Dec. 233.

All persons in the Arid Region competent to hold lands have also the right to appropriate water; Lobdell v. Hall, 3 Nev. 507; Quigley v. Birdseye, 11 Mont. 439, 28 Pac. 741. But under the Arid Region doctrine an appropriator need not necessarily be a riparian owner of land. The right to appropriate is not an incident of the soil, but is simply a possessory right acquired by valid appropriation; Strickler v. City of Colorado Springs, 16 Colo. 61, 26 Pac. 13, 25 Am. St. Rep. 245; Bloom v. West, 3 Colo. App. 212, 32 Pac. 846; Barnes v. Sabron, 10 Nev. 217; Basey v. Gallagher, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 670, 22 L. Ed. 452; Broder v. Min. Co., 101 U. S. 276, 25 L. Ed. 790; Titcomb v. Kirk, 51 Cal. 288; Kinney, Irrig. § 156.

A provision that no land shall be included in an irrigation district, except such as may be benefited by the system of irrigation used in that district, means that the land must be such that it may be substantially benefited. It is not sufficient that such irrigation creates an opportunity thereafter to use the land for a new kind of crop, while not substantially benefiting it for the cultivation of the old kind, which it has produced in reasonable quantities, and with ordinary certainty, without the aid of irrigation; Fallbrook Irrigation Dist. v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 17 Sup. Ct. 56, 41 L. Ed. 369.

In order to make an appropriation valid there must be sufficient notice to the public of the intention to appropriate; and the notice may be in any form which gives the name of the appropriator and a description of the stream and of the purposes for which the water is to be taken; Osgood v. Min. Co., 56 Cal. 571.

In Krall v. U. S., 79 Fed. 241, 24 C. C. A. 543, it was held that the previous establishment of a government reservation below the point of appropriation does not affect the right, except so far as the waters of the stream have been previously appropriated for the use of such reservation. But Gilbert, J., dissented on the authority of Sturr v. Beck, 133 U. S. 541, 10 Sup. Ct. 350, 33 L. Ed. 761, which held that a homestead entryman on land over which the waters of a creek flowed had the right to the natural flow of the water as against a subsequent appropriation.

The rights of an appropriator of water for irrigating purposes are not interfered with by a subsequent appropriation for mining purposes at a point further up the stream, unless the use for the latter purpose impairs the value of the water for the purpose of irrigation; Wyatt v. Irr. Co., 1 Colo. App. 480, 29 Pac. 906; but the mine user is liable to the lower user for injury to the land by debris discharged from the mill; Montana Co. v. Gehring, 75 Fed. 384, 21 C. C. A. 414.

The liability of an irrigation company for failing to supply a certain volume of water to the holders of water rights, according to contract, cannot be determined on the theory that the company is a common carrier; Wyatt v. Irrigation Co., 1 Colo. App. 480, 29 Pac. 906.

Although in the Arid Region the doctrine of appropriation generally prevails, the old common-law doctrine of the reasonable use of water by a riparian owner for irrigation is not entirely abolished in all the jurisdictions. In some states the common-law doctrine has been entirely abolished, but in others it exists side by side with the doctrine of appropriation, and is applied usually in the case of riparian owners who, making no claim to an appropriation, wish to use some of the waters of a stream for irrigation; Kinney, Irrig. 273.

By statute in many of the arid and semi-arid states the construction of reservoirs is directly encouraged, and the federal government has constructed numerous reservoirs. Early customs required merely the taking of the water and its application to a beneficial use. Early legislation required the posting of an official notice at the point of reversion and the recording of the same with the county clerk. Now a state engineer has general supervision over the waters of the state. No appropriation can be made except under a permit issued by him, and the applicant must file a map. The states are divided into irrigation divisions embracing the entire branch of a given stream. Each division is divided into districts for administrative purposes. They generally embrace some particular tributary of the main stream. The states in the exercise of their police power have assumed the entire control of the distribution. The amount of water to which an appropriator is entitled, and the order in which he shall be served are governed by the courts and the boards. The measurement of water is one of the most complicated subjects, since modern science has not yet satisfactorily solved the problem. From the nature of the business of transporting water many ditch companies have been formed; they rarely have competition, and in order that their rates may not be confiscatory, it is generally provided that they shall be fixed by some governing board to insure reasonableness.

The magnitude of many irrigation enterprises places them beyond the ability of individuals as well as of the average corporation, and this led to the adoption in California in 1887 of what is known as the Wright Act, which has been followed in several of the other states. Its purpose is the organization of irrigation districts; as such it is a public corporation organized for the purpose of constructing and operating improvements that are for the public welfare; its officers are public officials; Fallbrook Irr. Dist. v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 17 Sup. Ct. 56, 41 L. Ed. 369. By the United States Reclamation Act of June 17, 1902, irrigation was greatly aided; it provided that all money received from the sale of public land in the arid and semi-arid states, except Texas, should be used in the construction of irrigation works.

In developing irrigation projects in connection with which there is a considerable proportion of land in private ownership, it has been found necessary to provide some means of dealing with the private owners as a body; the secretary of the interior has therefore required that the settlers who will ultimately receive water from the projected system shall form an incorporated association. Hence laws have been passed in several of the states providing for the incorporation of water users' associations; Col. Sessions 1905; Kansas v. Colorado, 206 U. S. 46, 27 Sup. Ct. 655, 51 L. Ed. 956.

For the rights of priority to take water from natural streams, see Colorado Acts, 1881, and Wyoming Acts, 1891, which have furnished the basis of the two systems generally followed.

See Mills, Irrigation Manual.

On a bill filed by Kansas to restrain Colorado and certain corporations organized under its laws from diverting the waters of the Arkansas river for the irrigation of lands in Colorado, thereby preventing the customary flow of its waters into and through Kansas (to which a demurrer was filed), it was held that it would not be unreasonable to enforce against Colorado its own local rule as to the use of flowing water for irrigation, yet as it did not appear that the detriment to Kansas, while substantial, was so great as to make the appropriation by Colorado an inequitable apportionment between the two states, the bill was dismissed, without prejudice to the right of Kansas to begin new proceedings whenever it shall appear that the substantial interests of Kansas are being injured to the extent of destroying the equitable apportionment of benefits between the two states; Kansas v. Colorado, 206 U. S. 46, 27 Sup. Ct. 655, 51 L. Ed. 956.

ISLAND. A piece of land surrounded by water.

When new islands arise in the open sea, they belong to the first occupant; but when they are newly formed so near the shore as to be within the boundary of some state, they belong to that state.

Islands which arise in rivers when in the middle of the stream belong in equal parts to the riparian proprietors. When they arise mostly on one side, they belong to the riparian owners up to the middle of the stream.

The owner in fee of the bed of a river or other submerged land is the owner of any bar, island, or dry land which may be subsequently formed thereon; St. Louis v. Rutz, 138 U. S. 226, 11 Sup. Ct. 337, 34 L. Ed. 941.

Where an island springs up in a navigable river, and by accretion to the shores of the island and the mainland, they are united, the owner of the mainland is not entitled to the island, but only to such accretion as formed on his land; Cooley v. Golden, 117 Mo. 33, 23 S. W. 100, 21 L. R. A. 300.

If an island springs up in a navigable stream it belongs to the sovereign, and not to the owner of the land on either of the banks of the stream; Glassell v. Hansen, 135 Cal. 547, 67 Pac. 964; if there be an accretion to plaintiff's land which gradually extends to the island, the owner of the land would acquire the island with the accretions; id. A mussel bed over which the water flows at every tide is not an island, but should be denominated flats; King v. Young, 76 Me. 76, 49 Am. Rep. 596. In many states lands totally or partially submerged are made the subject of grant by the sovereign in order that they may be reclaimed for useful purposes.

An island that arises in the bed of a stream usually first presents itself as a sand bar; Cox v. Arnold, 129 Mo. 337, 31 S. W. 592, 50 Am. St. Rep. 450; Glassell v. Hansen, 135 Cal. 547, 67 Pac. 964; Holman v. Hodges, 112 Ia. 714, 84 N. W. 950, 58 L. R. A. 673, 84 Am. St. Rep. 367; a bar, before it will support vegetation of any kind, may become valuable for fishing, hunting, as a shooting park, for the harvest of ice, for pumping sand, etc. If further deposits of alluvion upon it would make it more valuable, the law of accretion should still apply; Fowler v. Wood, 73 Kan. 511, 85 Pac. 763, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 162, 117 Am. St. Rep. 534.

See ACCESSION; ACCRETION; BOUNDARY.

ISSINT (Norm. Fr. thus, so). A term formerly used to introduce a statement that special matter already pleaded amounts to a denial.

In actions founded on deeds, the defendant may, instead of pleading non est factum in the common form, allege any special matter which admits the execution of the writing in question, but which, nevertheless, shows that it is not in law his deed, and may conclude with, "and so it is not his deed;" as, that the writing was delivered to A B as an escrow, to be delivered over on certain conditions, which have not been complied with, "and so it is not his act," or that at the time of making the writing the defendant was a feme covert, "and so it is not her act;" Bac. Abr. Pleas (H 3), (I 2); Gould, Pl. § 64.

An example of this form of plea, which is sometimes called the special general issue, occurs in Bauer v. Roth, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 83.

ISSUABLE. In Practice. Leading or tending to an issue. An issuable plea is one upon which the plaintiff can take issue and proceed to trial.

ISSUABLE TERMS. Hilary and Trinity Terms were so called from the making up of the issues, during those terms, for the assizes, that they might be tried by the judges, who generally went on circuit to try such issues after these two terms. But for town causes all four terms were issuable. 3 Bla. Com. 350; 1 Tidd, Pr. 121. Since the Judicature Acts of 1873 and 1875 this distinction has become obsolete.

ISSUE. In Realty Law. Descendants. All persons who have descended from a common ancestor. 3 Ves. Ch. 257; 19 id. 547; 1 Roper, Leg. 90.

In a will it may be held to have a more restricted meaning, to carry out the testator's intention; 7 Ves. Ch. 522; 1 Roper, Leg. 90. 2 Wills. Exec. 386, n.; but it has been held that a devise to "issue" means prima facie legitimate issue, and an intention to include illegitimates must appear from the will itself without resort to extrinsic evidence; Flora v. Anderson, 67 Fed. 182. See Bac. Abr. Curtesy (D), Legatee.

If the term be used in the sense of heirs, that is, as comprehending a class to take by inheritance, it is to be interpreted as a term of limitation, and brings the case within the Rule in Shelley's case; and this is the interpretation that prima facie will be given it; Robins v. Quinliven, 79 Pa. 333. It means, prima facie, "heirs of the body"; Stayman v. Paxson, 221 Pa. 446, 70 Atl. 803; but if the context indicate a different intention, it will be sustained as a word of purchase; 2 Wms. R. P. 603. In a deed it is always taken as a word of purchase; Taylor v. Taylor, 63 Pa. 483, 3 Am. Rep. 565; 4 Term R. 299; 2 Ves. Sr. 681; 2 Wms. R. P. 604.

In Pleading. A single, certain, and material point, deduced by the pleadings of the parties, which is affirmed on the one side and denied on the other.

The entry of the pleadings. 1 Chitty, Pl. 630.

Several connected matters of fact may go to make up the point in issue.

An actual issue is one formed in an action brought in the regular manner, for the purpose of trying a question of right between the parties.

A collateral issue is one framed upon some matter not directly in the line of the pleadings; as, for example, upon the identity of one who pleads diversity in bar of execution. 4 Bla. Com. 396.

A common issue is that which is formed upon the plea of non est factum to an action of covenant broken.

This is so called because it denies the deed only, and not the breach, and does not put the whole declaration in issue, and because there is no general issue to this form of action. 1 Chitty, Pl. 482; Gould, Pl. c. 6, pt. 1, § 7.

An issue in fact is one in which the truth of some fact is affirmed or denied.

In general, it consists of a direct affirmative allegation on one side and a direct negative on the other. Co. Litt. 126 a; Bac. Abr. Pleas (G 1); 2 W. Bla. 1312; Simonton v. Winter, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 149, 8 L. Ed. 75. But an affirmative allegation which completely excludes the truth of the preceding may be sufficient: 1 Wils. 6. Thus, the general issue in a writ of right (called the mise) is formed by two affirmatives; the demandant claiming a greater right than the tenant, and the tenant a greater than the demandant. 3 Bla. Com. 195, 305. And in an action of dower the count merely demands the third part of [ ] acres of land, etc., as the dower of the demandant of the endowment of A B, heretofore the husband, etc., and the general issue is that A B was not seised of such estate, etc., and that he could not endow the demandant thereof, etc.; which mode of denial, being argumentative, would not, in general, be allowed. 2 Saund. 329.

A feigned issue is one formed in a fictitious action, under direction of the court, for the purpose of trying before a jury some question of fact.

Such issues are generally ordered by a court of equity, to ascertain the truth of a disputed fact. They are also frequently used in courts of law, by the consent of the parties, to determine some disputed rights without the formality of pleading; and by this practice much time and expense are saved in the decision of a cause; 3 Bla. Com. 452. Suppose, for example, it is desirable to settle a question of the validity of a will in a court of equity.

For this purpose an action is brought, in which the plaintiff by a fiction declares that he laid a wager for a sum of money with the defendant, for example, that a certain paper is the last will and testament of A, then avers it is his will, and therefore demands the money; the defendant admits the wager, but avers that it is not the will of A; and thereupon that issue is joined, which is directed out of chancery, to be tried; and thus the verdict of the jurors at law determines the fact in the court of equity. A feigned issue is also formed for trial by a jury in certain interpleader proceedings; as in proceedings to test the title to goods levied upon by the sheriff and claimed by a third party.

The name is a misnomer, inasmuch as the issue itself is upon a real, material point in question between the parties, and the circumstances only are fictitious. It is a contempt of the court in which the action is brought to bring such an action, except under the direction of some court; 4 Term 402.

A formal issue is one which is framed according to the rules required by law, in an artificial and proper manner.

A general issue is one which denies in direct terms the whole declaration: as, for example, where the defendant pleads nil debet (that he owes the plaintiff nothing), or nil disseisin (no disseisin committed). 3 Greenl. Ev. § 9; Steph. Pl. 220; 3 Bla. Com. 305. See GENERAL ISSUE.

An immaterial issue is one formed on some immaterial matter, which, though found by the verdict, will not determine the merits of the cause, and will leave the court at a loss how to give judgment. 2 Wms. Saund. 319, n. 6. See IMMATERIAL ISSUE.

An informal issue is one which arises when a material allegation is traversed in an improper or inartificial manner. Bac. Abr. Pleas (G 2), (N 5); 2 Wms. Saund. 319 a, n. 7. The defect is cured by verdict, by the statute 32 Hen. VIII. c. 30.

A material issue is one properly formed on some material point which will, when decided, settle the question between the parties.

A special issue is one formed by the defendant's selecting any one substantial point and resting the weight of his cause upon that. It is contrasted with the general issue. Comyns, Dig. Pleader (R 1, 2).

ISSUE ROLL. In English Law. The name of a record which contained an entry of issue as soon as it was found. It was abolished by the rules of Hilary Term, 1834. Moz. & W. Dict.

ISSUES. In English Law. The goods and profits of the lands of a defendant against whom a writ of distringas or distress infinite has been issued, taken by virtue of such writ, are called issues. 3 Bla. Com. 280; 1 Chitty, Crim. Law 351.

ISSUES ON SHERIFFS. Fines and amercements inflicted on sheriffs for neglects and defaults, levied out of the issues and profits of their lands. Toml.

ISTIMRAR. Continuance; perpetuity; especially a farm or lease granted in perpetuity by government or a zemindar (q. v.). Wilson's Gloss. Ind.

ISTIMRARDAR. The holder of a perpetual lease. Moz. & W.

ITA EST (Lat.). So it is.

Among the civilians, when a notary dies, leaving his register, an officer who is authorized to make official copies of his notarial acts writes, instead of the deceased notary's name, which is required when he is living, ita est.

ITA QUOD (Lat.). The name or condition in a submission, which is usually introduced by these words, "so as the award be made of and upon the premises," which, from the first words, is called the ita quod.

When the submission is with an ita quod, the arbitrator must make an award of all matters submitted to him of which he had notice, or the award will be entirely void; Cro. Jac. 200; 2 Vern. Ch. 109; Rolle, Abr. Arbitrament (L, 9).

ITALY. A constitutional monarchy of Europe in which the executive power belongs exclusively to the sovereign. He is irresponsible. He appoints his ministers, who are responsible. The signature of one of them is necessary to the validity of royal decrees. The king shares the legislative power with the parliament, which consists of two chambers, the senate and the chamber of deputies. The senate consists of princes of the blood and an unlimited number of senators over forty years of age who are qualified under twenty-one different categories, for instance, having held high office, attained celebrity in science, literature, etc., and are nominated by the king for life. Their number now exceeds three hundred. It is the highest court of justice in the trial of political offences and the impeachment of ministers. The chamber of deputies consists of five hundred and eight members, who are elected for five years in single-member constituencies by manhood suffrage with certain educational and property tests.

The judiciary system is modeled on that of France (see COURTS OF FRANCE) with Courts of Cassation in five principal cities, twenty appeal court districts, and one hundred and sixty tribunal districts etc. In thirteen principal towns there are Pretóri having exclusive penal jurisdiction. Encycl. Br.

ITEM (Lat.). Also; likewise; in like manner; again; a second time. These are the various meanings of this Latin adverb.

It is used to introduce a new paragraph, or chapter, or division; also to denote a particular in an account. It is used when any article or clause is added to a former, as if there were here a new beginning. Du Cange. Hence the rule that a clause in a will introduced by item shall not influence or be influenced by what precedes or follows, if it be sensible, taken independently; 1 Salk. 239; or if there is no plain intent that it should be taken in connection, in which cases it may be construed conjunctively, in the sense of and, or also, in such a manner as to connect sentences. If, therefore, a testator bequeath a legacy to Peter, payable out of a particular fund or charged upon a particular estate, item a legacy to James, James's legacy as well as Peter's will be a charge upon the same property; 1 Bro. C. C. 482; Cro. Car. 368.

ITER (Lat.). In Civil Law. A way; a right of way belonging as a servitude to an estate in the country (prædium rusticum). The right of way was of three kinds: 1, iter, a right to walk, or ride on horseback, or in a litter; 2, actus, a right to drive a beast or vehicle; 3, via, a full right of way, comprising right to walk or ride, or drive beast or carriage. Heineccius, Elem. Jur. Civ. § 408. Or, as some think, they were distinguished by the width of the objects which could be rightfully carried over the way; e. g. via, 8 feet; actus, 4 feet, etc. Mackeldey, Civ. Law § 290; Bracton 232; 4 Bell; H. L. 390.

In Old English Law. A journey, especially a circuit made by a justice in eyre, or itinerant justice, to try causes according to his own mission. Du Cange; Bracton, lib. 3, c. 11; Britton, c. 2; Cowell. See EYRE.

ITINERANT. Wandering; travelling; those who make circuits. See EYRE.

JACENS. In abeyance. Toml.

JACENS HÆREDITAS. See HÆREDITAS JACENS.

JACET IN ORE. It lies in the mouth. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 5, § 49.

JACOBUS. A gold coin an inch and three-eighths in diameter, in value about twenty-five shillings, so called from James I., in whose reign it was first coined.

It was also called broad, laurel, and broad-picce. Its value is sometimes put at twenty-four shillings, but Macaulay speaks of a salary of eight thousand Jacobuses as equivalent to ten thousand pounds sterling. Hist. Eng. ch. xv. A cut of this coin showing both sides will be found in the Century Dictionary, sub v. broad.

JACTITATION. Boasting of something which is challenged by another. Moz. & W.

The word is used principally with reference to jactitation of marriage, which title see. In Louisiana, it is the name used as an action for slander of title to land.

Jactitation of right to a seat in a church appears to be the boasting by a man that he has a right or title to a pew or sitting in a church to which he has legally no title.

Jactitation of tithes is the boasting by a man that he is entitled to certain tithes, to which he has legally no title. See Rog. Ecc. L. 482.

JACTITATION OF MARRIAGE. In English Ecclesiastical Law. The untruthful boasting by an individual that he or she has married another, from which it may happen that they will acquire the reputation of being married to each other. 3 Bla. Com. 93. It was held that the boasting must be malicious as well as false; 2 Hagg. 220, 280.

The ecclesiastical courts formerly might in such cases entertain a libel by the party injured, and on proof of the facts enjoin the wrong-doer to perpetual silence, and, as a punishment, make him pay the costs; 3 Bla. Com. 93; 2 Hagg. Cons. 423, 285; 2 Chitty, Pr. 459.

The jurisdiction of such a suit would now be in the Probate, Divorce, and Matrimonial Division, but the remedy is now rarely resorted to, as, in general, since Lord Hardwicke's act (1766), there is sufficient certainty in the forms of legal marriage in England to prevent any one being in ignorance whether he or she is really married or not—a reproach which, however, was often made against the law of Scotland. The Scotch suit of a declarator of putting to silence, which is equivalent to jactitation of marriage, is often resorted to, a notorious instance of its use being that in the Yelverton marriage case; 1 Sc. Sess. Cas. 3d ser. 161.

JACTURA (Lat. jaceo, to throw). A jettison (q. v.).

JACTUS (Lat.). A throwing goods overboard to lighten or save the vessel, in which case the goods so sacrificed are a proper subject for general average. Dig. 14. 2, de lege Rhodia de jactu; 1 Pardessus, Collec. des Lois marit. 104; Kuricke, Inst. Marit. Hanseat. tit. 8; 1 Par. Mar. Law 288.

JACTUS LAPILLI (Lat. the throwing down of a stone). In Civil Law. A method of preventing the acquisition of title by prescription by interrupting the possession. The real owner of land on which another was building, and thereby acquiring title by usucapion (q. v.), could challenge the intrusion and interrupt the prescription by throwing down a stone from the building before witnesses called upon to note the transaction.

JAIL. See GAOL; PRISON.

JAMMUNDLING, JAMUNDILINGI. Freemen who delivered themselves and property to the protection of a more powerful person, in order to avoid military service and other burdens. Spelman, Gloss. Also, a species of serfs among the Germans. Du Cange. The same as commendati.

JANITOR. A person employed to take charge of rooms or buildings, to see that they are kept clean and in order, to lock and unlock them, and generally to care for them. Fagan v. City of New York, 84 N. Y. 352. See FLAT.

Formerly, a door-keeper, Fleta, lib. 2, c. 24.

JAPAN. An empire of Asia, consisting of four islands lying in the Pacific Ocean east of China, Korea, and Siberia. The government is a monarchy administered by an emperor, and what may be termed a cabinet and privy council. The constitution was promulgated in 1889. There is an imperial parliament consisting of two houses.

The house of peers consists of princes and marquises (hereditary); counts, viscounts and barons elected by their respective orders in the maximum ratio of one to every five; men of education or distinguished service nominated by the emperor; and representatives of the highest tax payers, elected one for each election district by their own class. The lower house is elected by the people, partly by incorporated cities, and partly by the forty-three election districts. A general election for the upper house occurs every seven years, and for the lower house every four years. The great council or cabinet consists of ten members, the nine ministers who are heads of departments and the minister president of state who presides over them. These constitute the cabinet.

Between them and the crown is a small body of men known as the "Elder Statesmen," survivors of those who raised Japan to her present high position among nations. There is also a council of a variable number of distinguished men, who debate and advise upon matters referred to them by the crown.

For an extended review of the "Administration of Justice in Japan," see a series of articles by Professor John H. Wigmore, 36 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 437, 491, 571, 628.

JEOPFAILE (L. Fr.). I have failed; I am in error.

Certain statutes are called statutes of amendments and jeofailes, because, where a pleader perceives any slip in the form of his proceedings, and acknowledges the error (jeofaile), he is at liberty, by those statutes, to amend it. The amendment, however, is seldom made; but the benefit is attained by the court's overlooking the exception; 3 Bla. Com. 407; 1 Saund. 228, n. 1; Doct. Pl. 297; Dane, Abr. These statutes do not apply to indictments.

JEOPARDY. The situation of a prisoner when a trial jury is sworn and impanelled to try his case upon a valid indictment, and such jury has been charged with his deliverance. State v. McKee, 1 Bail. (S. C.) 655, 21 Am. Dec. 499; Weinzorpflin v. State, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 191; McFadden v. Com., 23 Pa. 12, 62 Am. Dec. 308.

It is the peril in which a prisoner is put when he is regularly charged with a crime before a tribunal properly organized and competent to try him. Com. v. Fitzpatrick, 121 Pa. 109, 15 Atl. 466, 1 L. R. A. 451, 6 Am. St. Rep. 757.

This is the sense in which the term is used in the United States constitution: "no person . . . shall be subject for the same offence to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb," U. S. Const. art. V. Amend., and in the statutes or constitutions of most if not all of the states.

As commonly used it must be distinguished from former acquittal and former conviction. Obviously it includes the rules governed by those two terms, but there may be a former jeopardy without a previous acquittal or conviction, and this was intended by the court in Com. v. Fitzpatrick, 121 Pa. 109, 15 Atl. 466, 1 L. R. A. 451, 6 Am. St. Rep. 757, where it was said: "The plea of former jeopardy stands on narrower, more technical, and less substantial grounds. It alleges only that there might have been a conviction or acquittal if the judge trying the case had not made a mistake of law, which prevented a verdict." It might be said that former jeopardy is the genus. See 10 Va. L. Reg. 410, and note.

This provision in the constitution of the United States binds only the United States; Fox v. Ohio, 5 How. (U. S.) 410, 12 L. Ed. 213; State v. Shirer, 20 S. C. 392; 1 Bish. N.

Cr. L. § 981. At one time it was not uniformly so considered, and it was held contra, Com. v. Purchase, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 521, 13 Am. Dec. 452; People v. Goodwin, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 187, 9 Am. Dec. 203; State v. Moor, Walker (Miss.) 134, 12 Am. Dec. 541. This was the same fluctuation of judicial opinion as to the effect of the early constitutional amendments which affected other questions. See EMINENT DOMAIN. In this country this rule depends in most cases on constitutional provisions. In England it is said to be one of the universal maxims of the common law; 4 Bla. Com. 335; and Stephen in repeating the expression adds in a note that although Blackstone uses the term "jeopardy of his life," it is not confined to capital offences, and extends to misdemeanors; 4 Steph. Com. 384; 3 B. & C. 502. In a leading case where the question was considered whether the rule applied when a jury had been discharged for want of agreement it was held that the court had authority in its discretion to discharge the jury in such a case, and that such action did not operate as an acquittal. This is also the prevailing opinion in this country. See infra. In the English case referred to, it was said by Cockburn, C. J., that in considering the question of the right to discharge a jury in such case they were not dealing with one of those principles which lie at the foundation of the law, but with a matter of practice, which has fluctuated at various times, and "even at the present day may perhaps be considered as not finally settled;" L. R. 1 Q. B. 289. This would seem to be a more reasonable construction of the language of Lord Cockburn than that sometimes put upon it. See 1 Bish. N. Cr. L. § 982. That which he characterized as a mere matter of practice was not the existence of the doctrine of jeopardy, but whether it was applicable.

The constitutional provision, which refers to "life or limb," properly interpreted, extends only to treason and felonies, but it has usually been extended to misdemeanors; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 990; McCauley v. State, 26 Ala. 135; but not to proceedings for the recovery of penalties, nor to applications for sureties of the peace; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 990.

A person is in legal jeopardy when he is put upon trial, before a court of competent jurisdiction, upon indictment or information which is sufficient in form and substance to sustain a conviction, and a jury has been charged with his deliverance; Cooley, Const. Lim., 4th ed. 404; approved in O'Brien v. Com., 9 Bush (Ky.) 333, 15 Am. Rep. 715; Ex parte Fenton, 77 Cal. 183, 19 Pac. 267.

The discharge of a competent jury before rendering verdict without defendant's consent, express or implied, or without sufficient cause, operates as an acquittal; Ex parte Ulrich, 42 Fed. 587; People v. Warden of City Prison, 202 N. Y. 138, 95 N. E. 729; Com.

v. Hart, 149 Mass. 7, 20 N. E. 310; Com. v. Fitzpatrick, 121 Pa. 109, 15 Atl. 466, 1 L. R. A. 451, 6 Am. St. Rep. 757; State v. Kinghorn, 56 Wash. 131, 105 Pac. 234, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 136; People v. Taylor, 117 Mich. 583, 76 N. W. 158; Jones v. State, 97 Ala. 77, 12 South. 274, 38 Am. St. Rep. 150; State v. Frisbie, 8 Okl. Cr. 406, 127 Pac. 1091.

The serious illness or insanity of the defendant, the illness, insanity, or death of the judge or a juror, engaged in the trial, the death of a juror's mother, misconduct of a juror, and upon judicial inquiry a finding that a juror is prejudiced, have been held to create a sufficient cause for the withdrawal of a juror and a postponement; State v. Richardson, 47 S. C. 166, 25 S. E. 220, 35 L. R. A. 238; Falls v. State, 60 Fla. 8, 53 South. 612, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1146; State v. Hansford, 76 Kan. 678, 92 Pac. 551, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 548; People v. Sharp, 163 Mich. 79, 127 N. W. 758; Hedger v. State, 144 Wis. 279, 128 N. W. 80.

The absence of a witness for the state is not sufficient, unless by consent of the accused, and his consent is not established by the mere fact that, being without counsel, he does not object to a postponement; State v. Richardson, 47 S. C. 166, 25 S. E. 220, 35 L. R. A. 238; nor does a prisoner's failure to object to the discharge of the jury operate as a consent to it; Ex parte Glenn, 111 Fed. 257; but where no express consent was given and the accused allowed a new trial and made no objection to the discharge until after verdict therein, he will be considered as consenting and plea of former jeopardy is bad; Morgan v. State, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 475. A jury may be discharged from rendering a verdict whenever the court is of the opinion that there is a manifest necessity for the act, or that the needs of public justice would otherwise be defeated, or is satisfied that the jurors are unable to reach an agreement, and the same will be no bar to a second trial; Dreyer v. Illinois, 187 U. S. 71, 23 Sup. Ct. 28, 47 L. Ed. 79; State v. Whitson, 111 N. C. 695, 16 S. E. 332; Com. v. Cody, 165 Mass. 133, 42 N. E. 575; State v. Barnes, 54 Wash. 493, 103 Pac. 792, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 932; People v. Horn, 70 Cal. 17, 11 Pac. 470; there are statutory provisions to the same effect: N. Y. Code Cr. Pr. § 430; Ala. Acts 1907, § 7314; Kan. Cr. Code § 208; Ohio R. S. § 7313; and Idaho R. S. § 7905.

Trial of the accused with his consent by a jury of more or less members than is legally required amounts to a nullity and on a new trial the plea of former jeopardy is bad; Cancemi v. People, 18 N. Y. 129; State v. Hudkins, 35 W. Va. 250, 13 S. E. 367.

Where, by statute, the state, with the permission of the presiding judge, is allowed an appeal it may take the same after a verdict of acquittal, upon the ground that it is a matter of procedure and that jeopardy has not yet attached; State v. Lee, 65 Conn. 265, 30 Atl. 1110, 27 L. R. A. 498, 48 Am. St. Rep. 202.

The discharge of a competent jury without defendant's consent, express or implied, without sufficient cause, operates as an acquittal; People v. Gardner, 62 Mich. 307, 29 N. W. 19; People v. Curtis, 76 Cal. 57, 17 Pac. 941; Gunter v. State, 83 Ala. 96, 3 South. 600.

But where the indictment was good and the judgment erroneously arrested, the verdict was held to be a bar; State v. Norvell, 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 24, 24 Am. Dec. 458.

After a jury has been impanelled and sworn in a criminal case, the trial cannot stop short of a verdict without the defendant's consent except for imperative reasons, such as the illness of a juror, the judge, or the defendant, the absence of a juror, or a disagreement. The absence of a witness for the state is not sufficient unless by consent of the accused, and his consent is not established by the mere fact that, being without counsel, he does not object to a postponement; State v. Richardson, 47 S. C. 166, 25 S. E. 220, 35 L. R. A. 238. The discharge of a jury on the last day of the term after they have for five days failed to agree upon a verdict, made against the objection of the defendant, bars another trial for the same offence; Com. v. Fitzpatrick, 121 Pa. 109, 15 Atl. 466, 1 L. R. A. 451, 6 Am. St. Rep. 757; contra, State v. Whitson, 111 N. C. 695, 16 S. E. 332; Ex parte Brown, 102 Ala. 179, 15 South. 602.

Where one of the jurors is discharged because of the death of his mother, and the court declared a mistrial, a plea of former jeopardy is not good; Stocks v. State, 91 Ga. 831, 18 S. E. 847.

An order of an examining magistrate, either committing or discharging the accused, is not a bar to a second hearing on the same charge; Ex parte Robinson, 108 Ala. 161, 18 South. 729.

Where a jury in a criminal case is discharged during the trial and the defendant subsequently put on trial before another jury, he is not twice put in jeopardy within the meaning of the fifth amendment to the United States Constitution; Simmons v. U. S., 142 U. S. 148, 12 Sup. Ct. 171, 35 L. Ed. 968; and in a later case it is said that a jury may be discharged from giving any verdict, whenever the court is of opinion that there is a manifest necessity for the act, or that the ends of public justice would otherwise be defeated, and may also order a trial before another jury, and a defendant is not thereby twice put in jeopardy; Thompson v. U. S., 155 U. S. 271, 15 Sup. Ct. 73, 39 L. Ed. 146. This case is quite in accord with an English decision made upon much consideration; L. R. 1 Q. B. 289; and Bishop, as the result of a very extended examination and citation of authorities, concludes: "But in England and Ireland, at present, and in most of our states, when a reasonable time for discussion and reflection has been given the jury, and they have in open court declared themselves unable to agree, and the judge is satisfied of the truth of the declaration, they may be discharged and the prisoner held to be tried anew. And this doctrine is applied as well in felony as in misdemeanor." Bish. Cr. L. § 1033. See JURY.

It has been held that the accused was not in jeopardy, and may be again put upon trial, if the court had no jurisdiction of the cause; People v. Tyler, 7 Mich. 161, 74 Am. Dec. 703; or one of its members is related to the prisoner and under a statute the conviction is void; People v. Connor, 142 N. Y. 130, 36 N. E. 807; or if the indictment was so defective that no valid judgment could be rendered upon it; Black v. State, 36 Ga. 447, 91 Am. Dec. 772; Shoener v. Pennsylvania, 207 U. S. 188, 28 Sup. Ct. 110, 52 L. Ed. 163, affirming Com. v. Shoener, 216 Pa. 71, 64 Atl. 890; Com. v. Bakeman, 105 Mass. 53; or if by any overruling necessity the jury are discharged without a verdict; U. S. v. Perez, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 579, 6 L. Ed. 165; State v. Hansford, 76 Kan. 678, 92 Pac. 551, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 548; State v. Wiseman, 68 N. C. 203; or if the term of the court comes to an end before the trial is finished; Wright v. State, 5 Ind. 290, 61 Am. Dec. 90; or the jury are discharged with the consent of the defendant, express or implied; Com. v. Stowell, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 572; or where the jury has been discharged, upon ascertainment that a prejudice exists within that body; In re Ascher, 130 Mich. 540, 90 N. W. 418, 57 L. R. A. 806; Com. v. McCormick, 130 Mass. 61, 39 Am. Dec. 423; or if after verdict against the accused it has been set aside on his motion for a new trial or on writ of error, or the judgment thereon has been arrested; People v. Casborus, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 351; State v. McCord, 8 Kan. 232, 12 Am. Rep. 469, n.; Territory v. Hart, 7 Mont. 489, 17 Pac. 718; Gannon v. People, 127 Ill. 507, 21 N. E. 525, 11 Am. St. Rep. 147; State v. Brecht, 41 Minn. 50, 42 N. W. 602; State v. Whitson, 111 N. C. 695, 16 S. E. 332; People v. Schmidt, 64 Cal. 260, 30 Pac. 814; Lovett v. State, 33 Fla. 389, 14 South. 837, n.; or where there is any irregularity of verdict which will compel a reversal upon the application of the accused; Gunter v. State, 83 Ala. 96, 3 South. 600; People v. Carty, 77 Cal. 213, 19 Pac. 490; or where there was a variance and the verdict was set aside; Leath v. Com., 32 Gratt. (Va.) 876.

See Cooley, Const. Lim., 4th ed. 404; Von Holst, Const. L. 260; Story, Const. § 1787.

Where a prisoner during his trial fled the jurisdiction, and the jury was discharged, he was never in jeopardy; People v. Higgins, 59 Cal. 357.

If the judgment of conviction be reversed on the prisoner's own appeal, it is not a bar; U. S. v. Ball, 163 U. S. 662, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1192, 41 L. Ed. 300. The constitutional provision was never intended to, and properly construed does not, cover the case of a judgment which has been annulled at the request of the accused; Trono v. U. S., 199 U. S. 521, 26 Sup. Ct. 121, 50 L. Ed. 292, 4 Ann. Cas. 773; In re Somers, 31 Nev. 531, 103 Pac. 1073, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 504, 135 Am. St. Rep. 700; Waller v. State, 104 Ga. 505, 30 S. E. 835; State v. Billings, 140 Mo. 205, 41 S. W. 778; Com. v. Murphy, 174 Mass. 369, 54 N. E. 860, 48 L. R. A. 393, 75 Am. St. Rep. 253.

The constitutional guaranty is against two trials for the same offence, and the decisions as to what constitutes identity of the offences are not uniform. They are collected in 1 N. Cr. L. § 1048, by Bishop, who lays down the following rules as sustained by just principle: "They are not the same when (1) the two indictments are so diverse as to preclude the same evidence from maintaining both; or when (2) the evidence to the first and that to the second relate to different transactions, whatever be the words of the respective allegations; or when (3) each indictment sets out an offence differing in all its elements from that in the other, though both relate to one transaction,—a proposition of which the exact limits are difficult to define; or when (4) some technical variance precludes a conviction on the first indictment, but does not appear on the second. On the other side, (5) the offences are the same whenever evidence adequate to the one indictment will equally sustain the other. Moreover, (6) if the two indictments set out like offences and relate to one transaction, yet if one contain more of criminal charge than the other, but upon it there could be a conviction for what was embraced in the other, the offences, though of different names, are, within our constitutional guaranty, the same." The author considers the test to be, "whether if what is set out in the second indictment had been proved under the first, there could have been a conviction; when there could, the second cannot be maintained; when there could not, it can be;" id. § 1052.

Where the accused kept a gambling room for a continuous period of time and two indictments were found against him, covering different periods of that time, it was held that a conviction on one indictment was a bar to a prosecution on the other; Cawein v. Com., 110 Ky. 273, 61 S. W. 275; contra, Com. v. Connors, 116 Mass. 35; People v. Sinell, 131 N. Y. 571, 30 N. E. 47.

Where the greater offence includes a lesser one, a verdict on an indictment for the lesser offence only is a bar to a trial on an indictment for the greater offence, and the same principle applies if the jury are out in the first case when the second is called; Com. v. Arner, 149 Pa. 35, 24 Atl. 83.

There is some difference of opinion, however, in the application of this rule in homicide cases. If a prisoner is put on trial for murder and convicted of manslaughter and that verdict is set aside on defendant's application for a new trial or on his appeal, he cannot again be tried for murder; State v. Tweedy, 11 Ia. 350; Barnett v. People, 54 Ill. 325; State v. Dunn, 41 Ia. Ann. 610, 6 South. 176; Huntington v. Superior Court, 5 Cal. App. 288, 90 Pac. 141. On this principle it has been held that if a prisoner has been indicted for murder, convicted of murder in the second degree, and afterwards granted a new trial on his own motion, he cannot, on the second trial, be convicted of a higher crime than murder in the second degree; State v. Belden, 33 Wis. 121, 14 Am. Rep. 748, n.; State v. Kattlemann, 35 Mo. 105; State v. Helm, 92 Ia. 540, 61 N. W. 246; Golding v. State, 31 Fla. 262, 12 South. 525; Sylvester v. State, 72 Ala. 201 (see People v. Gordon, 99 Cal. 227, 33 Pac. 901); contra, State v. Behimer, 20 Ohio St. 572; State v. McCord, 8 Kan. 232, 12 Am. Rep. 469, n.; Trono v. U. S., 199 U. S. 521, 26 Sup. Ct. 121, 50 L. Ed. 292, 4 Ann. Cas. 773.

But when a conviction for the lesser crime is reversed upon the voluntary appeal of the accused, he thereby waives the acquittal upon the higher charge and, upon the conviction being set aside, is placed in the same position as if no trial had been had; Trono v. U. S., 199 U. S. 521, 26 Sup. Ct. 121, 50 L. Ed. 292, 4 Ann. Cas. 773; State v. Ash, 68 Wash. 194, 122 Pac. 995, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 611; Com. v. Arnold, 83 Ky. 1, 4 Am. St. Rep. 114; State v. Kessler, 15 Utah 142, 49 Pac. 293, 62 Am. St. Rep. 911; Bohanan v. State, 18 Neb. 57, 24 N. W. 390, 53 Am. Rep. 791; State v. Behimer, 20 Ohio St. 572; State v. Bradley, 67 Vt. 465, 32 Atl. 238; State v. Gillis, 73 S. C. 318, 53 S. E. 487, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 571, 114 Am. St. Rep. 95, 6 Ann. Cas. 993; State v. Matthews, 142 N. C. 621, 55 S. E. 342; In re Somers, 31 Nev. 531, 103 Pac. 1073, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 504, 135 Am. St. Rep. 700. In a number of states there are constitutional or statutory provisions to the same effect: N. Y. Code Cr. Pr. sec. 464; Okla. Stat., 1893; Va. Acts, 1877-8; Kan. Cr. Code, secs. 273, 274; Ga. Civil Code, 1895; Ind. 2 R. S., 1876; Mo. Const., 1875, and possibly others.

The contrary line of decisions is based on the theory that the accused's request for a correction of the verdict is only for so much of it as convicts him of guilt and not for that which acquits him, the waiver being construed to extend to the precise portion as to which relief is sought; Com. v. Deltrick, 221 Pa. 7, 70 Atl. 275; West v. State, 55 Fla. 200, 46 South. 93; Texas, Code of Crim. Pr. 1895.

A conviction of felonious assault at a time when the victim is still alive is no bar to a subsequent prosecution for murder in case he dies; Com. v. Ramunno, 219 Pa. 204, 68 Atl. 184, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 209, 123 Am. St. Rep. 653, 12 Ann. Cas. 818; so in case of assault and battery with intent to kill; Com. v. Ramunno, 219 Pa. 204, 68 Atl. 184, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 209, 123 Am. St. Rep. 653, 12 Ann. Cas. 818; Diaz v. U. S., 223 U. S. 442, 32 Sup. Ct. 250, 56 L. Ed. 500, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1138; Com. v. Roby, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 496.

A distinction has been made in some cases based upon the theory that the two lower grades of homicide do not bear the same relation to the offence charged. Manslaughter is clearly a different crime from that charged, and a conviction of that offence is therefore an acquittal of the graver one. But it has been said that the division of murder into two degrees does not make two offences and the same rule should not apply; People v. Keefer, 65 Cal. 232, 3 Pac. 818; State v. Bradley, 67 Vt. 465, 32 Atl. 238. Indeed the whole theory is that, when the defendant obtains a reversal, the conviction of the lesser crime is an acquittal of the graver one, so that another trial would be within the prohibition against putting the accused twice in jeopardy; State v. Behimer, 20 Ohio St. 572; State v. McCord, 8 Kan. 232, 12 Am. Rep. 469; Veatch v. State, 60 Ind. 291; Com. v. Arnold, 83 Ky. 1, 4 Am. St. Rep. 114; State v. Kring, 11 Mo. App. 92. But it is said that "the weight of authority is that securing a new trial only operates to set aside conviction and not the verdict so far as it operates as an acquittal;" 1 McClain, Cr. L. § 390; State v. Martin, 30 Wis. 216, 11 Am. Rep. 567; Jones v. State, 13 Tex. 168, 62 Am. Dec. 550. If it is an acquittal pro tanto nothing less than constitutional amendment can remove the effect of the general provision as to jeopardy; Kring v. Missouri, 107 U. S. 221, 2 Sup. Ct. 443, 27 L. Ed. 506. In some state constitutions, as those of Arkansas, Colorado, Georgia, and Missouri, the usual declaration securing a person from being put twice in jeopardy is modified by a further provision that if the jury disagree, or if the judgment be arrested after verdict or reversed for error in law, the accused shall not be deemed to have been in jeopardy.

Statutes which provide for a severer punishment when a criminal is convicted of a second or third offence are not in violation of the constitutional provision that no one shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offence. The doctrine is that the subsequent punishment is not imposed for the first offence, but for persistence in crime; In re Ross, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 165; Sturtevant v. Com., 158 Mass. 598, 33 N. E. 648; Kelly v. People, 115 Ill. 583, 4 N. E. 644, 56 Am.

Rep. 184; Ingalls v. State, 48 Wis. 647, 4 N. W. 785; People v. Stanley, 47 Cal. 113, 17 Am. Rep. 401; Moore v. Missouri, 159 U. S. 673, 16 Sup. Ct. 179, 40 L. Ed. 301, affirming State v. Moore, 121 Mo. 514, 26 S. W. 345, 42 Am. St. Rep. 542; McDonald v. Massachusetts, 180 U. S. 311, 21 Sup. Ct. 389, 45 L. Ed. 542; People v. Coleman, 145 Cal. 609, 79 Pac. 283; so as to habitual criminals; State v. Le Pitre, 54 Wash. 166, 103 Pac. 27, 18 Ann. Cas. 922. See HABITUAL CRIMINAL.

The question of former jeopardy cannot be passed upon by the supreme court on habeas corpus proceedings, but is a proper plea in bar, to be tried by the lower court; Steiner v. Nerton, 6 Wash. 23, 32 Pac. 1063.

Whether an offence is one against the laws of the state or against the United States, and whether the same act may be an offence against both, punishable by each, without infringing upon the constitutional guaranty against being twice put in jeopardy for the same offence, are questions which a state court of original jurisdiction is competent to decide in the first instance, and the proper time to invoke the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States is after the highest state court has passed upon the question adversely to the accused; New York v. Eno, 155 U. S. 89, 15 Sup. Ct. 30, 39 L. Ed. 80.

One acquitted by a military court of competent jurisdiction of the crime of homicide as defined by the penal code of the Philippine Islands cannot be tried a second time in a civil court of those islands for the same offence; Grafton v. U. S., 206 U. S. 333, 27 Sup. Ct. 749, 51 L. Ed. 1084, 11 Ann. Cas. 640.

Where two distinct offences grew out of the same transaction, a person is not twice in jeopardy by a sentence of an army court-martial imposing both fine and imprisonment, even if the penalty is fine or imprisonment in the alternative; Carter v. McClaughry, 183 U. S. 365, 22 Sup. Ct. 181, 46 L. Ed. 236.

It differs from flotsam in this, that in the latter the goods float, while in the former they sink, and remain under water. It differs also from ligan.

The jettison must be made for sufficient cause, and not for groundless timidity; Brauer v. Campania Navigacion La Flecha, 66 Fed. 776, 14 C. C. A. 88; The Hugo, 57 Fed. 403. It must be made in a case of extremity, when the ship is in danger of perishing by the fury of a storm, or is laboring upon rocks or shallows, or is closely pursued by pirates or enemies.

If the residue of the cargo be saved by such sacrifice, the property saved is bound to pay a proportion of the loss. In ascertaining such average loss, the goods lost and saved are both to be valued at the price they would have brought at the place of delivery on the ship's arrival there, freight, duties, and other charges being deducted; Marsh. Ins. 246; 3 Kent 185; Park. Ins. 123; Pothier, Charte-partie, n. 108; Boulay-Paty, Dr. Com. tit. 13; Pardessus, Dr. Com. n. 734; The Nimrod, 1 Ware 9, Fed. Cas. No. 10,267. The owner of a cargo jettisoned has a maritime lien on the vessel for the contributory share from the vessel on an adjustment of the average, which may be enforced by a proceeding in venue in the admiralty; Dupont de Nemours & Co. v. Vance, 19 How. (U. S.) 162, 15 L. Ed. 584; 2 Pars. Marit. Law, 373. See Abbott; Kay, Shipping; AVERAGE; ADJUSTMENT; DERELICT.

JEU DE BOURSE. In French Law. A kind of gambling or speculation, which consists of sales and purchases which bind neither of the parties to deliver the things which are the object of the sale, and which are settled by paying the difference in the value of the things sold between the day of the sale and that appointed for delivery of such things. 1 Pardessus, Droit Com. n. 162.

JEWEL. A precious stone; a gem; a personal ornament, consisting more or less of precious stones. An ornament intended to be worn on the person.

The precise meaning of the word was discussed by Shaw, C. J., in Com. v. Stephens, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 370. He said: "The question is whether plain gold earrings and knobs, without any precious stone, pearl, or other gem set in them, constitute jewelry." "Jewelry is not found in any English dictionary, and is probably an Americanism. It is defined in Webster to be jewels in general. He defines 'jewel' to be 'an ornament worn by ladies,' 'a pendant in the ear.' It is manifest, however, that these are put by way of instances, and not intended as strict definitions. The term 'bijou,' which seems to be nearly analogous to it in the French language, is defined to be 'a little work of ornament, valuable (precieux) for its workmanship or by its material. Cette femme a des beaux bijoux.' Dict. de l'Acad. The counsel on both sides cited passages of Scripture to show, on the one side, that the translators of the common version included ornaments of gold under the name of jewels, and on the other, to show that by a distinct enumeration they excluded them. These instances do little more than show that, though the argument founded on them is at first view plausible, it would be entirely unsafe to rely upon it as a ground of legal construction. Nor can much more reliance be placed upon lexicographers: they are necessarily confined, in a considerable degree, to generalities, and cannot ordinarily go into minute and very accurate distinctions. On the best consideration we have been able to give the subject, we are satisfied that the legislature, in the use of the word 'jewelry,' intended to employ it as a generic term, of the largest import, including all articles under the genus. Without attempting to define the term used in the statute, we are all of opinion that earrings and ear-knobs are included under the term jewelry, as it was used in the statute."

The meaning of the word is most frequently drawn into question in cases involving the construction of statutes limiting the liability of innkeepers for money, jewelry, or valuables not deposited in the safe. In such a case it was said, "The watch, and pen and pencil case are certainly valuables, and perhaps might be called jewels, but I think should be considered a part of the traveller's personal clothing or apparel. Gile v. Libby, 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 70; Ramaley v. Leland, 43 N. Y. 539, 3 Am. Rep. 728; Bernstein v. Sweeny, 33 N. Y. Super. Ct. 271; but under a similar statute specifying money, jewelry, and articles of gold and silver manufacture, a gold watch was held to be included as an article of gold manufacture; Stewart v. Parsons, 24 Wis. 241.

The meaning of the word is also frequently involved in cases arising under the tariff laws, which usually contain also the term "imitation jewelry." In such a case Lacombe, J., said: "The word jewelry is generally used as including articles of personal adornment, and the word further imports that the articles are of value in the community where they are used. . . . The articles of value used for personal adornment in our civilization are, and for centuries have been, the precious metals gold and silver, to which, I think, platina is now generally added, and what are known as the precious stones, the diamond, sapphire, ruby, etc." "There is such a thing as imitation jewelry. . . . If by a pleasing combination of appropriate materials, by an attractive arrangement of parts, an article is produced bearing a general resemblance to real jewelry ornaments, and suitable for similar uses, it may fairly be called imitation jewelry." Robbins v. Robertson, 33 Fed. 709.

Where a jeweller claimed an exemption as tools of a debtor, of those which he himself worked with on watches as well as of those which his apprentice worked with on jewelry, and it being found by the jury that the principal business was that of jeweller, both were held to be exempt. The court said that the circumstance that he was also engaged in the business of repairing watches did not make him a watchmaker in distinction to a jeweller; . . . "this is rather part of the employment of a jeweller, as exercised in this country, than a distinct and separate occupation by himself." Howard v. Williams, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 80.

Family jewels constitute one of the kinds of personal property for the unlawful detention of which the remedy at law is considered inadequate and equitable relief is sustained; Ad. Eq., 8th ed. 91.

They are also included in paraphernalia, and "even the jewels of a peeress have been held such;" 2 Bla. Com. 436.

Jewels of the wife, though given by her husband's will to her for life, were decreed to her absolutely, as her paraphernalia (q. v.), as against creditors who sought to have them sold to pay debts charged on real estate in aid of the testator's personal estate; 1 Bro. C. C. *576.

JEWES. The name given to the descendants of the patriarch Abraham.

The Jews were exceedingly oppressed during the middle ages throughout Christendom. In France, a Jew was a serf, and his person and goods belonged to the baron on whose demesnes he lived. He could not change his domicile without permission of the baron, who could pursue him as a fugitive even on the domains of the king. Like an article of commerce, he might be lent or hired for a time, or mortgaged. If he became a Christian, his conversion was considered a larceny of the lord, and his property and goods were confiscated. They were allowed to utter their prayers only in a low voice and without chanting. They were not allowed to appear in public without some badge or mark of distinction. Christians were forbidden to employ Jews of either sex as domestics, physicians, or surgeons. Admission to the bar was forbidden to Jews. They were obliged to appear in court in person when they demanded justice for a wrong done them; and it was deemed disgraceful to an advocate to undertake the cause of a Jew. If a Jew appeared in court against a Christian, he was obliged to swear by the ten names of God and invoke a thousand imprecations against himself if he spoke not the truth. Sexual intercourse between a Christian man and a Jewess was deemed a crime against nature, and was punishable with death by burning. Quia est rem habere cum cane, rem habere a Christiano cum Judæa quæ CANIS reputatur; sic comburi debet; 1 Fournel, Hist. des Avocats, 108, 110. See Merlin, Répert. Juifs.

Under the Roman law the Jews were the subject of severe restrictive laws and were classed in the enactments of the Christian emperors with apostates, heretics, and heathens; Mack. Rom. L. § 152. Marriage with them was forbidden; id. § 555; and a Jew could not be the tutor of a Christian; id. § 615.

In the fifth book of the Decretals it is provided that if a Jew have a servant that desireth to be a Christian, the Jew shall be compelled to sell him to a Christian for twelve-pence; that it shall not be lawful for them to take any Christian to be their servant; that they may repair their old synagogues, but not build new; that it shall not be lawful for them to open their doors or windows on Good Friday; that their wives shall neither have Christian nurses, nor themselves be nurses to Christian women; that they wear different apparel from the Christians, whereby they may be known, etc. See Ridley's View of the Civ. and Eccl. Law, part 1, chap. 5, sect. 7; Madox, Hist. of Exch.

In England, the Jew could have nothing that was his own, for whatever he acquired he acquired not for himself but for the king; Bract. f. 356 b. For about a century and a half they were important elements in English history, as their greatest privilege was to be allowed to do things that were forbidden to Christians, notably, to take interest on money. This money-lending business required some governmental regulation, the king having a deep interest in it, for what was potentially owed to the Jew was owed to the king, and this matter could hardly be left to the English tribunals as they would do but scant justice to the Jew, and therefore but scant justice to the king who stood behind the Jew. In 1194, an edict was issued about the Jewish loans. In every town in which the Jews lived an office was established for the registration of their deeds. All loans and payments of loans were to be made under the eye of certain officers, some of them Christians, some of them Jews, and a copy or part of every deed was to be deposited in an ark or chest under official custody. A few years later a department of the royal exchequer—the exchequer of the Jews—was organized for the supervision of this business. At its head were a few “Justices of the Jews.” This exchequer was, like the great exchequer, both a financial bureau and a judicial tribunal. It managed all the king's transactions—and there were many—with the Jews, saw to the exaction of tallages, reliefs, escheats, and forfeitures, and also acted judicially, not merely as between king and Jew, but also as between king and gentile, when, as often happened, the king had for some cause or another seized into his hand the debts due to one of his Jews by Christian debtors. Also it heard and determined all manner of disputes between Jew and Christian. 1 Pol. & M. 451.

This system could not work well; it oppressed both Jew and Englishman, and from the middle of the thirteenth century the king was compelled to rob them of their privileges, to forbid them to hold lands, and some efforts were made to induce them to give up their profession of usury, as was also done in France and elsewhere during the same period, but the fact is, that they were so heavily taxed by the sovereigns or governments of Christendom, and at the same time debarred from almost every other trade or occupation—partly by special decrees, partly by the vulgar prejudice—that they could not afford to prosecute ordinary vocations. In 1253 the Jews—no longer able to withstand the constant hardships to which they were subjected in person and property—begged of their own accord to be allowed to leave the country. Richard of Cornwall, however, persuaded them to stay. Ultimately, in 1290 A. D., they were driven from the shores of England, pursued by the execrations of the infuriated rabble, and leaving in the hands of the king all their property, debts, obligations, and mortgages, they emigrated for the most part to France and Germany.

Practically, the only disabilities to which Jews are now subject in England are, incompetence to fill certain high offices in the state (e. g. that of lord chancellor, lord chancellor of Ireland, lord lieutenant of Ireland, any office in the ecclesiastical court, or any position at the universities, colleges or schools), and inability to present to an ecclesiastical benefice attached to an office in her majesty's gift. 3 Steph. Com. 83. The present Chief Justice of England is a Jew.

JOB. The whole of a thing which is to be done. In this sense it is employed in the Civil Code of Louisiana, art. 2727: “To build by plot, or to work by the job,” says that article, “is to undertake a building for a certain stipulated price.” See Duranton, du Contr. de Louage, liv. 3, t. 8, nn. 248, 263; Pothier, Contr. de Louage, nn. 392, 394. See DEVIATION.

JOBBER. In Commercial Law. One who buys and sells articles in bulk and resells them to dealers. Stock-jobbers are those who buy and sell stocks for others. This term is also applied to those who speculate in stocks on their own account.

JOCALIA (Lat.). Jewels (q. v.). This term was formerly more properly applied to those ornaments which women, although married, call their own. When these jocalia are not suitable to her degree, they are assets for the payment of debts; 1 Rolle, Abr. 911.

JOCKEY CLUB. An association of persons for the purpose of regulating all matters connected with horse racing.

Such a club is a private and not a quasi-public corporation, and may refuse to allow certain persons to enter horses for its races; Corrigan v. Jockey Club, 2 Misc. 512, 22 N. Y. Supp. 394. A grant by the state to such a corporation to make and register bets and sell pools on the result of its races is not a grant of state aid, but is merely a removal of the statutory prohibition against the exercise of a right existing at common law; id.

JOHN DOE. A fictitious name frequently used to indicate a person for the purpose of argument or illustration, or in the course of enforcing a fiction in the law. See BILL OF MIDDLESEX; RICHARD ROE.

JOINDER. In Pleading. Union; concurrence.

Of Actions. IN CIVIL CASES. The union of two or more causes of action in the same declaration.

At common law, to allow a joinder, the form of actions must be such that the same plea may be pleaded and the same judgment given on all the counts of the declaration, or, the counts being of the same nature, that the same judgment may be given on all; 2 Saund. 177 c; Com. Dig. Actions (G); Secor v. Sturgis, 16 N. Y. 548; Lamphier v. R. Co., 33 N. H. 495. And all the causes of action must have accrued to the plaintiff or against the defendant; Coussy v. Vivant, 12 La. Ann. 44; in the same right, though it may have been by different titles. Thus, a plaintiff cannot join a demand in his own right to one as representative of another person, or against the defendant himself to one against him in a representative capacity; 2 Viner, Abr. 62; Bacon, Abr. Action in General (C); Lucas v. R. Co., 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 245; Whitney v. Fairbanks, 54 Fed. 985. Nor can a cause of action in tort and in contract be joined; Hannahs v. Hammond, 19 N. Y. Supp. 883; nor a tort with a claim for money had and received; Teem v. Town of Ellijay, 89 Ga. 154, 15 S. E. 33.

In real actions there can be but one count.

In mixed actions joinder occurs, though but infrequently; 8 Co. 876; Cro. Eliz. 290.

In personal actions joinder is frequent.

By statutes, in many of the states, joinder of actions is allowed and required to a greater extent than at common law.

IN CRIMINAL CASES. Different offences of the same general nature may be joined in the same indictment; Johnson v. State, 29 Ala. 62, 65 Am. Dec. 383; Sarah v. State, 28 Miss. 267, 61 Am. Dec. 544; Bailey v. State, 4 Ohio St. 440; U. S. v. O'Callahan, 6 McLean 596, Fed. Cas. No. 15,910; People v. Hulbut, 4 Denio (N. Y.) 133, 47 Am. Dec. 244; Baker v. State, 4 Ark. 56; Benson v. Com., 158 Mass. 164, 33 N. E. 384; Burrell v. State, 25 Neb. 581, 41 N. W. 399; and it is no cause of arrest of judgment that they have been so joined; 29 E. L. & Eq. 536; State v. Fowler, 28 N. H. 184; Stephen v. State, 11 Ga. 225; U. S. v. Stetson, 3 W. & M. 164, Fed. Cas. No. 16,390; but not in the same count; Kenney v. State, 5 R. I. 385; State v. Bridges, 24 Mo. 353; Greenlow v. State, 4 Humphr. (Tenn.) 25; see 9 L. R. A. 182, note; and an indictment may be quashed, in the discretion of the court, where the counts are joined in such manner as will confound the evidence; State v. Jackson, 17 Mo. 544, 59 Am. Dec. 281.

No court, it is said, will, however, permit a prisoner to be tried upon one indictment for two distinct and separate crimes; Steph. Cr. Proc. 154; State v. Fowler, 28 N. H. 184. See Withers v. Com., 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 59; Com. v. Hills, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 530.

Where, out of precaution to meet every aspect of a single offence, an indictment charges distinct crimes, and no attempt is made to convict accused of disconnected offences, the state will not be compelled to elect on which he shall be tried; Butler v. State, 91 Ala. 87, 9 South. 191. Three separate offences, but not more, against the provisions of U. S. R. S. § 5480, prohibiting the use of the mails with intent to defraud, when committed within the same six calendar months, may be joined, and when so joined there is to be a single sentence for all, but this does not prevent other indictments for other offences under the same statute committed within the same six calendar months; In re Henry, 123 U. S. 372, 8 Sup. Ct. 142, 31 L. Ed. 174.

In Demurrer. The answer made to a demurrer. Co. Litt. 71 b. The act of making such answer is merely a matter of form, but must be made within a reasonable time; Thompson v. Goudelock, 10 Rich. (S. C.) 49.

Of Issue. The act by which the parties to a cause arrive at that stage of it in their pleadings, that one asserts a fact to be so, and the other denies it. For example, when one party denies the fact pleaded by his antagonist, who has tendered the issue thus, "And this he prays may be inquired of by the country," or, "and of this he puts himself upon the country," the party denying the fact may immediately subjoin, "And the said A B does the like;" when the issue is said to be joined.

Of Parties. IN CIVIL CASES. IN EQUITY. All parties materially interested in the subject of a suit in equity should be made parties, however numerous; Mitf. Eq. Plead. 144; Mechanics' Bank v. Seton, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 299, 7 L. Ed. 152; Northern Indiana R. Co. v. R. Co., 5 McLean 444, Fed. Cas. No. 10,321; Hussey v. Dole, 24 Me. 20; Crocker v. Higgins, 7 Conn. 342; Oliver v. Palmer, 11 Gill & J. (Md.) 426; Vanhorn v. Duckworth, 42 N. C. 261; either as plaintiffs or defendants, so that there may be a complete decree which shall bind them all; Christian v. R. Co., 133 U. S. 233, 10 Sup. Ct. 260, 33 L. Ed. 589; Gregory v. Stetson, 133 U. S. 579, 10 Sup. Ct. 422, 33 L. Ed. 792. But, where the parties are very numerous, and sue in the same right, a portion may in some cases appear for all in the same situation; 16 Ves. 321; New-London Bank v. Lee, 11 Conn. 112, 27 Am. Dec. 713; Dennis v. Kennedy, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 517. See Hills v. Putnam, 152 Mass. 123, 25 N. E. 40.

Mere possible or contingent interest does not render its possessor a necessary party; Kerr v. Watts, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 550, 5 L. Ed. 328; Townsend v. Auger, 3 Conn. 354; Reid v. Vanderheyden, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 719. Contingent remaindermen, are not necessary parties to a suit to set aside the deed creating the remainder; Temple v. Scott, 143 Ill. 290, 32 N. E. 366; nor a residuary legatee to a bill filed by a legatee or creditor to assert a claim against the estate of a testator; Melick v. Melick, 17 N. J. Eq. 156.

There need be no connection but community of interest; Brooks v. Harrison, 2 Ala. 209. It is not indispensable that all the parties to a suit should have an interest in all the matters contained in the suit, but it will be sufficient if each party has an interest in same material matters in the suit, and they are connected with the others; Brown v. Safe Deposit Co., 128 U. S. 403, 9 Sup. Ct. 127, 32 L. Ed. 468.

A court of equity, even after final hearing on the merits and on appeal to the court of last resort, will compel the joinder of necessary parties; O'Fallon v. Clopton, 89 Mo. 284, 1 S. W. 302.

PLAINTIFFS. All persons having a unity of interest in the subject-matter; Alston v. Jones, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 397; Brooks v. Harrison, 2 Ala. 209; and in the object to be attained; Gartside v. Gartside, 113 Mo. 348, 20 S. W. 669; Bosher v. Land Co., 89 Va. 455, 16 S. E. 360, 37 Am. St. Rep. 879; who are entitled to relief; Wilkins v. Judge, 14

Ala. 135; may join as plaintiffs. The rights claimed must not arise under different contracts; Yeaton v. Lenox, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 123, 8 L. Ed. 889; Finley v. Harrison, 5 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 154; or be vested in the same person in different capacities; May v. Smith, 45 N. C. 196, 59 Am. Dec. 594. And see Edmeston v. Lyde, 1 Paige (N. Y.) 637, 19 Am. Dec. 454; Ingraham v. Dunnell, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 118. Persons representing antagonistic interests cannot be joined as complainants; Smith v. Smith, 102 Ala. 516, 14 South. 765.

Assignor and assignee. The assignor of a contract for the sale of lands should be joined in a suit by the assignee for specific performance; Voorhees v. De Myer, 3 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 614; and the assignor of part of his interest in a patent in a suit by assignee for violation; Morgan v. Tipton, 3 McLean 350, Fed. Cas. No. 9,809.

But he should not be joined where he has parted with all his legal and beneficial interest; Miller v. Whittier, 32 Me. 203; Moor v. Veazie, 32 Me. 343, 52 Am. Dec. 655; Leacock v. Hall, 13 B. Monr. (Ky.) 210. The assignee of a mere chose in action may sue in his own name, in equity; Barribeau v. Brant, 17 How. (U. S.) 43, 15 L. Ed. 34; Cottrell v. Giltner, 5 Wis. 270.

Corporations. Two or more may join if their interest is joint; 8 Ves. 706. A corporation may join with its individual members to establish an exemption on their behalf; 3 Anstr. 738. Corporations themselves are indispensable parties to a bill which affects their corporate rights or liabilities; Swan Land & Cattle Co. v. Frank, 148 U. S. 603, 13 Sup. Ct. 691, 37 L. Ed. 577.

Husband and wife must join where the husband asserts an interest in behalf of his wife; Schuyler v. Hoyle, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 196; as, for a legacy; Schuyler v. Hoyle, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 196; or for property devised or descended to her during coverture; Griffith v. Coleman, 5 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 600; or where he applies for an injunction to restrain a suit at law against both, affecting her interest; Green v. Hicks, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 313. Where a widow sues to set aside a deed executed by herself and husband on the ground that it was procured by fraud, the administrator of the husband is not a necessary party; Keenan v. Keenan, 58 Hun 605, 12 N. Y. Supp. 747.

Under modern statutes for the enlargement of the rights and remedies of married women, it is in many cases unnecessary to join the husband in suits to which he was formerly a necessary party. See MARRIED WOMAN.

Idiots and lunatics may be joined or not in bills by their committees, at the election of the committee, to set aside acts done by them whilst under imbecility; Ortley v. Mesere, 7 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 139. They must be joined in suits brought for the partition of real estate; Gorham v. Gorham, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 24. In England it seems to be the custom to join; 2 Vern. 678. See Story, Eq. Pl. § 64; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1336.

Infants. Several may join in the same bill for an account of the rents and profits of their estate; Townshend v. Duncan, 2 Bland. (Md.) 68.

Trustee and cestui que trust should, it is held, join in a bill to recover the trust fund; Jennings' Ex'rs v. Davis, 5 Dana (Ky.) 128; but need not to foreclose a mortgage; Heirs of Pugh v. Currie, 5 Ala. 447; nor to redeem one made by the trustee; Boyden v. Partridge, 2 Gray (Mass.) 190. And see Schenck v. Ellingwood, 3 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 175; Hitchcock's Heirs v. Bank, 7 Ala. 386.

An appeal may be prosecuted by one party to the record, as against another, without joining other parties who are in no way interested in the controversy; Postal Telegraph Cable Co. v. Vane, 80 Fed. 961, 26 C. C. A. 342.

DEFENDANTS. In general, all persons interested in the subject-matter of a suit who cannot be made plaintiffs should be made defendants. They may claim under different rights if they possess an interest centering in the point in issue; Fellows v. Fellows, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 682, 15 Am. Dec. 412. In order to obtain the rescission of a contract of sale, all of the parties interested in the property involved must be brought before the court; Constant v. Lehman, 52 Kan. 227, 34 Pac. 745.

Bills for discovery need not contain all the parties interested as defendants; Trescott v. Smyth, 1 McCord, Ch. (S. C.) 301; and a person may be joined merely as defendant in such bill; Bank of Mobile v. Huggins, 3 Ala. 214. A person should not be joined as a party to such bill who may be called as a witness on trial; Yates v. Monroe, 13 Ill. 212.

Assignor and assignee. An assignor who retains even the slightest interest in the subject-matter must be made a party; Bruen v. Crane, 2 N. J. Eq. 347; Ward v. Van Bokkelen, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 289; Montague v. Lobdell, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 111; as a covenantor in a suit by a remote assignee; Wickliffe v. Clay, 1 Dana (Ky.) 585; or an assignee in insolvency, who must be made a party; Movan v. Hays, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 339; or the original plaintiff in a creditor's bill by the assignee of a judgment; Cooper v. Gunn, 4 B. Monr. (Ky.) 594.

A fraudulent assignee need not be joined in a bill by a creditor to obtain satisfaction out of a fund so transferred; Edmeston v. Lyde, 1 Paige (N. Y.) 637, 19 Am. Dec. 454. The assignee of a judgment must be a party in a suit to stay proceedings; Mumford v. Sprague, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 438.

Corporations and associations. A corporation charged with a duty should be joined with the trustees it has appointed. In a suit for a breach; Tibballs v. Bidwell, 1 Gray (Mass.) 389; Lawyer v. Clipperly, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 281. Where the legal title is in part of the members of an association, no others need be joined; Martin v. Dryden, 1 Gilh. (Ill.) 187. The directors of a corporation may be included as parties defendant in a bill against the corporation for infringement of a trade-mark; Armstrong v. Soap Works, 53 Fed. 124. But see INFRINGEMENT. When discovery is sought, the officer from whom the information is to be obtained should be made a co-defendant with the corporation; Virginia & A. Min. & Mfg. Co. v. Hale & Co., 93 Ala. 542, 9 South. 256.

Officers and agents may be made parties merely for discovery; Many v. Iron Co., 9 Paige (N. Y.) 188.

Creditors who have repudiated an assignment and pursued their remedy at law are properly made parties to a bill brought by the others against the trustee for an account and the enforcement of the trust; Geisse v. Beall, 3 Wis. 367. So, when judgments are impeached and sought to be set aside for fraud, the plaintiffs therein are indispensable parties to the bill; May v. Barnard, 20 Ala. 200. To a bill brought against an assignee by a creditor claiming the final balance, the preferred creditors need not be made parties; Page v. Olcott, 28 Vt. 465. See, also, Secombe v. Steele, 20 How. (U. S.) 94, 15 L. Ed. 833; Stevenson v. Austin, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 474; Smith v. Wyckoff, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 49.

Debtors must in some cases be joined with the executor in a suit by a creditor; though not ordinarily; Story, Eq. Pl. § 227; Long v. Majestre, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 305. Where there are several debtors, all must be joined; Trescott v. Smyth, 1 McCord, Ch. (S. C.) 301; unless utterly irresponsible; Williams v. Hubbard, 1 Mich. 446. Judgment debtors must in some cases be joined in suits between the creditor and assignees or mortgagees; Scudder v. Voorhis, 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 271. In an action by judgment creditors for the appointment of a receiver, to take charge of property belonging to their debtor, the payees of unpaid purchase-money notes given for such property are necessary parties; Wheeler v. Biggs (Miss.) 12 South. 596.

Executors and administrators should be made parties to a bill to dissolve a partnership; Burchard v. Boyce, 21 Ga. 6; to a bill against heirs to discover assets; Harrow v. Farrow's Heirs, 7 B. Monr. (Ky.) 127, 45 Am. Dec. 60; to a bill by creditors to subject lands fraudulently conveyed by the testator, their debtor, to the satisfaction of their debt; Coates v. Day, 9 Mo. 304. See, also, Drummond v. Hardaway, 21 Ga. 433; Mayo v. Tomkies, 6 Munf. (Va.) 520.

Foreclosure suits. All persons having an interest, legal or equitable, existing at the commencement of a suit to foreclose mortgaged premises, must be made parties, or they will not be bound; Tiedem. Eq. Jur. § 441; Ensworth v. Lambert, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 605; Huggins v. Hall, 10 Ala. 283; Matealm v. Smith, 6 McLean, 416, Fed. Cas. No. 9,272; Hall v. Hall, 11 Tex. 526; including the mortgagor within a year after the sale of his interest by the sheriff; Hallock v. Smith, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 649; and his heirs and personal representative after his death; Worthington v. Lee, 2 Bland (Md.) 684. But bond-holders for whose benefit a mortgage has been made by a corporation to a trustee need not be made parties; Shaw v. R. Co., 5 Gray (Mass.) 162; Jones, Corp. Bonds & Mortg. § 398. A person claiming adversely to mortgagor and mortgagee cannot be made a defendant to such suit; Banks v. Walker, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 438.

Heirs, distributees, and devisees. All the heirs should be made parties to a bill respecting the real estate of the testator; Mersereau v. Ryerss, 3 N. Y. 261; Kennedy's Heirs & Ex'rs v. Kennedy's Heirs, 2 Ala. 571; Duncan v. Wickliffe, 4 Scam. (Ill.) 452; although the testator was one of several mortgagees of the vendee, and the bill be brought to enforce the vendor's lien; Thornton v. Knox's Ex'r, 6 B. Monr. (Ky.) 74; but need not to a bill affecting personality; Galphin v. McKinney, 1 McCord, Ch. (S. C.) 280. Where, in a suit to set aside a deed for fraud, one of the heirs did not join as plaintiff, he may be made a party defendant, even if he should elect to affirm the deed; Billings v. Mann, 156 Mass. 203, 30 N. E. 1136. All the devisees are necessary parties to a bill to set aside the will; Vancleave v. Beam, 2 Dana (Ky.) 155; or to enjoin executors from selling lands belonging to the testator's estate; Lee v. Marshall's Devisees, 2 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 30. All the distributees are necessary parties to a bill for distribution; Hawkins' Adm'r v. Craig, 1 B. Monr. (Ky.) 27; to a bill by the widow of the intestate against the administrator to recover her share of the estate; Chinn v. Caldwell, 4 Bibb (Ky.) 543; and to a bill against an administrator to charge the estate with an annual payment to preserve the residue; Cabeen v. Gordon, 1 Hill, Ch. (S. C.) 51. See, also, Smith v. Wyckoff, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 49; Slaughter v. Froman, 2 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 95. A bill cannot be filed against the heirs and devisees jointly for satisfaction of a debt of the deceased; Schermerhorn v. Barhydt, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 28.

Idiots and lunatics should be joined with their committees when their interests conflict and must be settled in the suit; Brasher's Ex'rs v. Van Cortlandt, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 242; Teal v. Woodworth, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 470.

Partners must, in general, be all joined in a bill for dissolution of the partnership, but need not if without the jurisdiction; Lind.

Part. 460; Wickliffe v. Eve, 17 How. (U. S.) 468, 15 L. Ed. 163; Towle v. Pierce, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 329, 46 Am. Dec. 679.

Assignees of insolvent partners must be joined; Pearce v. Norton, 10 Me. 255.

Dormant partners need not be joined when not known in the transaction on which the bill is founded; Goble v. Gale, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 218, 41 Am. Dec. 219.

Principal and agent should be joined if there be a charge of fraud in which the agent participated; Veazie v. Williams, 3 Sto. 611, Fed. Cas. No. 16,907; and the agent should be joined where he binds himself individually; McAlexander v. Lee, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 484.

Trustee and cestui que trust. If a trustee has parted with the trust fund, the cestui que trust may proceed against the trustee alone to compel satisfaction, or the fraudulent assignee may be joined with him at the election of the complainant; Bailey v. Inglee, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 278. Where a claimant against the estate of a deceased person seeks to follow the assets into the hands of a trustee, it is not necessary to make the beneficiaries parties; 45 Ch. Div. 444.

On a proceeding in equity for the appointment of trustees under a mortgage, where two of the three trustees have died, and there is no provision in the mortgage for filling the vacancies, the mortgagor and the surviving trustee are necessary parties; In re Inhabitants of Anson, 85 Me. 79, 26 Atl. 996.

The trustees under a settlement of real estate, against whom a trust or power given to them to sell the estate is to be enforced, are necessary parties to a suit for that purpose; 39 E. L. & Eq. 76. See, Phipps v. Tarpley, 24 Miss. 597; McRea v. Bank, 19 How. (U. S.) 376, 15 L. Ed. 688; Jamison v. Chesnut, 8 Md. 34.

AT LAW. In actions ex contractu. All who have a joint legal interest or are jointly entitled must join in an action on a contract, even though it be in terms several, or be entered into by one in behalf of all; 1 Saund. 153; Archb. Civ. Pl. 58; Sweigart v. Berk, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 308; Allen v. Dunn, 15 Me. 295, 33 Am. Dec. 614; Loomis v. Brown, 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 325; as, where the consideration moves from several jointly; 2 Wms. Saund. 116 a; 4 M. & W. 295; or was taken from a joint fund; Ludlow v. Hurd, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 218.

Some contracts may be considered as either joint or several, and in such case all may join, or each may sue separately; but part cannot join leaving the others to sue separately.

In an action for a breach of a joint contract made by several, all the contracting parties should be made defendants; 1 Saund. 158, n.; even though one or more be bankrupt or insolvent; 2 Maule & S. 33; but see 1 Wils. 89; or an infant; but not if the contract be utterly void as to him; 3 Taunt. 307; Hartness v. Thompson, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 160; Jackson v. Woods, id. 280; Woodward v. Newhall, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 500.

On a joint and several contract, each may be sued separately, or all together; Minor v. Bank, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 73, 7 L. Ed. 47; Van Tine v. Crane, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 524.

A corporation is a necessary party to a suit brought by its stockholders to enforce its rights; Porter v. Sabin, 149 U. S. 473, 13 Sup. Ct. 1008, 37 L. Ed. 815.

Executors and administrators must bring their actions in the joint names of all; Crowe. Ex. & Adm. § 636; 5 Scott, N. R. 728; 1 Saund. 291 g; Cole v. Smalley, 25 N. J. L. 374; even though some are infants; Broom, Part. 104.

All the executors who have proved the will are to be joined as defendants in an action on the testator's contract; 1 Cr. M. & R. 74. But an executor de son tort is not to be joined with the rightful executor. And the executors are not to be joined with other persons who were joint contractors with the deceased; Colson v. Thompson, 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 344, 4 L. Ed. 253; Hench v. Metzger, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 272; Humphreys v. Crane, 5 Cal. 173.

Administrators are to be joined, like executors; Com. Dig. Administrators (B 12). Foreign executors and administrators are not recognized as such, in general; Brookshire v. Dubose, 55 N. C. 276; Kirkpatrick v. Taylor, 10 Rich. (S. C.) 393; Slaughter v. Chenoweth, 7 Ind. 211.

Husband and wife must join to recover rent due the wife before coverture on her lease while sole; Co. Litt. 55 b; Cro. Eliz. 700; on the lease by both of lands in which she has a life estate, where the covenant runs to both; Jacques v. Short, 20 Barb. (N. Y.) 269; but on a covenant generally to both, the husband may sue alone; 1 B. & C. 443; in all actions in implied promises to the wife acting in autre droit; Com. Dig. Baron & F. (V); 9 M. & W. 694; Mitchell v. Wright, 4 Tex. 283; as to suit on a bond to both, see Steward v. Chance, 3 N. J. L. 827; on a contract running with land of which they are joint assignees; Cro. Car. 503; in general, to recover any of the wife's choses in action where the cause of action would survive to her; 1 Chitty, Pl. 17; 1 M. & S. 180; Morse v. Earl, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 271; Newell v. Newton, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 270; Fuller v. R. Co., 21 Conn. 557; Bodgett v. Ebbing, 24 Miss. 245.

They may join at the husband's election in suit on a covenant to repair, when they become joint grantees of a reversion; Cro. Jac. 399; to recover the value of the wife's choses in action; Edwards v. Sheridan, 24 Conn. 165; 2 M. & S. 396, n.; in case of joinder the action survives to her; 6 M. & W. 426; in case of an express promise to the wife, or to both where she is the meritorious cause of action; Cro. Jac. 77, 205; Smith v. Johnson, 5 Harring. (Del.) 57; Milton v. Haden, 32 Ala. 30, 70 Am. Dec. 523.

They must, in general, be joined in actions on contracts entered into by the wife dum sola; 2 Term. 480; Angel v. Felton, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 149; Williams v. Coward, 1 Grant, Cas. (Pa.) 21; Smith v. Johnson, 5 Harring. (Del.) 57; where the cause of action accrues against the wife in autre droit; Cro. Car. 518. They may be joined when the husband promises anew to pay the debt of the wife contracted dum sola; 7 Term 349; for rent or breaches of covenant on a joint lease to both for the wife's benefit; Broom, Part. 178. In an action on a contract against a husband and wife, a contract signed by the husband alone is insufficient to support a judgment against the wife; Murdock v. Wasson, 158 Pa. 295, 27 Atl. 944.

Joint tenants must join in debt or an avowry for rent; Broom, Part. 24; but one of several may make a separate demise, thus severing the tenancy; Bacon, Abr. Joint Ten. (H 2); 3 Campb. 190; and one may maintain ejectment against his cotenants; Woodf. Landl. & T. 789.

Partners must all join in suing third parties on partnership transactions; 2 Campb. 302; De Groot v. Darby, 7 Rich. (S. C.) 118; including only those who were such at the time the cause of action accrued; Broom, Part. 65; although one or more may have become insolvent; 2 Cr. & M. 318; but not joining the personal representative of a deceased partner; 9 B. & C. 538. See Campbell v. Pence, 118 Ind. 313; with a limitation to the actual parties to the instrument in case of specialties; 6 M. & S. 75; and including dormant partners or not, at the election of the ostensible partners; 4 B. & Ald. 437. See Clark v. Miller, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 628; Smith v. Ayrault, 71 Mich. 475, 39 N. W. 724, 1 L. R. A. 311. A partner who has sold his interest to another partner is not a necessary party to an action for an accounting of the partnership affairs; Kilbourn v. Sunderland, 130 U. S. 505, 9 Sup. Ct. 594, 32 L. Ed. 1005. Where one partner contracts in his name for the firm, he may sue alone, or all may join; 4 B. & Ad. 815; but alone if he was evidently dealt with as the sole party in interest; 1 M. & S. 249. Partners cannot sue or be sued in their copartnership name, but the individual names of its members must be set out; Lewis v. Cline (Miss.) 5 South. 112; Dunham v. Schindler, 17 Or. 256, 20 Pac. 326.

The surviving partners; 1 B. & Ald. 29, 522; Voorhis v. Baxter, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 592; must all be joined as defendants in suits on partnership contracts; 1 East 30. And third parties are not bound to know the arrangements of partners amongst themselves; 4 M. & S. 482; 8 M. & W. 703, 710.

A partner need not be joined if he was not known as such at the time of making the contract and there was no indication of his being a partner; Lind. Part. 281; Hurlbut v. Post, 1 Bosw. (N. Y.) 28; Hicks v. Maness, 19 Ark. 701. And see PARTNERSHIP.

Tenants in common should join in an action on any joint contract; Comyns, Dig. Abatement (E 10).

Trustees must all join in bringing an action; Brinckerhoff v. Wemple, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 470.

In actions ex delicto. Joint owners must, in general, join in an action for a tortious injury to their property; 1 Saund. 291*g*; Pickering v. Pickering, 11 N. H. 141; in trover, for its conversion; 5 East 407; in replevin, to get possession; Smoot v. Wathen, 8 Mo. 522; McArthur v. Lane, 15 Me. 245; or in detinue, for its detention, or for injury to land; 3 Bingh. 455; Van Deusen v. Young, 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 9.

The grantor and grantee of land cannot join in a counter-claim for continuing trespasses on the land sold, since their rights of action are not joint; Steinke v. Bentley, 6 Ind. App. 663, 34 N. E. 97.

For injury to the person, plaintiffs cannot, in general, join; 2 Wms. Saund. 117*a*; Cro. Car. 512; Cro. Eliz. 472.

Partners may join for slanders; Lind. Part. 278; 8 C. & P. 708; for false representations; Patten v. Gurney, 17 Mass. 182, 9 Am. Dec. 141; injuring the partnership. The joinder or non-joinder of a dormant partner constitutes no objection to the maintenance of a suit in any manner whatever; Smith v. Ayrault, 71 Mich. 475, 39 N. W. 724, 1 L. R. A. 311.

In a suit against joint contractors, one of whom is dead, the survivors only should be made parties, the administrator of the deceased partner not being necessary; Stevens v. Catlin, 44 Ill. App. 114.

An action for the infringement of letters patent may be brought jointly by all the parties who at the time of the infringement were the holders of the title; Whittemore v. Cutter, 1 Gall. 429, Fed. Cas. No. 17,600; Stein v. Goddard, 1 McAll. 82, Fed. Cas. No. 13,353.

In cases where several join in the commission of a tort, they may be joined in an action as defendants; 6 Taunt. 29; Hyslop v. Clarke, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 462; as, in trover; 1 M. & S. 588; in trespass; 2 Wms. 117*a*; for libel; Broom, Part. 249,—not for slander; Cro. Jac. 647; in trespass; 1 C. & M. 96.

Husband and wife must join in action for direct damages resulting from personal injury to the wife; Schoul. Husb. & W. 167; 3 Bla. Com. 140; Wright v. Leclaire, 4 G. Greene (Ia.) 420; see Fournet v. S. S. Co., 43 La. Ann. 1202, 11 South. 541; in detinue, for the property which was the wife's before marriage; Armstrong v. Simonton's Adm'r, 6 N. C. 351; Robinson v. Woodford, 37 W. Va. 377, 16 S. E. 602; for injury to the wife's property before marriage; Hair v. Melvin, 47 N. C. 59; where the right of action accrues to the wife in autre droit; Com. Dig. Baron & F. (V); 2 B. & P. 407; and, generally, in all cases where the cause of action by law survives to the wife; 4 B. & Ald. 523; Newell v. Newton, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 470; Starbird v. Inhabitants of Frankfort, 35 Me. 89.

They may join for slander of the wife, if the words spoken are actionable per se, for the direct injury; 4 M. & W. 5; Williams v. Holdredge, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 396; Johnson v. Dicken, 25 Mo. 580; Harper v. Pinkston, 112 N. C. 293, 17 S. E. 161 (but she may maintain an action in her own name; Pavlovski v. Thornton, 89 Ga. 829, 15 S. E. 822) and in ejectment for lands of the wife they may join; Broom, Part. 235; 1 Bulstr. 21. An action for permanent injury to community property must be brought by husband and wife jointly; Parke v. City of Seattle, 8 Wash. 78, 35 Pac. 594.

They must be joined as defendants for torts committed by the wife before marriage; Co. Litt. 351 b; Hawk v. Harman, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 43; or during coverture; Wagener v. Bill, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 321; Henderson v. Wendler, 39 S. C. 555, 17 S. E. 851; or for libel or slander uttered by her; 5 C. & P. 484; and in an action for waste by the wife, before marriage, as administratrix; 2 Wms. Ex. 1441.

They may be joined in trespass for their joint act; 3 B. & Ald. 687; Roadcap v. Sipe, 6 Gratt. (Va.) 213.

Joint tenants and parceners, during the continuance of the joint estate, must join in all actions ex delicto relative thereto, as in trespass to their land, and in trover or replevin for their goods; 2 Bla. Com. 182, 188; Bacon, Abr. Joint Ten. (K); Shaver v. Brainard, 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 29. Joint tenants may join in an action for slander of the title to their estate; 3 Bingh. 455. They should be sued jointly, in trespass, trover, or case, for anything respecting the land held in common; Com. Dig. Abatement (F 6); 1 Wms. Saund. 291 e. Joint tenants should join in an avowry or cognizance for rent; 3 Salk. 207; or for taking cattle damage feasant; Bacon, Abr. Joint Ten. (K); or one joint tenant should avow in his own right, and as bailiff to the other; 3 Salk. 207. But a tenant in common cannot avow the taking of the cattle of a stranger upon the land damage feasant, without making himself bailiff or servant to his co-tenant; 2 H. Bla. 388; Bacon, Abr. Replevin (K).

Master and servant, where co-trespassers, should be joined though they be not equally culpable; 5 B. & C. 559. Partners may join for a joint injury in relation to the joint property; 3 C. & P. 196. They may be joined as defendants where property is taken by one of the firm for its benefit; 1 C. & M. 93; and where the firm makes fraudulent representations as to the credit of a third person, whereby the firm gets benefit; Patton v. Gurney, 17 Mass. 182, 9 Am. Dec. 141. In an action against a corporation for a tort, the corporation and its servants by whose act the injury was done may be joined as defendants; Hussey v. R. Co., 98 N. C. 34, 3 S. E. 923, 2 Am. St. Rep. 312.

Tenants in common must join for a trespass upon the lands held in common; Littleton § 315; Sherman v. Ballow, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 304; Rangely v. Spring, 28 Me. 136; or for taking away their common property; Cro. Eliz. 143; or for detaining it; Putnam v. Wise, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 234, 37 Am. Dec. 309; or for a nuisance to their estate; Collins v. Ferris, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 246.

IN CRIMINAL CASES. Two or more persons who have committed a crime may be jointly indicted therefor; In re Curran, 7 Gratt. (Va.) 619; U. S. v. O'Callahan, 6 McLean 596, Fed. Cas. No. 15,910. Bloomhuff v. State, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 205; only where the offence is such that it may be committed by two jointly; State v. Roulstone, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 107; and not where there are distinct and different offences; State v. Hall, 97 N. C. 474, 1 S. E. 683. A principal and accessory may be joined in one indictment; Com. v. Devine, 155 Mass. 224, 29 N. E. 515; State v. Lang, 65 N. H. 284, 23 Atl. 432.

They may have a separate trial, however, in the discretion of the court; Maton v. People, 15 Ill. 536; People v. Stockham, 1 Park. Cr. (N. Y.) 424; In re Curran, 7 Gratt. (Va.) 619; Com. v. Hills, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 530; State v. McLendon, 5 Strobb. (S. C.) 85; Hawkins v. State, 9 Ala. 137, 44 Am. Dec. 431; and in some states as a matter of right; People v. McIntyre, 1 Park. Cr. (N. Y.) 371.

See Dicey, Parties; Steph. Pl.; PARTIES; JOINT TORT FEASORS.

As to the effect of Misjoinder and Non-joinder, and how and when advantage should be taken of either, see those titles.

JOINT. Joined together; united; shared by two or more. The term is used to express a common property interest enjoyed or a common liability incurred by two or more persons; as applied to real estate it involves the idea of survivorship. See JOINT TENANTS; ESTATE IN COMMON.

With respect to the ownership of choses in action, the term implies that the interest and right of action are united so that all the owners must be joined in a suit to enforce the obligation jointly held. See JOINT AND SEVERAL.

A joint liability on choses in action implies that though each person subject to it is liable for the whole, they are all treated in law as together constituting one legal entity and must be sued together or a release to one will operate in favor of all. One who pays the debt is entitled to contribution (q. v.).

JOINT ACTION. An action brought by two or more as plaintiffs or against two or more as defendants. See JOINT AND SEVERAL; ACTIONS; JOINDER.

JOINT ADMINISTRATORS. See ADMINISTRATOR.

JOINT AND SEVERAL. A liability is said to be joint and several when the creditor may sue one or more of the parties to such liability separately, or all of them together at his option. Dacey, Parties 230. Where one is compelled to pay the whole debt or more than his proper share, he is entitled to contribution (q. v.). In case of the death of one his liability remains against his estate; Wms. Pers. Prop. 363. As a general rule all the contracts of partners are said to be joint and several. See PARTNERSHIP.

As to joint and several debtors, Lord Mansfield said in Rice v. Shute, 5 Burr. 2611, that "all contracts with partners were joint and several, and every partner was liable to pay the whole." But it was remarked by Spencer, C. J., that "it would be straining Lord Mansfield's opinion unreasonably to say, that he meant technically that all contracts with partners were joint and several, for, then, the non-joinder of any of the partners never could be pleaded in abatement, which all the court expressly decided. In equity they are joint and several; and so they were as regarded that suit, the defendant having neglected to avail himself of the objection in a legal manner. Surely it cannot be said that in a legal sense, when there are a plurality of debtors, that their contract is joint and several, when they have engaged jointly to pay the debt. Each debtor is bound for the whole, until the debt is paid; but as regards the remedy to coerce payment, there is a material and settled distinction. If they have undertaken severally to pay, separate suits may be brought against each; but when their undertaking is joint, unless they waive the advantage, by not interposing a plea in abatement, they must be sued jointly, if in full life, and neither has been discharged by operation of a bankrupt or insolvent law, or is not liable on the ground of infancy." Robertson v. Smith, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 459, 9 Am. Dec. 227.

A defendant has no right to say that an action shall be several which a plaintiff elects to make joint; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Ide, 114 U. S. 52, 5 Sup. Ct. 735, 29 L. Ed. 63. A separate defence may defeat a joint recovery, but it cannot deprive a plaintiff of his right to prosecute his own suit to final determination in his own way; Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Thompson, 200 U. S. 206, 26 Sup. Ct. 161, 50 L. Ed. 441, 4 Ann. Cas. 1147.

Where several parties enter into a conspiracy to win the money of a third person by gambling or betting, each member of the conspiracy is jointly and severally liable to the person losing the money, under statutes allowing the recovery of money lost by gambling; Lear v. McMillen, 17 Ohio St. 464; McGrew v. Produce Exchange, 85 Tenn. 572, 4 S. W. 38, 4 Am. St. Rep. 771; Preston v. Hutchinson, 29 Vt. 144; although a partnership cannot, strictly speaking, exist for the conduct of an illegal business; Berns v. Shaw, 65 W. Va. 667, 64 S. E. 930, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 522, n. See JOINT TORTFEASORS.

JOINT AND SEVERAL BOND. A bond of two or more obligors, who bind themselves jointly and severally to the obligees, who can sue all the obligors jointly, or any one of them separately, for the whole amount, but cannot bring a joint action against part,—that is, treat it as joint as to some and several as to others.

JOINT BOND. The bond of two or more obligors, the action to enforce which must be joint against them all.

JOINT COMMITTEE. A committee composed of members of both houses of a legislature. See May, Parl. Pr.

JOINT CONTRACT. One in which the contractors are jointly bound to perform the promise or obligation therein contained, or entitled to receive the benefit of such promise or obligation.

It is a general rule that a joint contract survives, whatever may be the beneficial interests of the parties under it. When a partner, covenantor, or other person entitled, having a joint interest in a contract not running with the land, dies, the right to sue survives in the other partner, etc.; Morris' Lessee v. Vanderen, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 65, 1 L. Ed. 38; Wallace v. Fitzsimmons, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 248, 1 L. Ed. 122; Add. Contr. 9th ed. 239. And when the obligation or promise is to perform something jointly by the obligors or promisors, and one dies, the action must be brought against the survivor; Hamm, Partn. 156.

When all the parties interested in a joint contract die, the action must be brought by the executors or administrators of the last surviving obligee against the executors or administrators of the last surviving obligor; Add. Contr. 239. See CONTRACTS; PARTIES; CO-OBLIGOR.

JOINT DEBTORS. Two or more persons jointly liable for the same debt.

To sustain a suit against joint debtors, a joint and subsisting indebtedness must be shown; Robertson v. Smith, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 459, 9 Am. Dec. 227; and by proceeding to judgment against one or more of joint debtors the debt is merged in the judgment as to all; id.

Payment by one joint debtor who has been discharged in bankruptcy of a sum, less than is due on the joint debt, which the creditor accepts in satisfaction of the whole debt, is held to operate as such in favor of the other debtor; Ex parte Zeigler, 83 S. C. 78, 64 S. E. 513, 916, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1005.

JOINT DEBTORS' ACTS. Statutes enacted in many of the states, which provide that judgment may be given for or against one or more of several plaintiffs, and for or against one or more of several defendants, and that, "in an action against several defendants, the court may, in its discretion, render judgment against one or more of them, leaving the action to proceed against the others, whenever a several judgment is proper." The name is also given to statutes providing that where an action is instituted against two or more defendants upon an alleged joint liability, and some of them are served with process, but jurisdiction is not obtained over the others, the plaintiff may still proceed to trial against those who are before the court, and, if he recovers, may have judgment against all of the defendants whom he shows to be jointly liable. 1 Black, Judg. §§ 208, 235.

JOINT EXECUTORS. Those who are joined in the execution of a will. See EXECUTOR.

JOINT FIAT. A fiat which was formerly issued against two or more trading partners.

JOINT FINE. The fine which might be levied upon a whole vill.

JOINT HEIRS. Co-heirs.

JOINT INDICTMENT. One indictment brought against two or more offenders, charging the defendants jointly. It may be where there is a joint criminal act, without any regard to any particular personal default or defect of either of the defendants: thus, there may be a joint indictment against the joint keepers of a gaming-house; 1 Ventr. 302; 2 Hawk. Pl. Cr. 240.

JOINT LIVES. An expression used to designate the duration of an estate or right, limited or granted to two or more persons, to be enjoyed during the lives of both or all of them.

An annuity to two for their lives is payable until the death of one. Where the survivor is to be benefited, the conveyance or devise is usually expressed to be "to hold their joint lives and the life of the survivor."

JOINT OWNERSHIP. See JOINT.

JOINT RESOLUTION. A resolution adopted by both houses of congress or a legislature. When such a resolution has been approved by the president or passed with his approval, it has the effect of a law. 6 Op. Atty. Gen. 680.

The distinction between a joint resolution and a concurrent resolution of congress, is that the former requires the approval of the president while the latter does not. Rep. Sen. Jud. Com. Jan. 1897.

JOINT STOCK BANKS. In English Law. A species of quasi corporations, or companies regulated by deeds of settlement. See JOINT STOCK COMPANY.

JOINT STOCK COMPANY. An association of individuals for purposes of profit, possessing a common capital contributed by the members composing it, such capital being commonly divided into shares of which each member possesses one or more, and which are transferable by the owner. Shelf. Jt. St. Co. 1.

A quasi partnership, invested by statutes in England and many of the states with some of the privileges of a corporation. See Pennsylvania v. Mining Co., 10 Wall. (U. S.) 556, 19 L. Ed. 998; L. R. 4 Eq. 695.

A partnership whereof the capital is divided, or agreed to be divided, into shares so as to be transferable without the express consent of the co-partners. Pars. Part. § 435.

Such associations are not pure partnerships, for their members are recognized as an aggregate body; nor are they pure corporations, for their members are more or less liable to contribute to the debts of the collective whole. Incorporated companies are intermediate between corporations known to the common law and ordinary corporations and partake of the nature of both. 1 Lindl. Partn., 1st ed. 6.

They are to be distinguished from limited partnerships chiefly in that there is, in a joint stock company, no dilectus personarum, that is, no choice about admitting partners, the shares are transferable without involving a dissolution of the association, the assignee of shares becomes a partner by virtue of the transfer, and the rights and duties of the members are determined by articles of association, or in England by a deed of settlement; 1 Pars. Contr., 8th ed. 144.

Joint stock companies may be formed without regard to the statutes, and the promoters may choose to proceed solely upon their common-law rights and responsibilities; People v. Coleman, 133 N. Y. 279, 31 N. E. 96, 16 L. R. A. 183; Spotswood v. Morris, 12 Idaho 360, 85 Pac. 1094, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 665. They are not illegal; Howe v. Morse, 174 Mass. 491, 55 N. E. 213.

The relation of the stockholders to the company is settled by the articles of agreement. They contribute the capital, select the trustees and are entitled to a distributive share of the profits. They have no power to use the name of the company to interfere with its business, or to bind it in any manner. This power they have voluntarily surrendered to the trustees; In re Oliver's Estate, 136 Pa. 43, 20 Atl. 527, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 421, 20 Am. St. Rep. 894; Spotswood v. Morris, 12 Idaho 360, 85 Pac. 1094, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 665; 211 L. Cas. 520.

Generally the number of shares is fixed by the charter, but it is sometimes provided that there shall not be less than a certain number nor more than a certain number. In such cases it is left for the company to determine the number within the limits prescribed; Somerset & K. R. Co. v. Cushing, 45 Me. 524; but where the charter fixes the amount of the capital stock, and provides that it may be increased from time to time at the pleasure of the corporation, the directors have no power to increase the amount of the stock, although the charter provides that all the corporate powers shall be vested in, and exercised by a board of directors, and such officers and agents as such board shall appoint; Chicago City R. Co. v. Allerton, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 233, 21 L. Ed. 902.

In New York joint stock companies have all the attributes of a corporation except the right to have and use a common seal, and an action is properly brought for or against the president as such, and the judgment and execution against him bind the joint property of the association, but do not bind his own property; National Bank of Schuylerville v. Van Derwerker, 74 N. Y. 234; People v. Coleman, 5 N. Y. Supp. 394, 970, affirmed 133 N. Y. 279, 31 N. E. 96, 16 L. R. A. 183; but it has been held that the provisions in the New York statutes are merely local in their operation, and that the members may be sued in other states as partners; Boston & A. R. v. Pearson, 128 Mass. 445; Frost v. Walker, 60 Me. 468.

They may be served with summons in another state in the same manner that corporations are served; Adams Exp. Co. v. State, 55 Ohio St. 69, 44 N. E. 506; and on an issue as to whether an association was a joint stock company or a corporation, its classification by the statutes of New York, where it was created, has been held not conclusive; State v. Exp. Co., 1 Ohio, N. P. 238, 2 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 239. A joint stock company having some of the characteristics of a corporation and some of a partnership, including the right to a common seal, ownership of the property by the association, and the right to sue and be sued in the corporate name, was held to be a citizen of the state which created it, and when sued in another state to be entitled to a removal to the federal court irrespective of the citizenship of its individual members; Bushnell v. Park Bros. & Co., 46 Fed. 209; Maltz v. Express Co., 1 Flap. 611, Fed. Cas. No. 9,002; Fargo v. Ry. Co., 6 Fed. 787, 10 Biss. 273.

A limited partnership association created under statute, although it may be called a quasi corporation, and is declared by statute to be a citizen of the state, is not, like a corporation created under the laws of the state, to be deemed a citizen of that state within the meaning of the clause of the federal constitution which extends the judicial power of the United States to controversies between citizens of different states; Great Southern Fire Proof Hotel Co. v. Jones, 177 U. S. 449, 20 Sup. Ct. 690, 44 L. Ed. 842, reversing Jones v. Hotel Co., 86 Fed. 370, 30 C. C. A. 108.

The effect of the clause of the constitution of Pennsylvania that the term corporations "shall be construed to include all joint stock companies or associations having any of the powers or privileges of corporations, but possessed by individuals or partnerships" was declared to be only to place joint stock companies under the restrictions imposed by that article upon corporations, and not to invest them with corporation attributes; Great Southern Fire Proof Hotel Co. v. Jones, 177 U. S. 449, 20 Sup. Ct. 690, 44 L. Ed. 842. They are properly classified with corporations in a tax measure, such as the federal corporation tax; Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., 220 U. S. 107, 31 Sup. Ct. 342, 55 L. Ed. 389, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1312; Spreckels Sugar Refining Co. v. McClain, 192 U. S. 397, 24 Sup. Ct. 376, 48 L. Ed. 496.

Such companies, formed to deal in real estate, do not create interests within the rule against perpetuities and do not put illegal restraints upon alienation; Howe v. Morse, 174 Mass. 491, 55 N. E. 213; see 13 Harv. L. R. 516.

At common law they are held not corporations but are to be sued as partners; B. & A. R. Co. v. Pearson, 128 Mass. 445; Lewis v. Tilton, 64 Ia. 220, 19 N. W. 911, 52 Am. Rep. 436. But in states where there are statutory provisions concerning them the indebtedness of joint stock companies will be charged pro rata to the solvent members; Cameron v. Bank (Tex.) 34 S. W. 178. An English joint stock company (in this case a fire insurance company) endowed by its deed of settlement with the following powers and faculties, 1. A distinctive artificial name by which it can make contracts. 2. A statutory authority to sue and be sued in the name of its officers as representing the association. 3. A statutory recognition of it as an entity distinct from its members by allowing them to sue it or be sued by it. 4. A provision for its perpetuity by transfer of its shares so as to secure succession of membership, was held to be a corporation in this country; Liverpool & L. Life & F. Ins. Co. v. Massachusetts, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 566, 19 L. Ed. 1029; Oliver v. R. Co., 100 Mass. 531; notwithstanding the acts of parliament declaring it should not be so considered, and the court held that such corporations, whether organized under the laws of a state of the Union or a foreign government, may be taxed by another state for the privilege of conducting their corporate business therein.

When such a company is not organized under the statutes a suit brought by or against it should be in the name of all the partners or of one or more for the use of all; Pipe v. Bateman, 1 Ia. 369; McGreary v. Chandler, 58 Me. 537; and a defective certificate of organization will render all the parties liable to a common-law action as partners; Vanhorn v. Corcoran, 127 Pa. 255, 18 Atl. 16, 4 L. R. A. 386. A mere subscription for shares in an unincorporated joint stock company will not make the subscribers liable as partners to third persons dealing with the company; they must have intended to become members and share in the profits of the business, but an unexplained subscription is evidence of that fact; Hunnewell v. Canning Co., 53 Mo. App. 245.

It is an incumbent duty on the part of a joint stock company not to permit a transfer of stock until fully satisfied of the shareholder's authority to transfer; L. R. 9 Eq. 181; Iasigi v. R. Co., 129 Mass. 46; and as to the nature of shares in such an association see SHARES.

An authority conferred on the directors to make contracts and bargains, and to transact all matters requisite for the affairs of the company will not in general authorize the directors to draw bills; 19 L. J. Ex. 34; 20 L. J. Q. B. 160; but if the directors have authority to bind the company by bills, and they regularly accept, in the name of the company, a bill drawn on the company, every member is liable as a joint acceptor to any holder who is not also a member of the company; 19 L. J. Ex. 34; 5 E. & B. 1; so the acceptance of a bill by an agent who is also a member of the company binds him personally; 9 Exch. 154.

To a suit for a dissolution or winding up of the affairs of a joint stock company, all the shareholders, however numerous, must be parties; 1 Keen 24; and any member of the company may institute an action for its dissolution; Snyder v. Lindsey, 92 Hun 432, 36 N. Y. Supp. 1037. The fact that such a company has conducted business for twenty-three years without making dividends for its stockholders, is good ground for its dissolution at suit of one of them; Willis v. Chapman, 68 Vt. 459, 35 Atl. 459. A society that cannot be incorporated because organized to resist the enforcement of laws cannot sue in the society name for the collection of a debt; Schuetzen Bund v. Agitations Verein, 44 Mich. 313, 6 N. W. 675, 38 Am. Rep. 270. See CORPORATION; DIRECTOR; STOCKHOLDER; PARTNERS; PARTNERSHIP.

JOINT TENANCY. Joint tenancy exists where there has been a limitation of the same estate, by deed, will or parol, to two or more persons without words of severance. Jenks, Modern Land Law 170. Joint tenants are said to have four unities, time, title, interest and possession; Bassler v. Rewodlinski, 130 Wis. 26, 109 N. W. 1032, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 701. The estate of both must arise under the same limitation; but under the statute of uses the necessity that the titles of all the joint tenants should commence at the same time is avoided.

Every kind of property, real and personal, may be so held; Freeman, Co-Ten. & Part. § 16.

If one convey his whole interest to a stranger it works a severance; but if he convey a less interest, it probably does not. The marriage of a female joint tenant is not a severance; nor is a subsequent lease for years by the husband and the other joint tenant, reserving rent jointly; [1897] 1 Ch. 134. Neither a devise by one joint tenant nor an encumbrance created by one joint tenant defeats the full right of the survivor.

If one of two joint tenants dies, the survivor becomes solely entitled to the estate; Co. Litt. 181 a; but not as against a grantee inter vivos of one of the joint tenants; nor against a judgment debt on which execution had been levied in the life time of the debtor.

Survivorship has been abolished, except as to trust estates, in many states; See Demb. Land Titles 27; it has never existed in Ohio, Kansas, Nebraska or Idaho; id. 198; nor in Connecticut; Washb. R. P.

The presumption is that all tenants holding jointly hold as tenants in common, unless a clear intention to the contrary be shown; Webster v. Vandeventer, 6 Gray (Mass.) 428; Parsons v. Boyd, 20 Ala. 112; Miles v. Fisher, 10 Ohio 1, 36 Am. Dec. 61; Bambaugh v. Bambaugh, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 191; Purdy v. Purdy, 3 Md. Ch. Dec. 547; Allen v. Logan, 96 Mo. 591, 10 S. W. 149; Hershy v. Clark, 35 Ark. 17, 37 Am. Rep. 1; Rowland v. Rowland, 93 N. C. 214. In some states this is by statute.

In some, words that would have created a joint tenancy now create a tenancy in common.

Where there is a devise to two or more by name without a clear intention to vest it in the survivor, it vests severally; Goldstein v. Hammell, 236 Pa. 305, 84 Atl. 772.

Joint tenants at common law have no right to compulsory partition; Co. Litt. 187 a. They convey to each other by Release, in which words of inheritance are unnecessary; id. 273 b. They must plead and be impleaded jointly; id. 180 b., 195 b; but in [1880] 16 Ch. D. 63, it was held that one might sue alone for cutting timber on the land.

See JUS ACCRESCENDI; SURVIVOR.

JOINT TORTFEASORS. Wrongdoers; two or more who commit a tort.

When several persons join in an offence or injury, they may generally be sued jointly, or any number less than the whole may be sued, or each one may be sued separately; Williams v. Sheldon, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 654. Each is liable for himself, because the entire damages sustained were occasioned by each, each sanctioning the acts of the others, so that by suing one alone, he is not charged beyond his just proportion. Any number less than the whole may be sued, because each is answerable for his companion's acts. Thus a joint action may be brought against several for an assault and battery, or for composing and publishing a libel; 2 Saund. 117 a; Bacon, Abr. Actions in General (C); Harris v. Huntington, 2 Tyl. (Vt.) 129, 4 Am. Dec. 728.

But to this rule that for a joint injury a joint action may be brought, there is an exception, namely, that no joint action can be maintained for a joint slander; this exception seems to proceed upon the ground that each man's slander is his own, and it cannot by any means be considered that of another. Although this exception appears to be fully established, yet it is difficult to see the reason of it; when one of several trespassers gives the blow, he is considered as acting for the others, and, if they acted jointly, they may be jointly sued; why not consider the speaker, when acting in concert with others, as the actor for the whole in uttering the words? The blow is no more that of the person who did not give it than the words are the words of him who only united with the other in an agreement that they should be spoken. In either case, upon principle, the maxim, qui facit per alium facit per se, ought to have its force. Such however, is not the law.

Where a person is injured by a joint tort and accepts satisfaction from one of the wrongdoers, he cannot sue the other; Spurr v. R. Co., 56 N. J. L. 346, 28 Atl. 582.

A railroad company may be sued jointly with the servant whose negligence caused the injury, although it was not independently at fault; Illinois Central Ry. Co. v. Houchins, 121 Ky. 526, 89 S. W. 530, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 375, 123 Am. St. Rep. 205.

A covenant not to sue one of two joint tortfeasors does not operate as a release of the other from liability; [1892] 2 Q. B. 511; nor does the dismissal of an action against one, with the execution, for a valuable consideration, of an agreement not to sue him, release the other; City of Chicago v. Babcock, 143 Ill. 358, 32 N. E. 271; nor does the fact that where property is jointly converted by two persons, and one of those converting accounts to the owner, who accepts part of the proceeds, remove the other's liability; Horseley v. Moss, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 241, 23 S. W. 1115.

Where two or more parties act, each for himself and independently of each other, in a manner which may be injurious to another, they cannot be held jointly liable for the acts of each other; Livesay v. Nat. Bank, 36 Colo. 526, 86 Pac. 102, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 598, 118 Am. St. Rep. 120; Blaisdell v. Stephens, 14 Nev. 17, 33 Am. Rep. 523; Forbes v. Marsh, 15 Conn. 384; Larkins v. Eckwurz, 42 Ala. 322, 94 Am. Dec. 651; Miller v. Ditch Co., 87 Cal. 433, 25 Pac. 550, 22 Am. St. Rep. 254.

Where unlawful attachments were simultaneously sued out by different creditors acting through the same attorney and levied by the same officer on the same property at the same time, but so that one constituted a prior lien on the personality, and the other a prior lien on the realty attached, the creditors were held not joint wrongdoers, since neither was interested in the success of the other, and their actions, though simultaneous, were not for a common purpose; Miller v. Beck, 108 Ia. 575, 79 N. W. 344. But it has been held that where several creditors sue out at different times separate writs of attachment against a common debtor and cause them to be simultaneously levied by the same officer, they will be regarded, the levy being wrongful, as joint wrongdoers, though they may have acted separately without concert; Sparkman v. Swift, 81 Ala. 231, 8 South. 160; Vose v. Woods, 26 Hun (N. Y.) 486. In Ellis v. Howard, 17 Vt. 330, it was held that where the attachments are levied at the same time, by the same officer, and upon the same property, there is prima facie a joint trespass.

If the plaintiff allege that the concurrent negligence of both defendants caused his injury, he may join them in one action. It depends on the averments of his complaint, and if the state court so decides, he may join them even though the liability of one is statutory and the other rests on the common law; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Dowell, 229 U. S. 102, 33 Sup. Ct. 684, 57 L. Ed. 1090.

JOINT TRESPASSERS. Two or more who unite in committing a trespass. See JOINT TORTFEASORS.

JOINT TRUSTEES. Two or more persons who are intrusted with property for the benefit of one or more others. See TRUSTEE.

JOINTRESS, JOINTURESS. A woman who has an estate settled on her by her husband, to hold during her life, if she survive him. Co. Litt. 46.

JOINTURE. A competent livelihood of freehold for the wife, of lands and tenements, to take effect, in profit or possession, presently after the death of the husband, for the life of the wife at least.

Jointures are regulated by the statute of 27 Hen. VIII. c. 10, commonly called the statute of uses.

To make a good jointure, the following circumstances must concur, namely: It must take effect, in possession or profit, immediately from the death of the husband. It must be for the wife's life, or for some greater estate. It must be limited to the wife herself, and not to any other person in trust for her. It must be made in satisfaction for the wife's whole dower, and not of part of it only. The estate limited to the wife must be expressed or averred to be in satisfaction of her whole dower. It must be made before marriage. See Grogan v. Garrison, 27 Ohio St. 60, where it is said that it may also be made after marriage. A jointure attended with all these circumstances is binding on the widow, and is a complete bar to the claim of her dower; or, rather, it prevents its ever arising. See 4 Kent 55.

But there are other modes of limiting an estate to a wife, which, Lord Coke says, are good jointures within the statute, provided that the wife accepts them after the death of the husband. She may, however, reject them, and claim her dower; Cruise, Dig. tit. 7; 2 Bla. Com. 137. See DOWER. It is held that a jointure cannot be affected by a post-nuptial agreement; McCauley's Ex'rs v. McCauley, 7 Houst. (Del.) 102, 30 Atl. 735.

Any reasonable provision which an adult person agrees to accept in lieu of dower, it is said, will amount to an equitable jointure, and although it may be wanting in the requisites of a legal jointure, in equity it will bar dower; Rieger v. Schaible, 81 Neb. 33, 115 N. W. 560, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 866, 16 Ann. Cas. 700; Stilley v. Folger, 14 Ohio 610.

A widow may, by provisions of an antenuptial contract, waive her right to an allowance when the rights of minor children are not involved; Kroell v. Kroell, 219 Ill. 105, 76 N. E. 63, 4 Ann. Cas. 801. If such a contract was intended by the parties to operate as an equitable jointure, it will be upheld as such; Mintier v. Mintier, 28 Ohio St. 307.

In its more enlarged sense, a jointure signifies a joint estate limited to both husband and wife. 2 Bla. Com. 137. See 14 Vin. Abr. 540; Washb. R. P.

See MARRIAGE SETTLEMENT.

JOUR (Fr.). Day. It is used in our old law-books: as, tout jours, forever. It is also frequently employed in the composition of words: as, journal, a day-book; journeyman, a man who works by the day; journeys account.

JOURNAL. In Maritime Law. The book kept on board of a ship or other vessel which contains an account of the ship's course, with a short history of every occurrence during the voyage. Another name for log-book. Chitty, Law of Nat. 199.

In Commercial Law. A book used among merchants, in which the contents of the waste-book are separated every month, and entered on the debtor and creditor side, for more convenient posting in the ledger.

In Legislation. An account of the proceedings of a legislative body.

In England, there is no written constitution to control the action of parliament and its act cannot, therefore, be questioned, and so the parliament roll is sufficient to prove the authenticity of an act; 1 Strange 446. The journals of parliament are not records and cannot weaken or control a statute, which is a record and to be tried only by itself; Hob. 110.

The constitution of the United States, art. 1, s. 5, directs that "each house shall keep a journal of its proceedings, and from time to time publish the same, excepting such parts as may in their judgment require secrecy. See 2 Sto. Const., 5th ed. § 839.

The constitutions of the several states contain similar provisions.

On a reference to the journal of the federal house of representatives to ascertain whether a duly authenticated law was passed, the court is bound to assume that the journal speaks the truth, and cannot receive oral evidence to impeach its correctness; U. S. v. Ballin, 144 U. S. 1, 12 Sup. Ct. 507, 36 L. Ed. 321; but the debates in congress may not be resorted to for the purpose of discovering the meaning of a statute; U. S. v. Freight Ass'n, 166 U. S. 290, 17 Sup. Ct. 540, 41 L. Ed. 1007.

The journal of either house is evidence of the action of that house upon all matters before it; Root v. King, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 613; Cowp. 17. It is a public record of which the courts may take judicial notice; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 482; Osburn v. Staley, 5 W. Va. 85, 13 Am. Rep. 640; Moody v. State, 48 Ala. 115, 17 Am. Rep. 28; South Ottawa v. Perkins, 94 U. S. 260, 24 L. Ed. 154; Koehler v. Hill, 60 Ia. 549, 14 N. W. 738, 15 N. W. 609; Wise v. Bigger, 79 Va. 280; Brown v. Nash, 1 Wyo. 85. Cooley, Const. Lim. 135; contra, Gnob v. Cushman, 45 Ill. 119; Board of Commissioners of Madison County v. Burford, 93 Ind. 383. If it should appear therefrom that any act did not receive the requisite vote, or that the act was not constitutionally adopted, the courts may adjudge the act void; Cooley, Const. Lim. 164. Failure to comply with certain constitutional provisions in the passage of an act can be shown only by the journals; Fullington v. Williams, 98 Ga. 807, 27 S. E. 183; and if the journal sufficiently shows on its face a substantial compliance with constitutional requirements, a mere clerical omission in the journals of either house will not vitiate an act; Price v. City of Moundsville, 43 W. Va. 523, 27 S. E. 218, 64 Am. St. Rep. 878. Where they are silent as to the observance of any constitutional requirement, it will not be presumed that such requirement was disregarded, and where they do not expressly show whether the act was constitutionally passed it will be held valid unless there is an omission of some matter expressly required by the constitution to be entered therein; Ritchie v. Richards, 14 Utah 345, 47 Pac. 670.

Mere failure to record the passage of an act, in the absence of any affirmative record that it did not secure the concurrence of both houses, is not sufficient to show that the act was not passed, where the certificate of the presiding officer of each house shows that it was regularly passed; Territory v. O'Connor, 5 Dak. 397, 41 N. W. 746, 3 L. R. A. 355.

Where the constitution requires that the yeas and nays be entered on the journals, they are conclusive as against not only a printed statute published by law, but a duly enrolled act; Union Bank of Richmond v. Commissioners of Town of Oxford, 119 N. C. 214, 25 S. E. 966, 34 L. R. A. 487.

In determining whether an act was passed in accordance with a constitutional provision requiring the assent of two-thirds of the members, recourse may be had to the journals, if the certificate of the presiding officer fails to show by what vote the bill was passed; New York & L. I. Bridge Co. v. Smith, 148 N. Y. 540, 42 N. E. 1088.

The journals need not show that a bill was read by sections on its final passage, as required by the constitution, the presumption being that it was read. And where they affirmatively show non-compliance with an essential requirement to the enactment of a bill, or fail to show any essential step in the enactment which the constitution requires them to show, the enrolled bill as evidence of the law is overcome; State v. Hocker, 36 Fla. 358, 18 South. 767.

Where a bill, as approved, contains important clauses which the journals show were stricken out by the amendment in the houses, it is invalid; State v. Wendler, 94 Wis. 369, 68 N. W. 759.

The journals cannot be resorted to by the court for the purpose of inquiring into the motive which actuated the legislature or any member of it in enacting a law; Blaine County v. Heard, 5 Idaho 6, 45 Pac. 890.

The journals are inadmissible to show that parts of the bill, as passed by the houses, were omitted from the enrolled bill as signed by the presiding officers of the two houses and the governor, where all bills are required to be signed by the governor after having passed the legislative assembly; Harwood v. Wentworth, 4 Ariz. 378, 42 Pac. 1025.

An enrolled bill, on file in the office of the secretary of state, must be accepted without question by the courts as having been regularly enacted by the legislature, and is conclusive evidence of its existence and contents; State v. Jones, 6 Wash. 452, 34 Pac. 201, 23 L. R. A. 340; State v. Young, 32 N.

J. L. 29; Weeks v. Smith, 81 Me. 538, 18 Atl. 325; Hunt v. Wright, 70 Miss. 298, 11 South. 608; State v. Glenn, 18 Nev. 34, 1 Pac. 186; People v. Commissioners of Highways of Marlborough, 54 N. Y. 270, 13 Am. Rep. 581.

Every reasonable presumption is made in favor of the action of a legislative body; it will not be presumed from the mere silence of the journals that either house disregarded a constitutional requirement in the passage of an act, unless in cases where the constitution has required the journals to show the action that has been taken; McCulloch v. State, 11 Ind. 424; Miller v. State, 3 Ohio St. 475; and the presumption that a properly authenticated bill was passed is not overcome by the failure of the journals to show any fact which is not specifically required by the constitution to be entered therein; Miesen v. Canfield, 64 Minn. 513, 67 N. W. 632.

Such a bill properly enrolled, signed, and approved cannot be impeached by reference to the journals of either house, to show that it was enacted in conformity to constitutional requirements; Lafferty v. Huffman, 99 Ky. 80, 35 S. W. 123, 32 L. R. A. 203; Com. v. Hardin County Court, 99 Ky. 188, 35 S. W. 275. But other courts have considered it part of their duties to ascertain whether the legislature has complied with the constitutional provisions and hence have introduced the journals to see if those prerequisites, required by the constitution have been performed; State v. Wray, 109 Mo. 594, 19 S. W. 86; Hunt v. State, 22 Tex. App. 396, 3 S. W. 233; Callaghan v. Chipman, 59 Mich. 610, 26 N. W. 806; State v. Brown, 20 Fla. 407; even if proof is adduced that they were; State v. Green, 36 Fla. 154, 18 South. 334.

As to the conclusiveness of an enrolled bill, see Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. State, 28 Okl. 94, 113 Pac. 921, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1. See INTERPRETATION.

JOURNEY. Originally a day's travel. It is now applied to travel from place to place, without restriction of time. But when thus applied, it is employed to designate a travel which is without the ordinary habits, business, or duties of the person, to a distance from his home, and beyond the circle of his friends or acquaintances. Gholson v. State, 53 Ala. 521, 25 Am. Rep. 652.

JOURNEYS ACCOUNT. In English Practice. A new writ which the plaintiff was permitted to sue out within a reasonable time after the abatement, without his fault, of the first writ. This time was computed with reference to the number of days which the plaintiff must spend in journeying to reach the court: hence the name of journeys account, that is, journeys accomptes or counted. This writ was quasi a continuance of the first writ, and so related back to it as to oust the defendant or tenant of his voucher, plea of non-tenure, joint tenancy fully administered, or any other plea arising upon matter happening after date of the first writ; Co. Litt. fol. 9 b.

This mode of proceeding has fallen into disuse, the practice now being to permit that writ to be quashed, and to sue out another. See Termes de la Ley; Bacon, Abr. Abatement (Q); 14 Viner, Abr. 558; 4 Com. Dig. 714; 7 M. & G. 762; Richards v. Ins. Co., 8 Cra. (U. S.) 84, 3 L. Ed. 496.

JOUST. See JUST.

JUBILACION. In Spanish Law. The right of a public officer to retire from office, retaining his title and his salary, either in whole or in part, after he has attained the age of fifty years and been in public service at least twenty years, whenever his infirmities prevent him from discharging the duties of his office.

JUDAISMUS (Lat.). The religion and rites of the Jews. Du Cange. A quarter set apart for residence of Jews. Du Cange. A usurious rate of interest. 1 Mon. Angl. 839; 2 id. 10, 665. An income anciently accruing to the king from the Jews. Blount.

JUEDEX (Lat.). In Old English Law. A juror. Spelman, Gloss. A judge, in modern sense, especially—as opposed to justiciarius, i. e. a common-law judge—to denote an ecclesiastical judge. Bracton, fol. 401, 402.

In Roman Law. One who, either in his own right or by appointment of the magistrate for the special case, judged causes.

Thus, the prætor was formerly called judez. But, generally, prætors and magistrates who judge of their own right were distinguished from judices, who were private persons, appointed by the prætor, on application of the plaintiff, to try the cause, as soon as issue was joined, and furnished by him with instructions as to the legal principles involved. They were variously called judices delegati, or pedanei, or speciales. It has been said that they resembled in many respects jurors: thus, both are private persons, brought in at a certain stage of the proceedings, viz., issue joined, to try the cause, under instructions from the judge as to the law of the case. But civilians are not clear whether the judices had to decide the fact alone, or the law and fact. The judez resembles in many respects the arbitrator, or arbitrator, the chief differences being, first, that the latter is appointed in cases of trust and confidence, the former in cases where the relations of the parties are governed by strict law (in pactionibus strictis); second, the latter has the whole control of cases, and decides according to equity and good conscience, the former by strict formula; third, that the latter may be a magistrate, the former must be a private person; fourth, that the award of the arbitrator derives its force from the agreement of submission, while the decree of the judez has its sanction in the command of the prætor to try the cause; Calvinus, Lex.; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 210, note; Mackeldey, Civ. Law, Kaufmann ed. § 193, note.

It has been said that there was generally one judez, sometimes three,—in which case the decision of two, in the absence of the third, had no effect; Calvinus, Lex. But another careful writer says that "although there could never be more than one judez, there were sometimes several arbitri, but the arbitrator was chosen from the same class as the judez." Sand. Inst. Just. Intro. lxiil.

Down to the time of handing over the cause to the judez, that is, till issue joined, the proceedings were before the prætor, and were said to be in jure; after that before the judez, and were said to be in judicio. In all this we see the germ of the Anglo-Saxon system of judicature; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 67.

A judge who conducted the trial from beginning to end; magistratus. The practice of calling in judices was disused before Justinian's time: therefore, in the Code, Institutes, and Novels, judez means judge in its modern sense. Heineccius, Elem. Jur. Civ. § 1327.

The term judez is used with very different significations at different periods of Roman law. The distinctive features of the position of the judez belong to the earlier history of the Roman law.

A recent writer defines very clearly the functions of the judez at that period as distinguished from those of the magistrate: "In the earlier history of civil procedure in Rome, we find two sharply defined divisions,—the proceedings which were said to be in jure, and those which were in judicio. The former took place before the magistrate, who represented officially the judicial power of the State. This magistrate in this capacity decided, in the first instance, whether the claim of the complaining party was cognizable at all,—whether there was any form of procedure by which it could be enforced. If it was controverted, and there seemed to be any action that would fit the case, the litis contestatio was formed, by a solemn appeal addressed by each party to his witnesses, and the controversy was then referred to the judez, or in some cases to a body or college of judices. The judices were not magistrates, and did not represent the power of the State. They were, it would seem, more in theory like referees. They took up the issue which had been stated by the magistrate, heard the testimony, and pronounced the sententia, and this finding was afterwards enforced by the magistrate." Howe, Studies in Civ. L. 246.

This relates to the period during which the sharply defined distinction between proceedings in jure and those in judicio was strictly observed. If, for example, the dispute concerned property it was assigned temporarily to the possession of one party, who gave security for its restoration if required, and the judez simply decided which litigant was right; Morey, R. L. 13, 339. The growth of the proceeding by formula during the next period was doubtless largely due to its convenience as a method of conveying to the judez the instructions of the magistrate with respect to the case referred to him. The new proceeding tended very much to increase the flexibility of the law in its application to particular cases, as it has been said there was no tradition to fetter the formula of the prætor. In the old litis contestatio the issue was formulated in narrowly prescribed terms; in the new formula the terms used were informal and freely chosen by the magistrate. "The formula was thus well adapted as a means for directly submitting to the decisions of a judez in judicio any question, or complex of questions, which the prætor deemed actionable. The prætor himself was now in a position, while formulating the legal issue, to give the judez at the same time direct instructions in reference to the decision of such issue. For whether the judge condemned or acquitted depended now solely on the manner in which the prætor formulated the question in dispute." Sohm, Inst. Rom. L. 177. It was now for the first time that the judez became in effect an official, he ceased to be an independent private person bound only by the positive law, and his action was dominated by the limitations of the prætor's edict. Thus the latter became a dominating force in legal procedure, and the judez in some sense a subordinate official, and the result was "that the formulary procedure obliterated beyond recovery the clear sharp line which had hitherto severed jus and judicium." This naturally resulted.

from the fact that by the formula the jue was converted into an organ or instrument not only of the civil, but also of the prætor, made law, and the proceedings in judicio and those in jure were controlled by the same authority; id. 178, 220. In the last period of Roman procedure during the later empire the prætor lost his former power of directing the administration of the law, and when the edict came to be fixed by the will of the emperor the prætor and the præses were bound by it equally with the jue and in the same way that the latter had before been limited by their own edict. Its publication by the prætor was merely formal, and he became a mere instrument for applying the law, and his duties became more and more ministerial in proportion as, on the one hand, scientific jurisprudence developed and defined the contents of the existing law and, on the other hand, the imperial power, superseding all other agencies, appropriated to itself the function of developing the law. Thus the jue gradually became an official whose duty it was to assist the prætor, and, in the same way, the prætor became in reality an official whose duty it was to assist the emperor; id. 220.

For a long period senators alone were qualified to act as judges, and during that time any member of the senate could act, if justified, by mutual consent of the parties, or if they could not agree by law. There were also plebeian judges called centumviri elected by the comitia constituting a collegium divided into sections and having special jurisdiction of citizenship and successions; their jurisdiction was exclusive where it existed. As to the duties of the jue see also Inst. 4. 17. 1-7; Sand. Introd. xii., xxi., lxi., lxxiv.; Sohm, Inst. Rom. L. §§ 34-37; PRÆTOR; RECUPERATORES; JUDICIUM; IN JURE.

Jue Ordinarius (Lat.). In Civil Law. A judge who had jurisdiction by his own right, not by another's appointment. Calvinus, Lex.; Vicat, Voc. Jur. Blackstone says that judices ordinarii decided only questions of fact, while questions of law were referred to the centumviri; but this would seem to be rather the definition of judices selecti; and not all questions of law were referred to the centumviri, but particular actions: e. g. querela inofficiosi testamenti. See 2 Bla. Com. 315; Vicat, Voc. Jur. Utr. Centumviri.

Jue Pedaneus. Inferior judges; deputy judges; "petit judges that try only trifling cases (so-called because they had only a low seat and no tribunal)." Harper's Lat. Dict.; Dig. 3. 1. 1. 6.

The name was given to the jue who was delegated to hear the whole cause. Their appointment is said to have been due, in the first instance, to the great increase in the volume of judicial business, which led the emperor Diocletian to authorize the provincial governors to refer cases of minor importance to them. They "were not judices in the old sense of the word, but, according to the opinion of Orlolan, permanent magistrates entrusted with the special duty of conducting such cases as the governor might see fit to refer to them. No other view of the character of these officers seems consistent with the autocratic spirit which permeated the whole imperial system;" Morey, Rom. L. 142. "About the end of the third century, the præsides provinciarum were in the habit of proceeding extra ordinem in civil actions, i. e. they were in the habit of either giving judgment themselves or of delegating the whole cause to a deputy judge, a jue pedaneus. This deputy judge (who is also called jue datus or jue delegatus) is now in form as well as in substance an official who acts in lieu of the magistrate; he is not merely entrusted, like the old jue privatus, with the conduct of the proceedings in judicio, but is deputed—and this is the reason why no formula is used—to hear and determine the whole cause, including the proceedings in jure. Like the proceedings before the præses himself, the proceedings before this subordinate judge are extra ordinem;" Sohm, Inst. Rom. L. 222. It has been said with respect to these judges that the prætors and other great magistrates did not themselves decide the actions which arose between private individuals: these were submitted to judges chosen by the parties, and these judges were called judices pedanei. In choosing them, the plaintiff had the right to nominate, and the defendant to accept or reject those nominated; Heineccius, Antiq. lib. 4, tit. b. n. 40; 7 Touillier, n. 353. As to judices pedanei, generally, see Zimmern, Ges. Rom. Priv. § 18.

Jue Quæstionis. A magistrate who decided the law of a criminal case, when the prætor himself did not sit as a magistrate. Morey, Rom. L. 88.

The director of the criminal court under the presidency of the prætor. Harper's Lat. Dict.; Cic. Brut. 76, 264.

Jue Selectus. A select or selected jue or judge.

The judges in criminal suits selected by the prætor. Harper's Lat. Dict.; Cic. Verr. 2, 2, 13, § 32.

These judices selecti were used in criminal causes, and between them and modern jurors many points of resemblance have been noticed; 3 Bla. Com. 366. They were first returned by the prætor, then drawn by lot, subject to challenge; they were sworn and talesmen were struck. So many points of resemblance were thought to exist between them and the dikaorai of the Greeks and our juries that the English institution has been thought to be derived from the former ones; id. note (n). But the root idea of both systems is sufficiently natural and logical to have been indigenous in both countries. See JURY.

JUDGE. A public officer lawfully appointed to decide litigated questions according to law.

An officer so named in his commission, who presides in some court.

In its most extensive sense the term includes all officers appointed to decide litigated questions while acting in that capacity, including justices of the peace, and even jurors, it is said, who are judges of the facts. Com. v. Dallas, 4 Dall. (U. S.) 229, 1 L. Ed. 812; Repub. v. Dallas, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 300. In ordinary legal use, however, the term is limited to the sense of the second of the definitions here given; People v. Wilson, 15 Ill. 388; unless it may be that the case of a justice or commissioner acting judicially is to be considered an extension of this meaning. See 3 Cush. (Mass.) 584.

It is not an unusual use of language in statutes to put the judge for the court, and to make provisions for him to execute that which can only be executed in court. In re United States, 194 U. S. 197, 24 Sup. Ct. 629, 48 L. Ed. 931.

By the common law every court, while engaged in the exercise of its lawful functions, has the authority to preserve order, decency, and silence in its presence, and may apprehend and punish the offender without examination or proof; but if the offence be committed out of court the party is entitled to notice and a hearing in his defence; People v. Turner, 1 Cal. 152; Redman v. State, 28 Ind. 205. A judge must be in court during a trial; see 10 Am. L. Rev. 50. See CONTEMPT.

An assault on a judge sitting in court is not only punishable as a contempt, but indictable, as a crime against public justice, and more aggravated than an ordinary assault, or even than an assault committed upon another person in a court; 2 Bish. N. Cr. L. § 250; this principle comes from the common law and was, as early as 25 Edw. 3, embodied in a statute, under which such an offence was punishable by the loss of the right hand, forfeiture of lands and goods, and perpetual imprisonment. In Neagle's Case, 135 U. S. 1, 10 Sup. Ct. 658, 34 L. Ed. 55, it was held that "an assault upon a judge of a court of the United States, while in discharge of his official duties, is a breach of the peace of the United States, as distinguished from the peace of the State in which the assault takes place." In this case the petitioner was a United States deputy marshal, appointed for the express purpose of guarding Mr. Justice Field against a threatened attack, which took place, and a killing by the deputy in such defence was held by the court to have been caused by a just apprehension that an attack would result in the death of the justice, and was justifiable and a judgment of the circuit court, discharging him from the custody of the sheriff, by whom he was held under process of the state court, was affirmed.

So any insult, disrespect, or insolence to a judge is punishable; 2 Bish. N. Cr. L. § 250. On this subject, it was said by Holroyd, J.: "In the case of an insult to (the judge) himself, it is not on his own account that he commits; for that is a consideration which should never enter his mind. . . . It is his duty to support the dignity of his station, and uphold the law, so that in his presence at least, it shall not be infringed." 4 B. & Ald. 329, 339.

Within this principle it was held to be a contempt to write a letter to a judge, libelling or abusing him in regard to one of his decisions; In re Pryor, 18 Kan. 72, 26 Am. Rep. 747; or when a judge of an inferior tribunal refuses obedience to process from a superior one; Patchin v. City of Brooklyn, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 664; 1 Eng. L. & Eq. 516; Gorham v. Lockett, 6 B. Monr. (Ky.) 638; State v. Noel, T. U. P. Charl. (Ga.) 43; Ex parte Carnochan, id. 315.

It has been held that abusing a judge out of court, with reference to expressions made by him on a trial, was a contempt; Com. v. Dandridge, 2 Va. Cas. 408; but in another case it was held that newspaper articles in regard to the conduct of a judge during a trial, and charging him with being an abettor of a person against whom an indictment for murder was pending, could not be visited as a contempt; Ex parte Hickey, 4 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 751. In the federal courts, and in many states, the subject is regulated by statute; U. S. R. S. § 725; U. S. v. R. Co., 16 Fed. 853; Ex parte Robinson, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 505, 22 L. Ed. 205; People v. Wilson, 64 Ill. 195, 16 Am. Rep. 528; In re Oldham, 89 N. C. 23, 45 Am. Rep. 673; Foster v. Com., 8 W. & S. (Pa.) 77; Cheadle v. State, 110 Ind. 301, 11 N. E. 426, 59 Am. Rep. 199. The question whether a contempt can be committed otherwise than in court cannot be said to be settled, but Bishop is of the opinion that the English and better American doctrines recognize such contempts, yet, under limitations easily defined; 2 Bish. N. Cr. L. § 258. In all such cases the offence is against the state, not the judge; id. § 269; Haight v. Lucia, 36 Wis. 355; Whitem v. State, 36 Ind. 196.

Bribery or attempting to bribe a judge was, at common law, a very grave offence. Indeed the earlier definitions of bribery seem to confine the offence to judicial officers; 4 Bla. Com. 139; 3 Inst. 145; and they were criticised for being too narrow. See 1 East 183; 4 Burr. 2494; 2 Bish. N. Cr. L. § 85, n. 1.

Upon the same ground are condemned sinister approaches, with intent to influence judges indirectly, though not amounting to bribery; id.; and on this subject it was said by Lord Cottenham: "Every private communication to a judge, for the purpose of influencing his decision upon a matter publicly before him, always is, and ought to be, reprobated; it is a course calculated, if tolerated, to divert the course of justice, and is considered, and ought, more frequently than it is, to be treated, as what it really is, high contempt of court." 1 Macn. & G. 116, 122.

Judges are appointed or elected in a variety of ways in the United States. For the federal courts they are appointed by the president, by and with the consent of the senate; in some of the states they are appointed by the governor, the governor and senate, or by the legislature. The judges of the federal courts and of the courts of some of the states hold their offices during good behavior; of others, during good behavior, or until they shall attain a certain age; and of others, for a limited term of years. The federal judges must have the tenure of office during good behavior conferred upon them before they can be invested with any portion of the judicial power; Kentucky & I. Bridge Co. v. R. Co., 37 Fed. 567, 2 L. R. A. 289.

Impartiality is the first duty of a judge: if he has any (the slightest) interest in the cause, he is disqualified from sitting as a judge; aliquis non debet esse iudex in propria causa; 8 Co. 118; Hill v. Wells, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 109; Gregory v. R. Co., 4 Ohio St. 675; Knight v. Hardeman, 17 Ga. 253; Sanborn v. Fellows, 22 N. H. 473; Hawley v. Baldwin, 19 Conn. 585; Howell v. Budd, 91-

Cal. 342, 27 Pac. 747; Chase v. Weston, 75 Ia. 159, 39 N. W. 246; such as his relationship to the parties; People v. Connor, 142 N. Y. 130, 36 N. E. 807; even where such party is administrator only; Denard v. Jordan, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 398, 37 S. W. 876 (but relationship to plaintiff's attorney will not disqualify him; Patton v. Collier, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 544, 38 S. W. 53). Either party may make the objection that the judge is of kin to one of them; Kelly v. Hockett, 10 Ind. 299; and it is for the judge to determine, in the exercise of sound judicial discretion, whether by reason of kinship, etc., it would be improper for him to hear a particular case; he cannot be compelled to vacate the bench by the affidavit of the litigant; Byram's Ex'rs v. Holliday, 84 Ky. 18. A pecuniary interest in the case on trial will incapacitate him from sitting in the cause, both by the common law and the statutes; Ochus v. Sheldon, 12 Fla. 138; Buckingham v. Davis, 9 Md. 324; Pearce v. Atwood, 13 Mass. 340; as where he is interested as a stockholder in a railroad corporation making an application for a commission to appraise land, his interest is such as to invalidate the report of the commissioners; Gregory v. R. Co., 4 Ohio St. 675; or was a member of a mutual benefit society; Texas-Sovereign Camp v. Hale, 56 Tex. Civ. App. 447, 120 S. W. 539; or where the judge's wife was a stockholder in a corporation which was a party; First Nat. Bank v. McGuire, 12 S. D. 226, 80 N. W. 1074, 47 L. R. A. 413, 76 Am. St. Rep. 598. Where a statute disqualified a judge by reason of relationship with either litigant within the sixth degree, this did not disqualify a judge because he and the plaintiff's attorney had married sisters; Zambetti v. Garton, 113 N. Y. Supp. 804; where the lord chancellor, who was a shareholder in a company in whose favor the vice-chancellor had made a decree, affirmed this decree, it was reversed on that ground; 3 H. L. Cas. 759; but it has been held that where the interest of the judge is merely that of a corporator in a municipal corporation, the legislature may provide that this shall constitute no disqualification when the corporation is a party, apparently on the ground that the interest is insignificant; Commonwealth v. Reed, 1 Gray (Mass.) 475. But it is doubtful whether even the legislature can go beyond this class of cases and abolish the rule stated in the maxim; Cooley, Const. Lim. 516.

Active political partisanship will not disqualify a judge to try a contested election case; Fulton v. Longshore, 156 Ala. 611, 46 South. 989, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 602.

If one of the judges is disqualified on this ground, a judgment rendered will be void, even though the proper number may have concurred in the result, which includes the interested judge; 6 Q. B. 753; or though the parties agree to waive objections to the jurisdictions; January v. State, 36 Tex. Cr. R. 488, 38 S. W. 179; Lee v. Mortgage Co., 51 Tex. Civ. App. 272, 115 S. W. 320; and see infra. The objection may be raised for the first time in the appellate court; Richardson v. Welcome, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 332; 2 H. L. Cas. 387; but in Iowa it was held that an objection to a judge of the court of original jurisdiction on the ground of interest must be made in that court; Ellsworth v. Moore, 5 Ia. 486.

In a suit on a collector's bond by the chosen freeholders of a county, one who was an inhabitant, a freeholder, and a taxpayer in the same county was incompetent to sit as judge; Peck v. Freeholders of Essex County, 21 N. J. L. 656. A judge is not disqualified to try a case because he has tried an action in trespass concerning the same property; Martyn v. Curtis, 68 Vt. 397, 35 Atl. 333.

The interest which disqualifies a judge of the supreme court so that a judge of the circuit court may sit in his stead must be immediate, certain, and dependent on the result of the case, and not remote, uncertain, or speculative; Trustees Internal Imp. Fund v. Bailey, 10 Fla. 213.

A bias which disqualifies a judge must be such as might cause him to act corruptly or with such oppression as to be equivalent to corruption, such as to make it improper that a man of integrity should hear the case; but the mere fact that a judge is unfriendly to personal injury suits does not disqualify him in such a case; McDonald's Adm'r v. Coal & Coke Co., 135 Ky. 624, 117 S. W. 349.

By statute a judge of the United States Court of Appeals is disqualified if he acted in the cause in the court below.

The general rule that it is irregular and improper for a judge to try any cause in which he has such an interest as would disqualify as a witness does not apply to orders purely formal in their character, and it is doubtful whether it would extend to a case in which no other judge could try and determine the cause. If the judge is deprived of authority to act, by statutory inhibition, the proceedings are void, otherwise voidable only, and therefore valid until avoided; Heydenfeldt v. Towns, 27 Ala. 423.

It is said to be discretionary with him whether he will sit in a cause in which he has been of counsel; Owings v. Gibson, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 517; Denn v. Tatem, 1 N. J. L. 164. See Bank of North America v. Fitzsimons, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 454; Murphy v. Barlow, 5 Ind. 230; Cullen v. Drane, 82 Tex. 484, 18 S. W. 590. But the practice is to refuse to sit in such case. And in Reams v. Kearns, 5 Coldw. (Tenn.) 217, it was held that where the judge who rendered the judgment in the case had been counsel in it, the judgment was a nullity; Tampa Street R. & Power Co. v. R. Co., 30 Fla. 595, 11 South. 562, 17 L. R. A. 681. Such relation disqualifies; Stepp v. State, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 159, 109 S. W. 1093; but it is held that it may be waived; Kerr v. Burns, 42 Colo. 285, 93 Pac. 1120; acquiescence gives consent; id. The question arose in Delaware at the time of the appointment of Bates, Chancellor, in 1865, whether he was legally disqualified from sitting in such cases, so as to bring them within the constitutional provision, giving jurisdiction to the chief justice in all cases in which the chancellor was interested. In view of the desire of the chancellor not to sit in cases in which he had been of counsel, the question was considered by him and Gilpin, C. J., and the conclusion reached that there was not a legal disqualification. This conclusion was communicated by the chancellor to the legislature with a suggestion that provision should be made for the appointment of a chancellor ad litem in such cases; MS. notes of Bates, Chancellor. Merely to have been counsel for one of the parties does not disqualify; Keller v. River-ton Water Co., 34 Pa. Super. Ct. 301.

A magistrate authorized to sign writs cannot sign them in his own case; Doolittle v. Clark, 47 Conn. 316.

Where there is no other tribunal that can act, the judge may hear the case; Freem. Judg. § 146; 5 H. L. C. 88; Stuart v. Mechanics' Bank, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 501; contra, Washington Ins. Co. of City of New York v. Price, Hopk. Ch. (N. Y.) 2; Hall v. Thayer, 105 Mass. 221, 7 Am. Rep. 513. See Cooley, Const. Lim., 2d ed. 207, 506, 509; People v. Gies, 25 Mich. 83.

It is said that a judge who has a personal interest in a cause may hear it if counsel waive the objection. Parke, B., heard a case under such circumstances; Reedie v. L. & N. W. R. Co., 4 Ex. 244. It is said to be settled in England that he must sit if the case cannot be heard otherwise. Pollock, First Book of Jurispr. 265, citing Theilsson v. Rendlesham, 7 H. L. C. 429. Lord Coke heard the case of Sutton's Hospital, 10 Rep. *1a, though he was at the time one of its governors, and decided it in its favor.

It was held that the absence of a judge from the court-room for a considerable time during the arguments to the jury without the consent of the parties was reversible error; Waller v. People, 209 Ill. 284, 70 N. E. 682.

A judge is not competent as a witness in a cause trying before him, for this among other reasons, that he can hardly be deemed capable of impartially deciding on the admissibility of his own testimony, or of weighing it against that of another; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 364; Ross v. Buhler, 2 Mart. La. (N. S.) 312; Julian v. Gallen, 2 Cal. 358. See Com. Dig. Courts (B 4), (C 2), (E 1), (P 16), Justices (I 1, 2, 3); Bacon Abr. Courts (B); 1 Kent 291; CHARGE.

In the House of Lords Lord Chancellor Westbury abstained from taking part in the decision because he had been concerned in the case; Di Sora v. Philipps, 10 H. L. C. 624.

While acting within the bounds of his jurisdiction, the judge is not responsible for any error of judgment or mistake of law; 12 Co. 23; Ross v. Rittenhouse, 2 Dall. (Pa.) 160, 1 L. Ed. 331; Reid v. Hood, 2 N. & M'C. (S. C.) 168, 10 Am. Dec. 582; Yates v. Lansing, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 282; Ely v. Thompson, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 76; Evans v. Foster, 1 N. H. 374; Stone v. Graves, 8 Mo. 148, 40 Am. Dec. 131; Morrison v. McDonald, 21 Me. 550; Hamilton v. Williams, 26 Ala. 527; unless, possibly, a mistake was induced by gross carelessness or ignorance partaking of a criminal quality; 12 Mod. 493. An action will not lie against a judge of a court of record for any act done by him in his judicial capacity; 6 B. & C. 611. An action of a judge, to be criminally or even civilly cognizable, must be wilful and corrupt; 1 W. Bla. 19; Dawning v. Herrick, 47 Me. 462; Hamilton v. Williams, 26 Ala. 527; Yates v. Lansing, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 395; Lenox v. Grant, 8 Mo. 254.

It is a rule sometimes asserted to be absolute and sometimes only prima facie that a judicial officer has no protection against the consequences of an act not within his jurisdiction; Piper v. Pearson, 2 Gray (Mass.) 120, 61 Am. Dec. 438; Clarke v. May, 2 Gray (Mass.) 410, 61 Am. Dec. 470; Sullivan v. Jones, 2 Gray (Mass.) 570; Bradley v. Fisher, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 335, 20 L. Ed. 646. But a distinction has sometimes been suggested between acts in excess of jurisdiction and those outside of it. For the latter it has been said that a judge of a court of superior jurisdiction is not liable; Lord De Grey, C. J., in 2 W. Bla. 1141. Of this case it is said by a writer cited infra, who dissents from the doctrine: "It is true this rule is a mere dictum, and also that the decision has been since overruled; but this dictum has sometimes been referred to with approval in subsequent cases;" 15 Am. L. Rev. 440. And Field, J., in Randall v. Brigham, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 523, 19 L. Ed. 285, said that such a judge is not liable when he acts in excess of his jurisdiction, except for malice. This expression, like that of Lord De Grey, was obiter, inasmuch as the case sustained the jurisdiction which had been questioned. In Lange v. Benedict, 73 N. Y. 12, 29 Am. Rep. 80, this point was so decided, but the court drew a distinction between the case where the judge had acquired no jurisdiction at all, and the case where the act was merely in excess of jurisdiction after jurisdiction had been acquired. There the judge of the circuit court had imposed a re-sentence upon a prisoner, and he was accordingly imprisoned; the supreme court held the second sentence illegal, and discharged the prisoner. These cases and the doctrine asserted in them have been doubted and criticised by Arthur Biddle in 15 Am. L. Rev. 442 and note, where the authorities cited and relied on are critically examined. More recently the distinction has been discussed by Bishop, who states the doctrine of distinction between excess and absence of jurisdiction with approval, and even goes further, considering that where the jurisdiction is a close one and it is decided by the judge or magistrate carefully and earnestly in favor of his jurisdiction, "in reason and not quite without support from authority," he should not "suffer, though another or even a higher court held the contrary"; 1 Bish. N. Cr. L. § 460; Bish. Non-Contr. § 783.

There is no distinction between a judge acting in court and acting judicially out of court, that is, in chambers; 3 Moore, P. C. 52. See Moffett v. Boydston, 4 Kan. App. 406, 46 Pac. 24.

A judge cannot be held liable for delay in deciding a cause; but if it be wilful and corrupt, it is ground for impeachment; and mandamus will lie to compel him to perform his duty; Wyatt v. Arnot, 7 Cal. App. 221, 94 Pac. 86.

"A judge of a court not of record is not liable for any injury sustained which is the result of an honest error of judgment in a matter wherein the court has jurisdiction, and when the act done is not of a purely ministerial nature." The rule is thus stated in 15 Am. L. Rev. 444. See further an article in Ir. L. T. and Sol. J., Nov. 13, 1880; 6 Am. Dec. 303; Lange v. Benedict, 29 Am. Rep. 80, note; Stewart v. Cooley, 23 Am. Rep. 690, note. See CORAM NON JUDICE.

The subject of the liability of a judge to an action is fully considered in Taaffe v. Downes, 3 Moore, P. C. 41, and Yates v. Lansing, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 283, both cited in Randall v. Brigham, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 523, supra.

One circuit judge has no power to review and revise the action of another circuit judge; Warren v. Simon, 16 S. C. 362; nor has a judge when without the state, power to grant an injunction; Price v. Bayless, 131 Ind. 437, 31 N. E. 88.

The acts of a judge de facto are not open to collateral attack; Ball v. U. S., 140 U. S. 118, 11 Sup. Ct. 761, 35 L. Ed. 377.

A judge who acts corruptly may be impeached; Yates v. Lansing, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 282; Com. v. Addison, 4 Dall. (U. S.) 225, 1 L. Ed. 810.

A judge is not bound, unless by statute, to file a memorandum of his decision, and, if filed, it is not a part of the record unless he makes it so; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Carey, 80 Conn. 426, 68 Atl. 993.

When a lawyer becomes a judge, his right to act as an attorney is temporarily suspended; Perry v. Bush, 46 Fla. 242, 35 South. 225. He may appear for himself; Hegeman v. Johnson, 35 Barb. (N. Y.) 202. In some states circuit judges are permitted to practice in circuit courts other than their own;

O'Hare v. R. Co., 139 Ill. 151, 28 N. E. 923; Morton v. R. Co., 81 Mich. 423, 46 N. W. 111.

A court cannot itself decide as to its power to act or to exist as a court; Hill v. Tarver, 130 Ala. 595, 30 South. 499; contra, Swan v. Talbot, 152 Cal. 142, 94 Pac. 238, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1066; State v. Banta, 122 La. 235, 47 South. 538.

An appellate court will not open a decree in a patent case for the introduction of newly discovered evidence because it had failed to "discover the notation of the mortgage in the abstract contained in the file wrapper and did not thereupon reverse the decree," it not having been called to the attention of the court by counsel; Moneyweight Scale Co. v. Scale Co., 199 Fed. 905, 118 C. C. A. 235.

It has been observed that a judge's function is to give a good legal reason for the conclusions of common sense. Lord Esher, quoted in 16 L. Q. R. 3, n.

Under the Act of Settlement in England (1701) it was provided that the judges should hold office during good behavior, subject to removal upon the addresses of both houses of parliament, and that their salaries should be ascertained and established.

See, generally, JUDICIAL POWER; JUDGE-MADE LAW; FALSE IMPRISONMENT; OPEN COURT; GOOD BEHAVIOR; INCOMPETENCY.

For a list of judges of the United States supreme court, see SUPREME COURT; also for a list of lord chancellors, see CHANCELLOR; and for a list of English judges, see L. R. 12 App. Cas.

Under the Roman law a judge, by whose act or default in deciding or conducting a lawsuit, a party to the suit was injured, was liable to an action for damages, the amount of which was left to the discretion of the judge. Such action was regarded as quasi-delictual, because it was available, not only in cases of deliberately unfair decisions, but also in cases of less serious errors committed by the judge, as overlooking the day fixed for trial or disregarding the rules of law concerning adjournment and the like (imprudencia judicis). In such a case he was termed judex qui litem suam fecit (who makes the suit his own). The action in question, however, could not be taken on the ground that the judgment was unjust in substance; Sohm, Inst. Rom. L. 330; Mack, Rom. L. § 506; Morey, Rom. L. 383. See JUDEX.

JUDGE ADVOCATE. An officer of a court-martial who is to discharge certain duties at the trial of offenders. His duties are to prosecute in the name of the United States; but he shall so far consider himself as counsel for the prisoner, after the prisoner shall have made his plea, as to object to leading questions to any of the witnesses or any question to the prisoner the answer to which might tend to criminate himself. He is, further, to swear the members of the court before they proceed upon any trial, and may also administer oaths for purposes of military justice and other purposes of military administration; U. S. R. S. 2 Supp. 524.

JUDGE-ADVOCATE-GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT. It consists in the army of one judge advocate with the rank of brigadier general; two judge advocates with the rank of colonel; three with the rank of major, and for each geographical department or division of troops not provided with such, one acting judge advocate with the rank, etc., of captain, mounted. Act of Congress, February 2, 1901.

A similar officer was provided for the navy under the act of June 8, 1880, with the title of judge-advocate-general of the navy. He has the rank and pay of a captain in the navy, or colonel of the marine corps, as the case may be. His duties are to receive, revise, and have recorded the proceedings of all courts-martial, courts of inquiry, and boards for examination of officers, for retirement and promotion, in the naval service, and such other duties as were theretofore performed by naval judge-advocates-general; U. S. R. S. 1 Supp. § 290; 2 id. § 500. The judge-advocate-general's department is now under the chief of staff. Act of February 14, 1903.

JUDGE-MADE LAW. A phrase used to indicate judicial decisions which construe away the meaning of statutes, or find meanings in them which the legislature never intended. It is sometimes used as meaning, simply, the law established by judicial precedent. Cooley, Const. Lim., 4th ed. 70, n. See Austin, Prov. of Jur. where the necessity of judicial legislation and its uses are discussed in extenso.

The expression judge-made law is undoubtedly more frequently used in the former sense, and as expressing a certain degree of opprobrium. It is, however, unavoidable that in the distribution of powers which is now recognized as a necessary element of civilized government, there should be found at times some uncertainty as to the line of demarcation between the legislative and judicial powers as well as between each of them and the executive. The necessity of what is called judge-made law in the proper sense, and the possibility of its existence in the other sense, arises from the power of construction which necessarily exists, and though salutary when properly exercised, is susceptible of abuse, and in such case, difficult, if not impossible, to remedy. Of this power of construction it has been said that it "is a mighty one, and, unrestrained by settled rules, would tend to throw a painful uncertainty over the effect that might be given to the most plainly worded statutes, and render courts, in reality, the legislative power of the state. Instances are not wanting to confirm this. Judge-made law has overrode the legislative department. It was the boast of Chief Justice Pemberton, one of the judges of the despot Charles II., and not the worst even of those times, that he had entirely outdone the parliament in making law." Spencer v. State, 5 Ind. 41, 46. A writer thus characterizes that kind of judicial legislation which is necessary and proper under such a system as the common law: "Although it is considered necessary in all free states to keep the legislative, executive, and judicial powers for the most part separate, and all our American constitutions provide for this, yet it cannot be completely done. The judges, it is well known, actually make a great deal of law, and this judicial legislation cannot be avoided, and indeed much of the best work that we get in this line is done by them. But this they do as delegates of the sovereign people, as much as congress or the state legislatures;" Terry, Anglo-American Law 11.

Mr. Bishop earnestly contends that there is no judge-made law; he says that "law preceded writing, and no writing can be made comprehensive enough to include all law, and no blundering of the judge is so monstrous as denial of right to a suitor who is simply unable to find his case laid down in the statute law or in a previous decision." His view is that more errors are committed by failure to administer justice according to "the general principles of our jurisprudence and the collective conscience of mankind," for want of statute or precedent, than in all other ways. The common-law system was built up when there were few statutes and the judges derived "principles for their decisions from the known usages of the country and from what they found written by God in the breasts of men." Such, he considers, should be the action of judges now, and he assumes that they will always find principles on which to adjudicate any matter unprovided for by statutes or previous decisions. He argues that in view of "the ceaseless variety of changes in human affairs," while precedents are properly followed, yet, now, as in the earlier periods, they have not covered the entire ground, and it is absurd that questions of right or remedy should depend, not upon the abstract right or the convenience or propriety of a decision either way, but "solely on the accident, whether it arose in early times, received then an adjudication, and the adjudication found a reporter." 1 Bish. N. Cr. L. §§ 18, 19.

In a case for which he could find no precedent, Jessel, M. R., said: "I am afraid that, whatever I may call my decision, it will, in effect, be making law, which I never have any desire to do; but I cannot find that the point is covered by any decided case, or even appears to have been discussed in any decided case. The only satisfaction I have in deciding the point is this, that it will in all probability be carried to a higher court, and it will be for that court to make the law, or, as we say, declare the law, and not for me." L. R. 13 Ch. Div. 798, 805.

It has been said that the phrase judicial legislation carries on its face the notion of judicial usurpation, and is habitually used by the courts as a term of reproach; but it is contended by the writer who admits this current use of the phrase, that, properly used, it means the growth of the law at the hand of the judges, and in that sense, so far from being an evil, "it is a desirable, and indeed a necessary, feature of our system." 5 Harv. L. Rev. 172. In the discussion of the subject the writer last cited considers that with respect to much that has been written on the subject of judicial legislation, the meaning cannot be fully understood without taking into consideration the different theories as to the nature of law. Those writers who accept the theory of Austin and Bentham are naturally found to use the terms judge-made law and judicial legislation as terms meriting contempt, and indeed Bentham so characterizes the whole common law. On the other hand, those writers who take the opposite view and maintain that the origin of law is not command but custom, not only eliminate from consideration the idea of judicial legislation, but go so far as to limit the function of the legislature itself in the effort "to assist society in getting rid of its old customs and forming new ones." Supporters of this view are James C. Carter, Rep. Am. Bar Ass'n, 1890, and Prof. Hammond, 1 Bla. Com., Hammond's ed. § 2. See James C. Carter's The Law, etc. The writer in the Harvard Law Review already cited discusses these conflicting views, giving preference to a third theory, intermediate between these two extremes, developed by Lawrence, Essay, Int. L., 2d ed. ch. 1. The result is that, in what has been written on the subject of judicial legislation by the advocates of these various theories, there is less difference than is apparent on the surface, and that the process itself is recognized by all, though under different names. The importance of the subject is greatly enhanced in English law by the binding authority which is attributed to former decisions, and the reverence which is accorded to precedent. The conclusion reached is that judicial legislation is a necessary element in the development of the common law, but no precise rules can be laid down either as to the extent to which it should properly go, or how far a judge, in carrying on the process, may undertake to discard old doctrines and substitute new ones.

Lord Esher, M. R., has attempted to distinguish between "fundamental propositions of law" which might be changed only by parliament, and the "evidence of the existence of such a proposition," which was within the disposition of the court; 25 Q. B. Div. 57; but as it is very properly remarked, there is no test suggested to enable a court to make this discrimination.

"In substance the growth of the law is legislative, and this in a deeper sense than that what the courts declare to have been the law is in fact new. It is legislative in its grounds. The very considerations which judges most rarely mention, and always with an apology, are the secret root from which the law draws all the juices of life. I mean, of course, considerations of what is expedient for the community concerned. Every important principle which is developed by litigation is in fact and at the bottom the result of more or less definitely understood views of public policy; most generally, to be sure, under our practice and traditions, the unconscious result of instinctive preferences and inarticulate convictions, but none the less traceable to views of public policy in the last analysis." O. W. Holmes, Jr., The Common Law 35.

"I cannot understand how any person who has considered the subject can suppose that society could have possibly gone on if the judges had not legislated, or that there is any danger whatever in allowing them that power which they have in fact exercised, to make up for the negligence or the incapacity of the avowed legislator. That part of the law of every country which was made by the judges has been far better made than that part which consists of statutes enacted by the legislature." Austin, note to Lect. V.

"No intelligent lawyer would at this day pretend that the decisions of the courts do not add to and alter the law. The courts themselves, in the course of the reasons given for those decisions, constantly and freely use language admitting that they do. . . . But English judges are bound to give their decisions in conformity with the settled general principles of English law, with any express legislation applicable to the matter in hand, and with the authority of their predecessors and their own former decisions. At the same time they are bound to find a decision for every case, however novel it may be; and that decision will be authority for other like cases, in future; therefore it is part of their duty to lay down new rules if required." Pollock's Notes to Maine's Anc. Law 46. See also Pollock, Expans. of C. L. 49; 20 L. Q. R. 406.

In the appendix to Lewis' Law of Perpetuity, in the Report of the Real Property Commissioners (1832), Lord Campbell, Chairman, it is said: "At an early period (18 Edw. I) an act, commonly called the statute de donis conditionalibus, created a direct perpetuity, by enabling parties to establish a perpetual and unalienable entail; and this continued until the ingenuity and good sense of judges, without the aid of the legislature, and in opposition to a positive act of parliament, enabled tenants in tail to unfetter their estates, in favor of the free circulation of property."

"Judge-made law is subject to certain limitations. It cannot openly declare a new principle of law; it must always take the form of a deduction of some legal principle whereof the validity is admitted, or of some application or interpretation of some statutory enactment." Dicey, Law and Opinion in England 486.

JUDGE'S CERTIFICATE. In English Practice. The written statement of the judge who tried the cause that one of the parties is entitled to costs in the action. It is very important in some cases that these certificates should be obtained at the trial. See Tidd, Pr. 879; 3 Chitty, Pr. 458, 486; 3 Campb. 316; 5 B. & Ald. 796. A statement of the opinion of the court, signed by the judges, upon a question of law submitted to them by the chancellor for their decision.

JUDGE'S NOTES or MINUTES. Short statements noted by a judge on the trial of a cause, of what transpires in the course of the trial.

They usually contain a statement of the testimony of witnesses, of documents offered or admitted in evidence, of offers of evidence, and whether it has been received or rejected, and the like matters.

In general, judge's notes are not evidence of what transpired at a former trial, nor can they be read to prove what a deceased witness swore to on such former trial; for they are no part of the record, and he is not officially bound to make them. But in chancery, when a new trial is ordered of an issue sent out of chancery to a court of law, and it is suggested that some of the witnesses in the former trial are of an advanced age, an order may be made that, in the event of death or inability to attend, their testimony may be read from the judge's notes; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 166.

The employment of court stenographers has practically rendered it unnecessary for trial judges to take notes, at least with a view to a bill of exceptions.

JUDGMENT. In Practice. The conclusion of law upon facts found, or admitted by the parties, or upon their default in the course of the suit. Tidd, Pr. 930; Truett v. Legg, 32 Md. 147; Siddall v. Jansen, 143 Ill. 537, 32 N. E. 384. It may be on the main question, or on all of the questions, if there are several; Tipton v. Tipton's Adm'r, 49 Ohio St. 364, 30 N. E. 826.

The decision or sentence of the law, given by the court of justice or other competent tribunal, as the result of proceedings instituted therein for the redress of an injury. 3 Bla. Com. 395; Ætna Ins. Co. v. Swift, 12 Minn. 437 (Gil. 326). It is said to be the end of the law; Blystone v. Blystone, 51 Pa. 373. It affects only parties and privies; Maloney v. Finnegan, 40 Minn. 281, 41 N. W. 979; Caperton v. Hall, 83 Ala. 171, 3 South. 234; Savage v. McCorkle, 17 Or. 42, 21 Pac. 444; Johnson v. Powers, 139 U. S. 156, 11 Sup. Ct. 525, 35 L. Ed. 112.

The language of judgments, therefore, is not that "it is decreed," or "resolved," by the court; but "it is considered" (consideratum est per curiam) that the plaintiff recover his debt, damages, or possession, as the case may require, or that the defendant do go without day. This implies that the judgment is not so much the decision of the court, as the sentence of the law pronounced and decreed by the court, after due deliberation and inquiry.

Litigious contests present to the courts facts to appreciate, agreements to be construed, and points of law to be resolved. The judgment is the result of the full examination of all these.

In Tudor times and later judgment was used of things we call legislative, as well as of things judicial; Oxf. Dict. s. v. Judgment; Exodus, xxi, 1.

DEFINITIONS. The various forms of judgment are designated by the following terms:

Judgment of assets in futuro, is one against an executor or heir, who holds at the time no property on which it can operate. See QUANDO ACCIDERINT.

Judgment of cassetur breve or billa (that the writ or bill be quashed) is a judgment rendered in favor of a party pleading in abatement to a writ or action. Steph. Pl., Andr. ed. § 97.

Judgment by confession is a judgment entered for the plaintiff in case the defendant, instead of entering a plea, confesses the action, or at any time before trial confesses the action and withdraws his plea and other allegations.

Contradictory judgment is a judgment which has been given after the parties have been heard; either in support of their claims or in their defence. Cox's Ex'rs v. Thomas, 11 La. 366. It is used in Louisiana to distinguish such judgments from those rendered by default.

Judgment de melioribus damnis is a judgment entered at the election of the plaintiff for the highest amount where damages have been differently assessed against several defendants. See DE MELIORIBUS DAMNIS.

Judgment by default is a judgment rendered in consequence of the non-appearance of the defendant. The term is also applied to judgments entered under statutes or rules of court, for want of affidavit of defence, plea, answer, and the like, or for failure to take some required step in the cause.

Judgment in error is a judgment rendered by a court of error on a record sent up from an inferior court.

Final judgment is one which puts an end to a suit.

As to judgment in rem, inter partes, or in personam, see those titles.

Interlocutory judgment is one given in the progress of a cause upon some plea, proceeding, or default which is only intermediate and does not finally determine or complete the suit. 3 Bla. Com. 396.

Judgment on the merits is one rendered after argument and investigation, and when it is determined which party is in the right, as distinguished from a judgment rendered upon some preliminary or merely technical point, or by default, and without trial.

Judgment of nil capiat per breve or per billam is a judgment in favor of the defendant upon an issue raised upon a declaration or peremptory plea.

Judgment by nil dicit is one rendered against a defendant for want of a plea.

Judgment of nolle prosequi is a judgment entered against the plaintiff where after appearance and before judgment he says "he will not further prosecute his suit." Steph. Pl., Andr. ed. § 97.

Judgment of non obstante veredicto is a judgment rendered in favor of one party without regard to the verdict obtained by the other party.

Judgment of non pros. (non prosequitur) is one given against the plaintiff for a neglect to take any of those steps which it is incumbent on him to take in due time. See NON PROS.

Judgment of non suit, a judgment rendered against the plaintiff when he, on trial by jury, on being called or demanded, at the instance of the defendant, to be present while the jury give their verdict, fails to make an appearance. See NON SUIT.

Judgment by non sum informatus is one which is rendered when, instead of entering a plea, the defendant's attorney says he is not informed of any answer to be given to the action. Steph. Pl., Andr. ed. § 97.

Judgment nunc pro tunc, is one entered on a day subsequent to the time at which it should have been entered, as of the latter date. See NUNC PRO TUNC.

Judgment pro retorno habendo is a judgment that the party have a return of the goods.

Judgment quando acciderint, is such a judgment against an executor or heir as binds only future assets. See QUANDO ACCIDERINT.

Judgment quod computet is a judgment in an action of account-render that the defendant do account.

Judgment quod partitio fiat is the interlocutory judgment in a writ of partition that partition be made.

Judgment quod partes replacitent is a judgment for repleader. See REPLEADER.

Judgment quod recuperet is a judgment in favor of the plaintiff (that he do recover) rendered when he has prevailed upon an issue in fact or an issue in law other than one arising on a dilatory plea. Steph. Pl., Andr. ed. § 97.

Judgment of respondeat ouster is a judgment given against the defendant after he has failed to establish a dilatory plea upon which an issue in law has been raised.

Judgment of retraxit is one given against the plaintiff where, after appearance and before judgment, the plaintiff enters upon the record that he "withdraws his suit."

See these several titles where they are separately treated.

CLASSIFICATION. Judgments in civil causes, considered with respect to the method of obtaining them, may be thus classified.

1. When the result is obtained by the trial of an issue of fact. In this case the trial may involve questions both of law and fact, but the law is applied incidentally to the trial of the disputed facts, as in the admission or rejection of evidence, the conduct of the trial, and the instruction of the jury or, it may be, in the determination of the question whether the evidence is sufficient either in quality or quantity to be submitted to the jury. In these cases the law is admitted or applied to facts found by a jury or the court.

Judgments upon facts found are the following:

(1) Judgment of nul tiel record (q. v.) occurs when some pleading denies the existence of a record, and issue is joined thereon; the record being produced is compared by the court with the statement in the pleading which alleges it; and if they correspond, the party asserting its existence obtains judgment; if they do not correspond, the other party obtains judgment of nul tiel record.

(2) Judgment upon verdict (q. v.) is the most usual of the judgments upon facts found, and is for the party obtaining the verdict.

(3) Judgment non obstante veredicto is a judgment rendered in favor of the plaintiff notwithstanding the verdict for the defendant; this judgment is given upon motion (which can only be made by the plaintiff) when, upon an examination of the whole proceedings, it appears to the court that the defendant has shown himself to be in the wrong, and that the issue, though decided in his favor by the jury, is on a point which does not at all better his case; Smith, Act. 161. This is sometimes called a judgment upon confession, because it occurs after a pleading by defendant in confession and avoidance and issue joined thereon, and verdict found for defendant, and then it appears that the pleading was bad in law and might have been demurred to on that ground. The plea being substantially bad in law, of course the verdict which merely shows it to be true in point of fact, cannot avail to entitle the defendant to judgment; while, on the other hand, the plea being in confession and avoidance involves a confession of the plaintiff's declaration, and shows that he was entitled to maintain his action. Sometimes it may be expedient for the plaintiff to move for judgment non obstante veredicto, even though the verdict be in his favor; for, in a case like that described above, if he takes judgment as upon the verdict it seems that such judgment would be erroneous, and that the only safe course is to take it as upon confession; Cro. Eliz. 778; 2 Rolle, Abr. 99. See, also, Cro. Eliz. 214; Rastell, Ent. 622; Pemberton v. Van Rensselaer, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 307. See NON OBSTANTE VEREDICTO.

(4) A judgment of repleader is given when issue is joined on an immaterial point, or one on which the court cannot give a judgment which will determine the right. On the award of a repleader, the parties must recommence their pleadings at the point where the immaterial issue originated. See REPLEADER. This judgment is interlocutory, quod partes replacent. See Bacon, Abr. Pleas, 4 (M); Coleson v. Blanton, 3 Hayw. (Tenn.) 159.

2. When the facts are admitted by the parties, leaving only issues of law to be determined, which are as follows:

(1) Judgment upon a demurrer against the party demurring concludes him, because by demurring, a party admits the facts alleged in the pleadings of his adversary, and relies on their insufficiency in law. See DEMURRER.

(2) It sometimes happens that though the adverse parties are agreed as to the facts, and only differ as to the law arising out of them, still these facts do not so clearly appear on the pleadings as to enable them to obtain the opinion of the court by way of demurrer; for on demurrer the court can look at nothing whatever except the pleadings. In such circumstances the statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, § 25, which has been imitated in most of the states, allows them after issue joined, and on obtaining the consent of a single judge, to state the facts in a special case for the opinion of the court, and agree that a judgment shall be entered for the plaintiff or defendant by confession or nolle prosequi immediately after the decision of the case; and judgment is entered accordingly, called judgment on a case stated.

(3) Sometimes at the trial the parties find that they agree on the facts, and the only question is one of law. In such case a verdict pro forma is taken, which is a species of admission by the parties, and is general, where the jury find for the plaintiff generally, but subject to the opinion of the court on a special case, or special, where they state the facts as they find them, concluding that the opinion of the court shall decide in whose favor the verdict shall be, and that they assess the damages accordingly. The judgments in these cases are called respectively, judgment on a general verdict subject to a special case, and judgment on a special verdict. See CASE STATED; POINT RESERVED; VERDICT.

3. Besides these, a judgment may be based upon the admissions or confessions of one only of the parties.

(a) Such judgments when for defendant upon the admissions of the plaintiff are:

(1) Judgment of nolle prosequi, where, after appearance and before judgment, the plaintiff says he "will not further prosecute his suit."

(2) Judgment of retraxit is one where, after appearance and before judgment, the plaintiff enters upon the record that he "withdraws his suit," whereupon judgment is rendered against him. The difference between these is that a retraxit is a bar to any future action for the same cause; while a nolle prosequi is not, unless made after judgment; 7 Bingh. 716; 1 Wms. Saund. 207, n.

(3) A plaintiff sometimes, when he finds he has misconceived his action, obtains leave from the court to discontinue, on which there is a judgment against him and he has to pay costs; but he may commence a new action for the same cause.

(4) A stet processus is entered where it is agreed by leave of the court that all further proceedings shall be stayed: though in form a judgment for the defendant, it is generally, like discontinuance, in point of fact for the benefit of the plaintiff, and entered on his application, as, for instance, when the defendant has become insolvent, it does not carry costs; Smith, Act. 162.

(b) Judgments for the plaintiff upon facts admitted by the defendant are:

(1) Judgment by cognovit actionem, cognovit or confession, where, instead of entering a plea, the defendant chooses to acknowledge the rightfulness of the plaintiff's action.

(2) Judgment by confession relicta verificatione, where, after pleading and before trial, he both confesses the plaintiff's cause of action to be just and true and withdraws or abandons his plea or other allegations. Upon this, judgment is entered against him without proceeding to trial.

Analogous to this is the judgment confessed by warrant of attorney: this is an authority given by the debtor to an attorney named by the creditor, empowering him to confess judgment either by cognovit actionem, nil dicit, or non sum informatus. This differs from a cognovit in that an action must be commenced before a cognovit can be given; 3 Dowl. 278, per Parke, B.; but not before the execution of a warrant of attorney. Judgments by nil dicit and non sum informatus, though they are in fact founded upon a tacit acknowledgment on the part of the defendant that he has no defence to the plaintiff's action, yet as they are commonly reckoned among the judgments by default, will be explained under that head.

4. A judgment is rendered on the default of a party, on two grounds: it is considered that the failure of the party to proceed is an admission that he, if plaintiff, has no just cause of action, or, if defendant, has no good defence; and it is intended as a penalty for his neglect; for which reason, when such judgment is set aside or opened at the instance of the defaulting party, the court generally require him to pay costs.

(a) Such judgments against the defendant are:

(1) Judgment by default is against the defendant when he has failed to appear after being served with the writ; to plead, after being ruled so to do, or, in Pennsylvania and some other states, to file an affidavit of defence within the prescribed time; or, generally, to take any step in the cause incumbent on him. The practice of permitting judgment to be entered by default for want of a sufficient affidavit of defence, when the cause of action is a record, or is sworn to, has become practically universal. Under it courts usually refuse a judgment in cases in which motion on the affidavits raises a doubtful question. When such decisions can be reviewed, an order refusing judgment will rarely be reversed; Ensign v. Kindred, 163 Pa. 638, 30 Atl. 274.

(2) Judgment by non sum informatus is a species of judgment by default, where, instead of entering a plea, the defendant's attorney says he is "not informed" of any answer to be given to the action.

(3) Judgment by nil dicit is rendered against the defendant where, after being ruled to plead, he neglects to do so within the time specified.

(b) Such judgments against the plaintiff are:

(1) Judgment of non pros. (from non prosequitur) is one given against the plaintiff for a neglect to take any of those steps which it is incumbent on him to take in due time.

A judgment by default is just as conclusive between the parties of whatever is essential to support it as one rendered after answer and contest; Last Chance Min. Co. v. Mining Co., 157 U. S. 683, 15 Sup. Ct. 733, 39 L. Ed. 859.

(2) Judgment of non suit (from non sequitur, or ne suit pas) is where the plaintiff, after giving in his evidence, finds that it will not sustain his case, and therefore voluntarily makes default by absenting himself when he is called on to hear the verdict. The court give judgment against him for this default; but the proceeding is really for his benefit, because after a nonsuit he can institute another action for the same cause, which is not the case—except in ejectment, in some states—after a verdict and judgment against him.

Judgments are further classified with reference to the stage of the cause at the time they are rendered.

1. Interlocutory judgments are such as are given in the middle of a cause upon some plea, proceeding, or default which is only intermediate, and does not finally determine or complete the suit. Any judgment leaving something to be done by the court, before the rights of the parties are determined, and not putting an end to the action in which it is entered, is interlocutory; Freem. Judg. § 12; 3 Bla. Com. 396. A judgment which is not final is called "interlocutory"; that is, an interlocutory judgment is one which determines some preliminary or subordinate point or plea, or settles some step, question, or default arising in the progress of the cause, but does not adjudicate the ultimate rights of the parties, or finally put the case out of court. Thus, a judgment or order passed upon any provisional or accessory claim or contention is, in general, merely interlocutory, although it may finally dispose of that particular matter; 1 Black, Judgm. 21.

Such is a judgment for the plaintiff upon a plea in abatement, which merely decides that the cause must proceed and the defendant put in a better plea. But, in the ordinary sense, interlocutory judgments are those incomplete judgments whereby the right of the plaintiff is indeed established, but the quantum of damages sustained by him is not ascertained. This can only be the case where the plaintiff recovers; for judgment for the defendant is always complete as well as final. The interlocutory judgments of most common occurrence are where a demurrer has been determined for the plaintiff, or the defendant has made default, or has by cognovit actionem acknowledged the plaintiff's demand to be just. After interlocutory judgment in such case, the plaintiff must ordinarily take out a writ of inquiry, which is addressed to the sheriff, commanding him to summon a jury and assess the damages, and upon the return of the writ of inquiry final judgment may be entered for the amount ascertained by the jury. It is not always necessary to have a writ of inquiry upon interlocutory judgment; for it is said that "this is a mere inquest of office to inform the conscience of the court, who, if they please, may themselves assess the damages;" 3 Wils. 62, per Wilmot, C. J.; and accordingly, if the damages are matter of mere computation, as, for instance, interest upon a bill of exchange or promissory note, it is usual for the court to refer it to the master or prothonotary, to ascertain what is due for principal, interest, and costs, whose report supersedes the necessity of a writ of inquiry; 1 H. Bla. 541; 4 Price 134. But in actions where a specific thing is sued for, as in actions of debt for a sum certain, the judgment upon demurrer, default, or confession is not interlocutory, but is absolutely complete and final in the first instance.

2. Final judgments are such as at once put an end to the action by determining the right and fixing the amount in dispute. Such are a judgment for defendant at any stage of the suit, a judgment for plaintiff after verdict, a judgment for a specific amount confessed upon warrant of attorney, and a judgment signed upon the return of a writ of inquiry, or upon the assessment of damages by the master or prothonotary. Judgment for plaintiff is final also in an action brought for a specific sum, as debt for a sum certain, although entered upon a demurrer or default, because here, the amount being ascertained at the outset, the only question at issue is that respecting the right, and when that is determined nothing remains to be done. The question what is a final judgment becomes material in many cases where there is a right of review on error or appeal as to final, but not as to interlocutory, judgments. The term final judgment has been variously defined. A judgment which puts an end to the action by declaring that the plaintiff has either entitled himself, or has not, to recover the remedy he sues for. 3 Bla. Com. 398. A judgment which determines a particular cause and terminates all litigation on the same right. 1 Kent 316. A judgment which cannot be appealed from, but is perfectly conclusive as to the matter adjudicated upon; Snell v. Manufacturing Co., 24 Pick. (Mass.) 300; Foster v. Neilson, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 294, 7 L. Ed. 415; Forgay v. Conrad, 6 How. (U. S.) 201, 12 L. Ed. 404. A judgment is final which completely settles the rights of the parties. Brown v. Vancleave, 86 Ky. 381, 6 S. W. 25.

When by any direction of a supreme court of a state, an entire cause is determined, the decision, when reduced to form and entered in the records of the court, constitutes a final judgment, whatever may be its technical designation, and is subject to review in the supreme court of the United States; Board of Com'rs of Tippecanoe County v. Lucas, 93 U. S. 108, 23 L. Ed. 822; but when the state court remands a cause for further proceedings in the lower court it is not a final judgment; McComb v. Knox County, 91 U. S. 1, 23 L. Ed. 185; Smith v. Adams, 130 U. S. 167; 9 Sup. Ct. 566, 32 L. Ed. 895; Rice v. Sanger, 144 U. S. 197, 12 Sup. Ct. 664, 36 L. Ed. 403; Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Osborne, 146 U. S. 354, 13 Sup. Ct. 281, 36 L. Ed. 1002. See DECREE.

3. When an issue in fact, or an issue in law arising on a peremptory plea, is determined for the plaintiff, the judgment is "that the plaintiff do recover," etc., which is called a judgment quod recuperet; Steph. Pl. 126; Com. Dig. Abatement (I 14, I 15); 2 Archb. Pr. 3. When the issue in law arises on a dilatory plea, and is determined for the plaintiff, the judgment is only that the defendant "do answer over," called a judgment of respondeat ouster. In an action of account, judgment for the plaintiff is that the defendant "do account," quod computet. Of these, the last two, quod computet and quod respondeat ouster, are interlocutory only; the first, quod recuperet, is either final or interlocutory, according as the quantum of damages is or is not ascertained at the rendition of the judgment.

4. Judgment in error is either in affirmance of the former judgment; in recall of it for error in fact; in reversal of it for error in law; that the plaintiff be barred of his writ of error, where a plea of release of errors or of the statute of limitations is found for the defendant; or that there be a venire facias de novo, which is an award of a new trial; Smith, Act. 196. A venire facias de novo will always be awarded when the plaintiff's declaration contains a good cause of action, and judgment in his favor is reversed by the court of error; Little Schuylkill Nav. R. & Coal Co. v. Norton, 24 Pa. 470, 64 Am. Dec. 672. Frequently, however, when judgment is reversed, the court of error not merely overturns the decision of the court below, but will give such a judgment as the court below ought to have given; Smith, Act. 196; but see NON OBSTANTE VEREDICTO.

NATURE OF THE OBLIGATION. The question whether a judgment is a contract is an old one very much discussed, and in some cases it was held to be such, chiefly upon the authority of Blackstone, who rested his opinion as to the propriety of this classification upon the doctrine of the social compact. The relations of a judgment to the idea of a contract or a quasi-contract have received much attention, in connection with the more careful investigation and accurate understanding of that class of obligations known as quasi-contracts. Blackstone said, "Upon showing the judgment, once obtained, still in full force and yet unsatisfied, the law immediately implies that, by the original contract of society, the defendant hath contracted a debt, and is bound to pay it;" 3 Bla. Com. 160. Of this expression it has been said, "This is certainly a very remarkable statement, and involves large assumptions in regard to 'an original contract of society' and its supposed binding force upon a judgment debtor of the nineteenth century;" Howe, Stud. Civ. L. 188. This early theory of an "original contract of society" has been long since abandoned, and after the time of Blackstone's Commentaries Lord Mansfield, in a carefully considered case, said, "A judgment is no contract, nor can it be considered in the light of a contract, as judicium redditur in invitum;"

3 Burr. 1545. The same view of the question was taken by the United States supreme court, which held that a judgment was not a "contract within the meaning of the constitutional prohibition against impairing the obligation of a contract;" Chase v. Curtiss, 113 U. S. 452, 5 Sup. Ct. 534, 28 L. Ed. 1038. That court has, in two other important cases, discussed the question of the nature of a judgment and the obligation which is created by it, and in both cases it strongly dissents from the view of Blackstone and the earlier text-writers. In Lewis v. Shreveport, 108 U. S. 285, 2 Sup. Ct. 634, 27 L. Ed. 728, the court said: "A judgment for damages, estimated in money, is sometimes called, by text-writers, a specialty or contract of record, because it establishes a legal obligation to pay the amount recovered, and, by a fiction of law, a promise to pay is implied where such legal obligation exists. It is on this principle that an action ex contractu will lie upon a judgment. But this fiction cannot convert a transaction, wanting the assent of the parties, into one which necessarily implies it. Judgments for torts are usually the result of violent contests, and, as observed by the court below, are imposed on the losing party, by a higher authority, against his will and protest. The prohibition of the federal constitution was intended to secure the observance of good faith, in the stipulation of parties, against state action. Where a transaction is not based upon any assent of parties, it cannot be said that any faith is pledged with respect to it, and no case arises for the operation of the prohibition." In this case it was held that the conversion of a statutory right to demand compensation for damages caused by a mob into a judgment does not make it a contract within the constitutional prohibition against impairing the obligation of a contract. In the more recent case of Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U. S. 113, 16 Sup. Ct. 139, 40 L. Ed. 95, in referring to the doctrine of Blackstone, with reference to a foreign judgment, the court held that the idea that such judgment imposed or created an obligation or duty was a remnant of an ancient fiction, and "while the theory in question would serve to explain rules of pleading which originated while the fiction was believed in, it is hardly a sufficient guide at the present day in dealing with questions of international law; and it might be safer to adopt the maxim applied to foreign judgments by Chief Justice Weston, speaking for the supreme judicial court of Maine, judicium redditur in invitum, or as given by Lord Coke, in præsumptione legis judicium redditur in invitum; Jordan v. Robinson, 15 Me. 167; Co. Lit. 248 b." In New York it is held that a judgment is in no sense a contract or agreement; Wyman v. Mitchell, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 316; even a judgment founded upon a contract; McCoun v. R. Co., 50 N. Y. 176; and the same doctrine is asserted with great vigor in a later case; O'Brien v. Young, 95 id. 428; this is also the prevailing doctrine in other states; Larrabee v. Baldwin, 35 Cal. 155; Masterson v. Gibson, 56 Ala. 56; McDonald v. Dickson, 87 N. C. 404; Tyler's Ex'rs v. Winslow, 15 Ohio St. 364; Sprott v. Reid, 3 G. Greene (Ia.) 489, 56 Am. Dec. 549; Rae v. Hulbert, 17 Ill. 572; some cases are contra; Morse v. Toppan, 3 Gray (Mass.) 411; Sawyer v. Vilas, 19 Vt. 43; Taylor v. Root, 43 N. Y. 335. The last case alone was relied on as the authority for the proposition that a judgment is a contract by Harlan, J., dissenting, in Louisiana v. Mayor, supra, but the case so relied upon is in a collection omitted from the regular reports and is in direct contradiction to cases cited supra, in which the opposing doctrine is emphatically stated by the same court, one decided four and the other sixteen years later. See also Burnes v. Simpson, 9 Kan. 658. The later text books concur in supporting the statement already made as to the weight of authority. In one a judgment is said to be not under any circumstances a contract (1 Black, Judgt. § 10), and in another it is said that though a judgment is not a contract, it may be treated in some cases as a contract or as included in that term in certain statutes; 1 Freeman. Judgt. § 4. Cases in which the contrary has been held will usually be found within this classification.

Leake (Contracts, 1911 Ed. 105) classifies a judgment as a contract of record.

The civil law conception of the judgment is said to be correctly represented by the Louisiana case of Gustine v. Bank, 10 Rob. La. 412, in which it was held that "a judgment does not create, add to, nor detract from, the indebtedness of a party; it only declares it to exist, fixes its amount, and secures to the suitor the means of enforcing payment, and it is therefore necessary to look to the obligation upon which the judgment is based and ascertain whether it has arisen from contract or quasi-contract, from a delict or quasi-delict, or merely from the operation of law; the obligation is simply enforced and increased or diminished by the decree of the court. "It is declared to exist; it is interpreted; it is applied; it is put in the way of enforcement by the judicial power of the state;" Howe, Stud. Civ. L. 190.

In an interesting criticism upon the terminology adopted by Prof. Keener, in his work on quasi-contracts, a writer in the Harvard Law Review objects very seriously to the use of the term quasi-contract as an expression of the obligation of a judgment, which he says is "founded upon the mandate of the court, and depends for its validity upon the right of a court to adjudicate between contending parties;" 10 Harv. L. Rev. 213.

REQUISITES AND VALIDITY. To be valid, a judicial judgment must be given by a competent judge or court, at a time and place appointed by law, and in the form it requires.

A judgment would be null if the judge had not jurisdiction of the matter, or, having such jurisdiction, he exercised it when there was no court held, or out of his district, or if he rendered a judgment before the cause was prepared for a hearing.

The judgment must confine itself to the question raised before the court, and cannot extend beyond it. For example, where the plaintiff sues for an injury committed on his lands by animals owned and kept carelessly by defendant, the judgment may be for damages, but it cannot command the defendant for the future to keep his cattle out of the plaintiff's land. That would be to usurp the power of the legislature. A judgment declares the rights which belong to the citizen, the law alone rules future actions. The law commands all men, it is the same for all because it is general; judgments are particular decisions, which apply only to particular persons, and bind no others; they vary like the circumstances on which they are founded.

"The validity of a judgment is to be determined by the laws in force when it is rendered, and is not affected by subsequent changes therein," Anderson v. Hotel Co., 92 Va. 687, 24 S. E. 269. "A judgment is not void merely because it is not dated," Reed v. Lane, 93 Ia. 83, 65 N. W. 380. Courts should not render judgments which cannot be enforced by any process known to the law; Johnson v. Malloy, 74 Cal. 430, 16 Pac. 228. "In an action at law the court cannot render a conditional judgment," Coh v. Bright, 2 Mo. App. Rep'r 1191.

The jurisdiction of a foreign court over the person or the subject-matter embraced in the judgment or decree of such court is always open to inquiry, and in this respect a court of another state is to be regarded as a foreign court; Grover & B. Sewing Mach. Co. v. Radcliffe, 137 U. S. 287, 11 Sup. Ct. 92, 34 L. Ed. 670; and a judgment in a state court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties, is binding upon the parties thereto in a suit in another state between the same parties, where the subject-matter and the issues are the same as in the former suit; Carpenter v. Strange, 141 U. S. 87, 11 Sup. Ct. 960, 35 L. Ed. 640.

OPERATION AND EFFECTS. The judgment of a court of general jurisdiction is presumed to have been rendered in the due exercise of that jurisdiction over person and subject-matter, unless the contrary be shown; Calhoun v. Ross, 60 Ill. App. 309; and after twenty years the presumption of due notice to the parties becomes conclusive; Nickrans v. Wilk, 161 Ill. 76, 43 N. E. 741.

Final judgments are commonly said to conclude the parties; and this is true in general, but does not apply to judgments for defendant on non suit, as in case of non suit, by nolle prosequi, and the like, which are final judgments in one sense, because they put an end to all proceedings in the suit, but which nevertheless do not debar the plaintiff from instituting another suit for the same cause. With this qualification, the rule as to the effect of a judgment is as follows: The judgment of a court of concurrent jurisdiction directly upon the point is, as a plea, a bar, or, as evidence, conclusive, between the same parties upon the same matter directly in question in another court. The judgment of a court of exclusive jurisdiction directly upon the point is in like manner conclusive upon the same matter, between the same parties, coming incidentally in question in another court for a different purpose. But neither the judgment of a concurrent nor exclusive jurisdiction is evidence of any matter which came collaterally in question, though within their jurisdiction, nor of any matter incidentally cognizable, nor of any matter to be inferred by argument from the judgment. Duchess of Kingston's Case, 20 Howell, St. Tr. 538; 2 Smith, L. C. 424; Harr. Cont. 295.

The rule above given relates to the effect of a judgment upon proceedings in another court; if the court is the same, of course the rule holds a fortiori. Moreover, all persons who are represented by the parties, and claim under them or in privity with them, are equally concluded by the proceedings. All privies whatever in estate, in blood, or in law, are, therefore, estopped from litigating that which is conclusive upon him with whom they are in privity; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 523, 536. A decree or judgment on a matter outside of the issue raised by the pleading is a nullity; Jones v. Davenport, 45 N. J. Eq. 77, 17 Atl. 570; and so is the judgment of a court which is without jurisdiction; In re Sawyer, 124 U. S. 200, 8 Sup. Ct. 482, 31 L. Ed. 402.

A further rule as to the conclusiveness of judgments is sometimes stated thus: "A judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction cannot be impeached or set aside in any collateral proceeding except on the ground of fraud." See, generally, 1 Greenl. Ev. pt. 3, ch. 5; Derr v. Wilson, 84 Ky. 14; Robertson v. Winchester, 85 Tenn. 171, 1 S. W. 781; Hilton v. Bachman, 24 Neb. 490, 39 N. W. 419; Sachse v. Clingsmith, 97 Mo. 406, 11 S. W. 69; Huling v. Improvement Co., 130 U. S. 565, 9 Sup. Ct. 603, 32 L. Ed. 1045. A judgment of a court having jurisdiction both of the subject-matter and the parties, however erroneous it may be, is a valid, binding, and conclusive judgment, as to the matter in controversy, upon the parties thereto and those claiming under them; Adams v. Franklin, 82 Ga. 168, 8 S. E. 44; Cheatham v. Whitman, 86 Ky. 614, 6 S. W. 595; Bateman v. Miller, 118 Ind. 345, 21 N. E. 292; Allan v. Hoffman, 83 Va. 129, 2 S. E. 602; McCoy v. McCoy, 29 W. Va. 794, 2 S. E. 809; Dowell v. Applegate, 152 U. S. 327, 14 Sup. Ct. 611, 38 L. Ed. 463.

This does not prevent a judgment from being attacked directly by writ of error or other proceeding in the nature of an appeal; and its validity may be impeached in other direct proceedings, as by motion to open or set it aside, and in contests between creditors in regard to the validity of their respective judgments; in this latter class of cases the court will sometimes award a feigned issue to try questions of fact affecting the validity of the judgment.

If the record of a judgment show that it was rendered without service of process or appearance of the defendant, or if that fact can be shown without contradicting the recitals of the record, it will be treated as void in any other state; Com. v. Blood, 97 Mass. 538; Hoffman v. Hoffman, 46 N. Y. 30, 7 Am. Rep. 299; McCauley v. Hargroves, 48 Ga. 50, 15 Am. Rep. 660. But this fact cannot be shown in contradiction of the recitals of the record; Newcomb v. Peck, 17 Vt. 302, 44 Am. Dec. 340; Westervelt v. Lewis, 2 McLean, 511, Fed. Cas. No. 17,446; Wetherill v. Stillman, 65 Pa. 105; contra, Norwood v. Cobb, 24 Tex. 551; Thompson v. Whitman, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 457, 21 L. Ed. 897. See Cooley, Const. Lim., 2d ed. 27. Nor will it be presumed to be void because of the absence of the return of service on the summons; Ferguson's Adm'r v. Teel, 82 Va. 690. A judgment is not less conclusive because rendered by default; Harshman v. Knox County, 122 U. S. 306, 7 Sup. Ct. 1171, 30 L. Ed. 1152; but a default judgment is void unless service has been had according to law; Davidson v. Clark, 7 Mont. 100, 14 Pac. 663; Alderson v. Marshall, 7 Mont. 288, 16 Pac. 576; Ferguson v. Jones, 17 Or. 204, 20 Pac. 842, 3 L. R. A. 620, 11 Am. St. Rep. 808; Railway Co. v. Ryan, 31 W. Va. 364, 6 S. E. 924, 13 Am. St. Rep. 865; and a money judgment against a non-resident defendant who is not personally served within the jurisdiction, and who does not voluntarily appear, is void; Scott v. Streepy, 73 Tex. 547, 11 S. W. 532; Needham v. Thayer, 147 Mass. 536, 18 N. E. 429. In the leading case of Pennoyer v. Neff, it was held that a personal judgment is without any validity, if it be rendered by a state court in an action upon a money demand against a non-resident of the state, who was served by a publication of summons, but upon whom no personal service of process within the state was made and who did not appear; no title to property passes by a sale under an execution issued upon such a judgment; Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. Ed. 565.

Matters of defence arising since the judgment may be taken advantage of by a writ of audita querela, or, which is more usual, the court may afford summary relief on motion.

Although a judgment is vitiated by fraud it is not thereby rendered absolutely void; it is valid as between the parties to the fraud, and can be avoided only by a person injured by it; Webster v. Reid, Morr. (Ia.) 467; as where one holding a judgment against a railroad brought a suit to have another judgment, and a lease of the road to secure it, declared void for fraud, and obtained a decree accordingly. It was held, that the decree did not affect the validity of the judgment and the lease as between the parties thereto; Graham v. R. Co., 3 Wall. (U. S.) 704, 18 L. Ed. 247.

All the judgments, decrees, or other orders of courts, however conclusive in their character, are under the control of the court which pronounced them during the term at which they are rendered or entered of record, and may then be set aside, vacated, or modified by the court; Harris v. State, 24 Neb. 803, 40 N. W. 317; Henderson v. Coal & Coke Co., 140 U. S. 25, 11 Sup. Ct. 691, 35 L. Ed. 332; but after the term has ended, unless proceedings to correct the errors alleged have been taken before its close, they can only be corrected by writ of error or appeal, as may be allowed in a court which by law can reverse the decision; Brooks v. R. Co., 102 U. S. 107, 26 L. Ed. 91; St. Louis Public Schools v. Walker, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 603, 19 L. Ed. 650. To this rule there is an exception founded on the common-law writ of coram nobis, which brought before the court where the error was committed certain mistakes of fact not put in issue or passed upon by the court, such as the death of one of the parties when the judgment was rendered, coverture if a female party, infancy and failure to appoint a guardian, error in the process, or mistake of the clerk. But if the error was in the judgment itself, the writ did not lie. What was formerly done by this writ is now attained by motion and affidavits when necessary; Pickett v. Legerwood, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 147, 8 L. Ed. 638. See Fielden v. People, 128 Ill. 595, 21 N. E. 584; Seiler v. Bank, 86 Ky. 128, 5 S. W. 536. A judge has the power to amend a record at any time, so as to make it speak the truth; Brooks v. Stephens, 100 N. C. 297, 6 S. E. 81; Ex parte Henderson, 84 Ala. 36, 4 South. 284.

The general rule is that after the expiration of the term all final judgments, etc., pass beyond the control of the court unless steps be taken during the term to set aside, modify or correct them; Kingman v. Mfg. Co., 170 U. S. 675, 18 Sup. Ct. 786, 42 L. Ed. 1192; Tubman v. R. Co., 190 U. S. 38, 23 Sup. Ct. 777, 47 L. Ed. 946. But a judgment may always be reformed for the purpose of correcting computations in it after the term has ended; A. J. Woodruff & Co. v. U. S., 154 Fed. 861. A court may amend its record of a judgment at a subsequent term to prevent injustice through a mistake of the judge, or counsel, or the clerk, as by correcting the wording of an order of dismissal which did not conform to the motion on which it was based; Bernard v. Abel, 156 Fed. 649, 84 C. C. A. 361.

A court which has once rendered a judgment in favor of a defendant, dismissing the cause and discharging him from further attendance, cannot, after the end of the term, without notice to the defendant, set that judgment aside and render a new judgment against the defendant; such judgment is void and not entitled to credit in another state; Wetmore v. Karrick, 205 U. S. 141, 27 Sup. Ct. 434, 51 L. Ed. 745.

Equity will enjoin the enforcement of a judgment secured by perjury where the judgment debtor used diligence, but failed to discover the perjury in time to be available at the trial; Boring v. Ott, 138 Wis. 260, 119 N. W. 865, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1080.

A joint judgment which is void as to one of the parties is void as to all; 6 Mackey 548. A judgment against several persons, one of whom dies before its rendition, is voidable as to all; Clafin v. Dunne, 129 Ill. 241, 21 N. E. 834, 16 Am. St. Rep. 263.

MERGER. The question how far the cause of action is merged in a judgment sometimes becomes very material, as affecting the right to sue on the former in another jurisdiction. "The judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction discharges the obligation which the action is brought to enforce. The judgment may operate either to merge the original obligation, in so far as judgment is rendered for the plaintiff; or to estop the plaintiff from subsequently setting up his original claim, in so far as judgment is rendered for the defendant." Harri-man, Contr. 295.

The effect of the merger of the cause of action is often very serious; one having a right of action against two or more persons may, by recovering judgment against one of them, lose his remedy against the others. As where the plaintiff, in an action upon a joint contract obligation elected to enter judgment against one defendant, in default of plea or answer, the judgment was held a bar to a subsequent action against the other, the debt being merged in the judgment; Davison v. Harmon, 65 Minn. 402, 67 N. W. 1015; O'Hanlon v. Scott, 89 Hun 44, 35 N. Y. Supp. 31; but the cause of action does not merge in a void judgment; McCadden v. Slauson, 96 Tenn. 586, 36 S. W. 378.

Where the cause of action has arisen in a foreign country, the plaintiff has the option to sue on a judgment obtained there, or ignoring the judgment to proceed upon the original cause of action, in both cases subject to certain exceptions, as where the judgment is to enforce a penalty or for a tort on which there is no action here; Lyman v. Brown, 2 Curt. C. C. 559, Fed. Cas. No. 8,627. This choice of remedy does not exist in the case of judgments in sister states; a cause of action in such case is merged and the remedy is confined to an action on the judgment; Freeman, Judgments § 241; Henderson v. Staniford, 105 Mass. 504, 7 Am. Rep. 551; Barnes & Drake v. Gibbs, 31 N. J. L. 317, 86 Am. Dec. 210; Baxley v. Linah, 16 Pa. 241, 55 Am. Dec. 494; contra, Beall's Adm'r v. Taylor's Adm'r, 2 Gratt. (Va.) 532, 44 Am. Dec. 398. The rule as stated is subject to the exception that there is no merger of the cause of action in the judgment unless the latter is general. Where the judgment was in a penal action, the action was held not to abate on the death of a party, because the judgment having been entered, the action thereafter had the attributes of a contract; Carr v. Rischer, 119 N. Y. 117, 23 N. E. 296.

It has been held that in an action of tort, the tort merges in the judgment, so as to allow an attachment as on the contract; Johnson v. Butler, 2 Ia. 535; although a tort cannot be set up as a counter-claim, the judgment upon it may, as constituting a contract; Taylor v. Root, *43 N. Y. 335; so it was held that a judgment so far extinguished the original debt that a set-off available in the suit on the debt by reason of a claim against an assignor of said debt was no longer available after judgment; Ault v. Zehering, 38 Ind. 429.

The doctrine of the merger of the cause of action is not carried to such extreme as to defeat the equities or just rights of the defendant or plaintiff. Thus it has been held with some frequency that it can be shown against a judgment that the same was obtained upon a debt which was provable against defendant in proceedings in insolvency, and being so provable was barred by the discharge in insolvency, and as the discharge barred the debt, it barred the judgment resting on the debt; Clark v. Rowling, 3 N. Y. 216, 53 Am. Dec. 290.

Where the defendant was sued in Massachusetts, in debt on a judgment, he pleaded a discharge under the New York insolvency law, and it was held that the court would look behind the judgment and see whether under the facts giving rise to it, it was so discharged; Betts v. Bagley, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 572; and, on the other hand, a judgment apparently discharged by insolvency proceedings, but found to be based on notes executed before the passage of the insolvent law was held not affected by the latter, and enforceable; Wyman v. Mitchell, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 316; so it was held that a judgment does not prevent a creditor from taking an attachment as a non-resident creditor; Owens v. Bowie, 2 Md. 457.

Though a judgment is to some purposes a merger of the original contract, and constitutes a new debt, yet when the essential rights of the parties are influenced by the nature of the original contract, the court will look into the judgment for the purpose of ascertaining what the original contract was.

The principle of the cases last cited has been frequently enunciated. In Clark v. Rowling, 3 N. Y. 216, 53 Am. Dec. 290, Hurlbert, J., said that "a judgment, instead of being regarded strictly as a new debt, is sometimes held to be merely the old debt, in a new form, so as to prevent a technical merger from working injustice." In Betts v. Bagley, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 572, Shaw, C. J., said: "Although a judgment, to some purposes, is considered as a merger of the former, and as constituting a new cause of action, yet when the essential rights of parties are influenced by the nature of the original contract, the court will look into the judgment for the purpose of ascertaining what the nature of such original cause of action was. Any other decision would carry the technical doctrine of merger to an inconvenient extent and cause it to work injustice."

FORM. The form of the judgment varies according to the nature of the action and the circumstances, such as default, verdict, etc., under which it is obtained. Anciently great particularity was required in the entries made upon the judgment roll; but now, even in the English practice, the drawing up the judgment roll is generally neglected, except in cases where it is absolutely necessary, as where it is desirable to give the proceedings in evidence on some future occasion; Smith, Act. 169. In this country the roll is rarely if ever drawn up, the simple entry on the trial list and docket, "judgment for plaintiff," or "judgment for defendant," being all that is generally considered necessary; and though the formal entries are in theory still required to constitute a complete record, yet if such record should subsequently be needed for any purpose, it may be made up after any length of time from the skeleton entries upon the docket and trial list. See Wilkins v. Anderson, 11 Pa. 399. When the record is thus drawn up in full, the ancient formalities must be observed, at least in a measure.

JUDGMENT ON VERDICT. A judgment on a verdict virtually overrules all demurrers to the declaration; Fleming Oil & Gas Co. v. Oil Co., 37 W. Va. 645, 17 S. E. 203. The form of such verdicts varies according to the action and frequently also with the character in which a party sues or is sued.

In account, judgment for the plaintiff is interlocutory in the first instance, that the defendant do account, quod computet; Kitchen v. Strawbridge, 4 Wash. C. C. 84, Fed. Cas. No. 7,854.

In assumpsit, judgment for the plaintiff is that he recover the damages assessed by the jury, and full costs of suit; 1 Chitty, Pl. 100. Judgment for the defendant is that he recover his costs. For the form, see Tidd, Pr. Forms 165.

In case, trover, and trespass, the judgment is the same in substance, and differs but slightly in form from that of assumpsit; 1 Chitty, Pl. 100, 147.

A judgment in trover passes title to the goods in question; Mitchell v. Shaw, 53 Mo. App. 652; Griel v. Pollak, 105 Ala. 249, 16 South. 704; but only where the value of the thing converted is included in the judgment; 5 H. & N. 288; and it is held that an unsatisfied judgment does not pass the property; L. R. 6 C. P. 584; Lovejoy v. Murray, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 1, 16, 18 L. Ed. 129; Pryor v. Cattle Co., 6 N. M. 44, 27 Pac. 327. In a somewhat analogous case it was held that a judgment for the value of horses lost to the owner by negligence of the defendant, of itself passes title to the horses to the defendant becoming liable for their value; St. Louis, A. & T. Ry. Co. v. McKinsey, 78 Tex. 298, 14 S. W. 645, 22 Am. St. Rep. 54. See Floyd v. Browne, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 121, 18 Am. Dec. 602. Where personal property had been sold and partly paid for, title being retained by the vendor, and he recovered in trover both the property and instalments due, on appeal it was directed that the judgment be discharged on payment within a time limited of purchase money, interest, and cost, otherwise the original judgment below to stand of full force; Morton v. Frick Co., 87 Ga. 230, 13 S. E. 463.

In covenant, judgment for the plaintiff is that he recover the amount of his damages as found which he has sustained by reason of the breach or breaches of the defendant's covenant, together with costs of suit; 1 Chitty, Pl. 116. Judgment for defendant is for costs.

In debt, judgment for the plaintiff is that he recover his debt, and in general nominal damages for the detention thereof; and in cases under the 8th & 9th Will. III. c. 11, for successive breaches of a bond conditioned for the performance of a covenant, it is also awarded that he have execution for such damages, and likewise full costs of suit; 1 Chitty, Pl. 108. But in some penal and other actions the plaintiff does not always recover costs; Esp. Pen. Act. 154; Hull, Costs 200; Bull. N. P. 333; Clark v. Dewey, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 251. Judgment for defendant is generally for costs; but in certain penal actions neither party can recover costs; Clark v. Dewey, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 251. See Tidd, Pr. Forms 176.

In detinue, judgment for the plaintiff is in the alternative that he recover the goods or the value thereof if he cannot have the goods themselves, with damages for the detention, and costs; 1 Chitty, Pl. 121, 122; Thompson v. Musser, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 458, 1 L. Ed. 222. See Tidd, Pr. Forms 187.

If judgment in any of the above personal actions is against the defendant in the character of executor, it confines the liability of the defendant for the debt or damages to the amount of assets of the testator in his hands, but leaves him personally liable for costs. See the form, Tidd, Pr. Forms 168. If the executor defendant has pleaded plene administravit, judgment against him confines his liability to such amount of the assets as shall hereafter come to his hands. See the form, Tidd, Pr. Forms 174. A general judgment for costs against an administrator plaintiff is against the estate only.

A judgment against an executor or heir where the plea is false, to the defendant's own knowledge, may be a general judgment as if the recovery was for his own debt, but in other cases a judgment against an executor is generally special, to be levied of the goods or land of his testator; 7 Taunt. 580.

A judgment on a covenant of a married woman against her separate estate may be entered as a personal judgment against her; Williamson v. Cline, 40 W. Va. 194, 20 S. E. 917; such judgment must be entered in a special form; 14 Ch. D. 837; but the record need show no special fact fixing her liability; Jester v. Hunter, 2 Pa. Dist. R. 690.

In dower, judgment for demandant is interlocutory in the first instance with the award of a writ of habere facias seisinam, and inquiry of damages, on the return of which final judgment is rendered for the value of the land detained, as ascertained by the jury, from the death of the husband to the suing out of the inquisition, and costs of suit. See the form, 3 Chitty, Pl. 583.

In ejectment, judgment for plaintiff is final in the first instance, that he recover the term, together with the damages assessed by the jury, and the costs of suit, with award of the writ of habere facias possessionem, directing the sheriff to put him in possession. See the form, 3 Bla. Com. App. xii.; Tidd, Pr. Forms 188. A judgment in ejectment is conclusive as to title between the parties thereto, unless the jury find for the plaintiff less than the fee; McDowell v. Sutline, 78 Ga. 142, 2 S. E. 937. A consent verdict in ejectment is conclusive on the parties and their privies; id.

In partition, judgment for plaintiff is also interlocutory in the first instance; quod partitio fiat with award of the writ de partitione facienda, on the return of which final judgment is rendered,—“therefore it is considered that the partition aforesaid be held firm and effectual forever,” quod partitio facta firma et stabilis in perpetuam teneatur; Co. Litt. 169. See the form, 2 Sell. Pr. 319, 2d ed. 222.

In replevin. If the replevin is in the detenuit, i. e. where the plaintiff declares that the chattels “were detained until replevied by the sheriff,” judgment for plaintiff is that he recover the damages assessed by the jury for the taking and unjust detention, or for the detention only where the taking was justifiable, and also his costs; Easton v. Worthington, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 130; Hamm. N. P. 488. If the replevin is in the detinet, i. e. where the plaintiff declares that the chattels taken are “yet detained,” the jury in giving a verdict for plaintiff find, in addition to the above, the value of the chattels each separately; for the defendant will perhaps restore some, in which case the plaintiff is to recover the value of the remainder; Hamm. N. P. 489; Fitzh. N. B. 159 b; Easton v. Worthington, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 130.

If the replevin be abated, the judgment is that the writ or plaint abate, and that the defendant, having avowed, have a return of the chattels.

If the plaintiff is nonsuited, the judgment for defendant, at common law, is that the chattels be restored to him, and that without his first assigning the object of the taking, because by abandoning his suit the plaintiff admits that he had no right to dispossess the defendant by prosecuting the replevin. The form of this judgment is simply “to have a return,” pro retorno habendo, without adding the words “to hold irreplevisable;” Hamm. N. P. 490. For the form of judgments of nonsuit under the statutes 21 Hen. VIII. c. 19, and 17 Car. II. c. 7, see Hamm. N. P. 490; 2 Chitty, Pl. 161; 8 Wentw. Pl. 116; 5 S. & R. 132; 1 Saund. 195, n. 3; 2 id. 286, n. 5. In these cases the defendant has the option of taking his judgment pro retorno habendo at common law; Easton v. Worthington, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 130, supra; 3 Term 349.

When the avowant succeeds upon the merits, the common-law judgment is that he “have return irreplevisable;” for it is apparent that he is by law entitled to keep possession of the goods; Wallace v. Elder, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 145; Hamm. N. P. 493; 1 Chitty, Pl. 162. For the form of judgment in such case under the statutes last mentioned, see Hamm. N. P. 494.

AFTER VERDICT, the general form of judgment for plaintiff in actions on contracts sounding in damages, and in actions founded on torts unaccompanied with violence, is this: “Therefore it is considered that the said A B do recover against the said C D his damages aforesaid, and also — for his said costs and charges, by the court now here adjudged of increase to the said A B, with his assent; which said damages, costs, and charges in the whole amount to —. And the said C D in mercy, etc.” In debt for a sum certain, the general form is “— that the said A B do recover against the said C D his said debt, and also — for his damages which he has sustained, as well on occasion of detaining the said debt as for his costs and charges by him about his suit in this behalf expended, by the court now here adjudged to the said A B, and with his assent. And the said C D in mercy, etc.” In actions founded on torts accompanied with violence, the form of judgments for plaintiff is. "— that the said A B do recover against the said C D his damages aforesaid, and also — for his said costs and charges by the court now here adjudged of increase to the said A B, and with his consent; which said damages, costs, and charges in the whole amount to —. And let the said C D be taken, etc."

Final judgment for the defendant is in these words: "Therefore it is considered that the said A B take nothing by his writ but that he be in mercy, etc. (or that he and his pledges to prosecute be in mercy, etc.), and that the said C D do go thereof without day, etc. And it is further considered —." Then follows the award of costs and of execution therefor. See Tidd, Pr. Forms 189.

This is the general form of judgment for defendant, whether it arise upon interlocutory proceedings or upon verdict, and whatever be the form of action. This is sometimes called judgment of nil capiat per breve or per billam; Steph. Pl., Andr. ed. § 97.

The words "and the said — in mercy, etc., or, as expressed in Latin, quod sit in misericordia pro falso clamore suo, were formerly an operative part of the judgment, it being an invariable rule of the common law that the party who lost his cause was punished by amercement for having unjustly asserted or resisted the claim. And on this account pledges of prosecution were required of the plaintiff before the return of the original, who were real and responsible persons and liable for these amercements. But afterwards the amercements ceased to be exacted,—perhaps because the payment of costs took their place,—and, this portion of the judgment becoming mere matter of form, the pledges returned were the fictitious names John Doe and Richard Roe. Bacon, Abr. Fines, etc. (C 1); 1 Ld. Raym. 273.

The words "and let the said — be taken," in Latin, capitur pro fine, which occur above in the form of judgment in actions founded on torts accompanied with violence, were operative at common law, because formerly a defendant adjudged to have committed a civil injury with actual violence was obliged to pay a fine to the king for the breach of the peace implied in the act, and was liable to be arrested and imprisoned till the fine was paid. This was abolished by stat. 5 W. & M. c. 12; but the form was still retained in entering judgment against defendant in such actions. See Gould, Pl. §§ 38, 82; Bacon, Abr. Fines, etc. (C 1); 1 Ld. Raym. 273; Style 346.

These are called, respectively, judgments of misericordia and of capitur.

JUDGMENTS IN OTHER CASES. On a plea in abatement, either party may demur to the pleading of his adversary or they may join issue.

On demurrer, judgment for the plaintiff is that the defendant have another day to plead in chief, or, as it is commonly expressed, that he answer over; quod respondeat ouster; and judgment for defendant is that the writ be quashed; quod cassetur billa or breve. But if issue be joined, judgment for plaintiff is quod recuperet, that he recover his debt or damages, and not quod respondeat; judgment for defendant is the same as in the case of demurrer, that the writ be quashed. But the plaintiff may admit the validity of the plea in abatement, and may himself pray that his bill or writ may be quashed, quod cassetur billa or breve, in order that he may afterwards sue or exhibit a better one; Steph. Pl., Andr. ed. § 97; Lawes, Civ. Pl. See the form, Tidd, Pr. Forms 195. Judgment on demurrer in other cases, when for the plaintiff, is interlocutory in assumpsit and actions sounding in damages, and recites that the pleading to which exception was taken by defendant appears sufficient in law, and that the plaintiff ought, therefore, to recover; but the amount of damages being unknown, a court of inquiry is awarded to ascertain them. See the form, Tidd, Pr. Forms 181. In debt it is final in the first instance. See the form, id. p. 181. Judgment on demurrer when for the defendant is always final in the first instance, and is for costs only. See the form, id. 195.

Judgment by default, whether by nil dicit or non sum informatus, is in these words, in assumpsit or other actions for damages, after stating the default: "wherefore the said A B ought to recover against the said C D his damages on occasion of the premises; but because it is unknown to the court, etc., now hear what damages the said A B hath sustained by means of the premises, the sheriff is commanded, etc." Then follows the award of the writ of inquiry, on the return of which final judgment is signed. See the forms, Tidd, Pr. Forms 165. In debt for a sum certain, as on a bond for the payment of a sum of money, the judgment on default is final in the first instance, no writ of inquiry being necessary. See the form, id. 169.

Plaintiff cannot take a default where there is no declaration on file; Woodruff v. Mathe-ney, 55 Ill. App. 350; and a default cannot be entered after defendant has interposed a plea in bar; Green v. Jones, 102 Ala. 303, 14 South. 630; but the mere filing of an answer will not prevent a judgment by default, there must also be a subsequent appearance by defendant to protect his rights; Lytle v. Custead, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 490, 23 S. W. 451.

It is error to enter judgment by default while a plea to part and a demurrer to the rest of the declaration are on file; Race v. Hall Ass'n, 50 Ill. App. 131; but the rendition of a judgment by default, where the petition states the facts sufficient to maintain the cause of action, is within the discretion of the trial judge; In re Downs, 3 Ohio Dec. 56; and so is the opening of a judgment by default; St. Mary's Hospital v. Ben. Co., 60 Minn. 61, 61 N. W. 824; Jackson v. Brunor, 17 Misc. 339, 39 N. Y. Supp. 1080; where an answer failed to reach the court in time through the fault of the postmaster, it was held that a default should be set aside; Walrad v. Walrad, 55 Ill. App. 668.

Judgment by cognovit actionem is for the amount admitted to be due, with costs, as on a verdict. In Pennsylvania by statute, the plaintiff may take judgment for an amount admitted to be due and proceed to trial for the remainder of his claim.

Judgment of non pros. or non suit is final, and is for defendant's costs only, which is also the case with judgment on a discontinuance or nolle prosequi.

A court has inherent power to enter a judgment on the pleadings; Stratton's Independence v. Dines, 126 Fed. 968.

A judgment by default is just as conclusive an adjudication between the parties of whatever is essential to support the judgment as one rendered after answer and contest; Last Chance Min. Co. v. Min. Co., 157 U. S. 692, 15 Sup. Ct. 733, 39 L. Ed. 859; 1 Freem. Judgt. § 330; Big. Esto. 77. So of a judgment on demurrer; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Slaght, 205 U. S. 122, 27 Sup. Ct. 442, 51 L. Ed. 738.

Some courts refuse to give effect to a judgment by consent as a judgment in invitum, and admit the judgment record only as evidence of the agreement reached by the parties; Jenkins v. Robertson, L. R. 1 H. L. 117, 122. The position is based on the theory that no matter upon which the court has not exercised its judicial mind by determining the respective rights of the litigants and pronouncing judgment accordingly can be considered res judicata. As a matter of definition, this proposition is scarcely open to question. But the parties have caused the court to place their deliberate agreement upon the record as a formal judgment; and except in case of mistake or fraud, it would seem that they should be estopped from later denying it, even though the strict principles of res judicata are not applicable; Kelly v. Town of Milan, 21 Fed. 842, 863. In fact the majority of jurisdictions disregard the argument of definition and hold the judgment binding upon the parties according to its terms; Nashville, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. U. S., 113 U. S. 261, 5 Sup. Ct. 460, 28 L. Ed. 971. The original cause of action is considered merged in the judgment, and to a later suit between the same parties on the same subject-matter a plea of res judicata is a complete defense. Where, however, the action is simply dismissed by the consent of the parties, there is not the same ground for the argument of estoppel; Lindsay v. Allen, 112 Tenn. 637, 82 S. W. 171. It states only that the parties have agreed to a dismissal and nothing more.

A judgment is conclusive as to all the media concludendi and it cannot be impaired either in or out of the state by showing that it was based on a mistake of law; Fauntleroy v. Lum, 210 U. S. 230, 28 Sup. Ct. 641, 52 L. Ed. 1039; but when the matter decided is not embraced within the issue, it avoids the judgment; Munday v. Vail, 34 N. J. L. 418, followed in Reynolds v. Stockton, 140 U. S. 268, 11 Sup. Ct. 773, 35 L. Ed. 464.

MATTERS OF PRACTICE. Of docketing the judgment. By the stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 20, all final judgments are required to be regularly docketed; that is, an abstract of the judgment is to be entered in a book called the judgment-docket; 3 Bla. Com. 398. And in these states the same regulation prevails. See Rockwood v. Davenport, 37 Minn. 533, 35 N. W. 377, 5 Am. St. Rep. 872. Besides this, an index is required to be kept in England of judgments confessed upon warrant of attorney, and of certain other sorts of judgments; 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 396, n. In most of the states this index is required to include all judgments. The effect of docketing the judgment is to notify all interested persons, including purchasers or incumbrancers of land upon which the judgment is a lien, and subsequent judgment creditors, of the existence and amount of the judgment. Freem. Judgt. § 343. Judgments only become liens from the time they are rendered, or notice thereof is filed in the register's office of the county where the property is situated; Fogg v. Blair, 133 U. S. 534, 10 Sup. Ct. 338, 33 L. Ed. 721. In Pennsylvania, the judgment index is for this purpose conclusive evidence of the amount of a judgment in favor of a purchaser of the land bound thereby, but not against him: if the amount indexed is less than the actual amount, the purchaser is not bound to go beyond the index; but if the amount indexed is too large, he may resort to the judgment-docket to correct the mistake; Appeal of Hance, 1 Pa. 408. A failure to index the abstract of a judgment is fatal to the lien; Nye v. Moody, 70 Tex. 434, 8 S. W. 606; Nye v. Gribble, 70 Tex. 458, 8 S. W. 608; Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Hesser, 77 Ia. 381, 42 N. W. 325, 4 L. R. A. 122, 14 Am. St. Rep. 297.

Now, in England, judgments, in order to affect purchasers, mortgagees, and creditors, must be registered in the High Court, and renewed every five years. See 2 & 3 Vict. c. 11, s. 5.

Of the time of entering the judgment. After verdict a brief interval is allowed to elapse before signing judgment, in order to give the defeated party an opportunity to apply for a new trial, or to move in arrest of judgment, if he is so disposed. This interval, in England, is four days; Smith, Actions 150. In this country it is generally short; but, being regulated either by statute or by rules of court, it of course may vary in the different states, and even in different courts of the same state."

Judgments are in their nature equal till they are reversed, in what court soever they are obtained: a judgment in a court of record by grant, is equal to a judgment in a court of record by prescription; and a judgment in a court of pie poudre is equal to a judgment in any of the superior courts. Eldon, L. C., in 3 Swanst. 575.

As to whether a judgment rendered in form against a defendant who died after service or appearance and before trial is void, or merely voidable, the authorities are irreconcilably in conflict; Moehlenpah v. Mayhew, 138 Wis. 564, 119 N. W. 826, citing note in 49 L. R. A. 153.

JUDGMENT BOOK. A book which is required to be kept by a clerk among the records of the court, for the entry of judgments. Code N. Y. § 279.

JUDGMENT CREDITOR. See CREDITOR, JUDGMENT.

JUDGMENT DEBT. See DEBT.

JUDGMENT IN PERSONAM. See JUDGMENT INTER PARTES; IN PERSONAM.

JUDGMENT IN REM. An adjudication pronounced upon the status of some particular subject-matter by a tribunal having competent authority for that purpose. 3 Sm. L. Cas., 9th Am. ed. 2015.

An adjudication against some person or thing, or upon the status of some subject-matter; which, wherever and whenever binding upon any person, is equally binding upon all persons. Bartero v. Bank, 10 Mo. App. 78.

The universal effect of a judgment in rem depends upon the principle that it is a solemn declaration, proceeding from an accredited quarter, concerning the status of the thing adjudicated upon; which very declaration operates accordingly upon the status of the thing adjudicated upon, and ipso facto, renders it such as it is thereby declared to be; 3 Sm. L. Cas., 9th Am. ed. 2015-16, 2032, 2043.

The most frequent cases of such judgment are found in the courts exercising jurisdiction of cases in admiralty. So also a foreign court in a case of divorce which is recognized as establishing the status of a person is a judgment in rem.

In Pennoyer v. Neff, the court said: "It is true that, in a strict sense, a proceeding in rem is one taken directly against property, and has for its object the disposition of property, without reference to the title of individual claimants; but, in a larger and more general sense, the terms are applied to actions between parties, where the direct object is to reach and dispose of property owned by them, or of some interest therein. Such are cases commenced by attachment against the property of debtors, or instituted to partition real estate, foreclose a mortgage, or enforce a lien. So far as they affect property in this state, they are substantially proceedings in rem in the broader sense which we have mentioned." 95 U. S. 734, 24 L. Ed. 565. A judgment against a railway company in favor of an assignee of claims for labor performed for a subcontractor, which forecloses a statutory lien on the property of the company for debt, and orders a sale of the property, cannot be construed as a judgment in personam; Austin & N. W. R. Co. v. Rucker, 59 Tex. 587. See IN REM.

JUDGMENT INTER PARTES or IN PERSONAM. One which operates only upon those who have been duly made parties to the record and their privies, being against a person merely, and not settling the status of any person or thing. See 3 Sm. L. Cas., 9th Am. ed. 2016; JUDGMENT; JUDGMENT IN REM.

JUDGMENT NISI. A judgment entered on the return of the nisi prius record with the postea indorsed, which will become absolute according to the terms of the "postea" unless the court out of which the nisi prius record proceeded shall, within the first four days of the following term, otherwise order.

Under the compulsory arbitration law of Pennsylvania, on filing the award of the arbitrators, judgment nisi is to be entered, which judgment is to be valid as if it had been rendered on a verdict of a jury, unless an appeal is entered within the time required by law.

JUDGMENT NOTE. A promissory note given in the usual form, and containing, in addition, a power of attorney to appear and confess judgment for the sum therein named. On this account it is not negotiable; Sweeney v. Thickstun, 77 Pa. 131; but see Osborn v. Hawley, 19 Ohio 130.

It is negotiable by the Uniform Neg. Instr. Act. For a list of states in which that act is in force, see NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS.

It usually contains a number of stipulations as to the time of confessing the judgment; Sherman v. Baddely, 11 Ill. 623; against appeal and other remedies for setting the judgment aside; see Frasier v. Frasier, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 80; 2 Cowp. 465; Lake v. Cook, 15 Ill. 356; an attorney's commission for collection, waiver of exemption, and other conditions.

It does not authorize the confession of a judgment in favor of the original payee of the note after he had ceased to be the owner, even though he may have the note in his possession, and such judgment may be attacked collaterally without violating the full faith and credit clause of the federal constitution in an action in another state; National Exchange Bank v. Wiley, 195 U. S. 257, 25 Sup. Ct. 70, 49 L. Ed. 184.

JUDGMENT PAPER. In English Practice. An incipitur of the pleadings, written on plain paper, upon which the master will sign judgment. 1 Archb. Pr. 229, 306, 343.

JUDGMENT RECORD. In English Practice. A parchment roll on which are transcribed the whole proceedings in the cause, deposited and filed of record in the treasury of the court, after signing of judgment. 3 Steph. Com., 11th ed. 601. See JUDGMENT ROLL. In American practice, the record is signed, filed, and docketed by the clerk, all of which is necessary to suing out execution; Graham, Pr. 341.

JUDGMENT RECOVERED. A plea by a defendant that the plaintiff has already recovered that which he seeks to obtain by his action. This was formerly a species of sham plea, often put in for the purpose of delaying a plaintiff's action. M. & W.

JUDGMENT ROLL. In English Law. A record made of the issue roll (which see), which, after final judgment has been given in the cause, assumes this name. Steph. Pl., Andr. ed. § 97; 3 Chitty, Stat. 514; Freem. Judg. § 75. The Judicature Act of 1875 requires every judgment to be entered in a book by the proper officer. It has been abolished, as such, in New Jersey; Jennings v. Philadelphia & R. Co., 23 Fed. 571.

There is said to be hopeless confusion in the cases as to what constitutes the judgment roll. All the cases agree that the complaint, the summons and, most of them, the return on the summons, the affidavit for publication in case of constructive service, and papers of that sort; Terry v. Gibson, 23 Colo. App. 273, 128 Pac. 1129, citing many cases, and also 1 Gr. Evid. 511, and Freem. Judg. § 78.

JUDICARE. To judge; to decide or determine judicially; to give judgment or sentence.

JUDICATIO. In Civil Law. Judging; the pronouncing of sentence, after hearing a cause. Halifax, Civil Law b. 3, c. 8, no. 7.

JUDICATORES TERRARUM. Certain tenants in Chester, who were bound by their tenures to perform judicial functions. In case of an erroneous judgment being given by them, the party aggrieved might obtain a writ of error out of Chancery, directing them to reform it. They then had a month to consider of the matter. If they declined to reform their judgment, the matter came on writ of error before the king's bench; and if the court of king's bench held the judgment to be erroneous they forfeited £100 to the king by the custom. Jenk. Cent. (il. 34), p. 71.

JUDICATURE. The state of those employed in the administration of justice; and in this sense it is nearly synonymous with judiciary. This term is also used to signify a tribunal; and sometimes it is employed to show the extent of jurisdiction: as, the judicature is upon writs of error, etc. Comyn, Dig. Parliament (L 1). And see Comyn, Dig. Courts (A).

JUDICATURE ACTS. The English acts under which the present system of courts was organized and is continued.

The statutes of 36 & 37 Vict. c. 66, and 38 & 39 Vict. c. 77, which went into force Nov. 1, 1875, with amendments in 1877, 40 & 41 Vict. c. 9, 1879, 42 & 43 Vict. c. 78, and 1881, 44 & 45 Vict. c. 68, made most important changes in the organization of, and methods of procedure in, the superior courts of England. See COURTS OF ENGLAND.

These acts provide for a concurrent administration of legal and equitable remedies, according to seven rules, which substantially provide that any one of the courts, included in the acts shall give the same equitable relief to any plaintiff or defendant claiming it as would formerly have been granted by chancery; equitable relief will be granted against third persons, not parties, who shall be brought in by notice; all equitable estates, titles, rights, duties, and liabilities will be taken notice of as in chancery; no proceeding shall be restrained by injunction, but every matter of equity on which an injunction might formerly have been obtained may be relied on by way of defence, and the courts may in any cause direct a stay of proceedings. Subject to these and certain other provisions of the act, effect shall be given to all legal claims and demands, and all estates, titles, rights, duties, obligations, and liabilities, existing by the common law, custom, or statute, as before the acts; the new courts shall grant, either absolutely or on terms, all such legal or equitable remedies as the parties may appear entitled to; so that all matters may be completely and finally determined, and multiplicity of legal proceedings avoided.

Eleven new rules of law are established, which will be found in the act of 1873, c. 66, § 25, amended by the act of 1875, c. 77, § 10, of the following nature; 1. In the administration of insolvent estates, the same rules shall prevail as may be in force under the law of bankruptcy; 2. No claim of a cestui que trust against his trustee, for property held on an express trust, shall be barred by any statute of limitations; 3. A tenant for life shall have no right to commit equitable waste, unless such right is expressly conferred by the instrument creating the estate; 4. There shall be no merger by operation of law only, of any estate, the beneficial interest in which would not be deemed merged in equity; 5. A mortgagor entitled for the time being to the possession of the profits of land, as to which the mortgagee shall have given no notice of his intention to take possession, may sue for such possession, or for the recovery of such profits, or to prevent or recover damages in respect of any trespass, or other wrong relative thereto, in his own name only, unless the cause of action arises upon a lease or other contract made jointly with any other person; 6. Any absolute assignment of a chose in action, of which express notice in writing shall have been given to the debtor, shall pass the legal right thereto from the date of notice, and all remedies for the same, and the power to give a good discharge: provided, that if the debtor, etc., shall have had notice of any conflicting claims to such debt, he shall be entitled to call upon such claimants to interplead; 7. Stipulations as to time or otherwise, which would not have been deemed of the essence of the contract in equity, shall receive the same construction as formerly in equity; 8. A mandamus or an injunction may be granted, or a receiver appointed by an interlocutory order, which may be made either unconditionally or on terms; and an injunction may be granted to prevent threatened waste or trespass, whether the estates be legal or equitable, or whether the person against whom the injunction is sought is or is not in possession under any claim of title, or does or does not claim a right to do the act sought to be restrained under color of title; 9. In proceedings arising from collisions at sea, where both ships are in fault, the rules hitherto in force in the court of admiralty shall prevail; 10. In questions relating to the custody of infants, the rules of equity shall prevail; 11. Generally, in all matters in which there is any conflict between the rules of common law and the rules of equity, the latter shall prevail.

By the act of 1891, c. 53, to settle doubts said to exist on the subject, it was enacted that the high court should be a prize court within the meaning of the Naval Prize Act of 1864, and the jurisdiction was assigned to the probate, divorce, and admiralty division of the court. An appeal was given only to the queen in council. By the same act the house of lords was authorized to call in the aid of assessors in admiralty cases.

The act of 1894, c. 16, was directed mainly to the restricting the right of appeal.

The division of the legal year into terms is abolished, so far as relates to the administration of justice, but where they are used as a measure for determining the time at or within which any act is required to be done, they may continue to be referred to. Numerous other regulations are established for the arrangement of business and course of procedure under the new system for which reference must be had to the acts. We will merely note that nothing is to affect the law relating to jury trials, and the existing forms of procedure are to be used as far as consistent with these acts. It was provided that nothing should affect the practice or procedure in—1. Criminal proceedings; 2. Proceedings on the crown side of the queen's bench division; 3. Proceedings on the revenue side of the exchequer division; 4. Proceedings for divorce and matrimonial causes. The Chancery Procedure Acts and the Common Law Procedure Acts remain in full force, except so far as impliedly or expressly repealed by the Judicature Acts. Many sections of the former Acts are repealed by subsequent legislation, all which may be found in Chitty's English Statutes, where the acts are published together as amended.

See COURTS OF ENGLAND.

JUDICATURE ACTS (IRELAND).

The act of 40 & 41 Vict. c. 57, which went into operation Jan. 1, 1878, established a supreme court of judicature in Ireland, under which acts and subsequent ones a system essentially similar in its constitution to that in England is in force. See COURTS OF IRELAND.

JUDICES. Judges. See JUDEX.

JUDICIAL ACT. See ACT.

JUDICIAL ADMISSIONS. Admissions of the party which appear of record in the proceedings of the court. See ADMISSIONS.

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL. In English Law. A tribunal composed of members of the privy council, established in 1833. It consists of the Lord Chancellor, the six Lords of Appeal, if Privy Counsellors, and such other members of the Privy Council as have held any high judicial office in the United Kingdom, India, or the colonies. It is the court of final appeal from the ecclesiastical courts, from the courts of India, the colonies, the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man. It is the ultimate court of appeal for 350 millions of persons, administering all the different systems of law of the countries under its appellate jurisdiction, and exercising a notable influence on the tenor and course of law in some of those jurisdictions, especially Indian law.

As to Australia, no appeal thereto lies from the supreme court in cases affecting the limits of the constitutional power of the Australian states, unless by special allowance of the supreme court. The South African constitution forbids an appeal except on special leave of the king in council.

See an article in 44 Am. L. Rev. 160; COURTS OF ENGLAND.

JUDICIAL CONVENTIONS. Agreements entered into in consequence of an order of court; as, for example, entering into a bond on taking out a writ of sequestration. Peniman v. Barrymore, 6 Mart. La. (N. S.) 494.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS. The opinions or determinations of the judges in causes before them. Hale, Hist. Cr. Law 68; 5 M. & S. 185. See DICTUM; JUDGE-MADE LAW; PRECEDENTS.

JUDICIAL DISCRETION. See DISCRETION.

JUDICIAL DOCUMENTS. The papers and proceedings which constitute or become part of the record of a litigation. They include the writs, pleadings, documentary proofs, verdicts, inquisitions, judgment, and decrees incident to a cause or judicial proceeding.

Inquisitions, examinations, depositions, affidavits, and other written papers, when they have become proofs of its proceedings and are found remaining on the files of a judicial court, are judicial documents. A deposition after being received and filed as such is a judicial document and can only be proved as such, and is not admissible as a written statement or confession of deponent. It cannot be received in part and excluded in part; Hammatt v. Emerson, 27 Me. 308, 46 Am. Dec. 598.

Judicial documents are thus classified by Starkie: 1. Judgments, decrees, and verdicts. 2. Depositions, examinations, and inquisitions, taken in the course of a legal process. 3. Writs, warrants, pleadings, bills, and answers, etc., which are incident to judicial proceedings.

As to the admissibility and effect of such documents, see, generally, Stark. Ev., Sharsw. ed. [316].

JUDICIAL DUTY. Within the meaning of a constitution, such a duty as legitimately pertains to an officer in a department designated by the constitution as judicial. State v. Hathaway, 115 Mo. 36, 21 S. W. 1081.

JUDICIAL FUNCTION. The exercise of the judicial faculty or office.

The capacity to act in the specific way which appertains to the judicial power, as one of the powers of government.

The term is used to describe generally those modes of action which appertain to the judiciary as a department of organized government, and through and by means of which it accomplishes its purposes and exercises its peculiar powers.

JUDICIAL LEGISLATION. See JUDGE-MADE LAW.

JUDICIAL LIABILITY. See JUDGE.

JUDICIAL MORTGAGE. In Louisiana. The lien resulting from judgments, whether these be rendered on contested cases, or by default, whether they be final or provisional, in favor of the person obtaining them.

JUDICIAL NOTICE. A term used to express the doctrine of the acceptance by a court for the purposes of the case, of the truth of certain notorious facts without requiring proof.

It is the process whereby proof by parol evidence is dispensed with, where the court is justified by general considerations in assuming the truth of a proposition without requiring evidence from the party setting it up. See Wigm. Ev. § 2565. This power is to be exercised with caution. Care must be taken that the requisite notoriety exists. Every reasonable doubt should be resolved promptly in the negative; Brown v. Piper, 91 U. S. 37, 41, 23 L. Ed. 200.

The classes of facts of which judicial notice will be taken are judicial, legislative, political, historical, geographical, commercial, scientific, and artistic, in addition to a wide range of matters arising in the ordinary course of nature or the general current of human affairs which rest entirely upon acknowledged notoriety for their claims to judicial recognition; Wade, Notice 1403.

If unacquainted with such fact, the court may refer to any person or any document or book of reference for its satisfaction in relation thereto; or may refuse to take judicial notice thereof unless and until the party calling upon it to take such notice produces any such document or book of reference; Steph. Ev. art. 59. It may inform itself from such sources as it deems best; Brown v. Piper, 91 U. S. 37, 23 L. Ed. 200.

Judicial notice is not conclusive. That a matter is judicially noticed means merely that it is taken as true without the offering of evidence by the party upon whom the burden of proof ordinarily rests. But the opponent is not prevented from disputing the matter by evidence, if he believes it disputable; Wigm. Ev. § 2567. Judicial notice must be requested, as it is a dispensation from producing evidence; Wigm. Ev. § 2568. A court will not take judicial notice of a fact merely because it knows it; Lenahan v. People, 5 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 268.

Judicial notice will be taken of the following:

Laws, Domestic Statutes and Ordinances. Public acts within the state or territory in which the court is held; Parent v. Walms- ly's Adm'r, 20 Ind. 82; Jones v. U. S., 137 U. S. 214, 11 Sup. Ct. 80, 34 L. Ed. 691; Wright v. Hawkins, 28 Tex. 452; People v. Mahaney, 13 Mich. 481; Inhabitants of Belmont v. Inhabitants of Morrill, 69 Me. 314; McDonald v. State, 80 Wis. 407, 50 N. W. 185; and of a law regulating within certain districts the right of fishing; Burnham v. Webster, 5 Mass. 266; the right of navigation; Hammond's Lessee v. Inloes, 4 Md. 138; the lumber trade; Pierce v. Kimball, 9 Greenl. (Me.) 54, 23 Am. Dec. 537; or the sale of liquor; Levy v. State, 6 Ind. 281; State v. Cooper, 101 N. C. 688, 8 S. E. 134; of the corporate existence and names of the counties of a state; Trammell v. Chambers County, 93 Ala. 388, 9 South. 815; of a private act when expressly recognized and amended by a public act; Lavalle v. People, 6 Ill. App. 157; of a long prevailing construction of a statute by executive officers; Bloxham v. R. Co., 36 Fla. 519, 18 South. 444, 29 L. R. A. 507, 51 Am. Y. 250; Stittgen v. Rundle, 99 Wis. 78, 74 N. W. 536; that a city is duly incorporated; Pennsylvania Co. v. Horton, 132 Ind. 189, 31 N. E. 45.

A court takes judicial notice of its own action in the same cause; State v. Ulrich, 110 Mo. 350, 19 S. W. 656; or a state court of the decision of the supreme court of the United States settling the law of the same case; Alexander v. Gish (Ky.) 17 S. W. 287; of acts of congress; Dickenson v. Breeden, 30 Ill. 279; Papin v. Ryan, 32 Mo. 21; Wright v. Hawkins, 28 Tex. 452; Mims v. Swartz, 37 Tex. 13; of the rules and regulations of the principal departments of the government under express authority of an act of congress in which the public are interested; Caha v. U. S., 152 U. S. 211, 14 Sup. Ct. 513, 38 L. Ed. 415; of acts of the executive in relation to declaring a guano island to be within the jurisdiction of the United States; Jones v. U. S., 137 U. S. 224, 11 Sup. Ct. 80, 34 L. Ed. 691; but not of regulations of the land office; U. S. v. Bedgood, 49 Fed. 54. The lower courts of the United States and the supreme court, on appeal from their decisions, take judicial notice of the constitution and public laws of each of the states; Lamar v. Micou, 112 U. S. 452, 5 Sup. Ct. 221, 28 L. Ed. 751; Mills v. Green, 159 U. S. 657, 16 Sup. Ct. 132, 40 L. Ed. 293; of the laws of Pennsylvania existing prior to the constitution; Loree v. Abner, 57 Fed. 159, 6 C. C. A. 302, 6 U. S. App. 649.

Without special enactment, the law merchant, governing the transfer of commercial paper by indorsement, will be noticed by the courts, where such law has not been abrogated by statute; Reed v. Wilson, 41 N. J. L. 29; 12 Cl. & F. 787; as will the general usage and customs of merchants; Brown v. Piper, 91 U. S. 37, 23 L. Ed. 200 (if they are intelligible without extrinsic proof; 23 Bear. 370); military orders of a general character within the district in which the courts are held, when such orders affect judicial proceedings, and are issued by officers of recognized authority, will be noticed; New Orleans Canal & Banking Co. v. Templeton, 20 La. Ann. 141, 96 Am. Dec. 385.

Judicial notice will be taken of the laws of the United States by the state courts, as well as by the federal courts; Morris v. Davidson, 49 Ga. 361; Mims v. Swartz, 37 Tex. 13; and of the state laws by the federal courts, in cases arising under the laws of the various states; Liverpool & G. W. S. v. Ins. Co., 129 U. S. 397, 445, 9 Sup. Ct. 469, 32 L. Ed. 788; Loree v. Abner, 57 Fed. 159, 6 C. C. A. 302; Barry v. Snowden, 106 Fed. 571; contra (as to local laws of the Indian Territory); Wilson v. Owens, 86 Fed. 571, 30 C. C. A. 257 (though, on a writ of error to a state supreme court, a federal court declines to notice the law of another state, as it cannot notice what the state court could not notice; Hanley v. Donoghue, 116 U. S. 1, 6 Sup. Ct. 242, 29 L. Ed. 535); of the laws of another state by a state court, where an appeal may be made to a federal court on questions of federal law, such as the effect of a judgment in another state court; Shotwell v. Harrison, 22 Mich. 410; Trowbridge v. Spinning, 23 Wash. 48, 62 Pac. 125, 54 L. R. A. 204, 83 Am. St. Rep. 806; Jarvis v. Robinson, 21 Wis. 523, 94 Am. Dec. 560; of the former laws of another sovereignty when they have to any extent become the law of the forum, by subdivision or amalgamation; as a printed statute book of Virginia judicially noticed as of a jurisdiction originally including Indiana; Henthorn v. Doe, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 157; or the laws of Mexico, prior to the cession in 1848; U. S. v. Chaves, 159 U. S. 452, 16 Sup. Ct. 57, 40 L. Ed. 215; or the laws of the colony of Pennsylvania; Loree v. Abner, 57 Fed. 159, 6 C. C. A. 302; or the laws of England before the American Revolution; Liverpool & G. W. S. Co. v. Ins. Co., 129 U. S. 397, 9 Sup. Ct. 469, 32 L. Ed. 788.

In states where the common law has been adopted, it will be presumed that the same law prevails in a foreign state, unless otherwise proved; Anderson v. Anderson, 23 Tex. 639; Robards v. Marley, 80 Ind. 185; Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Whitney, 39 Ala. 468; but courts will in general refuse to notice a common-law rule different from their own; Houghtaling v. Ball, 19 Mo. 84, 59 Am. Dec. 331.

Judicial notice will be taken of the laws of the sea when common to all maritime nations, so far as, in effect, international and common to all; Sears v. The Scotia, 14 Wall. (U. S.) 170, 20 L. Ed. 822; a Canadian statute regulating the navigation of Canadian waters; The New York, 175 U. S. 187, 20 Sup. Ct. 67, 44 L. Ed. 126; contra, The Pawashick, 2 Lowell 142, Fed. Cas. No. 10,851 (semble); that the civil law is the foundation of French jurisprudence; Barrielle v. Bettman, 199 Fed. 838.

But judicial notice will not be taken of the laws of other nations, as of Holland; 1 P. Wm. 429; of Turkey (they must be pleaded); Dainese v. Hale, 91 U. S. 13, 23 L. Ed. 190 (but the Spanish law will be noticed in so far as it affects our insular possessions; Ponce v. Roman Catholic Church, 210 U. S. 296, 28 Sup. Ct. 737, 52 L. Ed. 1068); or by the courts of one state of the laws of another; 2 Freem. Judg. § 571.

Political Facts, International Affairs, Seals of State, etc. Judicial notice will be taken of the existence and titles of all the sovereign powers in the civilized world which are recognized by the government of the United States, of their respective flags and seals of state; The Santissima Trinidad, 7 Wheat. (U. S.) 335, 5 L. Ed. 454; L. R. 2 Ch. App. 585; the status of sovereigns; [1894] 1 Q. B. 149; of the law of nations; Sears v. The Scotia, 14 Wall. (U. S.) 170, 188, 20 L. Ed. 822; of foreign admiralty and maritime courts; Croudson v. Leonard, 4 Cra. (U. S.) 434, 2 L. Ed. 670; and their notaries public; Nicholls v. Webb, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 326, 333, 5 L. Ed. 628; of a treaty with a foreign government; Richter v. Reynolds, 59 Fed. 577, 8 C. C. A. 220, 17 U. S. App. 427; or with Indian tribes; Montgomery v. Deeley, 3 Wis. 709; of the date of the consummation of such treaties; Carson v. Smith, 5 Minn. 78 (Gil. 58), 77 Am. Dec. 539; of the laws and regulations of Mexico prior to the cession under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo; U. S. v. Chaves, 159 U. S. 452, 16 Sup. Ct. 57, 40 L. Ed. 215.

A foreign state will or will not be recognized by the court according as it is or is not recognized by the executive department; In re Balz, 135 U. S. 403, 10 Sup. Ct. 854, 34 L. Ed. 222. Judicial notice will be taken of the existence of war between Great Britain and a foreign state; 3 M. & S. 67. That the existence of war is a matter of judicial determination, see [1902] A. C. 109; Dicey, Const. 509; 18 L. Q. R. 156.

Domestic Political Organization, Boundaries, Capitals, etc. Judicial notice will be taken of the boundaries of the several states and judicial districts; Brown v. Piper, 91 U. S. 37, 23 L. Ed. 200; of the territorial extent and sovereignty exercised de facto by their own government; Jones v. U. S., 137 U. S. 214, 11 Sup. Ct. 80, 34 L. Ed. 691; that the districts into which the United States are divided for revenue purposes have defined geographical boundaries; U. S. v. Jackson, 104 U. S. 41, 26 L. Ed. 651; by a state court of the local political divisions of its own state into counties, cities and the like; Winnipiseogee Lake Co. v. Young, 40 N. H. 420; Goodwin v. Appleton, 22 Me. 453; of their relative positions, but not of their boundaries, further than as described in public statutes; Indianapolis & C. R. R. Co. v. Stephens, 28 Ind. 429; Gilbert v. Power & Mfg. Co., 19 Ia. 319.

Domestic Officials, Their Identity and Authority, and Genuineness of Official Documents. Judicial notice will be taken of the accession of the chief executive of the nation, and of their own state or territory, his powers and privileges; Lindsey v. Attorney General, 33 Miss. 508; State v. Williams, 5 Wis. 308, 68 Am. Dec. 65; State v. Boyd, 34 Neb. 435, 51 N. W. 969; and the genuineness of his signature; Jones v. Gale's Curatrix, 4 Mart. O. S. (La.) 635; the heads of departments and principal officers of state; Brown v. Piper, 91 U. S. 37, 23 L. Ed. 200; and the public seal; Den v. Vreelandt, 7 N. J. L. 352, 11 Am. Dec. 551; Delafield v. Hand, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 310; the election and resignation of a senator of the United States, or the appointment of a cabinet or foreign minister; Brown v. Piper, 91 U. S. 37, 23 L. Ed. 200; marshals and sheriffs; Ingram v. State, 27 Ala. 17; Martin v. C. Aultman & Co., 80 Wis. 150, 49 N. W. 749; and the genuineness of their signatures; Wood v. Fitz, 10 Mart. O. S. (La.) 196; of the law regulating an officer's fee; Benson v. Christian, 129 Ind. 535, 29 N. E. 26 (but not their deputies; State Bank v. Curran, 10 Ark. 142); number of members of the legislature; State v. Mason, 153 Mo. 486, 55 S. W. 636; of the incumbency of the acting commissioner of patents; York & M. R. Co. v. Winaus, 17 How. (U. S.) 31, 15 L. Ed. 27.

Official Acts, Elections, Census, Legislative Proceedings, etc. The supreme court, on appeal from the circuit court, takes judicial notice of the days of general public elections of members of the legislature, and of members of the constitutional convention of a state, as well as of the time of the commencement of its sitting, and the date when its acts take effect; Mills v. Green, 159 U. S. 651, 16 Sup. Ct. 132, 40 L. Ed. 293. Courts take judicial notice that primary elections are an essential part of our political system; State v. Hirsch, 125 Ind. 207, 24 N. E. 1062, 9 L. R. A. 170; of public proclamation of war and peace and special days of fast and thanksgiving; Sasscer v. Bank, 4 Md. 409; Wells v. R. Co., 110 Mo. 286, 19 S. W. 530, 15 L. R. A. 847; see Cœur d'Alene Consol. & Min. Co. v. Miners' Union of Wardner, 51 Fed. 260, 19 L. R. A. 382; of the public proclamations of pardon and amnesty; Jenkins v. Collard, 145 U. S. 546, 12 Sup. Ct. 868, 36 L. Ed. 812; of the sittings of congress and also of their own state and territorial legislatures and their established and usual course of proceeding, and the privileges of the members, but not the transactions on the journals; Armstrong v. U. S., 13 Wall. (U. S.) 154, 20 L. Ed. 614; Gnob v. Cushman, 45 Ill. 119; Auditor v. Haycraft, 14 Bush (Ky.) 284; contra (as to the journals); Moody v. State, 48 Ala. 115, 17 Am. Rep. 28; People v. Mahaney, 13 Mich. 481; Worcester Nat. Bank v. Cheney, 94 Ill. 430; State v. Cunningham, 81 Wis. 440, 51 N. W. 724, 15 L. R. A. 561; and of the length of time ordinarily required to complete an enumeration of the inhabitants of a state; People v. Rice, 135 N. Y. 473, 31 N. E. 921, 16 L. R. A. 836; and of the census; Sprague Cigar Co. & Wing Cigar Co. v. Cigar Co., 155 O. G. 1041 (U. S. Patent Office). The English courts have refused to take notice of journals of the house of commons; Hob. 109; but they take notice of the privileges of the house; 9 Ad. & E. 107; 3 P. & D. 330; and of its standing orders; L. R. 2 Eq. 364.

Judicial Proceedings, Officers and Rules of Courts. Of courts of general jurisdiction, their judges; Gilliland v. Adm'r of Sellers, 2 Ohio St. 223; Cincinnati, I., St. L. & C. Ry. Co. v. Grames, 8 Ind. App. 112, 34 N. E. 613, 37 N. E. 421; their seals, regular terms, rules, and maxims in the administration of justice and course of proceeding; Newell v. Newton, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 470; Lindsay v. Williams, 17 Ala. 229; the resignation of a circuit judge; Ex parte Peterson, 33 Ala. 74 (but not of attorneys of a district court not members of the supreme court bar; Clark v. Morrison, 5 Ariz. 349, 52 Pac. 985; and not as to whether a party is a citizen of the United States; State v. Ins. Co., 70 Conn. 590, 40 Atl. 465, 66 Am. St. Rep. 138); that a person appearing as an attorney is regularly licensed, noticed; Ferris v. Bank, 158 Ill. 237, 41 N. E. 1118; that it is not infrequent in divorce proceedings for parties to agree on details of alimony; Whitney v. Elevator & Warehouse Co., 183 Fed. 678, 106 C. C. A. 28.

Records of Proceedings. A court is not bound to take notice of any legal proceedings other than those then before it, but courts often take notice of some part of a judicial proceeding without requiring formal evidence, for reasons of convenience, where controversy is unlikely; see Wigm. Ev. § 2579; it will take judicial notice of its own records in a former case between the same parties.

Notorious Miscellaneous Facts, Geography, Commerce, Industry, History, Natural Science, etc. Courts will take judicial notice of the general geographical features of their own country, or state, and of their judicial district, as to the existence and location of its principal mountains, rivers, and cities; Parker v. State, 133 Ind. 178, 32 N. E. 836, 33 N. E. 119, 18 L. R. A. 567; People v. Wood, 131 N. Y. 617, 30 N. E. 243; Linck v. City of Litchfield, 141 Ill. 409, 31 N. E. 123; Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co. v. Robison, 58 Fed. 723, 7 C. C. A. 444, 22 L. R. A. 325; Com. v. King, 150 Mass. 221, 22 N. E. 905, 5 L. R. A. 536; that Suffolk county is a county of Massachusetts; Com. v. Desmond, 103 Mass. 445; that phosphate is mined in some parts of Florida and is an article of transportation; *State v. Peckham, 2 Gray (Mass.) 514; Hoagland v. Canfield, 160 Fed. 146 (but not home made blackberry wine; Loid v. State, 104 Ga. 726, 30 S. E. 949; nor rice beer; Bell v. State, 91 Ga. 227, 18 S. E. 288); that some men can drink more than others without becoming intoxicated; Com. v. Peckham, 2 Gray (Mass.) 514.

It has been said that the courts should exercise this power with caution. Care must be taken that the requisite notoriety exists. Every reasonable doubt upon the subject should be solved promptly in the negative; per Swayne, J., in Brown v. Piper, 91 U. S. 43, 23 L. Ed. 200. In that case the court took judicial notice, in a patent case, of the principle of operation of an ice-cream freezer, and the subject of judicial notice was fully discussed.

JUDICIAL OFFICE. A term used in 34 & 35 Vict. c. 91, to define qualifications of additional members of the judicial committee of the Privy Council.

JUDICIAL POWER. The authority vested in the judges.

The authority exercised by that department of government which is charged with the declaration of what the law is and its construction so far as it is written law.

The power to construe and expound the law as distinguished from the legislative and executive functions.

The use of the term judicial power in sec. 2, Art. III. of the Constitution of the United States furnished an occasion to Mr. Justice Miller for a comment upon the difficulty of defining the term; he says, "It will not do to answer that it is the power exercised by the courts, because one of the very things to be determined is what power they may exercise. It is, indeed, very difficult to find any exact definition made to hand. It is not to be found in any of the old treatises, or any of the old English authorities or judicial decisions, for a very obvious reason. While in a general way it may be true that they had this division between legislative and judicial power, yet their legislature was, nevertheless, in the habit of exercising a very large part of the latter. The house of lords was often the court of appeals; and parliament was in the habit of passing bills of attainder as well as enacting convictions for treason and other crimes.

"Judicial power is, perhaps, better defined in some of the reports of our own courts than in any other place, and especially so in the Supreme Court of the United States, because it has more often been the subject of comment there, and its consideration more frequently necessary to the determination of questions arising in that court than anywhere else. It is the power of a court to decide and pronounce a judgment and carry it into effect between persons and parties who bring a case before it for decision." Miller, Const. U. S. 314.

"But it has now long been settled in England that the interpretation of statute law belongs to the judiciary alone, and in this country they have claimed and obtained an equal control over the construction of constitutional provisions." Sedg. Const. L. 18.

"The power conferred upon courts in the strict sense of that term; courts that compose one of the great departments of the government; and not power in its judicial nature, or quasi judicial, invested from time to time in individuals, separately or collectively, for a particular purpose and limited time." Charge to Grand Jury, 1 Blatch. 635, Fed. Cas. No. 18,261; Gilbert v. Priest, 65 Barb. (N. Y.) 444, 448.

There can be no delegation of judicial power; Zonker v. Cowan, 84 Ind. 395; or of a judicial duty; McCoy v. Able, 131 Ind. 417, 30 N. E. 528, 31 N. E. 453; Southern Oil Co. v. Wilson, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 534, 56 S. W. 429.

"Judicial power is never exercised for the purpose of giving effect to the will of the judge; always for the purpose of giving effect to the will of the legislature; or, in other words, to the will of the law." Osborn v. Bank, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 738, 6 L. Ed. 204.

Nevertheless, leaving out of question the greater necessity of real definition and separation of the legislative and judicial power in American constitutional law there is a distinction between judicial power and political power which was fully recognized in English law, continues to be so in American law, and is entirely independent of the case growing out of the constitutional delimitation and separation of the three powers of government.

"The courts have made a distinction between political and judicial questions and uniformly decline to assume jurisdiction in cases which involve only the former. A political question is one over which the courts decline to take cognizance, in view of the line of demarkation between the judicial branch of the government on the one hand and the executive and legislative branches on the other. Such questions most generally arise when there is an attempt made to prevent the incumbents of either the legislative or executive departments of the government from the performance of some act which such incumbent claims the right to perform by virtue of his office, or to compel him to perform some act which he declines or refuses to perform;" Parker v. State, 133 Ind. 178, 32 N. E. 836, 33 N. E. 119, 18 L. R. A. 567."

Courts have no authority to review the acts of co-ordinate departments of the state government within their respective spheres, but they have jurisdiction to determine whether any department has acted within its constitutional sphere; McCully v. State, 102 Tenn. 509, 53 S. W. 134, 46 L. R. A. 567; and they may control the actions of officers and official boards, if they have been without any foundation in the facts before them and are capricious and arbitrary; 4 Burr. 2186; State v. Matthews, 77 S. C. 357, 57 S. E. 1099; Ex parte Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, 25 L. Ed. 676; City of Atlanta v. Wright, 119 Ga. 207, 43 S. E. 994; St. Louis v. Mfg. Co., 139 Mo. 560, 41 S. W. 214, 61 Am. St. Rep. 474; but the power will be exercised with much circumspection and only in clear cases, and the courts must take care not to substitute their own discretion for that of the officers or board whose refusal to act is under consideration, and to interfere by mandamus only when the facts so clearly show the duty of the board or officer to act that there is really no room for the exercise of a reasonable discretion against the doing of the act, the performance of which the court is asked to require; State v. Matthews, 81 S. C. 414, 62 S. E. 695, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 735, 128 Am. St. Rep. 919, 16 Ann. Cas. 182. See 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 735, note.

The rule is recognized definitely by the United States supreme court that the discretion of an executive officer will not be interfered with either by mandamus or injunction; U. S. v. Schurz, 102 U. S. 378, 26 L. Ed. 167; Brown v. Hitchcock, 173 U. S. 473, 19 Sup. Ct. 485, 43 L. Ed. 772; National Life Ins. Co. v. Ins. Co., 209 U. S. 317, 28 Sup. Ct. 541, 52 L. Ed. 808, citing Bates & G. Co. v. Payne, 194 U. S. 106, 24 Sup. Ct. 595, 48 L. Ed. 894, and Moyer v. Peabody, 212 U. S. 78, 29 Sup. Ct. 235, 53 L. Ed. 410, where it was held that the existence of insurrection empowers the governor to suppress it by the national guard and to seize and imprison those resisting, and that he is the final judge of the necessity of such action; in such case public danger warrants the substitution of executive for judicial process and the ordinary rights of individuals must yield to what the executive deems the necessity of a critical moment. But courts must prevent deprivation of property by unlawful action of the executive department, though reluctant to interfere with it; Ballinger v. U. S., 216 U. S. 240, 30 Sup. Ct. 338, 54 L. Ed. 464.

An executive officer may be compelled by mandamus to perform a ministerial duty but when he has discretion it cannot be compelled; Hawkins v. Governor, 1 Ark. 570, 33 Am. Dec. 346, where a mandamus to compel the governor to issue a commission was refused. As to the power to issue mandamus to executive officers, see EXECUTIVE POWER.

"When a decision of questions of fact is committed by Congress to the judgment and discretion of the head of a department, his decision thereon is conclusive;" and "even upon mixed questions of law and fact, or of law alone, his action will carry with it a strong presumption of its correctness, and the courts will not ordinarily review it, though they may have the power and will occasionally exercise the right of so doing;" Bates & G. Co. v. Payne, 194 U. S. 106, 24 Sup. Ct. 595, 48 L. Ed. 894. And the courts frequently sustain statutes which make the liberty of a citizen wholly dependent on the decision of facts by an executive officer without appeal; U. S. v. Ju Toy, 198 U. S. 253, 25 Sup. Ct. 644, 49 L. Ed. 1040. The supreme court of Massachusetts has also gone very far in sustaining the action of executive officers or boards exercising quasi judicial authority. The cases will be found collected with a number of federal cases in an article by Edmund M. Parker, on "Executive Judgments and Executive Legislation" in 20 Harv. L. Rev. 116.

The distinction between judicial and political questions was fully considered in Penn v. Lord Baltimore, 1 Ves. Sen. 444, and it was held by Lord Hardwicke, L. C., that while the dispute as to original boundaries between provinces was a political question to be determined by the king and council, yet where the case arose under an agreement between the parties it was a judicial question.

In The Nabob of Carnatic v. East India Co. (1 Ves. Jr. 371) a plea that the defendant was invested with sovereign powers, and therefore not answerable with respect to the exercise of them in a court of justice, was overruled; but after the case came to hearing the bill was dismissed upon the ground that the case involved a treaty between persons acting as independent states, and the circumstance that the defendants were subjects merely with relation to England had nothing to do with the matter which was not a subject of private municipal jurisdiction; 2 id. 56.

The Cherokee nation was held to be a state but not a foreign state in the sense of the constitution, and therefore could not maintain an action against the state of Georgia in the courts of the United States; Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 1, 8 L. Ed. 25. In this case Chief Justice Marshall said that the propriety of interposition by the court to control the state legislature "savors too much of the exercise of political power to be within the province of the judicial department." Mr. Justice Thompson in a dissenting opinion which upheld the jurisdiction was careful to say, "I do not claim for this court the exercise of jurisdiction upon any matter properly falling under the denomination of political power." And again: "I do not claim as belonging to the judiciary the exercise of political power. That belongs to another branch of the government. The protection and enforcement of many rights secured by treaties most certainly do not belong to the judiciary. It is only where the rights of persons or property are involved, and when such rights can be presented under some judicial form of proceedings, that courts of justice can interpose relief." Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 51, 75, 8 L. Ed. 25. See also New York v. Connecticut, 4 Dall. (U. S.) 4, 1 L. Ed. 715.

It was very earnestly discussed in one of the early cases concerning the boundary between two states, whether the jurisdiction in such cases, now so well established, was included in the judicial power as understood by the constitution of the United States, and it was held that although the constitution did not in terms extend the judicial power to all controversies between two or more states, yet it in terms excluded none, whatever might be their nature or object; Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 657, 9 L. Ed. 1233. In this case the court recognized the distinction between political and civil controversies and held that the case in question was the latter because it depended first upon a fact, and second upon the question whether an agreement between the states was void or valid, both of these presenting not a political but a judicial controversy. And it was said that where there was submission by sovereigns or states of a controversy between them, from that moment the question ceased to be a political one but comes immediately within the judicial power for determination by a court.

In Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cra. (U. S.) 137, 2 L. Ed. 60, the question whether the commission of a public officer was improperly withheld from him was held to be a judicial and not a political question, but a mandamus to the secretary of state to deliver it was refused because the court had not original jurisdiction to issue it. But in Mississippi v. Johnson, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 475, 18 L. Ed. 437, an injunction to restrain the president from executing the reconstruction acts was refused on the ground that the bill presented a political and not a judicial question.

In Georgia v. Stanton, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 50, 71, 18 L. Ed. 721, it was said that the distinction between judicial and political power is so generally acknowledged in the jurisprudence both of England and of this country that we need do no more than refer to some of the authorities on the subject. The suit invoked the power of the court to restrain the secretary of war and his subordinates from executing acts of congress which, it was alleged, would annul and abolish an existing state government. In refusing the injunction the court said that it could hardly be denied that the case called for the judgment of the court upon political questions and upon rights, not of persons or property, but of a political character. "For the rights for the protection of which our authority is invoked, are the rights of sovereignty, of political jurisdiction, of government, of corporate existence as a state, with all its constitutional powers and privileges. No case of private rights or private property infringed, or in danger of actual or threatened infringement, is presented by the bill, in judicial form, for the judgment of the court."

Among the questions which have been held to be judicial questions and within the powers of the courts to decide are: Whether an amendment to the constitution has been constitutionally adopted; Kadderly v. Portland, 44 Or. 118, 74 Pac. 710, 75 Pac. 222; even though a contrary declaration had been made by the political department of the state government; Gabbert v. Ry. Co., 171 Mo. 84, 70 S. W. 891; whether an apportionment of senators and representatives involved an abuse of legislative discretion by a defiance of the constitutional limitations thereon; Brooks v. State, 162 Ind. 568, 70 N. E. 980; whether license fees are a reasonable imposition under the police power; Margolies v. Atlantic City, 67 N. J. L. 82, 50 Atl. 367; whether legislation ostensibly under the police power is really such when the constitutionality of the act is assailed; Halter v. Nebraska, 205 U. S. 34, 27 Sup. Ct. 419, 51 L. Ed. 696, 10 Ann. Cas. 525, affirming 74 Neb. 757, 105 N. W. 298, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1079, 121 Am. St. Rep. 754; the validity of a plea of privilege set up by a member of the legislature in bar to an action for slander uttered on the floor of the House; Coffin v. Coffin, 4 Mass. 1, 3 Am. Dec. 189; whether the use authorized by the legislature of a reservoir in connection with the water supply is or is not a public use; Miller v. Fitchburg, 180 Mass. 32, 61 N. E. 277; whether a right has vested; Rice v. State, 7 Ind. 332; the power of laying out or altering streets vested in the mayor and aldermen; Parks v. Boston, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 218, 19 Am. Dec. 322; the power to hear and decide proceedings for the summary disposition of tenants, and a writ of prohibition was granted to restrain the recorder from proceeding in such case after his judicial powers had been transferred to the city judge; People v. Russel, 19 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 136; People v. Russel, 29 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 176; whether certain corporations shall be accepted as sole security; In re American Banking & Trust Co., 17 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 274; whether a tax is invalidated by failure of assessors to comply with the law; Plumer v. Board of Sup'rs, 46 Wis. 163, 50 N. W. 416 (but an act making tax bills prima facie evidence of the validity of the charge against the property was not an invasion of the judicial power; City of St. Joseph v. Farrell, 106 Mo. 437, 17 S. W. 497.)

What occupations are the proper subjects of the police power is a judicial question; Price v. People, 193 Ill. 114, 61 N. E. 844, 55 L. R. A. 588, 86 Am. St. Rep. 306; and the legislative determination as to what is the proper exercise of that power is not final, but is subject to the supervision of the courts; Moeschen v. Tenement House Department of City of New York, 203 U. S. 583, 27 Sup. Ct. 781, 51 L. Ed. 328, affirming Tenement House Department of City of New York v. Moeschen, 179 N. Y. 325, 72 N. E. 231, 70 L. R. A. 704, 103 Am. St. Rep. 910, 1 Ann. Cas. 439 (the tenement house case); but unless the court can see that a given police regulation has no just relation to the object which it purports to carry out or to the protection of the public health, safety, comfort, or morals, the decision of the legislature as to its necessity or reasonableness is conclusive; Odd Fellows' Cemetery Ass'n v. City of San Francisco, 140 Cal. 226, 73 Pac. 987.

On the other hand, among the cases which have been held to be within the exclusive jurisdiction of the political branches of the government and not reviewable by the courts are: What property shall be embraced within a tax district, and whether it shall be taxed for municipal purposes; Kettle v. City of Dallas, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 632, 80 S. W. 874; whether property is benefited by the construction of a sewer (in the absence of fraud); Prior v. Const. Co., 170 Mo. 439, 71 S. W. 205; the reasonableness of a municipal license tax upon the privilege of conducting a business; Woodall v. City of Lynchburg, 100 Va. 318, 40 S. E. 915; the reasonableness of a particular regulation of a useful business; Ex parte Whitwell, 98 Cal. 73, 32 Pac. 870, 19 L. R. A. 727, 35 Am. St. Rep. 152; the amount and necessity of taxation; Street v. City of Columbus, 75 Miss. 822, 23 South. 773; the repeal of a charter which was expressly subject to repeal, unless in a case where the legislature should exercise its power in such a manner as to violate clearly the principles of natural justice; Lothrop v. Stedman, 42 Conn. 583, 13 Blatchf. 134, Fed. Cas. No. 8,519; the adjustment of a debt between a new county and the old one from which it had been carved out; Riverside County v. San Bernardino County, 134 Cal. 517, 66 Pac. 788; the disposal of property belonging to the state; State v. Bryan, 50 Fla. 293, 39 South. 929; whether an appropriation shall or shall not be made; Carr v. State, 127 Ind. 204, 26 N. E. 778, 11 L. R. A. 370, 22 Am. St. Rep. 624; whether a system of classification adopted by the legislature is good or vicious; State v. Kolsem, 130 Ind. 434, 29 N. E. 595, 14 L. R. A. 566; the applicability of a general law to a particular case, and the necessity or propriety of a special law; Weston v. Ryan, 70 Neb. 211, 97 N. W. 347, 6 Ann. Cas. 922; Smith v. Grayson County, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 153, 44 S. W. 921.

It is within the province of the political department of the government to define the method of securing imperfect rights of property ceded to the United States after war, and the courts have no jurisdiction to enforce them except as authorized by congress; U. S. v. Sandoval, 167 U. S. 278, 17 Sup. Ct. 868, 42 L. Ed. 168; nor is it within the judicial power to make any declaration upon the question of the length of time required for the pacification of Cuba and when the United States troops shall be withdrawn; Neely v. Henkel, 180 U. S. 109, 21 Sup. Ct. 302, 45 L. Ed. 448; id. 180 U. S. 126, 21 Sup. Ct. 308, 45 L. Ed. 457; so in ascertaining the tribal and other relations of Indians, the courts generally follow the political departments; Farrell v. U. S., 110 Fed. 942, 49 C. C. A. 183.

If a statute is constitutional there is no power in the courts to consider whether it is in accordance with a reasonable or wise public policy; McGuire v. Ry. Co., 131 Ia. 340, 108 N. W. 902, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 706; Prison Association v. Ashby, 93 Va. 667, 25 S. E. 893; Rice v. Ionia Probate Judge, 141 Mich. 692, 105 N. W. 17; nor can the motives of the legislature be considered in a judicial proceeding; State v. R. Co., 166 Ind. 580, 77 N. E. 1077; nor the motives of the executive in issuing a warrant for the rendition of a prisoner; In re Moyer, 12 Idaho 250, 85 Pac. 897, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 227, 118 Am. St. Rep. 214.

"If a contract is entered into in behalf of the government, and a contest should arise about the meaning of the contract, it belongs to the judiciary to decide what that contract was, and if the legislature decide that question, they invade the province of the judiciary;" Commonwealth v. Beaumarchais, 3 Call (Va.) 169, quoted in Bedford v. Shilling, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 401, 8 Am. Dec. 718.

The determination of county boundaries in a suit by a county for taxes or by one county against another is not a question for judicial inquiry but a political one; Norfolk Southern Ry. Co. v. Washington County, 154 N. C. 333, 70 S. E. 634; Guadalupe County v. Wilson County, 58 Tex. 228; but under a statute passed subsequently to this case, the court exercised jurisdiction; Cameron's Heirs v. State, 95 Tex. 545, 68 S. W. 508; but would not do so as to surveys made before the enactment of the law; Rockwell County v. Kaufman County, 60 Tex. 172, 6 S. W. 431. In another state a question of boundaries between counties was held to be one not for commissions of either county, but for a court of chancery under a taxpayer's bill; Union Pacific R. Co. v. Carr, 1 Wyo. 96. If there is a statute, the method prescribed by it must be resorted to before recourse can be had to the courts; Parish of Caddo v. Parish of De Soto, 114 La. 366, 38 South. 273.

The separation of the three departments among which, in modern systems, the sovereign powers of government are distributed, and to some extent the difficulty involved in the effort to distribute those powers, are discussed in the title EXECUTIVE POWER, which, with the title LEGISLATIVE POWER, should be read and referred to in connection with the present title.

Separation of powers, though generally adopted, does not always rest upon a constitutional basis. Whether it does or does not do so affects very materially the judicial power with respect to its stability and independence. In England, not only the supreme legislative authority, but the power of deciding upon the constitutionality of its acts, is vested in parliament, there being no fundamental law in the nature of a written constitution to which that body must conform. The phrase English constitution is one of constant use, and there is, undoubtedly, a body of fundamental principles which are recognized as having been finally accepted as inviolable and which are grouped under that name. A recent writer says that it "is made up of certain views which have been read out of or read into English history and embodied in certain governmental acts,"—"it is in a large part a matter of theory and opinion," and "the substance of it may be summed up in one sentence: All the powers of government are in the hands of parliament." Macy, Eng. Const. 14, 16.

Practically modern opinion is undivided as to this omnipotence of parliament, and under no form of law can its action be restrained or reviewed. Such restraint as is imposed upon it is a moral one which exists only in the potency of certain principles which, in the United States, have been crystallized into constitutional safeguards, while in England they remain, as it were, in solution, affecting, however, and giving form and tone to the government and the body politic. The highest judicial power in England is subordinate to the legislative power, and bound to obey any law that parliament may pass, although it may, in the opinion of the court, be in conflict with the principles of Magna Carta, or the Petition of Rights. Taney, C. J., in Gordon v. U. S., 117 U. S. 699, appendix.

It is doubtless true that the parliament could, as a matter of law, abolish all courts and assume to itself the administration of justice, but even in that case there would still exist the judicial power now administered by courts, and it would be equally distinct as now from the legislative function, even if both were exercised by the same agency of government.

The French constitution of Sept. 3, 1791 (the first written constitution in Europe), recited that the judicial power cannot in any case be exercised by the legislative body or by the king, and that tribunals cannot interfere with the exercise of the legislative power nor suspend the execution of the laws, nor encroach upon administrative functions, nor cite any administrators to appear before them on account of their functions. This comprehensive limitation is attributed by a thoughtful writer on this subject to the French historical associations, which were hostile to any judicial competency to criticize legislation for unconstitutionality. It is to this influence that the writer referred to attributes the different views on this subject which are found in the French constitution referred to and that of the United States. Coxe, Jud. Pow. 78. From a historical review on the subject the author last cited concludes that in France long before 1787 the French judicial power had been used to declare legislation to be void because contrary to the views of right entertained by the court; and that, by the further contrast to American views, the judicial power in question existed under an unwritten constitution and was expressly prohibited under a subsequent written constitution.

Under the Swiss constitution the federal government is organized to some extent upon the idea of the separation of powers; but as it has been observed, "the separation of powers is not very strictly observed between the federal assembly and the federal council, nor indeed . . . between the judicial authority and the political federal authorities;" Adams and Cunningham on the Swiss Confederation 48. The Swiss federal tribunal is bound by all laws passed by the federal assembly without qualification; which is not competent to decide whether the federal law be constitutional or unconstitutional; this is declared not to be a judicial question, nor is it such a question whether a constitution or a law of a canton contains anything contrary to the constitution of the confederation, such a question is extra-judicial and is decided by the federal assembly; Vincent, Swiss Government 34, 132. Another writer says that the Swiss federal court, although instituted in imitation of the American, differs from it in an essential point, while in the United States judicial power alone extends to declaring a law unconstitutional, under the Swiss constitution some points of cantonal law are reserved and the federal legislature is made the sole judge of its own powers and the authorized interpreter of the constitution; 1 Bryce, Am. Com. 254.

In Germany it is said that the law of a state must yield in case of conflict between it and constitutional law of the empire, and that the judicial tribunal must decide between them, but that it was uncertain whether such tribunal can decide upon a question of the constitutionality of a law of the empire; Coxe, Jud. Pow. 96.

In Canada it is said that the supreme court and the privy council in England have concurred in recognizing the rights of provincial courts to pass upon the constitutionality of the laws enacted by the provincial legislatures and the Dominion parliament; Doutre, Const. of Canada, preface.

For an extended historical commentary on previous systems of law, with respect to the limitations of judicial power in passing upon the validity or effect of legislation, see Coxe, Jud. Pow. pt. 1.

The English doctrine of the absolute inviolability of a legislative act never did acquire a footing in this country. It was repudiated by James Otis nearly a quarter of a century before the framing of the American constitution. He contended before the superior court of judicature for the province of Massachusetts, that the validity of statutes must be determined by courts of justice. This doctrine afterwards became the principle of American constitutional law. Before 1787, the colonial courts refused to grant writs of assistance, on the ground that general writs of assistance were unconstitutional; Quincy (Mass.) 504; and see Bowman v. Middleton, 1 Bay (S. C.) 252, where an act passed by the colonial legislature was declared void; Den v. Singleton, Mart. (N. C.) 49. Judicial questions of a national character were, under the confederation, determined by a court; Articles of Confederation, Art. 9; and the framers of the constitution ordained and established a judiciary as a necessary department, and used in it the phrase judicial power as one well understood and not needing definition in the instrument itself; Federalist, Nos. 22, 28, 80, 81; 3 Elliott's Deb. 142, 143.

It is the settled law in this country that the judicial power extends to and includes the determination of the constitutionality and validity of legislative acts, although the propriety of this conclusion is still sometimes challenged. For a discussion of the subject, its history, and the authorities, see CONSTITUTIONAL.

But a court has no power to declare unconstitutional a duly enacted statute simply because it may seem to the court that such legislation does not conform to the general theory upon which the government is founded; Reeves v. Corning, 51 Fed. 774.

The constitution declares that "the judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one supreme court, and in such inferior courts as the congress may from time to time ordain and establish." Art. 3, s. 1.

It has been remarked that the essential character of its judiciary is a distinct recognition by the constitution of the nationality of the federal government; Pom. Const. L. § 108.

By the constitutions of the several states, the judicial power is vested in such courts as are enumerated in each respectively.

A provision in a state constitution that the powers of government shall be divided into three distinct departments, each confided to separate persons, operates to forbid the exercise by a court or judge of a power not judicial; Appeal of Norwalk St. Ry. Co., 69 Conn. 576, 37 Atl. 1080, 38 Atl. 708, 39 L. R. A. 794. And a constitutional grant of judicial authority is power to administer remedies for remedial rights; to render judicial decisions, so called, in actions or special proceedings to enforce the same; State v. Chittenden, 127 Wis. 468, 107 N. W. 500.

Where a state constitution expressly provided that judges of the supreme court should not exercise non-judicial powers or powers of appointment, the maxim expressio unius est exclusio alterius was applied, and the power of appointment of local officers by judges of other courts was held valid, the exercise of such power having been according to the usage of the state; Com. v. Collier, 213 Pa. 138, 62 Atl. 567, 5 Ann. Cas. 92.

There is nothing in the constitution of the United States to forbid or prevent the legislature of a state from exercising judicial functions; Prentiss v. Atlantic Coast Line Co., 211 U. S. 210, 29 Sup. Ct. 67, 53 L. Ed. 150; or from conferring judicial power on non-judicial bodies; Consolidated Rendering Co. v. Vermont, 207 U. S. 541, 28 Sup. Ct. 178, 52 L. Ed. 327, 12 Ann. Cas. 658; but even in the absence of special limitations in the state constitutions, legislatures cannot exercise powers in their nature essentially judicial; Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 391. The different classes of power have been apportioned to different departments, and as all derive their authority from the same instrument, there is an implied exclusion of each department from exercising the functions conferred upon the others; Cooley, Const. Lim. 106. The legislative power cannot from its nature be assimilated to the judicial; the law is made by the one, and applied by the other; Merrill v. Sherburne, 1 N. H. 204, 8 Am. Dec. 52; Greenough v. Greenough, 11 Pa. 494, 51 Am. Dec. 567; Cincinnati, W. & Z. R. Co. v. Com'rs of Clinton County, 1 Ohio St. 81; Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 391; In re Ridgefield Park, 54

N. J. L. 288, 23 Atl. 674. In the oft-repeated phrase of Chief Justice Marshall, "the legislature makes, the executive executes, and the judiciary construes, the law." Wayman v. Southard, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 1, 46, 6 L. Ed. 253.

Two capital distinctions have been noted between the judicial power in England and in the United States,—the first grows out of the existence in the latter country of a written constitution restricting the power of the legislature, from which springs the duty of the courts to declare invalid any act which is expressly prohibited by or which is not authorized by the constitution, either expressly or by implication. The other results from the power of construction imposed upon the American judge by the brevity of the constitution. Continuing the last thought, it is said:

"The words of that instrument are general, laying down a few large principles. The cases which will arise as to the construction of these general words cannot be foreseen until they arise. When they do arise the generality of the words leaves open to the interpreting judges a far wider field than is afforded by ordinary statutes, which, since they treat of one particular subject, contain enactments comparatively minute and precise. Hence, although the duty of a court is only to interpret, the considerations affecting interpretations are more numerous than in the case of ordinary statutes, more delicate, larger in their reach and scope. They sometimes need the exercise not merely of legal acumen and judicial fairness but of a comprehension of the nature and methods of government which one does not demand from the European judge who walks in the narrow path traced for him by ordinary statutes. It is therefore hardly an exaggeration to say that the American constitution, as it now stands, with the mass of fringing decisions which explain it, is a far more complete and finished instrument than it was when it came fire-new from the hands of the Convention. It is not merely their work but the work of the judges, and most of all one man, the great Chief Justice Marshall." Bryce, Am. Com. 248.

The American system of leaving constitutional questions to be settled by the courts is considered by the author last quoted to secure very great advantages over the theory which was advanced at the time of the formation of the federal government of subjecting the acts of the state legislature to the veto of congress. The result is, as he puts it, that "the court does not go to meet the question; it waits for the question to come to it. When the court acts, it acts at the instance of a party—sometimes the plaintiff or the defendant may be the national government or a state government, but far more frequently both are private persons, seeking to enforce or defend their private rights." He illustrates this by the fact that the doctrine of Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch (U. S.) 87, 3 L. Ed. 162, that a repeal of a grant by the state to an individual impairs the obligation of the contract, was determined in an action between individuals, the result being that the decision upon the validity of the action of the state is relieved from those opinions which might affect its determination, if the state itself were a party; 1 Bryce, Am. Com. 252. A more far-reaching case which might be used as an illustration is the Dartmouth College Case, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 518, 4 L. Ed. 629, in which an action between an individual and a private corporation, resulted in placing upon the states a limitation of power second to few if any contained in their constitutions.

Under the American constitutional system, there is to be found no force more potent, effective, and far-reaching than this power of constitutional construction which is now unquestionably vested in the courts. Through it the judicial power, in a way, approaches much more nearly to the absolute ultimate authority of the English parliament than does the legislative power. It has also been said: "We proceed upon the theory that our constitution is written: and in our written constitutions, state and national, we have provided courts for the purpose of passing upon the laws enacted by the legislatures and determining their constitutionality. We do not know, therefore, whether a governmental act is valid or not until a court of competent jurisdiction has passed upon it. We depend upon our courts to tell us what our constitution means. Our real constitutions are thus found not wholly in the written documents bearing the name, but in the decisions of the supreme court of the United States and in those of the highest courts in the various states. The study of the American constitution is in large part, from beginning to end, a study of judicial decisions." Macy, Eng. Const. 89.

Mr. Bryce considers it a weak point in the federal constitution that a decision of the supreme court may be obtained in reversal of a former one by the appointment of judges to fill vacancies favorable to such reversal, or in case there be no vacancy, by the joint action of congress and the executive in increasing the number of judges. Of the former method, he instances the Legal Tender Cases, 1 Am. Const. 264, 269, 297. This reference served to put in a very definite form the somewhat widespread impression that appointments of judges were made for the purpose of reversing the previous decision of the court. The possibility of such action in any case by the executive is so serious a contingency that this particular charge has been recently made the subject of critical examination by Senator Hoar, whose brother was then attorney general of the United States. His pamphlet is a valuable historical document, and shows by the dates that the appointments in question were made prior to the decision, and from the testimony of members of the cabinet, that they had been agreed upon long before, neither the president nor any member of the cabinet having any knowledge as to the probable decision; see 5 Am. Lawy. 4.

The fact that the suggestion of any motive in the appointment of judges has so rarely been made may be considered strong evidence that the danger alluded to is not a serious one. But even if it were, it is a danger necessarily incident to all human institutions. No system of checks and balances has ever been devised, and probably none ever will be, so perfect as to dispense with the need of integrity and good faith in the administration of government.

It may be noted here, as already stated under CONSTITUTIONAL, that Chief Justice Gibson (in a dissenting opinion), in Eakin v. Raub, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 345 (1825), ably contended, after the decision in Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cra. (U. S.) 176, 2 L. Ed. 60, that a state court is bound to execute an act repugnant to the constitution of a particular state, but not one repugnant to the federal constitution; though in Norris v. Clymer, 2 Pa. 281, he said to counsel that he had modified his opinion on this subject.

It was said by another eminent judge that it is doubtful whether an act of the legislature can be deemed absolutely void; it is rather to be treated as voidable and this objection can only be raised by one affected by it and not by a stranger; Shaw, C. J., in In re Wellington, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 96, 26 Am. Dec. 631, quoted with approval in Cooley, Const. Lim. (7th Ed.) 232.

A state legislature cannot annul the judgments nor determine the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States; U. S. v. Peters, 5 Cra. (U. S.) 115, 3 L. Ed. 53; nor authoritatively declare what the law is or has been, but what it shall be; Ogden v. Blackledge, 2 Cra. (U. S.) 272, 2 L. Ed. 276.

Congress cannot interfere with or control state courts except in so far as the federal courts have appellate jurisdiction.

Congress cannot without the consent of the state constrain the state courts to entertain or act upon applications for naturalization; Rushworth v. Judges of Inferior Court, 58 N. J. L. 97, 32 Atl. 743, 30 L. R. A. 761.

The judicial powers of the United States, first under the constitution as originally adopted, extended to cases "between a state and citizens of another state," but the very early case of Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 419, 1 L. Ed. 440, in which the plaintiff as executor brought an action of assumpsit against the state, which was sustained by the court, resulted in the adoption of the 11th amendment. As a consequence it was held that cases past or present in which the state was a party were removed from the jurisdiction of the court; Hollingsworth v. Virginia, 3 Dall. (U. S.) 378, 1 L. Ed. 644; but the mere fact that a state may be interested does not oust the jurisdiction; Osborn v. Bank, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 738, 6 L. Ed. 204; in a comparatively late case the soundness of the opinion in the case of Chisholm v. Georgia was doubted, the suggestion being that the clause of the constitution giving jurisdiction in such cases was properly limited to cases cognizable in the courts of a state or suits by a state against citizens of another state; Hans v. Louisiana, 134 U. S. 1, 10 Sup. Ct. 504, 33 L. Ed. 842. The grant of judicial power in all cases in law and equity, etc., was held not to authorize a writ of error in the circuit court of the District of Columbia in a criminal case; U. S. v. More, 3 Cra. (U. S.) 159, 2 L. Ed. 397; but this provision is held generally to include criminal as well as civil proceedings, and the power so vested in the federal courts is independent of the judiciary of the states; Tennessee v. Davis, 100 U. S. 257, 25 L. Ed. 648.

In U. S. v. Smith, 4 N. J. L. 37, the action was to recover a penalty under the provisions of an act of congress. The question was raised by plea whether under the act jurisdiction would properly be given to a state court. A demurrer to the plea was overruled, and in a dissenting opinion Southard, J., discusses at length the question: What is the judicial power of the United States?

The distinctive features which characterize the three great departments of government are in the main easily recognized. There is little difficulty in determining whether a power is judicial or executive, and the questions arising with respect to those distinctions result not so much from inherent difficulty in the subject as from a tendency in modern constitutions and legislation to confuse the functions of the two departments in the classes of cases of which illustrations have been already cited. So it may be said that ordinarily there ought to be little difficulty in distinguishing legislative and judicial powers. Properly understood, the two functions are entirely different, and yet there are points of contact from which spring disputed cases, such, for example, as the regulation of procedure, the application of rules of evidence, the attempt to regulate judicial discretion, and many others. This may involve, on the one hand, an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power, or, on the other, the assumption by the legislature of some portion of the authority which belongs to the courts. The cases in which it is a question whether a certain power is legislative or judicial are mainly considered under the title of LEGISLATIVE POWER, to which reference should be made. As a reason why there is naturally found much debatable ground between the judiciary and the legislature, it has been suggested that:

"In most countries the courts have grown out of the legislature; or rather, the sovereign body, which, like parliament, was originally both a law and a legislature, has delivered over most of its judicial duties to other persons, while retaining some few to be still exercised by itself." 1 Bryce, Amer. Com. 235. The author just quoted enumerates the points in which America has followed the English practice. There are no separate administrative tribunals, but officials are sued or indicted in the regular courts; judges are secure in their tenure; judicial proceedings are recognized in law and not set aside by a statute within the competence of the legislature. He considers that America has improved on England in forbidding the legislature to exercise the powers of a criminal court, by acts of attainder, etc., and stands behind England in continuing to use a legislative body as a court of impeachment, the trial of disputed election cases by committees, and the disposition of public franchises, or the appropriation of private property, by legislative rather than judicial methods. Thus three pieces of ground debatable between the legislature and the judiciary, which all originally belonged to the legislature, and in America still do, have been in England made the subject of judicial power and method; id. 235. The judicial power extends to and includes only such acts as are in their nature judicial.

From its earliest history the United States supreme court has consistently declined to exercise any powers other than those which are strictly judicial; Muskrat v. U. S., 219 U. S. 346, 31 Sup. Ct. 250, 55 L. Ed. 246, citing Gordon v. U. S., 117 U. S. 697, appendix, where the subject was examined in the opinion by Taney, C. J.

An act of congress of 1792 devolved upon the circuit courts the duty of examining pension claims and certifying them to the secretary of war. In Hayburn's Case, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 409, 1 L. Ed. 436, the attorney general moved for a mandamus to compel the judges to proceed to hear the cases under the act, but the case was not decided, as the act was repealed. The reasons given by the circuit judges for refusing to perform the duties imposed upon them by the act are set forth in 2 Dall. 410, n. Under an act of 1793 the nature of the duties assigned to the judges were somewhat changed. This act came before the supreme court in U. S. v. Yale Todd. Both of these decisions are set forth in a note of Taney, C. J., in U. S. v. Ferreira, 13 How. (U. S.) 52, 14 L. Ed. 42, where it is said that the result of the opinions in these two cases is that the power thus conferred was not a judicial power, and therefore could not be exercised by the courts, and that as the act intended to confer the power on the court as a judicial function, it could not authorize the judges to exercise it out of court as commissioners, and this decision has ever since been regarded as constitutional law.

It is a settled principle of constitutional law that judges cannot be required to perform any other than judicial duties; Ex parte Griffiths, 118 Ind. 83, 20 N. E. 513, 3 L. R. A. 398, 10 Am. St. Rep. 107, where the doctrine is stated emphatically in the language of Cooley, Const. Law 53, and many other cases are cited.

The general principle upon which is based the want of power in the legislature to confer upon the judges any other than judicial duties "is that under the constitutional system of the United States and of the states, there is a clear and explicit separation of the duties of the government in the three departments which, it has been well said, are not merely equal, they are exclusive, in respect to the duties assigned to each. They are absolutely independent of each other." Wright v. Defrees, 8 Ind. 298.

It is held that the constitutional powers of the judges are defined by the provisions conferring upon them the judicial power, eo nomine, and as was said by Mr. Justice Field, in the supreme court of California: "In its own sphere of duties this court cannot be trammelled by any legislative restrictions. Its constitutional duty is discharged by rendition of decisions;" Houston v. Williams, 13 Cal. 24, 73 Am. Dec. 565; and the supreme court of Arkansas said of the constitutional right of the court, "The legislative department is incompetent to touch it;" Vaughn v. Harp, 49 Ark. 160, 4 S. W. 751.

Congress cannot require the judiciary to exercise powers that are not judicial; Ex parte Riebeling, 70 Fed. 310 (to pass upon the value of the services of an informer in the case of seizure of smuggled goods); the opinion considered the matter historically and at length. It was followed by Judge McPherson in U. S. v. Queen, 105 Fed. 269.

Acts held valid as not conferring non-judicial powers are: Conferring on the court the power to establish towns; Morton v. Woodford, 99 Ky. 367, 35 S. W. 1112; to determine whether conditions prescribed by general law for the creation or enlargement of municipal bodies have been complied with; Forsythe v. City of Hammond, 68 Fed. 774; to inquire whether water rates fixed by municipalities and corporations operate to deprive the owner of appropriated water of his property without just compensation; San Diego Land & T. Co. v. City, 74 Fed. 79; authorizing a court on appeal from county commissioners to fix the salary of a county attorney; Rockwell v. County of Fillmore, 47 Minn. 219, 49 N. W. 690.

It is not a judicial function to exercise merely ministerial powers in relation to committing inebriates; Foreman v. Board, 64 Minn. 373, 67 N. W. 207; nor to entertain appeals from county commissioners upon the propriety of annexing territory to a city; Forsyth v. City of Hammond, 71 Fed. 443; to exercise over the business intercourse of common carriers control which ought to belong to themselves; State v. R. Co., 46 Neb. 682, 65 N. W. 766, 31 L. R. A. 47; to prevent the submission to the people of a constitutional amendment by injunction against the secretary of state; State v. Thorson, 9 S. D. 149, 68 N. W. 202, 33 L. R. A. 582; to require the court to make appointments to fill political offices unconnected with the courts, as members of a municipal board of review; 27 W. L. Bul. 334; or health commission; 11 Am. L. Rec. 651 (in both of which last two cases the court refused to appoint); a collector of taxes; McLean County Precinct v. Bank, 81 Ky. 254; supervisors of election; Case of Supervisors of Election, 114 Mass. 247, 19 Am. Rep. 341; a bridge committee; State v. George, 22 Or. 142, 29 Pac. 356, 16 L. R. A. 737, 29 Am. St. Rep. 586; jury commissioners; State v. Mounts, 36 W. Va. 179, 14 S. E. 407, 15 L. R. A. 243 (where it was considered that jury commissioners were not public officers but officers of the court); justices of the peace; Ex parte Bassitt, 90 Va. 679, 19 S. E. 453; park commissioners; Ross v. Board of Chosen Freeholders, 69 N. J. L. 291, 55 Atl. 310 (which decision reversed the supreme court and is severely criticized as not justified by the state constitution in 37 Am. L. Rev. 620).

But it has been held that judges may constitutionally be vested with power to appoint city commissioners, though that duty is administrative and not judicial; City of Terre Haute v. R. Co., 149 Ind. 174, 46 N. E. 77, 37 L. R. A. 189, where a long list is given of powers conferred upon judges not strictly of a judicial character. And in another state it is held that the power to exercise non-judicial functions does not make an act unconstitutional, as, though not compulsory, there is no valid objection to its due execution, if the court or judge chooses to perform the duty, since third persons cannot complain on the ground that the performance could not have been enforced; State v. Cincinnati, 52 Ohio St. 419, 451, 40 N. E. 508, 27 L. R. A. 737. So, though the court might have refused to perform a duty imposed by statute of levying a tax on lawyers, yet having done so and not claiming their privilege, the party assessed cannot raise this objection; State v. Gazlay, 5 Ohio 14. The legislature cannot constitute the court a board to try contested elections, that power not being essentially judicial; Miller v. Wheeler, 33 Neb. 765, 51 N. W. 137; nor can a court be charged with the duty of purchasing land for the use of the county and executing a mortgage for the purchase money; Burgoyne v. Board, 5 Cal. 9; nor with the power of incorporating towns; People v. Town of Nevada, 6 Cal. 143; or assessment of taxes; Hardenburgh v. Kidd, 10 Cal. 402; or the valuation of property for taxation; Auditor of State v. R. Co., 6 Kan. 500, 7 Am. Rep. 575; City of Baltimore v. Bonaparte, 93 Md. 156, 48 Atl. 735; or fixing the salaries of court reporters; Smith v. Strother, 68 Cal. 194, 8 Pac. 852; or authorizing the marshal to levy and collect a municipal tax of which mandamus against a city has failed to secure payment; Rees v. City of Watertown, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 107, 22 L. Ed. 72; Heine v.

Levee Commissioners, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 655, 22 L. Ed. 223; or the adjustment of state railway bonds by deciding which of two sections of an act shall take effect and be law; State v. Young, 29 Minn. 474, 9 N. W. 737; or passing upon the constitutionality of a legislative act or municipal ordinance as an abstract question; Shepherd v. Wheeling, 30 W. Va. 479, 4 S. E. 635.

In the La Abra Mining Company case it was held that the question whether an award by an international commission and an umpire under a convention between the United States and Mexico was obtained by fraud was one in its nature susceptible of judicial determination; La Abra Mining Co. v. U. S., 175 U. S. 423, 20 Sup. Ct. 168, 44 L. Ed. 223, where a demurrer had been interposed upon the main ground that the questions involved were of a diplomatic or political nature.

The court has jurisdiction to determine the constitutionality of an act apportioning the state into legislative districts; Denney v. State, 144 Ind. 503, 42 N. E. 929, 31 L. R. A. 720.

But while the courts are not permitted to have non-judicial duties imposed upon them, so, on the other hand, are the other departments of the government forbidden to invade or usurp the judicial power. And this is held to extend to and include everything necessarily or even properly incident to the exercise of their jurisdiction.

The power to punish contempts is strictly judicial and cannot be abridged by the legislature; Hale v. State, 55 Ohio St. 210, 45 N. E. 199, 36 L. R. A. 254, 60 Am. St. Rep. 691; Wyatt v. People, 17 Col. 252, 29 Pac. 961; Little v. State, 90 Ind. 338, 46 Am. Rep. 224; Burke v. Territory, 2 Okl. 499, 37 Pac. 829; but reasonable regulations by the legislature touching the exercise of this power are binding; id.; but the power cannot be conferred upon an executive board; Langenberg v. Decker, 131 Ind. 471, 31 N. E. 190, 16 L. R. A. 108; and an order directing a sheriff to commit a person to jail until he answers questions propounded to him by commissioners appointed to take his examination before trial is erroneous as an attempted delegation of judicial power in allowing the sheriff to determine what is compliance with the order; Fertilizer Co. v. Taylor, 112 N. C. 141, 17 S. E. 69.

The purpose of a judicial inquiry is to enforce the laws as they are at present. Legislation looks to the future and changes existing conditions by making new laws to be applicable hereafter; Ross v. Oregon, 227 U. S. 150, 33 Sup. Ct. 220, 57 L. Ed. 458. "The province of the courts is to decide what the law is or has been, and to determine its application to particular facts in the decision of causes; the province of the legislature is to declare what the law shall be in the future; and neither of these departments can lawfully invade the province of the other;" Ratliffe v. Anderson, 31 Gratt. (Va.) 105, 107, 31 Am. Rep. 716, quoted in Shepherd v. Wheeling, 30 W. Va. 479, 4 S. E. 635, where it was held that the abstract question of the constitutionality of an act or ordinance cannot be decided by a court.

When the state constitution confers the whole judicial power on specified courts and officers, no portion of it can be conferred on any officer not elective and not so specified; Chandler v. Nash, 5 Mich. 409; Shoultz v. McPheeters, 79 Ind. 373.

Legislation is not an interference with judicial functions, which regulates the rules of pleading; Whiting v. Townsend, 57 Cal. 515; or procedure; In re Probate Blanks, 71 N. H. 621, 52 Atl. 861; or affects the powers of individual judges as distinguished from the court itself; State v. Taylor, 68 N. J. L. 276, 53 Atl. 392; but the court may make reasonable rules as to the hearing of causes and they will prevail against a statute; Herndon v. Ins. Co., 111 N. C. 384, 16 S. E. 465, 18 L. R. A. 547; though it cannot make a rule which deprives one of a right secured by law; Main v. Lynch, 54 Md. 658. As to the power of the courts to make rules, see In re Du Pont, 8 Del. Ch. 442, 68 Atl. 399. The court may change its own calendar and fix dates of trial; Merchants' National Bank v. Greenhood, 16 Mont. 395, 41 Pac. 250, 851; and a statute providing that the court must designate a day for hearing preferred causes was held unconstitutional as depriving the court of the right to hear such causes according to the circumstances of each particular case; Riglander v. Star Co., 98 App. Div. 101, 90 N. Y. Supp. 772; Jones v. Spear, 21 Vt. 426; so the power to appoint or remove a janitor of a court room belongs to the court; In re Janitor of Supreme Court, 35 Wis. 410.

The legislature cannot require judges to file opinions in writing; Houston v. Williams, 13 Cal. 24, 73 Am. Dec. 565; Vaughn v. Harp, 49 Ark. 160, 4 S. W. 751; Ex parte Griffiths, 118 Ind. 83, 20 N. E. 513, 3 L. R. A. 398, 10 Am. St. Rep. 107; Matter of Head Notes, 43 Mich. 641, 8 N. W. 552.

A statute prescribing causes for which a judgment may be set aside does not restrict the power of the court to set aside judgments for other causes than those mentioned; Nealis v. Dicks, 72 Ind. 374. Among the inherent powers of courts independent of legislative enactment is the power to prevent the enforcement against an accused person of a judgment obtained by duress; Maynard v. Mier, 85 Ind. 318.

The following acts are held unconstitutional assumptions of judicial power by the legislature: Vacating a final judgment; State v. R. Co., 71 Conn. 43, 40 Atl. 925;

Martin v. Land Co., 94 Va. 28, 26 S. E. 591; declaring what shall be conclusive evidence; People v. Rose, 207 Ill. 352, 69 N. E. 762; prescribing the manner in which courts shall discharge their judicial duties; Parkison v. Thompson, 164 Ind. 609, 73 N. E. 109, 3 Ann. Cas. 677; abridging or taking away the inherent power of courts to enforce their decrees and command respect for their processes; Anderson v. Forging Co., 34 Ind. App. 100, 72 N. E. 277; making a specification of weights in bills of lading conclusive evidence of correctness; Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Simonson, 64 Kan. 802, 68 Pac. 653, 57 L. R. A. 765, 91 Am. St. Rep. 248; declaring a tax deed or the recitals therein to be conclusive evidence of a compliance with those matters which are essential to the exercise of the taxing power, etc.; Wilson v. Wood, 10 Okl. 279, 61 Pac. 1045; depriving a state Supreme Court of its revisory jurisdiction over all other state tribunals; Brown v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 75 Mich. 274, 42 N. W. 827, 5 L. R. A. 226, 13 Am. St. Rep. 438; validating the levy of a tax which had been finally adjudicated to be invalid; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. People, 219 Ill. 408, 76 N. E. 571; authorizing the courts to set aside judgments and grant new trials after the term; Peerce v. Kitzmiller, 19 W. Va. 564; White v. Crump, id. 583; abridging the right of a court of chancery to pass upon questions of fact without a jury; Detroit Nat. Bank v. Blodgett, 115 Mich. 160, 73 N. W. 120, 885.

The following acts have been held to be constitutional: A federal act empowering the comptroller to appoint receivers for insolvent national banks (as not vesting in him a judicial power); Bushnell v. Leland, 164 U. S. 684, 17 Sup. Ct. 209, 41 L. Ed. 598; an act establishing rules of evidence which are not in conflict with the constitution; Banks v. State, 124 Ga. 15, 52 S. E. 74, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1007; prescribing rules of procedure or pleading; Parkison v. Thompson, 164 Ind. 609, 73 N. E. 109, 3 Ann. Cas. 677; regulating the procedure in contempt cases; Mahoney v. State, 33 Ind. App. 655, 72 N. E. 151, 104 Am. St. Rep. 276; regulating the exercise of the powers of a court for the punishment of constructive contempts; Drady v. Dist. Court, 126 Ia. 345, 102 N. W. 115; constituting facts which, according to the ordinary rules of human experience, tend to prove another fact, conclusive evidence of it; County Seat of Linn County, 15 Kan. 500; imposing indeterminate sentences; State v. Stephenson, 69 Kan. 405, 76 Pac. 905, 105 Am. St. Rep. 171, 2 Ann. Cas. 841; declaring the oath and examination of the mother of a bastard child to be presumptive evidence against the person accused of its paternity; State v. Rogers, 119 N. C. 793, 26 S. E. 142; discharging a motion for a new trial, if not acted upon by the court at the term; James v. Appel, 192 U. S. 129, 24 Sup. Ct. 222, 48 L. Ed. 377.

Where an act provided for filling vacancies in municipal offices by a person elected by the council to serve until "the next city election," it was held that a subsequent act providing that the words quoted should be construed to mean the election at which the voters would have elected the successor without respect to the vacancy, was an invasion of judicial power as seeking to compel the courts to construe the previous act in a way contrary to its letter and spirit; Com. v. Warwick, 172 Pa. 140, 33 Atl. 373. In this case, however, Mitchell, J., filed an able dissenting opinion in which he maintained that the judgment was an "unprecedented and unwarranted invasion by the judiciary of the legislative authority," that expository acts had been in use in Pennsylvania from colonial days, and that they were "a legislative formula never heretofore questioned." See also Titusville Iron Works v. Oil Co., 122 Pa. 627, 15 Atl. 917, 1 L. R. A. 361; where they are held to be a common form of legislative expression to which future effect must be given. In Lambertson v. Hogan, 2 Pa. 22, it was held that "explanatory acts must be construed as operating on future cases alone, except where they are designed to explain a doubtful statute."

Wherever a power is given to examine, hear, and punish, it is a judicial power, and they in whom it is reposed act as judges; Holt, C. J., 1 Salk. 200. In this case the censors of the College of Physicians under their charter fined and imprisoned a physician for administering unwholesome pills and noxious medicines, and it was held that certiorari would lie.

The phrase judicial power, as adopted in American constitutional law, includes the determination of questions of fact in equity cases. The term must be construed as vesting such power as the courts under the English and American system of jurisprudence always exercised in that class of actions, and it is not competent for the legislature to withdraw from the courts invested by the constitution with judicial power, as to matters in equity, the determination of questions in fact, as one of the established elements of that power; Callanan v. Judd, 23 Wis. 343, 349.

It frequently happens that the courts are concluded by the result of an inquiry, quasi-judicial in its character, which under some very general definitions, such as that of Lord Holt, supra, might be referred to the judicial power, but is required in this particular case and by the legislature or executive as a guide to their own action.

In cases where the existence of certain facts is necessary to be ascertained as a basis for determining whether it is wise to enact a statute, the ascertainment of the fact by the legislature will be considered conclusive, and its decision will not be reviewed by the courts in a collateral proceeding. As where the establishment of a court depended upon the fact that the county had a population exceeding fifty thousand, the court refused to question the action of the legislature, although it appeared by the United States census that the population of the county was less than the required amount; Ex parte Renfrow, 112 Mo. 591, 20 S. W. 682; and where the legislature prohibited parents from procuring or consenting to the employment of a female child under the age of fourteen years as a dancer, the court would not review its decision that such legislation was necessary to protect the health and morals of children on the ground that the law infringed the rights of parents in some particular cases; People v. Ewer, 19 N. Y. Supp. 933.

Where a reapportionment of representatives based upon relative changes of population, was made by act of congress to take effect two years later, it was held to be a political and not a judicial question, and the courts could not give redress for any injustice resulting therefrom; State v. Boyd, 36 Neb. 181, 54 N. W. 252, 19 L. R. A. 227; with respect to apportionment of the state for legislative purposes, where the act of the legislature was in violation of the constitution of the state, the question of the validity of the statute is not a political one, but a judicial question; Parker v. State, 133 Ind. 178, 32 N. E. 836, 33 N. E. 119, 18 L. R. A. 567; State v. Cunningham, 83 Wis. 90, 53 N. W. 35, 17 L. R. A. 145, 35 Am. St. Rep. 27.

The decision of congress recognizing a claim as an equitable obligation of the government and appropriating money for its payment can rarely be the subject of review by the courts; U. S. v. Realty Co., 163 U. S. 427, 16 Sup. Ct. 1120, 41 L. Ed. 215.

A court or judge cannot be authorized to perform legislative duties; Smith v. Strother, 68 Cal. 194, 8 Pac. 852.

An act of the legislature provided that before any railway company should construct its roads in the streets of a city, the city authorities, or the superior court, or a judge thereof, on appeal, should approve the plan of construction. It was held that the power which the superior court or a judge thereof was required to exercise was legislative and not judicial, and therefore could not be exercised by them; Appeal of Norwalk St. Ry. Co., 69 Conn. 576, 37 Atl. 1080, 38 Atl. 708, 39 L. R. A. 794. The case discusses the question fully.

An act authorizing the court or judge allowing a mandamus to direct the manner of serving it is not a delegation of legislative powers; State v. Express Co., 66 Minn. 271, 68 N. W. 1085, 38 L. R. A. 225.

The act of July 25, 1882, authorizing judges and clerks of United States courts to issue subpoenas upon the application of the commissioner of pensions for the examination of witnesses concerning pension claims, is constitutional and under it the courts can compel witnesses to appear and testify on that subject; In re Gross, 78 Fed. 107. A statute authorizing judges to fix salaries of deputies or assistants employed by county officers is not unconstitutional as a delegation of legislative power to a judicial tribunal; Stone v. Wilson, 39 S. W. 49, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 126, overruling Com. v. Adams, 95 Ky. 588, 26 S. W. 581, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 135.

Questions frequently arise as to the validity of legislative acts requiring of executive officers duties quasi-judicial in their character, the propriety of which is challenged upon the ground that they impose judicial functions upon executive officers. Such are provisions of law authorizing the removal of subordinate officers, the constitution of boards for taxation, assessment, and the like. It is a well-settled principle that "judicial functions or duties can be conferred only upon courts and judicial officers;" State v. Noble, 118 Ind. 361, 21 N. E. 244, 4 L. R. A. 101, 10 Am. St. Rep. 143; Van Slyke v. Fire Ins. Co., 39 Wis. 390, 20 Am. Rep. 50; People v. Hayne, 83 Cal. 111, 23 Pac. 1, 7 L. R. A. 348, 17 Am. St. Rep. 211. But it has been held that there is no invasion of the judicial power in making state executive officers ex officio of a state board of taxation; Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus, 133 Ind. 513, 33 N. E. 421, 18 L. R. A. 729; Indianapolis & V. R. Co. v. Backus, 133 Ind. 609, 33 N. E. 443; or charging them with the duty of assessing property or serving on a board of equalization; Sawyer v. Dooley, 21 Nev. 390, 32 Pac. 437.

Power to summon and examine witnesses under oath conferred on an administrative officer is not a distinctive judicial power; Matter of Fenton, 58 Misc. 303, 109 N. Y. Supp. 321.

So it was held that the act, authorizing the establishment of a public park in the District of Columbia, and providing that in case of disagreement between the land owner and the park commissioners the appraisal should be submitted to the president, for his approval did not impose a judicial function upon the president whose duty was merely to decide whether the United States would have the land at the appraised value, and not to decide whether such value was reasonable as respects the property owner; Shoemaker v. U. S., 147 U. S. 282, 13 Sup. Ct. 361, 37 L. Ed. 170; such an act merely makes the president the agent of congress to decide whether the proceedings shall be completed or abandoned; U. S. v. Cooper, 20 D. C. 104.

A constitutional provision prohibiting the legislature from creating other courts than those mentioned in the constitution does not prevent it from authorizing appeals to a court from the decision of a license board; Thompson v. Koch, 98 Ky. 400, 33 S. W. 96; and where the judicial power was vested by the constitution in certain named courts, it was still competent for the legislature to provide for the removal of administrative officers in cities by the board of aldermen "sitting as a court," such power being held not strictly judicial; Gibbs v. Board, 99 Ky. 490, 36 S. W. 524.

The fact that the law confers on jury commissioners judicial powers in the selection of citizens for jury services does not involve a conflict with the fourteenth amendment of the constitution; Murray v. Louisiana, 163 U. S. 101, 16 Sup. Ct. 990, 41 L. Ed. 87.

Judicial powers were not conferred on the governor by authorizing him to investigate charges of official misconduct of state officers with a view to their removal; McMaster v. Herald, 56 Kan. 231, 42 Pac. 697; or by an act authorizing him to remove any officer appointed by him; Cameron v. Parker, 2 Okl. 277, 38 Pac. 14; and the action of a governor in removing an officer under such act will not be reviewed by the courts; id.; State v. Rost, 47 La. Ann. 53, 16 South. 776.

The power to remove city officers for cause is administrative, not judicial, and may therefore be conferred on a non-judicial body; State v. Common Council, 90 Wis. 612, 64 N. W. 304.

Questions of power between the judiciary and the executive have generally arisen upon applications for a mandamus to compel or an injunction to prevent action of an executive officer.

The question of power to issue a mandamus in such cases is discussed under the title EXECUTIVE POWER, and the authorities are there collected. A discussion of the subject, not strictly in a suit at law, but as the result of one, the participants in which were a judge and a quasi-judicial officer, may be referred to here.

In Gilchrist v. Collector of Charleston it was held that the circuit court has no power to issue a mandamus to a collector, commanding him to grant a clearance, and that all instructions from the executive which are not supported by law are illegal, and no inferior officer is bound to obey them; 1 Hall, Am. L. J. 429, Fed. Cas. No. 5,420. This decision was the subject of a letter from Cæsar A. Rodney, attorney general, to the president criticising the action of the court and challenging its jurisdiction; 1 Hall, Am. L. J. 433, Fed. Cas. No. 5,420. In reply to this letter Mr. Justice Johnson, who presided at the trial, made some remarks, in the course of which he says: "Jurisdiction in a case is one thing; the mode of exercising that jurisdiction is quite another;" the jurisdiction of the court must be derived from the constitution, and he expressly disclaims "any other origin of our jurisdiction, especially the unpopular grounds of prerogative and analogy to the king's bench."

In asserting the necessity of the recognition of the right of the courts to coerce an executive officer by a judicial order, he insists that such authority is necessarily involved in the use of the term power in the constitution: "The term judicial power conveys the idea both of exercising the faculty of judging and of applying physical force to give effect to a decision. The term power could with no propriety be applied, nor could the judiciary be denominated a department of government, without the means of enforcing its decrees. In a country where laws govern, courts of justice necessarily are the medium of action and reaction between the government and the governed. The basis of individual security and the bond of union between the ruler and the citizen must ever be found in a judiciary sufficiently independent to disregard the will of power, and sufficiently energetic to secure to the citizen the full enjoyment of his rights. To establish such a one was evidently the object of the constitution." He contends that the establishment of a judiciary without power to enforce its decrees would have been to no purpose, and that where a jurisdiction is conferred and no forms prescribed for its exercise, there is an inherent power in the court to adopt a mode of proceeding adapted to the exigency of each case; 1 Hall, Am. L. J. 446, Fed. Cas. No. 5,420.

It has been a subject of controversy how far the decisions of the court of claims control the executive departments of the government of the United States in their action on similar cases. It was said by Richardson, C. J., that the decisions of the court of claims in general, not appealed from, are guides to the executive officers of the government, and furnish precedents for the executive departments in all like cases; Meigs v. U. S., 13 Wash. L. Rep. 122. This decision was thus criticised by Comptroller Lawrence: The court of claims undoubtedly had a right (1) to lay down law for itself, but it has no authority to lay down law (2) for the executive officers of the government, yet the opinion referred to assumes to do so. This is the necessary effect of the words employed by it, and whether so intended or not, it is their logical effect. For if the court of claims can prescribe not only its own duties and the rules and principles of law governing its own action, but also the same for accounting officers in the executive administration of the executive business of the government, it may for like reasons do the same for heads of executive departments and even the president himself; 6 Dec. First Comp. 238.

The federal courts will not interfere with the pension officers in the exercise of their discretion; Gaines v. Thompson, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 347, 19 L. Ed. 62; Carrick v. Lamar, 116 U. S. 423, 6 Sup. Ct. 424, 29 L. Ed. 677.

Questions purely political or arising out of international relations the courts do not assume to determine, but leave them to what they term the political departments of the government and follow the decisions of the executive. Such a question is the recognition of independence or belligerency which is discussed at length under the title of EXECUTIVE POWER.

The power of the courts to enjoin executive officers rests upon the same principles as those applicable to a mandamus. It is the general rule that the official action of the executive department of the government or of the state cannot be controlled by a writ of injunction; Fleming v. Guthrie, 32 W. Va. 1, 9 S. E. 23, 3 L. R. A. 53, 25 Am. St. Rep. 792; Bates v. Taylor, 87 Tenn. 319, 11 S. W. 266, 3 L. R. A. 316; Smith v. Myers, 109 Ind. 1, 9 N. E. 692, 58 Am. Rep. 375. The execution of orders of the president for removing intruders from government land will not be interfered with by injunction; Guthrie v. Hall, 1 Okl. 454, 34 Pac. 380.

An injunction may be obtained to protect a de facto officer whose title is disputed as well as that of one de jure, but it is not an appropriate means of determining a title to an office; In re Sawyer, 124 U. S. 210, 8 Sup. Ct. 482, 31 L. Ed. 402. In neither of these cases, however, is there involved any question of conflict between the executive and judicial power, inasmuch as the latter legitimately extends to and includes proceeding for the trial of title to office by quo warranto, which title see.

The power of staying the execution of a death sentence pending an appeal conferred by law on a court is not the granting of a reprieve within the meaning of a constitutional grant of executive power, but is a judicial power included in the separation of government into three independent departments; Parker v. State, 135 Ind. 534, 35 N. E. 179, 23 L. R. A. 859. See Butler v. State, 97 Ind. 373.

In State v. Doyle, 40 Wis. 175, 22 Am. Rep. 692, which was an application for a mandamus against the state officer seeking to require him to revoke the license of an insurance company, return was made pleading an injunction of the circuit court of the United States to restrain the Secretary of State from revoking the license, and it was held that "where a suit is prosecuted in a federal court by a private party against a state officer who has no personal interest or liability in the action, but is sued in his official capacity only, to affect a right of the state only, the state is the real defendant, within the prohibition of the 11th amendment to the federal constitution. A circuit court of the United States has therefore no jurisdiction of a suit by a foreign corporation to restrain a state officer from revoking (as required by the law of the state) a license granted the plaintiff corporation to do business in the state."

So also the power to exclude or to expel aliens, being a power affecting international relations, is vested in the political departments of the government and is to be regulated by treaty or by act of congress and to be executed by the executive authority according to the regulations so established, except so far as the judicial department has been authorized by treaty or by statute or is required by the paramount law of the constitution to intervene; Fong Yue Ting v. U. S., 149 U. S. 698, 13 Sup. Ct. 1016, 37 L. Ed. 905. See ALIEN; CHINESE.

Of all the instances of what appears to an American legal mind the confusion of powers under the English system, none is more striking than the commingling of executive and judicial duties found in the office of the lord chancellor.

In commenting upon the alteration in his customary position by the powers of an administrative character conferred upon him by the Judicature Acts, a recent writer says, "It would appear, to the independent observer, that the tenure, the power of appointments, and the administrative duties of the chancellor, though necessarily pertinent to his high office, are inconsistent with his position as chief judge, co-equal and co-ordinate with the others, and that if the intention of the statute was to confer that position upon him, it was contrary to English usage, if not unconstitutional." Inderwick, King's Peace 232.

There has been much discussion as to whether the courts, in decisions dealing with labor strikes and public commotion arising out of them, have extended their jurisdiction beyond recognized principles. In this discussion the phrase "government by injunction" has been constantly used. The cases are cited under the titles: INJUNCTION; CONTEMPT; LABOR UNION; CONSPIRACY; COMBINATION; BOYCOTT; STRIKES; and do not require further discussion here. See also, 13 Law Quart. Rev. 347; 31 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 1, 782; 34 id. 576; 37 id. 1; 3 Va. L. Reg. 625; Rep. Am. Bar. Assn. 1894, p. 299; 29 Am. L. Rev. 282.

In impeachment proceedings, the legislature acts judicially; it was so held in sustaining the impeachment proceedings against Governor Sulzer at a special session, although they were not specified by the governor in his call.

See DELEGATION; EXECUTIVE POWER; LEGISLATIVE POWER; CONSTITUTIONAL; JUDGMADE LAW; JURISDICTION; JURY; JUDGE.

JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS. A proceeding which takes place in or under the authority of a court of justice, or which relates in some way to the administration of justice, or which legally ascertains any right or liability. Hereford v. People, 197 Ill. 222, 64 N. E. 310.

Conclusive presumptions are made in favor of judicial proceedings. Thus, it is an undoubted rule of pleading that nothing shall be intended to be out of the jurisdiction of a superior court but that which is so expressly alleged; 1 Saund. 74; 10 Q. B. 411, 455. So also, it is presumed, with respect to such writs as are actually issued by the superior courts at Westminster, that they are duly issued, and in a case in which the courts have jurisdiction, unless the contrary appears on the face of them; and all such writs will of themselves, and without any further allegation, protect all officers and others in their aid acting under them; and this, too, although they are on the face of them irregular, or even void in form; 6 Co. 54 a; 10 Q. B. 411, 455.

The rule is well settled that words spoken in the course of judicial proceedings, though they are such as impute crime to another, and therefore if spoken elsewhere would import malice and be actionable in themselves, are not actionable if they are applicable and pertinent to the subject of inquiry. And this extends not merely to regular courts of justice, but to all inquiries before magistrates, referees, municipal, military, and ecclesiastical bodies; and they are only restrained by this rule, viz., that they shall be made in good faith to courts or tribunals having jurisdiction of the subject, and power to hear and decide the matter of complaint or accusation, and that they are not resorted to as a cloak for private malice. The question, therefore, in such cases is, not whether the words spoken are true, not whether they are actionable in themselves, but whether they were spoken in the course of judicial proceedings, and whether they were relevant and pertinent to the cause or subject of inquiry; Newell, Def. Lib. & Sland. 424; Heard, Lib. & S. § 101. The rule that no action will lie for words spoken or written in the course of any judicial proceeding has been acted upon from the earliest times. In 4 Co. 14 b, it was adjudged that if one exhibits articles to justices of the peace, "in this case the parties shall not have, for any matter contained in such articles, any action upon the case, for they had pursued the ordinary course of justice in such cases; and if actions should be permitted in such cases, those who have just cause for complaint would not dare to complain, for fear of infinite vexation." And it has been decided that, though an affidavit made in a judicial proceeding is false, slanderous, and malicious, no action will lie against the party making it; 18 C. B. 126; 4 H. & N. 568.

The general rule is subject to this qualification: that in all cases where the object or occasion of the words or writing is redress for an alleged wrong, or a proceeding in a tribunal or before some individual or associated body of men, such tribunal, individual, or body must be vested with authority to render judgment or make a decision in the case, or to entertain the proceeding, in order to give them the protection of privileged communications. This qualification of the rule runs through all the cases where the question is involved; Odg. Lib. & Sl. 188, n.; Heard, Lib. & S. § 104.

Statements made extra-judicially to a magistrate with a view to asking his advice are not a judicial proceeding; 3 B. & C. 24.

Official Records of the States. The constitution provides that full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other state. This applies as well to the judgments and records of the courts of the several territories; Sucsenbach v. Wagner, 41 Minn. 108, 42 N. W. 925. Congress may by general laws prescribe the manner in which such acts, records, and proceedings shall be proved and the effect thereof. The term records includes all executive, judicial, legislative, and ministerial acts, constituting the public records of the state; Desty, Fed. Const. 203; White v. Burnley, 20 How. (U. S.) 250, 15 L. Ed. 886; Watrous' Heirs v. McGrew, 16 Tex. 509.

Legislative acts must be authenticated by the seal of the state; U. S. v. Johns, 4 Dall. (U. S.) 412, 1 L. Ed. 888.

JUDICIAL SALE. A sale, by authority of some competent tribunal, by an officer authorized by law for the purpose. The term includes sales by sheriffs, marshals, masters, commissioners, or by trustees, executors, or administrators, where the latter sell under the decree of a court.

A sale, whether public or private, made by a receiver, pursuant to the direction or authority given by the court; In re Denison, 114 N. Y. 621, 21 N. E. 97.

It is premature and erroneous to decree a sale of property to satisfy incumbrances thereon before ascertaining the amounts and priorities of the liens binding such property; Bristol Iron & Steel Co. v. Caldwell, 95 Va. 47, 27 S. E. 838.

A decree confirming a master's sale, and declaring that the title be vested in the purchaser "upon the payment of the purchase money," vests no title in such purchaser until the purchase money is paid; Blair v. Blair (Tenn.) 41 S. W. 1078.

The officer who makes the sale conveys all the rights of the defendant, and all other persons legally affected by the proceedings, in the property sold. Under such a sale there is no warranty, either express or implied, of the thing sold: The Monte Allegre, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 616, 6 L. Ed. 174; Boorum v. Tucker, 51 N. J. Eq. 135, 26 Atl. 456; Wright v. Tichenor, 104 Ind. 185, 3 N. E. 853. A sale of real estate does not conclude one not a party to those proceedings; and whatever title he had to the property so sold remains unaffected by the sale; United Lines Telegraph Co. v. Trust Co., 147 U. S. 431, 13 Sup. Ct. 396, 37 L. Ed. 231. Where the property sold under a decree is correctly represented by a plat, referred to in the advertisement and exhibited at the sale, which discloses an encroachment on a street, the purchaser cannot plead ignorance thereof; Carneal v. Lynch, 91 Va. 114, 20 S. E. 959, 50 Am. St. Rep. 819. A purchaser at a judicial sale, not made under compulsory process, can set up eviction of a paramount title as a defence in an action for the purchase money, but where land is sold in equity to pay the debts of an estate, and a judgment has to be rendered against the purchaser for the purchase money, he cannot enjoin its collection because of eviction; Latimer v. Wharton, 41 S. C. 508, 19 S. E. 855, 44 Am. St. Rep. 739.

The doctrine of caveat emptor applies to a sale under a decree foreclosing a mortgage, and the purchaser cannot rely upon statements made by the officer conducting the sale that he will get a title free from incumbrance; Norton v. Trust Co., 40 Neb. 394, 58 N. W. 953.

The purchaser of a leasehold interest at a sheriff's sale is charged with notice of the lease and subject to its covenants and conditions; Aderhold v. Supply Co., 158 Pa. 401, 28 Atl. 22; and a purchaser at such sale of an heir's interest is bound by notice given at the sale by decedent's heirs that the interest was subject in the purchaser's hands to the right, if any, of decedent's estate to charge the heir's indebtedness against his share; Donaldson's Estate, 158 Pa. 292, 27 Atl. 959. Where a conveyance from a life tenant is procured by fraud and the property sold under a judgment against a vendee, a purchaser at that sale with knowledge of the fraud can hold against the devisees in remainder; Fields v. Bush, 94 Ga. 664, 21 S. E. 827.

A decree homologating proceedings at a family meeting to sell a child's property will protect a purchaser in good faith; Dauteville v. Shaw, 47 La. Ann. 882, 17 South. 345. Equity will not relieve a purchaser from complying with the terms of sale because of a defect in the title, rendering the title unmarketable, of which the purchaser was cognizant; Stewart v. Devries, 81 Md. 525, 32 Atl. 285. Where land is sold under a condition not authorized by the decree of sale, the purchaser will not be compelled to take the title although his son signed the condition without apprehending its effect; Recor v. Blackburn, 71 Hun 54, 24 N. Y. Supp. 692. It is well settled that "the title of an innocent purchaser of land at a judicial sale under a mortgage is not affected by the usurious character of such mortgage." Sharpe v. Tatnall, 5 Del. Ch. 302; Elliott v. Wood, 53 Barb. (N. Y.) 285. See as to bona fide purchaser, Riley v. Martinelli, 97 Cal. 575, 32 Pac. 579, 21 L. R. A. 38, 33 Am. St. Rep. 209. When real estate is sold by the sheriff or marshal the sale is subject to the confirmation of the court, or it may be set aside. See McPherson v. Foster, 4 Wash. C. C. 45, Fed. Cas. No. 8,921; Bleeker v. Bond, 4 Wash. C. C. 322, Fed. Cas. No. 1,536.

An officer at a sale on execution conducted by himself cannot act as agent, with full discretionary powers of an absent person in the purchase of property, since the law casts on him the duty of fidelity to the execution debtor, and such purchase by the officer is void, and confers no title on his principal; Caswell v. Jones, 65 Vt. 457, 26 Atl. 529, 20 L. R. A. 503, 36 Am. St. Rep. 879.

Any statements made with a purpose to deter bidding may avoid the sale; Phelps v. Benson, 161 Pa. 418, 29 Atl. 86; Herndon v. Gibson, 38 S. C. 357, 17 S. E. 145, 20 L. R. A. 545, 37 Am. St. Rep. 765; Barnes v. Mays, 88 Ga. 696, 16 S. E. 67.

It is generally said to be a rule that mere inadequacy of price is not of itself sufficient ground for setting aside a judicial sale; Bethlehem Iron Co. v. Ry. Co., 49 N. J. Eq. 356, 23 Atl. 1077; Passmore v. Moore (Ky.) 22 S. W. 325; Dazet v. Landry, 21 Nev. 291, 30 Pac. 1064; Pewabic Min. Co. v. Mason, 145 U. S. 349, 12 Sup. Ct. 887, 36 L. Ed. 732; and that there must be shown in addition to inadequacy some fraud, accident, mistake, or other special circumstance to warrant rescission of the contract; Harman v. Copenhaver, 89 Va. 836, 17 S. E. 482. But the general rule as stated is not sustained without qualifications, since the inadequacy may be so gross as to shock the conscience of the court, as it is frequently expressed, and to be regarded as of itself sufficient ground for setting aside the sale; Connell v. Wilhelm, 36 W. Va. 598, 15 S. E. 245; as where land valued at $8,000, with incumbrances amounting to $2,700 was sold at $2,000; Johnson v. Avery, 56 Minn. 12, 57 N. W. 217; or where the same land brought at a subsequent sale $1,500; Johnson v. Avery, 60 Minn. 262, 62 N. W. 283, 51 Am. St. Rep. 529. Where the price is grossly inadequate, the court will be quick to seize upon any other circumstance impeaching the fairness of the transaction; Schroeder v. Young, 161 U. S. 334, 16 Sup. Ct. 512, 40 L. Ed. 721; or the least irregularity in the proceeding; Warder-Bushnell-Glessner Co. v. Allen, 63 Mo. App. 456. See as to inadequacy, Bean v. Hoffendorfer, 84 Ky. 685, 2 S. W. 556, 3 S. W. 138.

A sale of property as a whole may be confirmed if the decree that it be so sold is not objected to, and there is no offer of a better bid in case the bidding be reopened; Central Trust Co. v. R. Co., 60 Fed. 9. The objection that different parcels of real estate were sold together cannot be made by one who has suffered no injury therefrom; Parker v. Car-Wheel Co., 108 Ala. 140, 18 South. 938.

Combinations to prevent competitive bidding, and any conduct at the sale upon the part of interested parties which is fraudulent will make the sale void, as where there was an agreement between judgment creditors without knowledge of the debtor that one should refrain from bidding, in consideration of a promise to pay his judgment, made by the other, the sale was held void for fraud; Phelps v. Benson, 161 Pa. 418, 29 Atl. 86; and where a mortgagor publicly announced at the sale that she was a widow dependent upon the premises for support, that she intended to bid, and that she requested no one to bid against her, the sale was set aside; Herndon v. Gibson, 38 S. C. 357, 17 S. E. 145, 20 L. R. A. 545, 37 Am. St. Rep. 765. One intending to purchase commits fraud by paying another not to bid against him; Goble v. O'Connor, 43 Neb. 49, 61 N. W. 131; Saxton v. Seiberling, 48 Ohio St. 554, 29 N. E. 179; and on disclosure of the facts after sale, payment of purchase money, and conveyance, an administrator's sale may be set aside; Barnes v. Mays, 88 Ga. 696, 16 S. E. 67; to show such fraud evidence is admissible of the amount intended to be bid by the competitor who was hired not to bid; id.; but where the competitor is induced by an execution creditor under a secret agreement to refrain from bidding, it is incompetent for the creditor to show on a petition for subrogation that the property brought less than its market value; 24 Pittsb. Leg. J. 92. Where during an administrator's sale, one of the bidders arranged with the others for a consideration to stop bidding, and he thereby obtained the property for less than its market value, the sale was void; Ingalls v. Rowell, 149 Ill. 163, 36 N. E. 1016; but where there is an agreement between two persons to prevent bidding, and one of them purchases the land, the sale will not be set aside at the instance of the other on the ground that he was prevented from bidding by reason of inducement offered by the purchaser; Harrell v. Wilson, 108 N. C. 97, 12 S. E. 889. An agreement between five lien holders, any one of whom was financially unable to bid for himself, that one should bid on the property as trustee for them all, was not invalid as a combination to discourage bidding; Gulick v. Webb, 41 Neb. 706, 60 N. W. 13, 43 Am. St. Rep. 720.

Upon the refusal of a purchaser at a judicial sale to fulfil his contract, the property may be resold and such purchaser held liable for any deficiency in price arising upon the second sale; Stuart v. Gay, 127 U. S. 518, 8 Sup. Ct. 1279, 32 L. Ed. 191. But it has been held that to be held liable he must be served with a rule, awarded after the sale was reported, to show cause why he should not complete his purchase, or in default, the property to be resold; Stout v. Mercantile Co., 41 W. Va. 339, 23 S. E. 571, 56 Am. St. Rep. 843.

See an elaborate and valuable note on the subject of injunctions against judicial sales in 30 L. R. A. 98-143; and a similar note upon the protection to purchasers and who is a bona fide purchaser, in 21 L. R. A. 33.

JUDICIAL SEPARATION. See SEPARATION.

JUDICIAL WRITS. In English Practice. The capias and all other writs subsequent to the original writ not issuing out of chancery, but from the court to which the original was returnable.

Being grounded on what had passed in that court in consequence of the sheriff's return, they are called judicial writs, in contradistinction to the writs issued out of chancery, which were called original writs; 3 Bla. Com. 282.

JUDICIARY. The system of courts of justice in a country. The department of government charged or concerned with the administration of justice. The judges taken collectively; as, the liberties of the people are secured by a wise and independent judiciary. The term is in very current use in designating the method of selecting judges in a state or country,—as, an elective judiciary.

As an adjective: Of or pertaining to the administration of justice or the courts; judicial,—the judiciary act, the judiciary amendment, the judiciary question, etc. See COURT; JUDGE; 3 Story, Const. 5th ed. § 1576.

JUDICIARY ACT. The act of congress of Sept. 24, 1789, establishing the federal courts of the United States.

This act, of which the authorship is attributed to Oliver Ellsworth, long remained in force without substantial change, save in the extension of the system as required by the growth of the nation. Its provisions are embodied in the Revised Statutes.

This act, "considering the complex and highly artificial nature of the federal jurisdiction, is justly regarded as 'one of the most remarkable instances of wise, sagacious, and thoroughly considered legislative enactments in the history of the law." Jones v. Foreman, 66 Ga. 371, 373.

"The wisdom and forethought with which it was drawn have been the admiration of succeeding generations. And so well was it done that it remains to the present day, with a few unimportant changes, the foundation of our system of judicature, and the law which confers, governs, controls, and limits the powers of all the federal courts, except the Supreme court, and which largely regulates the exercise of its powers." U. S. v. Holliday, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 407, 414, 18 L. Ed. 182.

Numerous amendments have been passed from time to time, the most important of which were the acts of March 3, 1875, and March 3, 1887, amended August 13, 1888. The act of March 3, 1891, created the circuit courts of appeals; and the system of federal courts was greatly changed by the new Judicial Code, enacted March 3, 1911, and in effect, on January 1, 1912. See UNITED STATES COURTS.

JUDICIUM. In Roman Law. The proceeding before a judge or judex (q. v.) to obtain his decision of the legal issue, presented as the result of the proceedings in jure. Sohm. Inst. Rom. L. § 34. See IN JUDICIO; IN JURE.

JUDICIUM CAPITALE. In English Law. Judgment of death; capital judgment. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 39, § 2. Called also "judicium vite amissionis," judgment of loss of life. Id. lib. 2, c. 1, § 5.

JUDICIUM DEI (Lat. the judgment or decision of God). In Old English Law. A term applied to trials by ordeal; for, in all trials of this sort, God was thought to interfere in favor of the innocent, and so decide the cause. Now abolished.

JUDICIUM PARIUM. In English Law. Judgment of the peers; judgment of one's peers; trial by jury. Magna Carta, c. 29. See JURY.

JUGE. In French Law. Judge. It is applied in strictness only to judges of the inferior courts. Members of the Cour d'Appel and of the Cour de Cassation are called Conseillers.

JUGE DE PAIX. In French Law. A justice of the peace. See COURTS OF FRANCE.

JUGE D'INSTRUCTION. In French Law. An officer subject to the procureur-general, who in cases of criminal offences receives the complaints of the parties injured, and who summons and examines witnesses upon oath, and after communication with the procureur-general draws up the forms of accusation. They have also the right, subject to the approval of the same superior officer, to admit the accused to bail. They are usually chosen from among the regular judges. By the act of December 8, 1897, changes of the most radical character were introduced. Under this law, within twenty-four hours of his arrest, an accused person must be conducted before the procureur who must require the juge d'instruction to question him immediately. In case of his refusal, absence, or other obstacle, the accused must be examined without delay by the official designated by the public minister. In default of examination within the time prescribed, the public prosecutor must order him to be set at liberty, and any person kept confined for more than twenty-four hours in the place of detention without examination, or without being brought before the public prosecutor shall be considered as arbitrarily detained, and all violations of this law by officials are to be prosecuted as outrages against liberty. At the examination the magistrate having verified the identity of the accused, is required to make known to him the facts charged against him and receive his declaration, first having warned him that he is free not to make any. Mention of this warning must be made in the procès-verbal. If the accusation is sustained, the magistrate shall inform the accused of his right to choose a counsel, and if he makes no choice, shall himself appoint one, if the accused demands it. Mention of this formality must be made in the procès-verbal. If the accused has been found outside of the arrondissement where the warrant was issued, and at a distance of more than ten myriameters (about 60 miles) from the principal place of the arrondissement, he is conducted before the public prosecutor of the one in which he was found and by him examined. The accused is not removed from this jurisdiction against his consent, and if when the inquiry is made of him, that is refused, information is sent to the officer who signed the warrant, with a statement of facts bearing on the identity of the person. The warning must be given to the accused at this examination that he is free not to make any declarations, and it must be mentioned in the procès-verbal. The juge d'instruction charged with the matter decides immediately upon the receipt of this message whether there is reason to order the transfer. In case of flagrant crime the juge d'instruction can proceed to examine him immediately if there is urgency resulting from the condition of a witness in danger of death, or the existence of indications likely to disappear, or even if he is taken away from the place. If the accused remains in custody, he can immediately have the first examination and communicate freely with his counsel. Provisions of the law of July 14, 1865, amending article 613 of the code of criminal instruction are abrogated in all that concerns places of detention subjected to the cell régime. There may be an interdiction of communication ordered by the juge d'instruction for ten days, which may be once only renewed for ten days more. In each case the interdiction of communication shall not apply to the counsel of the accused. He must make known the name of his counsel, and whether detained or set free, cannot be examined unless with his express consent except in the presence of his counsel. The counsel can only act for him after having been authorized by the magistrate, and in case of refusal, a note should be made of the incident in the procès-verbal. The counsel should be summoned by letter at least twenty-four hours in advance. The counsel is entitled to be informed by the recorder of the inquiries to which the accused is to be subjected and of every order made by the judge. Journal Officiel de la République Française, Dec. 10, 1897.

JUICIO. In Spanish Law. A trial or suit. White, New Recop. b. 3, tit. 4, c. 1.

JUICIO DE APEO. In Spanish Law. The decree of a competent tribunal directing the determining and marking the boundaries of lands or estates.

JUICIO DE CONCURSO DE ACREEDORES. In Spanish Law. The decree obtained by a debtor against his creditors, or by the creditors against their debtor, for the payment of the amount due, according to the respective rank of each creditor, when the property of the debtor is insufficient to pay the whole of his liabilities.

JUMPING BAIL. A colloquial expression describing the act of the principal in a bail bond in violating the condition of the obligation by failing to do the thing stipulated, as, not appearing in court on a particular day to abide the event of a suit or the order of court, but instead, withdrawing or fleeing from the jurisdiction. Anderson's L. Dict.

JUNIOR. Younger. This has been held to be no part of a man's name, but an addition by use, and a convenient distinction between a father and son of the same name. People v. Collins, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 549; Com. v. Perkins, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 388.

Any matter that distinguishes persons renders the addition of junior or senior unnecessary; 1 Mod. Ent. 35; Salk. 7. But if the father and son have both the same name, the father shall be prima facie intended, if junior be not added, or some other matter of distinction; Salk. 7; 6 Co. 20; 11 id. 39; Hob. 330. If father and son have the same name and addition, and the former sue the latter, the writ is abatable unless the son have the further addition of junior, or the younger. But if the father be the defendant and the son the plaintiff, there is no need of the further addition of senior, or the elder, to the name of the father; 2 Hawk. Pl. Cr. 187.

JUNIOR BARRISTER. A barrister under the rank of queen's counsel. Moz. & W. Also the junior of two counsel employed on the same side in a case. See BARRISTER.

JUNIPERUS SABINA (Lat.). In Medical Jurisprudence. A plant commonly called savin.

It is used for lawful purposes in medicine, but too frequently for the criminal purpose of producing abortion, generally endangering the life of the woman. It is usually administered in powder or oil. The dose of oil for lawful purposes, for a grown person, is from two to four drops. Parr, Med. Dict. Sabina. Foderé mentions a case where a large dose of powdered savin had been administered to an ignorant girl in the seventh month of her pregnancy, which had no effect on the fœtus. It, however, nearly took the life of the girl. Foderé, tome iv. p. 431. Given in sufficiently large doses, four or six grains, in the form of powder, it kills a dog in a few hours; and even its insertion into a wound has the same effect. 3 Orfila, Traité des Poisons 42. For a form of indictment for administering savin to a woman quick with child, see 3 Chit. Cr. L. 798. See 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 316.

JUNK-SHOP. A place where odds and ends are purchased and sold. City Council of Charleston v. Goldsmith, 12 Rich. (S. C.) 470. In this case it was said that "it is perfectly immaterial whether it is a large or a small shop," and a person was properly indicted and convicted for keeping such a house without license who bought from other shops, and also from persons bringing to his shop the articles which make a junk-shop. Where a tax was laid upon "stores" in which the stock never exceeds in value $2,000, the term was held to cover a store kept by a dealer in old iron and other metals, old glass, old rope, and old paper stock; Pitts v. City of Vicksburg, 72 Miss. 181, 16 South. 418.

Acts prohibiting the keeping of such shops without license and prescribing a fine for violation of the act are constitutional; Marmet v. State, 45 Ohio St. 63, 12 N. E. 463; although they impose different licenses upon dealers in general merchandise and those who sell specified articles; City of New Orleans v. Kaufman, 29 La. Ann. 283, 29 Am. Rep. 328; but such a tax was held invalid when a municipal ordinance clearly showed that it was for revenue, an act for raising revenue not being an exercise of police power; Pitts v. Vicksburg, 72 Miss. 181, 16 South. 418.

See City of Grand Rapids v. Brandy, 105 Mich. 670, 64 N. W. 29, 32 L. R. A. 116, 55 Am. St. Rep. 472; PAWNBROKERS.

JURA. As to titles based on this word, see the corresponding titles under Jus.

JURA FISCALIA (Lat.). Rights of the exchequer. 3 Bla. Com. 45.

JURA IN RE (Lat.). In Civil Law. Rights in a thing, as opposed to rights to a thing (jura ad rem). Rights in a thing which are not lost upon loss of possession, and which give a right to an action in rem against whoever has the possession. These rights are of four kinds: dominium, hereditas, scribitus, pignus. Heinzeclius, Elem. Jur. Civ. § 333. See JUS IN RE.

JURA PERSONARUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. Rights which belong to men in their different characters or relations, as father, apprentice, citizen, etc. 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 122, n.

JURA REGALIA (Lat.). Royal rights. 1 Bla. Com. 117, 119, 240; 3 id. 45.

JURAMENTÆ CORPORALES (Lat.). Corporal oaths, q. v.

JURAMENTUM CALUMNIÆ (Lat. oath of calumny). In Civil and Canon Law. An oath required of plaintiff and defendant, whether the parties themselves insist on it or not, that they are not influenced in seeking their right by malice, but believe their cause to be just. It was also required of the attorneys and procurators of the parties. Called, also, jusjurandum or sacramentum calumniæ. Calv. Lex.; Vicat, Voc. Jur. Utr.; Clerke, Pr. tit. 42.

JURAMENTUM JUDICIALE (Lat.). In Civil Law. An oath which the judge of his own accord, defers to either of the parties.

It is of two kinds: first, that which the judge defers for the decision of the cause, and which is understood by the general name juramentum judiciale, and is sometimes called suppletory oath, juramentum suppletorium; second, that which the judge defers in order to fix and determine the amount of the condemnation which he ought to pronounce, and which is called juramentum in litem. Pothier, Obl. p. 4, c. 3, s. 3, art. 3.

JURAT. In Practice. That part of an affidavit where the officer certifies that the same was "sworn" before him.

The jurat is usually in the following form, viz.: "Sworn and subscribed before me, on the — day of —, 1914. J. P., Justice of the Peace."

In some cases it has been held that it was essential that the officer should sign the jurat, and that it should contain his addition and official description; Jackson v. Stiles, 3 Cal. (N. Y.) 128. But see Chase v. Edwards, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 283; Proff. Not; Hawkins v. State, 136 Ind. 630, 36 N. E. 419. A jurat being no part of an affidavit, a general demurrer to the sufficiency of the affidavit will not reach a failure to add to the name of the person who administered the oath his official designation; Smith v. Walker, 93 Ga. 252, 18 S. E. 830.

An officer in some English corporations, chiefly in certain towns in Kent and Sussex, whose duties are similar to those of aldermen in others; stat. 1 Edw. IV.; 2 & 3 Edw. VI. c. 30; 13 Edw. I. c. 26.

Officers in the island of Jersey, of whom there are twelve, members of the royal court, and elected for life; 1 Steph. Com., 11th ed. 103; L. R. 1 P. C. 94.

JURATA (Lat.). In Old English Law. A jury of twelve men sworn. Especially, a jury of the common law, as distinguished from the assize, or jury established or re-established by stat. Hen. II.

The assize was a body of jurors summoned to answer certain specific questions in accordance with a positive law that such questions should be answered in that way. But in time the ordinary method of proof came to be the jury to which the parties agreed to submit these preliminary or incidental questions. This new body, so summoned, is the jurata into which the assize is converted; "assisa vertitur in juratam." 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 151.

The jurata, or common-law jury, was a jury called in to try the cause, upon the prayer of the parties themselves, in cases where a jury was not given by statute Hen. II., and as the jury was not given under the statute of Henry II., the writ of attain provided in that statute would not lie against a jurata for false verdict. It was common for the parties to a cause to request that the cause might be decided by the assisa, sitting as a jurata, in order to save trouble of summoning a new jury, in which case "cadit assisa et vertitur in juratam," and the cause is said to be decided non in modum assise, but in modum juratæ. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 335, 336; Glanville, lib. 13, c. 20; Bracton, lib. 3, c. 30. But this distinction has been long obsolete.

Juratæ were divided into: first, jurata dilatoria, which inquires out offenders against the law, and presents their names, together with their offences, to the judge, and which is of two kinds, major and minor, according to the extent of its jurisdiction; second, jurata judicaria, which gives verdict as to the matter of fact in issue, and is of two kinds, civilis, in civil causes, and criminalis, in criminal causes. Du Cange.

A clause in nisi prius records called the jury clause, so named from the word jurata, with which its Latin form begins. This entry, jurata ponitur in respectu, is abolished. Com. Law Proc. Act, 1852, § 104; Whart. Law Lex.; 9 Co. 32; 59 Geo. III. c. 46; 4 Bla. Com. 342. Such trials were usually held in churches, in presence of bishops, priests, and secular judges, after three days fasting, confession, communion, etc. Du Cange.

A certificate placed at the bottom of an affidavit, declaring that the affiant has been sworn or affirmed to the truth of the facts therein alleged. Its usual form is, "Sworn (or affirmed) before me, the — day of —, 19—." A jurat.

JURE DIVINO (Lat.). By divine right. Divine Right is the name generally given to the theory of government which holds monarchy to be the only legitimate form of government. The monarch and his legitimate heirs being, by divine right, entitled to the sovereignty, cannot forfeit that right by any misconduct, or any period of dispossession. But where the knowledge of the right heir is lost, the usurper, being in possession by the permission of God, is to be obeyed as the true heir. Sir Robert Filmer, the most distinguished exponent of the theory, died about 1650. See DIVINE RIGHT OF KINGS.

JURE PROPINQUITATIS (Lat.). By right of relationship. Co. Litt. 10 b.

JURE REPRESENTATIONIS (Lat.). By right of representation. See PER STIRPES. 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 219, n. 14, 224.

JURE UXORIS (Lat.). By right of a wife.

JURIDICAL. Relating to administration of justice, or office of a judge. Webster, Dict.

Regular; done in conformity to the laws of the country and the practice which is there observed.

JURIS CONSULTUS (Lat. skilled in the law). In Civil Law. A person who has such knowledge of the laws and customs which prevail in a state as to be able to advise, act, and to secure a person in his dealings. Cicero.

The early jurisconsults gave their opinions gratuitously, and were also employed in drawing up written documents. From Augustus to Adrian, only those allowed by the emperor could be jurisconsults; before and after those emperors, any could be jurisconsults who chose. If their opinion was unanimous, it had the force of law: if not, the prætor could follow which opinion he chose. Vicat, Voc. Jur. Utr.

There were two schools of jurisconsults at Rome, the Proculians and Labinians. The latter were founded by Labeo, and were in favor of innovation; the former by Capito, and held to the received doctrines. Cushing, Int. Rom. Law. §§ 5, 6.

JURIS ET DE JURE (Lat.). Of right and by law. A presumption is said to be juris et de jure when it is conclusive, i. e. when no evidence will be admitted to rebut it, in contradistinction to a presumption, which is simply juris, i. e. rebuttable by evidence; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 15, note; Wills, Circ. Ev. 29; Best, Pres. 20, § 17; Best, Ev. 43.

JURIS ET SEISINÆ CONJUNCTIO (Lat.). The union of seisin, or possession, and the right of possession, forming a complete title. 2 Bla. Com. 311.

JURISDICTION (Lat. jus, law, dicere, to declare). The authority by which judicial officers take cognizance of and decide causes. State v. Wakefield, 60 Vt. 618, 15 Atl. 181.

The power to hear and determine a cause. Parker v. Wallace, 3 Ohio 494; Grignon's Lessee v. Astor, 2 How. (U. S.) 338, 11 L. Ed. 283; Dahlgren v. County of Santa Cruz, 8 Cal. App. 622, 97 Pac. 681, where, after quoting this definition, the court adds: "And necessarily includes the power to decide it incorrectly as well as correctly;" and adds the following from People v. Sturtevant, 9 N. Y. 263, 59 Am. Dec. 536: "It does not relate to the rights of the parties as between themselves, but to the power of the court." In the California case, it was held that a gross error in the exercise of jurisdiction could not be annulled on certiorari.

The test of the jurisdiction of a court is whether or not it had power to enter upon the inquiry; not whether its conclusion in the course of it was right or wrong; Board of Com'rs of Lake County v. Platt, 79 Fed. 567, 25 C. C. A. 87.

The right of a judge to pronounce a sentence of the law, on a case or issue before him, acquired through due process of law. It includes power to enforce the execution of what is decreed. In re Ferguson, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 239; Hopkins v. Com., 3 Metc. (Mass.) 460.

"The right to adjudicate concerning the subject-matter in the given case. To constitute this there are three essentials: First, the court must have cognizance of the class of cases to which the one to be adjudicated belongs; second, the proper parties must be present; and third, the point decided upon must be, in substance and effect, within the issue;" Reynolds v. Stockton, 140 U. S. 254, 268, 11 Sup. Ct. 773, 35 L. Ed. 464.

"Jurisdiction is authority to decide the case either way." The Fair v. Specialty Co., 228 U. S. 22, 25, 33 Sup. Ct. 410, 57 L. Ed. 716. Ancillary jurisdiction. Where one court of chancery entertains a bill in aid of a suit commenced in another chancery jurisdiction, both being designed to operate upon the same subject-matter or property right, but where the first suit is inadequate to give complete relief for want of territorial jurisdiction over the entire subject of litigation, the subsequent suits are said to be ancillary to the first. A familiar illustration is a bill to foreclose a mortgage on a railroad passing through two or more states, in which ancillary bills are filed in states other than that in which the first suit is brought, without regard to the citizenship of the parties.

Appellate jurisdiction is that given by appeal or writ of error from the judgment of another court.

Assistant jurisdiction is that afforded by a court of chancery in aid of a court of law: as, for example, by a bill of discovery, or for the perpetuation of testimony, and the like.

Auxiliary jurisdiction is another name given to this jurisdiction in aid of a court of law.

Jurisdiction of the cause is the power over the subject-matter given by the laws of the sovereignty in which the tribunal exists.

Civil jurisdiction is that which exists when the subject-matter is not of a criminal nature.

Concurrent jurisdiction is that which is possessed over the same parties or subject-matter at the same time by two or more separate tribunals.

Consultative jurisdiction. Where one court aids another by giving an opinion on a matter which the latter has under consideration, the court which gives the opinion is said to exercise a consultative jurisdiction. 4 App. Cas. 30.

Criminal jurisdiction is that which exists for the punishment of crimes.

Exclusive jurisdiction is that which gives to one tribunal sole power to try the cause.

General jurisdiction is that which extends to a great variety of matters. General jurisdiction in law and equity is jurisdiction of every kind that a court can possess, of the person, subject-matter, territorial, and generally the power of the court in the discharge of its judicial duties. Mussen v. Granite Works, 63 Hun 367, 18 N. Y. Supp. 267.

Limited jurisdiction (called, also, special and inferior) is that which extends only to certain specified causes.

Original jurisdiction is that bestowed upon a tribunal in the first instance.

Jurisdiction of the person is that obtained by the appearance of the defendant before the tribunal. Bissell v. Briggs, 9 Mass. 462, 6 Am. Dec. 88.

Territorial jurisdiction is the power of the tribunal considered with reference to the territory within which it is to be exercised. Bissell v. Briggs, 9 Mass. 462, 6 Am. Dec. 88.

Cooley speaks of "courts of general jurisdiction, by which is meant that their authority extends to a great variety of matters, while others are only of special and limited jurisdiction," that is, have authority extending only to certain specified cases; Const. Lim., 5th ed. 502. The inferior federal courts, though of limited jurisdiction, are not technically inferior courts; McCormick v. Sullivant, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 192, 6 L. Ed. 300. There are courts which are competent to decide on their own jurisdiction and to exercise it to a final judgment without setting forth in their proceedings the facts and evidence on which it is rendered, whose record is absolute verity, which can be questioned only in an appellate court; other courts are so constituted that their judgments "can be looked through for the facts and evidence which are necessary to sustain them," whose decisions are not evidence of themselves to show jurisdiction and its lawful exercise; Grignon v. Astor, 2 How. (U. S.) 341, 11 L. Ed. 283.

Bouv.—111

The fundamental question of jurisdiction, first of the appellate court, and then of the court from which the record comes, presents itself on every writ of error and appeal and must be answered by the court whether propounded by counsel or not; Defiance Water Co. v. Defiance, 191 U. S. 184, 24 Sup. Ct. 63, 48 L. Ed. 140.

Jurisdiction is given by the law; Clyde & R. Plank Road Co. v. Parker, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 323; Baker v. Chisholm, 3 Tex. 157; and cannot be conferred by consent of the parties; Gamber v. Holben, 5 Mich. 331; Fields v. Walker, 23 Ala. 155; State v. Bonney, 34 Me. 223; Vose v. Morton, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 27, 50 Am. Dec. 750; Bell v. R. Co., 4 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 549; Huber v. Beck, 6 Ind. App. 47, 32 N. E. 1025; Hager v. Falk, 82 Wis. 644, 52 N. W. 432; Parkhurst v. Machine Co., 65 Hun 489, 20 N. Y. Supp. 395; St. Louis R. Co. v. Ry. Co., 52 Fed. 770; nor can silence or positive consent of parties confer on a federal court jurisdiction denied by statute; State of Indiana v. Tolleston Club, 53 Fed. 18. Where the jurisdiction of a court as to the subject-matter is limited, the consent of parties cannot enlarge it; Fleischman v. Walker, 91 Ill. 319. Where under a contract parties agree that in case of a breach one might be served with a writ in Scotland, the court refused to allow service on the defendant domiciled there; no agreement between individuals can empower a court to do an act which it is, by rules made under a statute, forbidden to do; [1896] 1 Q. B. 35. But a privilege defeating jurisdiction may be waived if the court has jurisdiction over the subject-matter; Raney v. McRae, 14 Ga. 589, 60 Am. Dec. 660; Campbell v. Wilson, 6 Tex. 379; Kenney v. Greer, 13 Ill. 432, 54 Am. Dec. 439; Boyers v. Elliott, 7 Humphr. (Tenn.) 209; Gracie v. Palmer, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 699, 5 L. Ed. 719; see Bunker v. Langs, 76 Hun 543, 28 N. Y. Supp. 210; and parties may admit facts which show jurisdiction; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Ramsey, 22 Wall. 322, 22 L. Ed. 823, where the files of the record were lost and the court thereupon presumed that they contained all necessary jurisdictional facts.

Jurisdiction given by the law of the sovereignty of the tribunal is held sufficient everywhere, at least as to all property within the sovereignty; The Globe, 2 Blatchf. 427, Fed. Cas. No. 5,483; Johnson v. Holley, 27 Mo. 594; and as to persons on whom process is actually and personally served within the territorial limits of jurisdiction, or who appear and by their pleadings admit jurisdiction; McMullen v. Guest, 6 Tex. 275; Barnes v. Harris, 4 N. Y. 375; Adams v. Lamar, 8 Ga. 83. See Wells v. Patton, 50 Kan. 732, 33 Pac. 15. But the appearance of a person on whom no personal service of process has been made, merely to object to the jurisdiction is not such an admission; Wright v. Boynton, 37 N. H. 9, 72 Am. Dec. 319; Bissell v. Briggs, 9 Mass. 462, 6 Am. Dec. 88.

Jurisdiction must be either of the subject-matter, which is acquired by exercising powers conferred by law over property within the territorial limits of the sovereignty, or of the person, which is acquired by actual service of process or personal appearance of the defendant. The question as to the possession of the former is to be determined according to the law of the sovereignty; Dav. 407; of the latter, as a simple question of fact. See CONFLICT OF LAW; FOREIGN JUDGMENTS.

Jurisdiction in a personal action cannot be obtained by service on a defendant outside of the jurisdiction; Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. Ed. 565. The courts of one state have no jurisdiction over persons of other states unless found within their territorial limits; Galpin v. Page, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 367, 21 L. Ed. 959.

Jurisdiction in rem over a non-resident's property can be obtained by proceedings against it, of which notice should be given in order to give a binding effect to the proceedings; such notice may be actual or constructive; Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. Ed. 565; see Stewart v. Anderson, 70 Tex. 588, 8 S. W. 295. Any judgment obtained in such proceedings has no effect beyond the property in question; no other property can be reached under it; nor can any suit be maintained on it, either in the same court or elsewhere; Cooper v. Reynolds, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 317, 19 L. Ed. 931.

Where the jurisdiction of a court is based upon the amount in controversy, some cases hold that the test is in the amount alleged in the pleadings to be due; Lord v. Goldberg, 81 Cal. 599, 22 Pac. 1126, 15 Am. St. Rep. 82; Abbott v. Gatch, 13 Md. 314, 71 Am. Dec. 635; but not if the amount is so alleged in bad faith; Fix v. Sissung, 83 Mich. 561, 47 N. W. 340, 21 Am. St. Rep. 616; it will be determined by the allegations of the complaint and not on ex parte affidavits; Holden v. Machinery Co., 82 Fed. 209. Where, on an appeal from a justice of the peace, it appears by testimony at the trial that the plaintiff's demand exceeded the statutory jurisdiction, there is no jurisdiction; Collins v. Collins, 37 Pa. 387. Where the amount in controversy appeared by the pleadings to be sufficient to give jurisdiction, but the jury found for a sum less than the jurisdictional amount, it was held that the court did not have jurisdiction; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. W. Co. v. Johnson, 67 Ind. 546; Darling v. Conklin, 42 Wis. 478; but it is also held that in such cases the judgment will stand, but without costs; Abbott v. Gatch, 13 Md. 314, 71 Am. Dec. 635. Where a defence is made to a part of a claim and the jury find for less than the full claim, the jurisdiction is not affected; Hardin v. Cass County, 42 Fed. 652.

"By matter in dispute is meant the subject of litigation—the matter for which the suit is brought—and upon which issue is joined, and in relation to which jurors are called and witnesses examined;" Lee v. Watson, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 339, 17 L. Ed. 557. In an action upon a money demand, where the general issue is pleaded, the matter in dispute is the debt claimed; Gray v. Blanchard, 97 U. S. 563, 24 L. Ed. 1108. In actions sounding in damages, the damages claimed give jurisdiction; Barry v. Edmunds, 116 U. S. 550, 6 Sup. Ct. 501, 29 L. Ed. 729; in cases impeaching the right to an office, the amount of the salary attached to the office is the criterion; Smith v. Adams, 130 U. S. 175, 9 Sup. Ct. 566, 32 L. Ed. 895; in ejectment the value of the land claimed determines the jurisdiction; Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co. v. Smith, 135 U. S. 195, 10 Sup. Ct. 728, 34 L. Ed. 95; and so it is in a bill to set aside a fraudulent conveyance as a cloud on the title; Simon v. House, 46 Fed. 317.

In a tax case it is measured by the value of the right to be protected and not by the amount of the tax for a single year; Berryman v. Board of Trustees, 222 U. S. 334, 32 Sup. Ct. 147, 56 L. Ed. 225; and in a suit to enjoin a threatened or continued commission of certain acts, the amount in controversy is the value of the right which plaintiff seeks to protect; Board of Trade of City of Chicago v. Cella Commission Co., 145 Fed. 28, 76 C. C. A. 28.

On the other hand, it has been held that in an action involving taxes, only one year's levy and not future taxes can be considered; Joint Dists. Nos. 70 and 98 v. School Dist. No. 11, 9 Kan. App. 883, 57 Pac. 1060. If only part of the claim is contested and it is thereby reduced below the jurisdictional amount, there is no jurisdiction; Citizens' Savings Bank v. Coffee Co., 91 S. W. 261, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 1200.

In all cases facts on which the jurisdiction of a federal court depends must in some form appear on the face of the record; its jurisdiction is limited, and the presumption is that a cause is without its jurisdiction unless the contrary affirmatively appear; Continental L. Ins. Co. v. Rhoads, 119 U. S. 237, 7 Sup. Ct. 193, 30 L. Ed. 380; until it is in some way shown by the record that the sum demanded is not the matter in dispute, that sum will govern in all questions of jurisdiction, but when it is shown that the sum demanded is not the real matter in suit, the sum shown and not the sum demanded will prevail; Hilton v. Dickinson, 108 U. S. 174, 2 Sup. Ct. 424, 27 L. Ed. 688; the amount of damages laid in the declaration is not conclusive upon the question of jurisdiction; if the court find that the amount of damages stated in the declaration is colorable for the purpose of creating a case within the jurisdiction of the circuit court, the jurisdiction is defeated, and it is the duty of the court to dismiss the proceedings; this may be shown by evidence or depositions taken in the cause; however done it should be upon due notice to the parties to be affected by the dismissal; Morris v. Gilmer, 129 U. S. 326, 9 Sup. Ct. 289, 32 L. Ed. 690. If this be made to appear "to the satisfaction of the circuit court at any time after suit has been brought," the court must dismiss the suit; Act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat. L. 472). If, from plaintiff's evidence at the trial, the amount laid in the complaint appears to have been beyond reasonable expectation of recovery, the action should be dismissed; Holden v. Machinery Co., 82 Fed. 209. Fictitious claims cannot be added to give jurisdiction; Smith v. Ins. Co., 33 La. Ann. 1071. Costs and interest in the appellate courts are excluded; Hartsook's Adm'r v. Crawford's Adm'r, 85 Va. 413, 7 S. E. 538. In suing for personal property, damages for detention cannot be added; Graves v. Thompson, 35 Wash. 282, 77 Pac. 384. The jurisdictional amount may appear by affidavit after appeal taken; U. S. v. Freight Ass'n, 166 U. S. 290, 17 Sup. Ct. 540, 41 L. Ed. 1007.

A plea of set-off will not deprive the court of jurisdiction, though, if established, it would reduce the plaintiff's recovery below the jurisdictional amount; Odell v. Culbert, 9 W. & S. (Pa.) 66, 42 Am. Dec. 317; Lord v. Goldberg, 81 Cal. 599, 22 Pac. 1126, 15 Am. St. Rep. 82; and where a defendant sets up a recoupment, he thereby accepts the jurisdiction; Merchants' Heat & Light Co. v. Clow & Sons, 204 U. S. 286, 27 Sup. Ct. 285, 51 L. Ed. 488, where it is said that "there is some difference in the decisions as to when the defendant becomes so far an actor as to submit to the jurisdiction," and the cases are cited.

In a creditor's bill several judgments held by different creditors cannot be added to make up the jurisdictional amount in the circuit court; Hunt v. Bender, 154 U. S. 556, Appx., 14 Sup. Ct. 1163, 18 L. Ed. 915. But it is otherwise where several plaintiffs are interested collectively under a common title, the validity of which is before the court; New Orleans P. Ry. Co. v. Parker, 143 U. S. 42, 12 Sup. Ct. 364, 36 L. Ed. 66. A reasonable attorney's fee, stipulated by the parties in case of a suit, may be added to the debt to make up its jurisdictional amount; Rogers v. Riley, 80 Fed. 759. Where the judgment in the supreme court of a territory exceeded $5,000, the supreme court of the United States has jurisdiction though the judgment in the trial court was for a less sum, and the amount is reached by adding interest to that judgment; Benson Min. & Smelting Co. v. Smelting Co., 145 U. S. 428, 12 Sup. Ct. 877, 36 L. Ed. 762. On the appeal it must be shown that the amount in controversy in the appellate court is sufficient; McCoy v. McCoy, 33 W. Va. 60, 10 S. E. 19; the plaintiff in error must show this fact; Wilson v. Blair, 119 U. S. 387, 7 Sup. Ct. 230, 30 L. Ed. 441.

A court of general jurisdiction is presumed to be acting within its jurisdiction till the contrary is shown; Brown, Jur. § 202; Wright v. Douglass, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 97; Town of Huntington v. Town of Charlotte, 15 Vt. 46. A court of limited jurisdiction, or a court acting under special powers, has only the jurisdiction expressly delegated; State v. Metzger, 26 Mo. 65; Wight v. Warner, 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 384; and it must appear from the record that its acts are within its jurisdiction; Proctor v. State, 5 Harr. (Del.) 387; Green v. Wheeler, 1 Scam. (Ill.) 554; Bersch v. Schneider, 27 Mo. 101; Clyde & R. P. R. Co. v. Parker, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 323; Sullivan v. Blackwell, 28 Miss. 737; Barrett v. Crane, 16 Vt. 246; Grignon v. Astor, 2 How. (U. S.) 319, 11 L. Ed. 283; see Metcalf v. Watertown, 128 U. S. 586, 9 Sup. Ct. 173, 32 L. Ed. 543; unless the legislature, by general or special law, remove this necessity; Bush v. Lindsey, 24 Ga. 245, 71 Am. Dec. 117; Small v. Hempstead, 7 Mo. 373; Kemp v. Kennedy, 1 Pet. C. C. 36, Fed. Cas. No. 7,686. See Bac. Abr. Courts (C, D).

The judgment of a court of another state is entitled to the presumption of validity; Gottlieb v. Grain Co., 181 N. Y. 563, 74 N. E. 1117; Dallas County v. Merrill, 77 Mo. 578; State v. Weber, 96 Minn. 422, 105 N. W. 490, 113 Am. St. Rep. 630; and when the record of proceedings in such a case does not show that every step essential to jurisdiction was duly taken, it must be presumed that the court proceeded to judgment only after acquiring jurisdiction; Smith v. Trust Co., 154 N. Y. 333, 48 N. E. 553; and the burden is on the defendant to show the nonexistence of jurisdictional facts; Russell v. Butler (Tex. Civ. App.) 47 S. W. 406; Gilchrist v. Oil Land Co., 21 W. Va. 115, 45 Am. Rep. 555.

Where one of two courts of concurrent jurisdiction has taken cognizance of a cause, the other will not entertain jurisdiction of the same cause; Brown, Jur. § 95; Gamble v. Warner, 16 Ohio 373; Henry v. Tupper, 27 Vt. 518; Conover v. New York, 25 Barb. (N. Y.) 513; Gould v. Hayes, 19 Ala. 438; Shar-on v. Terry, 36 Fed. 337, 1 L. R. A. 572; Ober v. Gallagher, 93 U. S. 199, 23 L. Ed. 829; Powers v. City Council of Springfield, 116 Mass. 84.

The leading general principle as to concurrent jurisdiction is that whichever court of those having such jurisdiction first acquires possession of a cause will retain it throughout; Wells, Jurisd. § 156; Gould v. Hayes, 19 Ala. 438; Conover v. New York, 25 Barb. (N. Y.) 513. A court which has acquired rightful jurisdiction of the parties and subject-matter will retain it for all purposes within the general scope of the equities to be enforced; Ober v. Gallagher, 93 U. S.

199, 23 L. Ed. 829; Taylor v. City of Fort Wayne, 47 Ind. 274; where concurrent jurisdiction may be exercised by the federal and state authorities, the court which first takes jurisdiction can be interfered with by no other court, state or federal. It is a subversion of the judicial power to take a cause from a court having jurisdiction, before its final decision is given; Ex parte Robinson, 6 McLean 355, Fed. Cas. No. 11,935; Mail v. Maxwell, 107 Ill. 554. The supreme court and the common pleas have concurrent jurisdiction in matters of equity; and pending a bill in the common pleas, the supreme court will not entertain jurisdiction for the same cause; Cleveland, P. & A. R. Co. v. Erie, 1 Grant 212.

The jurisdiction of the court thus first exercising jurisdiction extends to the execution of the judgment rendered; Hawes v. Orr, 10 Bush (Ky.) 431. Courts have no power to interfere with the judgments and decrees of other courts of concurrent jurisdiction; Anthony v. Dunlap, 8 Cal. 26; Revalk v. Kraemer, 8 Cal. 66, 68 Am. Dec. 304.

The rule that among courts of concurrent jurisdiction, that one which first obtains jurisdiction of a case has the exclusive right to decide every question arising in the case, is subject to some limitations; and is confined to suits between the same parties or privies, seeking the same relief or remedy, and to such questions or propositions as arise ordinarily and properly in the progress of the suit first brought, and does not extend to all matters which may by possibility become involved with it; Buck v. Colbath, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 334, 18 L. Ed. 257; Putnam v. New Albany, 4 Biss. 368, Fed. Cas. No. 11,481.

When either a federal or state court of competent jurisdiction takes possession of or acquires jurisdiction over property, that property is as effectually withdrawn from the jurisdiction of the other court as though removed to the territory of another sovereignty; Palmer v. Texas, 212 U. S. 118, 29 Sup. Ct. 230, 53 L. Ed. 435; Wabash R. Co. v. Adelbert College, 208 U. S. 38, 28 Sup. Ct. 182, 52 L. Ed. 379.

Where the first court, because of its limited jurisdiction or mode of proceeding, is not capable of determining the whole controversy, another court may take jurisdiction and accomplish it; Gould v. Hayes, 19 Ala. 438.

Where in a divorce case the court awarded the custody of the children to the mother, retaining jurisdiction for further order in that behalf, the court of another state, to which the mother removed and died, had jurisdiction to determine as to the custody of the children as between the father and the guardian appointed by the court of the other state, with whom the children had been left by the mother; Clarke v. Lyon, 82 Neb. 625, 118 N. W. 472, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 171.

At common law the rule is well established that the pendency of a prior suit in personam in a foreign court, between the same parties for the same cause of action, is no sufficient cause for stay or bar of a suit instituted in a local court. This rule obtains in regard to actions pending in another state; White v. Whitman, 1 Curtis, 494, Fed. Cas. No. 17,561; Smith v. Lathrop, 44 Pa. 326, 84 Am. Dec. 448; but see Ex parte Balch, 3 McLean 221, Fed. Cas. No. 790, where it was held that the pendency of a suit between the same parties and respecting the same subject-matter in another state, may be pleaded in abatement in the federal courts, but to make such plea effectual it must show that the court where suit is has jurisdiction.

It was held that the provision of the federal constitution giving to congress exclusive jurisdiction over lands purchased by consent of the state legislature does not oust the jurisdiction of state courts to try civil actions of tort, since congress has not provided for them; Madden v. Arnold, 22 App. Div. 240, 47 N. Y. Supp. 757. The court of appeals of that state held that jurisdiction of such actions unquestionably remained in the state in the absence of legislation by congress; Barrett v. Palmer, 135 N. Y. 336, 31 N. E. 1017, 17 L. R. A. 720, 31 Am. St. Rep. 835; and the United States supreme court upheld the judgment on the ground that the federal jurisdiction had lapsed under the terms of the cession and declined to determine the other question; Palmer v. Barrett, 162 U. S. 399, 16 Sup. Ct. 837, 40 L. Ed. 1015.

In another class of cases it has been held that a jurisdiction executed by the state courts may be entirely ousted by the interposition of congress by a statute conferring on the federal courts exclusive jurisdiction. An action against a foreign consul may be so brought in the state court; Wilcox v. Lugo, 118 Cal. 639, 45 Pac. 676, 50 Pac. 758, 45 L. R. A. 579, 62 Am. St. Rep. 305.

Any act of a tribunal beyond its jurisdiction is of no effect whatever; Kenney v. Greer, 13 Ill. 432, 54 Am. Dec. 439; Corwithe v. Griffing, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 9; State v. Richmond, 26 N. H. 232; whether without its territorial jurisdiction; Ableman v. Booth, 21 How. (U. S.) 506, 16 L. Ed. 169; Cook v. Walker, 15 Ga. 457; or beyond its powers; Kenney v. Greer, 13 Ill. 432, 54 Am. Dec. 439; Barrett v. Crane, 16 Vt. 246.

When a court has jurisdiction of a res its judgment or decree may affect the property interest of its owner, though a non-resident over whom personal jurisdiction neither was nor could be acquired, and, conversely, the action of a court may operate on property beyond the jurisdiction if the owner has been personally subjected to it. Illustrations of this are numerous. A court of equity has the power to control the disposition of land situated in another jurisdiction or even a foreign country, if the person who has the ownership or control is before the court; Corbett v. Nutt, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 464, 475, 19 L. Ed. 976; Watkins v. Holman, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 57, 10 L. Ed. 873; or to order the cancellation or discharge of a foreign mortgage; Williams v. Fitzhugh, 37 N. Y. 444; and in the famous case of Penn v. Lord Baltimore, 1 Ves. 444, the English court of chancery decreed specific performance of a contract made in England concerning the boundaries of the colonies of Delaware, Maryland and Pennsylvania.

Courts always refuse to send officers into other jurisdictions to abate nuisances or partition land; Mississippi & M. R. Co. v. Ward, 2 Black (U. S.) 485, 17 L. Ed. 311; Wimer v. Wimer, 82 Va. 890, 5 S. E. 536, 3 Am. St. Rep. 126; the principle being that where the suit concerns specific property the res must be present within the jurisdiction, but the United States circuit court in Nevada granted an injunction to restrain a defendant from wrongfully diverting, in California, waters naturally flowing down a river having its source in that state and flowing into and through the state of Nevada, where complainant's lands were situated; Miller & Lux v. Rickey, 127 Fed. 573, where it was held on a plea to the jurisdiction that it was an action transitory in its nature and the court having jurisdiction of defendant's person had jurisdiction to try the same. See a criticism of this case in 17 Harv. L. Rev. 572. That the objection above stated as to proceeding in rem where the suit is in a jurisdiction in which the res is not situated applies with equal force to requiring the defendant to do any act in a foreign jurisdiction; inasmuch as the court cannot enforce its decree it should not make it. The general principle applies to the federal courts as well as to those of a state; Northern Indiana R. Co. v. R. Co., 15 How. (U. S.) 233, 14 L. Ed. 674. Decrees may sometimes be made indirectly affecting foreign lands, as by enjoining trespass in a foreign jurisdiction; Great Falls Mfg. Co. v. Worster, 23 N. H. 462; but for affirmative relief it is in accordance with public policy to send a party to a jurisdiction where the act must be done; Willey v. Decker, 11 Wyo. 496, 73 Pac. 210, 100 Am. St. Rep. 939.

The question of the sufficiency of the service of a summons may be raised upon motion to quash the return supported by affidavits; Wall v. R. Co., 95 Fed. 398, 37 C. C. A. 129; or on a rule to set aside service of process; Park Bros. & Co. v. Boiler Works, 204 Pa. 453, 54 Atl. 334.

Illegality in the service of process by which jurisdiction is to be obtained is not waived by the special appearance of the defendant to move that the service be set aside; nor after such motion is denied, by his answering to the merits; such illegality is waived only when, without having insisted upon it, he pleads in the first instance to the merits; Harkness v. Hyde, 98 U. S. 476, 25 L. Ed. 237. The filing of a general appearance is not a waiver of defendant's right to move to dismiss for want of jurisdiction, where that was based on diverse citizenship and the action was brought in the wrong district; Crown Cotton Mills v. Turner, 82 Fed. 337. But where the court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and service was made in the jurisdiction, a defence on the merits after a motion to quash the service of summons had been overruled was held to waive the objection to the jurisdiction; Eddy v. La Fayette, 49 Fed. 807, 1 C. C. A. 441.

In Ex parte Wisner, 203 U. S. 449, 27 Sup. Ct. 150, 51 L. Ed. 264, there is an expression by the court that under the acts of 1875 and 1888 the residences of the parties are jurisdictional and not the subject of waiver, but in Logan & Bryan v. Cable Co., 157 Fed. 570, it was said that this was obiter and that the decisions had never been harmonious as to the effect of that dictum.

While a non-resident defendant corporation may not lose its right of objecting to the jurisdiction of the court on the ground of insufficient service of process by pleading to the merits pursuant to order of the court after objections overruled, it does waive its objection and submits to the jurisdiction if it also sets up a counterclaim even though it be one arising wholly out of the transaction sued upon by plaintiff, and in the nature of recoupment rather than set-off; Merchants' Heat & Light Co. v. Clow & Sons, 204 U. S. 286, 27 Sup. Ct. 285, 51 L. Ed. 488.

It is held that the question must be raised before making any plea to the merits, if at all, when it arises from formal defects in the process, or when the want is of jurisdiction over the person; Smith v. Curtis, 7 Cal. 584; Bohn v. Devlin, 28 Mo. 319; Brown v. Webber, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 560; Whyte v. Gibbes, 20 How. (U. S.) 541, 15 L. Ed. 1015; Perseverance Min. Co. v. Bisner, 87 Ga. 193, 13 S. E. 461; Callender v. Gates, 45 Ill. App. 374; Bunker v. Langs, 76 Hun 543, 28 N. Y. Supp. 210. But one who invokes the jurisdiction of a court is estopped to deny it on appeal, though this rule does not apply to divorce cases; English v. English, 19 Pa. Super. Ct. 586.

Objection to jurisdiction may be taken by motion to dismiss; Collins v. Collins, 37 Pa. 387; Kinnaman v. Kinnaman, 71 Ind. 417; at common law, by a plea in abatement; Roberts v. Lewis, 144 U. S. 653, 12 Sup. Ct. 781, 36 L. Ed. 579; Waterman v. Tuttle, 18 Ill. 292; Smith v. Elder, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 105; it can be raised in the federal courts by a plea in abatement; Simon v. House, 46 Fed. 317; and under the codes, by demurrer, if the want of jurisdiction appear in the complaint; Works, Courts and Juris. 106; or if it be in a court of special jurisdiction, by demurrer, answer, or motion in arrest of judgment; id. 109.

Where the subject-matter is not within the jurisdiction, the court may dismiss the proceedings of its own motion; Gornly v. McIntosh, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 271; Robertson v. State, 109 Ind. 79, 10 N. E. 582, 643; and a remedy may be had by a writ of prohibition; 3 Bla. Com. 12. See PROHIBITION.

If the objection is only to a defective service, it must be raised in the court below; Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. Ed. 565.

Where the citizenship of the parties appears in the petition, defect of jurisdiction on that ground may be raised by demurrer, in the absence of a general appearance; Meyer v. Herrera, 41 Fed. 65.

It is rarely, if ever, too late to object to the jurisdiction of a court where the want of power to hear and determine appears on the face of the proceedings; per Bronson, J., Delafield v. Illinois, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 159. Thus, an appellant from chancery to the court of errors may avail himself in the latter court of an objection to the chancellor's jurisdiction, though it was not made before him, when the objection, if valid, is of such a kind that it could not have been obviated, had it been started at an earlier stage in the proceedings; id. The objection that the complainant has an adequate remedy at law when made for the first time in an appellate court is looked upon with supreme disfavor; Preteca v. Land Grant Co., 50 Fed. 674, 1 C. C. A. 607, 4 U. S. App. 326. See Foltz v. Ry. Co., 60 Fed. 316, 8 C. C. A. 635. And entering into a stipulation by defendant, for a trial before a master, is a waiver of the right to object to the jurisdiction in equity; Sanders v. Village of Riverside, 118 Fed. 720, 55 C. C. A. 240.

The judgment of a court of another state is always subject to impeachment for the want of jurisdiction, either as to subject-matter or parties.

Courts of general jurisdiction over the parties and the subject-matter of the cause are as a general rule competent to decide questions arising as to their jurisdiction and such decisions are not open to collateral attack; White, C. J., in Ex parte Harding, 219 U. S. 363, 31 Sup. Ct. 324, 55 L. Ed. 252, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 392; and generally courts of dernier resort are conclusive judges of their own jurisdiction; People v. Clark, 1 Park Cr. Cas. (N. Y.) 360; State v. Scott, 1 Bail. (S. C.) 294; but the power of a supreme court over inferior courts always exists (both in civil and criminal cases) where an inferior court acts beyond its jurisdiction or refuses to act within it and there is no other remedy; State v. Helms, 136 Wis. 432, 118 N. W. 158.

It has been generally held that a contract ousting the courts of jurisdiction over future controversies would be invalid; Chamberlain v. R. Co., 54 Conn. 472, 9 Atl. 244; Mentz v. Ins. Co., 79 Pa. 480, 21 Am. Rep. 80. The reason for this rule does not seem to be apparent and it has been termed obsolete. Indeed, the New York court of appeals has indicated its disapproval of the rule though bound by it under stare decisis; Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Coal Co., 50 N. Y. 250.

It has been held in New York that a stipulation not to appeal to the court of appeals in an appealable case may be enforced; Townsend v. Stone Dressing Co., 15 N. Y. 587; if clear in its terms and leaving no doubt of the intention of the party to cut himself off from the right; Stedeker v. Bernard, 93 N. Y. 589; and a contract to refrain from a particular remedy to enforce an existing claim seems not to be against public policy which is not concerned with the option which every man has to sue or forbear to sue; Gitler v. Ins. Co., 124 App. Div. 273, 108 N. Y. Supp. 793.

While parties cannot confer jurisdiction by consent, if the jurisdictional facts are properly alleged and appear of record and the parties proceed to trial upon pleadings which go to the merits, the jurisdictional facts are not subsequently put in issue or seriously denied, the case will not be ordinarily dismissed for want of jurisdiction unless the proofs create a legal certainty that the controversy is not within the jurisdiction; William H. Perry Co. v. Klosters Aktie Bolag, 152 Fed. 967, 82 C. C. A. 321. It was held that individuals or corporations cannot create judicial tribunals for the final and conclusive settlement of controversies; Bauer v. Samson Lodge, 102 Ind. 269, 1 N. E. 571; but any person may covenant that no right of action shall accrue till a third person has decided on any difference that may arise between himself and the other party to the covenant; 5 H. L. Cas. 811; 10 App. Cas. 229; but it has been held that a provision for submitting the whole question of liability to arbitrators as a condition precedent to a right of action is invalid; L. R. 1 Q. B. D. 563. But this case is said not to be in harmony with the other English authorities, though it follows the doctrine of Coleridge, J., in 8 Exch. 497, a case which was affirmed in 5 H. L. Cas. 811, but upon broader grounds. See 11 Harv. L. Rev. 239. In Massachusetts, the decisions appear to distinguish between agreements to arbitrate all disputes and those for the submission of the question of damages only, or questions of that kind which do not go to the root of the action; the former are invalid; the latter valid; see White v. R. Co., 135 Mass. 216; Hutchinson v. Ins. Co., 153 Mass. 143, 26 N. E. 439, 10 L. R. A. 558. In Maine, parties may, by agreement, impose conditions with respect to preliminary and collateral matters, such as do not go to the root of the action, but cannot be compelled, even by their own agreements, to refer the whole cause of action to arbitration, and thus oust the courts of jurisdiction; Dugan v. Thomas, 79 Me. 221, 9 Atl. 354. It is said that the rule that a general covenant to submit any differences is a nullity, is too well settled to be questioned; Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Coal Co., 50 N. Y. 250. See Hohl v. Town of Westford, 33 Wis. 331. An agreement that the decision of an engineer, in case of any dispute, shall be obligatory, is binding; Monongahela Nav. Co. v. Fenlon, 4 W. & S. (Pa.) 205; Fox v. R. Co., 3 Wall. Jr. 243, Fed. Cas. No. 5,010; contra, Trott v. Ins. Co., 1 Cliff. 439, Fed. Cas. No. 14,189. The subject is treated in 11 Harv. L. Rev. 234.

Stipulations made in contracts by persons domiciled in the same state limiting the venue to a particular county have been held invalid as against public policy, and tending to oust the courts of their jurisdiction; Nute v. Ins. Co., 6 Gray (Mass.) 174; Healy v. Bldg. Ass'n, 17 Pa. Sup. Ct. 385; contra, Greve v. Ins. Co., 81 Hun 28, 30 N. Y. Supp. 668, where the court considered the theory of the preceding cases as worth little notice and this case was followed in Heslin v. Bldg. Ass'n, 28 Misc. 376, 59 N. Y. Supp. 572; but an annotator on the subject in 17 Yale L. J. 474, thinks the former view has the weight of authority.

A stipulation between persons domiciled in different states limiting the venue to one state was held void; Reichard v. Ins. Co., 31 Mo. 518; as were also agreements not to resort to the federal courts; Doyle v. Ins. Co., 94 U. S. 535, 24 L. Ed. 148; Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ass'n v. Woolen Mills, 82 Fed. 508, 27 C. C. A. 212.

But a stipulation, between parties both domiciled in a foreign country, that all disputes arising on a contract should be referred to the courts of that country, although the contract was to be performed in the United States and Canada was held valid; Mittenthal v. Mascagni, 183 Mass. 19, 66 N. E. 425, 60 L. R. A. 812, 97 Am. St. Rep. 404; and a provision in a contract between a foreign corporation and a resident of New York not to sue on a judgment against the defendant in any other court than those of Russia was held valid; Gitler v. Russian Co., 124 App. Div. 273, 108 N. Y. Supp. 793.

Other contracts limiting the right to sue as in some of the cases above cited on an existing cause of action are not invalid as on the ground that they oust jurisdiction; Montgomery v. Ins. Co., 108 Wis. 146, 84 N. W. 175. They may be held so on other grounds of public policy; Kilborn v. Field, 78 Pa. 194.

Stipulations in a policy of marine insurance, that any dispute in relation to loss shall be referred to referees; that no policy-holder shall maintain any claim thereon until he shall have offered to submit to such reference; and that in case any suit shall be begun without such offer, the claim shall be dismissed and the company exempted from liability under it, are void; Stephenson v. Ins. Co., 54 Me. 55, 70. A clause in an insurance policy providing for arbitration of any dispute as to loss, and that no action should be maintained till such arbitration was had, does not oust the jurisdiction of the courts; the condition is revocable, though its breach may subject the party to an action for a breach of it; Mentz v. Ins. Co., 79 Pa. 478, 21 Am. Rep. 80.

A by-law of a mutual fire insurance corporation, to which their policies are expressed to be subject, that any suit on a policy shall be brought in the courts where the company is established, is not binding on the assured; Nute v. Ins. Co., 6 Gray (Mass.) 174.

An agreement by a foreign insurance company, in conformity with a state statute, that if sued in a state court, it will not remove the suit to a federal court, is invalid; Home Ins. Co. v. Morse, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 445, 22 L. Ed. 365.

An Iowa statute which requires that every foreign corporation named in it shall, as a condition for obtaining a permit to transact business in Iowa, stipulate that it will not remove into the federal court certain suits which it would by the laws of the United States have a right to remove, is void because it makes the right to a permit dependent upon the surrender by the foreign corporation of a privilege secured to it by the constitution and laws of the United States; Barron v. Burnside, 121 U. S. 186, 200, 7 Sup. Ct. 931, 30 L. Ed. 915; the state might as well pass an act to deprive a citizen of another state of his right of removal. See INSURANCE.

Mutual benefit societies may prescribe regulations as to procedure in enforcing claims, and may require appeals to superior bodies before instituting suit, but they cannot entirely take away the right to invoke the aid of the courts in enforcing claims existing in favor of its members upon contracts; Bauer v. Samson Lodge, 102 Ind. 269, 1 N. E. 571.

An agreement by which the members of an association undertake to confer judicial powers, in respect to the common property, upon its officers, selected out of the association, as a tribunal having general authority to adjudicate upon alleged violations of the rules, and to decree a forfeiture of the rights, to such property, of the parties, is void. The court will not aid in enforcing the judgment of a tribunal sought to be created by private compact, except in case of submission to arbitration of specific matters of controversy; Austin v. Searing, 16 N. Y. 112, 69 Am. Dec. 665.

The powers both of courts of equity and of law over their own process to prevent abuse, oppression, and injustice are inherent and equally extensive and efficient; as is also their power to protect their own jurisdiction and officers in the possession of property that is in the custody of the law; Krippe v. Hyde, 110 U. S. 276, 4 Sup. Ct. 27, 28 L. Ed. 145.

If the subject of the bill creates jurisdiction, it cannot be defeated by matter set up in the answer; the plaintiff is master to decide what law he will rely upon; The Fair v. Specialty Co., 228 U. S. 22, 33 Sup. Ct. 410, 57 L. Ed. 716 (except where the bill is based on diversity of citizenship, denied in the answer; id.).

When a prisoner after pleading guilty is allowed to go out of custody without bail, the court has no further jurisdiction over him, and cannot, at a subsequent term, order his rearrest, and pronounce sentence upon him; People v. Allen, 155 Ill. 61, 39 N. E. 568, 41 L. R. A. 473.

Although in criminal cases the jurisdiction is confined to the locus in quo of the crime, there are cases in which, for a single criminal act, the perpetrator is liable to be tried in more than one jurisdiction. Such a case is presented where a continuous unlawful act is set on foot by a single impulse and operated by an unintermittent force, however long time it may occupy; Arnour Packing Co. v. U. S., 153 Fed. 1, 82 C. C. A. 135, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 400, affirmed 209 U. S. 56, 28 Sup. Ct. 428, 52 L. Ed. 681; and when such an act or series of acts runs through several jurisdictions, the offense is committed and cognizable in each; though complete in the jurisdiction where first committed, it may continue, be committed, and be punished in another jurisdiction; id.

JURISDICTION CLAUSE. That part of a bill in equity which is intended to give jurisdiction of the suit to the court, by a general averment that the acts complained of are contrary to equity and tend to the injury of the plaintiff, and that he has no remedy, or not a complete remedy, without the assistance of a court of equity, is called the jurisdiction clause. Mitf. Eq. Pl. 43.

This clause is unnecessary; for if the court appear from the bill to have jurisdiction, the bill will be sustained without this clause; and if the court have not jurisdiction, the bill will be dismissed though the clause may be inserted. Story, Eq. Pl. § 34.

JURISPRUDENCE. The science of the law. The practical science of giving a wise interpretation to the laws and making a just application of them to all cases as they arise.

The science of human law. And. Am. L. § 18.

By science, in the first definition, is understood that connection of truths which is founded on principles either evident in themselves or capable of demonstration,—a collection of truths of the same kind, arranged in methodical order. In the latter sense, it is the habit of judging the same questions in the same manner, and by this course of judgments forming precedents. 1 Ayliffe, Pand. 3. See Bentham, Austin, Amos, Markby, Heron, Phillimore, Lorimer, Salmon, Taylor, Lindley, on Jurisprudence.

Sir F. Pollock divides jurisprudence into:

1. Positive (which is practical, historical, comparative or analytical); 2. Final jurisprudence; and 3. International jurisprudence. General jurisprudence is hardly more than the collective result of comparative and analytical jurisprudence. Comparative jurisprudence deals with the groundwork and typical conceptions which are common to all legal systems, or to all that have made any considerable way towards completeness; and analytical jurisprudence with speculations as to such ideas as Duty, Intent, Ownership, Possession, etc. By Final Jurisprudence he designates the consideration of laws as they ought to be—ground which belongs perhaps more to the statesman than the lawyer. It assumes the shape of a Theory of Legislation, with special branches treating of the formal structure of laws, codification, legal procedure, etc. The general principles of legislation and government, which are put forward as claiming assent from all men in so far as they are rational and social beings, are said to be of natural obligation. The sum of them is called the law of nature, droit naturel, Naturrecht. The law which would in itself be best for a given nation in given circumstances is sometimes called by a certain school of writers, positive law. The sort of doctrine which embodies it may be called Ethical Jurisprudence (Oxford Lectures, The Methods of Jurisprudence).

As to a distinction between jurisprudence and law, see Holland Jurisprudence 5-12; Taylor, Jurisprudence 28.

JURIST. One versed in the science of the law. One skilled in the civil law. One skilled in the law of nations.

JURISTIC PERSON. The usual form of a juristic person and the only one (except the state) at common law, is a corporation. In Germany there are juristic persons (Stiftungen) which are not corporations and have no members. They consist of property devoted to charitable uses, the title to which is not vested in individuals or corporations. Juristic person may, perhaps, include Fiscus and Hæreditas Jacens (q. v.); Gray, Nature and Sources of Law 58.

It is called also persona ficta, and is defined sometimes as a corporation.

See Warner v. Reers, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 103; 24 Harv. L. Rev. 17; 57 U. P. S. Rev. 131.

JUROR (Lat. juro, to swear). A man who is sworn or affirmed to serve on a jury.

Any person selected and summoned according to law to serve in that capacity, whether the jury has been actually impaneled and sworn or not. State v. McCrystol, 43 La. Ann. 907, 9 South. 922.

JURY (Lat. jurata, sworn). A body of men who are sworn to declare the facts of a case as they are proven from the evidence placed before them.

The term "jury," as used in the constitution, means twelve competent men, disinterested and impartial, not of kin nor personal dependents of either of the parties, having their homes within the jurisdictional limits of the court, drawn and elected by officers free from all bias in favor of or against either party; duly impaneled, and sworn to render a true verdict, according to the law and the evidence; State v. McClellan, 11 Nev. 39.

In the trial by jury, the right of which is secured by the VIIth Amendment, both the court and the jury are essential factors; Slocum v. Ins. Co., 228 U. S. 364, 33 Sup. Ct. 523, 57 L. Ed. 879.

The best theory regards the jury system as having been derived from Normandy, where, as in the rest of France, it had existed since its establishment under the Carolingian kings. It made its appearance in England soon after the Norman Conquest. No trace of it is to be found in Anglo-Saxon times, nor was it, as is often supposed, established by Magna Charta; 10 Harv. L. Rev. 150, by J. E. R. Stephens. The same writer finds the idea of unanimity re-established in the time of Edward IV., a majority verdict having previously sufficed; in the Year Books of 23 Edward III. is the first indication of the jury deciding on evidence produced before them in addition to their own knowledge. Early in the reign of Henry IV. evidence was required to be given at the bar of the court, and the modern practice or method of jury trials had its origin; id. 159.

Prof. J. B. Thayer finds the origin of the jury in the Frankish inquisition; it existed in Normandy and went thence to England in the eleventh century; 5 Harv. L. Rev. 249. The use of a jury both for civil and criminal cases is mentioned for the first time in English statute law in the Constitutions of Clarendon; id. 156.

The origin of trial by jury is said by another writer to be rather French than English, rather royal than popular, rather a livery of conquest than a badge of freedom. Originally juries were called in, not to hear, but to give, evidence. They were the neighbors of the parties and were presumed to know when they came into court the facts about which they were to testify. They were chosen by the sheriff to represent the neighborhood. The verdict was the sworn testimony of the countryside. By slow degrees the jury acquired a new character. Sometimes when the jurors knew nothing of the facts, witnesses who did know the facts would be called in to supply the requisite information. They became more and more dependent on the evidence given in their presence by those witnesses who were summoned by the parties. In the fifteenth century the change had taken place, though in yet later days a man who had been summoned as a juror and sought to escape on the ground that he already knew something of the facts, might be told that he had given a very good reason for his being placed in the jury box. It may well be said therefore that trial by jury, though it had its roots in the Frankish inquest, grew up on English soil; 1 Social England 255, 290. So also 1 Poll. & Maitl. 117-121.

Another writer finds its foundation in Norman institutions and its establishment by positive legislation in the time of Henry II. Lesser, Hist. of Jury Syst. 172.

In an interesting discussion of the "Administration of the Criminal Law," by W. H. Taft, 15 Yale L. J. 1 (1905), it is stated that since 1818 "the trial by jury in criminal cases was adopted in France, in Belgium, in Germany, in Norway and Sweden, in Spain, in Italy, and Russia, except in trials for political offences, and is now in use in those countries." He also considers that, although adopted in Porto Rico, it has been a failure there, and that its adoption in the Philippines would be unwise, adding that "it is by no means clear that in our own jurisprudence trial by jury in civil cases is an unmixed good." The inapplicability of the jury system and also of what are usually termed the constitutional guarantees (all of which except trial by jury were extended to them by President McKinley) to such a country is argued at some length and with vigor.

A common jury is one drawn in the usual and regular manner.

A grand jury is a body organized for certain preliminary purposes.

A jury de medietate linguæ is one composed half of aliens and half of denizens.

Such juries might formerly be claimed, both in civil and criminal cases, where the party claiming the privilege was an alien born, by virtue of 28 Edw. III. c. 13, and by an earlier statute, where one party was a foreign merchant; 27 Edw. III. c. 8. Such a jury was provided in criminal cases by a statute of Edward I. It was abolished by 33 Vict. c. 14. The right has been recognized in this country; Republica v. Mesca, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 73, 1 L. Ed. 42; People v. McLean, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 381; Richards v. Com., 11 Leigh (Va.) 690; contra U. S. v. McMahon, 4 Cra. C. C. 573, Fed. Cas. No. 15,699; State v. Antonio, 11 N. C. 200. It has been generally abolished by statute; Thomp. & Merr. Juries 19; excepting in Kentucky, where it still exists; id.

A petit or traverse jury is a jury who try the question in issue and pass finally upon the truth of the facts in dispute. The term jury is ordinarily applied to this body distinctively.

A special jury is one selected by the assistance of the parties.

This is granted in some cases upon motion and cause shown, under various local provisions. The method at common law was for the officer to return the names of forty-eight principal freeholders to the proper officer. The attorneys of the respective parties, being present, strike off each twelve names, and from the remaining twenty-four the jury is selected. A similar course is pursued in these states where such juries are allowed. See 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 357. The earliest rule of court on the subject was made in 8 Will. III.; 1 Salk. 405. It formerly was granted only in cases of special consequence or great difficulty; but later, a special jury has usually been granted in ordinary cases. In some states such a jury is of course; in New York, statutes provide for such only in cases of special importance or intricacy, as to which the court must decide.

A struck jury is a special jury. See Cook v. State, 24 N. J. L. 843.

Trial by jury is guaranteed by the constitution of the United States in all criminal cases except upon impeachments, and in all suits at common law where the subject-matter of the controversy exceeds twenty dollars in value. The right to such a trial is also provided in many of our state constitutions. It has been held, however, not to be an infringement of this federal constitutional right, where a statute provides that in all criminal prosecutions the party accused, if he shall so elect, may be tried by the court instead of by a jury; Miller, Const. U. S. 494; Coleman v. Edwards, 5 Ohio St. 57; Ward v. People, 30 Mich. 116; State v. Worden, 46 Conn. 349, 33 Am. Rep. 27. It was held that a jury trial may be waived when there is a positive legislative enactment giving the right to do so; Hallinger v. Davis, 146 U. S. 314, 13 Sup. Ct. 105, 36 L. Ed. 986. This clause of the constitution does not apply to state courts; Hare, Am. Const. L. 860; Eilenbecker v. District Court, 134 U. S. 31, 10 Sup. Ct. 424, 33 L. Ed. 801; Edwards v. Elliott, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 557, 22 L. Ed. 487; Cooley, Const. Lim. 410; Williams v. Hert, 110 Fed. 166, where it was also held that when a state was admitted to the Union "on an equal footing with the original states in all respects whatsoever," no right of trial by jury in criminal cases is guaranteed, although it had been secured by the ordinance and acts of congress for the government of the territory out of which the state was created. The states may, therefore, in their own constitutions, dispense with trial by jury both in civil and criminal cases; Ordron. Const. Leg. 261; and cases supra; or provide that a jury shall consist of less than twelve; Maxwell v. Dow, 176 U. S. 581, 20 Sup. Ct. 448, 494, 44 L. Ed. 597; In re McKee, 19 Utah, 231, 57 Pac. 23; Walker v. Sauvinet, 92 U. S. 90, 23 L. Ed. 678; Missouri v. Lewis, 101 U. S. 22, 25 L. Ed. 989.

It does not apply to cases in the court of claims; McElrath v. U. S., 102 U. S. 426, 26 L. Ed. 189; nor to proceedings for disbarring an attorney; Re Wall, 107 U. S. 265, 2 Sup. Ct. 569, 27 L. Ed. 552; nor for assessing damages; Raymond v. R. Co., 14 Blatchf. 133, Fed. Cas. No. 11,593; nor to equity cases in the federal courts; Barton v. Barbour, 104 U. S. 126, 26 L. Ed. 672; nor to cases where the right is antecedently and voluntarily relinquished; Bank of Columbia v. Okely, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 235, 4 L. Ed. 559; nor does a like provision in a state constitution apply to any proceedings in which a jury was not required at common law; e. g., a justice's court; Vaughn v. Scade, 30 Mo. 600; Knight v. Campbell, 62 Barb. (N. Y.) 16; nor to any court which exercised its functions without the aid of a jury prior to the adoption of a constitution; Thomps. & Merr. Juries 11; People v. Justices of Court of Special Sessions, 74 N. Y. 406.

The provisions of the United States constitution relating to trial by jury are as follows:

"The trial of all crimes except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury; and such trial shall be held in the state where the said crimes shall have been committed; but when not committed within any state, the trial shall be at such place or places as the Congress may by law have directed." U. S. Const. art. 3, sec. 2, par. 3.

"In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the state and district wherein the crime shall have been committed. . . ." Amdt. VI, U. S. Const.

"In suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved; and no fact tried by a jury shall be otherwise re-examined in any court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law." Amdt. VII, U. S. Const.

The first clause of the seventh amendment of the United States constitution in relation to trials by jury relates only to the federal courts; the states are left to regulate them in their own courts; Edwards v. Elliott, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 532, 22 L. Ed. 487. The second clause, prohibiting federal courts from re-examining any fact tried by a jury otherwise than according to the common law, applies to the facts tried by jury in a cause in a state court; Justices v. U. S., 9 Wall. (U. S.) 274, 19 L. Ed. 658. Article 3, sec. 2, cl. 3, providing for jury trials of all crimes except impeachment does not apply to state courts; Eilenbecker v. District Court, 134 U. S. 31, 10 Sup. Ct. 424, 33 L. Ed. 801; nor does the prohibition of the fourteenth amendment against abridging the right of trial by jury in suits at common law; Walker v. Sauvinet, 92 U. S. 90, 23 L. Ed. 678; and the same is true of a provision in article 3 for the trial of all crimes in the state where committed; Nashville, C. & St. L. Ry. v. Alabama, 128 U. S. 96, 9 Sup. Ct. 28, 32 L. Ed. 352.

The seventh amendment declaring that no fact tried by a jury shall be otherwise re-examined in any court of the United States than according to the rules of the common law. The effect of this prohibits the United States courts from re-examining facts tried by a jury, except in the granting of a new trial by the court which tried the issue, or to which the record was properly returnable, or the award of a venire facias de novo by an appellate court for an error in law; Lincoln v. Power, 151 U. S. 436, 14 Sup. Ct. 387, 38 L. Ed. 224; Slocum v. Ins. Co., 228 U. S. 364, 33 Sup. Ct. 523, 57 L. Ed. 879. But such action by an appellate state court was held to be constitutional and not to infringe the right to due process of law or trial by jury; Gunn v. R. Co., 27 R. I. 320, 62 Atl. 118, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 362; id., 27 R. I. 432, 63 Atl. 239, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 883.

The amendment secures unanimity in finding a verdict as an essential feature of trial by jury in common law cases, and an act of congress cannot impart the power to change a constitutional rule, and cannot be treated as attempting to do so; Springville v. Thomas, 166 U. S. 707, 17 Sup. Ct. 717, 41 L. Ed. 1172.

The provision securing the right to jury trials applies to the District of Columbia; Callan v. Wilson, 127 U. S. 540, 8 Sup. Ct. 1301, 32 L. Ed. 223; and the provisions are applicable to it in both civil and criminal cases, but the right is not infringed by an act enlarging the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace in the District of Columbia to $300 and requiring every appellant from his judgment to give bond for the payment of final judgment on appeal; Capital Traction Co. v. Hof, 174 U. S. 1, 19 Sup. Ct. 580, 43 L. Ed. 873. It has also been held to be secured in territories; Black v. Jackson, 177 U. S. 349, 20 Sup. Ct. 648, 44 L. Ed. 801; but was based upon the acts of congress relating to them; Webster v. Reid, 11 How. (U. S.) 437, 13 L. Ed. 761; Thompson v. Utah, 170 U. S. 343, 18 Sup. Ct. 620, 42 L. Ed. 1061. But the right of trial by jury was not extended by the Constitution by its own force without legislation to the Philippines, since they are not incorporated into the United States by congressional action; Dorr v. U. S., 195 U. S. 138, 24 Sup. Ct. 808, 49 L. Ed. 128, 1 Ann. Cas. 697.

Under the fourteenth amendment a jury trial is guaranteed to municipal offenders sentenced to infamous punishment and a statute for the summary infliction of such punishment is unconstitutional; Janison v. Wimbish, 130 Fed. 351; but the exercise of summary jurisdiction over such offences by magistrates has long been exercised; Green v. Superior Court, 78 Cal. 556, 21 Pac. 307, 541; Dyers v. Com., 42 Pa. 89; and was so in Georgia when the amendment was adopted; Floyd v. Com'rs of Eatonton, 14 Ga. 354, 58 Am. Dec. 559. Accordingly, the decision of the federal court above cited has been very much criticized as not warranted by the supreme court cases and particularly the construction of the amendment in the Slaughter House Cases; 18 H. L. R. 136; as to the right to waive a trial by jury in criminal cases, it is thought by a writer in 21 H. L. R. 212, that the cases may be reconciled by careful analysis and the conclusions reached are that if the constitution prohibits a conviction except by verdict, the court alone cannot decide the case; State v. Holt, 90 N. C. 749, 47 Am. Rep. 544; and a statute allowing a waiver would be invalid; State v. Cottrell, 31 W. Va. 162, 6 S. E. 428; contra, State v. Griggs, 34 W. Va. 78, 11 S. E. 740; and this applies even in cases of minor offences; State v. Stewart, 89 N. C. 563. Under constitutions which provide only that the right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate, the statutes allowing a waiver are generally upheld; Edwards v. State, 45 N. J. L. 419; contra, Brimmingsool v. People, 1 Mich. N. P. 260; even in felonies; Murphy v. State, 97 Ind. 579; State v. Worden, 46 Conn. 349, 33 Am. Rep. 27; if there be no statute, however, the waiver cannot be allowed; Harris v. People, 128 Ill. 585, 21 N. E. 563, 15 Am. St. Rep. 153; contra, Wren v. State, 70 Ala. 1. A statute providing that the issues of facts shall be tried by jury was construed to prohibit a waiver; In re McQuown, 19 Okl. 347, 91 Pac. 689, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1136.

A waiver of a jury by the defendant in an action for a penalty in a revenue case does not invalidate the judgment; Schick v. U. S., 195 U. S. 65, 24 Sup. Ct. 826, 49 L. Ed. 99, 1 Ann. Cas. 585, where, however, the dissenting opinion of Harlan, J., should be examined.

A jury trial is not guaranteed by a state constitution providing for "due process of law"; Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 378; nor even by the provision for it in the fourteenth amendment; Walker v. Sauvinet, 92 U. S. 90, 23 L. Ed. 678; Maxwell v. Dow, 176 U. S. 581, 20 Sup. Ct. 448, 494, 44 L. Ed. 597; nor does it abridge its privileges and immunities; id. "Due process of law" simply requires that there shall be a day in court, and the legislature may take away or change a remedy; People v. Board of Sup'rs, 70 N. Y. 228; but it has been held in some cases that the expression does guarantee a jury trial; Inhabitants of Saco v. Wentworth, 37 Me. 165, 58 Am. Dec. 786; State v. Ray, 63 N. H. 406, 56 Am. Rep. 529; Jones v. Robbins, 8 Gray (Mass.) 329; Hurtado v. People, 110 U. S. 516, 4 Sup. Ct. 111, 292, 28 L. Ed. 232.

An act providing for the trial of a contested election to a public office which deprives the party of a trial of disputed facts by jury is not unconstitutional; Ewing v. Filley, 43 Pa. 384.

In the Delaware constitution of 1897, provision is made for the trial of criminal offences against the election laws, by the court without a jury.

The number of jurors must be twelve; and it is held that the term jury in a constitution imports, ex vi termini, twelve men; People v. Justices, 74 N. Y. 406; Turns v. Com., 6 Metc. (Mass.) 231; Norval v. Rice, 2 Wis. 22; whose verdict is to be unanimous; Cruger v. R. Co., 12 N. Y. 190. See State v. McClear, 11 Nev. 39, supra.

Where a constitution preserves the right of trial by jury inviolate, the legislature cannot change the number of jurors in either civil or criminal cases; Thomp. & Merr. Juries 10; Henning v. R. Co., 35 Mo. 408; Allen v. State, 51 Ga. 264.

The question whether the common law requirement of twelve jurors may be changed has in recent years received much attention in the courts. There has been a growing tendency, at least, towards the serious consideration of changes in the jury system as administered at common law and secured by the state and federal constitutions. See GRAND JURY. The decided weight of authority is that, where the right to trial by jury is secured by the constitution, the legislature cannot authorize a verdict by a less number than twelve; that the constitutional reservation implies a right to the concurrent judgment of that number, and any statute limiting it is unconstitutional and void; Opinion of Justices, 41 N. H. 550; Jacksonville, T. & K. W. R. Co. v. Adams, 33 Fla. 608, 15 South. 257, 24 L. R. A. 272; Bradford v. Territory, 1 Okl. 366, 34 Pac. 66; Bettge v. Territory, 17 Okl. 85, 87 Pac. 897; Cancemi v. People, 18 N. Y. 128; Harris v. State, 128 Ill. 585, 21 N. E. 563, 15 Am. St. Rep. 153; Carroll v. Byers, 4 Ariz. 158, 36 Pac. 499; and such, under the sixth amendment, must be the number of jurors, neither more nor less than twelve, that being the rule at common law; Thompson v. Utah, 170 U. S. 343, 18 Sup. Ct. 620, 42 L. Ed. 1061. Such is the meaning of "trial by jury" in the primary and usual sense of the term at common law in the American constitutions; Capital Traction Co. v. Hof, 174 U. S. 1, 19 Sup. Ct. 580, 43 L. Ed. 873, where there is an extended historical discussion of the subject by Gray, J., and it was held further that by the seventh amendment after trial by jury, in either the federal or state court, the facts tried and decided cannot be re-examined in any court of the United States except upon a new trial granted by the federal court or when ordered by the appellate court for error in law. Accordingly one charged with crime cannot waive a jury trial by twelve jurors; Jennings v. State, 134 Wis. 307, 114 N. W. 492, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 862.

While a person accused of an infamous crime, though not a felony, may waive the disqualification of jurors, or even their impartiality, such person cannot waive his right to a trial by a jury of twelve by consenting, after a legal jury had been impaneled and two had been excused, to continue the trial and abide by the verdict of the remaining ten; Dickinson v. U. S., 159 Fed. 801, 86 C. C. A. 625; Hill v. People, 16 Mich. 351; per Cooley, C. J.; contra, Com. v. Dailey, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 80, per Shaw, C. J.; a later case being criticized in the case first cited; but there need not be a jury of twelve in civil cases; City of Huron v. Carter, 5 S. D. 4, 57 N. W. 947; Roach v. Blakey, 89 Va. 767, 17 S. E. 228; Kreuchi v. Dehler, 50 Ill. 176.

The constitutional right of a jury trial in criminal cases cannot be waived by one indicted for a felony so as to make valid a trial by eleven jurors; Territory v. Ortiz, 8 N. Mex. 154, 42 Pac. 87. This doctrine has been based upon various grounds. It was said in one case that the duty of the state to its citizens would prohibit a waiver of a full panel; Cancemi v. People, 18 N. Y. 128. Shaw, C. J., suggested that in some cases the defendant's chance of acquittal might be greater with eleven jurors than with twelve; and Cooley suggests the view that a jury of less than twelve is a tribunal unknown to the law, and would amount to a mere arbitration, which is not allowable; Const. Lim., 6th Ed. 391. Some courts held that there may be a valid waiver as to misdemeanors; State v. Worden, 46 Conn. 349, 33 Am. Rep. 27; State v. Albee, 61 N. H. 423, 60 Am. Rep. 325; State v. Alderton, 50 W. Va. 101, 40 S. E. 350; and others that the right was not secured with respect to minor or trivial offences; People v. Justices of Court, 74 N. Y. 406; Byers v. Com., 42 Pa. 89; or at least that a jury may be dispensed with in the first instance where there is a right of appeal with a jury; Jones v. Robbins, 8 Gray (Mass.) 329; City of Emporia v. Volmer, 12 Kan. 622.

Statutes conferring the right to waive are not in conflict with the constitution of the United States; Hallinger v. Davis, 146 U. S. 314, 13 Sup. Ct. 105, 36 L. Ed. 986; or of the state; People v. Noll, 20 Cal. 164. It was held that in civil cases in Utah a jury of twelve was not required; Wolf Co. v. Brewing Co., 10 Utah 179, 37 Pac. 262; Mackey v. Enzensperger, 11 Utah 154, 39 Pac. 541; but see American Pub. Co. v. Fisher, 166 U. S. 464, 17 Sup. Ct. 618, 41 L. Ed. 1079, where it was held that litigants in common law actions in the courts of Utah while a territory had a right to trial by jury which involved unanimity of verdict, and this right could not be taken away by territorial legislation. As to unanimity of a verdict in a state court see infra.

There would seem to be no legal objection to permitting this change by constitutional provision, but even that, it has been held, will not sustain a statute providing that in certain contingencies, at the discretion of the trial court, a jury may consist of less than twelve men; McRae v. R. Co., 93 Mich. 399, 53 N. W. 561, 17 L. R. A. 750. In California, in civil cases and misdemeanors, the jury may consist of twelve or any number less than twelve upon which the parties may agree in open court. And the number of jurors may be limited in many states, including Colorado, Florida, Idaho, Iowa, Louisiana, Michigan, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, New Jersey, North Dakota, Washington, and Wyoming. See 36 Cent. L. J. 437.

A statute changing the jury to nine in civil cases applies to pending cases; Roenfeldt v. Ry. Co., 180 Mo. 554, 79 S. W. 706, where the court said that "no one has a vested right to have his cause tried by any particular mode of procedure."

Statutes providing for compulsory reference have been held constitutional in many cases as not infringing the right to trial by jury; Copp v. Henniker, 55 N. H. 179, 20 Am.

Rep. 194; Edwards v. Garnhart, 56 Mo. St.; Norton v. Rooker, 1 Pinney (Wis.) 195.

And the provision requiring the payment of costs before appeal was also held constitutional; McDonald v. Schell, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 240; Emerick v. Harris, 1 Binney (Pa.) 416. The seventh amendment of the United States Constitution does not apply to the state courts; Edwards v. Elliott, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 532, 22 L. Ed. 487; Pearson v. Yewdall, 95 U. S. 294, 24 L. Ed. 436; with respect to the state constitutions where the right of trial by jury is secured, it continues inviolate with respect to all cases triable by jury before the constitution was adopted; Tribou v. Strawbridge, 7 Or. 156; Lee v. Tillotson, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 337, 35 Am. Dec. 624; Mead v. Walker, 17 Wis. 190.

In New York where the action of account was before the constitution triable without a jury, under a colonial statute it has been held that long accounts in a counter-claim in an action on contract where the plaintiff's claim is disputed will not justify compulsory reference because the colonial practice only permitted set-off with plea of payment, and therefore the statute could not have been applicable to a counter-claim when the plaintiff's cause of action was disputed; Steck v. Iron Co., 142 N. Y. 236, 37 N. E. 1, 25 L. R. A. 67, and note collecting cases.

Unanimity in giving a verdict was not universal in the early days of the common law; at times eleven sufficed; in some cases a majority. Probably it was only in the second half of the fourteenth century that unanimity became an established principle; 5 Harv. L. Rev. 296, by Prof. J. B. Thayer. "The rule of unanimity of the jury was not fixed before the 14th century and it was probably never laid down in terms that juries must be unanimous. What was actually decided was that the verdict of fewer than 12 men would not suffice, and it became a fixed custom to have that number on the petit jury." Pollock, Expans. of C. L. 95.

The requirement of unanimity of twelve jurors arose from the custom which taught men to regard it as the proper amount of evidence to establish the credibility of a person accused of an offence; Forsyth, Trial by Jury 240. At common law, except as above stated, unanimity was essential to a verdict, so that it has been held that a conviction by eleven jurors, even where the accused waived a trial by twelve jurors, would be set aside; Cancemi v. People, 18 N. Y. 128. "Unanimity was one of the peculiar and essential features of trial by jury at common law;" American Pub. Co. v. Fisher, 166 U. S. 464, 17 Sup. Ct. 618, 41 L. Ed. 1079, supra; but the court expressly said that the power of a state to change the rule as to unanimity was not before them, and cited Walker v. Sauvinet, 92 U. S. 90, 23 L. Ed. 678; Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 516, 4 Sup. Ct. 111, 292, 23 L.

Ed. 232. Changes in this respect have been made in many states. In civil actions in California, Idaho, Louisiana, Nevada, Texas, and Washington, three-fourths may render a verdict; two-thirds in Montana in civil actions and crimes less than felonies, and five-sixths in Idaho, in all cases of misdemeanor. In Iowa the legislature may authorize a verdict by less than twelve in inferior courts.

Unanimity is still required in England. In a case before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, where a British subject was convicted of murder in Japan, the court being comprised of a British judge and five jurors, established under a British treaty, it was argued by Sir Frank Lockwood that the British government could not establish such a court with a jury of less than twelve, but the court held that the conviction was lawful. [1897] App. Cas. 719.

A modification of the jury system, much considered and quite generally adopted, is the provision authorizing the parties to waive a jury and elect to have the facts tried by the court. This course in civil cases is authorized in most of the states, as well as in the federal courts. It is provided for in the constitutions of Arkansas, California, Colorado, Florida, Maryland, Michigan, Minnesota, Nevada, New York, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, Vermont, Wisconsin, Washington, and West Virginia. By statute a like practice obtains in Illinois, Missouri, New Jersey, and Wyoming, and also by the bill of rights in Arizona and by statute in New Mexico. There can be a waiver in civil cases and in criminal cases not amounting to felony in Idaho, Montana, North Dakota, and California.

The general principle is, however, that in criminal cases, the accused can neither waive his right to a trial by a jury of twelve nor be deprived of it by the legislature; Cancemi v. People, 18 N. Y. 128; Allen v. State, 54 Ind. 461; State v. Carman, 63 Ia. 130, 18 N. W. 691, 50 Am. Rep. 741 (contra, State v. Kaufman, 51 Ia. 578, 2 N. W. 275, 33 Am. Rep. 148); State v. Davis, 66 Mo. 684, 27 Am. Rep. 387; Bell v. State, 44 Ala. 393; Williams v. State, 12 Ohio St. 622; Kleinschmidt v. Dunphy, 1 Mont. 118; Swart v. Kimball, 43 Mich. 443, 5 N. W. 635. Judge Cooley, after stating that less than twelve would not be a common-law jury, or such as the constitution guarantees, adds, "And the necessity of a full panel could not be waived—at least in case of felony—even by consent." Const. Lim., 4th ed. 395. It was held that where one juror was an alien the failure to challenge him was not a waiver of the objection, and on the refusal of the court to set aside the judgment, it would be reversed, on error; Hill v. People, 16 Mich. 356; contra, State v. Quarrel, 2 Bay (S. C.) 150, 1 Am. Dec. 637. One accused of crime cannot waive the absence of one juror; Jennings v. State, 134

Wis. 307, 114 N. W. 492, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 862 and note.

On the trial of a misdemeanor, a full jury may be waived; Com. v. Dailey, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 80, per Shaw, C. J.; Tyra v. Com., 2 Metc. (Ky.) 1; U. S. v. Shaw, 59 Fed. 110; or where the penalty is only a fine; State v. Mansfield, 41 Mo. 470. A jury may be waived in all civil cases, without any statute; Roach v. Blakey, 89 Va. 767, 17 S. E. 228.

The fact that a court of chancery may summon a jury to try an issue of fact is not equivalent to the right of trial by jury under the seventh amendment of the constitution; Cates v. Allen, 149 U. S. 451, 13 Sup. Ct. 883, 977, 37 L. Ed. 804. And the constitutional right does not relate to suits over which equity exercised jurisdiction when the constitution was adopted; Davis v. Settle, 43 W. Va. 17, 26 S. E. 557; but the right cannot be defeated by giving equity jurisdiction over an action in which the right applies; id. It is not impaired by an act giving the appellate court authority to reverse for excessive damages; Smith v. Pub. Co., 178 Pa. 481, 36 Atl. 296, 35 L. R. A. 819. In that case it was held that the act which gives the supreme court "power in all cases to affirm, reverse, amend, or modify a judgment, order, or decree appealed from and to enter such judgment," etc., as it may deem proper and just, does not infringe upon the right of trial by jury and is constitutional; and in a later case, this decision was adhered to, and it was further held that where the supreme court had reversed a judgment, without awarding a new venire, it might subsequently amend the judgment of reversal by adding thereto a formal judgment in favor of defendant; Nugent v. Traction Co., 183 Pa. 142, 38 Atl. 587; Dalmas v. Kemble, 215 Pa. 410, 64 Atl. 559.

A state law authorizing a judgment n. o. v. on the whole record to be entered by an appellate court where a point requesting binding instructions has been reserved or declined is in conflict with the seventh amendment of the federal constitution; Slocum v. Ins. Co., 228 U. S. 364, 33 Sup. Ct. 523, 57 L. Ed. 879, where it was held that the circuit court of appeals in entering such a judgment under the state statute had acted improperly in not merely reversing the judgment with a venire. It is also held that a state statute providing that a new trial shall not be granted on account of the smallness of the damages is, if applicable to federal courts, a violation of the seventh amendment; Hughey v. Sullivan, 80 Fed. 72.

Several state courts have held that a reversal and entry of final judgment by the appellate court under state statute is not an infringement of trial by jury; Larkins v. R. Ass'n, 221 Ill. 428, 77 N. E. 678; Gunn v. R. Co., 26 R. I. 112, 58 Atl. 452; Houghton Implement Co. v. Vavrosky, 15 N. D. 308, 109 N. W. 1024; nor is the requirement of a remittitur by an appellate court; Burdick v. R. Co., 123 Mo. 221, 27 S. W. 453, 26 L. R. A. 384, 45 Am. St. Rep. 528; Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Syfan, 91 Tex. 562, 44 S. W. 1064.

Qualifications. Jurors must possess the qualifications which may be prescribed by statute, must be free from any bias caused by relationship to the parties or interest in the matter in dispute, and in criminal cases must not have formed any opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused.

"1. They are to be good and lawful men. 2. Of sufficient freeholds, according to the provisions of several acts of parliament. 3. Not convict of any notorious crime. 4. Not to be of the kindred or alliance of any of the parties. 5. Not to be such as are prepossessed or prejudiced before they hear their evidence." Cond. Gen. 297.

At common law there was a freehold qualification, but to no certain amount; by 2 Hen. V. it was 40s.; Thomp. & Merr. Juries 20; Proffatt, Jury Trial § 115.

An alien may serve as a juror, that is, a foreigner intending to be naturalized; People v. Scott, 56 Mich. 154, 22 N. W. 274; contra, State v. Primrose, 3 Ala. 546, and see Proffatt, Jury Trial § 116. An atheist has been held to be disqualified; Shane v. Clarke, 3 Harr. & McH. (Md.) 101. Women could not serve as jurors at common law, except upon a jury to try an issue under a writ de ventre inspiciendo (q. v.); 3 Bla. Com. 362. They are now qualified in some states.

Under U. S. R. S. § 5440, an official of the United States is disqualified as a juror by reason of his relations with the government although not a salaried officer; Crawford v. U. S., 212 U. S. 183, 29 Sup. Ct. 260, 53 L. Ed. 465, 15 Ann. Cas. 392, where it was put upon the ground that bias disqualifies a juror, and it is implied in the relation between employer and employee and actual evidence thereof is unnecessary (a criminal case in a federal court).

Under the common law the master, servant, steward, counsellor, or attorney, of either party is not a competent juror and statutory provisions of qualifications not inconsistent with this rule do not abrogate it; id.; Block v. State, 100 Ind. 357.

It has been held that where one of the jurors was incompetent, as an alien, his presence vitiated the whole panel and the verdict; Shane v. Clarke, 3 Harr. & McH. (Md.) 101; unless waived by failure to challenge; State v. Pickett, 103 Ia. 714, 73 N. W. 346, 39 L. R. A. 302; 11 Harv. L. R. 545. The fact discovered after verdict that a juror who was not challenged was unable to understand the English language was held insufficient ground for granting a new trial; San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Gray (Tex.) 66 S. W. 229; such ignorance of English language would not be a ground of challenge; In re Allison, 13 Colo. 525, 22 Pac. 820, 10 L. R. A. 790, 16-

Am. St. Rep. 224; but the failure to challenge has been held to be a waiver of the right; 2 Moo. & Sc. 41; St. Louis & S. E. R. Co. v. Casner, 72 Ill. 384; but where the disqualification was not known until after the verdict, a new trial was granted as a matter of discretion; Woodward v. Dean, 113 Mass. 297; and as a matter of right; Shane v. Clarke, 3 Har. & McIl. (Md.) 101.

An employee of a stockholder of a corporation is not disqualified by reason of his employment; Sansouwer v. Dye Works, 28 R. I. 539, 68 Atl. 545; 13 N. Burns. 8. Business relations which disqualify one from acting as a juror are: Employer and employee; Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. v. Mask, 64 Miss. 738, 2 South. 360; even if the former is a corporation; Burnett v. R. Co., 16 Neb. 332, 20 N. W. 280; landlord and tenant; Hathaway v. Helmer, 25 Barb. (N. Y.) 29; contra, Arnold v. Fruit Co., 141 Cal. 738, 75 Pac. 326; partners; Stumm v. Hummel, 39 Ia. 478; master and servant; State v. Coella, 3 Wash. 99, 28 Pac. 28; attorney and client; 3 Bla. Com. 363; but not a client of the attorney in the suit; McCorkle v. Mallory, 30 Wash. 632, 71 Pac. 186; business relations with a party may disqualify in a particular case, though not from the relation generally; Laidlaw v. Sage, 2 App. Div. 374, 37 N. Y. Supp. 770; but not the mere relation of a debtor and creditor; Thompson v. Douglass, 35 W. Va. 337, 13 S. E. 1015.

Whether it is contempt of court for a master to discharge a workman because he was obliged to serve as a juror is discussed in an article quoted from the London Law Times in 36 Am. L. Rev. 596.

The federal constitution provides that in criminal trials the jury shall be taken "from the state and district where the crime shall have been committed." State constitutions usually confine the selection to the county or district, except where, in some states, a provision is made in case jurors cannot conveniently be found in the county. The right to a trial by a jury of the vicinage is an essential part of trial by jury.

In some states the qualifications of jurors are regulated by the constitution; e. g., Florida requires them to be taken from the registered voters. Georgia requires that jurors shall be upright and intelligent persons. Subject to the constitutional provisions as to impairing the right of trial by jury, the legislature has power to define the qualifications of jurors. It may dispense with the freehold qualification required by common law; Kerwin v. People, 96 Ill. 206; Com. v. Dorsey, 103 Mass. 412; but see 20 Am. L. Reg. 436; Proffatt, Jury Trial § 115.

In some states conviction for certain high crimes disqualifies; some states require citizenship; others that jurors shall be selected from the qualified voters; others impose tests of integrity, or intelligence or education. Freehold or property tests are required in some states. That the jurors shall be over twenty-one years of age is probably a universal requirement; while in some states those past a certain age cannot serve; Proffatt, Jury Trial § 117.

In the federal courts the qualifications are the same as those relating to the highest courts of law in the respective states; U. S. R. S. § 800; but this does not require a minute adherence to the state practice; U. S. v. Collins, 1 Woods 499, Fed. Cas. No. 14,837, per Bradley, J. A statute confining the selection of jurors to white citizens is invalid under the fourteenth amendment; the right to serve on a jury is an incident of citizenship; Strauder v. West Virginia, 100 U. S. 303, 25 L. Ed. 664; Neal v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 370, 26 L. Ed. 567.

The intelligence and ability of a juror are matters within the sound discretion of the court, and it is sufficient if he knows the English language and can understand the testimony and the argument of counsel; State v. Casey, 44 La. Ann. 969, 11 South. 583. It rests with each state to prescribe such qualifications as it seems proper for jurymen, taking care only that no discrimination in respect to such service be made against any class of citizens solely because of their race; In re Shibuya Jugiro, 140 U. S. 291, 11 Sup. Ct. 770, 35 L. Ed. 510.

The passage of the Act of July 20, 1840, R. S. § 800, granting peremptory challenges to the government in criminal cases, has not taken away the right to conditional or qualified challenges when permitted in the state and adopted by the federal court by rule or by special order; Sawyer v. U. S., 202 U. S. 150, 26 Sup. Ct. 575, 50 L. Ed. 972, 6 Ann. Cas. 269, where it was held not unreasonable to permit jurors to be required to stand aside at the foot of the panel, it appearing that neither the government nor the defendant had exhausted all their peremptory charges when the jury was empanelled.

The selection of jurors is to be made impartially; and elaborate provisions are made to secure this impartiality. In general, a sufficient number are selected, from among the qualified citizens of the county or district, by the sheriff, or a similar executive officer of the court, and, in case of his disqualification, by the coroner, or, in some cases, by still other designated persons. See ELISORS. From among these the requisite number is selected at the time of trial, to whom objection may be made by the parties.

Sir Matthew Hale says that the writ to return a jury issues to the sheriff who is entrusted to elect and return the jury without the nomination of either party. The jurors were to be such persons as for estate and quality were fit to serve on that employment. They were to be of the neighborhood of the fact to be inquired, or at least of the county. Cond. Gen.

At common law jurors were selected, usually, by the sheriff or coroner. It is done in this country in various ways; by judges of election; by town authorities or by various officials or special boards or commissions. Statutory provisions as to the time and mode of selecting jurors are said to be usually directory only and need not be strictly complied with; Thomp. & Merr. Juries 44; but this is not the case with all such requirements.

In the federal courts the panel of jurors is selected by the clerk of the court and a commissioner appointed by the court, who must be taken from the opposite political party to that to which the clerk belongs; the clerk and the commissioner place names in the jury box alternately without regard to party affiliations. Any judge may order the names to be drawn from the boxes used by the state authorities in selecting jurors in the highest court of the state; no person may serve as a petit juror more than once in a year.

A juror is not disqualified by having formed or expressed an opinion from newspaper accounts where he testified that he could try the case solely on the evidence and would be governed by it; Dimmick v. U. S., 121 Fed. 638, 57 C. C. A. 664; nor is one incompetent merely because he had formed and expressed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of a person jointly indicted with the defendant; Griggs v. U. S., 158 Fed. 572, 85 C. C. A. 596; Weston v. Com., 111 Pa. 251, 2 Atl. 191; State v. Bill, 15 La. Ann. 114.

Erroneously overruling challenge for cause is harmless error where peremptory challenges are not exhausted; Green v. State, 40 Fla. 191, 23 South. 851; or where the jury did not serve and the jury was not complete without exhausting peremptory challenges; State v. Nicholls, 50 La. Ann. 699, 23 South. 980. See CHALLENGE.

Summoning improper jurors, whether biased or otherwise, is a contempt of court on the part of the officer who does it; Richards v. U. S., 126 Fed. 105, 61 C. C. A. 161; and a challenge to the array will lie in such case; id.; Harjo v. U. S., 1 Okl. Cr. R. 590, 98 Pac. 1021, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1013.

Exemption. Usually public officials are exempt; and persons engaged in various classes of occupations are often exempt; thus in New York, clergymen, physicians, lawyers, professors, and teachers, persons engaged in certain kinds of manufacturing, canal officials, those employed on steam vessels, employes of railroad and telegraph companies, members of the militia and fire department, etc. Exemption is only during actual employment; State v. Willard, 79 N. C. 660; and the right of exemption is a personal privilege and usually not a ground of challenge; Moore v. Cass, 10 Kan. 288; Davison v. People, 90 Ill. 221; or a disqualification; Breeding v. State, 11 Tex. 257; State v. Forshner, 43 N. H. 89, 80 Am. Dec. 132.

The members of an association formed to aid in the prosecution of a particular class of offences, and those who are in sympathy with the association, and contribute money for the purposes of its organization, are not competent to sit as jurors on the trial of an indictment for an offence of the class for the prosecution of which the association is formed and the money contributed; State v. Moore, 48 La. Ann. 380, 19 South. 285. In a suit against a beneficial association, membership in the order does not disqualify a juror, but only membership of the lodge sued; Delaware Lodge No. 1, I. O. O. F., v. Allmon, 1 Pennewill (Del.) 160, 39 Atl. 1098.

Persons related within the prohibited degree to members of a mutual fire insurance company are incompetent to serve as jurors in an action against it; Moore v. Ins. Ass'n, 107 Ga. 199, 33 South. 65.

A juror was disqualified at common law by openly declaring his opinion that the party was guilty; 2 Hawk. Pl. C. ch. 43, § 27. Yet if such declaration was made from his knowledge of the case and not out of any ill-will to the party, it is no cause of challenge; 2 id. § 28.

Where a statute disqualifies persons related within certain degrees of affinity from serving as jurors on the trial of a cause to which their affinities are parties, husbands whose wives are second cousins are not affinities; Tegarden v. Phillips, 14 Ind. App. 27, 42 N. E. 549.

In Tennessee it has been held that a statute disqualifying from service, either on grand or petit juries, persons engaged in a conspiracy against law and order is not unconstitutional; Jenkins v. State, 99 Tenn. 569, 42 S. W. 263. In this case the statute in question was for the suppression of what are known as White Caps, and disqualified for jury duty all persons who had been guilty of any offence under the statute. So also a similar disqualification of all persons violating the act for the suppression of polygamy was held valid; Clawson v. U. S., 114 U. S. 477, 5 Sup. Ct. 949, 29 L. Ed. 179.

Swearing the jury. At common law it appears to have been the practice to swear each jurymen as he is drawn and accepted; Joy, Conf. 220; State v. Potter, 18 Conn. 166. The present practice is to swear the entire jury after the panel is completed. Either practice is lawful; People v. Reynolds, 16 Cal. 128. It is not irregular to swear all the jurors when the court opens, to try all the issues that may be brought before them; Thomp. & Merr. Juries 318; People v. Albany Court of Common Pleas, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 548. But this practice has been disapproved of in criminal cases on the ground of the salutary effect both on the prisoner and the jury of the formality of administering an oath in the presence of the prisoner; Barney v. People, 22 Ill. 160. It is also considered the better practice in criminal cases to have the panel full before the oath is administered; Thomp. & Merr. Juries 319; O'Connor v. State, 9 Fla. 215.

The impanelling and final acceptance of a jury by a court is a judicial determination that the jurors are competent; and if any objection to the qualifications of a juror is known to a party before such determination, it cannot be raised afterwards, unless on exception to the overruling of a challenge; People v. Scott, 56 Mich. 154, 22 N. W. 274.

If, after a jury is sworn, a juror becomes incompetent, the entire jury should be discharged; but if a juror never was competent, a twelfth juror may be sworn in his place; State v. Ronk, 91 Minn. 419, 98 N. W. 334.

In 1 Cox C. C. 150, a juror became ill in the midst of the trial, the jury was then discharged, a new juror was drawn and the eleven jurors were resworn and the evidence recapitulated; so in De Berry v. State, 99 Tenn. 207, 42 S. W. 31, as to either a civil or criminal trial; to the same effect, State v. Davis, 31 W. Va. 390, 7 S. E. 24. If a sworn juror becomes ill before the panel is made up, a new juror may be selected; State v. Moncla, 39 La. Ann. 868, 2 South. 814. If a juror becomes insane pending a criminal trial, the court should declare a mistrial and proceed de novo; Dennis v. State, 96 Miss. 96, 50 South. 499, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 36.

The parties are entitled to fresh challenges against the entire new jury; Turner v. Territory, 15 Okl. 557, 82 Pac. 650; contra, State v. Hazledahl, 2 N. D. 524, 52 N. W. 315, 16 L. R. A. 150; State v. Nash, 46 La. Ann. 194, 14 South. 607. See note to Dennis v. State, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 36.

Influencing the jury. An attempt to influence a jury corruptly by promises, persuasions, entreaties, money, entertainments, and the like is a misdemeanor at common law; State v. Brown, 95 N. C. 685; 2 Bish. Cr. L. 384; Gibbs v. Dewey, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 503. Arguments of counsel in open court at the trial of a cause are a legitimate use of influence and are not within this rule, but it would be a crime to take advantage of the opportunity afforded in order to influence the jurors corruptly; People v. Myers, 70 Cal. 582, 12 Pac. 719. Where an attempt to influence a jury, amounting to embracery, is made, it is immaterial whether they give any verdict or not, and if they give a verdict, it is no defence that it is a true one. This crime may be committed by a juror if he corruptly attempts to influence other jurors; Cl. Cr. L. 326; or if he by indirect practices gets himself sworn on the tales to serve on one side; 1 Litt. 573.

Misconduct of jurors. The giving of testimony by a juror to his associates in the jury room is misconduct; Richards v. State, 36 Neb. 17, 53 N. W. 1027; Ellis v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 508, 27 S. W. 135; but in order to obtain a new trial on the ground of misconduct, injury to the party must be shown; Medler v. State, 26 Ind. 171; State v. Cross, 95 Ia. 629, 64 N. W. 614; Com. v. Roby, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 496; a new trial was granted because a juror stated in the jury room that the defendant had hit the prosecutor on the head with an ax-handle on a former occasion; Mann v. State, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 250, 83 S. W. 195; but probably the granting or denial of a motion for a new trial for misconduct of the jury is largely in the discretion of the court; People v. Johnson, 110 N. Y. 134, 17 N. E. 684; Com. v. White, 147 Mass. 76, 16 N. E. 707.

Where each of the jurors set down the term of imprisonment and divided the sum by twelve, but did not agree in advance to be bound by the result, the verdict could not be questioned; McAnally v. State (Tex.) 57 S. W. 832.

As to the effect of improper influence on, or misconduct of, the jury, see NEW TRIAL.

Separation during trial. At common law the jury was kept together until they had agreed upon their verdict. Even the right to adjourn a trial from day to day was doubted; 24 How. St. Tr. 414. At present jurors in civil cases are allowed to separate each day; and so in trials for misdemeanors, at the discretion of the court. In some cases also in trials for felony, even in capital cases. But in an able work the opinion is maintained that in cases of capital felonies the jury should not be allowed to separate, as they were not at common law; Thomp. & Merr. Juries 367; but absolute isolation is not required; they may be kept under the charge of a sworn officer who shall exercise a reasonable oversight; id. 370. The officer in charge must be sworn; 2 Hale, P. C. 296; although if he be a sheriff or constable and ex officio in charge of the jury, he need not be specially sworn; Meyer v. Foster, 16 Wis. 294.

The presence of a barber admitted to the jury room for the convenience of the jurors is not sufficient cause for setting aside the verdict; Com. v. Lombardi, 221 Pa. 31, 70 Atl. 122.

Where the jury is discharged by the court for having separated after being sworn, the trial is not a bar to a subsequent prosecution; State v. Costello, 11 La. Ann. 283; State v. Hall, 9 N. J. L. 256; People v. Reagle, 60 Barb. (N. Y.) 527; Hilbert v. Com., 51 S. W. 817, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 537; Com. v. Roby, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 496; but where the jury, finding one of their number disqualified, dispersed without the knowledge of the court, the defendant was held to have been once in jeopardy and could not again be tried; Maden v. Emmons, 83 Ind. 331.

Affidavits of jurors will not be received to impeach a verdict; Thomp. & Merr. Juries 539, citing numerous cases; Croasdale v. Tatum, 6 Houst. (Del.) 218; People v. Azoff, 105 Cal. 632, 39 Pac. 59; Allison v. People, 45 Ill. 37. Nor will statements of third parties who derived their information from a member of the jury; Thomp. & Merr. Juries 547; Peterson v. Skjelver, 43 Neb. 663, 62 N. W. 43; State v. Schaefer, 116 Mo. 96, 22 S. W. 447.

The court may question the jury as to the grounds upon which they based their verdict, if there was more than one ground; Spoor v. Spooner, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 281. A jurymen may be heard to show misconduct on the part of third parties; Ritchie v. Holbrooke, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 458; and jurymen should report to the court any attempt to influence them; Allison v. People, 45 Ill. 37. But affidavits appear to be admissible to impeach the verdict, in Tennessee; Joyce v. State, 7 Baxt. (Tenn.) 273; and to a certain extent in Iowa; Wright v. Telegraph Co., 20 Ia. 195; and Kansas; Johnson v. Husband, 22 Kan. 277; and to show that a verdict was decided by lot; Fain v. Goodwin, 35 Ark. 109.

Testimony or affidavits of jurors as to what occurred in the jury room are generally excluded; Woodward v. Leavitt, 107 Mass. 453, 9 Am. Rep. 49, and this rule has been followed to the extent of excluding even evidence of improper conduct—as that a juror had made material statements from his own knowledge; St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Ricketts, 96 Tex. 68, 70 S. W. 315; Price's Ex'r v. Warren, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 385; Clum v. Smith, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 560; Boetge v. Landa, 22 Tex. 105; contra, State v. Burton, 65 Kan. 704, 70 Pac. 640.

The admission of affidavits of jurymen to the fact that they have not been influenced by newspaper articles is immaterial, if a motion for a new trial is rightly overruled on other grounds; Spreckels v. Brown, 212 U. S. 208, 29 Sup. Ct. 256, 53 L. Ed. 476.

Jurors are competent witnesses, in a proceeding in equity to remedy a mistake made by the foreman in announcing the verdict, to prove that the verdict read out in court was not their verdict, but the result of an oversight; Hamburg-Bremen Fire Ins. Co. v. Mfg. Co., 76 Fed. 479, 22 C. C. A. 283.

Proceedings apart from the jury. There is no settled rule that arguments as to the admissibility of evidence should be conducted apart from the jury in criminal cases; Mose v. State, 36 Ala. 211; contra, White v. State, 10 Tex. App. 381; it is in the discretion of the court, and no exception lies in either case; State v. Wood, 53 N. H. 484; State v. Moore, 104 N. C. 743, 10 S. E. 183; Com. v. Rogers, 181 Mass. 184, 63 N. E. 421; Lewis

v. State, 85 Miss. 35, 37 South. 497; Poole v. State, 45 Tex. Cr. R. 348, 76 S. W. 565; Driggers v. State, 38 Fla. 7, 20 South. 758. In deciding the question, the court may assign its reasons in the hearing of the jury; Patterson v. State, 86 Ga. 70, 12 S. E. 174. It was held that in a murder trial the jury may be required to retire during the argument of such questions; Kraner v. State, 61 Miss. 158; but in another such case it was held error for the court to exclude the jury during argument on the law by defendant's counsel; Patterson v. State (Tex.) 60 S. W. 557.

Where confessions are offered, the preliminary inquiry may be conducted in the presence of the jury or not, in the discretion of the judge; Lefevre v. State, 50 Ohio St. 584, 35 N. E. 52; State v. Kelly, 28 Or. 225, 42 Pac. 217, 52 Am. St. Rep. 777; such inquiry was held to be properly conducted in the presence of the jury in Holsenbake v. State, 45 Ga. 43; Shepherd v. State, 31 Neb. 389, 47 N. W. 1118; contra, Hall v. State, 65 Ga. 36; Carter v. State, 37 Tex. 362; and where after proper preliminary examination, they have been admitted, there is no room for question touching the propriety of conducting the examination in the presence of the jury, but it has been held that it must not be in the presence of the jury if the accused so request; Ellis v. State, 65 Miss. 44, 3 South. 188, 7 Am. St. Rep. 634.

Expert evidence. In respect of questions upon which men of ordinary observation and experience have some practical knowledge of their own, jurors are not dependent upon the opinions of experts even though they would be assisted by them, since they are expected to apply their own observation and experience of the affairs of life to the evidence in forming their conclusions; Lillibridge v. McCann, 117 Mich. 84, 75 N. W. 288, 41 L. R. A. 381, 72 Am. St. Rep. 553; McGarrahan v. R. Co., 171 Mass. 211, 50 N. E. 610; State v. R. Co., 86 Me. 309, 29 Atl. 1086; Jamieson v. Oil Co., 128 Ind. 555, 28 N. E. 76, 12 L. R. A. 652; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Moore, 166 Fed. 663, 92 C. C. A. 357, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 962, where many other cases are collected.

See EXPERTS.

Jurors taking notes. Jurors may not take notes of the testimony of witnesses to refresh their memories in consultation with their fellow jurors; Com. v. Wilson, 19 Pa. Dist. Ct. 48, where Wiltbank, J., an experienced trial judge, directed notes so taken to be surrendered and sealed and returned to the jurymen after the trial. The reason for this rule is said to be that "the jury should not be allowed to take evidence with them to their room except in their memory. It can make no difference whether the notes are written by a juror or by some one else. Jurors would be too apt to rely on what might be imperfectly written and thus make the case turn on a part only of the facts;" Cheek v. State, 35 Ind. 492; Batterson v. State, 63 Ind. 531; Long v. State, 95 Ind. 481. Where a justice of the peace, at the request of the jury after they had retired, gave them without the consent of the parties his minutes of the trial, the judgment was reversed on certiorari, and this action was affirmed by the supreme court; Neil v. Abel, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 185.

Where a juror on a trial for murder for three weeks openly took notes of the testimony, it was held that it did not as a matter of law require the setting aside of the verdict; Cou. v. Tucker, 189 Mass. 457, 76 N. E. 127, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1056; and in civil cases some courts permit counsel to request the jury to take notes of a particular fact or calculation, though they cannot be required to comply; Tift v. Towns, 63 Ga. 237; Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Miller, 71 Ill. 463; but generally note-taking by jurors is considered an improper practice, though it is allowed by statute in some states; U. S. v. Davis, 103 Fed. 457; Cowles v. Hayes, 71 N. C. 230; Thomas v. State, 90 Ga. 437, 16 S. E. 94.

Even in a murder trial the verdict will not be set aside if it does not affirmatively appear that neither the defendant nor his counsel had knowledge of it, as consent is in that case presumed from failure to object; State v. Robinson, 117 Mo. 649, 23 S. W. 1066.

Taking a view. Where a jury is called upon to assess the value of land, the impressions acquired by the jury after a view are competent evidence; Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Farwell, 50 Neb. 544, 81 N. W. 440; Parks v. City of Boston, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 198; City of Springfield v. Dalby, 139 Ill. 34, 29 N. E. 860; Tully v. R. Co., 134 Mass. 499; though it has been held that the view is only effectual for the application of evidence given in court; Machader v. Williams, 54 Ohio St. 344, 43 N. E. 324; and it is stated that this restriction is imposed where the view is for any other purpose than the mere valuation of the land; Wright v. Carpenter, 49 Cal. 607; but this limitation upon the general rule has been considered to be without foundation; 13 Harv. L. R. 692.

In some cases, where a jury is authorized in a trial before a justice of the peace, it has been held to be no more than a body of referees and not a true jury trial, and therefore the case could be tried by another jury in the superior court; Capital Traction Co. v. Hof, 174 U. S. 1, 19 Sup. Ct. 580, 43 L. Ed. 873.

The province of the jury is to determine the truth of the facts in dispute in civil cases, and the guilt or innocence of the person accused in criminal cases. Thorn. Jur. § 133. See CHARGE. If they go beyond their province, their verdict may be set aside; 4 Maule & S. 102; 3 B. & C. 357; 2 Price 282; Ex parte Bailly, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 479; Hall v. Huse, 10 Mass. 39.

The question whether the jury are judges of the law as well as of the fact, or whether it is the function of the court conclusively to instruct the jury upon the law, particularly in criminal cases, has been very much discussed from the earliest times and was the subject of critical examination by the United States supreme court; Sparf v. U. S., 156 U. S. 51, 15 Sup. Ct. 273, 39 L. Ed. 343. See infra.

Coke says: "As the jury may, as often as they think fit, find a general verdict, I therefore think it unquestionable that they so far may decide upon the law as well as fact, such a verdict naturally involving both. In this I have the authority of Littleton himself, who hereafter writes, 'that if the inquest will take upon themselves the knowledge of the law upon the matter, they may give their verdict generally.'"

He further says in substance: "Questions of law generally and more properly belong to the judges. The immediate and direct right of declaring upon questions of law is entrusted to the judges; that in the jury is only incidental." Co. Litt. 156 a, n. (5).

Though the question had not, until more recently, been the subject of a direct decision of the United States supreme court, it had frequently arisen in England and America. In the former country, in the case of the Dean of St. Asaph, the court alluded to the admission by both parties of an ancient rule of the common law that the law should be determined by the court and the facts by the jury; but they differed as to what was law and what fact, it being contended on one side that the question of guilt in a libel case, after the fact of publication and truth of the innuendoes are found by the jury, was a question of law, and on the other side that the guilt of the defendant was a question of fact. This concurrence of views on the point in question "affords strong proof that, up to the period of our separation from England, the fundamental definition of trials by jury depended on the universal maxim, without an exception, ad quæstionem facti respondent juratores, ad quæstionem juris respondent iudices."

The doctrine that a jury may disregard the law as declared by the court finds its principal, original support in Bushell's case, Vaughan 135, where the question was on habeas corpus whether jurors were liable to be fined and imprisoned for nonpayment of fine for having found a general verdict in opposition to the instructions of the court. Vaughan, C. J., held that because a general verdict of necessity resolves "both law and fact complicately and not the fact by itself," it could not be proved that the jurors did not proceed upon their view of the evidence.

This line of argument is implicitly relied upon by the advocates of the extreme right of the jury, but has been rightly characterized as narrow; though conclusive in the case to which it related; U. S. v. Morris, 1 Curt. C. C. 23, Fed. Cas. No. 15,815; Hallam, Const. Hist. c. 13; Com. v. Anthes, 5 Gray (Mass.) 185. The line of argument in the English case, taken together with the criticisms upon it, well illustrate the difficulties of the subject which arise necessarily in every case which is submitted to a jury upon mixed questions of law and fact. However frankly it may be stated that the jury are bound by the views of the law delivered to them by the court, the obligation to accept those views is rather moral than susceptible of rigid practical enforcement. Early English cases supporting the doctrine that the jury are judges of the fact and not of the law are, 1 Plowd. 111; id. 233; 2 id. 493; 2 Stra. 766; Lord Hardwicke said: "The thing that governs greatly in this determination is, that the point of the law is not to be determined by juries; juries have a power by law to determine matters of fact only; and it is of the greatest consequence to the law of England and to the subject, that these powers of the judge and the jury are kept distinct; that the judge determine the law, and the jury the fact; and if ever they come to be confounded, it will prove the confusion and destruction of the law of England." Cas. temp. Hardwicke 23. Foster, after stating the rule that the ascertainment of all the facts is the province of the jury, says: "For the construction the law putteth upon facts stated and agreed, or found by a jury is in this, as in all other cases, undoubtedly the proper province of the court." And he adds that in cases of difficulty, a special verdict is usually found, but where the law is clear, the jury, under the direction of the court as to the law, may and, if well advised, always will find a general verdict conformably to such direction; Fost. Cr. L., 3d ed. 255. To the same effect, it has been urged, is the settled current of English authority; Wynne's Eunomus, Dial. III. §§ 53, 523; 1 Steph. Hist. Cr. L. 551; 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 22, § 21; 3 Term 428; 4 Bing. 195; 8 C. & P. 94; contra, Vaughan 135; 4 B. & Ald. 145.

The question arose most frequently in England in connection with prosecutions for libel, and it was contended that Fox's Libel Act changed the common-law rule, but this was not the case. In a leading case arising under that act, it was held that it was for the judge to define the offence and then for the jury to say whether the publication under consideration was within that definition; 6 M. & W. 104 (see as to this case, Sparf v. U. S., 156 U. S. 97, 15 Sup. Ct. 273, 39 L. Ed. 343; U. S. v. Morris, 1 Curt. C. C. 55, Fed. Cas. No. 15,815); 2 Jur. 137. In the House of Lords the unanimous opinion of the judges was given by Tindal, C. J., in answer to a question whether, if a fine were received in evidence, it ought to be left to the jury to say whether it barred an action of quare impedit, that "the judge who tried the cause should state to the jury whether in point of law the fine had that effect, or what other effect on the rights of the litigant parties, upon the general and acknowledged principle ad questionem juris non respondent juratores." 4 Cl. & Fin. 445.

In state courts it has been held to be "a well-settled principle, lying at the foundation of jury trials, admitted and recognized ever since jury trial had been adopted as an established and settled mode of proceeding in courts of justice, that it was the proper province and duty of judges to consider and decide all questions of law, and the proper province and duty of the jury to decide all questions of fact;" Com. v. Anthes, 5 Gray (Mass.) 185; Pierce v. State, 13 N. H. 536; Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 173; People v. Anderson, 44 Cal. 65; State v. Burpee, 65 Vt. 1, 34, 25 Atl. 964, 19 L. R. A. 145, 36 Am. St. Rep. 775 (overruling State v. Croteau, 23 Vt. 14, 54 Am. Dec. 90, and every case which followed it); Montee v. Com., 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 132. The citations include both civil and criminal cases. There undoubtedly exists a power in the jury to override the law as declared by the court and to make their action effective by an acquittal in a criminal case which cannot be set aside. This thought has received frequent expression from judges and courts of great authority. "The unquestionable power of juries to find general verdicts, involving both law and fact, furnishes the foundation for the opinion that they are judges of the law, as well as of the facts, and gives some plausibility to that opinion. They are not, however, compelled to decide legal questions, having the right to find special verdicts, giving the facts, and leaving the legal conclusions, which result from such facts, to the court. When they find general verdicts, I think it is their duty to be governed by the instructions of the court as to all legal questions involved in such verdicts. They have the power to do otherwise, but the exercise of such power cannot be regarded as rightful, although the law has provided no means, in criminal cases, of reviewing their decisions whether of law or fact, or of ascertaining the grounds upon which their verdicts are based;" Duffy v. People, 26 N. Y. 588; see also People v. Finnegan, 1 Park. Cr. Cas. (N. Y.) 147. In Pennsylvania there has been, in some cases, a very strong expression of the idea that in criminal cases the juries are judges of the law as well as of the fact. This was very earnestly stated by Sharswood, C. J., who said that the power of the jury to judge of the law in a criminal case was one of the most valuable securities guaranteed by the bill of rights of Pennsylvania; Kane v. Com., 89 Pa. 522, 33 Am. Rep. 787; but this unqualified statement is not sustained by the leading cases in that state. In Com. v. Sherry, reported in Whart. Hom. (App.) 481, Rogers, J., said: "You are, it is true, judges in a criminal case, in one sense, of both law and fact; for your verdict, as in civil cases, must pass on law and fact together. If you acquit, you interpose a final bar to a second prosecution, no matter how entirely your verdict may have been in opposition to the views expressed by the court. . . . It is important for you to keep this distinction in mind, remembering that, while you have the physical power, by an acquittal, to discharge a defendant from further prosecution, you have no moral power to do so against the law laid down by the court. . . . For your part, your duty is to receive the law, for the purposes of this trial, from the court. If an error injurious to the prisoner occurs, it will be rectified by the revision of the court in banc. But an error resulting from either a conviction or acquittal, against the law, can never be rectified. In the first case, an unnecessary stigma is affixed to the character of a man who was not guilty of the offence with which he is charged. In the second case, a serious injury is effected by the arbitrary and irremediable discharge of a guilty man. You will see from these considerations the great importance of the preservation, in criminal as well as in civil cases, of the maxim that the law belongs to the court and the facts to the jury."

Other expressions substantially to the same effect are: "If the evidence on these points fail the prisoner, the conclusion of his guilt will be irresistible, and it will be your duty to draw it;" Gibson, C. J., in Com. v. Harman, 4 Pa. 269.

"The court had an undoubted right to instruct the jury as to the law, and to warn them as they did against finding contrary to it. This is very different from telling them that they must find the defendant guilty, which is what is meant by a binding instruction in criminal cases;" Nicholson v. Com., 96 Pa. 503. In Com. v. McManus, 143 Pa. 64, 21 Atl. 1018, 22 Atl. 761, 14 L. R. A. 89, it was held "that the statement by the court was the best evidence of the law within the reach of the jury, and that the jury should be guided by what the court said as to the law," and this, Paxson, C. J., speaking for the court, declared to be in harmony with the case in which is found the expression of Sharswood, C. J., supra.

In this case Mr. Justice Mitchell filed a vigorous concurring opinion in which he says: "Upon one point I would go further and put an end once for all to a doctrine that I regard as unsound in every point of view, historical, logical, or technical. . . . The jury are not judges of the law in any case, civil or criminal; neither at common law, nor under the constitution of Pennsylvania, is the determination of the law any part of their duty or their right. The notion is of modern growth and arises undoubtedly from a perversion of the history and results of the right to return a general verdict, especially in libel cases, which ended in Fox's Bill." He then considers the question historically, and on the authorities, and says that there is not a single respectable English authority for the doctrine, and that, against a "solid phalanx" of American authorities, there is but a single authority in its favor (State v. Croteau, 23 Vt. 14, 54 Am. Dec. 90), which was by a divided bench (and which has been since overruled; State v. Burpee, 65 Vt. 1, 25 Atl. 964, 19 L. R. A. 145, 36 Am. St. Rep. 775, supra). He concludes that "the jury were never judges of the law in any case, civil or criminal, except as involved in the mixed determination of law and fact by a general verdict." In an annotation of the case in State v. Burpee, 65 Vt. 1, 25 Atl. 964, 19 L. R. A. 145, 36 Am. St. Rep. 775, which overruled what is here characterized as practically the only authority in support of the doctrine, it is said: "The ghost of the doctrine that juries in criminal cases are to judge of the law as well as the facts would seem to be effectually laid by the above decision. . . . That solitary authority (State v. Croteau, 23 Vt. 14, 54 Am. Dec. 90), which has often been attacked and discredited, is now by the case above reported completely overruled."

In the federal courts, prior to the direct decision of the supreme court already referred to, the question had been frequently examined. The most elaborate discussion of the subject was by Mr. Justice Curtis, whose opinion is very much relied upon by the supreme court. His conclusion was "that when the constitution of the United States was founded, it was a settled rule of the common law that, in criminal as well as in civil cases, the court decided the law, and the jury the facts; and it cannot be doubted that this must have an important effect in determining what is meant by the constitution when it adopts a trial by jury." U. S. v. Morris, 1 Curt. C. C. 23, Fed. Cas. No. 15,815. Mr. Justice Field said (charging a jury) in U. S. v. Greathouse, 4 Sawy. 457, Fed. Cas. No. 15,254: "There prevails a very general, but an erroneous, opinion that in all criminal cases the jury are the judges as well of the law as of the fact—that is, that they have the right to disregard the law as laid down by the court, and to follow their own notions on the subject. Such is not the right of the jury." "It is their duty to take the law from the court and apply it to the facts of the case. It is the province of the court, and of the court alone, to determine all questions of law arising in the progress of a trial; and it is the province of the jury to pass upon the evidence and determine all contested questions of fact. The responsibility of deciding correctly as to the law rests solely with the court, and the responsibility of finding correctly the facts rests solely with the jury."

To the same effect are U. S. v. Battiste, 2 Sumn. 240, Fed. Cas. No. 14,545; U. S. v. Riley, 5 Blatchf. 204, Fed. Cas. No. 16,164; Stettinius v. U. S., 5 Cra. C. C. 573, Fed. Cas. No. 13,387; U. S. v. Keller, 19 Fed. 633.

The authorities which have been sometimes relied upon to support the contrary view are Georgia v. Brailsford, 3 Dall. (U. S.) 1, 1 L. Ed. 483; 1 Burr's Trial 470; 2 id. 422; Whart. St. Tr. 48, 84; Chase's Trial App. 44. These authorities received a very critical examination both by Mr. Justice Curtis in U. S. v. Morris, 1 Curt. C. C. 23, Fed. Cas. No. 15,815, and by Mr. Justice Harlan, who delivered the opinion of the court in Sparf v. U. S., 156 U. S. 51, 15 Sup. Ct. 273, 39 L. Ed. 343; and in the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Gray (and except by the latter) they were not considered, when properly read, as sustaining the view in support of which they are usually cited. The opinion of Mr. Justice Harlan, last referred to, contains a full discussion of the subject, and in it will be found most of the authorities herein cited. It was held that where there was no evidence upon which the jury could properly find the defendant guilty of an offence included in it less than the one charged, it is not error to instruct them that they cannot return the verdict of any lesser offence. In support of the rule laid down in this decision, see also Cooley, Const. Lim. 323; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 49; Thomp. Tr. § 1016; and the valuable note by Dr. Wharton in 1 Cr. L. Mag. 51. By way of explanation of some of the expressions so much relied upon in support of a contrary view, Mr. Justice Harlan in his opinion referred to, supra, says: "The language of some judges and statesmen in the early history of the country, implying that the jury were entitled to disregard the law as expounded by the court, is, perhaps, to be explained by the fact that 'in many of the states the arbitrary temper of the colonial judges, holding office directly from the crown, had made the independence of the jury in law as well as in fact of much popular importance.' Whart. Cr. Pl. & Pr., 8th ed. § 806; Williams v. State, 32 Miss. 389, 396, 66 Am. Dec. 615."

The argument for the right of the jury to decide the law in criminal cases has been most recently fully presented in the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Gray, with whom concurred Mr. Justice Shiras, in Sparf v. U. S., supra. In this opinion, from a long and careful examination of the authorities, the conclusion is thus stated: "It is our deep and settled conviction, confirmed by a re-examination of the authorities under the responsibility of taking part in the consideration and decision of the capital case now before the court, that the jury, upon the general issue of guilty or not guilty in a criminal case, have the right, as well as the power, to decide, according to their own judgment and consciences, all questions, whether of law or of fact, involved in that issue." It may be noted that of three cases cited in this opinion as containing the ablest discussion of the subject on both sides, and taking the same view as that advocated by Mr. Justice Gray, two opinions, those of Chancellor Kent and Mr. Justice Thomas in favor of the right, were also dissenting opinions and that of Judge Hall, of Vermont, on the other side, the only one of the three which was an authority, has lately been overruled, as stated supra. The English authorities are very fully discussed, and much attention is given to cases which are claimed as authorities in favor of the views presented which have already been cited, supra, and of which those who argue against the right of the jury to decide the law, question either the authority or the application. The contention of this dissenting opinion is that the result of the English authorities is in favor of the ultimate right of the jury to decide the law, notwithstanding the instructions of the court, and that the earlier American authorities are to the same effect. It is admitted that in the later American cases, "the general tendency of decision in this country has been against the right of the jury, as well as in the courts of the several states, including many states where the right was once established, as in the circuit courts of the United States. The current has been so strong that in Massachusetts, where counsel are admitted to have the right to argue the law to the jury, it has yet been held that the jury have no right to decide it, and it has also been held, by a majority of the court, that the legislature could not constitutionally confer upon the jury the right to determine, against the instructions of the court, questions of law involved in the general issue in criminal cases; and in Georgia and in Louisiana, a general provision in the constitution of the state, declaring that 'in criminal cases the jury shall be judges of the law and fact,' has been held not to authorize them to decide the law against the instructions of the court. . . . But, upon the question of the true meaning and effect of the constitution of the United States in this respect, opinions expressed more than a generation after the adoption of the constitution have far less weight than the almost unanimous voice of earlier and nearly contemporaneous judicial declarations and practical usage." Sparf v. U. S., 156 U. S. 51, 168, 15 Sup. Ct. 273, 39 L. Ed. 343.

A statute which provided that the court should state its opinion to the jury upon all questions of law arising in the trial of a criminal case and submit to their consideration both the law and fact without any direction how to find their verdict did not make the jury judges of the law as well as of the facts, and it was their bounden duty to accept the law as stated by the court; State v. Gannon, 75 Conn. 206, 52 Atl. 727, where the cases are examined at length and the opin-tions in Sparf v. U. S., 156 U. S. 51, 15 Sup. Ct. 273, 39 L. Ed. 343, supra, are referred to as covering the whole range of the controversy. The other cases cited in the Connecticut case in support of this view are Lord Mansfield, in 3 Term 428; Story, J., in U. S. v. Battiste, 2 Sumn. 240, Fed. Cas. No. 14,545; Shaw, C. J., in Com. v. Porter, 10 Mete. (Mass.) 263; Curtis, J., in U. S. v. Morris, 1 Curtis 23, Fed. Cas. No. 15,815; Selden, J., in Duffy v. People, 26 N. Y. 588; State v. Smith, 6 R. I. 33; Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 173; State v. Burpee, 65 Vt. 1, 25 Atl. 964, 19 L. R. A. 145, 36 Am. St. Rep. 775.

Directing the verdict. The most frequent expression of the rule is that, where there is no evidence tending to prove the facts set up by the party who sustains the burden of proof, the court is bound, on request, to direct the jury to return a verdict for the opposite party; Charles v. Patch, 87 Mo. 462. On the other hand, where there is any evidence tending to prove such facts, the court cannot so direct the verdict, but must submit the evidence to the jury and leave it to them to determine whether it is sufficient to that end; Dow v. Chandler, 85 Mo. 247; Thomp. Tr. § 2245.

When the testimony is all in one direction, or when all the evidence for the plaintiff has been given, and it has no tendency whatever to prove the particular issue relied on to recover, and there is no question in regard to the credibility of the witnesses who have given the evidence, the court may determine the whole case as a question of law; Boland v. R. Co., 36 Mo. 491; Vinton v. Schwab, 32 Vt. 612.

It is only where the evidence, with all fair and legitimate inferences, and viewed in the most favorable light, is insufficient to justify a verdict for the plaintiff, that the court may direct a verdict for the defendant; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Laack, 143 Ill. 242, 32 N. E. 285, 18 L. R. A. 215; Dwyer v. R. Co., 52 Fed. 87; Leiser v. Kieckhefer, 95 Wis. 4, 69 N. W. 979. A federal court may direct a verdict for either party whenever, under the state of the evidence, it would be compelled to set aside one returned the other way; Monroe v. Ins. Co., 52 Fed. 777, 3 C. C. A. 280. Where, from the testimony before the jury, different minds might draw different conclusions, it is error to direct a verdict; Eisenlord v. Clum, 67 Hun 518, 22 N. Y. Supp. 574; Des Jardins v. Boom Co., 95 Mich. 140, 54 N. W. 718. Where the right of recovery depends on questions of fact, there must be a submission to the jury; Heere v. Bank, 160 Pa. 314, 28 Atl. 688. A direction to find for the defendant was held proper, in an action against a railroad for interference with the plaintiff's business, where no evidence was offered showing the injury caused by such interference; Baird v. R. R., 154 Pa. 463, 25 Atl. 834. Where it is shown by an open statement of counsel for the plaintiff that the contract on which the suit is brought is void, the court may direct the jury to find a verdict for the defendant; Oscanyan v. Arms Co., 103 U. S. 261, 26 L. Ed. 539. There can be no serious doubt but that the court can at any time direct the jury when the facts are undisputed, and that the jury should follow such direction; id.

A court may withdraw a case from a jury and direct a verdict where evidence is undisputed or is so conclusive that the court in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion would be compelled to set aside a verdict returned in opposition to it; Delaware L. & W. R. Co. v. Converse, 139 U. S. 469, 11 Sup. Ct. 569, 35 L. Ed. 213; Anderson County v. Beal, 113 U. S. 227, 5 Sup. Ct. 433, 28 L. Ed. 966; Randall v. R. Co., 109 U. S. 478, 3 Sup. Ct. 322, 27 L. Ed. 1003; though jurors are the recognized triors of the facts and cases are not lightly to be taken from them, particularly the question of negligence, and where the jury had reasonable ground to infer it, the question should be left to them; Marande v. R. Co., 184 U. S. 173, 22 Sup. Ct. 340, 46 L. Ed. 487.

For a clear statement of the doctrine of peremptory instructions, as laid down by Mr. Justice Harlan, see INSTRUCTIONS. See also CHARGE; VERDICT.

Coercion of juries. Any communication of the judge to the jury after they have retired except in open court is improper; Sargent v. Roberts, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 337, 11 Am. Dec. 185; Texas Midland R. Co. v. Byrd, 102 Tex. 263, 115 S. W. 1163, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 429, 20 Ann. Cas. 137; so if the judge entered the jury room, it is reversible error; State v. Murphy, 17 N. D. 48, 115 N. W. 84, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 609, 16 Ann. Cas. 1133; Abbott v. Hockenberger, 31 Misc. 587, 65 N. Y. Supp. 566; Du Cate v. Brighton, 133 Wis. 628, 114 N. W. 103; or sends additional instructions without the consent of or notice to parties or counsel; Read v. City of Cambridge, 124 Mass. 567, 26 Am. Rep. 690; Quinn v. State, 130 Ind. 340, 30 N. E. 300; Fox v. Peninsular White Lead Works, 84 Mich. 676, 48 N. W. 203; in some cases a new trial was refused because no prejudice resulted, but the practice was disapproved; Galloway v. Corbitt, 52 Mich. 460, 18 N. W. 218; Moseley v. Washburn, 165 Mass. 417, 43 N. E. 182; State v. Olds, 106 Ia. 110, 76 N. W. 644. Some cases hold that no consent will be implied but must be affirmatively shown; Taylor v. Betsford, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 487; Jones v. Johnson, 61 Ind. 257; in other cases consent has been presumed; Henlow v. Leonard, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 200. See a note on the subject generally, State v. Murphy, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 609.

Where the action of the trial judge and his remarks to the jury, when from time to time they are brought before him stating their inability to agree, amounts to coercion, the verdict must be set aside; People v. Sheldon, 156 N. Y. 268, 50 N. E. 840, 41 L. R. A. 644, 66 Am. St. Rep. 564, where Parker, C. J., discusses the subject at large.

It is within the discretion of the trial judge to recall a jury for inquiry as to their difficulty and for further instructions if deemed advisable, but it is not permissible to inquire in what proportion they are divided, and any instructions in respect to their duty to agree should be carefully guarded, so as not to press that duty unduly upon the minority; Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Craig, 80 Fed. 496, 25 C. C. A. 585.

At common law the coercion of juries was both usual and proper; Proff. Jury Trials § 475; and they were kept together practically as prisoners until agreement; Thomp. & Mer. Juries § 310; but that custom no longer obtains; Physioc. v. Shea, 75 Ga. 466; and it is settled law that the court may advise the jury to agree but should not threaten long confinement; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Moog, 81 Ala. 335, 1 South. 108; Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Jackson, 81 Ind. 19; East Tennessee & W. N. C. R. Co. v. Winters, 85 Tenn. 240, 1 S. W. 790; Slater v. Mead, 53 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 57; State v. Grizzard, 89 N. C. 115; but it is not error for the judge to refer to the length of the term and add that he will give them plenty of time to consider and direct their proper accommodation; Osborne v. Wilkes, 108 N. C. 653, 13 S. E. 285. It is also held that any language used by the bailiff in charge tending to coercion will be a ground for a new trial; Cole v. Swan, 4 G. Greene (Iowa) 32; Obear v. Gray, 68 Ga. 182; but a mere jesting remark of the bailiff will not be sufficient to require a new trial, although taken seriously by some of the jury; Pope v. State, 36 Miss. 121; where it does not appear that any prejudice resulted; Darling v. R. Co., 17 R. I. 708, 24 Atl. 462, 16 L. R. A. 643, and note.

The removal of a case from the consideration of a jury, in criminal cases, can only take place by consent of the prisoner; 6 C. & P. 151; 5 Cox, Cr. Cas. 501; State v. Slack, 6 Ala. 676; or by some necessity; Wright v. State, 5 Ind. 290, 61 Am. Dec. 90; McCauley v. State, 26 Ala. 135; Poage v. State, 3 Ohio St. 239; Williams v. Com., 2 Gratt. (Va.) 570, 44 Am. Dec. 403; Reynolds v. State, 3 Ga. 60; so as to compel the prisoner to be tried again for the same offence; 4 Bla. Com. 360. But where such necessity exists as would make such a course highly conducive to purposes of justice; U. S. v. Coolidge, 2 Gall. 364, Fed. Cas. No. 14,858; Com. v. Cook, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 586, 9 Am. Dec. 465; 2 D. & B. 166; People v. Goodwin, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 205, 9 Am. Dec. 203; Com. v. Fells, 9 Leigh (Va.) 620; 13 Q. B. 734; it may take place.

Where the state court has the right to discharge a jury for want of agreement, the result is a mistrial and the accused cannot on a subsequent trial interpose the plea of once in jeopardy; Keerl v. State of Montana, 213 U. S. 135, 29 Sup. Ct. 469, 53 L. Ed. 734, where the question was suggested but not decided whether the fourteenth amendment in itself forbids a state from putting one of its citizens in a second jeopardy.

In a criminal case, the court has power to withdraw a juror, but this action rests in the sound discretion of the court and is to be exercised only in very extraordinary and striking circumstances in order to prevent the failure of justice; State v. Lewis, 83 N. J. L. 161, 83 Atl. 692.

The question of necessity seems to be in the decision of the court which tries the case; State v. Updike, 4 Harr. (Del.) 581; Hurley v. State, 6 Ohio 399; People v. Green, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 55; U. S. v. Perez, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 579, 6 L. Ed. 165. But see 1 Cox, Cr. Cas. 210; 13 Q. B. 734; Wright v. State, 5 Ind. 292, 61 Am. Dec. 90. A distinction has been taken in some cases between felonies and misdemeanors in this regard; 3 D. & B. 115; U. S. v. Gibert, 2 Sumn. 19, Fed. Cas. No. 15,204; State v. Honeycutt, 74 N. C. 391; but is of doubtful validity; People v. Goodwin, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 187, 9 Am. Dec. 203; Com. v. Bowden, 9 Mass. 494; Com. v. Olds, 5 Litt. (Ky.) 137; McCauley v. State, 26 Ala. 135; Campbell v. State, 11 Ga. 353.

Among cases of necessity which have been held sufficient to warrant the discharge of a jury without releasing the prisoner are sickness of the judge; Nugent v. State, 4 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 72, 24 Am. Dec. 746; State v. Farrow, 8 Bax. (Tenn.) 571; or of his wife; State v. Tatman, 59 Ia. 471, 13 N. W. 632; sickness; *Com. v. In Com. v. Clue, 3 Rawle (Pa.) 498, Gibson, C. J., held that mere inability to agree is not sufficient to justify discharge, nor the illness of two jurymen if it can be relieved by permitting them to have refreshments. In some states, statutes have provided for a discharge upon a disagreement; Lee v. State, 26 Ark. 260, 7 Am. Rep. 611; Crookham v. State, 5 W. Va. 510; Ex parte McLaughlin, 41 Cal. 211, 10 Am. Rep. 272.

After a jury has been sworn, but before the evidence has been begun, a juror may be discharged and another juror called, this being by consent of counsel for the accused; Catron v. State, 52 Neb. 389, 72 N. W. 354. Where, in a felony case, the greater part of the evidence had been heard and a juror was discharged for illness and another one substituted and the evidence was then heard de novo, it was held no ground for a new trial; State v. Davis, 31 W. Va. 390, 7 S. E. 24. If, in a felony case, a juror becomes incapacitated by illness, a mistrial should be declared and the case be tried de novo; West v. State, 42 Fla. 244, 28 South. 430.

Insufficiency of the evidence to convict; 2 Stra. 984; Andrews v. Hammond, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 540; Klock v. People, 2 Park. Cr. Cas. (N. Y.) 676; U. S. v. Shoemaker, 2 McLean 114, Fed. Cas. No. 16,279; and sickness or other incapacity of a witness; 1 Crawf. & D. 151; 1 Mood. 186; are not sufficient necessities to warrant the discharge of a jury. See Com. v. Wade, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 399; U. S. v. Coolidge, 2 Gall. 364, Fed. Cas. No. 14,858; 2 Benn. & H. L. Cr. Cas. 337.

It is within the discretion of the trial judge to refuse to discharge the jury until they arrive at a verdict; Wilson v. Ry. Co., 2 Misc. 127, 20 N. Y. Supp. 852. A jury may be discharged from giving any verdict, whenever the court is of the opinion that there is a manifest necessity for the act, or that the ends of public justice would otherwise be defeated, and may even order a trial before another jury, and a defendant is not thereby twice put in jeopardy; Thompson v. U. S., 135 U. S. 271, 15 Sup. Ct. 73, 39 L. Ed. 146.

When a jury in a criminal case is discharged during the trial, and the defendant subsequently put on trial before another jury, he is not thereby twice put in jeopardy within the meaning of the fifth amendment to the United States constitution; Simmons v. U. S., 142 U. S. 148, 12 Sup. Ct. 171, 35 L. Ed. 968.

See JEOPARDY; WITHDRAWING A JUROR.

Duties and privileges of. Qualified persons may be compelled to serve as jurors under penalties prescribed by law. They are exempt from arrest in certain cases. See PRIVILEGE. They are liable to punishment for misconduct in some cases.

When improper questions are asked of a witness, by a jurymen, and answered, if no objection is made or exception taken, no error is saved, and if inquiries are made by jurymen with court's permission, failure of the court to interpose objections is not reversible error; State v. Crawford, 96 Minn. 95, 104 N. W. 768, 822, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 839; as a general rule, though the cases are few, questions of witnesses by jurors seem to be permitted; Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co. v. Harper, 128 Ill. 384, 21 N. E. 561; Schaefer v. Ry. Co., 128 Mo. 64, 30 S. W. 331.

A frequent variation from the common-law jury system is to permit the jury to impose the punishment (this being formerly considered a matter for judicial discretion), or, as in some states, to divide the responsibility between the judge and jury; and such legislation is held constitutional; Rice v. State, 7 Ind. 332; State v. Hockett, 70 Ia. 442, 30 N. W. 742; 1 Bish. N. Cr. L. § 934.

In criminal cases, in Scotland, a jury consists of fifteen and a majority may convict. In Belgium, criminal and political charges and offences of the press are tried before a jury. Trial by jury has existed in Greece since 1834. In Sweden it exists in cases of offences of the press; and in Italy, in criminal cases, and a majority may convict. In Norway, it was established in 1887, and there also a majority may convict. In Russia, since 1864, all criminal cases involving severe penalties, except political offences, are tried by juries. Hawaii has a jury of twelve, both in civil and criminal cases, of whom nine may render a verdict. In South America, all the states have the jury system. In France, trial by jury exists in cases of felony, and it is provided in Germany, by the imperial code, in all criminal cases except treason, political crimes and offences of the press.

JURY BOX. A place set apart for the jury to sit in during the trial of a cause.

JURY LIST. A paper containing the names of jurors impanelled to try a cause, or it contains the names of all the jurors summoned to attend court.

JURYMEN. A juror; one who is impanelled on a jury. Webster, Dict.

JURY PROCESS. The writs for summoning a jury, viz.: in England, venire juratores facias, and distringas juratores, or ha- beas corpora juratorum. These writs are now abolished, and jurors are summoned by precept. 1 Chitty, Archb. 344; Com. Law Proc. Act, 1852, § 104; 3 Chitty, Stat. 519.

JURY OF WOMEN. A jury of women is given in two cases; viz.: on writ de ventre inspiciendo, which was a writ directed to the sheriff, commanding him that, in the presence of twelve men and as many women, he cause examination to be made whether a woman therein named is with child or not, and if with child, then about what time it will be born, and that he certify the same.

The jury has to be one of "discreet women." The practice was to close the doors before the jury was impanelled. See 8 Carr. & P. 265, where a surgeon was sent out with the jury; on his return to the court he was sworn and made his report. The jury then retired and brought in a verdict.

It was granted in a case when a widow, whose husband had lands in fee-simple, marries again soon after her husband's death, and declares herself pregnant by her first husband, and, under that pretext, withholds the lands from the next heir; Cro. Eliz. 506; Fleta, lib. 1, c. 15. In that case, although the jury was made up of men and women, the examination was made by the latter; 1 Madd. Ch. 11; 2 P. Wms. 591. Such a writ was issued in the case of In re Blackburn, 14 L. J. N. S. Ch. 336. In New York it is said that an application was made for such a jury in the Rollwagen will case and denied upon the ground that "as the lady was not going to be hanged and did not herself solicit the investigation, there was no power to compel her to submit to it;" 10 Alb. L. J. 3. In the opinion of the court in Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Botsford, 141 U. S. 250, 11 Sup. Ct. 1000, 35 L. Ed. 734, the statement is made by Mr. Justice Gray that this writ has never been used in this country. The authorities cited in this title show that this statement is too broad both as to the use of the common-law writ and as to physical examination, which title see further as to that case.

Where pregnancy is pleaded by a condemned woman, in delay of execution, a jury of twelve discreet matrons was called from those in court, who were impanelled to try the fact and report to the court. They chose a fore-matron from their own number. On their returning a verdict of "enceinte," the execution was delayed until the birth, and in some cases the punishment was commuted to perpetual exile. When the criminal was merely privement enceinte, and not quick (see QUICKENING), there was no respite. See 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 412; Taylor, Med. Jur., Bell's ed. 520; Archb. Cr. Pl. 187. The proceeding has been said to be obsolete, though it has been recognized in America and at a very recent date in England, in Reg.

v. Webster, tried before Lord Denman at the Old Bailey in London in July, 1879. The plea of pregnancy was interposed before sentence, and immediately "a jury of matrons selected from a crowd of females in the gallery were impanelled" and sworn, and the inquisition was held forthwith before the judge. The result was a verdict that the prisoner was not quick with child and she was sentenced. The verbatim report of the proceedings may be found in 9 Cent. L. J. 94. In State v. Arden, 1 Bay (S. C.) 487, the plea was allowed and an inquisition held, but the prisoner was found not pregnant and sentenced to death. In Holeman v. State, 13 Ark. 105, the plea was overruled in a larceny case where a woman was convicted of a penitentiary offence. In the case of Mrs. Bathsheba Spooner, who was tried in Massachusetts in 1778 for the murder of her husband, she being under sentence of death, petitioned the governor and council for a respite on account of pregnancy. A writ de ventre inspiciendo was issued by the council to the sheriff directing him to summon a jury of two men midwives and twelve discreet and lawful matrons "to ascertain the truth of her plea." The verdict was that she "is not quick with child," and she was executed, but a post mortem examination proved that her assertion was true; 3 Harv. L. Rev. 44; 39 Alb. L. J. 326.

"While the cases are very rare, there is no evidence (or authority, it might be added) that a jury of women is not a part of the machinery of the law in those states in which the common law prevails." 12 A. & E. Encyc. of L. 331. Such a jury was impanelled in a criminal case in Chester county, Pa., June 27, 1689; 5 Haz. Pa. Reg. 158; Records of Upland Court now in the Pennsylvania Historical Society. See 48 Am. L. Rev. 280.

It may be safely affirmed that no woman who pleads pregnancy in delay of execution will in any common-law jurisdiction be sentenced to death without examination into the truth of the fact pleaded, and in the absence of other statutory provision, it is difficult to see how she could be deprived of this common-law right. It is undoubtedly true that the proceeding is antiquated and ill adapted to the purpose, and therefore the subject is well worthy of legislative attention. Doubtless the rarity of such legislation is due to the infrequency of capital trials of women. In one state at least the contingency is provided for. In New York it is provided by statute that if there is reasonable ground to believe that a female defendant sentenced to death is pregnant, a jury of six physicians shall be impanelled to inquire into the fact, and if it is found by the inquisition that she is "quick with child," the execution is to be suspended until the governor issues a warrant directing it, which he may do as soon as he is satisfied that she is no longer "quick with child," or he may commute her punishment to imprisonment for life; N. Y. Code Crim. Proc. §§ 501-2. See DE VENTRE INSPICIENDO; REPRIEVE.

JURY WHEEL. A mechanical contrivance, usually a circular box revolving on a crank, in which the names of persons subject to jury duty are placed, by the officers, and at the times and places prescribed by law, and from which the proper number to constitute the jury panels for any particular term of court are drawn by lot.

JUS (Lat.). Law; right; equity. Story, Eq. Jur. § 1. In the Roman law the word had two distinct meanings. It was either a body of law, as the jus honorarium, or an individual right, as the jus suffragii. See Sohm, Inst. Rom. L. § 7, where this distinction is developed in the course of a discussion of fundamental conceptions. See Evans' pamphlet on Roman Law According to Livy. A third use of the word was in apposition to judicium, as to which see IN JUDICIO.

Jus is said to have the following meanings: a law court; a bond or tie; power, authority; right to do a thing; law, or a system of law; what is right and fair. The plural means either rights, or rules of law, ordinances, decisions, and so authority. Nettleship, Lexicog.

As to the distinction between jus and lex, see Lex.

See IN JURE; JUDEX; JUS AD REM.

JUS ABUTENDI (Lat.). The right to abuse. By this phrase is understood the right to abuse property, or having full dominion over property. 3 Toullier, n. 86. The right of destruction or consumption, and free disposition. Morey, Rom. L. 283. See DOMINIUM JUS UTENDI.

JUS ACCRESCENDI (Lat.). The right of survivorship. See SURVIVOR.

In Roman Law. The right of accretion. This exists in two cases: According to the general rule a person could not die partly testate and partly intestate, and if any part of the estate was unprovided for, either by the oversight of the testator or any of the heirs, it was ratably distributed among the heirs; Morey, Rom. L. 325; so if the same thing were left to two or more persons each took an equal share; if one of them should die before he had received the legacy, the share of the one so dying passed to the remaining joint legatee or legatees by this right; id. 334. It has been suggested that the germ of this right is to be found in the succession by necessity; Sohm, Inst. Rom. L. § 100.

See ESTATE IN JOINT TENANCY.

JUS ACTUS. In Roman Law. A rural servitude giving to a person a passage for carriages, or for cattle.

JUS AD REM (Lat.). In Civil Law. A right to a thing. It is generally treated as a right to property not in possession, as distinguished from jus in re, which implies the absolute dominion. In English law, this distinction is illustrated by Blackstone, by reference to ecclesiastical promotions, where, although the freehold passes to the person promoted, corporal possession is required to vest the property completely in the new proprietor, who acquires jus ad rem, an inchoate, or imperfect, right of nomination and institution, but not the jus in re, or complete and full right, unless by corporal possession; 2 Bla. Com. 312. The distinction expressed by these terms in the Roman law is analogous to the common-law distinction between the effect of a right of entry and that of actual entry, which in English real property law is expressed in the maxim non jus, sed seisin, facit stipitem; id. Jus ad rem is said to be merely an abridged expression for jus ad rem acquirendam, and it properly denotes the right to the acquisition of a thing. Austin, Jur. Lect. 14.

"On this distinction between claims to things advanced against all men, and those advanced primarily against particular men, is based the division of rights into real and personal expressed by writers of the middle ages, on the analogy of terms found in the writings of the Roman jurists, by the phrases jura in re and jura ad rem. A real right, a jus in re, or, to use the equivalent phrase preferred by some later commentators, jus in rem, is a right to have a thing to the exclusion of all other men. A personal right, jus ad rem, or, to use a much more correct expression, jus in personam, is a right in which there is a person who is the subject of right, as well as a thing as its object, a right which gives its possessor a power to oblige another person to give, or procure, or do, or do not do, something." Sand. Inst. Just. Introd. xlviii.

A right which belongs to a person only mediately and relatively, and has for its foundation an obligation incurred by a particular person.

The jus in re, by the effect of its very nature, is independent and absolute, and is exercised per se ipsum, by applying it to its object; but the jus ad rem is the faculty of demanding and obtaining the performance of some obligation by which another is bound to me ad aliquid dandum vel faciendum, vel præstandum. Thus, if I had the ownership of a horse, the usufruct of a flock of sheep, the right of habitation of a house, a right of way over your land, etc., my right in the horse, in the flock of sheep, in the house, or the land, belongs to me directly, and without any intermediary; it belongs to me absolutely and independently of any particular relation with another person; I am in direct and immediate relation with the thing itself which forms the object of my right without reference to any other relation. This constitutes a jus in re. If, on the other hand, the horse is lent to me by you, or if I have a claim against you for a thousand dollars, my right to the horse or to the sum of money exists only relatively, and can only be exercised through you; my relation to the object of the right is mediate, and is the result of the immediate relation of debtor and creditor existing between you and me. This is a jus ad rem. Every jus in re, or real right, may be vindicated by the actio in rem against him who is in possession of the thing, or against any one who contests the right. It has been said that the words, jus in re of the civil law convey the same idea as thing in possession at common law. This is an error, arising from a confusion of ideas as to the distinctive characters of the two classes of rights. Nearly all the common-law writers seem to take it for granted that by the jus in re is understood the title or property in a thing in the possession of the owner; and that by the jus ad rem is meant the title or property in a thing not in the possession of the owner. But it is obvious that possession is not one of the elements constituting the jus in re; although possession is generally, but not always, one of the incidents of this right, yet the loss of possession does not exercise the slightest influence on the character of the right itself, unless it should continue for a sufficient length of time to destroy the right altogether by prescription. In many instances the jus in re is not accompanied by possession at all; the usuary is not entitled to the possession of the thing subject to his use; still, he has a jus in re. So with regard to the right of way, etc. See DOMINIUM.

A mortgage is considered by most writers as a jus in re; but it is clear that it is a jus ad rem: it is granted for the sole purpose of securing the payment of a debt or the fulfilment of some other personal obligation. In other words, it is an accessory to a principal obligation and corresponding right: it can have no separate and independent existence. The immovable on which I have a mortgage is not the object of the right, as in the case of the horse of which I am the owner, or the house of which I have the right of habitation, etc.: the true object of my right is the sum of money due to me, the payment of which I may enforce by obtaining a decree for the sale of the property mortgaged. 2 Marcadé 350.

The description of legal duties and rights as being in rem or in personam is usually said to be unauthorized by classical Latin usage; Roman lawyers spoke of "actiones," not "jura," as being in rem or in personam. But it should be remembered that in Roman usage "action" included what we now call "a right of action," any determinate claim to some form of legal redress. Action was the right of obtaining by process of law what is due, not the process itself. Hence the modern usage is not so wide apart from the Roman as it appears at first sight to be. Pollock, First Book of Jurispr. 92.

JUS ÆLIANUM. A body of laws upon the same plan as the jus flavianum (q. v.) though more complete. It was published about B. C. 200 by Sextus Ælius and consisted of three parts: (1) The law of the XII. Tables; (2) The interpretation of the same; (3) The description of the legis actiones or forms of procedure. Morey, Rom. L. 85.

JUS ÆSNECIÆ. The right of the eldest-born to inherit; primogeniture.

JUS ALBINATUS. The right of the king by confiscation or escheat to the property of a deceased foreigner unless he had a peculiar exemption. This prerogative was abolished in 1790. 1 Bla. Com. 372; 2 Steph. Com. 409, n. It was the Droit d'Aubaine of the French law, which title see.

JUS ANGARIÆ. See ANGARIA; ANGARY, RIGHT OF.

JUS ANGLORUM. The laws and customs of the West Saxons, in the time of the Heptarchy, by which the people were for a long time governed, and which were preferred before all others. Wharton.

JUS ÆQUUM. Equitable law. A term used by the Romans to express the adaptation of the law to the circumstances of the individual case as opposed to jus strictum (q. v.).

JUS AQUÆDUCTUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. The name of a servitude which gives to the owner of land the right to bring down water through or from the land of another, either from its source or from any other place.

Its privilege may be limited as to the time when it may be exercised. If the source fails, the servitude ceases, but revives when the water returns. If the water rises in, or naturally flows through, the land, its proprietor cannot by any grant divert it so as to prevent it flowing to the land below; 2 Rolle, Abr. 140, l. 25; Lois des Bât. part 1, c. 3, s. 1, art. 1. But if it had been brought into his land by artificial means, it seems it would be strictly his property, and that it would be in his power to grant it; Dig. 8. 3. 1. 10; 3 Burge, Conf. Laws 417. See Washb. Easem.; RIVER; WATER-COURSE.

JUS AQUÆ HAUSTUS. In Roman Law. A rural servitude giving to a person a right of watering cattle on another's field, or of drawing water from another's well.

JUS BELLI. So much of international law as regulates the relations of nations to each other with respect to a state of war, including belligerency and neutrality, which several titles see.

The right of war so far as it concerns the treatment which may be properly accorded to an enemy. Grot. De Bell. et Pac. l. 1, § 3.

JUS BELLUM DICENDI. The right of making a declaration of war.

JUS CIVILE (Lat.). In Roman Law. The private law, in contradistinction to the public law, or jus gentium. 1 Savigny, Dr. Rom. c. 1, § 1.

The local law of the city of Rome.

It is said that the twelve tables marked the starting-point in the development of the Roman law so far as it can be historically authenticated, and that its development advanced steadily in uninterrupted progression until it culminated in the corpus juris civilis of Justinian; Sohm, Inst. Rom. L. § 10. It is, however, rather more accurate to say that the culmination of the Roman law, as a system, was not reached until the period of the development side by side of the jus civile and jus gentium. For an interesting discussion of the origin and growth of this system, see Morey, Rom. L. 14, 24. See Jus Gentium.

JUS CIVITATIS. In Roman Law. The full franchise of citizenship comprising, on the one hand, public rights, including the right of holding office and the right of voting; and on the other hand private rights, including the right to hold and dispose of property, according to the forms of the civil law, and the right of marriage, and all domestic relations. Morey, Rom. L. 48.

The collection of laws which are to be observed among all the members of a nation. It is opposed to jus gentium, which is the law which regulates the affairs of nations among themselves. 2 Lepage, El. du Dr. c. 5, 1. It was very much what is understood in modern terminology by municipal law.

JUS CLOACÆ MITTENDÆ. In Civil Law. The name of a servitude which requires the party who is subject to it to permit his neighbor to conduct the waters which fall on his grounds over those of the servient estate.

JUS COMMUNE. The common law, applicable to all persons alike. The ordinary law, as opposed to jus singulare (q. v.).

"The general law, as opposed to exceptional rules or privileges applicable only to a class." Pollock, First Book of Jurispr. 250.

JUS CORONÆ. The right of succession to the throne of Great Britain.

JUS CURIALITATIS ANGLIÆ. The right of curtesy. See CURTESY.

JUS DARE (Lat.). To enact or to make the law. Jus dare belongs to the legislature; jus dicere, to the judge.

JUS DELIBERANDI (Lat.). The right of deliberating, given to the heir, in those countries where the heir may have benefit of inventory (q. v.), in which to consider whether he will accept or renounce the succession.

In Louisiana he is allowed ten days before he is required to make his election. La. Civ. Code art. 1028.

JUS DEVOLUTUM. A phrase formerly used in Scotch ecclesiastical law to designate the right which devolved on the presbytery to present a minister to a vacant parish or benefice, in case the patron should neglect to exercise his right within the time limited by law, by presenting within six months a properly qualified person. Int. Cyc.

JUS DICERE (Lat.). To declare the law. It is the province of the court jus dicere, to declare what the law is.

JUS DISPONENDI (Lat.). The right to dispose of a thing.

In a general sense it means the right of alienation, and is frequently applied in the case of a married woman with respect to her separate estate. In a special or limited sense, it is applied to the reservation by a vendor of chattels or the ultimate ownership of goods with the possession of which he has parted. It is said to be often a matter of great nicety to determine upon a contract of sale, whether or not the vendor's purpose or intention was to reserve a jus disponendi. Benj. Sales, Ch. VI. § 382. See SALE.

The reservation of this right is essential where the property in the thing sold is reserved as a security for deferred payments or purchase-money, and it is permitted in many cases in which it is not permissible at common law. The great increase in the number of transactions in which such reservation is customary, as car trusts, installment sales, etc., makes the subject one of increased importance and interest.

JUS DISTRAHENDI. The right of sale of goods pledged in case of non-payment. See PLEDGE; DISTRESS.

JUS DIVIDENDI. The right of testamentary disposition of real estate.

JUS DUPLICATUM (Lat. double right). When a man has the possession as well as the property of anything, he is said to have a double right, jus duplicatum. Bracton, l. 4, tr. 4, c. 4; 2 Bla. Com. 199.

JUS EDICERE, JUS EDICENDI. The right to issue edicts. It belonged to all the higher magistrates, but special interest is attached to the prætorian edicts in connection with the history of Roman law. See PRÆTOR.

JUS EX NON SCRIPTO. Law constituted by custom or such usage as indicates the tacit consent of the community.

The definition of Ulpian was: "Diuturna consuetudo pro jure et lege in his quæ non ex scripto descendunt, observari solet;" D. 1, 3, 33. This is well, though freely, translated thus: "Whatever has existed for a long period of time, and is in harmony with the moral judgment of the community is regarded as having the force of law, and the judicial authority is bound to recognize it as such, even though it has never been expressed in a legal enactment." Morey, Rom. L. 223. The same author says with respect to such law: "It was also a maxim of the Romans, that not only can laws be established by custom; they can also be abrogated by custom—that is, by contrary usage. It is unnecessary to consider here the objections raised by some modern jurists, such as Austin, to this view of customary, or unwritten law. It is enough for our present purpose to say that this was the conception of the Roman jurists regarding the origin of a portion of the positive law, and a conception which has been adopted by the majority of modern civilians;" Id. Another phrase by which this law was known was jus moribus constitutum. See LAW.

JUS FECIALE (Lat.). In Roman Law. Feacial law. It has been termed that branch of international law which had its foundation in the religious belief of different nations: such as the international law which now exists among the Christian people of Europe. Savigny, Dr. Rom. c. 2, § 11. But the earlier writers on the civil law gave to it more of a characterization as international law than is attributed to it by modern writers.

See FECIAL LAW; INTERNATIONAL LAW.

It related to rules and ceremonies or modes of procedure for declarations of war and ratifications of treaties of peace. The subject was entrusted to a college of priests, who were, however, the mere agents of the state. Hershey, Int. L. 43.

JUS FIDUCIARUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. A right to something held in trust. For this there was a remedy in conscience. 2 Bla. Com. 328. See FIDEI COMMISSUM.

JUS FLAVIANUM. A publication of the legis actiones or a practical manual of the procedure, including a list of dies fasti (q. v.).

Of this publication it is said: "The first step which led to the decline of the legis actiones was due to their publication. As long as the knowledge of legal forms was restricted to the patrician class, the people at large were helpless in their efforts to obtain an impartial administration of justice." Morey, Rom. L. 85. The author was Cnæus Flavius, who was a scribe or clerk of Appius Claudius. His publication was B. C. 304. It was followed about a century later by the Jus Ælianum (q. v.). See also Sohm, Inst. Rom. L. § 14, n. 2.

JUS FODIENDI. In Civil Law. The name of a rural servitude which permits digging on the land of another. Inst. 2, 3, 2; Dig. 8, 3, 1, 1. A similar right was recognized in early English law; Bract. 222.

JUS GENTIUM (Lat.). The law of nations. It has been said that although the Romans used these words in the sense we attach to law of nations, yet among them the sense was much more extended. Falk, Encyc. Jur. 102, n. 42. It has been termed a system made up by the early Roman lawyers of the common ingredients in the customs of the old Italian tribes, for the purpose of adjudicating questions arising in Rome between foreigners or natives and foreigners. Maine, Anc. Law 49.

The jus gentium is differently characterized by the later writers on the civil law from the meaning given to the phrase by the earlier writers who treated it, as more identical with the idea of modern international law than it is now considered to have been.

The distinction between the jus gentium and the jus civile is thus admirably expressed: "The jus gentium, on the other hand, came to be regarded as a universal law of all mankind, common to all nations, because resting on the nature of things and the general sense of equity which obtains among all men, the 'jus gentium quod apud omnes gentes peræque custoditur,' a sort of natural law, exacting recognition everywhere in virtue of its inherent reasonableness. It would, however, be erroneous to suppose that the Romans attempted to introduce a code of nature such as the philosophers had devised. The jus gentium was, and never had been anything else but a portion of positive Roman law, which commercial usage of other sources of law, more especially the prætorian edict (q. v.), had clothed in a concrete form. Nor again must it be imagined that the Romans simply transferred a portion of foreign (Hellenic) law bodily into their own system. In the few quite exceptional cases where they did so (as c. g. in the case of hypotheca), they did not fail to impress their institutions with a national Roman character. The antithesis between jus civile and jus gentium was merely the outward expression of the growing consciousness that Roman law, in absorbing the element of greater freedom, was commencing to discard its national peculiarities and transform itself from the special local law of a city into a general law for the civilized world. The jus gentium was that part of the private law of Rome which was essentially in accordance with the private law of other nations, more especially with that of the Greeks, which would naturally predominate along the seaboard of the Mediterranean. In other words, jus gentium was that portion of the positive law of Rome which appeared to the Romans themselves in the light of a 'ratio scripta,' of a law which obtains among all nations and is common to all mankind." Sohm, Inst. Rom. L. § 13.

The Romans discovered, or thought they discovered, a common groundwork of legal institutions in the various commonwealths that became subject to Rome. What remained, after deducting local and technical peculiarities, was called by them the common law of nations, jus gentium. Pollock, Oxford Lectures 10.

The origin of the jus gentium was undoubtedly to be found in the adjustment of the Roman law to the relations existing between Roman citizens and foreigners, and between foreigners themselves. The growth of a different system was a not unnatural result of the administration of law in cases where both parties were not Roman citizens, by the foreign prætors, who were not bound by the strict rules of the jus civile, but from going about from place to place, and administering a kind of equitable jurisdiction in the settlement of disputes, they might not inaptly be termed peripatetic or itinerant arbitrators. The growth of a system of law administered by them alongside of the jus civile was not unlike the growth of the equity jurisprudence alongside of the common law. Then, too, the fact that these officers were constantly engaged in settling disputes, to which at least one party was a foreigner, naturally led to their becoming familiar with the principles of other systems of law, and in applying them to the case in hand, so far as they commended themselves to their sense of justice. The new system was afterwards extended to the whole non-citizen class. And while in the first instance it was treated as an entirely distinct system from the jus civile, it gradually supplanted the latter, and by a process which was originally the absorption of much of the jus gentium into the jus civile, it subsequently became recognized as a constituent part of Roman Law, and was gradually welded into a complete system of jurisprudence.

The confusion between jus gentium and international law is said to be entirely modern.

For a bibliography of this subject, see Hershey, Int. L. 54.

See Morey, Rom. L. 59-71; INTERNATIONAL LAW; JUS CIVILE; JUS NATURALE.

JUS GLADII (Lat. the right of the sword). Supreme jurisdiction. The right to absolve from or condemn a man to death.

JUS HABENDI (Lat.). The right to have a thing. The right to be put into actual possession of property to which one is entitled.

JUS HABENDI ET RETINENDI. The right to have and retain the offerings, tithes, and profits of a parsonage or rectory. Toml.; Moz. & W.

JUS HÆREDITATIS. The right of succession as an heir, or of inheritance. See HÆIR.

JUS HONORARIUM. In Civil Law. A name applied to the prætorian edicts and also to the edicts of the curule ædiles, when on certain occasions they were published. Inst. 1. 2. 7.

This system of law was simply the usual development of an expanding and elastic jurisprudence, which naturally resulted from the increase in Rome of population and power, and the greater complication of her civilization; Howe, Stud. Civ. L. 10; it was spoken of as having a distinct place by the side, and as the complement, of the jus civile; Sand. Introd. Inst. Just. xxi. It was a system of judge-made law (q. v.) in the proper sense. Its vigorous development was coincident with the formulary procedure, which was well adapted to give it scope and effect; Sohm, Introd. Rom. L. 178.

Its place and function in the Roman jurisprudence are thus described: "The prætorian law, being a law made by officials, 'jus honorarium,' was opposed to the jus civile, i. e. law, in the strict and proper sense of the term, the law made by the people, developed by popular enactments and popular customs. Thus both the jus civile and the jus honorarium contained elements of jus gentium, but in the jus honorarium, the influence of the jus gentium predominated. The prætorian edict was, in the main, the instrument by means of which the free principles of jus æquum gained their victory over the older jus strictum. Though at first the edict may merely have served the purpose of giving fuller effect to the jus civile, and then of supplementing the jus civile, nevertheless, in the end, borne along by the current of the times, it boldly assumed the function of reforming the civil law." Id. 54.

See JUDEX; PRÆTOR.

All magistrates of elevated rank possessed the power of legislating, "jus edicendi," with regard to such matters as fell within their jurisdiction, and the body of rules so established was termed jus honorarium. But as the jus prætorium forms so important a part of it, the term jus honorarium is often restricted to the jus prætorium.

JUS HONORUM. In Roman Law. The right of holding offices. See JUS SUFFRAGII.

JUS IMAGINIS. In Roman Law. The right of displaying the pictures and statues of one's ancestors, somewhat as in the English law of Heraldry, there is a right to the coat-of-arms.

JUS IMMUNITATIS. The law of exemption from the liability to hold public office.

JUS IN PERSONAM. A personal right. Considered by some writers as a more correct expression for jus ad rem, which see.

According to the Roman law, property could not be transferred by mere agreement. The latter, even though in form a legal contract, had the effect only of expressing the intention of the parties and creating a personal right against the one making the agreement in a real right to the property itself. Morey, Rom. L. 307. See JUS AD REM.

JUS IN RE (Lat.). A right which belongs to a person, immediately and absolutely, in a thing, and which is the same against the whole world,—idem erga omnes. See JUS AD REM.

"The objection to using the term jus in re is that the expression occurs in the classical jurists as meaning an interest in a thing short of ownership, as the interest of a mortgagee in the thing pledged, and on this ground the term jus in rem, which in this sense is not found in the classical jurists, but is supported by the analogy of the familiar term actio in rem, seems preferable." Sand. Inst. Just. xlix. See JUS AD REM.

JUS IN RE ALIENA. An easement on servitude, or right in, or arising out of, the property of another.

JUS IN RE PROPRIA. The right of enjoyment which appertains to full and complete ownership of property. Frequently, by relation, the full ownership or property itself.

JUS INCOGNITUM (Lat.). An unknown law. This term is applied by the civilians to obsolete laws, which, as Bacon truly observes, are unjust; for the law to be just must give warning before it strikes. Bacon, Aph. 8, s. 1; Bowyer, Mod. Civ. Law 33. But until it has become obsolete no custom can prevail against it. See OBSOLETE.

JUS ITALICUM. In Roman Law. A right bestowed upon a community by which it acquired "the privileges of a colonia Italica (i. e. an old colony of Roman citizens endowed with full legal rights), that its soil is therefore exempt from the land-tax and capable of quiritary ownership, in other words, is placed on the same footing as the fundus Italicus." Heisterbergk, Name und Begriff des jus Italicum (1885). Sohm, Inst. Rom. L. § 22, n. 2.

JUS ITINERIS. In Roman Law. A rural servitude giving to a person the right to pass over an adjoining field, on foot or horseback.

JUS LATII. The right or privilege conferred upon the various communities of Latium.

This has been termed a "kind of qualified citizenship (civitas sine suffragio), such as Rome had, in early times, granted to the inhabitants of Cære." Morey, Rom. L. 50. These rights originally included the rights of intermarriage and of commercial intercourse between Rome and the inhabitants of the Latin towns. The author last cited says: "The possession of these rights formed the essential feature of the early jus Latii, or Latinitas. In later times, however, the right which went under this name and which was bestowed upon the Latin colonies outside of Latium, included the commercium only." Id. Sohm says that from the earliest times the members of the town communities of Latium who were the original Latins had the same private marriage law as the Romans. It was, in fact, their original law, and it was because they were allies governed by the same law that they enjoyed the jus commercii and the jus connubii of the Romans. They did not, of course, possess the public rights of a Roman until the powerful interest attaching to those rights resulted in the granting of Roman citizenship first to the Latin allies then to all the Italian communities; Sohm, Inst. Rom. L. § 22. There were two forms of the jus latii, latium minus which was the older and usual one, and the latium majus. In communities in the former, only officials acquired Roman civitas. In those which had the latter it was extended to the decuriones. See DECURIONES; id. § 22, n. 2. Another authority confines the two forms to magistrates and defines them thus: "The latium majus raising to the dignity of Roman citizens not only the magistrate himself, but also his wife and children; the latium minus raising to that dignity only the magistrate himself." Bro. L. Dict.

JUS LEGITIMUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. A legal right which might have been enforced by due course of law. 2 Bla. Com. 328.

JUS LIBERORUM. In Roman Law. The privilege conferred upon a woman who had three or four children. In order that she should be able to take all the property given her by will, she must have had this privilege conferred upon her. Sohm, Inst. Rom. L. § 86. In the time of Hadrian, a decree was made conferring upon a mother, as such, who, being an ingenua, had the jus trium liberorum, or being a libertina, the jus quatuor liberorum, a civil law right to succeed her intestate children; id. § 98.

Another author defines this privilege as one by which exemption was given from all troublesome offices. Brown, L. Dict.

JUS MERUM (Lat.). A simple or bare right; a right to property in land, without possession, or the right of possession.

JUS MORIBUS CONSTITUTUM. See Jus Ex Non Scripto.

JUS NATURALE. The name given to those rules of conduct which are universally binding upon men and which are sanctioned by the dictates of right reason, as opposed to rules of conduct prescribed and enforced by the sovereign power of the state which are called positive law, known to the Romans as jus civile, and in modern jurisprudence as municipal law.

The jus naturale, or law of nature, is simply the jus gentium, or law of nations, seen in the light of a peculiar theory. Maine, Anc. Law 52. Sir F. Pollock refers to this as "an unhappy term," which seems to be a mere external ornament borrowed from Greek philosophers in excess of zeal to make a show of philosophical culture, and inconsistent with the proper Roman use of jus. Oxford Lectures 7.

A much quoted definition of Ulpian was that which nature attaches to animals. Of this it has been said that it was peculiar, and the conception exercised little or no influence upon the judicial thought of Rome. Morey, Rom. L. 111, where also are collected many definitions of the Roman jurists.

Sandars considers the passage from Ulpian unfortunately borrowed by Justinian and thereby removed from the connection in which it was used, which was a subsidiary and divergent line of thought, and had nothing to do with the main theory. Accordingly "in considering what the Roman jurists meant by jus naturale this fragment of Ulpian may be dismissed almost entirely from our notice." Sand. Inst. Just. 7.

The conception of the jus naturale came from the Stoics and has been termed "by far the most important addition to the system of Roman law, which the jurists introduced from Greek philosophy." Sand. Inst. Just. Introd. xxii. And Maine says of it that "the importance of this theory to mankind has been very much greater than its philosophical deficiencies would lead us to expect." Anc. L. 71.

While it is undoubtedly true that the highest conception of law is that natural law and positive law should be entirely harmonious, it is in the domain of international law that this conception more nearly approaches realization. The jus gentium was a system largely based upon the jus naturale, and it is due to that fact that the Roman system so largely formed the basis upon which Grotius commenced to build, the system which has developed into modern international law. It has been said that while he "rejected Ulpian's definition of the jus naturale, he accepted the idea of natural law expressed in the later jus gentium of the Romans as a body of principles based upon the common reason of mankind. It was therefore possible for him to extend the equitable principles already developed in the Roman jus gentium to the relations existing between sovereign states. States were looked upon as moral persons—subjects of the natural law, and as equal to each other in their moral rights and obligations." Morey, Rom. L. 208. See Jus Gentium; Law of Nature; Law.

JUS NON SACRUM. In Roman Law. That portion of the jus publicum which regulated the duties of magistrates.

Non-sacred law; that which dealt with the duties of civil magistrates, the preservation of public order, and the rights and duties of persons in their relation to the state. Morey, Rom. L. 223. It was analogous to that which would now be called the police power.

JUS NON SCRIPTUM. See Jus Ex Non Scripto.

JUS ONERIS FERENDI. An urban servitude in the Roman Law, the owner of which had the right of supporting and building upon the house wall of another.

JUS PAPIRIANUM. A collection of leges regiae said to have been collected from the early periods of Roman history in the time of Romulus, Numa, and other kings.

They were a private compilation described as "fragments of a collection," which, "though clearly showing the religious spirit of the early law, are yet meagre and unsatisfactory." Morey, Rom. L. 25. Though a private collection, it is suggested that they received the name of royal laws merely because the regulations which they contained were placed under the immediate protection of the kings. They were concerned in the main with sacred matters, i. e. they were essentially of a religious and moral character, and bear clear testimony to the closeness of the original connection between law and religion; Sohm, Inst. Rom. L. § 11, n. 2. Ascribed to Sextus (or Caius) Papirius, who was supposed to have lived in the reign of Tarquinius Superbus; Hunter, Rom. L. 1.

JUS PASCENDI. In Roman Law. The rural servitude giving the right of pasturage on another's land.

JUS PATRONATUS (Lat.). In Ecclesiastical Law. A commission from the bishop, directed usually to his chancellor and others of competent learning, who are required to summon a jury, composed of six clergymen and six laymen, to inquire into and examine who is the rightful patron. 3 Bla. Com. 246.

JUS PERSONARUM (Lat.). The right of persons. See JURA PERSONARUM.

JUS PISCANDI. See JUS VENANDI ET PISCANDI.

JUS POSSESSIONIS. The simple right of possession which may exist independently of ownership.

"Possession and ownership may, and generally do, coincide. But as a person may be the owner of a thing and not possess it, so a person may be the possessor of a thing and not be the owner. It is when the possessor is not the legal owner that it becomes important to consider to what rights he is entitled by virtue of his possession." Morey, Rom. L. 255. See JUS POSSIDENDI; POSSESSION.

JUS POSSIDENDI. The right of possessing, which is the legal consequence of ownership. It is to be distinguished from the jus possessionis (q. v.), which is a right to possess which may exist without ownership.

JUS POSTLIMINII (Lat.). The right of the owner to claim property after its recapture from an enemy. See POSTLIMINII.

JUS PRÆTORIUM. A body of laws developed from the exercise of discretion by the prætors, as distinguished from the leges or positive law. See PRÆTOR.

JUS PRECARIUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. A right to a thing held for another, for which there was no remedy. 2 Bla. Com. 328.

JUS PRESENTATIONIS. The right of presentation.

JUS PRIVATUM. The municipal law of the Romans as distinguished from the jus publicum, which was the law of political conditions and of crimes (with that of criminal procedure). Campbell's Analysis of Austin, 143.

"The relations of power subsisting between persons and the world of things, or the equivalents of things, are the subject-matter of private law. Private law, in other words, has to do with the dominion of persons over things. Its pith is, therefore, contained in the law of property. The subject-matter of public law are the relations of power which subsist between persons and persons. Here, the power is ideal, in the sense that its object is the free-will of another, i. e. something invisible and outwardly intangible. Public law, then, has to do with the dominion of persons over persons. The rights of control with which such private law is concerned are reducible to a money value; the rights of control with which public law is concerned are not thus reducible. In private law, again, the subject of a right appears in his individual capacity, as commanding the world of material things. In public law, on the other hand, the subject of a right appears in his capacity as a member of a community which it is his part to serve in order that he may share in the benefits it confers. Finally, as against their object, the rights of private law merely confer a power, the rights of public law, on the other hand, impose, at the same time, a duty on the person to whom the right pertains. The distinction is clearly exemplified in the case of the right of ownership in a thing, on one side, and the right of a sovereign over his people on the other." Sohm, Inst. Rom. L. § 7.

JUS PROJICIENDI (Lat.). In Civil Law. The name of a servitude by which the owner of a building has a right of projecting a part of his building towards the adjoining house, without resting on the latter. It is extended merely over the ground. Dig. 50. 16. 242; 8. 2. 25; 8. 5. 8. 5.

JUS PROPRIETATIS. The right of property, as Blackstone phrases it: "the mere right of property without either possession or even the right of possession. This is frequently spoken of in our books under the name of mere right," jus merum (q. v.); 2 Bla. Com. 197. See RIGHT OF PROPERTY.

JUS PROTEGENDI (Lat.). In Civil Law. The name of a servitude: it is a right by which a part of the roof or tiling of one house is made to extend over the adjoining house. Dig. 50. 16. 243. 1; 8. 2. 25; 8. 5. 8. 5.

JUS PROTIMÆSEOS. The right of pre-emption of a landlord in case the tenant wishes to dispose of his rights as a perpetual lessee. Sohm, Inst. Rom. L. § 57. Pactum protimæseos was the right of pre-emption to the seller; i. e. in case the buyer should sell, he must sell to the former seller. Hunter, Rom. L. 503.

JUS PROVINCICIARUM. A franchise conferred upon provincials much more limited than that conferred upon the people of Italy.

It has been described as "equivalent to the jus italicum minus the freedom from land taxation which the latter right involved. In short, the provincials possessed no status as Roman citizens; and even their capacity of ownership in their own land was qualified by their tributary obligations to Rome. The civil incapacity of the provincials had reference, however, merely to their exclusion from the strictly legal rights sanctioned by the jus civile." Morey, Rom. L. 55.

JUS PUBLICUM. See JUS PRIVATUM.

JUS QUÆSITUM (Lat.). A right to ask or recover: for example, in an obligation there is a binding of the obligor, and a jus quæsitum in the obligee. 1 Bell, Com. 323.

JUS QUIRITIIUM. Quiritarian ownership, so called under the ancient jus civile, because, strictly speaking, there was recognized but this one form of ownership. It could be acquired only through the technical forms of civil law, and never by a foreigner. The strictness which was observed in this respect was due to the fact that this was the form of private ownership, which, under Roman law, was as developed from the general right of dominion and ownership by the state. To prevent hardships and injustice in the strict application of the rules of law, it was permitted to the prætor to issue possessory interdicts to protect the possession of those who had not complied with all the technical conditions of ownership. In this way, legal sanction was given to the right of possession which amounted substantially to a right of property. This affords another illustration of the many points in which the Roman system presents a strict similarity to the English equity jurisprudence as long afterwards developed. Morey, Rom. L. 21, 74, 283; Sand. Inst. Just. Introd. xx.

JUS RECUPERANDI, INTRANDI, Etc. The right of recovering and entering upon land.

JUS RERUM (Lat.). The right of things. Its principal object is to ascertain how far a person can have a permanent dominion over things, and how that dominion is acquired.

JUS SACRUM. In Roman Law. That portion of the public law which was concerned with matters relating to public worship and including the regulation of sacrifices and the appointment of priests. There was a general division of the jus publicum into jus sacrum and jus non sacrum (q. v.).

JUS SANGUINIS. The right of blood.

According to Roman and Germanic principles, nationality is based primarily upon descent (jus sanguinis). This is said to prevail in Germany, Austria, Hungary, Sweden and Switzerland; so also in the Napoleonic Code. Hershey, Int. L. 237.

See JUS SOLI.

JUS SCRIPTA. Written law. After stating that the Roman law was written and unwritten just as it was among the Greeks, Justinian adds: "The written part consists of laws, plebiscita, senatus-consulta, enactments of emperors, edicts of magistrates, and answers of jurists." Sand. Inst. Just. 1, 2, 3. See JUS EX NON SCRIPTA.

JUS SINGULARE. A law which is an exception to the ordinary law. A special rule applicable to an individual case or class of cases. Where it benefits particular classes of persons, it is called privilege, in an objective sense; privilege in a subjective sense is a particular right conferred upon a definite person by leges speciales. See JUS COMMUNE.

JUS SOLI. The law of the place of one's birth as contrasted with jus sanguinis, the law of the place of one's descent or parentage. It is of feudal origin. Hershey, Int. L. 237.

JUS SPATIANDI. A right of way over land by the public by uses merely for the purposes of recreation and instruction. It is usually limited to the cases of highways, parks, and squares. The public were denied any right in the grounds containing the ancient druidical monuments at Stonehenge;

Attorney-General v. Antrobus, [1905] 2 Ch. 188. See 19 Harv. L. Rev. 55. See Ducange, Glossarium, for a definition under the word spatiare.

JUS STILLICIDII VEL FLUMINIS RECIPIENDI. In Roman Law. An urban servitude giving the owner a right to project his roof over the land of another or to open a house drain upon it.

JUS STRICTUM (Lat.). A Latin phrase, which signifies law interpreted without any modification, and in its utmost rigor. See JUS ÆQUUM.

JUS SUFFRAGII. In Roman Law. The right of voting. This and the jus honorum (q. v.) were the public rights of the Roman citizen.

JUS TERTII. The right of a third person. This is set up by way of defence in many actions where it is sought to establish relations of landlord and tenant, or bailor and bailee, by a plea of setting up the jus tertii.

JUS TIGNI IMMITTENDI. In Roman Law. An urban servitude which gave the right of inserting a beam into the wall of another.

JUS TRIPERTITUM. A threefold right. The term is used by Justinian who says that the requisites of the Roman testament seem to have had a triple origin (ut hoc jus tripartitum esse videatur). Sand. Inst. Just. 2, 10, 3. "It is out of regard to this threefold derivation from the prætorian edict, from the civil law, and from the imperial constitutions, that Justinian speaks of the law of wills in his own days as jus tripartitum." Maine, Anc. L. 207.

JUS UTENDI (Lat.). The right to use property without destroying its substance. It is employed in contradistinction to the jus abutendi. 3 Toullier, n. 86.

JUS VENANDI ET PISCANDI. The right of hunting and fishing.

JUS VITÆ NECISQUE. In Roman Law. The right of life and death. Originally a father, or his pater-familias if he was himself in domestic subjection, could decide—not arbitrarily, but judicially—whether or not to rear his child; and while this right became subject to certain restrictions, yet when the child had grown up, the father, in the exercise of his domestic jurisdiction, might visit his son's misconduct, both in private and public life, with such punishment as he thought fit, even banishment, slavery, or death. In the early Empire these rights became relaxed, and they disappeared in the Justinian law. Muirhead, Roman Law, 28, 346, 417. See PATRIA POTESTAS.

JUST. This word is frequently used in legal phraseology in combination with other words, such as reasonable, equitable, convenient.

Where, as a foundation for an attachment, an affidavit was required that the plaintiff's claim is just, it is not sufficient if it does not state positively, but only inferentially, that his claim is just, and it does not amount to the same thing to say that the plaintiff "ought justly to recover the amount," or that "said several sums are justly due;" Robinson v. Burton, 5 Kan. 293.

In the English Traffic Act, in the phrase "just and reasonable," it was said to mean, to the advantage of the customer; 51 L. J. Q. B. 601.

Where conditions of traffic companies are to be just and reasonable, the reasonableness is a question of law, not of fact; 18 C. B. 805, 829.

It is a "just and reasonable" provision in by-laws to disqualify by reason of bankruptcy or notorious insolvency; 10 H. L. Cas. 404.

An agreement to pay what an individual (who was a taxing officer of the court of chancery) should say was a just and reasonable compensation for the services rendered by the complainant's solicitor in a suit commenced in that court, and settled before decree, obliges the party so agreeing to pay the bill of costs regularly taxed by the individual named in the agreement; Culley v. Hardenbergh, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 508. The terms "just and reasonable," as employed by the legislature in the Practice Act, obviously have reference to the rules of practice then existing by the common law, and contemplate no other or different terms than would be just and reasonable, as judged of by that practice; Empire Fire Ins. Co. v. Trust Co., 1 Ill. App. 391.

The words "just and fair" within the meaning of the New York statute, authorizing the imprisonment of a fraudulent debtor, were thus construed: "Where the debtor has procured from the creditor, at whose suit he is imprisoned, property by fraud, even if he has spent the proceeds in any way that would be unobjectionable, if they were his own, and if by loss or accident he is deprived of them, his proceedings are not just and fair, and where the debtor has combined or united with others to fraudulently obtain the property of the creditor, at whose suit he is imprisoned, even if such others got the proceeds of the fraud, and he kept none, his proceedings are not 'just and fair' within the meaning of the statute," authorizing the examination of an imprisoned debtor, in proceedings for his discharge from imprisonment, if it appear that his proceedings have not been "just and fair" towards the creditor under whose judgment he is imprisoned; In re Roberts, 59 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 136; In re Finck, id. 145.

In the English Companies Act, 1862, it is "just and equitable" to wind up a company when the whole substratum of the business which was the object of the company had become strictly impossible; 1 Cox 213; 3 K. & J. 78; 20 Ch. Div. 169.

In the phrase a "just cause" for a court to do anything, the word just "does not add much weight, though it may add a little; it means some substantial reason must be shown;" Jessel, M. R., in 21 Ch. Div. 397.

To be "just and convenient" to appoint a receiver or grant an injunction or mandamus, respect must be given to what is just according to settled principles, as well as to what is convenient; 9 Ch. Div. 89.

"All my just debts" includes all debts; Wms. Ex. 1719; L. R. 4 H. L. 506. A direction to pay debts or just debts included a mortgage debt in exoneration of the property, but 30 and 31 Vict. c. 69, § 1, did away with that reasoning; 9 Ch. Div. 12, per Jessel, M. R. A direction to pay just debts did not include a note of the testator made before he was of age, and therefore voidable; Smith v. Mayo, 9 Mass. 62, 6 Am. Dec. 28. See also Smith v. Porter, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 209; Culley v. Hardenbergh, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 508; Martin v. Gage, 9 N. Y. 398.

JUST BEFORE. "At the time when," was the construction of these words in a plea to justify the killing of a dog; Ir. C. L. 156.

JUST COMPENSATION. See EMINENT DOMAIN.

JUSTICE. The constant and perpetual disposition to render to every man his due. Justinian, Inst. b. 1, tit. 1; Co. 2d Inst. 56. The conformity of our actions and our will to the law. Toullier, Droit Civ. Fr. tit. pré. n. 5.

Commutative justice is that virtue whose object it is to render to every one what belongs to him, as nearly as may be, or that which governs contracts. To render commutative justice, the judge must make an equality between the parties, that no one may be a gainer by another's loss.

Distributive justice is that virtue whose object it is to distribute rewards and punishments to each one according to his merits, observing a just proportion by comparing one person or fact with another, so that neither equal persons have unequal things nor unequal persons things equal. Tr. Eq. 3; and Toullier's learned note, Droit Civ. Fr. tit. pré. n. 7, note.

In the most extensive sense of the word it differs little from virtue; for it includes within itself the whole circle of virtues. Yet the common distinction between them is, that that which considered positively and in itself is called virtue, when considered relatively and with respect to others, has the name of justice. But justice, being in itself a part of virtue, is confined to things simply good or evil, and consists in a man's taking such a proportion of them as he ought.

Toullier exposes the want of utility and exactness in this division of distributive and commutative justice, adopted in the compendium or abridgments of the ancient doctors, and prefers the divisions of internal and external justice,—the first being a conformity of our will, and the latter a conformity of our actions, to the law, their union making perfect justice. Exterior justice is the object of jurisprudence; interior justice is the object of morality. Droit Civ. Fr. tit. prélim. n. 6, 7.

According to the Frederician Code, part 1, book 1, tit. 2, s. 27, justice consists simply in letting every one enjoy the rights which he has acquired in virtue of the laws. And, as this definition includes all the other rules of right, there is properly but one single general rule of right, namely: Give every one his own.

Justice, in the language of Webster, "is the greatest interest of man on earth. It is the ligament which holds civilized nations together. Wherever her temple stands, and as long as it is duly honored, there is a foundation for social security, general happiness, and the improvement and the progress of our race. And whoever labors on this edifice with usefulness and distinction, whoever clears its foundations, strengthens its pillars, adorns its entablatures, or contributes to raise its august dome still higher in the skies, connects himself in name, and fame, and character, with that which is, and must be, as durable as the frame of human society."

In Norman French. Amenable to justice. Inham, Dict.

In Feudal Law. Feudal jurisdiction, divided into high (alta justitia), and low (simplex inferior justitia), the former being a jurisdiction over matters of life and limb, the latter over smaller causes. Leg. Edw. Conf. c. 26; Du Cange. Sometimes high, low, and middle justice or jurisdiction were distinguished.

An assessment; Du Cange; also, a judicial fine. Du Cange.

At Common Law. A title given in England and America to judges of common-law courts, being a translation of justitia, which was anciently applied to common-law judges, while judex was applied to ecclesiastical judges and others; e. g. judex fiscalis. Leges Hen. I. §§ 24, 63; Anc. Laws & Inst. of Eng. Index; Co. Litt. 71 b.

The judges of the federal and state supreme courts are properly styled "justices."

"Justice of the High Court" is the title of judges of the High Court of Justice in the King's Bench and Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Divisions.

The term justice is also applied to the lowest judicial officers: e. g. a trial justice; a justice of the peace.

JUSTICE, DEPARTMENT OF. The act of September 24, 1789 (1 Stat. L. 92), organized the judicial business of the United States, made provision for an attorney-general, and charged him with the duty of prosecuting all suits in the supreme court in which the United States was in anywise interested, and of furnishing advice and opinions upon all questions of law when called upon to do so by the president or the heads of the other executive departments of the government. The federal constitution provides that "the executive power shall be vested in the President of the United States," and although it does not specify any subordinate ministerial or administrative officers, yet there is an inferential recognition of such officers in the provision that the president may require the opinion in writing of the principal officer in each of the executive departments upon any subject relating to the duties of his department, and in the provision for the appointment of certain inferior officers "by the heads of departments." The organization of these departments is by the constitution left to the congress, and it was for the purpose of providing for a department which should administer the legal branch of the government that the above act was passed; 6 Op. Att. Gen. 327.

The Department of Justice was reorganized by act of June 22, 1870. The attorney-general is the head of the department; provision was made for "an officer learned in the law to assist the attorney-general in the performance of his duties, called the solicitor-general." He assists the attorney-general in the performance of his general duties, and by special provision of law, in the case of a vacancy in the office of attorney-general or in his absence, exercises all of the duties of that officer. Except when the attorney-general otherwise directs, the solicitor-general conducts and argues all cases in the supreme court and in the court of claims in which the United States is interested; and when he so directs, any such case in any court of the United States may be conducted and argued by the solicitor-general, and in the same way the solicitor-general may be sent by the attorney-general to attend to the interests of the United States in any state court or elsewhere. Provision is also made for three officers learned in the law called assistant attorneys-general, who assist the attorney-general and solicitor-general in the performance of their duties. A fourth was provided by act of July 11, 1890. By the act of March 3, 1891, an additional assistant attorney-general was created for the purpose of defending the United States in suits brought in the court of claims under that act, for Indian depredations. Of these assistant attorneys-general, one is charged with the defence of the United States in suits brought against the government in the court of claims under its special and general jurisdiction. The solicitor-general and assistant attorneys-general are appointed by the president of the United States by and with the advice and consent of the senate, while the assistant attorneys are appointed by the attorney-general.

The act creating the Department of Justice also provided for a solicitor of the treasury, an assistant solicitor of the treasury, solicitor of internal revenue, a naval solicitor (abolished June 19, 1878), and an examiner of claims for the Department of State, commonly called the solicitor of the Department of State. They are appointed by the president by and with the advice and consent of the senate, and exercise their functions under the supervision and control of the head of the Department of Justice, although they are assigned to duty in the respective departments for which they are appointed. There is also provided an assistant attorney-general for the Department of the Interior and for the Post Office Department, who likewise perform their duties under the general supervision and control of the attorney-general.

The opinions of the attorney-general are published officially and have authority the same in kind, if not in degree, with the decisions of courts of justice; 6 Op. Att. Gen. 333; but see PRECEDENT.

See EXECUTIVE POWER; CABINET.

JUSTICE, FLEEING FROM. In order to come within the exception of "fleeing from justice" in R. S. 1045, it is sufficient that there is a flight with the intention of avoiding prosecution whether a prosecution has or has not been begun. It is not necessary that there should be an intent to avoid the justice of the United States; it is enough that there is an intent to avoid the justice of the state which has jurisdiction over the same act; Streep v. U. S., 160 U. S. 128, 16 Sup. Ct. 244, 40 L. Ed. 365. See FUGITIVE FROM JUSTICE; EXTRADITION; RENDITION.

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE. A public officer invested with judicial powers for the purpose of preventing breaches of the peace and bringing to punishment those who have violated the laws.

A new class of officials was appointed in England in 1327 specially entrusted with the conservation of the peace. Later they were allowed to receive indictments and to send those indicted for trial to the justices of gaol delivery. In 1344 they were to hear and determine felonies and trespasses. In 1360 they were assigned to every county in England, one lord and three or four of the most worthy in the county, with some learned in the law, to keep the peace, to arrest and imprison offenders, to imprison and take surety of suspected persons and to hear and determine felonies and trespasses; and were, about this time, styled by their present name. The number varied. By one act they must be the most sufficient knights, esquires and gentlemen of the land; by another, residents in their counties. They were appointed by the crown. They were the permanent rulers of the county. More recently their administrative powers had been given to elective boards. They were subject to the control of the courts of common law by means of the prerogative writs; by certiorari, their decisions can be questioned, and by mandamus they can be ordered to hear a case falling within their jurisdiction. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 124.

To the 18th century they were called justices of peace. Pollock, King's Peace; Pollock Expan. of C. L. 101. They were the king's officers appointed to aid the performance of his office in their respective counties. Id.

In People ex rel. Burby v. Howland, it was held by the New York appellate division of the supreme court that the legislature could not abolish the office of justice of the peace; 17 App. Div. 105, 45 N. Y. Supp. 347, 55 Alb. L. J. 319. The court said: "The office of justice of the peace is one of the oldest known to the English law. Originally it was merely a peace office, with no civil jurisdiction, but from a time long antedating the constitution (of New York) it was an office with both civil and criminal jurisdiction. Its most important functions are those of conservators of the peace, and administrators of the criminal law. The statutes conferring the powers and duties of the office date so far back in the history of English law that they may be said to be common-law powers, adopted by us with the office and inseparable therefrom."

The office has existed in New York for two centuries, and is a constitutional office of great importance; People v. Howland, 155 N. Y. 270, 49 N. E. 775, 41 L. R. A. 838.

At common law justices of the peace have a double power in relation to the arrest of wrong-doers: when a felony or breach of the peace has been committed in their presence, they may personally arrest the offender, or command others to do so, and, in order to prevent the riotous consequences of a tumultuous assembly, they may command others to arrest affrayers when the affray has been committed in their presence. If a magistrate be not present when a crime is committed, before he can take a step to arrest the offender, an oath or affirmation must be made, by some person cognizant of the fact, that the offence has been committed, and that the person charged is the offender, or there is probable cause to believe that he has committed the offence.

Probably the most important function of justices of the peace, in the administration of criminal law, is their power of committing magistrates. This they have always, and in most states they have also jurisdiction, either sole or concurrent, with some criminal court of petty offences.

The constitution of the United States directs that "no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation." Amendm. IV. After his arrest, the person charged is brought before the justice of the peace, and after hearing he is discharged, held to bail to answer to the complaint, or, for want of bail, committed to prison.

In some states it is held that where there are criminal courts of record in the county, justices of the peace have no trial jurisdiction in criminal causes, but can act only as committing magistrates; Jackson v. State, 33 Fla. 620, 15 South. 250; Baldwin & Co. v. Bond, 45 La. Ann. 1012, 13 South. 742.

In some of the United States, justices of the peace have jurisdiction in civil cases, given to them by local regulations. The jurisdiction is usually confined to actions of contract, express or implied, replevin, and the like, where a small amount is involved. The limit ranges from $100 to $300, and usually torts and actions for unliquidated damages are not included. The local statutes must be consulted, but the statutes regulating the jurisdiction are sufficiently similar to make the citation of a few cases fairly illustrative of the principles generally applied.

Their civil jurisdiction did not exist by the common law, but depends upon the constitutional warrant or statutory enactment; Horton v. Elliott, 90 Ala. 480, 8 South. 103.

Where a justice has no jurisdiction the filing of an answer by defendant after the overruling of a motion to dismiss will not give him jurisdiction; Rogers v. Loop, 51 Ia. 41, 50 N. W. 224. Where the appointment was void the consent of parties cannot give jurisdiction to the justice; Crawford v. Saunders, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 225, 29 S. W. 102.

Where an action would lie in either contract or tort and suit is begun before a justice, in order to sustain the jurisdiction the action will be presumed to have been brought upon the contract; Schulhofer v. R. Co., 118 N. C. 1096, 24 S. E. 709.

Jurisdiction is sufficiently shown if it appears from the entire record of the proceeding; Sappington v. Lenz, 53 Mo. App. 44.

It is no objection to the jurisdiction that plaintiff remitted a part of his claim to bring it within the jurisdiction; Hunton v. Luce, 60 Ark. 146, 29 S. W. 151, 28 L. R. A. 221, 46 Am. St. Rep. 165; McPhail v. Johnson, 115 N. C. 298, 20 S. E. 373; even where unliquidated damages are claimed. Where lumber was delivered by instalments and the total amount exceeded the jurisdiction, the claim could not be split up into separate actions for the different deliveries in order to bring it within the jurisdictional amount; McPhail v. Johnson, 109 N. C. 571, 13 S. E. 799.

Where a stipulated attorney's fee would increase the amount beyond the jurisdiction, the fee may be considered in estimating the amount in controversy; Waters v. Walker (Tex.) 17 S. W. 1085; even if the stipulation for the fee is void; Warder, Bushnell & Glessner Co. v. Raymond, 7 S. D. 451, 64 N. W. 525.

Justices of the peace have been held to have no jurisdiction in trespass for the negligent killing of an animal; Ripple v. Keast, 16 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 548; or negligently allowing a dangerous animal to go at large; Sisco v. Miller, 2 Lack. Leg. N. (Pa.) 143; or for injuries to a horse by a defective culvert; Freedom Tp. v. Snowden, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 73; or in a suit on a foreign judgment; Baldwin v. Coyle, 7 Houst. (Del.) 327, 32 Atl. 15; in an action on the case for nuisance; Helsey v. Witmer, 4 Pa. Dist. R. 290; or for consequential damages due to negligence; Thlow

v. Traction Co., 4 Pa. Dist. R. 83. But the jurisdiction was sustained in an action for the destruction of fruit in baskets, run over and crushed by the wheels of defendant's wagon, consequential damages not being involved; Conner v. Reardon, 8 Houst. (Del.) 19, 31 Atl. 878; so also there was jurisdiction of an action for killing a horse by a railroad company because of a breach of contract to maintain cattle guards; Harrow v. R. Co., 38 W. Va. 711, 18 S. E. 926.

The jurisdiction in a garnishment proceeding does not depend upon the amount the garnishee may owe; Surine v. Bank, 59 Ill. App. 329; in an attachment the jurisdiction is determined by the amount in controversy, not the value of the property attached; Fly v. Grieb's Adm'r, 62 Ark. 209, 35 S. W. 214; Gramling v. Dickey, 118 N. C. 986, 24 S. E. 671.

A justice of the peace has no power to vacate a judgment unless it be one of default or non-suit; Langford v. City of Doniphan, 61 Mo. App. 288; nor to settle a bill of exceptions; Vlasek v. Wilson, 44 Neb. 10, 62 N. W. 245; for the purpose of preserving testimony on a hearing of a motion to discharge the attachment; Donaldson v. Fisher, 43 Neb. 260, 61 N. W. 609; nor to grant a nonsuit where a case is on trial before a jury; Gunn v. Wood, 99 Ga. 70, 24 S. E. 407.

The court of a justice of the peace has been held a court of record; Pressler v. Turner, 57 Ind. 56; Fox v. Hoyt, 12 Conn. 491, 31 Am. Dec. 760; for the reason that it is bound to keep a record of its proceedings and has power to fine and imprison; Hooker v. State, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 272. But it has also been held contra; Snyder v. Wise, 10 Pa. 157; Searcy v. Hogan, Hempst. 20, Fed. Cas. No. 12,584a.

Justices of the peace are within the principle that judicial officers are not liable for damages for judicial acts, and only on ministerial acts in cases of intentional violation of law or gross negligence; Gannon v. Donn, 7 D. C. 264; Curnow v. Kessler, 110 Mich. 10, 67 N. W. 982. It was held that he is not liable for rendering a judgment and issuing an order of sale in an action on which he had no jurisdiction, unless he knowingly acted outside of it; Anderson v. Roberts (Tex.) 35 S. W. 416; or unless he did not act in good faith; Thompson v. Jackson, 93 Ia. 376, 61 N. W. 1004, 27 L. R. A. 92.

The refusal of a justice to approve an appeal is a ministerial act, for which an action will lie against him if he acted corruptly or maliciously; Legates v. Lingo, 8 Houst. (Del.) 154, 32 Atl. 80.

If the action of a justice of the peace is strictly judicial and he has jurisdiction, he is not liable to a civil action, however, it may be as to criminal prosecution, though corruption is alleged; Tyler v. Alford, 38 Me. 530; Garfield v. Douglass, 22 Ill. 100, 74 Am. Dec. 137; Furr v. Moss, 52 N. C. 525; Kress v. State, 65 Ind. 106.

All the acts of a justice of the peace from the commencement to the close of a suit seem to be considered judicial, rather than ministerial, so far as concerns questions of his responsibility; 1 Blsh. N. Cr. L. § 403, n. 3; Werthelmer v. Howard, 30 Mo. 420, 77 Am. Dec. 623; see State v. Dunnington, 12 Md. 340; but he is liable for exercising authority where he has none; Ely v. Thompson, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 70; where he acts upon inadequate allegation, but has jurisdiction over the subject-matter, he is not liable; Stewart v. Hawley, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 552.

JUSTICES OF THE BENCH. Five justices—two clerks and three laymen—all of the king's household, selected by Henry II and ordered to hear all appeals of the kingdom and do justice and not to depart from the king's court. They took precedence of all other judges. J. R. Green, in 1 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 137.

JUSTICES' COURTS. Inferior tribunals, with limited jurisdiction, both civil and criminal. There are courts so called in the states of Massachusetts and New Hampshire, and probably other states.

JUSTICES IN EYRE. Certain judges established, if not first appointed, A. D. 1176, 22 Hen. II.

England was divided into certain circuits, and three justices in eyre—or justices itinerant, as they were sometimes called—were appointed to each district, and made the circuit of the kingdom once in seven years, for the purpose of trying causes. They were afterwards, when the judicial functions assumed greater importance, directed, by Magna Charta, c. 12, to be sent into every county once a year. The itinerant justices were sometimes more justices of assize or dower, or of general jail delivery, and the like.

Speaking of the 12th century it is said that "the visitation of the counties by itinerant justices has been becoming systematic." The holding of the assize on circuit was evidently committed to judges of great prominence. "From the early years of the reign (Henry II.) we hear of pleas held on circuit by Richard Lucy the chief justiciar, by Henry of Essex the constable, and by Thomas Becket the chancellor. . . . In 1176, to execute the assize of Northampton, eighteen justices were employed, and the country was divided into six circuits; in 1179, twenty-one justices were employed, and the country was divided into four circuits; indeed from 1176 onwards hardly a year went by without there being a visitation of some part of England. These itinerant justices seem to have been chiefly employed in hearing the pleas of the crown (for which purpose they were equipped with the power of obtaining accusations from the local juries), and in entertaining some or all of the new possessory actions. The court that they held was, as already said, curia regis, but it was not capitalis curia regis, and probably their powers were limited by the words of a temporary commission. They were not necessarily members of the central court, and they might be summoned before it to bear record of their doings; still it was usual that each party of justices should include some few members of the permanent tribunal." 1 Poll. & Mail. 134.

These justices in eyre in the reign of Henry III. are thus described: "But we may distinguish the main types of these commissions. What seems treated as the humblest is the commission to deliver a jail. This . . . is done very frequently; generally it is done by some three or four knights of the shire, and thus long before the institution of justices of the peace, the country knights had been accustomed to do high criminal justice. In order to dispose of the possessory assizes of novel disseisin and mort d'ancestor, a vast number of commissions were issued in every year. Early in Henry's reign this work was often entrusted to four knights of the shire; at a later time one of the permanent justices would usually be named and allowed to associate some knights with himself. Apparently a justice of assize had often to visit many towns or even villages in each county; he did not do all his work at the county town. It must have been heavy work, for these actions were extremely popular. In the second year of Edward's reign some two thousand commissions of assize were issued. Just at that time the practice seems to have been to divide England into four circuits and to send two justices of assize round each circuit; but a full history of the circuits would be intricate and wearisome. Above all the other commissions rank the commission for an iter ad omnia placita, or more briefly for an iter, or eyre. An eyre had come to be a long and laborious business. In the first place, if we suppose an eyre in Cambridgeshire announced, this has the effect of stopping all Cambridgeshire business in the bench. Litigants who have been told to appear before the justices at Westminster will now have to appear before the justices in eyre at Cambridgeshire. There is no business before the bench at Westminster if an eyre has been proclaimed in all the counties. Then again the justices are provided with a long list of interrogatories (capitula itineris) which they are to address to local juries. Every hundred, every vill in the county must be represented before them. These interrogatories—their number increases as time goes on—ransack the memories of the jurors, and the local records for all that has happened in the shire since the last eyre took place some seven years ago; every crime, every invasion of royal rights, every neglect of police duties must be presented. The justices must sit in the county town from week to week and even from month to month before they will have got through the tedious task and inflicted the due tale of fines and amercements. Three or four of the permanent judges will be placed in the commission; with them will be associated some of the magnates of the district; bishops and even abbots, to the scandal of strict churchmen, have to serve as justices in eyre. Probably it was thought expedient that some of the great freeholders of the country should be commissioned, in order that no man might say that his judges were not his peers.

An eyre was a sore burden; the men of Cornwall fled before the face of the justices; we hear assertions of a binding custom that an eyre shall not take place more than once in seven years. Expedients are being adopted which in course of time will enable the justices of assize to preside in the country over the trial of actions which are pending before the benches; thus without the terrors of an eyre, the trial of civil actions can take place in the counties and jurors need no longer be ever journeying to Westminster from their remote homes. But these expedients belong for the most part to Edward's reign; under his father a jury wearily travelling from Yorkshire or Devonshire towards London must have been no very uncommon sight." 1 Poll. & Maitl. 179, 180, 181.

The general eyre practically ceased by the reign of Edward III.

JUSTICES OF THE JEWS. See JEWS.

JUSTICES OF THE PAVILION (justiciarii pavilionis). Certain judges of a pypouder court, of a most transcendent jurisdiction, authorized by the bishop of Winchester, at a fair held at St. Giles Hills near that city, by virtue of letters-patent granted by Edw. IV. Prynne's Animadv. on Coke's 4th Inst. fol. 191.

JUSTICES OF THE QUORUM. See QUORUM.

JUSTICES OF TRAILBASTON. Justices appointed by Edward I. during his absence in the Scotch and French wars, about the year 1305. They were so styled, it is said, from trailing or drawing the baston (q. v.), or staff of justice. They were a sort of justices in eyre, with large and summary powers. Their office was to make inquisition, throughout the kingdom, of all officers, and others, touching extortion, bribery, and such like grievances of intruders into other men's lands, barrators, robbers, breakers of the peace, and divers other offenders; Cowell; Toml.; Old. N. B. fol. 52; 12 Co. 25.

They are supposed to date from 1276. In Coke's time they had long ceased to exist. They were the connecting link between justices in eyre and justices of oyer and terminer. They enquired as to persons who disturb the peace, who maintain malefactors and who illtreat jurors. 1 Holdsw. H. E. L. 118.

JUSTICIABLE. Such a question or matter as may properly come before a tribunal for decision. A dispute as to the title to real estate is a justiciable question; Minnesota v. Hitchcock, 185 U. S. 373, 22 Sup. Ct. 650, 46 L. Ed. 954; see also Kansas v. Colorado, 206 U. S. 46, 27 Sup. Ct. 655, 51 L. Ed. 956.

JUSTICIAR, JUSTICIER. In Old English Law. A judge or justice. Baker, fol. 118; Mon. Angl. One of several persons learned in the law, who sat in the aula regis, and formed a kind of court of appeal in cases of difficulty.

The chief justiciar (capitulis justiciarius totius Angliæ) was a special magistrate, who presided over the whole curia regis, who was the principal minister of state, the second man in the kingdom, and by virtue of his office, guardian of the realm in the king's absence. 3 Bla. Com. 37; Spelman, Gloss. 330; 2 Hawk. Pl. Cr. 6. The last who bore this title was Philip Basset, in the time of Hen. III. After 1234, the office fell into abeyance; Harcourt, Lord Steward 116. The powers of the office went to the chief justice of the King's Bench and the steward of the household. Id. 128.

JUSTICIARII ITINERANTES (Lat.). Justices in eyre (q. v.).

JUSTICIARII RESIDENTES (Lat.). Justices or judges who usually resided in Westminster: they were so called to distinguish them from justices in eyre. Co. Litt. 293.

JUSTICIARY. Another name for a judge. In Latin, he was called justiciarius, and in French, justicier. Not used. Bacon, Abr. Courts (A).

JUSTICIES (from verb justiciare, do you do justice to). In English Law. A special writ, in the nature of a commission, empowering a sheriff to hold plea in his county court of a cause which he could not take jurisdiction of without this writ: e. g. trespass vi et armis for any sum, and all personal actions above forty shillings. 1 Burn. Just. 449. So called from the Latin word justicies, used in the writ, which runs, "præcipimus tibi quod justicies A B," etc.; we command you to do A B right, etc. Bracton, lib. 4, tr. 6, c. 13; Kitch. 74; Fitzh. N. B. 117; 3 Bla. Com. 3, 6.

JUSTIFIABLE HOMICIDE. That which is committed with the intention to kill, or to do a grievous bodily injury, under circumstances which the law holds sufficient to exculpate the person who commits it. A judge who, in pursuance of his duty, pronounces sentence of death, is not guilty of homicide; for it is evident that, as the law prescribes the punishment of death for certain offences, it must protect those who are intrusted with its execution. A judge, therefore, who pronounces sentence of death, in a legal manner, on a legal indictment, legally brought before him, for a capital offence committed within his jurisdiction, after a lawful trial and conviction of the defendant, is guilty of no offence; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 496.

Magistrates, or other officers intrusted with the preservation of the public peace are justified in committing homicide, or giving orders which lead to it, if the excesses of a riotous assembly cannot be otherwise repressed; 4 Bla. Com. 178, 179. So a homicide is justifiable, when committed by an officer in defending a judge of the United States, engaged in the discharge of his ju-duties: In re Neagle, 135 U. S. 1, 10 Sup. Ct. 658, 34 L. Ed. 55.

An officer intrusted with a legal warrant, criminal or civil, and lawfully commanded by a competent tribunal to execute it, will be justified in committing homicide, if in the course of advancing to discharge his duty he be brought into such perils that without doing so he cannot either save his life or discharge the duty which he is commanded by the warrant to perform. And when the warrant commands him to put a criminal to death, he is justified in obeying it; Cl. Cr. L. 134. See, State v. Rollins, 113 N. C. 722, 18 S. E. 394. In endeavoring to make an arrest an officer has the right to use all the force that is necessary to overcome all resistance, even to the taking of life; State v. Dierberger, 96 Mo. 666, 10 S. W. 168, 9 Am. St. Rep. 380.

A soldier on duty is justified in committing homicide, in obedience to the command of his officer, unless the command was something plainly unlawful.

A man may be justified in killing another to prevent the debauching of his wife; Futch v. State, 90 Ga. 472, 16 S. E. 102.

A private individual will, in many cases, be justified in committing homicide while acting in self-defence; Fields v. State, 134 Ind. 46, 32 N. E. 780; Lovett v. State, 30 Fla. 142, 11 South. 550, 17 L. R. A. 705; Keith v. State, 97 Ala. 32, 11 South. 914; Garello v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 56, 20 S. W. 179. If a trespass on the person or property of another amounts to a felony, the killing of the trespasser will be justifiable, if necessary in order to prevent it; Crawford v. State, 90 Ga. 701, 17 S. E. 628, 35 Am. St. Rep. 242. It is not true as a general proposition that one who is assaulted by another with a dangerous weapon is justified in taking the life of the party so assaulting him; State v. West, 45 La. Ann. 14, 12 South. 7. The same circumstances that will justify or excuse the homicide where the assault is upon one's self, will also excuse or justify the slayer if the killing is done in defence of his family or servant; Hathaway v. State, 32 Fla. 56, 13 South. 592. See DEFENCE.

An instruction to a jury requiring a justification of homicide to be established beyond a reasonable doubt is erroneous; People v. Hill, 65 Hun 420, 20 N. Y. Supp. 187.

To establish a case of justifiable homicide it must appear that the assault upon the prisoner was such as would lead a reasonable person to believe that his life was in peril; Allen v. U. S., 164 U. S. 492, 17 Sup. Ct. 154, 41 L. Ed. 528.

See ARREST; HOMICIDE; JUSTIFICATION.

JUSTIFICATION. In Pleading. The allegation of matter of fact by the defendant, establishing his legal right to do the act complained of by the plaintiff.

Justification admits the doing of the act charged as a wrong, but alleges a right to do it on the part of the defendant, thus denying that it is a wrong. Excuse merely shows reasons why the defendant should not make good the injury which the plaintiff has suffered from some wrong done. See AVOWAY.

Justification is said to be the law's permission to injure others because of some countervailing benefit to society outweighing the harm done; 26 Harv. L. Rev. 741. The benefit may assume many forms, as prevention of crime, freedom of speech, free competition, or the free beneficial use of property by the owner, etc.; id.

It is said that all justifications will fall into one of two classes: 1. Where the objects sought for are so important that motive must be ignored; 2. Where the objects are not so important but that the presence of ill will may turn the scale; Munster v. Lamb, 11 Q. B. D. 538; McLaughlin v. Cowley, 127 Mass. 316.

Trespasses. A warrant, regular on its face, and issued by a court of competent jurisdiction, is a complete justification to the officer to whom it is directed for obeying its command, whether it be really valid or not. But where the warrant is absolutely void, or apparently irregular in an important respect, or where the act done is one which is beyond the power conferred by the warrant, it is no justification. See ARREST; TRESPASS. So, too, many acts, and even homicide committed in self-defence, or defence of wife, children, or servants, are justifiable; Archb. Cr. P. by Pom. 681, n.; see SELF-DEFENCE; DEFENCE; JUSTIFIABLE HOMICIDE; or in preserving the public peace; see ARREST; TRESPASS; or under a license, express or implied; Case v. De Goes, 3 Cal. (N. Y.) 261; Robson v. Jones, 2 Bail. (S. C.) 4; U. S. v. Gear, 3 McLean 571, Fed. Cas. No. 15,195; including entry on land to demand a debt, to remove chattels; Chambers v. Bedell, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 225, 37 Am. Dec. 508; Richardson v. Anthony, 12 Vt. 273; to ask lodgings at an inn, the entry in such cases being peaceful; to exercise an incorporeal right; Hayward v. Pilgrim Society, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 272; or for public service in case of exigency, as pulling down houses to stop a fire; Year B. 13 Hen. VIII. 16 b; destroying the suburbs of a city in time of war; Year B. 8 Edw. IV. 35 b; entry on land to make fortifications or in preservation of the owner's rights of property; Sterling v. Peet, 14 Conn. 255; 4 D. & B. 110; Fiske v. Small, 25 Me. 453; Kling v. Kline, 6 Pa. 318; Almy v. Grinnell, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 53, 45 Am. Dec. 238.

Libel and slander may be justified in a civil action, in some cases, by proving the truth of the matter alleged, and generally by showing that the defendant had a right upon the particular occasion either to write and publish the writing or to utter the words: as, when slanderous words are found in a report of a committee of congress, or in an indictment, or words of a slanderous nature are uttered in the course of debate in the legislature by a member, or at the bar by counsel when properly instructed by his client on the subject. Comyns, Dig. Pleader. See SLANDER.

Matter in justification must be specially pleaded, and cannot be given in evidence under the general issue. See LICENSE. A plea of justification to an action for slander, oral or written, should state the charge with the same degree of certainty and precision as is required in an indictment. The object of the plea is to give the plaintiff, who is in truth an accused person, the means of knowing what are the matters alleged against him. It must be direct and explicit. It must in every respect correspond with, and be as extensive as the charge in, the declaration.

The justification, however, will be complete if it covers the essence of the libel. But it must extend to every part which could by itself form a substantive ground of action. Where the slander consists in an imputation of crime, the plea of justification must contain the same degree of precision as is requisite in an indictment for the crime, and must be supported by the same proof that is required on the trial of such an indictment. It is a perfectly well-established rule that where the charge is general in its nature, yet the plea of justification must state specific instances of the misconduct imputed to the plaintiff. And, even for the purpose of avoiding prolixity, a plea of justification cannot make a general charge of criminality or misconduct, but must set out the specific facts in which the imputed offence consists, and with such certainty as to afford the plaintiff an opportunity of joining issue precisely upon their existence. Heard, Lib. & Sl. § 240. See LIBEL.

When established by evidence, it furnishes a complete bar to the action.

In Practice. The proceeding by which bail establish their ability to perform the undertaking of the bond or recognizance.

It must take place before an authorized magistrate; Jones v. Badger, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 461; Fenn v. Smith, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 124; 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 422; and notice must, in general, be given by the party proposing the bail, to the opposite party, of the names of the bail and the intention to justify; Jaques v. Hemphill, 3 Harr. (Del.) 503. See Cade v. Young, 8 N. J. L. 369.

It is a common provision that bail must justify in double the amount of the recognizance if exceptions are taken; Louis v. Mitchell, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 379; otherwise, a justification in the amount of the recognizance is, in general, sufficient.

It must be made within a specified time, or the persons named cease to be bail; People v. Judges, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 54. See Stockton v. Throgmorton, Baldw. 148, Fed. Cas. No. 13,463.

JUSTIFICATORS. A kind of compurgators, or those who, by oath, justified the innocence or oaths of others, as in the case of wages of law.

JUSTIFYING BAIL. In Practice. The production of bail in court, who there justify themselves against the exception of the plaintiff. See BAIL; JUSTIFICATION.

JUSTITIUM. In Civil Law. A suspension or intermission of the administration of justice in courts; vacation time. Calv. Lex.

JUSTS, or JOUSTS. Exercises between martial men and persons of honor, with spears, on horseback; different from tournaments, which were military exercises between many men in troops. 24 Hen. VIII. c. 13.

JUVENILE COURTS. Courts having special jurisdiction, of a paternal nature, over delinquent and neglected children.

The thought that the child who has begun to go wrong, who has broken a law or ordinance, is to be taken in hand by the state, not as an enemy, but as a protector, led to the principle which was first fully declared in the act under which the juvenile court in Chicago was opened July 1, 1899. Colorado soon followed, and since that time similar legislation has been adopted in over 30 states, as well as in Great Britain and Ireland, Canada and the Australian colonies. Juvenile court legislation has assumed two aspects: In New York and a few other jurisdictions, protection is accomplished by suspending sentence, or in the case of removal from the home, sending the child to a school instead of a jail. But in Illinois and in most jurisdictions, the designated age of criminal responsibility is advanced from the common law age of 7 to some higher age, as 17 or 18, and under most juvenile court acts a child under the designated age is to be proceeded against criminally only when, in the judgment of the judge presiding, the interest of the state and of the child requires this to be done; In re Powell, 6 Okl. Cr. 495, 120 Pac. 1022; State v. Reed, 123 La. 411, 49 South. 3.

Objection has been made that this is nevertheless a criminal proceeding and therefore the child is entitled to a trial by jury and to all the constitutional rights that hedge about a criminal. The act, according to Com. v. Fisher, 213 Pa. 48, 62 Atl. 198, 5 Ann. Cas. 92, is but an exercise by the state of its supreme power over the welfare of its children. But if the proceedings against the individual are criminal, his constitutional rights must be carefully safeguarded. Such penal acts are strictly construed; State v. Dunn, 53 Or. 304, 99 Pac. 278, 100 Pac. 258. For over two centuries the courts of chancery in England have exercised jurisdiction for the protection of the unfortunate child. The proposition that this court could not act unless the child had property is wholly unsupported by either principle or authority; [1892] 2 Chan. 496; [1909] 2 Ch. 260.

A juvenile court has jurisdiction of an offence by a child punishable by hard labor; State v. Reed, 123 Ia. 411, 49 South. 3. The jurisdiction to hear such cases is generally vested in an existing court having equity powers. In some cities, however, special courts have been provided. By Colorado Act of 1909, provision is made for hearings before masters in chancery to be appointed by a juvenile court judge and acting under his direction. The legislature cannot confer on circuit court commissioners powers with reference to juvenile offenders which require proceedings within the power of courts of record only; Hunt v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 142 Mich. 93, 105 N. W. 531, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 564, 7 Ann. Cas. 821.

See an article in 23 Harv. L. Rev. 104, by Julian Mack.

The legislature cannot confer on circuit court commissioners powers with reference to juvenile offenders which require proceedings within the power of courts of record only; Hunt v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 142 Mich. 93, 105 N. W. 531, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 564, 7 Ann. Cas. 821. A Pennsylvania statute designated the court of quarter sessions as a juvenile court; it was contended that the tribunal was an unconstitutional body and without jurisdiction, but it was held that "the court of quarter sessions is not simply a criminal court. The constitution recognizes it, but says nothing as to its jurisdiction. Its existence antedates our colonial times, and by the common law and statutes, both here and in England, it has for generations been a court of broad general police powers in no way connected with its criminal jurisdiction. . . . With its jurisdiction unrestricted by the constitution, it is for the legislature to declare what shall be exercised by it as a general police court, and, instead of creating a distinctly new court, the act of 1903 does nothing more than confer additional powers upon the old court and clearly define them. . . . It is a mere convenient designation of the court of quarter sessions to call it when caring for children a juvenile court, but no such court as an independent tribunal is created. It is still a court of quarter sessions before which the proceedings are conducted . . . and the records are still those of the court of quarter sessions;" Com. v. Fisher, 213 Pa. 48, 62 Atl. 198, 5 Ann. Cas. 92. An earlier act in that state had been held unconstitutional (1901) as creating a classification which offended against the provision forbidding the passage of any special law regulating practice and jurisdiction in judicial proceedings or granting to any individual any special privilege or immunity; Mansfield's Case, 22 Pa. Super. Ct. 224.

A Missouri act relating to neglected and delinquent children was upheld, though it provided a rule of procedure and punishment for such children which was not applicable to the same class of children in other counties, upon the ground that the conditions which prevail in thickly settled districts reasonably justified the distinction; Ex parte Loving, 178 Mo. 194, 77 S. W. 508.

JUVENILE OFFENDERS. See JUVENILE COURTS.

JUXTA CONVENTIONEM. According to the covenant. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 16, § 6.

JUXTA TENOREM SEQUEM. According to the tenor following. 2 Salk. 417. A phrase used in the old books when the very words themselves referred to were set forth. Id.; 1 Ld. Raym. 415.

JUZGADO. In Spanish Law. The collective number of judges that concur in a decree, and more particularly the tribunal having a single judge.

K

K. B. King's Bench. See COURTS OF ENGLAND.

K. C. King's Counsel. See BARRISTER.

KALENDÆ. Rural chapters or conventions of the rural deans and parochial clergy, formerly held on the calends of every month. Kenn. Paroch. Antiq. 604.

KALENDS. See IDES.

KANSAS. The name of one of the states of the United States of America.

The state was carved out of a portion of the Louisiana purchase, and a small portion of the territory ceded to the United States by Texas.

The territory of Kansas was organized by an act of congress, dated May 30, 1854.

The constitution was adopted at Wyandotte July 29, 1859, and Kansas was admitted into the Union as a state, by an act of the congress, approved, January 20, 1861. An amendment providing for woman suffrage was adopted in 1912.

"The body of the laws of England as they existed in the fourth year of the reign of James I. (1607) constitutes the common law of this state." Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. Nichols, 9 Kan. 252, 12 Am. Rep. 494.

KEELAGE. The right of demanding money for the bottom of ships resting in a port or harbor. The money so paid is also called keelage.

KEELS. This word is applied, in England, to vessels employed in the carriage of coals. Jacob, Law Dict.

KEEP. To heed; observe; regard; attend to.

When it is said that a certain man keeps a woman, the popular inference is, that the relation is one which involves illicit intercourse; Downing v. Wilson, 36 Ala. 717. See Barrett v. R. Co., 3 Allen (Mass.) 101; Cummings v. Riley, 52 N. H. 368. To keep a street in safe condition, means to have it so; to make and remake it so; City of Atlanta v. Buchanan, 76 Ga. 585. To keep premises in repair is to have them at all times in that condition; 1 B. & Ald. 585.

Keep down interest. To pay interest periodically as it becomes due, but the phrase does not extend to the payment of all arrears of interest which may have become due on any security from the time when the instrument was executed. 4 El. & Bl. 211.

KEEPER. To warrant the conviction of one as the keeper of a common gaming house, he need not be the proprietor or lessee; it is sufficient if he has the general superintendence. Stevens v. People, 67 Ill. 587.

KEEPER OF THE FOREST (called, also, the chief warden of the forest). An officer who had the principal government over all officers within the forest, and warned them to appear at the court of justice-seat on a summons from the lord chief-justice in eyre. Manw. For. Law, part 1, p. 156. See FOREST LAW.

KEEPER OF THE GREAT SEAL (lord keeper of the great seal). A judicial officer who is by virtue of his office a member of the privy council. Through his hands pass all charters, commissions, and grants of the crown, to be sealed with the great seal, which is under his keeping. The office was consolidated with that of lord chancellor by 5 Eliz. c. 18. Co. 4th Inst. 87; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 171, 174; 3 Bla. Com. 47.

At times the great seal is "put in commission"; i. e. is entrusted to one or more officials who act under a special commission from the crown. Such is the case when the lord chancellor is absent from the country; there was an instance in the last century between the resignation of the lord chancellor and the appointment of his successor.

See CANCELLARIUS; CHANCELLOR.

KEEPER OF THE KING'S CONSCIENCE. The lord high chancellor is the keeper of the king's conscience. Historically it relates to the fact that the king in early times referred to such official the duty of redressing wrongs. See CHANCELLOR.

KEEPER OF THE PRIVY SEAL. The officer through whose hands go all charters, pardons, etc., signed by the king before going to the great seal, and some which do not go there at all. He is of the privy council virtute officii. He was first called clerk of the privy seal, then guardian, then lord privy seal, which is his present designation. 12 Ric. II. c. 12; Rot. Parl. 11 Hen. IV.; Stat. 34 Hen. VIII. c. 4; 4 Inst. 55; 2 Bla. Com. 347. See PRIVY SEAL.

KEEPING. In an insurance policy a clause prohibiting the keeping or having benzine in insured premises, was held to be intended to prevent the permanent and habitual storage of the prohibited articles, and that taking it on the premises for the purpose of cleaning machinery was not within the prohibition; Mears v. Ins. Co., 92 Pa. 15, 37 Am. Rep. 647.

KEEPING BOOKS. Preserving an intelligent record of a merchant's or tradesman's affairs with such reasonable accuracy and care as may properly be expected from a man in that business. An intentional omission, or repeated omissions, evincing gross carelessness will vitiate; an accidental failure to make a proper entry will not; 16 Bankr. Reg. 152.

KEEPING OPEN. A statute prohibiting shops to be kept open on Sunday is violated where one allows general access to his shop for purposes of traffic, though the outer entrances are closed. Com. v. Harrison, 11 Gray (Mass.) 308; Lynch v. People, 16 Mich. 472.

KEEPING TERM. In English Law. A duty performed by students of law, consisting in eating a sufficient number of dinners in hall to make the term count for the purpose of being called to the bar. Moz. & W.

KEEPING THE PEACE. See SURETY OF THE PEACE.

KELP-SHORE. The land between high and low water mark. Stroud. Jud. Dict.

But when the conveyance, "with the kelp-shore" by the metes and bounds given, manifestly excluded the land between high and low water mark, it was held to be excluded, and parol proof could not be received of the intention to include it; 10 Ir. C. L. 150.

KENILWORTH, DICTUM OF. An award made by Henry III. and parliament in 1266 for the pacification of the kingdom.

KENNING TO THE TERCE. In Scotch Law. The ascertainment by a sheriff of the just proportion of the husband's lands which belongs to the widow in virtue of her terce or third. An assignment of dower by sheriff. Erskine, Inst. 11. 9. 50; Bell, Dict.

KENTLEDGE or KINTLEDGE. The permanent ballast of a ship. Ab. Sh. 6.

KENTUCKY. The name of one of the United States of America.

This state was formerly a part of Virginia, which by an act of its legislature, passed December 18, 1789, consented that the district of Kentucky within the jurisdiction of the said commonwealth, and according to its actual boundaries at the time of passing the act aforesaid, should be formed into a new state. By the act of congress of February, 1791, 1 Story, Laws 168, congress consented that, after the first day of June, 1792, the district of Kentucky should be formed into a new state, separate from and independent of the commonwealth of Virginia. And by the second section it is enacted, that upon the aforesaid first day of June, 1792, the said new state, by the name and style of the state of Kentucky, shall be received and admitted into this Union, as a new and entire member of the United States of America.

The present constitution of this state was adopted September 28, 1891. An act was passed in 1914 proposing an amendment allowing the employment of convict labor upon public roads and bridges.

KEROSENE. A rock or earth oil. Morse v. Ins. Co., 30 Wis. 534, 11 Am. Rep. 587.

It is, in a commercial sense, a refined coal or earth oil, and is embraced within those terms as used in an insurance policy. Bennett v. Ins. Co., 81 N. Y. 273, 37 Am. Rep. 501. It is not petroleum, but made from the latter by a process of a distillation and refinement. Bennett v. Ins. Co., 81 N. Y. 273, 37 Am. Rep. 501.

A court will not take judicial notice that kerosene is an "inflammable fluid" within the meaning of an insurance policy, it must be proved as a fact; Wood v. Ins. Co., 46 N. Y. 421; nor that it comes under the words "burning fluid"; Mark v. Ins. Co., 24 Hun (N. Y.) 565. See Morse v. Ins. Co., 30 Wis. 534, 11 Am. Rep. 587.

It is a question for the jury whether kerosene is a burning fluid or chemical oil; Mears v. Ins. Co., 92 Pa. 15, 37 Am. Rep. 647; or a drug; Carrigan v. Ins. Co., 53 Vt. 418, 38 Am. Rep. 687; where the court, after quoting Webster's definition of a drug, as "any mineral substance used in chemical operations," declined to say as matter of law that benzine is not included in that term. See RISKS AND PERILS; OIL; NEGLIGENCE; MINES AND MINING; GAS.

KEY. An instrument made for closing and opening a lock.

The keys of a house are considered as real estate, and descend to the heir with the inheritance; 11 Co. 50 b; 30 E. L. & Eq. 598; but although they follow the inheritance, they are not fixtures, so far as that the taking of them is not larceny; Hoskins v. Tarrence, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 417, 35 Am. Dec. 129; 5 Taunt. 518.

When the keys of a warehouse are delivered to a purchaser of goods locked up there, with a view of effecting a delivery of such goods, the delivery is complete. The doctrine of the civil law is the same; Dig. 41. 1. 9. 6; 18. 1. 74; Benj. Sales, 6th Am. ed. § 1043; 3 Term 464. See DONATIO MORTIS CAUSA; GIFT.

Keys are implements of housebreaking within statute 14 & 15 Vict. c. 19, § 1; for, though commonly used for lawful purposes they are capable of being employed for purposes of housebreaking; and it is a question for the jury whether the person found in possession of them by night had them without lawful excuse, with the intention of using them as implements of housebreaking; 3 C. & K. 250; and the statute was held to include skeleton, or any other kind of key used for purposes of housebreaking; id. Entering by a key left in the door locked on the outside is not housebreaking; 1 Swint. Jus. Cas. 433. See BURGLARY.

KEYAGE. A toll paid for loading and unloading merchandise at a quay or wharf.

KEYS. The twenty-four chief commoners in the Isle of Man who form the local legislature. 1 Steph. Com., 100.

KIDEL or KIDDLE. An open weir where-by fish are caught. 2 Inst. 38.

"Weirs (kidelli or gurgites) were the means usual in ancient times for appropriating and enjoying several fisheries in tidal waters." Lord Selborne, L. C., in 8 App. Cas. 144.

KIDNAPPING. The forcible abduction or stealing away of a man, woman, or child from their own country and sending them into another. 4 Bla. Com. 219. At common law it is a misdemeanor; Comb. 10.

There is no wide difference in meaning between kidnapping, false imprisonment, and abduction. The better view seems to be that kidnapping is a false imprisonment, which it always includes, aggravated by the carrying of the person to some other place; Archb. Cr. P. by Pom. 984; 2 Bish. Cr. L. § 750. See Ex parte Keil, 85 Cal. 309, 24 Pac. 742. It has been held that transportation to a foreign country is not necessary, though this conflicts with Blackstone's definition, supra; State v. Rollins, 8 N. H. 550. See 1 East, P. C. 429. The consent of a mature person of sound mind prevents any act from being kidnapping; otherwise as to a young child; a child of nine years has been held too young to render his consent available as a defence; Cl. Cr. L. 221; State v. Farrar, 41 N. H. 53; Com. v. Nickerson, 5 Allen (Mass.) 518; Gravett v. State, 74 Ga. 191; U. S. v. Ancarola, 17 Blatchf. 423, 1 Fed. 676; but a female fourteen years of age is not kidnapped, if taken away with her consent for the purpose of marriage, and she actually marries; Cochran v. State, 91 Ga. 763, 18 S. E. 16; so, going away by previous arrangement with an unmarried woman who, becoming intoxicated, remained for some days, in illicit intercourse, and was then brought back at her request, was not kidnapping; Eberling v. State, 136 Ind. 117, 35 N. E. 1023. Physical force need not be applied, threats will suffice; Payson v. Macomber, 3 Allen (Mass.) 69; or fraudulently acquiring consent; People v. De Leon, 109 N. Y. 226, 16 N. E. 46, 4 Am. St. Rep. 444. The crime may be effected by means of menaces; Moody v. People, 20 Ill. 315; or by getting a man drunk; Hadden v. People, 25 N. Y. 373. Where the custody of a child is assigned to one of two divorced parents, and the other, or a third person employed for the purpose, carries it off, it is kidnapping; State v. Farrar, 41 N. H. 53; Com. v. Nickerson, 5 Allen (Mass.) 518. It was held that within the meaning of the statute against kidnapping, any place where a child has a right to be is its residence; Wallace v. State, 147 Ind. 621, 47 N. E. 13. In this case two children who were acrobats had been sent away from home for the purpose of giving exhibitions to raise money with which to relieve the necessities of the family. While absent from their parents they were decoyed away by defendant, who was indicted for kidnapping under the Indiana statute. The court held that they had not acquired a permanent residence, but they were at a place they had a right to be—to which they had been sent by their parents, engaged in the business for which they had been sent. "The purpose of the statute here under consideration certainly was not that a child might be kidnapped at its father's house, but not if it were on a visit at a friend's in a near or distant city. The evident purpose was rather to provide against the kidnapping of a person from any place where he has a right to be, whether that be the place of his 'temporary sojourn or permanent domicile.' A child may be kidnapped, not only from its domicile or the home of its parents, but likewise from a neighbor's house, from church or school, or hotel, from a hall of public entertainment, or, in fact, from any place where it has a right to be; and it is in that sense that the word 'residence' is here used." 17 N. Y. L. J. 842.

One who takes his child of tender years out of the state, with its consent and with the consent of the mother to whom its custody has been awarded in divorce proceedings, to prevent its presence at a criminal trial in which it had been subpoenaed as a witness, is not guilty of kidnapping; John v. State, 6 Wyo. 203, 44 Pac. 51. New York, Illinois, and other states have passed statutes on kidnapping. See ABDUCTION; 1 Russ. Cr. 962; Click v. State, 3 Tex. 282; Com. v. Blodgett, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 56; People v. De Leon, 47 Hun (N. Y.) 308; Com. v. Myers, 146 Pa. 24, 23 Atl. 164. Where defendant procured an adjudication that the person alleged to have been kidnapped was insane, and, without using force, publicly conveyed her to a lunatic asylum, though she was not insane at the time, he was not guilty of the offence of kidnapping; People v. Camp, 139 N. Y. 87, 34 N. E. 755.

The indictment must be found in the county in which the person was seized and not in one through which he was carried; State v. Whaley, 2 Harring. (Del.) 538.

It has been held, however, that the carrying away is not essential; State v. Rollins, 8 N. H. 550. The crime includes a false imprisonment; 2 Bish. Cr. Law § 671. See ABDUCTION.

It has been held that in order to rescue a kidnapped person his friends may use such force as will be necessary, and that where there is an attack upon the rescuers, a killing of the kidnapper in self-defence is excusable homicide; Delaney v. Com., 25 S. W. 830.

KILL (Dutch). Originally the bed of a river or creek, and by relation used to mean the stream itself. It is so used in Delaware and New York, but has been said to have no distinct legal signification. French v. Carhart, 1 N. Y. 96.

KIN. Legal relationship; properly relations by blood, but often including those by marriage. It has been held to include a son-in-law under a statute disqualifying a justice of the peace, in cases to which his kin were parties; Hibbard v. Odell, 16 Wis. 635; and a second cousin, of a mother under a statute disqualifying jurors in cases where persons of kin were parties; State v. Walton, 74 Mo. 271. See NEXT OF KIN.

KIND. The agreement that a collector of taxes was to receive his commission "in kind" means the same kind of funds in which the tax is collected; Wilson v. State, 51 Ark. 213, 10 S. W. 491.

Another kind quoted is not synonymous with another quality quoted; 3 Q. B. D. 341. In this case the reference was to seed. As to loans of property to be repaid "in kind," see IN KIND; LOAN FOR CONSUMPTION.

KINDRED. Relations by blood. 2 Jarm. Wills 643; Wetter v. Walker, 62 Ga. 144, quoting 2 Wms. Ex. 815. It is in some cases, however, used to include relations in law, as children by adoption in a statute; Power v. Hatley, 85 Ky. 671, 4 S. W. 683; but not a grandson adopted as a son, so as to make kindred include the adopting parent; Delano v. Bruerton, 148 Mass. 619, 20 N. E. 308, 2 L. R. A. 698. It was held that as the word kindred in the statute of descents means lawful kindred, that term did not include the mother of a bastard, when the right accrued prior to the act enabling illegitimate children to inherit; Hughes v. Decker, 38 Me. 153. See Humphries v. Davis, 100 Ind. 280, 50 Am. Rep. 788; Wunderle v. Wunderle, 144 Ill. 40, 33 N. E. 195, 19 L. R. A. 84. See BASTARD; DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION.

The kindred of every one are divided into three principal classes. 1. His children, and their descendants. 2. His father, mother, and other ascendants. 3. His collateral relations; which include, in the first place, his brothers and sisters, and their descendants; and, secondly, his uncles, cousins, and other relations of either sex, who have not descended from a brother or sister of the deceased. All kindred, then, are descendants, ascendants, or collaterals. A husband or wife of the deceased, therefore, is not his or her kindred; 14 Ves. 372. See Wood. Inst. 50; Ayliffe, Parerg. 425; Dane, Abr.; Toullier, Ex. 382, 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 516, n.; Pothier, Des Successions, c. 1, art. 3.

KING. The ruler of a kingdom. See REGAL YEARS; SOVEREIGN.

KING CAN DO NO WRONG. This maxim means that the king is not responsible legally for aught he may please to do, or for any omission. Aust. Jur. sect. VI. It does not mean that everything done by the government is just and lawful, but that whatever is exceptionable in the conduct of public affairs is not to be imputed to the king; 2 Steph. Com., 11th. ed. 486.

The king could not be sued in his own court; it was therefore held that he must act through a servant; otherwise, in case of a wrongful act, the subject would have no remedy. But the theory that the king can do no wrong, and therefore cannot authorize a wrong, and that, if wrong is done, it is the act of his servant (see 2 B. & S. 257), is a later refinement; 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 311.

This maxim has no place in the system of constitutional law of the United States, as applicable either to the government or any of its officers, or of the several states or any of their officers; Langford v. U. S., 101 U. S. 343, 25 L. Ed. 1010. Our government is not liable for the wrongful and unauthorized acts of its officers, however high their place, and though done under a mistaken zeal for the public good; Gibbons v. U. S., 8 Wall. (U. S.) 269, 19 L. Ed. 453. See Poindexter v. Greenhow, 114 U. S. 290, 5 Sup. Ct. 903, 962, 29 L. Ed. 185.

KING OF ARMS. See HERALD.

KING'S BENCH. See COURTS OF ENGLAND.

KING'S CHAMBER. A term applied to faucēs terræ (q. v.). See 1 Phill. Int. Law 239; Halleck, Int. Law 139.

KING'S or QUEEN'S COUNSEL. Barristers or serjeants who have been called within the bar and selected to be the king's counsel. They answer in some measure to the advocati fisci, or advocates of the revenue, among the Romans. They must not be employed against the crown without special leave, which was, however, always granted, at a cost of about nine pounds; 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 27, note.

See BARRISTER; SERJEANTS-AT-LAW.

KING'S EVIDENCE. An accomplice in a felony, who, on an implied promise of pardon if he fully and fairly discloses the truth, is admitted as evidence for the crown against his accomplices. 1 Phill. Ev. 81. A jury may, if they please, convict on the unsupported testimony of an accomplice; Tayl. Ev. 830; 4 Steph. Com. 398. On giving a full and fair confession of truth, the accomplice has a strong claim to a recommendation to mercy. He cannot be admitted to testify as king's evidence after judgment against him; 2 Russ. Cr. 956. In the United States, this is known as state's evidence. See ACCOMPLICE.

KING'S PEACE. See CONSERVATOR OF THE PEACE; PEACE.

KING'S REMEMBRANCER. See REMEMBRANCER.

KING'S SERJEANT. See SERJEANT.

KING'S SILVER. A fine or payment due to the king for leave to agree in order to levy a fine (finalis concordia). 2 Bla. Com. 350; Dy. 320, pl. 19; 1 Leon. 249, 250; 2 id. 56, 179, 233, 234; 5 Co. 39.

KING'S WIDOW. A widow of the king's principal tenant, who was obliged to take oath in chancery not to marry without the king's consent. Whart. Lex.

KINGDOM. A country where an officer called a king exercises the powers of government, whether the same be absolute or limited. Wolff. Inst. Nat. § 94. In some kingdoms, the executive officer may be a woman, who is called a queen.

KINSBOTE (from kin, and bote, a composition). In Saxon Law. A composition for killing a kinsman. Anc. Laws & Inst. of Eng. Index, Bote.

KINSMAN. A man of the same race or family; one related by blood. Webster.

KIRBY'S QUEST. An ancient record remaining with the remembrancer of the English exchequer; so called from being the inquest of John de Kirby, treasurer to Edward I.

KISSING THE BOOK. A ceremony used in taking the corporal oath, the object being, as the canonists say, to denote the assent of the witness to the oath in the form it is imposed. The witness kisses either the whole Bible, or some portion of it; or a cross in some countries. See the ceremony explained in Oughton's Ordo. tit. lxxx.; Consitt. on Courts, part 3, sect. 1, § 3; Junkin, Oath 173, 180; 2 Pothier, Obl., Evans ed. 234. In Pennsylvania, by act of 1895, the witness places his right hand on the Bible, but does not kiss it.

KLEPTOMANIA. Insanity in the form of an irresistible propensity to steal. Wharton. See Looney v. State, 10 Tex. App. 520, 38 Am. Rep. 646. A form of insanity which is said to manifest itself by a propensity to acts of theft. Tayl. Med. Jur., Bell's ed. 766. A weakening of the will power to such an extent as to leave the afflicted one powerless to control his impulse to appropriate the personal property of others. State v. McCullough, 114 Ia. 532, 87 N. W. 503, 55 L. R. A. 378, 89 Am. St. Rep. 382.

It is said to be often shown in cases of women, laboring under their peculiar diseases or of those far advanced in pregnancy. There have been instances of well-educated persons who have taken articles of no value and without apparent motive. If it appears that the accused was incompetent to know that the act was wrong, the facts may establish a plea of insanity; id., quoting Tindal, C. J.

A sharp distinction is made between kleptomania and the tendency to steal so commonly observed in the well defined forms of insanity; the former is a defective mental characteristic approaching the confines of insanity on one subject alone, while the individual, on all other subjects, is perfectly sane. It differs from shoplifting in that the shoplifter steals for a purpose, and only those articles which are of value, while the kleptomaniac takes goods of any description, often of no use to herself and with no motive for their possession; 4 Am. Lawy. 533.

In determining the responsibility of such persons for their acts, the principal subjects to be considered are the absence of any real motive, the knowledge of previous acts of a similar character, the history of hereditary taint, and the presence of a neurotic condition; 3 Witth. & Beck. Med. Jur. 279.

Kleptomania is regarded as similar to homicidal insanity; Harris v. State, 18 Tex. App. 287; 1 Bish. N. Cr. L. § 388; and it has been held a valid defence; Harris v. State, 18 Tex. App. 287; but when it was rejected as a defence, the court would not disturb the verdict; Com. v. Fritch, 9 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 164.

As to irresistible impulse as a defence in criminal cases, see INSANITY.

A charge to a jury to apply the "right and wrong" test to the particular facts is a sufficient charge in a kleptomania case, since, if it is a disease depriving one of the sense of right and wrong as to theft, it met the test, and if it is merely an irresistible impulse to steal, it is no defence; Lowe v. State, 44 Tex. Cr. R. 224, 70 S. W. 206.

Taylor (1 Med. Jurispr. 820) points out that in most of the cases there has appeared: 1. A perfect consciousness of the act and of its illegality. 2. The article, though of trifling value, has still been of some use to the person (for instances, articles of female use, or on which money could be raised). 3. There has been act and precaution in endeavoring to conceal the theft. 4. Either a denial, when detected, or some evasive excuse. He adds that "it is now not recognized as a type of insanity by itself," and gives an instance of an acquittal of a kleptomaniac upon the ground that, though not insane, there was an absence of felonious intent.

In an English case, tried in 1875, a clergyman charged with stealing, had taken goods when the shopkeeper's back was turned and concealed them in his pocket. He at first denied taking them, then offered to pay for them, and then attempted to leave. At the trial there was medical evidence that he had suffered from brain disease, and had been quite deranged at times. The opinion of medical experts was that the accused did not know the nature or quality of the act he had committed, at the time he had committed it, and he was acquitted. Tayl. Med. Jur., Bell's ed. 767.

It approaches the confines of insanity, but while, as physicians, we might claim immunity, as jurists, we "can only believe that the best interests of society are subserved by holding the person responsible"; 3 Witth. & Becker, Med. Jurispr. 253.

KNACKER. One who slaughters useless or diseased animals or deals in such. Cent. Dict. A regular occupation in London and other large cities, regulated by act of parliament August 18, 1911.

KNAVE. A false, dishonest, or deceitful person. This signification of the word has arisen by a long perversion of its original meaning, which was merely servant or attendant.

To call a man a knave has been held to be actionable; 1 Rolle, Abr. 52; 1 Freem. 277; Harding v. Brooks, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 244.

KNEEL. To bend the knees in worship without resting on them is to kneel. 36 L. J. Ecc. 10.

KNIGHT. In English Law. The next personal dignity after the nobility.

In the administration of royal justice, much of the work was formerly done by the knights; as for the more solemn, ancient, and decisive processes. To swear to a question of possession, free and lawful men were required, but to give the final and conclusive verdict about a matter of right, knights were necessary. In administrative law, therefore, knights were liable to special burdens, but in no other respect did he differ from the mere free man; 1 Poll. & Maitl. 394.

Of knights there are several orders and degrees. The first in rank are knights of the Garter, instituted by Edward III. in 1344; next follows, a knight banneret; then come knights of the Bath instituted by Henry IV., and revived by George I.; and they were so called from a custom of bathing the night before their creation. The other orders are the Thistle, St. Patrick, St. Michael and St. George, the Star of India, and the Indian Empire. The last order are knights bachelors, who, though the lowest, are yet the most ancient, order of knighthood; for we find that King Alfred conferred this order upon his son Athelstan. 1 Bla. Com. 403. These are sometimes called knights of the chamber, being such as are made in time of peace, and so called because knighted in the king's chamber, and not in the field. Co. 2d Inst. 666. Knights were called equites, because they always served on horseback; aurati, from the gilt spurs they wore; and milites, because they formed the royal army, in virtue of their feudal tenures.

Knights have precedence next after baronets; the wife of a knight has the legal designation of Dame, for which Lady is usually substituted. Cent. Dict.

See BARONET.

KNIGHT-MARSHAL. See MARSHALSEA.

KNIGHT'S FEE was anciently so much of an inheritance in land as was sufficient to maintain a knight; and every man possessed of such an estate was obliged to be knighted, and attend the king in his wars, or pay a pecuniary sum in lieu thereof, called escuage. In the time of Henry II. the estate was estimated at twenty pounds a year; but Lord Coke, in his time, states it to be an estate of six hundred and eighty acres. Co. Litt. 69 a. See 1 Poll. & Maitl. 232.

KNIGHT'S SERVICE. Upon the Norman conquest, all the lands in England were divided into knight's fees, in number above sixty thousand; and for every knight's fee, a knight was bound to attend the king in his wars forty days in a year, in which space of time a campaign was generally finished. If a man only held half a knight's fee, he was only bound to attend twenty days; and so in proportion. But this personal service, in process of time, grew into pecuniary commutations, or aids; until at last, with the military part of the feudal system, it was abolished at the restoration, by the statute of 12 Car. II. c. 24. 1 Bla. Com. 410; 2 id. 62; Will. Real. Pr. 144; 1 Poll. & Maitl. 230.

KNOCKED DOWN. A phrase used with reference to an auction, when the auctioneer by the fall of his hammer, or by any other audible or visible announcement, signifies to the bidder that he is entitled to the property on paying the amount of his bid, according to the terms of the sale. Sherwood v. Reade, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 439.

See AUCTION.

KNOW. To have knowledge; to possess information, instruction, or wisdom. State v. Ransberger, 106 Mo. 135, 17 S. W. 290.

"It may fairly be assumed that one who has reason to believe a fact exists, knows it exists. Certainly if he be a reasonable being." Strong, J. in Shaw v. R. Co., 101 U. S. 557, 25 L. Ed. 892.

KNOW ALL MEN BY THESE PRESENTS. See PRESENTS.

KNOWINGLY. In a statute imposing a penalty upon any one who shall knowingly sell, supply, etc., actual personal knowledge. Verona Cent. Cheese Factory v. Murtaugh, 4 Lans. (N. Y.) 17. In an indictment, a charge that one willfully testified falsely, includes the assertion that he knowingly so testified; State v. Stein, 48 Minn. 466, 51 N. W. 474. The word "knowingly," or "well knowing," will supply the place of a positive averment, in an indictment or declaration, that the defendant knew the facts subsequently stated; if notice or knowledge be unnecessarily stated, the allegation may be rejected as surplusage. See Com. Dig. Indictment (G 6); Com. v. Kirby, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 577; 2 East 452; 1 Chitty, Pl. 367.

KNOWLEDGE. Information as to a fact.

The act of knowing; clear perception of the truth; firm belief; information. Knowledge "is not confined to what we have personally observed or to what we have evolved by our own cognitive faculties." State v. Ransberger, 106 Mo. 135, 17 S. W. 290. Where in a charge in a homicide case the court used the expression "knowledge to explain," circumstances proven "tending to show that the defendant was connected with the homicide," it was held to be synonymous with "ability to explain"; Adams v. State, 28 Fla. 511, 10 South. 106.

"Knowledge is information and information knowledge." 1 Heming 1; 5 Esp. 53.

"Absolute knowledge can be had of but few things." Story v. Buffum, 8 Allen (Mass.) 35.

"In a legal sense it may be classified as positive and imputed—imputed, when the means of knowledge exist, known and accessible to the party, and capable of communicating positive information. When there is knowledge, notice, as legally and technically understood, becomes immaterial. It is only material when, in the absence of knowledge, it produces the same results. However closely actual notice may, in many instances, approximate knowledge and constructive notice may be its equivalent in effect, there may be actual notice without knowledge; and when constructive notice is made the test to determine priorities of right, it may fall far short of knowledge and be sufficient." Cleveland Woolen Mills v. Sibert, 81 Ala. 140, 1 South. 773.

Many acts are perfectly innocent when the party performing them is not aware of certain circumstances attending them; for example, a man may pass a counterfeit note, and be guiltless, if he did not know it was so; he may receive stolen goods, if he were not aware of the fact that they were stolen. In these and the like cases it is the guilty knowledge which makes the crime.

Such guilty knowledge is made by the statute a constituent part of the offence; and therefore it must be averred and proved as such. But it is in general true, and may be considered as a rule almost necessary to the restraint and punishment of crimes, that when a man does that which by the common law or by statute is unlawful, and in pursuing his criminal purpose does that which constitutes another and different offence, he shall be held responsible for all the legal consequences of such criminal act. When a man, without justifiable cause, intends to wound or maim another, and in doing it kills him, it is murder, though he had no intention to take life. It is true that in the commission of all crimes a guilty purpose, a criminal will and motive, are implied. But, in general, such bad motive or criminal will and purpose, that disposition of mind and heart which is designated by the generic and significant term "malice," is implied from the criminal act itself. But if a man does an act, which would be otherwise criminal, through mistake or accident, or by force or the compulsion of others, in which his own will and mind do not instigate him to the act or concur in it, it is matter of defence, to be averred and proved on his part, if it does not arise out of the circumstances of the case adduced on the part of the prosecution. Per Shaw, C. J., in Com. v. Elwell, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 192, 35 Am. Dec. 398. Thus, it is not necessary, in an indictment against an unmarried man for adultery with a married woman, to aver that he knew, at the time when the offence was committed, that she was a married woman; nor is it necessary to prove such knowledge at the trial; Com. v. Elwell, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 190, 35 Am. Dec. 398.

See, as to the proof of guilty knowledge, 1 B. & H. Lead. Cr. Cas. 185-191. See IGNORANCE. As to the doctrine of imputed knowledge, see NOTICE.

KNOWN HEIRS. In a statute relating to the sale of property of unknown heirs, it has been held to mean those persons who are known, and whose right to inherit, or the extent of whose right, to inherit, is dependent on the non-existence of other persons nearer or as near as the ancestor in the line of descent. People v. Ryder, 65 Hun 175, 19 N. Y. Supp. 977.
